Church Is Urged To Observe Theological Sunday

The Seminaries of the Church Present Brief Statements on Activities This Week and Next

New York:—In urging the whole Church to observe Theological Sunday, January 25, Bishop Angus Dun, chairman of the joint commission on theological education, points to a "familiar passage of Scripture which reminds us that the Church is a body with many members, and that when one member suffers all the members suffer or when one member is honored, all the members rejoice with it. On Theological Education Sunday we are asked to turn our thoughts and prayers and giving towards those members of the body which we call our Seminaries.

"It requires little thought to recognize that the spiritual fortunes of every congregation of our Church are bound up with the fortunes of our Seminaries. The young men who in these days are crowding into our Seminaries come chiefly from families where there has been some living faith and prayer kept alive by a faithful mother or father. There would be no Seminaries in which they could make ready for their ministries, unless in past years lay people in our parishes had seen the need and given the resources for teachers and books and buildings, above all for teachers. The life and strength of all our Seminaries depend absolutely on the life of the whole Church. Let the supply of men or of gifts for theological education fail, and our Seminaries will be like an arm into which the circulation of the life-blood has been blocked.

"Too many of our Seminaries are working for us all with inadequate resources because they are living on the gifts of the dead rather than on the continuing gifts of the living.

"Equally true is it that all the congregations and parishes of this Church are alive at all because there have been men who with all their human limitations stood in these communities as ambassadors for Christ. At the center of the life of every parish there have been men who spoke for God and his Christ, who baptized little children, who called men to prayer, and brought Christ into marriage and sickness and sorrow. The great majority of these men have come out of our Seminaries. The quality of their ministries has depended in very large measure on the quality of the Seminaries out of which they came.

"The Church can be strong only when it feeds its life and its gifts into the Schools which prepare its ordained leaders for their high calling."

In order to cooperate as fully as possible with this Churchwide effort, THE WITNESS requested each Seminary to send to us a brief statement of activities and policies. A number of these follow, with statements from the other Seminaries promised in our issue of January 15th.

This number also features articles on why Seminaries should be supported, with other articles on theological education to be presented in the issue for next week. If alumni of any of our Seminaries do not find the statement about their own School in this week, be assured that it will be in the next number.

BEXLEY HALL AT KENYON

Gambier, Ohio:—If the renaissance at Bexley Hall is indicative of the times, the coming leadership of the Church should be purposeful, energetic, and, at the same time, truly dedicated to fundamental spiritual values. A more vigorous and serious group of seminarians has never been seen at Bexley Hall,—and only once has there been a larger group since Civil War days when students from Virginia Theological Seminary moved to Gambier to continue their studies.

The young men at Bexley are busy. "Apartment-hunting is one of our major extra-curricular activities," said one of the married students.

Housing is a grave problem when over two-thirds of the students are married, and tiny Gambier has little extra space for new families. Yet all the students reach out beyond their own personal problems, and beyond their academic interests, into their parish, their diocese, and their world for greater responsibilities and wider opportunities for growth.

It is in this wealth of wider interests that the new spirit of Bexley is most convincingly expressed. It can be seen in the earnest meetings of the Bexley Society, the student government body, which recently revised its constitution to include plans for the furtherance of the missionary work of the Church. From their own personal funds, students subscribe aid for other missions, . . . and then give liberally of their time to the mission work at hand in the countryside around Gambier.

One group has taken over deserted Bedell Chapel, a couple of miles from Gambier and in one year, an abandoned church and a neglected community have come to new life. A Bexley student has enlisted the support of one of Bedell Chapel's oldest parishioners, who was the first bride of Bedell Chapel, and her contribution has made possible new paint and numerous small repairs. Each Sunday morning a group of thirty children gathers for the Church School and a newly organized children's choir leads the music at the morning service. Bexley students play the organ, lead the services, and perform other parish duties. The Church has taken its rightful place again in this country community. It is planned to survey other nearby unchurched areas, and perhaps to establish other such rural missions.

Bexley students go farther into the missions of the Church. Last summer, one man served in the Magdelen Islands of the diocese of Quebec; another in the Whiteface mission field of Montana. Others have served in small-town mission areas of Ohio and Western Michigan. Others conduct regular services in nearby towns during the academic year.

These young men are already deeply concerned with the need of the Church for a well-trained ministry. Not only have they set high standards for their own education, but also they endeavored to help put the whole problem before the lay people of the Church. Students have gone out to churches and colleges throughout Ohio to conduct services, preach about theological education, and discuss the seminary, its sources of support, and the tasks it must perform. These student deputations will be carried out on an even wider scale this year.

Another of the larger concerns in which Bexley students have shown marked interest is the interseminary movement. Delegations from Bexley have attended all the conferences of the central region of the Interseminary Movement, and a Bexley student is currently president of this region, which represents twelve denominational seminaries in six states. Last spring Bexley was host to a regional conference of the movement and with its central location Gambier should prove a good meeting place for future gatherings.

Another activity not directly associated with the classroom is the weekly meetings at the home of one of the professors, where students meet to consider the Christian implication of current problems. Articles in THE WITNESS often supply material for these informal talks.

Perhaps the most telling example of the spirit of Bexley men is to be found in their attitude towards one of their number who is a deaf-mute. Almost half the students at Bexley have learned the sign language of the deaf in order to make the handicapped student feel at home. At Bexley the atmosphere is that of a religious and kindly family, rather than of an institution, a family with a highly developed sense of responsibility, and eagerness to do, not only what is expected, but also to fulfill the spirit of the second mile.

THE VIRGINIA SEMINARY

By Student W. B. Murdock

Alexandria: — Within the month the building of the first of four new dormitory units will get under way amid formal ground breaking ceremonies, it was announced this week by the Rev. William H. Kirk, speaking for the trustees in his capacity as manager of the Virginia Theological Seminary campaign fund. It is hoped that the new unit will be ready for occupancy when the fall term gets under way, and construction will be well on the way towards completion when friends and alumni gather here next June to mark the 125th anniversary of the founding of the Seminary by Bishop William Meade, the Rev. William Wilmer, Dr. Thomas Henderson, M.D. and Francis Scott Key in Alexandria in 1823.

The students themselves have been producing a local version of the national program of radio evangelism, in a series of five radio broadcasts of Hymns of the Church heard weekly over station WPIK, this city, each Thursday afternoon. The choral programs, with spoken narration by the Rev. Kenneth Heim, assistant professor of Church history, gave a thumb-nail sketch of the Seminary history, and were but the first of a series of events looking forward to the June anniversary date.

Beginning with the figure of the Rev. Robert Hunt, the chaplain of the Jamestown settlement, the brief program series moved on down the years to the founding of the Seminary in Alexandria and through the years since, emphasizing the evangelical heritage and the missionary zeal of the local institution. As the theme hymn of the series, alumnus Walter Russell Bowie's (V.T.S. '08) "Lord Christ, when first thou cam'st to men" was sung. The contribution of a great patriot and churchman to the cause of theological education—the emphasis of THE WITNESS articles on theological education — was recalled in the featuring of lay founder Francis Scott Key's, "Lord, with glowing heart I'd praise thee," first published the year this Seminary opened its doors. On the final broadcast, just prior to the Christmas recess, the chorus selected for top billing in a program of Christmas carols, "O little town of Bethlehem," written by Phillips Brooks (V.T.S. '59), one of this Seminary's most famous graduates and perhaps the greatest preacher the American Church has yet produced.

Looking back on nearly a century and a quarter of Christian service, the largest and second eldest of the eleven seminaries, can be pardoned perhaps if it points with pride to the way in which the Holy Spirit has used it as a mighty influence in the growth of the Church both at home and abroad. 881 living alumni and 40 living bishops have gone forth from these red brick buildings overlooking the Potomac and the nation's capital. Among them have been four who have been selected for the office of bishop within the year past. They are: the Rev. Robert Magill, V.T.S. '21, who just declined election as bishop of the diocese of Los Angeles; the Rev. J. Wilson Hunter, V.T.S. '28, Bishop Coadjutor-elect of the district of Wyoming; the Rt. Rev. George P. Gunn, V.T.S. '30, Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese of Southern Virginia; and the youngest Bishop in the Church—the Rev. William J. Gordon, Jr., Bishop-elect of Alaska, and a graduate in 1943.

NASHOTAH HOUSE has a beautiful campus with buildings "that make them seem to belong exactly where they are"

Forth from this "Holy Hill" have gone in years past Leonidas Polk, Confederate General and the first Missionary Bishop of Arkansas; Henry Codman Potter, seventh Bishop of New York; Lucien Lee Kinsolving, first Missionary Bishop of Southern Brazil; Henry St. George Tucker, past Presiding Bishop of the Church, as well as Brooks and four of the eleven Deans of today's church seminary scene.

To the future the Seminary must look for increased support from the laity. Endowment, given largely by generations long past, may have been adequate when the enrollment was between 75 and 80, and the high cost of training men for the ministry had not been known. But today, with the need of the Church for an increasing number of clergy, this Seminary must be prepared to house, feed and instruct a number that can roughly be estimated to be near the 100 mark. The needs of the Church for more clergy can best be put in terms of the ratio of clergy to laity over the period for which accurate figures are available. In 1820 the ratio was one clergyman for every 90 communicants. In 1880 the ratio was one clergyman to every 101 communicants. In 1946 the ratio was one to 245. Take into the account the number of clergy on pension rolls, in administrative and teaching positions, and the actual ratio on the parish level becomes more nearly a one to 300 ratio, nor does even this figure take into consideration the large number of non-communicating church members that every parish serves.

In terms of budget figures, our present budget has more than doubled its pre-war size. The increase has largely come from the G.I. Bill support, which will all too soon become a fond memory, and the generous help from the parishes on Theological Education Sunday, which is now an official item in our budget.

In giving to this Seminary we believe your money is well invested. This Seminary is, and for some time past has been, the largest producing unit of clergy in the Church. Virginia led all seminaries in the number of graduates produced in the period 1940-45, and in the number of candidates presently enrolled in Seminary for the '47-'48 year. A wide geographical representation has been achieved in today's student enrollment of 116. Forty-one domestic dioceses and four overseas fields are represented. From the area south of the Potomac come 52 men, from the area north of that river, 51 — and from the far West, 7. Overseas districts and other denominations account for six. The Seminary invites your thoughts, your prayers and your gifts on Theological Sunday next.

NASHOTAH HOUSE IN WISCONSIN

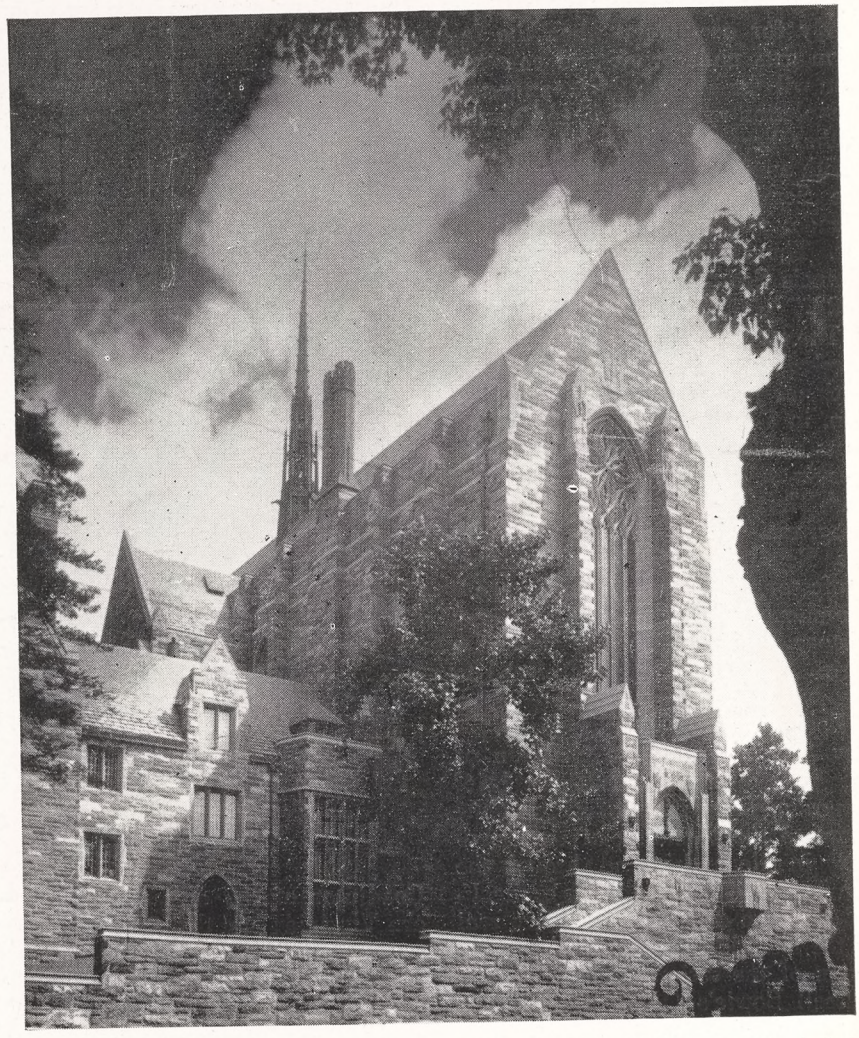
By Dean William H. Nes

Nashotah, Wis.:—Nashotah House was born of the missionary enterprise of intrepid priests in whom the spirit of adventure ran high. To this day, more than a century later, what is known to its alumni as "The House" is still called "The Mission" in the surrounding country side. The faith of its founders has continuously informed the teaching and life of this Seminary which is dedicated to the maintenance of Catholic orthodoxy and seeks above all the preparation of men's souls as well as their minds for the priestly life.

What must first impress the newcomer is the beauty of the place. The buildings are of a style that makes them seem to belong exactly where they are. Repairs and improvements have recently been carried out to make them more comfortable in a climate which is rigorous and yet lets you see the seasons, if one may say so, as they are meant to be, each in its typical dress and savor.

In this large domain of forest, field and lake, a man may learn how it is that nature can only truly speak of God to one who already knows him in the Incarnation of his Son; and here, in this community set apart in the wide country, a man can learn the discipline of charity.

One has heard tales, here and there, that picture Nashotah House as an abode of ritual preoccupation and even hint of strange doings with the Prayer Book. The fact is that the Prayer Book is constantly used in accordance with its own directions, and that it is used every day for the whole House as a matter of obligation for attendance on the part of all. Morning Prayer is said every morning, followed by the Eucharist, and Evensong is sung every evening, with sermons on Thursdays; and the Litany is used in Advent and Lent. I do not see how in any Seminary the Prayer Book could be more faithfully used or more intimately known.



The curriculum seeks to hew to the line of the canons governing ordination. The Bible, history, theology, liturgics are the elements of a professional education for the clergy; and since these can only be done satisfactorily by the reading of documentary sources, a reading knowledge of Latin and Greek is required for the degree. There are, at the same time, certain techniques and skills which a man can learn and ought to learn in seminary, and Nashotah House is now exploring the development of a program of clinical pastorals. What must be avoided, however, whenever this is done, is the under valuation and even the displacement of those studies which, though academic, properly belong to a professional school. A medical school is not an internship, and a theological seminary is not a parish. The life of prayer and sound learning have in this place nourished so many men of scholarship and saintly lives that we have confidence that our program will continue to bear fruit. What is needed is money

New York:—In eleven theological seminaries of the Episcopal Church are hundreds of young men preparing for the ministry. The Presiding Bishop has designated January 25 as Theological Education Sunday when offerings will be taken in parishes throughout the country to help these seminaries carry forward their vital work. THE WITNESS with this number, and with our issue of January 15, devotes most of its space to these Seminaries with the hope that we may stimulate generous giving. Stories and pictures of a number of our Seminaries are presented this week; others will follow next week.

The men pictured on the cover, typical of the men in our seminaries, are all from Arkansas and are all at the School of Theology of the University of the South—William J. Fitzhugh, David B. Collins, William C. Johnson, Robert B. Hall. The picture was taken by Bland Mitchell, the son of the Bishop of Arkansas.

Support the Seminaries

IT IS reported that the United States, with six per cent of the world's population, is now producing 94 per cent of the world's manufactured goods. (What Russia is producing is only a guess; but a fairly safe guess is not impossible.) This is very commendable, we all agree. Of course we could produce even more, if we wanted to—we have the materials and the skill and the machines. And the whole world needs our goods—so we ought to follow up our immense manufacturing output with a vast expansion of trade, a foreign trade big enough to match our domestic. In order to do that, we must encourage other nations to produce goods too, since at the bottom all trade is exchange of goods, not of dollars (and the rest of the world is now short on dollars). That is why the Marshall Plan is being urged upon Europe. We don't want, and we can't afford, a permanent dole to our cousins overseas. It would be as disgraceful for us as for them, to require them to live in a state of permanent economic dependence upon the United States.

But what does this vast dislocation and disproportion between us and the rest of the world threaten to do—to us? Are we to become the world's leading gadgeteers, not only the richest nation on earth but a nation of manufacturers and traders, with no interests beyond merely making things, selling them, and then making more—and selling more? Always getting richer, and busier, and concerned in the end with nothing but wealth, profits, and material things? "Soul, thou hast much goods, stored up for many years! . . . Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee!"

There are many good motives which may lead a young man to prepare for the sacred ministry, and they are all worth careful consideration. But here is one which I think does not get considered often enough: Why not give your life to evening up this dangerous imbalance with which our present-day material civilization threatens to destroy us? Why not throw your weight on the other side, and do something to get society back onto an even keel? I believe there are lots of young men today who see the danger, and would like to do something about it. They are in no mood of retreat or of defeat—far from it! They would like to advance upon the chaos of our time and do something constructive. Why not the ministry? Where can a man find a better place to take hold and do something worth while? Of course he will minister to individuals; but they need to be reassured, lifted up, brought once more in touch with God, and strengthened by divine grace. And yet at the same time a clergyman can do something (often a great deal), either through individuals or in association with others, to lessen the ghastly inequalities and injustices of economic, industrial, and social life. He has his heart set upon a kind of life that is not really impossible for people to live here on this earth—a fellowship in which men will care for each other, and throw bridges across the gulfs that separate them, the strong helping the weak, the rich helping the poor, the poor giving back to the rich something their money can never buy. In fact, such a society really could, by divine grace, become universal upon this earth—and race tensions, industrial conflicts, wars between nations, and hatred between men be buried and forgotten. But how will it ever come about unless we begin, somewhere? And where better can a man begin than in the Christian Church?

THIS is a motive, I believe, that appeals to many more young men today than most of us realize. And what are we older men and women, parents, uncles and aunts, and friends—yes, clergymen as well as laymen—doing about it? Sometimes all we do is discourage them! A father will say to his son, "Yes, John, I appreciate your idealism; but you see I've built up a good business, and I expect you to carry it on." Or, "That's fine, of course; but you can't expect to live on a clergyman's salary." On the other hand, I can match all this out of my own experience with the joy and pride many fathers and mothers take in helping on their sons—one of the proudest moments of their lives is the day of their son John's ordination, or the first time they have received their communion from Henry's hands, or the unforgettable day when Charles preached his first sermon. I have heard fathers say, "If I had my life to live over, I would be up there with him, in surplice and stole!"

We all know that our seminaries ought to be better supported than they are. Some of the smaller denominations put us to open shame, when it comes to supporting Church colleges and seminaries! We Episcopalians are a bit queer: We are always generous, to every good cause but our own! Wherever you go, churchmen and churchwomen are always found in the front rank of supporters of community-chests, Red Cross, civic betterment associations, charities—name any good cause you can think of. But colleges and seminaries? There we fall down. And why? The plain reason, I believe, is that education hasn't caught our imagination with enough driving force — hasn't caught it at all, in many cases. That is why I think we ought to stress the motive behind preparation for the ministry. Once we get a fair idea of the motive, we will begin to do something about it. For if a young man—it may be one of our own boys—has decided to give his life to the Church, will we not do everything we can to see that his preparation is the best obtainable? Even so, he is giving more than we can give—for he is giving "all he's got," his very life. What we are asked for is merely money—and backing, and understanding sympathy, and encouragement. It would be a sad day if America produced everything the world needs except faith and good will and such a belief in God and his righteousness as can begin to make this earth a decent place for human beings to live on!

Of Theological Seminaries

by Kenneth C. M. Sills

President of Bowdoin College

NOT long ago, in talking with a friend of mine who has had a great deal to do with the raising of funds on a national scale, he remarked that wherever there had been in any community failure to make the quota desired there had always been one explanation, and only one explanation, lack of organization. It may be a far cry to carry this analogy to the Church, yet in a day when so many seem to emphasize the cause of unorganized religion it may be well to assert boldly that religion will not get very far without that organization which is included in the word Church.

In the organization of the Church the clergy are the essential leaders; on their leadership depends the success or the failure not merely of the Church but of religion. If we can look on the question in this light, we can see the importance of the seminaries. For in these critical days untrained and weak leadership is unthinkable. It is thoughts like these that need to be called to the attention of the laity who know too little and consequently care too little about theological seminaries. In reality they are power houses of the Church, and unless we can support them adequately we cannot expect them to furnish the leaders that the Church so desperately needs, and leaders of the right sort cannot come from our seminaries unless candidates of the right sort are sent to the seminaries. And right here there is one encouraging factor. It is well to keep in mind that in each one of our seminaries there are none better than the best of previous years. But reports indicate that the average is distinctly on the move upward. In other words, the quality of the men in the seminaries who are preparing for the ministry is better than it ever has been; but in all probability it is still below the quality of men entering other professions. Brethren, this ought not so to be.

One important function of the theological seminary is often overlooked, that of providing scholars for the Church; I do not mean that every parson should be a scholar, far from it, though it is sad that by and large in so many communities the clergy has lost the intellectual leadership that it used to supply. But if the Church is to be kept abreast of the times and able to contend on equal terms with its opponents as well as to furnish stimulating opinions to its friends, it must produce more scholars than it is now doing. It is, I am told, difficult to fill vacancies in the teaching staff of our seminaries. We have very few scholars in the ranks of bishops, priests and deacons. Consequently we have often as a Church been obliged to turn to England for scholarly articles and works dealing with the Anglican communion. If our seminaries were better supported so that their faculties could give more time to research and writing scholarly articles, not only their students but the Church at large would gain.

IN dealing for some years with youth of college age I am more and more convinced that many are looking to the clergy in charge of college parishes for much more definite teaching about the Church and religion than has been given them in late years. There is more interest in theology than has been evident for a long time. Vague and sentimental liberalism is on the way out. It needs to be replaced by a much more clear and really liberal program that will show the proper relationship between heart and mind and knowledge and love. The seminaries need to emphasize theology more, for after all theology is the queen of all the services; and a revival of religion and a suitable evangelical program must be based on intelligence as well as on emotion.

As president of Bowdoin I have often called attention to the fact that the college cannot do its best work unless it has the interest and support not only of its alumni and friends but of the public at large. The same truth holds in regard to our seminaries. Those in charge of them cannot set forth policies and requirements unless they are constantly aware of what the parishes and missions need.

Nor can they do their best work if they feel that the laity in general are ignorant or indifferent. One of the happy features of theological Sunday is that at least once a year congregations have called to their attention the importance of our seminaries, and the imperative need of sending to them the very best possible candidates. The awakened interest in religion among the youth of the land is very promising. But if youth is led to believe by the comments or actions of their elders that the ministry is not one of the noblest of the professions, that interest will wane.

If the Church is to be strong to meet the challenges of days forever changing it must see to it that the clergy are well selected and well trained as well as having the individual qualifications and the special "calling" necessary. These are no times for weaklings nor defeatists. In earlier days the challenge was to go out into frontiers and far-flung fields and preach the gospel there. Today on every side pagan attitudes are rife, and the Church needs courageous and competent leadership, and if both in the episcopate and in the presbytery we could have a few real scholars, the gain would be even greater. If the laity could get over prejudice against theology and against scholarship both interpreted along liberal lines. the American Church would be much more able to meet the future than it is today. In a word, that is the problem of our seminaries.

Appraisal of the Marshall Plan

by William Scarlett

The Bishop of Missouri

THERE can be little doubt that the decision at which we arrive with regard to the Marshall plan and the control of our own domestic economy will be recorded by history as one of the most momentous in the life of this nation.

That Europe desperately needs our assistance is, as Secretary Marshall says, "no longer a matter of debate." The unimaginable devastation of the war, the destruction of industrial plants and of communications; the severing of commercial ties, the loss of records, the draining away of overseas credits in order to pay the cost of the war; the aging of machinery to the point of obsolescence, the retardation of production, the lack of fertilizers, the shortage of food, the widespread malnutrition; the long delay in writing treaties of peace; the frightful suffering of multitudes, the lack of homes, the loss of confidence, the frustration of the hopes and ambitions of millions of people, the uncertainty as to the future—all this adds up to an ominous picture.

Without outside help the further deterioration of the European situation is inevitable. This will entail even greater misery among the people. If this process continues, totalitarianism of one kind or another will take deep root in such soil, and the thing we Americans want least will come to pass.

From the point of view of religion the answer is, in this case, fairly simple and uncomplicated. We are a great, rich, and powerful people, immensely favored in the past by our geographical position and our natural resources, by our industrial genius and our practical ability. We have been spared the kind of devastation in war which other countries suffered. But over against us is an impoverished world, needing our assistance if it is to reconstruct its domestic life.

Therefore, this nation now stands under the judgment of God. "Whoso hath of this world's goods and seeth his brother in need and shuteth up his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" To give Europe the assistance she needs, up to the point consistent with our own economic health, is a plain moral duty.

The parable of Dives and Lazarus comes to mind. Failure to measure up to the full level of our present opportunity and responsibility would be to play Dives on an immense scale. But the parable is instructive as to what this would mean to us. For in the parable the final reversal of roles, whereby Dives becomes the petitioner, is worth pondering as one of the ways God finally works his will in human history.

Not only religion, but also sheer self interest, urges us to the fullest possible assistance to our brethren. We have been exporting goods to Europe on a vast scale, thereby maintaining the level of our own production and a high rate of employment at home. But the present gap between what we export and what Europe, through imports or other means, can pay for, amounts, I think, to some five or six billion dollars. In some way that gap must be closed.

WE COULD cut the amount of our exports to Europe, which would have two results: we would be giving Europe a powerful push toward increasing chaos, and we would also at the same time cripple our own economy. For in that case American industries which depend on export will suffer, our own unemployment will mount and we shall find ourselves in another economic crisis.

This is precisely what the Communists expect and want. And it is the kind of crisis which Zhdanov a short time ago at the Polish meeting of the resurrected Comintern urged the Communist leaders of different countries to endeavor to bring about.

On the other hand, if our exports are to be kept at a high level, sufficient to meet European needs for reconstruction and to maintain our own economy, the present gap between exports and imports will have to be financed one way or another by this country. So sheer self-interest stands side by side with religion in urging adequate assistance to other countries.

Furthermore, we have all received a pretty severe education in the past 33 years in the fact that our world is now one. If our Christian tradition had not informed us long ago that we are members one of another and if one member suffers sooner or later all the members will suffer with it, history at any rate has so informed us in the terrible events of the last generation.

We ought to know now that whatever happens anywhere in this world is bound to affect us sooner or later. If western Europe and England sink further into misery and the police state takes over, the cost to this country will be infinitely greater that the cost of financing Europe now.

To retreat into isolationism or into irresponsibility would be evidence that we have learned nothing by the bitter experience of the last 33 years. We would indeed be "the blind leading the blind," and eminently deserve the ditch, the bottomless ditch, into which we would all surely plunge.

Heine once said, "We learn from history that we do not learn from history." If we again prove him right, we shall be lost. For there is no leisure now for committing such blunders in this kind of world. And, brethren, the time is short.

Or, to make our aid to Europe or to England depend on the kind of economy they adopt would certainly fan the profound resentment of the peoples of these lands and open us justly to the Russian charge of dictation. If England, through her properly elected representatives, wishes to nationalize some of her industries, that really is England's business and none of ours. But it is terribly important to us that England recover.

The plain fact we have to accept is that while we all live in one world, two entirely different systems are in competition. We can accept this fact without having to believe that thereby war becomes inevitable. For it is not a matter of war. The question is simply which of the two systems can do the better job of re-building the world. That is the challenge which history puts before us at the present moment. I believe we can do the better job. And the Marshall plan, or process of arriving at a plan, is the beginning, and our great opportunity.

If at this moment of history this great nation, now at the summit of the world, lives up to the full level of its present opportunity and responsibility, not for ourselves alone but for all men in all lands, then we shall nobly respond to the present challenge which history places on our doorstep, and a brighter day will dawn on history.

It will not be easy. It will demand continuing sacrifices, but sacrifices in the cause of peace. We cannot hope for lower taxes, for a lessening of effort. Quite the opposite. As Justice Holmes once said, "The way by which the inevitable comes to pass is effort."

I hope, therefore, that our people will write personally to their Congressmen and to our Senators, urging adequate assistance for world stabilization. Each one of us can play a part in this momentous decision.

An appraisal of the Marshall Plan, which was critical, appeared in THE WITNESS for November 27, written by Professor Paul M. Sweezy of Harvard. We announced at the time that an article favorable to the Plan would appear in a later number. This article is the fulfillment of that promise.

Too Much and Too Often

By
G. I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity Church, Miami

THE many appeals in editorials and mail which reach us for the help from the Church, have gotten to be an impossible burden. Even the National Church has allowed itself to become enmeshed in this multiplicity of calls. I do not for a minute question that most of them are worthy and that the response which Christian people should make to them is positive. However, if we did even half of the things that are requested of us we would never have time for the things which are our first duty—and imperative.

There are many good causes in the world and the agencies for accomplishing these worthy objects are too numerous to mention,—each of them seems to think that they have but to call on the Church to appeal to its following to get the help they seek. Will you preach on such a subject? Will you ask for support of such an organization? Will you present the needs of this and that? The appeals are endless. I figured carefully that if I answered every appeal which reached my desk, I would never have one opportunity to preach on personal religion—missionary effort—sacramental worship — repentance — forgiveness — relationship to God — salvation — redemption — life eternal, or anything else.

I could be wrong, but I do not think so. If, as a priest of the Church, I do a good job, the Christian religion and the Holy Spirit will take care of the rest of it. The more I am able to lead my people into thinking of Christ and as Christ, the more I will accomplish for the redemption of the world. This with, or without, the agencies so well organized.

The fact is, the Christian Church has, through the ages, been the mother of all these agencies. Not by virtue of organization, but by virtue of the power and spirit of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That is our task to make Christians—they will do. The regular worshipper at the altar is the best possible material for the propagation of the various ideals in the world.

When it comes to leadership in national, diocesan or parochial activities, unless they are regular worshippers at the holy communion—I wonder as to the motive.

At any rate too much is asked of me too often—I have a task—I will preach Christ and him only and I am sure the rest will take care of itself.

"The Shorter Prayer Book"

THROUGH the kindness of the Oxford University Press I have received recently a copy of The Shorter Prayer Book According to the Use of the Church of England (1946). This little pocket edition of the Prayer Book was authorized in 1943 by the Archbishops and Bishops of the Provinces of Canterbury and York. It is intended not only for private use, but for congregational worship. Only the most commonly used services of the Prayer Book, including the Psalter, are printed. Rubrics are simplified and reduced to a minimum. Some material from the Proposed Book of 1928, which was turned down by Parliament, has been introduced. In place of the elaborate tables which make up the prefatory material of the Prayer Book two pages have been inserted, giving a simple and concise explanation of the Christian Year. The Archbishop of Canterbury has given his official imprimatur to this shorter edition by writing a commendatory Preface.

It is much to be desired that something of a similar sort be issued by our own Church. During the war, of course, we put forth a much-reduced, pocket Prayer Book for members of the armed forces. But we need something more extensive than this; yet a book sufficiently limited in scope so that the print is readable and the contents readily found. I am thinking particularly in terms of a small, simplified edition of the Prayer Book which would be as easy for a non-Episcopalian to find his way in it as for a veteran of the 'faith once for all delivered.' This could be done without bowdlerizing the essential material of the Prayer Book and without tampering with the artistic form and structure of its services.

In these days when we are thinking seriously about methods and means of evangelism, we should not forget that the Prayer Book is, after all, our chief asset. Many faithful souls have found their way into the fellowship of our Church by way of the Prayer Book, oftentimes through the mere chance of acquiring a copy of it. The most notable example of this is perhaps the conversion of our first missionary bishop, Philander Chase.

Modern men and women are, for good or for ill, less patient with reading matter full of fine print. It is discouraging to them to pick up a book which begins with forty pages of complicated tables and rubrical directions. They will likely cast it aside before they are even introduced to the heart of it all. Even if they manage to persevere until they arrive at Morning Prayer, they will have difficulty in grasping the structural logic of the service. For example, there are no captions to mark off the chief portions of the service. The lessons, which form the main substance of the office, are referred to only in rubrics. And however traditionalists may mourn the fact, it is true that Latin captions to canticles and psalms serve only as barriers, not as helps, to the average mind. The blessed word Magnificat arouses a delicate inner glow among the initiate, but the outsider will probably be attracted more nearly to similar feelings of affection and reverence by a simple title such as, "Song of Mary, Mother of the Lord Jesus Christ."

One of the most significant trends in recent American culture is the popularity of paper-bound, pocket books sold at all newsstands and dime stores. Selling for not more than a quarter, these volumes embrace not only cheap mystery thrillers and comic serials, but many standard classics of literature and works of reference. If the New Testament and Webster's Dictionary can win their way through this popular medium, why should not also a simplified edition of the Book of Common Prayer?

Dissolve the Peace Commission Headed by J. F. Dulles

The Department of International Justice And Goodwill Revived to Take Its Place

Edited by Sara Dill

New York: — The Commission on a Just and Durable Peace of the Federal Council of Churches, headed by John Foster Dulles, has been dissolved, and an enlarged department of International Justice and Goodwill, which has existed on paper only since the former commission was established in 1940, has been revived. THE WITNESS reported last Spring that a considerable number on the commission considered it an embarrassment to have Mr. Dulles as its head. It was their opinion that under his direction the commission had strayed far from the principles arrived at by the delegates who attended the Delaware Conference. They also stated that it was a mistake to have for a chairman a man who is so closely identified with one political party and who has also been widely criticized as a cartelist and who has even been charged with being closely identified with post-war Nazis and with Franco Spain. Several members of the commission, as well as staff officers, at that time were of the opinion that the best way to handle a delicate situation would be to dissolve Mr. Dulles' commission and to revive the department of International Justice. It will be recalled by WITNESS readers that this magazine. (Jan. 30, '47) called for the resignation of Mr. Dulles in an editorial which was widely quoted and caused considerable pro and con comment.

The present change was made effective January 1 when a call was issued by Walter W. Van Kirk, secretary of the department, for a special meeting which is being held this week in Philadelphia. It is being attended by about 100 Protestant leaders who, according to Mr. Van Kirk, "will undertake to formulate a statement for the guidance of churches with regard to the European recovery program."

"An attempt will also be made," he added, "to analyze the international situation in the light of the breakdown of the council of foreign ministers in London and to determine what the churches might appropriately say about the resulting situation."

Mr. Van Kirk termed the dissolution of the commission headed by Dulles as "a natural and normal development, now that the war is over and the United Nations has been established."

Elmore McKee Case

New York:—Newspapers here carried a two-column story December 31 stating that Elmore M. McKee, formerly the rector of St. George's, had renounced the ministry. In an interview with the press Mr. McKee stated that he "asked to be released from the priesthood of the Church in order that I might give the rest of my life to broader social work of a prominent nature." The stories then went on to describe the relief work in Germany of the American Friends Service Committee, with which Mr. McKee has been connected since June, 1946.

Since the newspapers give the impression that the Episcopal Church is unable to offer Mr. McKee a sufficiently wide field for his social work, we think it well to state that the action of the ecclesiastical authorities of the diocese of New York was under the last part of Section One of Canon Sixty. This states "where there may be a question of foregoing misconduct or irregularity, the Bishop shall not pronounce sentence of Deposition save with the consent of the Standing Committee or the Council of Advice of the Missionary District. The Bishop shall give due notice of every such Removal or Deposition from the Ministry, in the form in which the same is recorded, and in accordance with the provisions of Canon Sixty-four, Sec. 3 (b)."

This section of Canon Sixty-four states "In the case of renunciation of the Ministry as provided in Canon Sixty . . . sentence of deposition shall be pronounced and notice thereof given as in said Canons respectively provided."

We call attention to the fact that the usual clause "for causes which do not affect his moral character" was not in the notice of deposition which was sent out by the Bishop's office as required by the Canons.

New President

New York:—The Rev. J. Clemens Kolb, chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania, was elected president of the Church Society for College Work at a meeting of the board of directors held here. He succeeds the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of St. John's, Washington, whose term expired January 1. It was also announced that Mr. Donald M. Wright has resigned as executive secretary to take a teaching position and that the society is now looking for a clergyman or layman to be executive vice president. The business office of the society remains in Washington.

Hits Discrimination

Portland, Ore.:—Bishop Dagwell of Oregon, in a Christmas address to a group of local businessmen, declared that the sound of Christmas carols on the streets and the setting up of Bethlehem manger scenes is only a mockery as long as there is no room in Portland hotels for Negroes, "even those of distinction and culture." He was referring to the fact that Carol Brice, in the city to sing with the Portland symphony orchestra, was refused service in two upper-class restaurants. Also refused service were her two brothers, Jonathan, her accompanist, and Eugene, a singer with DePaur's infantry chorus.

Bishop Dagwell said that he wondered "if the hotel and restaurant men's associations think there is no similarity between the case of the Jewish mother who could find no room at the inn and their action in barring Negroes from their establishments. Christ is not honored by a fur coat for mother or an electric train for junior or a turkey on the

LAMBETH IN LENT

Devoting a large part of our space this week to our Seminaries prevents us from running a news story about the series of articles to be featured this coming Lent. We believe however that the announcement on page fifteen speaks for itself. All of the authors are Bishops and of course known to all our readers, including Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church who is a leading authority on the Relation of the State to Education and Freedom. The subjects are all taken from the Agenda of the Lambeth Conference in which there is worldwide interest—interest which will increase as the time for the world conclave approaches. We hope that the articles may be widely used in parish discussion groups and otherwise distributed in parishes. We urge that orders be placed early to assure the delivery of the February 5th number when the series starts. Please use the form on page fifteen.

table; nor is it enough to drop a dollar bill into every Santa Claus kettle in town and send a check to your church. Our giving must be of such magnitude that it changes our lives, our communities and the attitude of our whole nation to the rest of the world."

He went on to criticize the Marshall plan as an American attempt to substitute "the rule of gold for the Golden Rule." American policy on aiding the Europeans, he said, is one of agreeing "to feed them and clothe them if they will vote our way."

Raises Large Sum

Williamsport, Pa.:—Christ Church here has completed a campaign for money to modernize the church, parish house and rectory. The sum of $60,000 was sought and $61,500 was raised. The work will be done over a period of four years as labor and materials are available, according to the Rev. G. Francis Burrill, rector of the parish.

Service for Congress

Washington:—A service asking divine guidance upon the deliberations of the 80th Congress will be held at Washington Cathedral next Sunday. The sermon will be by Layman Clark G. Kuebler, president of Ripon College.

Help Planned

Boston:—Each parish in the diocese of Massachusetts is being asked to aid a parish in England by the social service department, headed by the Rev. Howard P. Kellett. The names of fifty parishes have been supplied by ten English bishops, for a starter. Food and clothing will be sent, together with an interchange of letters so that friendship between the parishes may be cemented.

College Celebrates

Raleigh, N. C.:—Judge Hubert T. Delany of the court of domestic relations in New York, a graduate of the class of 1919, is to be the chief speaker at the celebration of the 80th anniversary of the opening of St. Augustine's College, January 9-10. Another on the program is the Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the home department of the National Council.

The selection of Judge Delany is peculiarly appropriate since his family has been connected with the college for more than sixty years. His father, the late Bishop Delany, was both a graduate and on the staff of the institution before being made a bishop. His mother, Mrs. Nannie Delany, spent fifty years at the college as a student and a staff member. And all ten of the children of Bishop and Mrs. Delany were born at and attended St. Augustine's and several of their grand-children as well.

St. Augustine's was chartered in 1867 and opened its doors on January 13, 1868, with the Rev. J. Brinton Smith as principal. There were two other staff members and four students on opening day. After a long and useful career as an academy and normal school, it became a college and conferred its first degree in 1931. It is now rated Class A by the Southern Association of Colleges. Harold L. Trigg is now president, the first Negro to hold the position.

Orthodox Academy

New York:—The first Russian Orthodox Academy in America to train priests at the university level was announced on December 17 at a meeting held at Union Theological Seminary. Plans for close co-operation between the academy and Union and Columbia University were announced. Prof. Boris Bakhmeteff of Columbia, former Russian ambassador of the Kerensky government to the U.S., emphasized that the academy will make it possible for "the sons and daughters of former Russian immigrants" to be served "by churchmen with an American background and with an American education on a level equal to the ministers of other denominations."

Bishop John, who is the dean of St. Vladimir's Orthodox Seminary, located in Brooklyn, stated that "the union of anti-Christian forces rouses us Christians to unite in a purer spirit and on a world-wide scale."

Heads Brotherhood

Baltimore: — Lieutenant General John C. H. Lee, former American Commander in Italy, has accepted the position of general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, it was announced here on December 26th. Mr. Samuel S. Schmidt, president of the organization, said that General Lee will for a time devote himself to the organization of groups of men for co-operation with the campaign of evangelism recently launched by the National Council. His retirement from the army became effective January 1st.

Stress on Children

Seattle, Wash.:—Epiphany Church here is a parish which is not satisfied to "get Christmas over with" by having a service at midnight for adults only. The children are taught that Christmas is a religious festival beginning with worship in the church. They receive no gifts or similar bribes, but they come nevertheless in droves with their parents and grandparents. The festival started Christmas Eve afternoon with a carol service and story for the nursery and kindergarten children at 4 o'clock. At 5:15 a similar service was held for grades one to four, which was broadcast; at 10:30 there was a carol service and address for young people and adults, with choral communion and sermon at midnight. The Rev. Elmer B. Christie is the rector.

New Chancellor

Washington:—G. Bowdoin Craighill, Sr., has been appointed chancellor of the diocese of Washington by Bishop Dun, subject to the ratification of the diocesan convention in May. A partner in a Washington law firm, Mr. Craighill is a communicant of Christ Church, Georgetown, and has served as counsel for the Washington Cathedral for many years.

Oppose Conscription

Denver (RNS):—Universal military training was denounced as disastrous to the nation's educational system in a resolution adopted here by the social action committee of the Council of Churches. The resolution said UMT would divert energies and resources which should be devoted to Europe's economic recovery and would defeat the achievement of universal disarmament. Church leaders were urged to do everything in their power to help the people face the issue of universal military training "intelligently and in terms of the principles of goals of Christian social action."

Chapel Anniversary

New York:—The word "chapel" signifies a tiny congregation to most people. But in some cities the word means a congregation that is related to a mother parish where a large and important work is carried on. Such is the case with St. Thomas Chapel here, located on the east side and doing a vital work with a membership of over 600 communicants. The Chapel celebrated the 75th anniversary of the consecration of the chapel buildings during Christmas week, with Bishop Gilbert being the preacher at a special service on the 21st.

An industrial school, clinic and diet kitchen is centered in St. Thomas House; a day nursery is operated in another building and is a place where those who are finding it hard to meet the ordinary problems of growing up in a normal fashion may have such psychiatric treatment and guidance as shall enable them to develop properly. For many years the Chapel has also operated a summer house for boys and girls.

In 1926 the congregation undertook to restore the interior of the chapel so that now it is a house of worship done in pure Gothic and bright with the myriad colors of notable stained glass, polychromy and tile. The Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, rector of St. Thomas Church on Fifth Avenue, is also rector of the Chapel and the vicar, in charge of the work at the Chapel, is the Rev. Paul C. Armstrong.

Myers Takes Job

New York: — The Rev. James Myers, for many years the industrial secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, has joined the staff of the National Child Labor Committee, as assistant in charge of membership. He resigned from his post with the Federal Council two years ago because of illness. He has always been a stanch defender of organized labor and supported the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

Oppose Union

London (RNS): — An estimated 25,000 Anglicans in Nandyal have refused to enter the new Church of South India, according to a report received here from the joint commission recently set up to deal with the problem of "continuing Anglicans." The Church of South India, made up of four Anglican dioceses, the South India Provincial Synod of the Methodist Church, and the South India United Church, was formally inaugurated last September.

The commission, which is headed by the Rev. E. Sambayya, vicar general in the Nandyal area, and includes three representatives of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon and three from the Church of South India, disclosed that four Anglican clergymen refused to sign the declaration of assent to the new united Church, while thirteen who originally signed subsequently withdrew.

The commissioners reported that the Anglican movement "seems to be chiefly a lay one, led by men of some education, in which the clergy have joined."

It was stated that no permanent settlement of the situation in the Nandyal area will be made until the next General Council of the (Anglican) Church of India, Burma and Ceylon.

enough to do justice to the faculty now here and to allow its expansion.

Something should be said of the collegiate department, which is a unique feature of this Seminary. Under this plan, men come into residence here and are taken daily to Carroll College for a four year course leading to the bachelor's degree. For a few men, adapted to the conditions of such a life, the plan provides for a college course which they would be unable otherwise to secure. These men should be capable of doing "B" work in college, and they must have serious vocation for the ministry.

One of our new projects is to provide living quarters for married students. One of our houses on Lower Nashotah Lake is now ready for this use next semester, and if the number of such applicants warrants it, at least one other house can be made available for apartments.

What of the life here? Today the skaters are on the lake which in the spring will be full of swimmers and dotted with boats. There was football in the autumn and in May there will be baseball. With our new bus we have made a beginning on trips to Wisconsin's beauty spots. There is a camera-club, a good deal of interest in music, and most recently a group has been forming for reading plays. The campus is kept lively by six children and three dogs,— and altogether I think this is a place some young man you know would like to come to.

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL IN PHILADELPHIA

By Dean Frank D. Gifford

Philadelphia: — From the enrollment of the first students in Philadelphia in 1857 The Divinity School has laid emphasis on fundamentals, on sound learning in matters of faith and practice, with particular emphasis on Prayer Book teaching. No one party or school of thought has dominated the faculty and the student body has been representative of the whole Church to a notable degree. Located near the Mason and Dixon Line, the School has been neither northern nor southern. Though a majority of students today come from northern dioceses, yet there are four men from Texas and the president of the student body is from Oklahoma. No race or color lines are drawn, and the School is proud of having among the alumni three Chinese bishops and such Negro leaders as the Rev. Edgar Young and the Rev. Tollie Caution.

The flowing lines and varied blues of the figure of the Virgin, the random placing of her monograms, the delicately drawn Child and attendant angels, recalls the tapestry-like quality of windows of the later middle-ages. This window, of richly textured quiet coloration, with its playfully irregular canopy framework, creates a pleasant, intimate atmosphere most harmonious in the smaller church.

In planning the curriculum the emphasis has again been upon fundamentals, upon preparation for canonical examinations, upon the training for effective work in the ministry. Although Philadelphia affords a wide variety of studies, yet The Divinity School requires more hours on systematic theology and on preaching and pastoral care than most other schools. Every regular student must take Greek and know his New Testament in the original language. Every member of the faculty has had years of experience in parish life and one is a former navy chaplain. As a result of this emphasis on fundamentals, recent graduates have made the highest records on taking their canonical examinations.

St. Andrew's Collegiate Chapel is a superb example of Gothic architecture, noble in proportions and richly embellished with carving of wood and stone, with gold leaf, color and stained glass. Here is centered the devotional life of the School, with the three daily services in which the students take an active part. Since the number of students is now limited to fifty undergraduates, there are frequent opportunities to serve at the Holy Communion, and to read the lessons at the daily offices. Choral services give men experience in singing and special training is given in the use of the voice. Quiet days are conducted at intervals throughout the year to deepen the spiritual life of the students. Many visitors remark on the intimate fellowship between faculty and students.

The Divinity School is strategically located in the residential section of West Philadelphia near the University of Pennsylvania. On a city block are located the Chapel, St. Paul's House with the refectory, common room, offices, and rooms for students and a professor; the library building with reading room and class rooms; and the houses for the dean and vice-dean. St. Mary's House for women students and three other houses are owned by the School in the neighborhood.

Unusual facilities are offered to graduate students in theology and twenty-five men are working for higher degrees. In the library are housed the William Bacon Stevens Library of more than fifty thousand books and pamphlets and also the large and valuable collections of rare books and manuscripts belonging to the Yarnall library of theology of St. Clement's Church. Together with the collection of historical documents of the Church Historical Society (also located in the School) these libraries form a great center for theological study and research. Every student is placed in religious work, not only to add to his income, but to gain valuable experience. Men are moved from one kind of work to another. Clinical training is given by summer courses at the Episcopal Hospital, the Norristown State Hospital and other institutions.

The department of women is a unique feature of The Divinity School. No other seminary of the Church admits women as regular students and awards them degrees. Miss Maude Cutler serves as instructor in religious education and as director of the department of women. A two year course is now being given and college graduates may receive the degree of master of religious education.

Another feature of school life at Philadelphia is found in the frequent conferences with vestrymen. By invitation of the dean many rectors bring their vestries to the School to worship at Evening Prayer, to dine with the students, and to hold conferences with members of the faculty and students. More than two hundred vestrymen visited the School during 1947.

Persons of scholarly interest have highly commended the School for holding regular "Book Reviews" in the library. Recent speakers at these have included Rev. Wm. H. Dunphy, the Rev. Donald Parsons, Rev. Ralph Coonrad, Rev. G. Hall Todd (Presbyterian), Rev. L. M. Wallick, (Lutheran).

The dean serves as professor of pastoral theology and homiletics. He has had experience in the foreign missionary field as acting president of St. Paul's University, Tokyo, and has been rector of parishes in the country, the city and the suburbs. His diocesan experience has included leadership in religious education, examining chaplain and president of the standing committee in New York. He holds the Ph.D. degree in American history and is the author of several books of sermons. Under his direction the students receive a very full training in preaching with ample opportunity to speak frequently before the dean and their fellows and receive constructive suggestions. The dean is assisted in this field of pastoral work by a large number of special lecturers, including the following: The Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, the Rev. Albert F. Fischer, the Rev. Charles H. Long, the Rev. E. Frank Salmon, the Rev. John W. Smith, the Rev. S. Tagart Steele, the Rev. John K. Shryock, the Rev. John M. Weber. Special lecturers in homiletics this past autumn have included Dean Hubert S. Wood of Garden City, the Rev. W. Hamilton Aulenbach of Philadelphia and the Rev. James C. Crosson of Pelham, N. Y.

The Philadelphia Divinity School is happy to announce that the visit-

SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY AT SEWANEE

By Student Hugh C. McKee, Jr.

Sewanee, Tenn.:—Few seminaries boast a larger number of students married than single, but the University of the South, here, through a far-sighted housing policy that endeavors to meet the needs of men with families, concedes them a 23-to-22 margin in its School of Theology enrollment figures. Increasing numbers of these students are being cared for at rates below the rent levels of most urban areas. The housing consists of government-built apartments sponsored by the veterans' administration, plus other accommodations provided by the University.

A realistic program designed to meet changing conditions of the post-war period is being developed by the School's new dean, the Very Rev. Robert F. Gibson, formerly charged with the task of re-organizing theological education for the Church in Mexico under the auspices of the National Council. Also appointed to teach theology is the Rev. D. A. McGregor, who was executive secretary of the department of religious education of the National Council from 1933 to 1947. Thus rounding out a faculty of six, Dean Gibson has begun to lay the ground-work for additional faculty and an enlarged student body with emphasis to be placed on a program of practical training.

A three year course for the wives of theological students, instituted as a concession to married life on the campus, was the object of recent widespread attention in the secular press. This attempt to instruct the other half of the ministerial team in the duties and responsibilities of the clergyman's wife is adding a new chapter to the study of practical theology.

In addition to the regular courses, arrangements have been completed to continue the summer graduate school under the direction of the Rev. M. Bowyer Stewart, New York, who succeeds the Rev. R. K. Yerkes. The latter resigned after the last regular meeting of the school in August. Dr. Stewart is professor of theology at the General Theological Seminary.

Established in 1878 as a constituent college of the University of the South, the School of Theology is known to students and alumni as St. Luke's, after St. Luke's Hall which contains the lecture rooms, the Library, the common-room and quarters for single students.

Formerly the capacity of the seminary was thirty-six students, but the recent acquisition of Van Ness Hall and the Woodland Apartments has provided for a larger enrollment in the post-war period. Next fall the enrollment is expected to total fifty-five or sixty. As the University is owned by twenty-two dioceses of the Church, candidates from these southern dioceses still predominate, but increasingly students are being accepted from other areas of the country.

St. Luke's is the only Episcopal seminary in the United States that operates as a school of the university system, though others are associated with universities. There are no overlapping professorships, but the facilities of the entire university are available to theological students. This results in a schedule of varied activities and study that offers additions to the usual atmosphere of seminary life.

The Sewanee mission circuit of churches and chapels lying within Franklin County, Tennessee, enables the students to gain practical experience outside of classroom work. Each student is assigned to one of the missions for week-end services, working under the supervision of the dean and local rectors. At least two of the chapels owe their existence to student initiative, one new building being under construction at the present time. Both mountain residents and valley farmers are thus served by St. Luke's.

The daily offices are read in St. Luke's Chapel, a memorial to the Rev. Telfair Hodgson, former vice-chancellor of the University and dean of the Theological School. This and other buildings in the seminary group occupy the highest ground on the campus at the eastern edge of Manigault Park, which constitutes several acres of scenic woodland, part of the ten thousand in the great University domain.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. RICHARD EVANS
Layman of Deerfield, Illinois

I have just finished reading Vida D. Scudder's seventh article on "Social Rebirth." — "The Growing Demand for Change." It is to her credit that she, in the tenth paragraph, quotes: "Obviously, we are not going to be able to persuade our nation to take the path of crucifixion when even Christian leaders and Churches will not take that path."

This is equivalent to saying our Churches are Antichrist and, therefore, had better hurry to make a change. Why beat about the bush? She ends her article by quoting Shelton Bishop who said, "The Church is the protagonist of redemptive love—etc."

However, because the Church fails to take the path of crucifixion and transformation, it is the protagonist of enslaving love—the antagonist of redemptive love. It worships the Destroyer—not the Savior.

Is the Church ushering in the unpossessive or Godly way of life Jesus taught? No! It perpetuates the possessive or Satanic way of life he condemned.

RT. REV. WILLIAM F. LEWIS
The Bishop of Nevada

On or about November 23, 1947, the American Weekly, a Sunday supplement of the Hearst newspapers, carried an account of the Rev. Gareth Hughes' work in Nevada. If read carefully, the account is correct, but the implications are entirely incorrect.

The Rev. Mr. Hughes was not ordained in the Episcopal Church and is not ministering in any capacity under my direction. He was ordained in Los Angeles by the authorities of the Apostolic Episcopal Church which, I believe, has no connection with the Protestant Episcopal Church in America.

No little confusion has been created by this article, and I should like to make clear that Mr. Hughes is not connected with the Missionary District of Nevada in any way.

REV. CHARLES M. JOHNSON
Rector of Holy Trinity, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. Hiram G. Carver of Washington in Backfire of Dec. 18 is wide open from several angles in the "race question." Nevertheless in view of the offensive position of his article there are three recommendations I would like to make to him. One, that he pray harder. Two, that he read and study the New Testament thoroughly. Three, that he do what Jesus told Nicodemus to do—"Be Born Again."

MISS ROSE PHELPS
Churchwoman of Orlando, Florida

It shook me to read (Dec. 11, p. 13) that the National Council is giving certificates of appreciation to veterans, complete with bishops' signatures and "crossed flags of Church and country."

Like every other church-going Episcopalian, you have heard in church services, "Thou shalt not kill" and "We are all members one of another" and ". . . that they may be one, as we are." If the Church has so little faith that it dare not trust the Holy Spirit to find a better way of settling differences than by recourse to the atom bomb and its kin, need it emphasize its apostasy with crossed flags?

Could not the Church delight to honor the saints who have stuck it out in all weathers: missionaries less publicized but no less faithful than Albert Schweitzer; conscientious objectors whose loyalty to Christ has led them through scorn and long imprisonment; clergy and layfolk who so "declare the glory of God" that "the wayfaring men . . . may not err therein"?

Let the Church praise those who excel in Christian faith, hope and charity—veterans included if they rate—rather than toss sops to Cerberus.

MR. PAGE TREADWAY JR.
Layman of Great Notch, N. J.

I have no nominations to make for your Honor Roll. Should you decide to proceed in reverse however by the elimination method, I nominate as the first of our million and a half communicants to be eliminated, your correspondent, Hiram J. Carver, churchman of Washington (Backfire, Dec. 18). Let it never be said that THE WITNESS doesn't lean over backwards in opening its columns to views directly opposite to its own. I think you leaned almost too far that time.

VERY REV. HEWLETT JOHNSON
The Dean of Canterbury

I want to thank you cordially for the valiant work THE WITNESS and its editors are doing. I am most grateful and encouraged.

RT. REV. JOHN E. HINES
Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

I feel that your work is of tremendous importance to our Church. You have my best wishes and are being remembered in my prayers for "men at work."

Theological Education Sunday

At the request of the Joint Commission on Theological Education, I have designated Septuagesima Sunday, January 25th, 1948, as Theological Education Sunday.

This Sunday I hope will be the occasion for addresses in every church upon the importance of the work of our Theological Seminaries, and furthermore that in every parish there will be given an opportunity for the people of the Church to give financial support to the Seminaries.

Our Theological Schools are vital to the continuing life of the Church for in them are trained our clergy, who are responsible in large degree for the leadership of our Parishes. Thus the Seminaries are of immediate and practical significance to every lay person. The Seminaries are in serious need of financial aid. I hope that there will be a generous response by a wise and strategically minded Church.

Seminaries Present Statements On Varied Activities

Churches Throughout the Country Are Urged To Make Large Offerings for their Support

New York:—The Presiding Bishop has urged the entire Church to collect offering on Sunday, January 25, to aid our eleven theological seminaries in their important work. The plea is further supported by Bishop Angus Dun, chairman of the joint commission on theological education, whose statement appeared on this page in our last number.

Statements from a number of seminaries also appeared in that number. Others appear this week, together with an editorial by the Rev. Clemens Kolb on why the seminaries should be supported, and an article by Dean Rose on theological education. It is the hope of WITNESS editors that these two numbers may aid somewhat in making for a more generous offering than in previous years.

EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL

Cambridge:—An Army sergeant, applying for admission to the Episcopal Theological School, wrote: "Until the war it had never been in my thoughts to enter the ministry. Then, all of a sudden, it seemed as if the world war were a huge reflection of all the jealousy and ugliness of our individual daily lives. It seemed as if a few more people might go out of their way to strengthen and better people's every-day motives, and I might be one of them."

A Navy lieutenant, writing at the same time, said: "Essentially, during the war years, I came to find nothing so important, and, in a peculiar way, so satisfying as the work of the ministry as I saw it in civil and military life—and nothing which analyzed the conditions of the day and attacked them at their focal point quite so thoroughly and so realistically as the Christian teaching."

Such statements are typical of the feelings of the more than 60 veterans who now make up over three-quarters of the student body of the Episcopal Theological School.

In a day of world crisis, when our leading scientists and statesmen are warning us that the achievement of a peaceful world depends not so much on the solution of scientific or political problems as it depends on the solution of the fundamental problems of human existence, the Christian Church must offer vigorous leadership in thought and action. Nevertheless, only 22% of the American clergy, both Catholic and Protestant, have had both college and seminary training, an additional 29% have had either college or seminary training, and the remaining 49% have had neither!

In the Episcopal Church in the ten years between 1935 and 1945 no fewer than 1090 parishes and missions, or 11% of the total number of Episcopal Churches, were closed down. In too large a proportion of these instances the decisive factor was a matter of simple arithmetic: there were more churches than there were clergy to staff them.

It becomes increasingly obvious that the Church must make the gospel of Christ heard above the noise of the false gospels of this age and take practical steps to insure that that gospel shall not lack ministers to proclaim it.

In 1925 a noted scientist, Professor J. Arthur Thomson, wrote the following prophetic words: "In certain elements like uranium, radium, thorium, there is a spontaneous disintegration of the nucleus of the atom, which gives off various kinds of rays at high velocity. This radioactive production of energy may come to be of value to mankind, though one cannot help hoping that the discovery may be delayed till man is more worthy of it."

The Episcopal Theological School believes that the challenge of the world must be met by a Church duly supplied with an informed and courageous ministry, capable of clear thinking and vigorous action and devoted above all else to the gospel of Christ.

BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL

New Haven:—In 1928 the trustees moved the Berkeley Divinity School from Middletown to New Haven. They did so because of certain strong convictions. These were ably expressed at the time by Dean William Palmer Ladd when he said "We believe that the best education for the Christian ministry is to be secured not in cloistered seclusion but in the stimulating environment of a great university. In the intimate fellowship of the divinity school, the student receives his training in the principles of the Church and of Christian faith, worship, and conduct. In the university, he has the opportunity for a wider fellowship, and for such contacts with modern problems, social, philosophical, literary, and artistic, as will help fit him for an effective ministry in the modern world."

During the last twenty years, much of this vision has been realized. Berkeley is one of six seminaries of our Church now accredited by the National Association of Theological Schools and Colleges. With the recent election of a professor of New Testament, the school has a full complement of professors in all of the major departments of theological study, and all chosen during these years not only because of scholastic attainments, but because of their ability to bring to their classes a wide range of educational and parochial and even international experience. In addition each year a visiting professor from the old world brings to both students and faculty a rich spiritual and intellectual contribution from the Church of England, and many visiting lecturers also, including the Bishop and Bishop Coadjutor of Connecticut, with their wisdom and experience strengthen the courses, especially in pastoral theology.

Physically Berkeley is still a collection of nine substantial, but reconverted buildings on Prospect place in New Haven, set amidst the architectural splendors of Yale University. But actually Berkeley is a community of some seventy persons, faculty, staff, and students, all deeply concerned with the tremendous responsibility of preparing intellectually, morally, and spiritually fit persons for the sacred ministry of Christ's Church, while enjoying the advantages of its affiliation with the Yale Divinity School and the resources of one of the world's great academic centres.

The idea of Berkeley as a community of persons is the result of a rich inheritance from great personalities. Bishop Berkeley, one of the intellectual leaders of the Church of England, is still a presiding genius of the School. The splendidly sane churchmanship of Bishop Seabury, whose altar is preserved in the chapel of the School, the statesmanship of Bishop Williams, founder and first dean, the scholarship of Dean Binney, the spiritual charm of Dean Hart, the bold and courageous pedagogical insights of Dean Ladd, still live on. Characteristic of this communal life of persons at Berkeley are the daily morning and evening chapel services which are the centre of the School life, the famous Saturday morning classes in public speaking in Chapel Hall, where every Saturday morning for three years students face the ordeal of criticism as well as helpful appreciation by the faculty and their fellow students, and the Thursday evening faculty nights in the common room in Brewster Hall, where visiting bishops, churchmen, university professors, and men of science and letters, lecture formally or enter into informal and intimate discussion with the students and faculty on the great problems of man and his world.

In 1954 Berkeley faces the end of a century of existence. There is much that must be done before then. A new library and a new chapel must be built, not because Berkeley believes in buildings, but because her present valuable library of forty thousand volumes is housed in a non-fireproof building and is at the mercy of accident, and her chapel is overcrowded and inadequate. And there is much to be done to improve and re-invigorate theological education in our Church, to produce better preachers and wiser pastors. Berkeley has no delusion of grandeur. She is against "bigness" in the things of the spirit. She is on the side of quality rather than quantity, but she is determined not to live in the past, not to be merely the inheritor of a great tradition, but to be the progenitor and creator of a still more abundant life.

SEABURY-WESTERN SEMINARY

Evanston:—Seabury Divinity School was founded at Faribault, Minnesota, in the year 1858 by that noble apostolic missionary, James Lloyd Breck. For over three quarters of a century Seabury continued to send out a stream of devoted clergy and missionaries into the northwest. Western Theological Seminary was founded in Chicago in 1883 by a physician, Dr. Tolman Wheeler, at the urgent request of Bishop William E. McLaren. From the very outset it was intended to represent the whole Episcopal Church, not any particular party or group. For forty years the Seminary progressed, at a site on Washington Boulevard. In 1923 the trustees accepted the joint offer of Northwestern University and of Garrett Biblical Institute, of a site in Evanston at the corner of Sheridan Road and Haven Street, opposite the University campus. Here were erected in Tudor Gothic the present group of buildings, which were opened for classes in the fall of 1929. Living quarters and commons are provided for fifty students in the dormitories; class-room, refectory, and chapel capacity is considerably larger.

In 1933 old Seabury was removed from Faribault to Evanston and united with Western Theological Seminary to form the present institution.

Located in close proximity to a great modern University and enjoying the full advantages of association with it in pursuing the aims of higher education, the Seminary nevertheless preserves the distinctive atmosphere and the intimate fellowship of a small group devoted to a common interest: theological study and preparation for the sacred ministry. Through the Seminary's affiliation with Northwestern University and its close relationship to Garrett Biblical Institute additional library facilities, elective courses, work in special fields leading to advanced degrees, health services, and athletic programs are readily available to all students.

Spiritual life at the Seminary is centered in its beautiful chapel, a memorial to the Rt. Rev. Charles Palmerston Anderson, for thirty years Bishop of Chicago, and at the time of his death Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church. The regular daily chapel services are the Holy Communion at seven-thirty, Morning Prayer at eight forty-five, and Choral Evensong at five-thirty. There is a special preacher at Evensong on Thursdays. Additional services are held from time to time, with meditations and other helps to the spiritual life. A quiet day is provided once each term. A small oratory is also in the chapel building. It is used frequently for private meditation and devotion.

There are two libraries, the Hibbard Oriental Library which was the gift of Mrs. Lydia Hibbard, and the Robert Bowman Gregory Memorial Library which was the gift of Mrs. Robert B. Gregory. The Hibbard Library contains more than 7,000 volumes, including much material of rare value on Egyptology and Assyriology. It has also a small museum, mainly Egyptian, facsimiles of the chief New Testament manuscripts and files of the most important periodicals on Semitic and Oriental subjects. The Gregory Library on the main floor is the general library and reading room and, including books in the basement, contains over 30,000 volumes. In this library all the regular theological subjects are fully represented. In addition, the sections on philosophy, psychology, Greek and Latin classics, biography, history, and social science are well supplied.

Classes are conducted by lectures and recitations, usually three hours weekly. More advanced courses are given as weekly seminars, two hours in length. The class-room instruction is supplemented by the tutorial and the field work plus conference methods.

Each student on entering the Seminary is assigned to a tutor, with whom he spends an hour each week during his junior year in individual conference. Assigned papers in the various courses are prepared each week by the student under the direction of the tutor.

In the middle year the students are assigned in twos to meet with a tutor once a week for an hour. During this time the emphasis is on the reading and understanding of "primary sources"; historical, doctrinal, ethical, and devotional.

SEABURY-WESTERN SEMINARY has one of the most beautiful chapels in the country

In the senior year students in groups of two or more meet with the tutor for assigned papers and general discussion. The emphasis is on the development of ability to coordinate as well as master the main ideas and problems that arise in the various fields of theological study. Members of the faculty of the Seminary act as the tutorial staff.

Each student on admission to the Seminary is assigned by the director of training to some practical outside work. Throughout the Seminary course he meets the director or his assistants in regular conference for the discussion of problems arising in connection with this work. The summer months are designated as the Trinity term and students are expected to work in churches, missions, social service institutions, etc., as directed. The summer work is part of the requirement to be fulfilled in the department of pastoral theology.

The Seminary is fully accredited by the American Association of Theological Schools and is certified by the Veteran's Administration under public laws No. 346 and No. 16 for the reception of veteran students.

CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC

Berkeley, Calif.: — The important date of the latest era in the history of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific is January 1, 1935. The fortunes of the School were at a low ebb, with only one building, practically no funds, and a faculty of visiting lecturers. It was the middle years of the depression when it was difficult to raise money, and people were doubtful of the future of the School. In the face of this challenging situation, the Rev. Henry H. Shires resigned as rector of a prosperous parish and undertook the task of dean.

The immediate need was for a deanery, the money for which was borrowed. A tennis court for the benefit of the students was constructed next to the deanery. Two years later, in 1937, with funds contributed by friends of the late Dr. George Francis Weld, All Saints' Memorial Chapel became the center of the School's devotional life. At the end of another two years, the library was built in memory of Prof. James Otis Lincoln who, for forty years, had been a beloved resident member of the faculty of the School. The addition of these buildings released space in Gibbs Hall for class rooms and a new refectory. In 1941, a faculty residence was bequeathed by a former student, Schuyler Seager, and is now occupied by the Whiston family. In 1943, a large fraternity house adjoining the campus was purchased with funds from the Charlotte Denniston estate, providing adequate dormitory and refectory space for the post-war influx of students.

Beginning with the "unit" system in 1935, the School was able to operate without going into debt during the first difficult years. Low salaries were accepted to make possible a full staff of teachers. In 1940 and 1945, the appeal for "units" brought additional income. Various bequests for endowment, buildings, and scholarships aided the dean as salaries were raised and new members were added to the faculty. Beginning in 1941, the "Theological Sunday Offering" contributed $887, which by 1944 had risen to $3604, and for the past two years has totaled over $6000. Many missions and parishes now include the School in their budgets for amounts ranging from $20 to $2000 per year.

The Rev. Randolph Crump Miller joined the faculty in 1936, and in 1940, following his retirement as diocesan, the Rt. Rev. Edward Lambe Parsons rejoined the faculty as a permanent member. In 1940, the Rev. Pierson Parker was added. Prof. Charles Francis Whiston joined the School in 1945, and Prof. E. Dargan Butt in 1948. Lecturers during this time included the Rev. Henry M. Shires, the Rev. George W. Morrel, and various other experts.

THE CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC has fine buildings in a tropical climate

In 1945, another milepost was passed when the School was certified as an accredited institution by the American Association of Theological Schools, which means that every standard had been met. The standards had been adequate since 1935 except for the fourth full-time faculty member.

The year 1943 marked the 50th year of the founding of the School at San Mateo in 1893. It was located in San Francisco from 1911 to 1930, when it was moved to Berkeley. To celebrate the 50th anniversary, a

Why Support Seminaries?

THE clergyman is one of the people in the community to whom everyone looks for leadership. Regardless of a clergyman's denomination, people look up to him in a way that they don't look up to others. And because they look up to a clergyman, they also expect more from him. It also happens that this is the precise moment in history when more people are alive to the need for religious and moral leadership than they have been for a long time. One needs only to look over the reports of educational institutions to realize that they see very clearly this need and, with considerable soul searching, are trying to revise their curricula to provide it.

Another thing, too. Without the most adequate preparation, scholastically as well as spiritually, a clergyman is at a great disadvantage today. In the old days, if he went to a college—any kind of a college—and a seminary—any kind of a seminary—he had more than almost anyone else in town. But today there are plenty of college graduates. Every sixteenth high school graduate in the United States today goes to college. That statistic is prewar; the proportion is even greater now. Without the best of seminaries, the ministry is certainly handicapped.

I regret to say that our seminaries are not the best, most of them, anyway. Only four of our eleven seminaries are accredited by the Association of American Universities. They are not recognized as schools worthy to be called graduate schools. The reason is basically financial. They are not receiving the support that enables them to provide the facilities needed for graduate education.

If a man sent his son to a medical school and found out that that school was not accredited, he would say, "shocking!" Everyone takes it for granted that we need trained physicians and that the best training is none too good. It was not always so. Strangely enough, people were convinced that they needed seminaries long before they were convinced that they needed medical schools. Harvard College was founded in 1636 in order that the colonies might have a trained and educated ministry, but the first medical school in the country did not come until 129 years later. In 1765, the University of Pennsylvania founded the first medical school in the colonies. Before that anyone who wanted to be a doctor apprenticed himself to a physician, started out as an office boy and groom, went the rounds, read and observed, and when he felt competent he went into business for himself. No one would dream of calling in a physician today who wasn't a graduate of a medical school. The same ought to be true for a much more difficult profession. For the doctor only tries to bring the body back to physical health, but the minister has the more difficult as well as more important task, the task of bringing the soul back to moral and spiritual health and reconciling sinful man to a righteous God. If we need the best medical schools for the training of doctors, a fortiori we need the best seminaries for the training of clergy.

Now I believe that there were a few churches, perhaps there still are, where a man didn't go to seminary in order to be ordained. My grandfather was a member of such a church, the Mennonite Church. When he was a young man, they followed the apostolic tradition. Four men were selected by the congregation and, after prayers, lots were drawn and the man on whom the lot fell was ordained and became the minister of the congregation. One day my grandfather was chosen and the lot fell upon him; whereupon, he did a rather unheard-of thing. He went to a seminary. Then he gave himself to the ministry of his church for some 69 years and, incidentally, never took a cent from his church, the Mennonites not believing in a paid ministry. Now even the Mennonites have seminaries. They find it makes a difference in the excellence of their clergy..

OUR seminaries need more than financial support; they need an interested laity. They need a laity so interested that they will demand the best of their seminaries. We have been too complacent with the generosity of men of the past and with the interest of men of the past. Now, here is what we face: Financially, rising costs and lowered income; spiritually, a Church that has but few more clergy than it had years and years ago, but a much larger number of churches and communicants. Most people can't see this. They say, "We have a rector and the churches around us have rectors." But the bishops are crying for more men, just to fill up the bare necessities. And here we are talking about expanding and mission fields and industrial work and college work. We haven't the manpower.

Another factor, and quite possibly the basic factor, is the lack of interest in the ministry itself. I do not believe that the average layman wants his son to go into the ministry, that he ever holds up the ministry as a great ideal. Too many of us want our sons to "be successful." We want them to make money. We don't hold up the ministry as an ideal for our children and consequently we don't make much effort to have ideal seminaries. Everybody seems to maintain a sort of hands off policy. Even our vocational guidance centers won't advise men about the ministry. They say the tests are too varied. Nobody has even taken the trouble to find out what kind of man would make a good clergyman. So a G.I. can go to a vocational guidance center and find out whether he would be a good machinist, or a good architect, or a good doctor, or a good advertising agent, or most anything else, but he will never find it suggested that he might enter the ministry.

In the final analysis, I suppose it comes down to this: If a man believes in God, he believes it is necessary to have leadership to do God's work. And if he needs leadership, he needs places where these leaders may be trained; therefore, the support of seminaries. Because I believe in the first, I believe in the last. From the time of ancient Israel, we have been told that God has a right to the best. Our clergy will be adequately-trained men of spiritual power if we insist that they be just that. They will be mediocre if we permit them to be. And the responsibility for the state of the Church does not rest on General Convention; it rests upon every communicant.

—J. Clemens Kolb
Chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania

The Task of the Seminaries

by Lawrence Rose

Dean of the General Theological Seminary

IT WILL be recognized that there rests upon our seminaries a two-fold responsibility. There is on the one hand theological study, the painstaking, disciplined appraisal of God's revelation of himself and of what the Church has made out of that revelation—an appraisal to which his own gift to us of freedom commits us; on the other hand is religious faith—confidence and trust centered upon the God himself who has spoken to us—without which the burden of our freedom would be intolerable.

There seems to be no necessary proportionate connection between the two. If we dared to assert that faith or its increase depended upon theological learning, the figures of the Centurion, the Syro Phoenician woman and the little children of the gospels would rise up to rebuke us along with the recollection of untutored souls known to all of us who have penetrated to the heart of Christian reality and are possessed of its secrets. But the temptation to set a low valuation upon theology also finds its answer in the gospels, in the patient leading of the disciples and the gradual opening of their eyes to the point where the questions, "Whom do ye say that I am?" and "What think ye of Christ?" become natural and appropriate. Indeed, throughout Israel's history as well as in the ministry of our Lord we see these two elements in a relationship of tension and dynamic interaction; the immediate demand for unconditional commitment, and the process of disciplined education; the necessity for an all-at-once relating of life to the reality of God and also for the step-by-step learning of him through his creation and our history.

This is the essence of our problem if we are to fulfill our responsibility of sending forth men who will be at once evangelists and pastors, teachers and prophets for their generation. To be a seminary, a seed-plot, at once of theological learning and of religious faith is the mission of seminaries. To speak of it as a problem is to recognize the element of truth in the statement of a modern theologian that "There is a fundamental disparity between the forms of communication expected in our academic world and those used in the Bible, an irreducible opposition between a scholarly thesis and an apostle's witness." It is good to be reminded, as we have been so sharply in recent years, of the radical difference between the biblical and the classical strands in our Christian tradition, but if we admit that the difference amounts to "irreducible opposition" we are declaring first, that the man of faith has nothing to say, not even a mode of communication, to the contemporary world, but further, that theological discourse has no meaning, except an antagonistic one, to the fundamental religious response of faith.

It is not possible here and now to do justice by reasoned argument either to the important truth concealed in such an uncompromising position, or to the more difficult reconciliation of scholarly pursuits with apostolic witness which we dare to hope can still be practically illustrated, whether or no a completely satisfactory theoretical accord be found between them. This is an occasion rather for an expression of convictions and ideals.

Dean Rose has devoted most of his ministry to theological education. He was professor at Central Theological College, Tokyo, Japan, from 1934 to 1941; associate professor at Bexley Hall, 1941-42; Dean of Berkeley Divinity School, 1942-47 and was installed as Dean of the General Seminary on October 20th, 1947. This article, with a few minor changes, was the sermon he preached at the installation service.

Theological training must reach to ever wider horizons and to ever deeper levels if it is to prepare men for a vital ministry of guidance and leadership in a world which is never likely to pause again in its own intellectual vigor and ferment and offer the Church leadership by default. We may make our own the plea of a Roman Catholic Archbishop in a sermon preached in Rome in 1900: "The theologian and the preacher, and the apologist, who are ignorant of the best that has been said and thought by the makers of the world's literature cannot have the culture, the intellectual vigor, the openness and pliability of mind, without which, short of miracle, it is not possible rightly to commend truth to an enlightened age . . . If we hope to commend and enforce truth with efficacious power, we must be prepared to do so in the full blaze of the light which research and discovery have poured upon nature and history." The enlightenment of which the bishop speaks has become almost blinding and stupefying in our time, but there is no remedy in shrinking from it and denying that it is light and not darkness or that it comes from the "Father of lights." If theology is to be the queen of the sciences, her attitude toward her subjects must not be that of fear and isolation; and if the minister is to be the "persona" of the people, his education must be in a real sense "normative for all education."

That this principle has practical implications for a wider field than the seminary curriculum itself is obvious. The preparation for theological study which our applicants have been receiving has been a matter of increasingly serious concern. Real progress has been made by the American Association of Theological Schools and by the authorities of our seminaries in reaching back and exercising a healthy influence on college preparation; but much remains to be done. If the colleges continue, despite hopeful signs, to present a general picture of chaos and irresponsibility, then the seminaries will be forced to take far more serious measures to make up deficiencies in the breadth of their students' familiarity with the world's store of knowledge and in their capacity for disciplined thinking and effective communication. One is inclined to say that the further removed "pre-theological" courses are kept from theology proper the better; not that theology cannot be taught and learned at the college level, but that there is not time for it. Premature specialization involves too great cost. To be prepared adequately for their work here and for their responsibility in the future our students must come to us with more than a smattering of literature and philosophy; they cannot be content that the generalizations of historians and of natural and social scientists do service in their minds for knowledge of concrete events and forces and of the scientific method of their investigation; they must be led somewhere, somehow, to a reverent appreciation of what has been called "the vast, anonymous work of art" which is their language, and to a will and capacity to use it worthily; in this connection, but in many others as well, they should be able to use readily one or more of the other languages of our culture. The very possibility of an adequate theological education is at stake and if our schools of theology were to press their campaign to these ends with sufficient vigor they would not only be working for a solution to their own problems; they would be exercising an influence which might reach back throughout our educational system and support those within it who are groping for some principle of coherence and direction.

IT GOES without saying that our curriculum and method of instruction should be under constant, critical scrutiny, and that our theological faculties must exhibit in an eminent degree that "openness and pliability of mind," that vision of truth in its wholeness, which prevents necessary specialization from leading to intellectual parochialism. If theological study is not to degenerate into indoctrination there must characterize our teaching a transparent honesty and rigorous accuracy in scholarship, an acute sensitiveness to the temptation to bend evidence into line with our presuppositions, and a constant intolerance of the suggestion that there is in our religion, to paraphase von Hügel, any "nucleus of undiscussible truth."

There rest upon us certain special responsibilities which I can only enumerate. Our primary task being the preparation of men for an effective ministry, we are bound to seek a right balance between the goals of professional competence and theological literacy, resisting pressures which would make of us either a trade school or merely a graduate school of theology. The educational standard set in this institution should continue to be worthy of proving normative for the Church.

One cannot be widely acquainted throughout our country with the devoted work of alumni of all our schools, nor know several of these schools from the inside, without having it borne in upon one that theological education in our Church is one task; our institutions are members one of another, each owing a duty to all the rest, and all standing to gain much by closer and closer co-operation. In particular ought it to be a matter of course that no competitive spirit arise among them in matters like recruiting students, placement of alumni or filling faculty vacancies, especially when such a spirit tends to prostitute a fine loyalty to the reinforcement of unwholesome partisanship in the Church.

Fruitful, productive scholarship directed to the stimulation of life within our Church or to the sharing of our rich Anglican heritage with other Christian brethren, or yet again to the task of compelling the respectful attention of secular scholarship, and leavening it with at least a sense of responsibility and some reverence with respect to the Christian tradition in its present-day vitality and greater potentiality, is all too scarce a commodity among us. Our seminaries are too scantily staffed to guarantee the necessary leisure to their faculties; we have pitifully few theologically trained philosophers, scientists and historians in our colleges and universities; and it is nothing less than a desperate business keeping seminary teaching ranks at the minimum strength necessary to sound and balanced instruction in the various branches of theology.

In our concern, however, for the promotion of theological study in all its exciting breadth and depth, and for the careful training of men in the techniques of their profession, we do well never to forget the judgment under which human wisdom and competence stand. "Knowledge puffeth up," said St. Paul, and a Kempis asked, "What doth it avail thee to discourse profoundly of the Trinity, if thou be void of humility and art thereby displeasing to the Trinity?" We recognize here the paradox that the better we apparently perform our task of instruction and training, the more acute may become the spiritual peril, always great in the ministry, to which those who go forth from this place are exposed. If theological study leads to a sense of mastery as of a closed subject matter; if it gives a comforting possession of answers in an area where everyone has questions; if it lends support to pride in familiarity with Divine things and in command of techniques for mediating Divine grace; if the wonder and mystery are here wrung out of God's revelation of Himself and of His abiding mercy towards us, then our Lord's judgment upon the rulers of the Gentiles comes home to those who have learned from us, and to us the more, and we are damned together.

The calm assurance, the buoyant confidence, the abounding joy which ought to characterize the work and life of the minister of the gospel can nowise come through intellectual equipment or mastery of the tricks of the trade. They are nowise related to the easy complacency of a comfortable set of convictions, nor to the cheap cleverness of trading upon a special vocabulary or ritual. That which we possess through study, research, thinking or through our will to believe—"poor surrogate of our time" it has been called "for a living faith in God" —can lead only to disastrous sense of security and superiority. It is what possesses us through faith that can alone intercept and frustrate the pervasive current of pride that tempts us all to deny our creatureliness and strive to overcome it.

Faith in the living God—the "infinite opportunist" in His Providence—our glad willing that He be Lord indeed and have His own way with us—can redeem even our appraisal of His ways and His Works in our theological studies and our exercising of the prerogatives of priests in His Church:—"Through Jesus Christ our Lord" who gave Himself to be seen, heard, handled, questioned, but who poses always for us the critical question: "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?"

Faith is no short cut to sacred learning, no substitute for the costly discipline of it for those who would be teachers and pastors to a generation such as ours. It is the saving ballast to the soul through the process of acquiring and handling knowledge, and the necessary condition of its being true and saving knowledge of God. It comes, not through effort, but through patience, in the original sense of the word—through a suffering of ourselves to be objects rather than subjects, creatures and children rather than lords and creators. It lends to all teaching and all ministration something of the quality of living "demonstration of the Spirit and of power," personal testimony to the "greatness and the power and the glory and the victory and the majesty" of the living God. If it does not itself impart understanding, it does give us the confident assurance that we and all things are understood, and enables us to stand in the succession of witnesses to God's visitation and redemption of his people.

The Presiding Bishop Says—

SUNDAY, January 25, I hope will be the occasion for addresses in every church upon the importance of the work of our theological seminaries, and furthermore that in every parish there will be given an opportunity for the people of the Church to give financial support to the seminaries. Our theological schools are vital to the continuing life of the Church for in them are trained our clergy, who are responsible in large degree for the leadership of our parishes. Thus the seminaries are of immediate and practical significance to every lay person. The seminaries are in serious need of financial aid. I hope that there will be a generous response by a wise and strategically minded Church.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

A FEW news items, just in case you missed them. The Rev. L. Nelson Bell, former missionary and now associate editor of the Southern Presbyterian Journal, has a solution for U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations which he calls "Christian realism." Writing in that journal last week he declared "Let the American government issue notice to Russia that she is to start the immediate evacuation of all territories into which she has expanded since 1942. Further that at the end of one week one atomic bomb will be dropped in a sparsely settled area of European Russia and another in a like section in Siberia—to prove that we can and will carry out our ultimatum. Then unless there is clear evidence that our demands are being carried out, at the end of five more days the next bomb will be dropped on the Kremlin with immediate and continued use of the bomb until the present Communist regime is replaced by men who are willing to comply with our demands."

The Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, distinguished Methodist of New York, has another approach. Speaking at a banquet of educators in Columbus the other evening, he stated that the "present war hysteria" concerning Russia can be changed into "mutual understanding if we give one-half the thought, ingenuity and devotion to peace that we gave to winning the war." He urged full support of the United Nations.

But the Rev. Edward Lodge Curran, president of the International Catholic Trust Society and editor of the Brooklyn Tablet, doesn't like the United Nations. So he filed a suit to prohibit the U.N. from taking over its headquarters in New York. He contended that the city had no right to convey any property to a "foreign sovereignty" and charged further that the U.N. "has aroused and is arousing international discord and that a considerable portion of its time is expended in acting as a sounding board for Soviet Russia to insult, abuse and slander the United States." He claimed further that the U.N. is "incapable of achieving international amity or any of the purposes set forth in its charter."

The suit was dismissed last week by Justice L. Barron Hill of the state's supreme court.

MR. STASSEN wrote a piece for THE WITNESS (March 6, 1947) setting forth his reasons for believing that the much discussed veto must remain in the U.N. He declared that "if the veto were simply removed it would be possible for a few of the smaller nations to outvote the United States and Russia combined. Clearly this would not be a sound basis for future peace nor would it be reasonable representation for the people of the world, and after all, we should think more in terms of people and less in terms of national sovereignties."

He took this all back in an address in New York on January 5 when he called for a United Nations Convention since the U.N. "requires a new voting method to end the single-power veto."

But Peter Kihss, N.Y. Tribune reporter at the U.N., points out that while Russia has used the veto twenty-two times in the Security Council, the tally actually is misleading since a number have involved the same issue. For example Russia has used the veto four times on matters concerning Spain, since the U.S.S.R. has a different slant on Franco's government than does the U.S. and Great Britain. The veto also was used six times on matters concerning Greece. Russia insists that it is unilateral action and a violation of the U.N. charter for us to give ever increasing military aid to the admittedly corrupt and reactionary Athens government. There may be something in the Russian viewpoint since on the day Mr. Stassen made his speech the papers carried pictures of 1,000 marines being hustled off to the Mediterranean in full combat gear, with the state department announcing that Britain is to transfer U.S. lend-lease military supplies and equipment to the Athens government, and also transfer 2,100,000 rounds of U.S. ammunition to Turkey where we are also giving aid to what we call "a democratic and freedom-loving people."

But to get back to the veto: it has also been used ten times by the Russians on membership applications, where, to quote Mr. Kihss, "the Soviets asserted applicants were unqualified or others just as qualified should be simultaneously admitted."

Finally, just in case you missed it, Chiang Kai-shek, having already spent billions of American dollars with the promise "to crush the Communists in three months," told his followers in Nanking that it is now the intention of his government "to crush the Communists within a year"—assuming, of course, that Representative Walter Judd gets for him that additional sixty million from Congress. And on the same day the United Press reported from Shanghai that the U.S. dollar reached a new high of 165,000 Chinese dollars in the black market, whereas it was 6,000 just a year ago. So if you think you have problems think of the poor Generalissimo.

Students at Mission Conference Disagree About China

Controversy Started at Life Work Meeting When Congressman Judd Urged Military Aid

Lawrence, Kan.: — Congressman Walter N. Judd of Minnesota, considered by many as Chiang Kai-Shek's number one champion in the U. S., and certainly in -Congress where he is working for a new grant of sixty million to the Chinese Nationalist Government, found the going a bit tough at the conference of students meeting here to consider Christian Frontiers. As chairman of the gathering of 1,800 delegates the Congressman had introduced the controversial subject in his opening address by urging economic and military aid to Chiang Kai-Shek. He followed this up with a "fireside chat," attended by about 300 of the students, in which he said there could be no world order until the growing strength of Chinese Communists had been checked. He urged the students to send a statement to China pledging their support to the Nationalists; and that they urge Congress to send funds to help stabilize China's shaky financial structure and that surplus weapons, military equipment and training aids be immediately placed at the disposal of the Generalissimo.

The Congressman's remarks brought a fire of questions from the students: "What about the United Nations?"; "Shall we take up our guns and start marching?" and others of a similar nature. The legislator replied that as presently operated the UN is unworkable because of lack of cooperation on the part of Russia, and revealed that he would soon introduce into Congress a "workable" plan for other nations "to go it alone."

Students also proposed that General Feng Yu Hsiang, formerly with the Nationalist Government but who has recently broken with it, be invited to address the conference to give the other side of the story. Hsiang was at the time in Kansas City where he went to give an address at another Church conference, and so was easily available. This prompted the Rev. Winburn Thomas, secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, under whose auspices the conference was held, to state that "to bring onto our platform a speaker such as General Hsiang would so involve the students in political discussion that the cause of the conference would be lost. This is a conference to study the world challenge to Christian missions and we will only invite speakers to address these students who are motivated by Christian principles, regardless of their politics." The reply to this on the part of several student leaders was that General Hsiang was known popularly as "the Christian general" and was a member of the Methodist Church.

The controversy continued the second day of the conference when a group of delegates sought to "disassociate" the conference from statements made by Congressman Judd. A letter was published in the conference paper, signed by two of the delegates on behalf of "a group of students" which said they were concerned over "the note of international power politics that has been sounded here and with the apparent identification of the Christian Church with one side in such politics" and went on to urge the delegates to repudiate Judd's opinions and to ask for "a fair statement by some person who is known to take the view that the civil war in China can be ended without assistance by the American government on the side of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek."

The letter prompted Mr. Thomas to say that the controversy had been built up by a minority group of "very leftish" delegates, and that "this is a missionary conference and we have no desire to turn it into a political sounding board." To which the student leaders gave the obvious answer: "It was Congressman Judd who turned it into a political sounding board at the opening meeting and we are merely asking that the delegates be allowed to hear the other side."

The controversy died down somewhat after the first two days so that the remaining three days was largely devoted to missions. A number of the delegates, in statements on the final day, said that the conference had been a success, with their convictions strengthened that there is a need for Christian missions everywhere today, with the need ranging from students on the campus to the economic and social realms at home as well as abroad. The Rev. Leland S. Albright, one of the leaders, said the five-day conference "had demonstrated the value of prayer, worship, Bible study, discussion and consultation with experienced counsellors."

Oppose Conscription

Cleveland: — More than 10,000 young people of the Methodist Church, delegates to a conference representing two million young Methodists, adopted a resolution asserting that peacetime conscription is "a denial of the spirit of the United Nations" and warned that "indoctrination of the military mind into the youth of America will greatly speed this nation on the path to war." They also pledged themselves to help the Church wipe out racial prejudice and to champion the cause of the poor and underprivileged.

Newspaper headlines went to Barbara Jo Walker, 21-year-old Sunday school teacher of Memphis, though she tried to avoid them. But since she had won the title of Miss America last year it was inevitable. She nevertheless won her way into the hearts of the delegates, all from 12 to 24, through her modesty amounting almost to shyness, interest in the welfare of others and her qualities of leadership. She stayed in an improvised dormitory where cots had been set up for 1,600 girls, and when asked by one of the other girls how best to help the church at home, she replied: "By personal example. If we are tolerant, clean

Devoting a large part of our space this week to our Seminaries prevents us from running a news story about the series of articles to be featured this coming Lent. We believe however that the announcement on page fifteen speaks for itself. All of the authors are Bishops and of course known to all our readers, including Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church who is a leading authority on the Relation of the State to Education and Freedom. The subjects are all taken from the Agenda of the Lambeth Conference in which there is worldwide interest—interest which will increase as the time for the world conclave approaches. We hope that the articles may be widely used in parish discussion groups and otherwise distributed in parishes. We urge that orders be placed early to assure the delivery of the February 5th number when the series starts. Please use the form on page fifteen.

living and try to follow the golden rule, others will begin to take an interest in your church and want to join."

Bishop George P. Gunn

Norfolk, Va.:—The Rev. George Purnell Gunn was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia at Christ and St. Luke's Church here on January 6th, with many Bishops and clergymen taking part in the colorful service. Presiding Bishop Sherrill was the consecrator with Bishop Brown of Southern Virginia and Bishop Jett, retired Bishop of Southwestern Virginia, the co-consecrators. The candidate was presented by Bishop Goodwin of Virginia and Bishop Phillips of Southwestern Virginia. The epistle was read by Bishop Gray of Mississippi, and the gospel by Bishop Wright of East Carolina. Bishop Darst, retired bishop of East Carolina read the litany and Bishop Powell of Maryland preached. Other bishops to take part were Bishop Tucker of Ohio who read the consents of bishops and Bishop Strider of West Virginia who lead the Veni, Creator Spiritus. In addition to the bishops a total of nineteen presbyters and three laymen took official part in the service.

Bishop Gunn was the rector of the Good Shepherd, Norfolk. He was born in Winona, Miss., in 1903 and is a strict Virginian as far as education is concerned, being a graduate of Virginia Episcopal School, the University of Virginia and the Virginia Theological School. The newly elected bishop has been particularly active in diocesan affairs and was the chairman of no less than eleven diocesan committees at the time of his election and was a member of seventeen others, mostly having to do with Church activities.

Visits Venezuela

New York:—There are advantages in having a job with the Federal Council of Churches at this particular time of the year. Episcopalian Beverley Boyd, director of social service, flew out of the worst weather New York has seen in years to attend the Pan-American child welfare conference, meeting this week at Caracas, Venezuela. After a week there he will visit a number of southern cities before returning to his office here.

Hall Consecrated

Concord, N. H.: — The Rev. Charles F. Hall is being consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of New Hampshire today, January 15, at St. Paul's Church here where he has been rector since 1945. Presiding Bishop Sherrill is the consecrator with Bishop Nash of Massachusetts and Bishop Dallas of New Hampshire the co-consecrators. Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania and Suffragan Bishop Heron of Massachusetts are the presentors; Bishop Bennett of Rhode Island leads in the litany and Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence is the preacher. Attending presbyters are the Rev. Harry H. Hall of Needham Heights, Mass., and the Rev. Robert H. Dunn of Portsmouth, N. H.

World Council Delegates

New York:—The following have been appointted delegates of the Episcopal Church to the World Council meeting in Amsterdam this coming summer: Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, Bishop Angus Dun of Washington, Dean William Nes of Nashotah House, Mr. Charles P. Taft of Southern Ohio. Alternates are Bishop Sturtevant of Fond du Lac, the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris of Trinity Church, Boston, Mr. Clifford Morehouse of New York, Miss Leila Anderson, an executive of the YMCA.

Bishop Celebrates

Philadelphia:—Bishop William P. Remington, suffragan of Pennsylvania, celebrated the 30th anniversary of his consecration on January 10th. He is the oldest active bishop, in point of consecration, in the House of Bishops. The event was commemorated on January 9 with a service at the Church House in Philadelphia at which he was the celebrant at holy communion.

Relief Campaign

New York:—The Rev. Almon Pepper and Mr. Robert D. Jordan of the staff of the National Council, together with Mr. Herbert Rice, a broadcasting company official, are holding a series of conferences to discuss the world relief campaign, with special emphasis on the Presiding Bishop's radio broadcast on February 29th. The plan proposed is that collections be taken in all the churches on that day and the full million dollars be raised in four hours.

Discuss Unity

Washington:—A conference to explore "the extension and deepening of cooperative Christian unity" was held at the College of Preachers over the New Year holiday. There were 34 churchmen present. Following the three day conference, Canon Theodore Wedel, host, stated that it was "strictly a study group" and that no statement of findings would be released to the press.

Bishop Randall Retires

Chicago: — Suffragan Bishop Edwin J. Randall retired last week after more than a half century of notable service to the diocese of Chicago. A native of Wisconsin, he moved to this city early in life and spent his entire ministry here. After serving St. Barnabas' Church for many years, he was made executive secretary of the diocese in 1922; superintendent of city missions ten years later, and was consecrated Suffragan Bishop in 1939. Bishop Conkling has announced that in spite of retirement Bishop Randall will continue to fill confirmation engagements from time to time.

To Preach in Europe

Lexington, Ky.:—The Rev. James W. Kennedy, rector of Christ Church here, is one of 12 American clergymen to be chosen by the Federal Council of Churches and the Church Peace Union to fill preaching engagements this summer in England, Scotland and France. A like number of English clergymen will fill preaching engagements in the United States.

Stowe's Directory

New York:—The new edition of Stowe's Clerical Directory has been distributed to subscribers by the publisher, The Church Pension Fund. The Clerical Directory contains the biographies of the 6,400 clergy of the Episcopal Church, and includes in the new edition, for the first time, the biographies of 150 deaconesses.

The new volume supersedes the 1941 edition and a supplement to this, which was printed in 1944. Normally the Clerical Directory is published every three years, but plans for a full 1944 edition had to be cancelled, because of prior war considerations.

No other directory contains individual biographical material on the entire clergy in the Episcopal Church. Biographical data has been obtained from the individual in each case. The book is thus a valuable and accurate source for anyone who wishes specific information concerning the work and interests of both active and retired clergy and bishops, as well as deaconesses.

The information in the biographies includes up-to-date data on churches served, officers and positions held, important writings and other facts. The book is considered to be a work of considerable historical importance, besides being of current reference value. The publisher suggests that libraries, universities and societies which have not ordered copies do so now, since the edition is limited and the book will not come out for another three years.

Orders may be placed by writing to The Church Hymnal Corporation, the publishing subsidiary of The Church Pension Fund, 20 Exchange Place, New York 5, N. Y. There are over 400 pages in the book and the price is $5.

Install Canons

Washington:—Bishop Dun of Washington and Dean John W. Suter of the Cathedral installed three new canons at a special service on January 6. The Rev. George J. Cleaveland is canon librarian; the Rev. G. Gardner Monks works chiefly with the three cathedral schools; the Rev. Crawford W. Brown is canon precentor.

Organ Recitals

New York:—A series of organ recitals are being held on Tuesday evenings through Epiphany at St. Thomas Chapel. The organists are Walter Baker of the First Baptist Church, Philadelphia; Mary Crowley of Cambridge, Mass.; Rupert Sircom of Westminster Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia; Luther Noss of Yale; William Self of All Saints', Worcester; Clarence Watters of Trinity College, Hartford.

Hits "Ecumaniacs"

New York (RNS):—Geographical representation at the assembly of the World Council of Churches has caused the provisional committee, at the request of Lutheran Churches, to recommend an amendment to the proposed constitution under which seats in the assembly, and membership in the central committee, will be allocated with "due regard being given to such factors as numerical size, adequate confessional representation and adequate geographical distribution."

The Council at present is operating under a constitution adopted at Utrecht in May, 1938, which sets the total number of seats in the assembly at 450. Of these 85 are allocated to Orthodox Churches throughout the world, while the rest are apportioned on a geographical basis, as follows: churches on the Continent, 110; Great Britain and Eire, 60; U. S. and Canada, 90; Africa, Latin America and the Pacific Islands, 50; South Africa, Australia and areas not otherwise represented, 25; minority churches, 30.

In discussing the proposed amendment, the Rev. S. C. Michelfelder, executive head of the Lutheran World Federation, declared that churchmen who seek to unite Protestantism without taking into consideration the differences between various denominations were "ecumaniacs." He said that at the first Assembly in Amsterdam next August there will be "ecumaniacs" who will want to make a "puree" out of the World Council, "in which Anglicans, Lutherans, Methodists, Greek Orthodox, Presbyterians, and so forth will all lose their identity."

"Let those who have no convictions than that it is expedient to unite do so," he declared. "That there are too many denominations and unnecessary divisions every one will admit. But this is no time for superficial thinking. Now is the time for all men, clergy and laity, to restudy the word of God and their own confessions. If this produces loyalty to confessions it is of God and no temporary advantage for expediency's sake dare change such convictions."

Dr. Michelfelder added that Lutheran delegates to Amsterdam "should come as Lutheran delegates representing their churches officially and not some nebulous, non-existent invisible body of geographic sections."

"Let the World Council of Churches be a council of churches," he said. "As churches we can work together and study together without sacrificing our identity or our confessions. This is ecumenical as we understand the word."

Notable Ordination

St. Louis:—One of the better-known personalities in the fields of education and public affairs, Edgar C. Taylor, was ordained deacon at the Cathedral here on December 28 by Bishop Scarlett. The head of a school for boys, Dr. Taylor has long been an active churchman as a communicant of the cathedral. Because of the shortage of clergy Bishop Scarlett requested him a little over a year ago to take services at St. Mark's here. He did so until the Rev. Murray Kenney was called this past summer as rector. The lay-reader then went to St. Stephen's, Ferguson, also temporarily without a rector. In both churches Dr. Taylor's ability as a speaker attracted large congregations and inspired the members to a more vigorous maintenance of parish life.

The Rev. Edgar C. Taylor, the "youngest" clergyman of the diocese of Missouri, will continue to direct his school for boys but will also assist the bishop and clergy of the diocese in many ways.

Goes to Alaska

New York:—Miss Gladys A. Shreiner has been appointed for missionary service as a nurse at Hudson Stuck Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska. A graduate of the school of nursing of the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, she has continued there as a staff nurse since 1946.

LAMBETH IN LENT

THE WITNESS Articles for Lent are based upon the Agenda of the Lambeth Conference which brings together the Anglican Bishops throughout the world this coming summer in London. As in former years we hope the articles will be widely distributed in parishes and used in discussion groups. The series will start in our issue of February 5th with all presented in the eight numbers of Lent.

his wife have already bought three buildings for use as a Negro hospital and nurses' school. The hospital, a 50-bed institution, will be the only one for Negroes in Lawton.

"My wife and I once saw a Negro woman nearly lose her life because we could not get her into a local hospital," the clergyman said. "We knelt down after that and made a vow to help the Negro race if ever we had the opportunity. This is our opportunity."

volume was edited by Dean Shires and Professor Miller under the title, Christianity and the Contemporary Scene. Articles and books have stemmed from the pens of various members of the faculty, including The American Prayer Book, What We Can Believe, Christian Perfection, and many others. Three members of the faculty contributed to the second volume of the Interseminary Series, The Church and Organized Movements.

During the war the student body dropped to a very small number, but the influx of students since the war has raised the total to an all time high of 40, most of whom are on the "G.I. Bill." Students attending classes from other seminaries raise the total to 82 students.

The main task of a Divinity School is to train men for the ministry. The curriculum, both in classes and in the school life of devotion and recreation, is geared to this primary task. Unique in the curriculum are courses on the devotional life, which includes actual practice in the life of prayer; a three-year course for the wives of students on "What every clergyman's wife should know," begun in 1946; a course on the church in town and country. Steps have been taken to initiate a training school for missionaries planning to go to East Asia, in cooperation with the neighboring seminaries; and plans are being laid for a more extensive clinical training program.

Please Help Kimber Den

Mr. Den and a group of workers at the opening of a new center

Those who read the report by the Rev. Kimber Den of his many-sided work in China (WITNESS, Dec. 18) will surely want to aid his great work. It covers work with lepers, the blind, orphans, refugees, cooperatives, and we believe that there is no Christian minister today carrying on such tasks. It is being done in the face of wild inflation which makes the American dollar all the more necessary. Church organizations and individuals are urged to do all that they can to help.

include the stimulus and opportunity for the clergy and students who have aptitudes for advanced study. Spiritual resources in the exploration and practice of the devotional life are made more readily available to the whole Church. Libraries are built up beyond the capacity of individual effort. New learning, as in education and psychology, is able to be tested for its use in the service of religion. And wherever the Church creates superior theological resources, inevitably there are attracted more capable men for the ministry.

There have been 12 years of growth since 1935, and the promise of the future is brighter still. Church Divinity School of the Pacific is a seminary which has reached maturity and which serves the whole Church.

GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

New York:—Results achieved during the summer of 1947 have convinced the faculty of the General Theological Seminary that its provisions for the practical training of students in some of the major techniques of their profession has passed the experimental stage. Throughout most of the long vacation undergraduates were engaged as follows: 7 under the Council for Clinical Training, studying psychiatric problems and ministering to mental patients, under expert direction; 13 in camp, settlement, or other welfare activities, serving as chaplains or counsellors, and assuming varied responsibilities for the care, instruction and guidance of children; 28 in parishes or mission stations, assisting parish priests, or working more independently under diocesan officials; of this number, 6 attended the sessions of the National Town-Country Institute, held at Parkville, Missouri, before going to their appointments in rural or missionary districts.

A few students were for urgent reasons permitted to take secular positions, or were advised to make up deficiencies in their academic background by attending the summer session of some college or university.

Members of the middle and junior classes are called into conference in the Easter term for planning their summer projects. A considerable measure of freedom is allowed in the formulation of these plans; but only proposals which have the Seminary's approval and endorsement, and which look toward the utilization of at least two-thirds of the vacation period, may be carried out.

On their return to the Seminary in the fall, men are asked to submit to the faculty by October 15 a full report of their summer field-work. After describing the nature of their commitments, they are expected to discuss in detail some of the typical problems they have encountered; to assess their equipment for handling such problems, noting in what respects their Seminary training has so far been of use, and wherein they may feel that it has been inadequate: and finally to express a definite opinion as to how their recent experience has extended and enriched their preparation for pastoral service. Although a report may sometimes be superficial, the average student takes pains to analyze objectively the work he has done, finding more often than not that his reactions are clarified and his appraisals sharpened, as he puts them in writing. The faculty also receives reports on the students' work from many of the agencies supervising the summer programs, and finds them very helpful in assessment of the capacities and needs of the men.

Obviously the program of intensive field-work, limited as it must be to two summers, cannot secure to each student a practical training which is ideal in its range, and in its relevance to all of his individual needs; but it is a provably important contribution to his development, broadening his interests, quickening his perceptions, maturing his judgments, and not infrequently awakening a sense of special vocation to the type of ministry or the area of missionary endeavor which he has been privileged to explore at first hand.

In addition to the summer program, students are helped to find useful work during term-time in parishes near at hand so far as that is consistent with the requirements of their academic preparation for the ministry. Released-time schools, Sunday schools, boys' clubs, young people's groups and the normal activities of parishes in and around New York, all afford further valuable insight into the practical application of the knowledge gained in the classroom and the life that is lived in Chelsea Square.

The picture on the cover of this number of THE WITNESS is of the campus of the General Seminary.

RT. REV. THOMAS JENKINS
Retired Bishop of Nevada

The two recent articles on the Offertory by Prof. Shepherd are deserving of wide attention and would serve a good purpose if printed as a tract. It is distressing to see so many priests careless about the alms. The practice of putting a plate at the entrance of the church, or sometimes at the chancel, for people to put their money in either as they enter or go up to make their communion is plainly contrary to Prayer Book teaching and rubrical direction. It strikes a blow at the liturgical process at the very beginning. If clergy who do this only realized that, at least historically, there could be no oblations without alms they would doubtless conform to the clear teaching of the Book of Common Prayer.

Professor Shepherd's previous article on the use of the Offertory sentences was likewise timely. One hears all too often that of 'letting your light shine' as though the few coins dropped casually in were by any token representative of 'good works' which would glorify our heavenly Father. The sentence as an offertory message is entirely out of its context and I feel quite sure that one's light would shine no less brightly if the sentence were seldom or never used.

MR. E. T. LAWRENCE
Layman of Tillicum, Washington

I have been a reader of THE WITNESS for several years and for a time I was favorably disposed toward it for what seemed to be its frank open-minded policy but more and more of late I look upon it as a medium for the propagation and dissemination of all kinds of isms and policies which certainly do not make for either world peace or domestic harmony but space will not permit me to go into detail here. I may say, however, that my remarks are directed not only against THE WITNESS but also the Council of Churches and those who agree with them regarding our foreign policy and the question of national defense, a policy by the way which has involved us in two world wars and taken the lives of many thousands of our young men.

What I am getting at is this. Just as long as there is a powerful nation in the world led by a man of the Hitler type whose ambition and determination is to take whatever he covets by force, just so long will the freedom loving nations have to band themselves together and arm themselves for their own protection in order to survive.

The whole world knows, with sorrow, the result of Hitler's war. We also know that in the period between the two wars it was the policy of this country to scrap our armaments while Hitler, Mussolini, and the Japs were arming to the teeth, and when our late president tried to point out the danger you people called him a warmonger. Well, we all know what happened. Now you are preaching the same doctrine, in spite of the fact that Hitler's successor, Stalin, and his atheistic cohorts have forcibly taken control of all neighbor states, have made it impossible for the U.N. organization to function and are trying by every means in their power to bring the whole world under their sway. Surely for professing Christians, you choose strange bedfellows.

There is little doubt that Stalin's spies know of the good job you are doing for him and how he must chuckle. You no doubt have heard the saying that "God helps those who help themselves" but your policy seems to be to appease Russia at all costs. Why don't you face facts and call a spade a spade? Russia has made it abundantly clear that she is hostile both to Christianity and democracy, and don't for. get that Stalin offered to fight with Germany against us but that Hitler would not agree to share the spoils with him. As for your propaganda encouraging men to become so-called "conscientious objectors" to avoid fighting for their country, we could find several names for such conduct, maybe contemptible is as good as any.

I think it is generally agreed by people of discernment that our country is largely pagan. I suggest, therefore, that those people occupying positions of leadership in the churches concentrate on the saving of souls and leave politics alone, as do those real Christians who are doing such a noble work in the slums of our great cities.

MRS. E. H. RAYMOND
Churchwoman of Washington, D. C.

THE WITNESS for Dec. 25 gives the report of the diocesan commission of Western Massachusetts which was indorsed by Bishop Lawrence. I turned the page and was shocked to see the item quoting the Rev. Hans Asmussen of Germany that "It is impossible for a Christian to wage war with Adolf Hitler to the death and to make peace with Stalin."

May I ask whether this was deliberate or a proof reader's mistake? For I am quite sure the discrepancy between the statement that a desirable thing is impossible, and that it is undesirable, is obvious. To say "Wants no peace with Stalin" seems to me not only inexcusably unfair to Mr. Asmussen, but a type of the confused thinking on the part of so many of the clergy, which has led to the notable falling off of the influence of the Church in the past fifty years. May I suggest that those who cried "Peace, peace where there was no peace" in Jeremiah's time were not counted as among the noblest or most helpful of men.

ANSWER: We were presenting news, not expressing an editorial opinion. We reported both facts accurately: an accurate quotation from the address by Mr. Asmussen made in Philadelphia and an accurate report of the statement on American-Soviet relations issued by the commission of social service of the diocese of Western Massachusetts.

Long Beach Parish Has Record Of Years of Service

Its Famous Male Choristers Have Performed In Eighty Movies and Made Albums of Records

Long Beach, Calif.:—For a parish on the Pacific Coast to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary is an event. In 1897 this thriving city was a tiny village. It was in that year that Bishop J. H. Johnson held the first service at St. Luke's Mission which had a list of fifteen communicants. By 1900 the town had grown from about 1500 population to 2252, and the communicant strength of St. Luke's had jumped to 36. It was in that year that the first church was dedicated. Five years later it became a parish with 163 communicants and with the Rev. C. T. Murphy as the first rector.

Since that time there have been but three rectors: the Rev. Robert B. Gooden, now Suffragan Bishop of Los Angeles, was rector from 1907 to 1912; the Rev. Arnold G. H. Bode from 1912 to 1923, with the Rev. Perry G. M. Austin the rector from that date to the present time. The unusual picture on the cover is of four generations of St. Luke's rectors; the present rector, Perry Austin, shaking hands with the first, Mr. Murphy, with the second rector, Bishop Gooden, smiling approval and the third, Arnold G. H. Bode looking on. The picture was taken at a recent dinner which marked the anniversary.

By 1917 the city had grown to have a population of over 55,000. The parish, with a communicant strength of 550, dedicated its second church that year. A few years later, 1925, the parish started All Saints' Chapel, meeting in a school in a growing part of the city. Just three years later it became a parish, in its own building, with the Rev. F. A. Martyr, the first rector, still serving the parish which now has about 400 communicants.

The great earthquake of 1933 completely destroyed the church and other buildings of St. Luke's, but in a year the present beautiful church was built. By that year the population of the city had grown to 145,000. At present it is over 250,000 and the communicant strength of St. Luke's is 1,146. Thus in a span of fifty years the city has grown from 1,500 to 250,000, and the parish from 15 to 1,146.

That the numerical growth of a parish, particularly in a rapidly growing city, is hardly noteworthy, the four men who have been rectors of St. Luke's would be the first to say. What is noteworthy is that the Episcopal Church, fifty years ago, began to discharge, through its trusteeship for the mature treasure of Anglo-Saxon Christian thought and experience, its work to lift the taste of Long Beach to the plane of Christian loyalty and performance. It has stuck to that task and has succeeded to a remarkable degree. It has been an inclusive parish, welcoming people as people, recognizing that all need the grace of God and that God having made all men his children gives all the right to membership.

The present rector, Perry Austin, is particularly happy over the fact that five young men have entered the ministry from St. Luke's. He presented Reginald Heber Gooden for ordination to his father, Bishop Robert Gooden. Young Gooden, now the Bishop of Panama, had been baptized at St. Luke's during his father's rectorship. Others to enter the ministry from the parish were the Rev. Sturgis Lee Riddle, now a Long Island rector; the Rev. John Pendleton Phillips, a teacher in Portland, Oregon; the Rev. George L. Potter, vicar at Lompoc, Calif., and the Rev. Robert L. Bonhall, the rector at Santa Maria, Calif.

It was in 1930 that St. Luke's choristers was organized under the direction of William R. Dorr. This choir, with sixty men and boys, you doubtless have heard even if you were not aware of the fact, because it has become so famous that it has made three albums of hymn records, including one of Christmas carols that has been sold all over the English speaking world. The choir has also performed in over eighty movies, including Smilin' Through, A Tale of Two Cities, The Girl of the Golden West, Marie Antoinette, Boys Town, Mrs. Miniver, Random Harvest, Mrs. Parkington, The Corn Is Green, Our Vines Have Tender Grapes, Bells of St. Mary's, and recently released, The Song of Love which is based on the life of Schumann.

One of the fine touches at the banquet which marked the fiftieth anniversary was the singing of The King's Highway (432, Hymnal 1940) which was written by Dean Bode, third rector of the parish, who was at the piano to accompany the singing of his own hymn which is now a favorite of thousands.

DEDICATE NEW CHURCH

Port-au-Prince, Haiti:—Bishop Voegeli of Haiti has dedicated the new church at Grande Riviere de Leogane, with more than 1,000 persons attending. The old church has been set aside for a parochial school and other activities.

LAMBETH IN LENT

The announcement on page twenty speaks for itself. All of the authors are Bishops and of course known to all our readers, including Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church who is a leading authority on the Relation of the State to Education and Freedom. The subjects are all taken from the Agenda of the Lambeth Conference in which there is worldwide interest — interest which will increase as the time for the world conclave approaches. We hope that the articles may be widely used in parish discussion groups and otherwise distributed in parishes. We urge that orders be placed early to assure the delivery of the February 5th number when the series starts. Please use the form on page twenty.

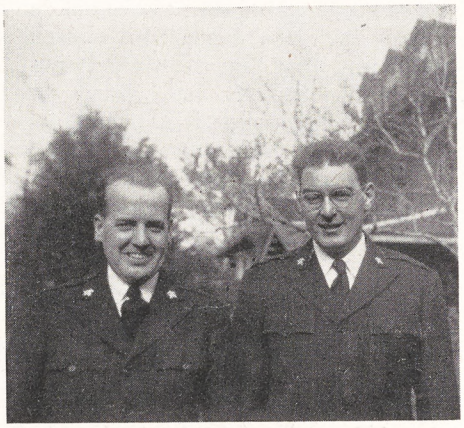
THEODORE FERRIS HEADS CHURCH CONGRESS

Hartford, Conn.:—The Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, was elected president of the Church Congress at a meeting of the executive committee. He succeeds Bishop Gray of Connecticut who has just completed a five year term. New members elected to the executive committee were the Rev. Gordon M. Jones Jr. of Toledo; the Rev. William C. Munds of Greenville, Del., the Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife of Pittsburgh, and the Rev. Benedict Williams of Sewickley, Pa. It was reported that membership now stands at 446, the highest in its history.

The syllabi for discussion this year will be on the "statement of faith and order in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral" and will be written by Father Granville Williams of the Cowley Fathers, Canon Theodore C. Wedel of Washington, Dr. Kenneth C. M. Sills, president of Bowdoin College and the Rev. Thorne Sparkman of Chattanooga.



Tentative plans were made to hold a national meeting in the spring of 1949 to consider "faith and order" and possibly further revision of the marriage canons.

THE GREATEST MISSION FIELD

Buck Hill Falls, Pa.: — The Rev. Mark A. Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council, told the annual meeting of the organization that "New York City presents the greatest missionary challenge of any city or territory in America or the world." He said that of the nearly eight million New Yorkers, at least three and a half million — equal to the population of Chicago — were without active membership in any Church, Protestant, Catholic or Jewish, and he said that all three faiths are "minority groups in New York." The major faith, he declared, is secularism and the influx of peoples from all over the world and the mushrooming of new housing developments in the city combine "to present an unprecedented challenge to the missionary spirit of the Christian Church."

Also addressing the conference was the Rev. Frank S. Mead who declared that more religious freedom exists in Puerto Rico than in New Mexico, and more racial tolerance in Hawaii than in Harlem. He blamed the Roman Catholic Church for lack of freedom in New Mexico and "the churches' unwillingness to face its responsibilities" for racial intolerance in Harlem. He declared that in New Mexico "religious freedom is threatened by the Catholic Church encroachment on the public schools. Using its enormous influence the Catholic Church is attempting to exercise direct control over public school policy. The catechism and 'Holy Marys' are being taught as a regular feature of the school curriculum. Protestant children are required to learn the catechism and often are promoted according to their proficiency in reciting it."

In northern New Mexico, he stated, there are 129 Roman Catholic nuns employed as teachers in public schools.

William Johnson and Ernest St. Andrew who have been commissioned Church Army captains after completing two years of training at the Training Center in Cincinnati

CHURCH ARMY STUDENTS COMMISSIONED

Cincinnati: — The first post-war commissioning service for three Church Army students took place on January 18 at Christ Church here. Bishop Hobson, acting for the Presiding Bishop, made captains of Fred Nussbaum of Oklahoma, William Johnson of Los Angeles and Ernest St. Andrew of Munising, Michigan. They were presented by the warden of the Church Army Training Center, the Rev. F. J. Moore.

Capt. Nussbaum will work at Galilee Mission, Philadelphia; Capt. Johnson has been assigned to the Town and Country staff at Parkville, Mo. and Capt. St. Andrew will do work in the rural field of Western Michigan.

SEMINARY OFFERING FOR LAST YEAR

Evanston:—Dean Alden D. Kelley of Seabury-Western Seminary here, who is in charge of the promotion of the annual offerings for seminaries, has released a report of the 1947 offering, which totalled $100,182, as follows: General, $27,422; Berkeley, 5,255; Bexley, 2,488; Bishop Payne, 1,624; Pacific, 6,918; Cambridge 9,316; Nashotah, 15,312; Philadelphia, 7,509; Seabury-Western, 10,531; Virginia, 13,803, with no report from Sewanee.

He stated that parishes increasingly are including the seminaries in their budgets, instead of taking an offering on Seminary Sunday, and it is being urged in many quarters that this plan be adopted. At the same time it is felt that the Sunday (Jan. 25 this year) should be used to call to the attention of Church people the needs of the seminaries, the importance of their work and the need for qualified and trained men for the ministry. The hope was also expressed that the offering this year would be at least 25% larger than last because of rising operating costs and the increased number of students in all of the schools.

HOBART COLLEGE PRESIDENT

Geneva, N. Y.:—Alan William Brown has been named the president of Hobart College and William Smith College, it was announced on January 12th by Bishop Reinheimer of Rochester, president of the trustees. Dr. Brown is assistant to the dean and chairman of the committee of admissions of Columbia College of Columbia University. The new president is 38 years old, a graduate of Harvard with a doctorate from Columbia.

THE LITANY FOR THE NATION

Washington:—The Litany for the Nation, written by the Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, whose column on hymns was a feature of THE WITNESS for a number of years, was used as a special service for members of Congress, held here at the cathedral. President Clark G. Kuebler of Ripon College preached at the service which was attended by about 1000, many of them members of Congress and their families.

The Witness 1947 Honor Roll Presented By Editors

Selected for Outstanding Contributions In Furthering of the Christian Religion

New York.:—As in previous years we present the names of a number of Episcopalians who have made outstanding contributions to the furthering of the Christian religion during the year past. Nominations have been made by readers, with final selections by the board of editors. There are a number who were nominated but not included since it is our policy not to repeat those of previous Honor Rolls unless their recent service is so outstanding as to compel it. The names are presented alphabetically.

Middleton S. Barnwell, Bishop of Georgia, for his vigorous denunciation in his convention address of all who indulge in witch-hunting and name-calling.

Walter Russell Bowie, professor at Union Seminary, for giving outstanding leadership among churchmen in the field of civil rights and international friendship.

Wallace E. Conkling, Bishop of Chicago, for insisting in the debate at the meeting of the House of Bishops, that the new marriage canons should be given a thorough trial.

Benjamin Dagwell, Bishop of Oregon, for his stand against racial discrimination.

Kimber Den of China who not only has continued his great work among orphans, refugees, lepers, the blind, but has widely expanded it even in the face of ever increasing inflation.

Charles K. Gilbert, Bishop of New York, for speaking boldly on housing, high living costs, American-Soviet Friendship.

Edgar Goold, for thirty-one years of able and devoted service as president of St. Augustine's College.

John M. Groton of the faculty of the Philadelphia Divinity School for his fine influence both in and outside the classroom.

Robert S. Harris, who as rector of the Annunciation and St. Christopher's, Philadelphia, has done a great work in a difficult urban situation.

John G. Martin, for his able administration of the Hospital of St. Barnabas and for Women and Children, Newark. N. J.

William H. Melish, associate rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, for valiantly championing the causes of social justice and international friendship in the face of criticism bordering upon persecution.

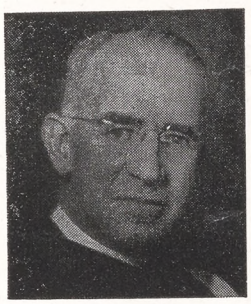
E. Tertius Noble, former organist and choir director of St. Thomas', New York, one of the all-time greats in the field of music.

Earle C. Page, president of the North Carolina Episcopal College Students Conference, who was chiefly responsible for the passing of a resolution declaring that "any segregation within the Church because of race or social position is unequivocably antithetical to the teachings of our Lord and the purpose of his Church."

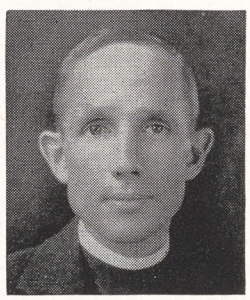
Oscar J. F. Seitz, professor at Bexley Hall, for his leadership among the students in furthering inter-church relations, social justice, peace.

Frank G. Sibilia of Albany, Calif., for his idea of "vocational giving." As a barber at a San Francisco hotel, he has for years cut the hair of parishioners of St. Alban's Church in his spare time, and they have made donations to the building fund. In this way he raised about $10,000 for the $50,000 parish house just opened.

Andrew Tsu, assistant Bishop of Victoria-Hong Kong, for his vigorous campaign for centralizing of the work of the Church in China, which was accomplished at the synod of 1947.



John Moore Walker, the Bishop of Atlanta, for taking the lead in Georgia in protesting Herman Talmadge's claim to the governorship.



The Archbishop of York for his many courageous utterances and particularly for his addresses pointing out that an enemy of One World is the Vatican.

Honor Rolls of previous years were as follows, listed alphabetically but without the citations:

1941: William A. Eddy, Joseph F. Fletcher, Mrs. Joseph F. Fletcher, John Gass, Paul Jones, Maury Maverick, William Fellows Morgan, William C. Munds, Robert W. Patton, Clinton S. Quin, Vida D. Scudder, Edwin S. Smith, Robert N. Spencer, Claude W. Sprouse, Frank W. Sterrett, Samuel Thorne, Gardner C. Tucker, Mary van Kleeck, Jerry Voorhis, Harold J. Weaver.

1942: Harry Beal, Stafford Cripps, Lewis B. Franklin, Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Charles A. Higgins, William Kirk, Felix Kloman, W. Appleton Lawrence, Herman Page, J. Lindsay Patton, Henry H. Shires, Mrs. Mary Simkhovitch, Henry St. George Tucker, Henry Wallace, Wendell Willkie.

Among those on the 1947 WITNESS Honor Roll are Bishop Gilbert, the Rev. John M. Groton and the Rev. W. Russell Bowie.

1943: C. C. Burlingham, Wolcott Cutler, Genie Daly, Gardiner M. Day, Winfred Douglas, John Henry Edwards, David E. Gibson, Mrs. John E. Hill, Frederick B. Howden, Annie Parks, Edward L. Parsons, George Plaskett, Gilbert P. Symons, Beverley D. Tucker, Nettie Whitford.

1944: Edward F. Colcock, William V. Dennis, Elizabeth Frazier, Joseph C. Grew, Helen G. Hogue, Harry W. Horn, David R. Hunter, John H. Johnson, Sherman Johnson, Henry Kaiser, Ivey Lewis, Elmore McKee, Charles S. Mott, Mary Louis Pardee, Ellis Van Riper, Howard Chandler Robbins, Henry Knox Sherrill, Percy R. Stockman, William Temple, Edgar L. Tiffany, Henry B. Washburn, Theodore O. Wedel. Sumner Welles.

1945: All Chaplains, Chester Bowles, Stephen R. Davenport, Jr.,

C. G. Hamilton, Eric Johnston, C. D. B. King, Harry Kennedy, Daisuke Kitagawa, F. H. LaGuardia, Mrs. Stephen Mahon, Richard Morford, Walter P. Morse, Mrs. Arthur Sherman, Edward Stettinius, Helen Turnbull, Raymond Walsh, Francis Wei, Charles C. Wilson, Doris K. Wright.

SEMINARY DEANS MEET

Washington: — The deans of the eleven Church seminaries met at the College of Preachers here on Dec. 29-31 to consider, among other things, the Syllabus for Theological Studies soon to be issued by the commission on theological education of the General Convention. The Syllabus is used by faculties, students and examining chaplains as a guide to training and examinations, and has been under revision for some time. The deans studied the final draft and made recommendations which now go to an editing committee before adoption by the commission.

Special attention was given to the need for additional clergy, with a number of interesting facts being brought out. For instance, less than 65% of the candidates for the ministry of the Episcopal Church in recent years have come from members of our Church; the capacity of our seminaries in presenting men for ordination is less than 200 candidates a year; in the five year period, 1940-45, only 625 men were ordained while in the same period 825 clergymen retired or died. This year, under abnormal conditions and with most of the seminaries operating beyond their normal capacity, there are but 534 students in the eleven schools.

Particular attention was paid to information revealing an alarming lack of clergy in the domestic missionary fields where clergy turnover appears at an alarming rate. The seminaries are anxious to prepare men for these fields but the deans stated that they are seriously handicapped by the disparity between salaries in the dioceses, and even the foreign fields, and those paid in the domestic missionary fields. It was suggested that a policy should be developed which would place domestic missionaries on the same salary basis as those in foreign fields.

The deans are to meet again this spring at the time of the meeting of the commission on theological education.

MANHATTAN CLERGY HAVE RETREAT

Suffern, N. Y.:—A combined conference and retreat on evangelism was held for the clergy of the borough of Manhattan, New York, at the farm of All Angels' parish here, January 8-9. Bishop Gilbert and Suffragan Bishop Donegan participated in the conference which was presided over by the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, chairman of the Manhattan committee on evangelism.

Wynne Ditchburn is one reason why so many male students are seen these days at the student center at Southwestern Louisiana Institute. She is the new student worker there and is the daughter of the Rev. J. S. Ditchburn who is the Episcopal chaplain at Louisiana State University

The Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, rector of St. Philip's, conducted the opening service and meditation. This was followed by a conference where methods of evangelism were discussed. Bishop Donegan then led a discussion on a rule of life, emphasizing personal devotion, greater self-sacrifice and discipline, and deeper and frequent participation in the sacramental life. The evening meditation in preparation for the holy communion was given by the Rev. James Green, precentor at the cathedral.

Plans are under way for convocations in various centers to make plans for a unified program of evangelism in the diocese. A meeting to this end was held for the Manhattan clergy on January 19 at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York.

WORLD GOVERNMENT DISCUSSED

New York:—Four lectures on world government, followed by discussion, are being held at St. George's Church here. The first was on January 14 when the lecturer was Manson Benedict, chemist and mathematician, on atomic energy. On the 21st the speaker was Vernon Nash, journalist, and on the 28th it will be Alan Green, author and lecturer. The last of the series will be February 4 when the lecturer will be Cord Meyer Jr., president of United World Federalists, who is to discuss Russia and world federation.

LAYMEN'S COMMITTEE HAS MEETING

Greenwich, Conn.:—The committee on laymen's work of the National Council met at Seabury House, January 8-9, with the Presiding Bishop present throughout. He told the men that it was only by stirring lay people to a sense of personal mission that a dent can be made on the half of the people of the country that are not connected with any church. He said: "I am encouraged. We are not moving rapidly, but I honestly think we are moving."

Mr. Harvey S. Firestone Jr. of Akron is the chairman of the committee and presided at the meeting.

LEADING LAYMAN DIES

Mauch Chunk, Pa.: — Richard S. Ruddle, a vestryman of St. Mark's here for 58 years, died December 28th, with the service conducted on the 30th by the Rev. G. Clayton Malling and Bishop Sterrett. His father and grandfather had served on the vestry before him, for a continuous record for the three generations of 113 years. Mr. Ruddle was also active in diocesan affairs, and represented the diocese of Bethlehem at the 1934 General Convention. He was also the organist at St. Mark's for 12 years and often gave assistance to those who have succeeded him as organist and choirmaster.

A Step Forward

THE trustees of the American Church Institute for Negroes are to be congratulated for the action taken in regard to the Bishop Payne Divinity School, reported in this number. Had the original program been carried out it would have perpetuated in stone and mortar for decades a policy of segregation in the Episcopal Church. Negroes, like all other qualified candidates for the ministry, should be welcomed at any approved seminary and we are delighted that trustees of the Institute so state and ask for authority to use the revenue from the large grant from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund for scholarships to Negro candidates.

Incidentally, THE WITNESS has had no small part in what the trustees call "adverse publicity" given to Bishop Payne, and has been severely criticized for it by some. But our attacks have not been directed against the school as such, and certainly not against its administrators and faculty, but solely against segregation. That this is understood by the dean of the school is attested by a letter received last week from Dean Goodwin in which he says: "I too am against segregation and am praying and working for the day when segregation will be no more. Paradoxical as it may seem, I think the work we are doing at Bishop Payne is working toward that end. So do our Negro professors who are working with me, and so do a large number of our alumni."

Qualified Negroes should be admitted to both the student bodies and faculties of all our seminaries and we are confident that the day will come when they will be.

"QUOTES"

WE ARE determined that America shall be no totalitarian state which treats youth as cannon fodder. We must also see that greedy individuals and institutions do not treat the government as a pork barrel. We cherish the doctrine of separation of Church and state, but we must not misinterpret this to mean the isolation of religion from public policies and social programs. The basic principle on which this republic was founded is the sovereignty of God. It is that which safeguards our idea of right and our ideas of our rights.

—Ralph W. Sockman
Pastor of Christ Church,
New York

Kindly Criticism

WE WERE talking the other day with an active churchwoman who had an interesting slant on the article by Professor Walter H. Clark, Episcopalians and Class, that we ran December 11th. She approved the piece but thought the criticism could be brought nearer home for some people. She has an unusual background upon which to base her judgment. Active in church work for over fifty years, she has lived in three dioceses, been a communicant of four parishes, held offices in Church organizations, parochial, diocesan, provincial and national.

She prefaced her criticism by declaring that ministers are doing the greatest service in the world and therefore deserve support in appreciation of their fine qualities. She thought too that the laity could help the clergy by calling attention to failings which the clergy might correct if their attention was called to them. One of these she described as "their conscious or unconscious neglect of some of the outstanding workers in their parishes. I refer to women of education and culture who conduct educational and missionary programs in parishes, who are usually well informed on Church matters, but who do not belong to the wealthy or socially prominent group. When the bishop, dean, or rector has distinguished churchmen as guests, these women are seldom invited to luncheons or dinners where they might have the valued privilege of talking first-hand with these leaders about whom they know so much through reading the Church papers and keeping abreast of trends. Instead the guests are usually from the rich and socially prominent who know little and care less for the kind of conversation which might prevail. The interested workers hear a talk in the parish house, manage to shake hands with the visitor and go away wishing they might have had even a short talk to help their work. The cry for leadership is still loud. Perhaps a decrease in recognition of 'class' only at these affairs might result in an increase of leaders willing to devote their talents to church organizations rather than women's clubs."

Her criticism was not the gripe of a snubbed woman. It was that of a young woman of seventy who has put in fifty years of Church work and thinks that a bit of attention at such affairs, to her, and others like her, might help equip them the better for the service they want to give in the days ahead.

Three Great Weaknesses

THE top man of Unitarianism, Frederick May Eliot, made pertinent observations the other day in an address on the subject of liberals. After giving the opinion that the world is weary of extremes and would welcome a philosophy of the middle way, Dr. Eliot, himself of course a professional liberal, felt compelled to say that liberals are totally unprepared to meet this opportunity since they are beset with three great weaknesses. The first he called the liberal's fear of regimentation—discipline perhaps would be a better word—so that he finds it almost impossible to work with others in an organization. His second fear is of dogmatism and creeds so that in time the liberal is not definite about anything. Thirdly, says Dr. Eliot, "The liberal has a certain brittleness and shallowness. There is something about the stuff of the liberal which has often proven that he cannot take it during the great tests of the world's history."

THE WITNESS is glad to be known as a liberal journal. But we are sure that "the interpretation of the Christian religion in contemporary terms" and "the rigorous application of the principles of Christ to our social life" of our statement of purpose are just as essentially a part of the full gospel as is our conviction that "God wills the Church to be Catholic in its inclusiveness, Liberal in its essential spirit, Evangelical to the Gospel of Christ."

We agree with Dr. Eliot that liberals must get rid of these three weaknesses if our movement is not to crack up completely. And this is just as true of liberalism in the Episcopal Church as it is in the Church of which Dr. Eliot is the president.

Travels of a Gargoyle

LIBRARY & ARCHIVES
CHURCH HISTORICAL SOCIETY
AUSTIN, TEXAS

by Thomas V. Barrett

Secretary of College Work of the National Council

I HAD been sitting for several days with my feet on the desk in my niche in the Cathedral of Bureaucrats, dictating plans and strategems with enormous energy when a secretary popped into the office carrying a basket full of trade-journals and a ham sandwich. It is my custom to stop my "over-all planning on the national level" for a half hour each month in order to catch up on the news of the Church militant and to find out just what is happening on other ecclesiastical levels.

I soon discovered from some of the news items, and articles, that the Church was really on the march—in a hysterical sort of way. The only thing that seemed to be wrong with it was on the national, policy-making level. I had settled down with a cheekful of ham sandwich and was enjoying a breezy article about the gargoyles at "281" when I suddenly realized, "That's me they're talking about."

I flew into a pretty impressive tantrum and hurled the latest edition of the "Witnit" into the wastebasket. But by the time I finished a cup of coffee I began to see the whole matter in a new light. "I bet they're right," I said to myself. "Here we sit up here, me and my brother gargoyles, and we just don't know what's going on in the Church. Or in the world either. We haven't got down to the grass roots. We ought to get out more, and get our fingers on the pulse of the Church, so we can really feel the blood pressure. Probably on the diocesan and parochial levels the vitality is simply terrific."

I pushed aside the latest communique I intended to send out in quadruplet copies and brooded for fifteen minutes. Then I began to pack my suitcase.

"Let's get out of this rat hole," I muttered, "and go visit some of these men in the field and learn from them. . . ."

It was two days later that I stumbled off the Canojoharie Night Express and was met by the Rev. Joshua Sitwell. He was fairly tall and portly, with a pink face that looked fine in his new Buick.

"We'll just run around and see the Plant first," began Mr. Sitwell. "Of course, it isn't quite in first class shape yet. I've only been here two years and you've no idea what a mess it was when I arrived. Absolutely no parish records worth anything. And the Parish House! Indescribable! But we're putting the Plant in shape now. Mr. Snood our senior warden, and Mr. Flushman, our treasurer, matched each other to the tune of $5,000 for a new kitchen, and we're getting the nave extended as soon as materials are available. Don't understand it, but we're simply pushing the walls out. Terribly cramped for room."

We were passing through a decrepit part of town, evidently a Negro ghetto. I thought it would not be amiss to find out how they were handling the race problem on the local level.

"This Negro question is difficult in these large urban centers, isn't it?" I ventured. "How do you find the problem here?"

Sitwell looked for a moment as though I'd asked him to recite the names of the Kings of Israel, but he pulled himself together.

"Oh, they get along pretty well. Give a Negro a ten cent cigar and he's happy. These things take time, you know. I'm a trustee of the Y.M.C.A. and we're starting a Negro branch next year. The city is alert to the need. Of course, we have a lot of southern Negroes and they're very aggressive, you know. Haven't learned to use their freedom. We have 'Bump night' here every Thursday. It's a thing that takes time."

We soon turned a corner and in a few minutes were rolling along a fine avenue which Sitwell assured me was the nicest street in town. He pointed out some of the houses of his parishioners and told me the amounts of their salaries, which no doubt will be a useful piece of information for me some day.

"Well, here's the Plant"—he boomed, coasting up to the curb. I looked out at a massive pile of stone and stained glass that wandered all over the block.

"What do you think of it, eh?"

"It's . . . it's quite a Plant," I answered feeble.

"Of course," went on Mr. Sitwell, "we need a new wing on the parish house but that will have to wait. These labor unions are making things impossible now."

We entered an elaborate lobby and Sitwell pointed out the new lighting fixtures. An oak door led into a fabulous room that looked like the Taj Mahal with a dash of American Gothic. It turned out to be his office.

"Nice lay-out, eh?" asked the Reverend.

"Very nice," I agreed. I was about to suggest it was almost too nice, but remembered that I had come to learn.

"We're really starting to go places here," continued Sitwell lounging back in his chair. "The Guild raised $2,500 last year for a new Bishop's chair, and some Venetian blinds for the Kindergarten room. We raised the budget from $42,000 to $48,000 and had a confirmation class of sixty-three. Our average church attendance is 350 and. . . ."

My attention wandered a bit as Sitwell, getting down to the grass roots began to turn out statistics like a cement mixer laying a highway. I got completely mired in the deluge of facts and figures and finally asked him if he'd read any good books lately. "No, I haven't," he said, "that's one of the sacrifices of being a city rector. You don't get time to read. We're so busy here with meetings, calls, organizations, and now our new building fund—I don't find much time to read."

I caught a glimpse on his desk of a printed appeal for help to the people of Europe and asked how the parish made out in its missionary giving.

"Oh we always pay our quota in full. Went a hundred dollars over this year. Our quota is $3,400. We'll raise that to $3,600 after we get the new wing completed."

We had lunch at the city club but even in such secular surroundings it was difficult to get Sitwell out of his parish records. Of course, he gave me a lot of information about how to run a big parish if I ever got one, and also some advice about making calls; and he warned me not to preach about politics and controversial matters. People got all that stuff in the papers. It appears that in order to get a church really vital you must preach inspirational sermons, and get right down to the grass roots in your meetings, and study classes, and "meet peoples' needs where they are." (I'm not sure whether he meant the needs or the people. He didnt tell me just where they were either; but I shouldn't expect to learn everything in one visit.)

I was a little fatigued when I got on the train. I guess the sheer spiritual vitality of the place was enervating. Too much pulse for a bureaucrat to get his fingers on. It did seem as though Sitwell might have been more concerned about that Negro ghetto down by the railroad track, and the starving people of Europe and world peace. But he would probably get around to justice after he got the new wing for the parish house.

I sat quietly in the Pullman trying to digest what I had learned so that when I returned to my niche on Fourth Avenue I would know more about the real work in the field. I didn't seem to get to first base let alone the field. So, I opened a small Bible I had taken along to read when I was not operating on the local level.

It so happened that the first passage that caught my eye seemed completely irrelevant. It didn't have a thing to say about new wings, venetian blinds, parish records. There wasn't a statistic in the whole passage. "I hate, I despise your feast days—I take no delight in your solemn assemblies . . . take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols. But let justice roll down as waters; and righteousness as a mighty stream."

I guess Amos didn't know as much as we do about how to get down to the grass roots . . . .

Building the Preacher

by Richard R. Beasley

Rector of St. John's, Roanoke, Virginia

THE story goes that a group of clergy were discussing a man of another communion who is regarded as an exceptionally effective preacher. "But," one man complained, "he preaches to the galleries." "Yes," replied another, "and he is the only man in this city who has galleries to preach to." Is it unfair to say this is a rather prevalent condition throughout this Church? Why is Episcopal Church preaching ineffective? There are three immediate reasons: 1), we rely too heavily on the service. 2), we really don't think the sermon is important and so don't give preaching the necessary time and labor nor exert the discipline it demands. 3), we have not studied the science which makes the art of preaching possible.

Consider this preliminarily. Did you ever watch a group of clergy in a conference discussion, about forty of them? When a point arises that touches them at the core of their interest, they rise and pour out their very soul. You listen, captured, held by them. They speak nimbly, easily, convincingly. The fire in them kindles the fire in us. Then we watch them the next Sunday in their pulpit. They are conscious of themselves and their importance. "I am Sir Oracle," they seem to say, "and when I ope my mouth, let no dog bark." They read, heavily, what they have written (and the style is polished and perfectly grammatical and studded with quotations from learned books) and you can hear the rhythm of their prose and it is all very true, very learned, but you lose interest and your eyes become heavy. But back in that conference session you listened to them on the edge of your seat.

Shall preaching be, as Henry Ward Beecher once mused, "A random and unrequited effort"? —something, alas, we are sentenced to do a great deal of by virtue of our being in the ministry? Or shall it be as immediately effective as the performance of a pianist, or the operation of a surgeon? Those who know the value of preaching and are willing to give it the labor it deserves know that the latter question can be answered in the affirmative. The analogy of the hunter and the fisherman is applicable. The good hunter does not fire his gun haphazard in the air; rather he takes aim and fires and brings down the game. Similarly the fisherman goes where the fish are, studies their habits, possesses the proper equipment, is endlessly patient in luring fish to his hook—and catches the fish.

Watch the average preacher. He is a man of God, there is no question of that. Through his sermon there runs a real sense of God's presence and man's need. The sermon is spiritually centered, if you read it over later. The man is in earnest and conscious of his stupendous responsibility as a minister of the word. He is eager to assist in man's salvation in the proclaiming of the living God. Yet however important all this is, there is something lacking. The sermon does not go over. The people are not powerfully taken hold of.

Can we analyze what is lacking? Perhaps the sermon is too logically perfect. It states the problem and solves it and nothing is left to the hearers' imagination—no trails for further pondering are pointed out. Or the shot may go over the heads of the birds. The thought is all true but does not gear in with their thinking. There is no common ground where he and the people both stand. His starting point is irrelevant, so the sequence of his thought is irrelevant, too. Or he may be like a bambino in swadling clothes. He is not free, nor emancipated. His arms are tied; his tongue labors. He struggles and perspires and when he is finished he is exhausted and his people are unmoved. His sermon, in Phillips Brooks' words, has been, "The pumping of a pump not the play of a fountain." Or he is ignorant of his audience and is violating elementary psychological principles of speaking to a crowd of people, which is a vastly different thing from those same people as individuals.

SINCE we face this problem of public speaking, why not study it and perfect ourselves in the craftsmanship of it? This writer has long since learned that there is little help in the art of preaching in recent books and articles that profess to help the preacher. We have read a good proportion of them. Instead we prefer the old masters. To them we have gone back with immense profit and found the thrill that Keats evidently had when he looked in Chapman's Homer. Two Romans are perhaps the peer mentors for modern preachers—Cicero Concerning the Orator and Quintillian, Education of an Orator. Ah, those ancient speakers studied this matter of public speaking! The next best is Henry Ward Beecher's Lyman Beecher Lectures on Preaching (First Series). Personally we feel that nothing in this or the last century can compare with this book. Then any good life of George Whitefield or Spurgeon will be like mining gold and it will show what preaching can do.

Our criticism with most modern writers on preaching is an over-emphasis on content and an almost total disregard of the art of putting over the sermon. The same is true of most clergy conferences on preaching—usually the sole emphasis is on the message. But consider this. Quintillian calls attention to the fact that time and again a first rate message poorly delivered and without a knowledge of what Beecher calls, "Pulpit dynamics" is vastly inferior to a second-rate message well delivered. "I would not hesitate to assert that a mediocre speech supported by all the power of delivery will be more impressive than the best speech unaccompanied by such power." And he goes on to mention how actors "give so much more to the charm of the greatest poets that the verse moves us far more when heard than read."

Indeed in any speech situation there are three elements: the man, the message, the hearers. Each is a world in itself. Preachers in England after hearing Beecher on his several visits there went back to their homes concerned with building a man not just writing a sermon. Let a preacher start with that, building his courage so that no congregation intimidates him, freeing himself from timidities and uncertainties, making himself a master in his field, studying his craft, pouring into his mind ceaseless knowledge from every area of culture, scrutinizing human nature wherever man is found, opening wide his soul's door to the invasion of God in Christ—all that will build the man.

And the message—most of us need no caution on that in view of the hours we spend on our sermons. But two remarks are worth mentioning. Herbert Spencer's study The Philosophy of Style is fruitful reading: our style should be such that the people can understand what we are saying with a minimum of effort. Second, our prose should be fed by a constantly enriched imagination. We think best in images not cold logic—picture thinking is the one we remember. There is the Arab proverb: "He is the best orator who gives men's ears eyes."

Then the audience. There are two superb books on that subject: The Crowd by the French psychologist, Le Bon, and The Psychology of Public Speaking by Walter Dill Scott. A congregation is a crowd and a crowd is not just a coming together of various individuals. The mere fact of being a crowd introduces other and powerful elements into the picture. It is fatal to talk to a crowd as one could to an individual. Logical reasoning is out; a vast reservoir of feeling is waiting to be stirred. Affirmations are in order not argument. Challenge is desired and strong leadership is expected. The great orators, Webster, Bryan, Disraeli, have all studied the characteristics of the crowd and hence could control them as a driver with a team of horses.

Well, how get this victory, utterly persuasive element which the clergy in the conference discussion, in paragraph three had? Certainly this: to speak only when you are ready and on themes on which you have long pondered. That means you must have a notebook always handy with topics noted down, subjects that are going through the process of ripening. That means too that your reading must compass not only Bible study and theology but more important the vast and stimulating field of belles-lettres. That means further that the sooner you break the chain holding you to a manuscript the better. It wont be—your sermon—as polished and grammatical and logical and literary as if you read it but you will be listened to better and your people will be more moved by it and it will feed their heart and soul and not just their mind—and they will come back. Richard S. Storr's Preaching Without Notes is as bread to a hungry man. It can be done, for in this as in all the rest it is a matter of technique.

This final word. If you are entirely satisfied with your preaching and your people are too, this article is not for you. But if you have a haunting sense that something is wrong, that your congregation is not growing, that there are skills and techniques that you are overlooking—well, read Beecher and Storr and Cicero and Quintillian. That will be a sunrise!

A Word With You

The Eucharist

THIS name for the chief service of the Church exemplifies one of the most charming aspects—if one may use the word "charming" in this connection—of the relationship between Christ and his bride, the Church.

She thanks him for his life, as recorded in the gospel. She recalls him at the beginning of the canon, in joyful thanks: "Lift up your hearts." At the same place, she declares her faith in him, in a way which makes the creed almost unnecessary—and this time she does it with thanks, general and specific. She then receives renewed strength, and gives thanks for that, too.

It is a little like a visit after Christmas to grandmother, to thank her for the presents. She always has another gift, and the children thank her for that, too.

Regrettably, some congregations feel that part of the thanks should be rendered by professionals. It is a little like sending a tidy little printed card of thanks, instead of a real letter, which might be sprawly and full of misspellings.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE launching of a nationwide organization to maintain separation of Church and state has already brought forth an attack by the Knights of Columbus, released significantly by the chancery office of the New York archdiocese of the Roman Church. There will be others you may be sure for the Roman Church has a long range program for education in these United States which calls first for bus transportation to parochial schools; next, state financial aid to R. C. schools; and, if they can get away with it — already an accomplished fact is some places — the domination of the whole U. S. educational system. And if you think this an exaggeration dig up the full story of New Mexico where nuns teach in the public schools, and where children are required to learn the R.C. catechism if they are to be promoted.

The new organization, with the rather cumbersome name of "Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State," underscores the fact that it is not for the purpose of attacking any religion but is out solely to maintain separation of Church and state as it "has arisen in the political area." Nevertheless the organization has already been charged officially by the R.C. Church with "stirring up religious bigotry"; its manifesto is said to be "loaded with intolerance" and the Protestant leaders responsible for its formation are branded as "wolves in sheep's clothing."

The objectives of the new group, to which incidentally all, including Romanists, who believe in the American principle of separation of Church and state are invited to join, are stated as follows:

One, to enlighten and mobilize public opinion in support of religious liberty as this monumental principle of democracy has been embodied and implemented in the constitution by the separation of Church and state.

Two, to resist every attempt by law or the administration of law to widen the breach in the wall of separation of Church and state.

Three, to demand the immediate discontinuance of the ambassadorship to the papal head of the Roman Catholic Church.

Four, to work for the repeal of any law now on the statute books of any state which sanctions the granting of aid to church schools from the public school treasury.

Five, to invoke the aid of the courts in maintaining the integrity of the constitution with respect to the separation of Church and state, wherever and in whatever form the issue arises, and, specifically, to strive by appropriate constitutional means to secure a reconsideration of the two decisions of the Supreme Court upholding the use of tax funds (a) for providing the pupils of parochial schools with free text books, and (b) for the transportation of pupils to parochial schools.

Six, to call out and unite all patriotic citizens in a concerted effort to prevent the passage of any law by Congress which allots to church schools any portion of a federal appropriation for education, or which explicitly or implicitly permits the states to make such allotment of federal funds. This purpose in no way prejudices pro or con the propriety of a federal grand in aid of public education.

Seven, to give all possible aid to the citizens of any community or state who are seeking to protect their public schools from sectarian domination, or resisting any other assault upon the principle of separation of Church and state.

Eight, in seeking these objectives we are determined to pursue a course that cannot be justly characterized as anti-Catholic, or as motivated by anti-Catholic animus. As Protestants, we can be called anti-Catholic only in the sense in which every Roman Catholic is anti-Protestant.

The R. C. archdiocese of New York gives the opinion "that the American people will give a cool reception to this organization" which, it predicts, "will fall of its own weight." Maybe so, but I can report that I have talked with a considerable number of people, Protestant, clergy and laity, members of the Jewish faith, and some who have no church connections at all, and I have yet to find a non-Romanist who does not say, with enthusiasm, that such an organization as "Protestants and Other Americans" is long past due to meet the threat of Roman Catholic domination, not only in education, but in the entire political area of our life.

Recommend Bishop Payne Grant Be Postponed For Time

The Trustees of American Church Institute Make Unanimous Recommendation to Council

Edited by Sara Dill

Boston:—The trustees of the American Church Institute for Negroes, meeting here, unanimously voted to recommend to the National Council the postponement for an indefinite period of the grant to the Bishop Payne Divinity School from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. The grant was for close to $200,000 for reconstruction and equipment incident to the rehabilitation of the school.

The resolution states that the action was taken because of "a number of important recent developments" including "No candidates for the ministry have entered the school in the current season" and "there has been an intensification of the feeling against segregation of students intended to enter the ministry, with increasing adverse publicity."

The resolution states further that the Presiding Bishop, who is also the president of the American Church Institute, during a recent visit to Bishop Payne "reached the conclusion that it would be most unwise to make a substantial capital expenditure at the present location of the school, and advised the school officials accordingly."

The resolution recommends that Bishop Sherrill appoint a new impartial committee of the Church to consider and recommend to the Council how and where the Episcopal Church should train Negro candidates for the ministry.

It states further that "in the event the National Council decides to postpone for an indefinite period the expenditures of the funds allocated to the Bishop Payne Divinity School, the Institute recommends to the Council that the Institute be authorized to invest the money from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund and to use the revenue for scholarships and grants to aid Negro candidates for the ministry who attend any approved divinity school."

Discuss Ministry

Hartford: — There were 65 men and boys at a conference held here at Christ Church Cathedral to discuss the ministry, and this in spite of a heavy snowstorm. Bishop Gray presided and there were a number of speakers, including Lyman C. Ogilby, David B. Bronson, Percy L. Urban Jr., Raymond Cunningham Jr., Edwin A. Skipton and Peter B. Tomkins, all of whom are now attending one of our Church seminaries.

Primate Orders Trial

New York (RNS):—Patriarch Alexei of Moscow has ordered the trial of Metropolitan Theophilus and five other bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church in North America. The bishops, charged with "stubborn attempts to split the Church," are Archbishop John of Brooklyn, Archbishop Leontius of Chicago, Archbishop John of Alaska, and Bishop Nikon of Philadelphia. They head a majority of about a million Russian Orthodox which broke away from the Moscow Patriarchate in 1924, refusing to pledge loyalty to the Soviet regime. None of them are expected to heed the summons to appear before the Church court in Moscow so that the trial will be conducted in absentia.

To Visit Philippines

Manila (RNS):—Bishop Kennedy of Honolulu is soon to arrive here to arrange details for inter-communion between the Philippine Independent (Aglipayan) Church and the Episcopal Church of the U. S., according to a statement by Supreme Bishop De Los Reyes Jr. He also announced that the Aglipayan Church bishops will meet shortly to discuss an anti-communism campaign. He stated that at the general assembly of the Church last summer, the constitution of the Church had stipulated that members foster the sharing of property by the community "as preached by Jesus and practiced by the Apostles," but he declared that the provision had been neither fully enforced nor widely publicized. He discussed also that he had discussed the proposed anti-communism campaign with Roman Catholic laymen but that he had not approached the Roman hierarchy on the matter.

There is a rival group in the Independent Church, headed by Monsignor Juan Jamais, that recently petitioned the government to withdraw its recognition of the group headed by Bishop De Los Reyes, because of its projected inter-communion with the Episcopal Church, but a government official says that the petition will be rejected.

Still in Driver's Seat

Philadelphia:—THE WITNESS reported January 8 that the Federal Council's commission on a just and durable peace had been dissolved and the commission of international justice and goodwill revised. The report was correct except we were apparently wrong in stating that it meant the shelving of John Foster Dulles. Mr. Dulles is now to act as permanent chairman of the policy committee of the revised commission.

Missionaries Speak

Wheeling, W. Va.:—Speakers representing four missionary fields are the speakers at morning services at St. Matthew's here during the Epiphany season. The Rev. George Packard spoke on Latin America on January 11; the Rev. Benson Harvey spoke on the Philippines last Sunday; the Rev. Frank Titus is to speak on Japan on the 25th and the Rev. Harvey Simmonds on Liberia on February 1. The two church schools of the parish have a missionary service and then attend the church service to hear the speakers. The Rev. J. Moulton Thomas is rector.

Churches Unite

Boston: — St. Matthew's, incorporated as a parish in 1816 when it was the first and only church in South Boston, has been merged with the Redeemer, and will be known as the Church of St. Matthew and the Redeemer. The present property of St. Matthew's has been sold to the Albanian Protestant Church. The rector of the Redeemer, the Rev. F. S. Armstrong, has retired because of illness, and the Rev. Frank M. Rathbone, rector of St. Matthew's for the past thirty years, will serve the combined parishes on a part time basis, and on a full time basis as soon as feasible. At present he will continue to serve part time as diocesan hospital chaplain.

Hits Protestants

Madrid (RNS):—The Spanish government is planning measures "to defend our laws and our Catholic traditions" in "the face of widely revived Protestant propaganda," according to Ecclesia, organ of the central administration of Spanish Catholic Action. The publication said its information came from "trustworthy sources."

"A nation as Catholic as Spain," Ecclesia declared, "we cannot stand with folded arms as exotic creeds, not satisfied with the benevolent authorization given them by the state for the private exercise of their cult, dedicate themselves to carrying on acts of proselytism. These include organizing youth meetings, publishing bulletins under the form of parochial leaflets, selling heretical books at the doors of our churches, and distributing publications insulting to our faith."

The Catholic Action periodical charged that the term "Protestant propaganda" is not always an exact one, "because more than once, under this cloak, Protestants are moved, not by religious, but by anti-patriotic, motives."

"The anti-patriot," Ecclesia asserted, "does not find it inconvenient to appear in a pious guise in order to avert suspicion while he is undermining the religious foundations of the country."

Asserting that while the Catholic faith should not be imposed upon anyone, Catholics are obliged to defend their beliefs, Ecclesia concluded by declaring that "no impostor should be permitted to rob anyone of a treasure so great and so precious to our country."

Turn to Communism

New York (RNS):—Young people in India are showing "an increasing interest and enthusiasm for Communism," it was stated here by the Rev. K. Mathew Simon of the Syrian Orthodox Church of India. Mr. Simon told the North American administrative committee of the World Council of Christian Education at its annual meeting here that the many and varied Church groups in India "are not doing much" to provide a positive program for youth, and that students as a result are gravitating toward political organizations.

Declaring that in India capitalism is considered synonymous with imperialism, he said that "we are as much afraid of America today as we are of Russia. We can't make up our minds and it's up to you to show us that some of our ideas about you are wrong."

The Rev. Rodolfo Anders, secretary of the Confederation of Evangelical Churches in Brazil, asserted that the one to two million Protestants in Brazil "are exerting an influence out of all proportion to their numbers in relation to the total population of forty-five millions." He said the World Council of Christian Education is "helping to revolutionize" the teaching of Protestantism in Brazil, and cited as an example the attack on illiteracy being made by Dr. Frank Laubach.

Expresses Gratitude

New York:—"With utmost gratitude," the supreme bishop of the Philippine Independent Church, Don Isabelo de los Reyes, has written to Presiding Bishop Sherrill regarding the action of the House of Bishops in November, providing that the Philippine Church shall be given a valid episcopate through the Episcopal Church. Bishop de los Reyes said, "We are fully determined to accept all the conditions demanded for the granting of such a precious gift, and we will endeavor to fulfill the requirements about the adoption of the Book of Common Prayer with the necessary adaptations in all our churches. Likewise we will continue as heretofore, conducting all our services in the dialects of the various communities as well as in English and Spanish, both official languages in the Philippines."

Expressing confidence in the future, Bishop de los Reyes said: "With the inspiration of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Independent Church of the Philippines is sure to become one of the most vital moral forces in the spiritual rehabilitation of the people of the Philippines. Most of my people are presently eagerly seeking to learn more and more about the Protestant Episcopal Church. We envision immense blessings and the salvation of countless immortal souls by the action of the House of Bishops. I confidently believe that the bestowing of valid orders to our clergy is only the beginning of a new era in the Philippines. All of us will exert our best efforts to become worthy of the magnanimity of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

Start Campaign

Springfield, Mass.: — Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts, recently called together the clergy of that diocese to consider and adopt a program of evangelization for the diocese, following the plan of the Presiding Bishop for the whole Church. A slogan "Each one, reach one"—was adopted, and a time-schedule of procedure set up, to carry through Lent. The clergy also took up the question of procedure in connection with the plan of the National Church to raise one million dollars in four hours on February 29, and a time-schedule for this effort was also adopted.

A special feature of the gathering of clergy was that each clergyman there packed a box of food, addressed to an individual German Lutheran pastor. Each one of the American clergymen received the name of the German pastor, which had been sent from Germany by a representative of the Lutheran World Relief Association in Berlin, with the expectation of creating between his parish and the one in Germany, a bond of fellowship through correspondence and by prayer, each for the other, across the seas.

Mrs. Henry Walter, Springfield chairman of the Church World Service, said she had cabled Mrs. Herda Epstein in Berlin of the intention of the Episcopal pastors to adopt a German pastor, and received an airmail letter telling her that the cable came "like God's light in the dark"; and she urged all to make that light bright and inclusive. After each clergyman had personally packed a box for his adopted brother in Germany, Bishop Lawrence suggested that the first Sunday in January be observed as Christian Brotherhood Sunday, when it is hoped that letters received from the pastors in Germany may be read, and special prayers offered in both churches, each for the other. An air mail letter will be sent by each clergyman, telling of his plans, and asking that the German pastor participate in the project. Food for the boxes, and wrappings for the overseas packages, were donated by local merchants.

Visits Coast

Berkeley, Cal.:—The Rev. Charles D. Kean of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship visited California in December. He preached at All Saints', Palo Alto, and addressed the students and faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, as well as meeting with members of the organization.

In his talk to the students at the divinity school, Mr. Kean discussed "The language of our faith," and stressed the need for a common language so that the world could understand what the Church is talking about. The Church has answers which the world does not grasp, and the world is asking questions which the Church does not answer. Until the frame of reference is the Christian faith, there can be no communication between the two; and the Church will be irrelevant and the world will be confused and meaningless. Only an evangelical faith which brings men to the gospel of Jesus Christ can provide a profound and significant answer which the world needs.

At a meeting of clergy and laity at St. Mark's Church here Mr. Kean talked on "The evangelical nature of the Church," and showed how a relevant Christian faith cuts across the smooth and compromising activities of "environmental" Christianity and gets to the heart of such matters as unity, theological differences, churchmanship, and other problems. The South India Plan is an evangelical answer in terms of the Christian conscience rather than in terms of biblical or ecclesiastical literalism. The new marriage canon, with all its shortcomings, is also an illustration of seeking to let the will of God work through the Church. It is a question of putting first things first, with an "existential" interpretation of our existence.

More Laymen Needed

New York (RNS): — Increasing participation by laymen in church affairs was reported here at the first formal meeting of the Council of Men's Work Secretaries, composed of lay leaders of 20 different religious groups and denominations.

The Council was organized at Grand Rapids, Mich., last February "to promote Christian fellowship among such secretaries and to serve as an exchange for information and inspiration concerning lay work and to be a center for clearing problems and progress."

Present at the two-day session here were representatives of the Methodist Church, Evangelical United Brethren Church, General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, Congregational Christian Churches, Evangelical Lutheran Church, Northern Baptist Convention, Lutheran Augustana Synod, Protestant Episcopal Church, Disciples of Christ, Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., and American Lutheran Church. Also represented were the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the International Council of Religious Education, and the National Association of Manufacturers.

The Rev. L. E. Esteb, home mission secretary in Greater New York for the Seventh-day Adventists, stressed the need to "use your religion or lose your religion."

"Laymen don't want to hear a lot of high-falutin' theological terms," he said. "They want to be told what to do in simple language, then they'll do it."

Use of the advertising techniques of modern business in advancing the cause of religion was advocated by Clifford W. Scott of Washington, executive director of the Home-Church-School Foundation.

Mr. Scott asserted that "it is time for Protestants to tell about their faith, about what their churches mean to America."

"Let's speak out for Protestantism in a dignified manner," he said. "Why can't the churches get together on a streamlined national newspaper advertising campaign to carry their message to the entire country?"

Frederick J. Michel of Chicago, national secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, told the Council that "missions is the task of men as well as women."

Appeal for Relief

Geneva (RNS):—Ten international Protestant agencies engaged in relieving needy populations issued a joint appeal here for support of their work by people throughout the world. Declaring "there is a fellowship which binds us to all human beings who are in distress," the appeal asserted that "even the smallest gift may save a life and, therefore, everyone according to his means should make his contribution to the national or international relief organizations whose common object is to bring assistance to all who suffer."

The appeal declared that millions of refugees and expellees find themselves without home or homeland and are living in wooden huts, or in the cellars of ruined houses, a prey to sickness and starvation.

"Hundreds of thousands of war prisoners and war disabled," it added, "are in a pitiful condition. Innumerable children are orphans. There are no beds or hospital equipment for the sick. Adolescents, their health already undermined, have neither the will nor the strength to face a difficult future. How will these unfortunates survive the privations of the coming winter, especially during the critical months at the beginning of 1948, when insufficient stocks remaining over from the disastrous harvest of 1947 will have been entirely exhausted?"

"Even though responsible governments are making considerable efforts, they are naturally far from able to meet all urgent needs," the appeal said. "Distress is on so large a scale that an appeal to private generosity is imperative."

Joining in the appeal were the Ecumenical Refugee Commission of the World Council of Churches; Church World Service; the Lutheran World Federation; the World's YMCA and YWCA; the Brethren Service Committee; the Mennonite Central Committee; the World Student Christian Federation; the American Friends Service Committee; and World Student Relief.

Interracial Group

Ahoskie, N. C.:—Nineteen Negro and white ministers of the Baptist Church in three counties of North Carolina have organized an interracial ministers' conference. Their aims are to work for better race relations, improve fellowship between races, and "get folks out to church."

A Record Class

Houston, Texas:—Bishop John E. Hines of Texas returned to his former parish, Christ Church, and confirmed 127 candidates, 100 of whom were adults. Bishop Quin had confirmed 9 previously bringing the total to the record for the diocese, 136. During the past two years the rector, the Rev. Hamilton H. Kellogg, has presented 452 for confirmation. He states that the major credit goes to the associate clergy "who have been so earnest, indefatigable and successful in locating unchurched people in the rapidly growing city, and in carefully preparing and presenting them for confirmation." The associates at present are the Rev. Dorsey G. Smith Jr. and the Rev. W. B. L. Hutcheson.

Popular Lectures

St. Paul, Minn.:—Prof. Samuel M. Strong of the department of sociology at Carleton College recently concluded a series of lectures on "Success or Failure in Marriage and the Family." They were attended by more than 100 people, all of which characterized them as "most interesting and constructive." The rector of the parish is the Rev. Lloyd R. Gillmett.

Bishop Bentley Speaks

Boston:—Bishop John B. Bentley, formerly the Bishop of Alaska, and now the head of the overseas department of the National Council, was the headliner at the annual meeting of the Church Service League of the diocese of Massachusetts, meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral on January 14th.

Jobs Available

New York (RNS):—More than 2,000 opportunities for missionary service in all parts of the world are available to Christian young people, according to a list of "calls" just compiled for 1948 by the Student Volunteer Movement here. The list, drawn up from information supplied by 25 denominational home and foreign mission boards and interdenominational agencies, will be distributed to interested students by staff members of the Student Volunteer Movement in their travels to college campuses throughout the United States.

Workers are in greatest demand in the educational and medical fields, with numerous openings for elementary school teachers, high school instructors, college professors, university educators, teachers in special subjects, laboratory technicians, nurses, physicians, and medical specialists. Other jobs are offered in business, church and community activities, religious education, rural evangelism, social and welfare work, industry, agriculture, and a number of miscellaneous fields. Some jobs require a man, others a woman, some a man or couple, and others either a man or woman.

Applicants accepted for missionary service may be assigned to almost any spot in the world. No less than 37 countries are represented in the list, in Africa, the Middle East and Far East, India, Pakistan and Ceylon, North, South and Central America, the West Indies, Southeast Asia, and Europe.

Up to last September, according to Winburn T. Thomas, general secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, his agency handled some 500 applications for missionary service from students. He pointed out that this figure represents only a small percentage of the total, as most applicants are referred directly to the denominational board which has a particular position available.

In many cases, Thomas said, a student's own denomination may not have an opening in the field in which he or she is interested, and the student will apply for a call from another denomination in order to serve in a capacity for which he is best suited.

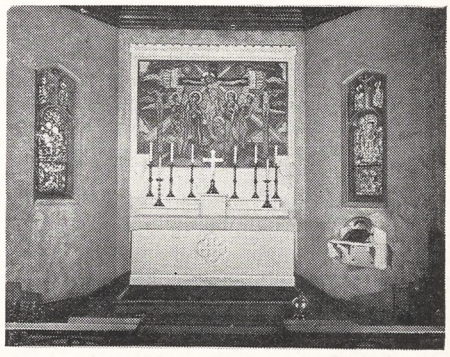
*Therefore Choose Life by Edith Lovejoy Pierce. Harpers, $1.75.

How should one review a book of poems? The form of literature which combines emotional movement with intellectual content must, like art, be viewed to be appreciated. The past is able to carry a weight of truth which cannot be contained in prose writing because the poetic form takes the reader beyond the limitations of language. A reviewer's evolution of Miss Pierce's work, "These poems deal with the deep experiences and abiding values of human life," may best be illustrated by quoting one two verse poem:

I hold a star of darkness in my heart,
Against my faith a fleck of unbelief;
Of every lighted joy the counterpart,
This fragmentary silhouette of grief.

It is as though the circumambient cold
Were frosted into one keen ebon dart,
A star of darkness that Christ knew of old:
The nail that pierced his hand has found my heart.



We try to review books in this column so that the readers may decide for themselves whether or not they wish to purchase the volumes. Perhaps the greatest practical value of a book of poems comes in the use that can be made of a verse in preaching or speaking to express a deep human experience which will not be contained in our prosaic speech. But poetry, like any other art form, is to be treasured because it goes beyond the practical realm of life.

The problem of designing a suitable Reredos for the existing white marble Altar was complicated by the limited available space behind the Altar. Hence, a mosaic panel set in a white marble frame was decided upon. In keeping with the best traditions of mosaic art, the Calvary Group is rendered in a somewhat archaic manner, yet each figure and each detail clearly expresses its significant part in the great drama. In the Sanctuary window on the left is represented the Nativity and on the right, the Resurrection. For correct interior renovation, write months—and there may be more to come, for all that we know, before the great missionary arrives here next year. In spite of the "thorough-going eschatology" of his interpretation of the New Testament, Dr. Schweitzer has done more to show that Christianity is a practicable way of life, and was meant to be a practicable way of life, than many a more ordinary theologian. If we are ever to get out of the impasse into which humanity has blindly and stupidly stampeded (two world-wars in one generation, with a possibility of a third one, which will finish off most of the race), then Schweitzer's philosophy of "reverence for life" will have to be taken seriously.

Mr. Hagedorn's life of the famous theologian - musician - philosopher - doctor-missionary is easy reading, almost like radio-script, vivid and picturesque, as the subject deserves. The author is a famous poet, and Schweitzer's life is almost a poem! Dr. Joy's selections from the writings of Dr. Schweitzer are well-chosen and well-arranged. I wish I had space to quote a dozen of them. It is a book that parson and layman alike might well keep within reach for a suggestive thought with which to begin a meditation. These seed-thoughts are guaranteed all fertile!

Report From Spain* by Emmet John Hughes. Henry Holt & Co., New York. $3.00.

Mr. Hughes, an eminent Roman Catholic layman who served in the United States embassy in Spain throughout the war, makes a keen analysis of El Caudillo Franco's fascist state and the contending forces within it. He gives informative pictures of the roles played by the Monarchists, the Falange and the Church, with the latter institution featuring degenerate, opportunistic leadership and a minority of understanding, minor priests. While castigating American and British policies which led to the establishment of the dictatorship (by implementation of an unneutral 'Neutrality Act'), Mr. Hughes supports our wartime policy towards Spain on the grounds of military necessity. Our contemporary policy, as expressed by our assertions in the U.N., is doomed to fail, he said, because it is based on a general principle of "anti-Communism and containment of socialism" without accounting for historical realities and without a real faith in progressive democracy. This is a keen and honest book by a man who seeks understanding of one of the most diseased spots on our ill earth.

PROF. JOHN H. WOODHULL
Churchman of Buffalo, N. Y.

I recently saw Yvonne De Carlo in Slave Girl. I remember that some months ago your movie reviewer panned the picture unmercifully in strong language. I enjoyed the picture and regret that Hollywood makes so few like it. Another excellent picture that delighted me was Copacabana, and I fancy your reviewer would look down his nose at that. If his jugdment in the field of social service and religion generally is as poor as his judgment of moving pictures, and I suppose I must suspect it is, whatever he says will be heavily discounted. In fact the news that he is the rector of the Good Shepherd, Boston, should have put me on warning that all was not well.

ANSWER: Our movie reviewer presents his honest opinions, with which of course readers may disagree. He has not been the rector of the Good Shepherd, Boston, for over a year. But even if he were we fail to see what connection there could be between that fact and his opinion of movies. The implication is, we take it, that anyone who took such a small parish cannot amount to much. The fact is that this young man decided what parishes he serves on the basis of opportunities for service, rather than on the basis of salary paid. At the moment he is the rector of St. Thomas' Church, Detroit, where he is paid about the lowest salary in the Church.

According to the logic of Prof. Woodhull this makes him "a failure" and therefore incapable of presenting a sound opinion about anything.

REV. HENRY H. CHAPMAN
Missionary of Alaska

As a missionary who knows too well the tragic results of Christian disunity and the confusion caused by it, I am interested in the cause of Christian unity, and particularly in the recent proposal for union with the Methodist Church. I am for that proposal, heart and soul. Why didn't we think of it sooner. I believe it is the most sensible suggestion that has yet been made along that line. We and the Methodists have a common heritage. The Methodists began as a much needed spiritual revival within the Church of England. They might never have separated from us had the English bishops been a little more tolerant and farsighted, instead of antagonistic. We like to talk about what we have to offer. The Methodists have something to offer too, and much to forgive. Let us face that fact and admit it. Our Church has launched a campaign for evangelism; certainly a most worthy cause. The Methodists can teach us something about that. They have been evangelizing persistently for some 200 years, and they get results.

Another Church with which we could easily unite is the Moravian Church. The Moravians likewise have much in common with us. They value the sacraments. They are accustomed to a liturgical form of service. They believe in long and thorough preparation for confirmation. We would do well to imitate them in that respect. They are great missionaries. They began missionary work on the Kuskokwim River in Alaska at about the same time that we began work on the Yukon. My impression is that they were in Alaska a year or two ahead of us. Their gifts for missions are out of all proportion to their numerical strength. Their zeal in that respect should jolt us out of our complacency.

Formal proposals for union should properly come from our own commission on approaches to unity; but let us not sit back and leave it all to the commission. Let our bishops show the same courageous and forthright leadership in this matter that they showed in the matter of the Philippine Independent Church. Let the rest of us, clergy and laity, get behind this proposal for union with the Methodists and push it. Let us rally the enthusiastic, persuade the pessimistic and prod the lethargic, until we get action.

VIRGINIA SUMMEY
Churchwoman of New York

Thank you for the Appraisal of the Marshall Plan by Prof. Paul Sweezy (Nov. 27). It is an interesting approach. The European Recovery Plan is imperative but had the suggestion been made to the U.N. for implementation we would not have had the controversy about it. If the U.N. were asked to administer the act, political implications would be avoided. It seems a little naive to expect Russia to cooperate when the avowed second objective is to prevent the spread of Communism. In the morning paper there is a report that a Congressman is horror struck upon discovering that Russia is secretly arming. There is nothing secret about our arming. I wonder too how he succeeded in piercing the "iron curtain."

MR. JOSEPH A. PRATHES
Layman of Los Angeles

Will you kindly allow me a little space to say a few words of Mr. Hiram G. Carver, churchman of Washington, whose letter appeared here Dec. 18. Mr. Carver may be some kind of a churchman but he most certainly has little or no Christianity in his heart. The attitude he takes and expresses concerning Negroes was most un-Christlike. Negroes have every right in the world to full equality and all such rights as Mr. Carver himself enjoys. It is guaranteed to them by the constitution of this country. Only men like Carver, Rankin and others like them seek to deny these facts. Mr. Carver would do well to look up the meaning of the word "democracy" let alone "Christianity."

Endorsement of Marshall Plan With Reservations

Federal Council Committee Warns Motives Must Be Moral and Not on Political Level

Atlanta, Ga. (RNS):—The Federal Council endorsed the Marshall Plan as "one of history's most momentous affirmations of faith" but warned that the motives and objectives behind the program "should be essentially moral and spiritual and above political partisanship." It said that the United States must not use the program to make over Europe in its political and economic image but that "it must be an expression of confidence in the peoples of Europe who have been making earnest efforts at self-help."

The statement was incorporated in a resolution passed by the Council's executive committee, meeting here at All Saints' Episcopal Church, and held in connection with the first southeastern Church convocation, attended by more than 400 Protestant leaders from eight denominations in twelve states.

The committee also reaffirmed confidence in the United Nations and stated that they "wholly disagree with those who spread disillusionment and defeatism."

Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council and a leading layman of the Episcopal Church, was authorized to present the views of the Council to the foreign affairs committee of the U. S. Senate.

"The European Recovery Program must be the means by which Europe and the world are released from fears that the United States will seek to fashion them politically and economically, and freed from the shackles they impose," the resolution stated.

The committee acknowledged, in passing the resolution, that the Marhall Plan involved risks. "Nevertheless," it added, "the risks of failure are much smaller and much less cetrain than the risks of inaction."

The program, according to the resolution, must be an investment in the world's moral and spiritual resources and . . . an expression of Christian convictions. An undertaking so conceived and directed, it was pointed out, merited material sacrifices by Americans because it was a cause which enlists Christian conscience and conforms to Christian commitments.

It was urged by the committee that consideration be given to nine principles: (1) that curative and creative possibilities of the European Recovery Program be kept in the foreground; (2) that American aid be an act of faith; (3) that persons carrying out the Marshall Plan "plan now and boldly a completely adequate initial program"; (4) that the United States be on guard against imposing conditions that seem to threaten political independence abroad; (5) that nations participating in the program carry out their expressed intention to maintain monetary stability, reduce trade barriers, and work cooperatively;

(6) that the United Nations machinery develop broader trade relations within Europe and fuller coordination of the economic relations among nations; (7) that the United States persuade and assist nations outside of Europe to provide goods for European recovery; (8) that the European Recovery Program be linked with long-range planning to increase American imports; (9) that Americans willingly accept limitations on their own economic desires, whether voluntary controls or government controls.

"Such an effort is in keeping with the constructive peace strategy for which our churches stand," the resolution stated. "As Christians, we support the European Recovery Program in the conviction that it can be one of history's most momentous affirmations of faith in the curative power of freedom and in the creative capacity of free men."

The statement on "The Churches and the United Nations" said "the important and exciting fact is that the vast majority of nations are trying to solve these world problems, not by force of arms but by the power of reason and on the basis of justice."

Organs of the United Nations "are coming to grips with the root causes of international disorder," the statement pointed out. "If the United Nations is to succeed, Christian people everywhere, and particularly in the United States, must be willing to accept whatever sacrifices may be required to give adequate support to the accomplishment of its purposes."

THE CIO ANALYSIS SENT MEMBERS

Detroit:—The Episcopal League for Social Action has made arrangements with the C.I.O.'s education and research bureau whereby all League members will receive Economic Outlook, the C.I.O.'s monthly analysis of economic affairs, the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford, Jr., executive secretary, has announced. "Each year, we are sending members a different periodical subscription," Mr. Spofford said, "so that our membership will become acquainted with good source materials on contemporary affairs." Likewise, the League is preparing to publish a pamphlet of the late Archbishop William Temple's famous speech on "Christianity and Finance" and has made arrangements with the National Religion and Labor Foundation for the distribution of Where We Are, a paper read by Prof. Liston Pope at the annual Religion and Labor conference in Pittsburgh which the League helped to sponsor.

PROGRESSIVES HAVE CONFERENCE

Pittsburgh:—Repeal of the Taft-Hartley act and the reenactment of the Wagner Act was asked by 175 delegates to the annual convention of the Religion and Labor Fellowship held here, January 12-14. One of the sponsoring organizations of the convention, which was addressed by Berle Whitney, legal advisor of the Railway Brotherhoods; John Ramsay of the C.I.O.'s southern organizing drive; Jacob Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-C.I.O.; David McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the United Steel Workers-C.I.O. and Prof. Liston Pope of Yale Divinity School, was the Episcopal League for Social Action.

The convention expressed unanimous opposition to any form of universal military training, called for rationing of goods in short-supply, asked for support of the President's Committee on Civil Rights report, asked the abolishment of the Thomas House Un-American Activities Committee, and urged immediate reimposition of price control to prevent runaway inflation.

The convention, in making its final report, criticized the present so-called "free enterprise" system of the United States, using the arguments set forth by the late Archbishop William Temple in his book Christianity and the Social Order and urged that America begin to plan for a socialist economy.

The executive secretary of the Episcopal League, the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford, Jr., acted as general secretary for the conference and other league members in attendance were the Rev. Robert Beggs of St. Paul's Church, Waterbury, Conn., and the Rev. Albert Dalton of St. Stephen's Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. Among the consultants for the conference were Kermit Eby of the C.I.O.'s education department; Prof. Colston Warne, professor at Amherst who resigned from the President's Committee of Economic Advisors after refusing to sign the Truman loyalty order on principle; the Rev. John Darr, secretary of the United Christian Council for Democracy; the Rev. Charles Webber, president of the Virginia C.I.O. Council and the Rev. Jesse Cavileer, secretary of the Student League for Industrial Democracy.

The delegates represented 24 religious bodies, 20 different unions and 18 states, the District of Columbia and Canada.

SCAIFE ELECTED AT BUFFALO

Buffalo:—The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, rector of Calvary, Pittsburgh, was elected bishop of Western New York at a special convention held here January 20th. It was the fourth such convention for the purpose to elect a successor to Bishop Davis. Mr. Scaife was elected on the first ballot after the standing committee, headed by the Rev. Charles D. Broughton, urged the 60 clergy and 120 laymen to give their votes to him. He was the only man nominated and of course was elected unanimously.

LARGE BEQUESTS TO CHURCHES

Trenton, N. J.:—Churches and Church institutions are to share in a large bequest by the will of Mrs. Hamilton F. Kean who died in 1943. Leaving an estate of $9,341,763, she directed that one tenth of that sum be divided equally between St. Mark's School; St. John's Church, Elizabeth, N. J.; the trustees of the Church property of the diocese of New Jersey; the episcopal fund of the diocese of New Jersey; the convention of the diocese of Washington; Grace Church, New York, and St. Luke's Hospital, New York.

The alliance between the Roman Catholic hierarchy and the fascist state, represented by this picture from Franco's Spain, is vigorously opposed by the Episcopal League for Social Action

CONFERENCE ON MINISTRY

Lincoln, Mass.:—A conference on the ministry is being held here February 6-8 with the following leaders: Bishop Nash, Layman Byron Atwood, the Rev. Francis O. Ayres of Waterbury, Conn., the Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks of Boston, the Rev. Elsom A. Eldridge of Nashua, N. H., Dean Charles L. Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School.

Episcopal Church Has League For Social Action

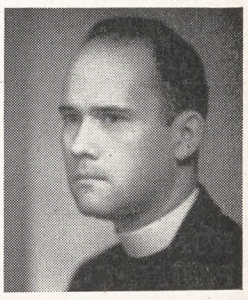
Many Distinguished Leaders of the Church Have Been Active Members from Beginning

Detroit:—As an unofficial organization within the Episcopal Church, the Episcopal League for Social Action states in its program: "The League is concerned with the relation of men and nations in the processes of production in the light of Christian teaching. Production—the bringing forth of abundance from nature's resources—is here regarded as the area of man's relation to nature and his use of nature's resources for human life. The league's aim in this area is to promote in all industry the full expression of Christian concepts which constitute for us as Christians the sure source and guarantee of the essentials of true democracy. Democracy in industry and in all other phases of the social order as an aim for us is an obligation imposed by Christian teaching. The League considers that its social responsibility is to interpret to Church people for their information and action the important issues in the field of its concern."

Formed in 1919 under the name, The Church League for Industrial Democracy, by such individuals as Bishop Charles D. Williams of Michigan, Prof. Vida D. Scudder, Mr. William F. Cochran, Miss Mary van Kleeck, the Rev. Bernard I. Bell and Bishop Edward L. Parsons of California—to name but a few—the League sought to participate in the great struggle for the extension of democracy into the economic life of America. By aiding strikers, mediating in conflicts and carrying on educational activities within the Church, such as teaching at conferences, publishing pamphlets, making surveys and holding forums at the General Conventions, the organization managed to make a decisive impression on the life of the Church. The members believed that the Christian gospel called for a deep transformation of the structure and spirit of modern, technological culture, and, often, expressed their beliefs that they were the "gadflies" of the Church. Under the leadership of the executive secretary, the Rev. W. B. Spofford, the organization went through vital experiences in strikes in Massachusetts mill cities; in the silk and woolen centers of New Jersey; in the coal fields of Kentucky and in aiding the agricultural share-croppers.

This past year, following a polling of the membership, the name of the organization was changed to the Episcopal League for Social Action. This action was taken because it was thought that the field of the League's concern was no longer localized to just 'industrial democracy.' As expressed by the present executive secretary, the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford, Jr., "Democracy is an indivisible term. You may be able to work for it in specific areas but you can't achieve or approximate it unless it is comprehensive and total. We are concerned with racial, political and social democracy, even while recognizing that, in our interdependent industrial society, many of these are dependent on an honest extension of democracy to the economic field."

Under the long-term president, Bishop Edward L. Parsons of California, the League, during the past year, has sent our regular information bulletins to members, issued statements opposing universal military training and the Truman Doctrine, informed members of vital issues before both federal and state legislative bodies, contributed lecturers to numbers of Church conferences and, either organizationally or through individual members, participated in sponsoring various meetings on contemporary problems.



The governing body of the Episcopal League is an elected national committee, made up of forty prominent Church men and women, who vote on the various official stands of the League. The sole statement of purpose of the League is "to bring together for study and action those who seek to apply the principles of Christ in industrial society" and, hence, there is a wide diversity of opinions within the organization on specific issues, although the general position is definitely orientated towards a progressive point-of-view.

During 1947, also, a book, Christianity and Property, was printed consisting of the papers delivered at a League summer school conference and royalties received from it are being ear-marked for a general publications fund. Likewise, the League is an associated member of such bodies as the Religion and Labor Foundation, the National Committee for Atomic Information, the National Institute of Social Relations and Social Legislation Information Service.

In past months, much of the League's educational program has been carried on for youth, with the executive secretary speaking before many college clubs, Church young people's groups and such secular or-

EPISCOPAL LEAGUE FOR SOCIAL ACTION has among its past and present active members Dean Paul Robert of Denver; Prof. Adelaide Case of the Episcopal Theological School; the late Stanley Matthews, layman of Cincinnati, who devoted the last years of his life to the League; Miss Mary Van Kleeck of New York; Prof. Robert Denton of the Berkeley Divinity School ganizations as the National Youth Lobby and the National Assembly Against Military Training.

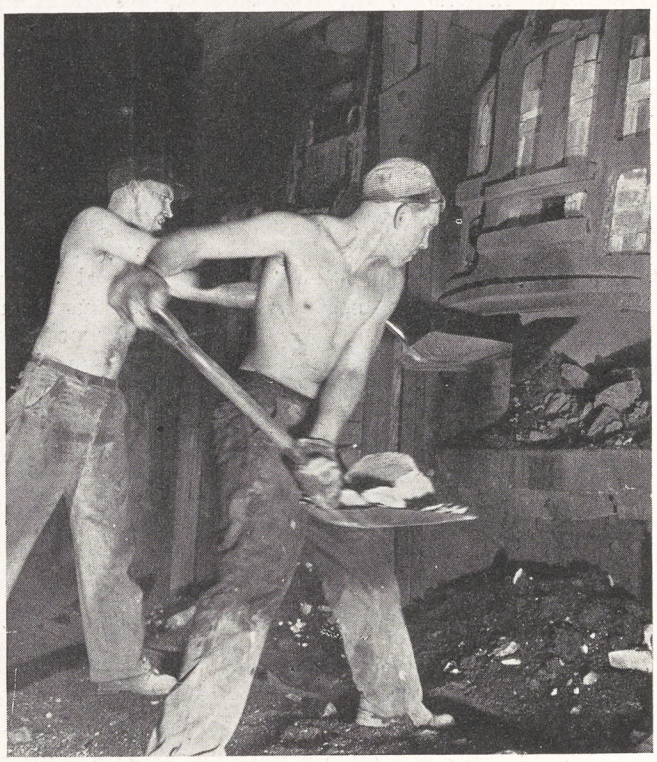
As its theme for 1948, the League has taken the over-all topic of racial relations on the theory that it is in this field where American culture is most obviously culpable in the eyes of the world. The members of the League believe that there is no longer any choice of a compromising position on this issue in the Church or in our over-all society. Believing that the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights deals realistically with the interracial problem, the League sent copies of the report to all of its members and seeks to have them bend their efforts towards its implementation.

In 1941, under the direction of the late Archbishop William Temple, the famous Malvern Declaration was issued. The League, particularly through the efforts of the late Stanley Matthews, layman of Cincinnati, spread the message of Malvern throughout the Church in the United States. The League still believes in the principles and program laid down at Malvern. If adopted and applied, the League believes, the material base of life will be supplied and ordered for all men, and humanity could get on to the divine task of worshipping God in spirit and in truth.

LOUIS C. MELCHER CONSECRATION

Columbia, S. C.:—The Rev. Louis C. Melcher will be consecrated bishop coadjutor of Southern Brazil on February 5 at Trinity Church here where he has been rector since 1939. The Presiding Bishop will be the consecrator, assisted by Bishop Gravatt of Upper South Carolina and Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee. Bishop Jackson of Louisiana and Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina will present the bishop-elect; Bishop Keeler of Minnesota will read the litany and Bishop Barnwell of Georgia will preach. Attending presbyters are the Rev. W. S. Lea of Knoxville, Tenn., and the Rev. Charles M. Seymour of Aiken, S. C.

HOPE FOR UNITY IN PHILIPPINES



Manila (RNS):—There is a good deal of slugging back and forth between the two factions of the Philippine Independent Church (Aglipayan Church). The House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church decided at its meeting last fall in Winston--Salem, N. C. to have intercommunion with the faction headed by Supreme Bishop Isabelo De Los Reyes Jr., who heads the majority group. However Monsignor Juan Jamais, who leads a minority, has been critical of the move, and words have been hurled about by both factions. Each of the two leaders has accused the other of heading a Church with "communist leanings" and the leader of the minority group declares that the Los Reyes' group actually is Unitarian. To this Los Reyes declared: "It is true that Aglipay (former R. C. priest who founded the church 45 years ago) had Unitarian beliefs but because he was a true democrat and unwilling to force his opinion on others, he maintained Trinitarian practices and rites in the Church."

To the charge of "communism" both leaders have answers. Bishop De Los Reyes, the head of the faction with which the American Church is to have inter-communion, admits that his Church did urge "religious" communism, but that it is now about to launch a campaign against materialistic communism.

Msgr. Jamais, when his faction was charged with being "communistic" replied: "We are not Communists. Neither are we Anglicans. We are Filipinos and nothing more than Filipinos. Our Filipinism is integral and complete, as was our founder's."

The majority faction claims the support of 19 bishops and 252 priests, while the minority group is said to be backed by 10 bishops and 46 priests.

Whether the two factions will ever get together is a question. The heads of the two groups met recently by accident and Bishop De Los Reyes stated later that he had urged his rival to accept one of the most prosperous dioceses in the Church, but reported that Msgr. Jamais "smiled pleasantly" but said nothing.

The Episcopal League for Social Action is primarily concerned with the welfare of industrial workers

PARISH STARTS MISSION

Burlington, Vt.:—Fort Ethan Allen, former army post, now a housing project for veterans, has a new mission. Rector Charles Martin of St. Paul's saw an opportunity for missionary work, obtained permission from the war department to use the army chapel, so that now there is a congregation of about 60 each Sunday, with 30 in the church school. The Rev. Edward H. Williams, assistant at St. Paul's, usually takes services but if he is busy elsewhere, then laymen of the parish take the services.

EDITORIALS

Private vs. Corporate Christians

WE ARE beset on all sides by "private Christians" who want to be let alone so that they may enjoy their religion "in their own way." These persons readily participate in hundreds of national or world movements, community enterprises, and corporation activity as directors and stockholders. They unite with others against disease, crime waves, or anything they fear. They all became engaged at birth in countless corporate events and institutions of life, but behold, at mental and physical maturity religion comes out as a personal matter.

At times this personal religion is expanded at most to the "brotherhood," of a labor union, a lodge, or a business and professional club outside the Church, and a guild or men's club inside the Church. Men and women enjoy the fellowship of these pertinent or comfortable units more than the fellowship of the Church itself. This is good evidence that the "fellowship" of the Church is an abstract wishful thought, and for most churchgoers not even a pious hope. They will get together outside to keep down taxes, but they will not band together as one inside to share God's gifts with each other and make the sacrifice entailed in bringing to an impoverished society "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Religion (some dare call it Christianity) is a personal affair with them—"What I give is my business," they mutter, continuing the grumble with something about this being a democracy.

"We love the place, O God, wherein thine honor dwells," lilts the hymn, impressing all and sundry that God is in his "building," all's right with the world for it's in the hands of practical men. Because of this attitude most parishes are respectable adoration societies which honor God by singing praise after praise, i.e. if the choir is not too professional, or if the congregation can agree on the fifteen best known hymns in that "new hymnal which should have never been published." For all but a comparative minority this is the apex of "common" worship and "corporate" action as a Church. This even is frequently lost in that personal feeling of uplift or criticism which each one claims as his prerogative as he leaves the service to go his "own way."

Is this the Body of Christ which is to fight for God's Kingdom on earth? Is this the Church which is to evangelize its "lapsed" people — let alone the world? On what front can any council of such "churches" unite to "preach good tidings to the poor."

Perhaps bringing the Kingdom nearer by humble corporate action in the name of all Christ stands for is too great a sacrifice of that personal religion based conveniently on part of that which he reveals. Yet we must declare the former Christian and the latter heresy. The saints and martyrs did not fight to "worship God in their own way"—they fought the forces of disorder and privilege simply by asserting their right and duty to come together to worship as members of Christ's body in the sacrament of Holy Communion.

This is the essence of the liturgy. The Lord's Supper is a eucharistic offering of the body, the Church, with the sacrifice of Christ's perfect oblation for all mankind's defiance of God's will. When we have a "corporate communion," it can only be an offering of the whole life of the visable and invisable congregation of the entire body of him who "proclaims the acceptable year of the Lord." The acceptable year of the Lord is eons from a Church body which practices the best "rugged individualism" of the year 1948, and which nods toward the fellowship of its members by wallowing in the "corporate feeling" of special group communions.

If a business or government corporation of many people united in one body can act legally with force as one natural "person" created by law, the Church must realize her true nature, given by Christ, as a single body for action in order to deal with such "persons" in a complex social order. There is only life and strength to a body. Each of its members or groups of members can be hurt in the struggle for the Kingdom, but the other members will share their God given properties, and the life of Jesus Christ in the body will heal and refresh them.

Much panacea talk about world problems ends with "Christ's way is the only way." But the fear that it will hurt our private brand of religion keeps it just in the realm of talk. No one person can presume to be "like Christ," and even a collective body of people working in his name is far from approximating him. Yet "private Christianity" can do nothing to save the world from the collective bigness of man's evil. The nature of our world demands the nearest man can come to the power of Christ's body, and that is corporate action of the sons of God in communion with him according to the concrete pattern of strategy for the "least of these" our brethren found in that Holy Communion.

"Private Christians" in congregations have weaned the fellowship, power, and joy away from the Church till it is not recognizable as Christ's. Unless there is a new upsurge of its corporate nature at the parish level, where its heart beats in the sacrament of the Incarnate Lord, and where its members can manifest the Incarnation in dealing with material affairs at first hand, it will wither before other corporate action which is either more comfortable for the "private Christian," or more pertinent for those who can envision elsewhere the sacramental manifestation of a practical Kingdom of God's love in Christ's name.

Government by Affidavit

by Davis R. Hobbs

Attorney of Tunkhannock, Pennsylvania

A NEW weapon is being forged by the primitives now in possession of federal power to punish political heretics and discourage freedom of thought and inquiry. The subtlety of the new device is proof irrefutable that reactionaries can adjust themselves to changes in popular temper. Having reluctantly abandoned the rope and the fagot and later the ducking stool and the stocks as necessary instruments for maintaining the peoples' love and respect for God and King they have now forsworn the Palmer method of wholesale raids and mass arrests so popular after World War I.

In their stead, and ironically, they are now introducing a device originated to assist in ascertaining the truth with regard to matters under inquiry—that oath, both oral and written. The oath, which Webster defines as an appeal to God for the truth of what is affirmed.

The earliest application of this technique appeared in connection with passport or visa affidavits and expeditiously disposed of Messrs. Browder, Eisler, et. al. Its first mass application arises under the Taft-Hartley amendment to the Wagner act requiring all union offices to forswear the Cominform; and under the loyalty oath program requiring all federal employees to forswear everything, except wine and women. A preview of the future under both programs has been furnished by the haste with which the jury protected America against Carl Marzani late of the state department. The fourth vehicle for the new technique is the Unamerican Activities Committee which doesn't care how a witness answers so long as he answers. Thus what seemed at first a mere coincidence now looks to even an amateur trendspotter like the "wave of the future" in the anti-civil liberties campaign.

Wherever used, the technique is the same — to force the citizen under threat of prosecution for contempt or loss or refusal of employment or of other privileges, such as entry and departure from the country, to declare under oath his opinions, friendships, associations, activities and other intimate details which the freeborn have always heretofore assumed were no proper concern of anyone here below. To be followed of course by prompt prosecution for perjury wherever the security of the republic, as determined by the mendacious, the ignorant and the self-interested, demand the immediate removal of the poor wretch from circulation. All accompanied of course by a constant whine about securing and extending liberty.

What is wrong with putting 'em on record? Ask the architects of this version of democracy. Yes, what is wrong with this echoes the political novitiate? Oh nothing much. It only stultifies the inquisitor and his victim, making peers out of stool pigeons and informers and a mockery of the dignity of man, our most precious heritage from the Christian Revolution! It only intimidates the scholar and savant, effectively preventing us from realizing the full benefit from his services! It merely assassinates the character and drives out of gainful employment a few hundred of our best citizens wrongfully peppered by the blunderbuss in the hands of political idiots and knaves! In short it is wrong in principle to inquire into the political beliefs or affiliations of the individual unless such beliefs or affiliations are to be made a crime. But in practice it is worse.

IN PRACTICE, the unhappy affiant is called upon to aver largely not matters of fact but of opinion as to which no accepted definition exists. For example, "What is a Communist?" Lacking such definition it would seem to be impossible to accuse the affiant of having lied. Not so. We have in our system an oracle—the jury. There can be no issue which a jury is not permitted by main force to resolve even though no living person can know the correct answer. Who died first in a common disaster the husband, son or wife? The jury can tell though two hundred doctors proclaim their ignorance of the answer. The jury knows the unknowable and unscrews the inscrutable. Thus the jury can tell whether or not the affiant lied when he said he was not a Communist, though no one including the jury and affiant, can tell what one is. Such being the case and lacking the restraint upon passion imposed by standards of logic, the trial can be nothing but a trial by prejudice with a perplexed judge permitting the most fantastic forays into the irrelevancies of the victim's life.

In practice, the accused are largely tried by District of Columbia juries already well-filtered and germ free and soon to be case-hardened as well.

In practice, the prosecution will not be conducted by earnest but puzzled young idealists but by shrewd hand operators eager to soil their hands with this kind of work for political preferment, or worse, fanatics of the lunatic fringe who gravitate to political police work. The country crawls with informers and stool pigeons eager to swear.

Thus if the hapless one is asked the sixty-four dollar question, which is a pure question of fact, "are you a member of the Communist Party?" and answers truthfully that he is not, it is by no means certain that, if he has made himself objectionable to the authorities, he will not be indicted for perjury, tried before a hostile and prejudiced jury, and convicted on the testimony of police characters swearing falsely, or on flimsy circumstantial evidence of attendance at open meetings, membership in other organizations, subscription to suspect periodicals or association with proscribed individuals.

In short it's not only a disgusting but a dangerous business we're embarked upon of inquiring under oath into matters of individual conscience for the purpose of harrassing, silencing and intimidating political heretics. But then what can be expected in a fellowship that has fallen so low that every citizen, be he of high or low estate, feels called upon, in defense of his reputation and in order to be heard, to preface every discussion of every issue of our day with, "Of course I am not a Communist but . . . ."

The Negro and Social Action

by the Rev. John Burgess

Chaplain at Howard University

CHRISTIAN social action, so far as the Negro is concerned, involves the abolition of race discrimination and segregation and the recognition of his worth as an individual. This job falls primarily upon the white Christian, inasmuch as he professes a Gospel that transcends disparaging distinctions among men and assumes that "all are one in Christ Jesus." That the Churches have distorted and denied this teaching almost totally is too evident to dispute. It is also a fact that a growing number of Negroes are unwilling to accept an outcast position and are challenging the Churches either to alter their policies or count them out of the fellowship. In view of the rising tide of religious and secular movements that show by direct action and striking example their belief in the equality of all men, the Church is faced with the importance of the Negro's final decision in this matter.

Effective social action involves the Negro as well as the white Christian. He cannot avoid entirely the responsibility for vigorous and sacrificial work in behalf of social justice by saying it is the white man's duty alone to achieve a change in the American scene. Some colored people have used too often the charge of prejudice and race hate as a crutch to excuse their own inactivity, cowardice and selfishness. In too many instances we have blamed white people for our own failure to advance, when courage, hard work and imagination on our part might have done much to correct a difficult situation. Exploitation of the weak and blindness to the needs of others are not vices peculiar to the majority race. In fact, they are particularly reprehensible when found among our own people, all of whom live so precariously in American society.

My concern is that so few Negro Churchmen are aware of their own responsibility as Christians to provide leadership for their own people in planning and executing social progress. If race leadership seems to be passing into the hands of men who are not particularly impressed with Christianity, we can share the blame. We have been proud that our congregations include the best people of our communities. It is by no means clear what we mean by the "best people." All classifications that might be covered can be found in the larger denominations and in such numbers as to make our pitifully small communicant list almost laughable. However, there is a distinct feeling among us that the Episcopal Church includes a group of folk more socially acceptable, and this has met with the approval of Church leaders among clergy and laity alike. Much of this caste feeling can be traced to the defenses any middle class builds up when its permanence is not too sure, and among Negroes this condition is quite prevalent. It has proved to be a blight on the growth and effectiveness of our Church's work. This notion has isolated our congregations from the mass of colored people and developed within them the feeling of an exclusive club. (The club "dues" rarely cover the running expenses!) To say that this sort of class Church is an evil also found among white congregations is true, but beside the point. Negro work has been a special field of missionary activity. Yet today we find many missions of 25 to 100 communicants existing in Negro populations of 50,000 to 100,000 people. And many of these churches are from 25 to 60 years old. This stagnation is partly due to the prejudice and insincerity of white Church authorities. It is partly due to sporadic and ill-trained leadership. A good deal of it is also caused by the deadening influence of the snobbery and social blindness of the congregations themselves.

SOME are convinced that the formality of the Episcopal worship cannot appeal to the masses of colored people. They repeat with approval the witticism that Negroes are "by nature" Baptists or Methodists. Yet we are aware that in colonial America a large portion of slaves were instructed and baptized into the Christian religion by way of the Episcopal Church. Today, the rapid growth of several of our urban parishes, and the deeply entrenched work of the Anglican Church in Africa and the West Indies are sufficient evidence to belie any such superficial observations. The more formal worship of Roman Catholicism certainly cannot be overlooked as we note its rapid spread among us. The Church takes root and grows when trained men and sufficient resources are backed up by the will of our laity to make the parishes meet the needs of all the people around them.

Too few of our Negro Churchmen are deeply involved in the affairs of their communities. In emphasizing class distinctions, the Negro congregation has imagined that it, like its white counterpart, is set apart from the common affairs of men. It is felt by some that to discuss community problems, to rally the people against injustice and discrimination, to collect special funds for legal battles over civil rights, disturbs the even tenor of our services. For the priest or layman to get involved in social issues, for him to encourage his people to break accepted patterns of segregation offends not only some white "friends" and supporters of his work, but often some members of the parish that benefit from injustice. We are proud of the stature of a few priests and laymen who are aware of the problems that beset their brothers and sisters and insist that the Episcopal Church take constructive steps to help in their solution. But our Church will play no significant part in the development of proper race relations until these few are multiplied many times.

As a college chaplain, I have seen more clearly the challenge that faces Negro Episcopalians in these matters. There are on the campus of Howard University hundreds of our young people representing the Church's work throughout America and in many foreign countries. A surprisingly large minority, represented chiefly by the Canterbury Club, is deeply interested in the sincerity of the Church today. These men and women are interested in the presence and extent of discrimination in Church institutions and in parish life. They are interested in their Church's identification of itself with the underprivileged and mistreated. They are interested in rival movements that with enthusiasm challenge the claim of Christianity to moral superiority and social righteousness. I take it that it is part of my job to encourage them in these interests. If we can feed back into our parishes young men and women trained for leadership by our great educational institutions, and fully aware of the job their Church must do to establish justice and brotherhood in the land, we will no longer be embarrassed by little blind-alley missions that serve no good purpose. And, if we can guide into our best seminaries young men who are on fire with the great opportunity that awaits a prophetic Church, we will no longer be hampered by a ministry lacking in many instances in aggressive leadership and vision.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the handling of the race problem is the acid test of the sincerity of our religious convictions. The feelings of economic and social insecurity, the lack of social and civic participation, the squelching of ambition and the desire to achieve—these are the frustrations that beset the Negro in American life and prevent his gaining full recognition as a man and a citizen. The Churchman, lay and clerical, along with the social worker and educator, must work to coordinate community efforts to break these obstacles down. It is a task that falls upon black and white members alike. The National Council, in its Guiding Principles Designed to Govern the Church's Negro Work (adopted Feb. 9-11, 1943) has taken a constructive position in facing the issue. As the walls of segregation are broken down, our Negro Churchmen will assume a more normal place in the life of the Christian fellowship. Churches that cater to class prejudice and cultural advantages in order to maintain a semblance of status within an insecure society, will then be able to revise their outlook and acquire a saner conception of their task today.

DISLOYAL!

THE faults of others which bother us most are very often our own besetting sins. For example: Mr. Thomas, New Jersey's gift to the thought-police idea. He thinks "un-Americanism" is disloyal. He has not defined "Americanism" itself, but I wish someone would investigate his loyalty to the American idea of free speech. (Or is it now un-American? After all, we must remember that many of the Founding Fathers were second-generation immigrants, like the Nisei, and should probably be regarded with suspicion.) His attitude seems strange for one named after an Irish Protestant patriot!

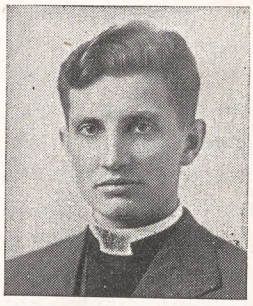
Item: the member of a parish who construes parish loyalty only in terms of attendance at whatever function he or she is running. The same state of mind is demonstrated sometimes by the families of clergymen, who assume that nothing ever happened in any parish Before Father Came, or After He Left.

Item: the Churchman who makes remarks of this sort: "That man, Sir, is flirting with the Papists (Presbyterians). He is disloyal, Sir, to the er—Church (Thirty-nine articles, Anglican Tradition, Catholic Practice, Spirit of the Prayer Book, Ordination Vows, etc.). I, Sir, am loyal, and thus cannot stand disloyalty."

I once was given the privilege of sitting in on a salesman's meeting. The speaker's theme was "Be loyal to whatever product you are selling."—which seemed to mean that one must never say a good word for a rival's merchandise. The auditors were drinking it in with relish. It seemed to me that they were confusing his idea of institutional loyalty with their own desire to be super-loyal to themselves.

Isaac Newton's greatest discovery was not the force of gravity, but a truth: Action and Reaction are Equal and Opposite. This axiom is valid not only in the case of material things, like billiard balls, but with personalities. Exaggerated dislike of disloyalty is often a way of hiding one's own self-centeredness,—a disguised form of real loyalty. When we are calling the signals, it's a team. When another is carrying the ball, it's a scramble; and there is no need for us to run humble interference. Cooperation means cooperation with us, not vice versa.

When we create God in our personal image; or identify an institution with our own glory or advancement, our antipathy to "disloyalty" is naturally the more personal—and strident.



A Century of Mediocrity

By

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

Executive Secretary, Episcopal League for Social Action

IN JULY, 1942, Raoul De Roussy De Sales wrote that America was suffering from the most deadly disease of the twentieth century — an illness which John Stuart Mill diagnosed as "collective mediocrity." At that time the Panzer divisions were pushing the British towards the locks of the Suez; the defense of Sebastopol had collapsed following a gallant delaying action; the American state department was playing expedient politics with Vichy France. It was then that the tubercular journalist wrote in his diary: "The world is mediocre, makes a mediocre war, for a mediocre future, with mediocre means. One must accept it."

De Sales, who was more than willing to admit it, was a constitutional pessimist. As things turned out, it was not a second-rate war and, in the light of total bombardment, high-lighted by the development of the atomic bomb, the means became the antithesis of mediocrity. But the observation of a creeping spiritual lethargy, which forced the penning of the words, was valid—pessimism notwithstanding.

The fact of the illness was not new. Society's Cassandras, and thank God the Church had its share, were reading the signs of the times correctly. A world war, divided into two phases by an unprecedented boom and bust, was these prophets' justification. Their thesis was that, in spite of pious words to the contrary, men and cultures could not confuse means and ends and survive. China in '31, Ethiopia in '34, Spain, Austria, Albania, Czechoslovakia from '36 to '38, Poland in '39, France in '40, England and Russia in '41 and America thereafter were their talking points. Their arguments were economic ("men, not profits"), political ("one world minus 'country, right or wrong' psychosis"), social ("all men are brothers in fact as well as in pious theory") and, ultimately, theological ("what are God, man and nature and their relationships?").

The Cassandras weren't the exclusive possession of one group, one race, one nation or one school of thought. It was the feudal Haille Selassie who, with stupendous dignity, shamed the League of Nations; it was the representative of the socialist Soviet Union, Maxim Litvinoff, who correctly blasted England, the United States and the Vatican on Spain; it was an ex-president of Commonwealth and Southern, which dictated cultural standards in pre-T.V.A. Tennessee, who defined our One World in its most positive terms. But the world continued to be ill, not exactly enjoying it, but helplessly lethargic and anesthetized into a desire to die rather than to do any drastic operating.

What is past is sad history. De Sales' pessimistic words were valid for that time. The world was mediocre. The words still are valid. Up to the beginning of 1948, the world is mediocre and the future, if it does not become an atomic blank, promises more mediocrity. The same prejudices, hatreds and myths which nauseated the patient then are seriously recommended and administered as medicine now: nationalism, power blocs, foreign loans provided the recipients don't do anything to their economy which would enable them to repay and stabilize, "white men's burdens" (interpret: exploitable markets and communist containment), the absurdity of militarization plus tax reduction, attacks on wages and hours accompanied by pleas for labor to up production, all combined the infantile political games.

This, in 1948, is worthy of consideration. Henry Wallace, in declaring his "second party," said that the American people must have a live option in the coming election. In the December 13th issue of the Nation, Harold Laski writes:

> It is perhaps an audacious thing to say, but I cannot avoid the suspicion that the present condition of American politics is above all a proof of the political immaturity of the American working class. I infer that not merely from the feebleness of the Socialist and Communist parties. I infer it even more from the fact that there is no effective intellectual differential between the two major political parties. Each of them is essentially a machine to capture power and, with power, jobs for its followers; and each offers to the electorate the candidates and the program which it thinks most likely to obtain this end. To a foreign observer, for example, it is fantastic to watch Governor Dewey, whose passion to be in the White House is universally known, not only refusing to admit that he is a candidate for the nomination at the same time that he labors with all his might to organize his pre-convention support, but taking the greatest care to prevent American people from knowing his views on any controversial subject lest this prejudice his chance of being chosen . . . I do not think it can seriously be argued that omne ignotum pro magnifico is a valid principle of political action.

The recent bean-bag tossing of investigations into grain speculation, what to do about our 59c dollar, demands for relaxation of anti-trust laws and tax relief for the greedy instead of the needy and serious doubts of subversion on the part of anybody to the left of Madam Frances Perkins would seem to bear out Mr. Laski's doubts of the healthiness of our democracy, both economic and political. All of these examples of infantilism are, of course, symptoms, not the illness itself.

ON TOP of this, every foreign observer visiting this country has commented, with fear, on the mass hysteria of our people, based on war psychosis. Their fear seems justified as we put inflationary billions into armaments, open air-bases in Africa and give aid to everyone except the Jewish community in Palestine, the Indonesian republic and the opponents of El Caudillo Franco. These observers say that this psychosis is built on a pyramid of misrepresented and undigested facts but, primarily, it is due to personal doubts concerning our healthiness and integrity. To escape from ourselves we are forced into that state which is brought on by what a friend calls "Luce thinking and Pius hopes." Today, with men who know their social history best, the prognosis is fascism umpty-ump to one. It is elementary psychology to state that, when the future is feared, one looks backward. In the midst of dynamic and revolutionary history, to look backward with nostalgic hopes and intentions, is to invite doom. To get back there in our power age means that the desires and hopes of the vast majority of the world's people must be frustrated through the rigid and exclusive control of that power by those who are looking backward. To throttle change in our day means to institute fascism, just as it did in pre-1932 Germany and pre-1940 France. It is a sign of spiritual and intellectual mediocrity—dangerous, evil and powerful; a potentially fatal disease.

But what of Russia? these men will ask. Are we not faced with inevitable conflict for which the stage has already been set? Personally, I agree with the statement by Harold Laski in the Nation (Jan. 10, 1948):

> The Soviet Union is a dictatorship. It is a hard regime. It has made vast mistakes and blunders that are difficult to distinguish from crime. But whatever the temporary deformation, its zeal for science, its enthusiasm for education, the great avenues of opportunity it has opened to its own people, the elevation of its subject nationalities, the new status it has given to women, the suppression of anti-Semitism, the absence of a color bar—all these seem to me proof that within the framework of the dictatorship there lies the purpose of building in Russia a democratic way of life. The stumbling-block is its leaders' sense of total insecurity on the international plane. If we could convince them of their right to faith in that security, I am confident that the dark clouds which at present obscure a common understanding would be dissipated. And the best way I know to convince the Russian leaders of their right to that faith is to invest in the future of Russia with the same determination that inspired President Truman's investment in the protection of Greece and Turkey. There, I believe, he has given the aid of the American government to the maintenance of a dying pattern of social organization. Investment in the future of Russia might ease the birth pangs of a new order which, when it begins to fulfill itself, has an immense contribution to make to our civilization.

The major problem confronting us, as American citizens, is what to do about our own neurotic personality. The able editor, Freda Kirchwey, analyzes shrewdly in her piece, "What Are We Afraid Of?" (The Nation; Dec. 20, 1947):

> What was and is the psychosis that explains our behavior? Perhaps it is a sense, still unformulated and only half conscious, that our strength is less solid than it seems, that it is threatened, not by Russia or Communist drive, but by internal ailments that may be beyond cure—troubles related to gigantism and monopoly, to the steady weakening of really free enterprise, to the failure of capital to use its concentrated, almost unchecked power in ways that will preserve even itself, much less the economic stability of the nation or the world. People sense—dimly remembering the twenties—that our inflated prosperity is a symptom of disease, not a show of health. They know that private enterprise is, by its nature, the enemy of planning, except when it plans for its own larger return, but they suspect that only planning on a world scale can save the human race from catastrophe. If they listeen to the primitive economics declaimed by most of the men who make our laws, they may outwardly applaud, but inwardly they ask: "What's going to happen? Things don't feel steady."

She goes on to state: "Loyalty tests, red hunts, even liberal apologetics for moderate forms of repression—these are the compulsive, unreal answers our emotions provide to spare us the need of looking for the real ones."

By all the logic of history, politics, economics, morality and, I believe, Christianity, it would seem that this is still the Century of Common Man, even though the possessors of power are attempting to convert it into something else. On July 7, 1942, De Sales had this to say in his diary:

> Deep down, I think that America is preparing a 'betrayal' much worse than the letting down of Europe in 1920. In 1920 she withdrew completely from Europe. This time it is possible that scruples of conscience will force the nation to assume responsibilities which she evaded twenty years ago. America will believe it her duty to concern herself with the rest of the world, but she will not do this without being paid for it. The payment that she will demand will not be material but moral. No country is more convinced than this one that she is right, or is more arrogant in her moral superiority. If she intervenes in the affairs of the world, it will be to impose her ideas, and she will consider intervention a blessing for lost and suffering humanity. The prospect is cheerless.

The only people who ever gave our Lord any real trouble were those convinced of their moral superiority and, as it has often been pointed out, they were the only ones that he could never help. They were both wrong and powerful, so they could lynch him. Today, the attitude means atomization. This appears to be the logical solution to this century of mediocrity. It certainly is not the best solution; nor is it the only solution. It just appears to be the only solution that the present leaders of humanity, hypnotized like the victims of a cobra, can still count on and, at the same time, avoid falling from a seat of privilege.

The other alternative is the way of drastic operating. Essentially it is the way of conversion—turning around and turning over; evolution and revolution . . . on every level of life, social and economic. It means the full life for every man—and yes, a bottle of milk for every Hottentot—or radio-active vapor for everyman. It has become that simple. The soldiers and servants of Christ can't sit this game out. The Church, as of today, seems to be receiving much of its theological directives from the gospel according to Henry Luce. This gospel does not complement Micah's preachment: "to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." In a sick, starving and frightened world, confronting the paradox of scarcity in the midst of plenty, Micah's Gospel, if truly lived, would indeed be the Good News.

Two-Way College Work Program At Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.:—The college work program at Christ Church here gets them coming and going: there is both a program for the Episcopalians coming into the city to go to college and for the parish young people away at college. The work is directed by Barbara E. Arnold who took up the work in the parish last fall.

The work among Vassar College Episcopalians, numbering 500 from faculty and students, is new. In fact the Episcopal Church is the only Church which has a program for its students. Every Friday night there has been an informal supper at the rectory followed by a discussion led by the Rev. James A. Pike, the rector. The subjects covered have included: the existence of God; Christianity, humanism and materialism as rival world-views; does it matter whether Christ is divine?; Biblical myths; miracles and Biblical criticism; liturgy as related to psycho-therapy.

Transportation is furnished to the Sunday 9 o'clock Communion services and to the 10:45 service the first Sunday, when the Vassar Community Church has no service. Miss Arnold has a Sunday afternoon tea and open house for the women and has had various visiting clergy as guests to meet the students. Perhaps the most fruitful aspect of Miss Arnold's work has been the personal calls on the girls in the dormitories and conferences at her apartment near the campus.

One of the fruits of the work at Vassar is the fact that Miss Helen Chapin, '49, from New York City, represented our group and also the Vassar Community Church board at the North American quadrennial conference for Christian College students held recently at Lawrence, Kansas. This was made financially possible by the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council. For the past two summers Miss Chapin represented the United States Girl Scouts at Geneva, Switzerland. Miss Arnold also attended the Lawrence conference, representing the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council, the Church Society for College Work, and the college program of Christ Church.

For the parish students away at colleges or schools there have been two gatherings: a party just before school began in the fall, and a supper at the rectory during Christmas holidays. At the latter 35 attended and a lengthy "bull-session" ensued on agnosticism and on Christianity as a world-view, particularly as contrasted with humanism. In addition Miss Arnold has been in correspondence with parish priests and college workers in the localities where these students are in school or college.

Miss Arnold also directs an active youth program at the Church. The larger portion of her salary is paid by the Woman's Auxiliary through the division of college work of the National Council. Before coming to Christ Church Miss Arnold was provincial secretary for college work in the first province. After graduating from Vassar College, Miss Arnold took her master of arts degree in social work from the University of Denver. She was adviser to student religious activities there, and also at the University of Nebraska, before coming with the National Council's college work program. She has studied at the Union Theological Seminary and the Episcopal Theological School.

Rationing Urged

Newark, N. J.:—The New Jersey council of churches, through a resolution offered by Dean Arthur Lichtenberger, has urged Congress to re-establish price control and rationing. The council also called for reestablishment of controls on installment buying and revision of the tax structure to give relief to those in lower income brackets without "reducing the total national tax income."

The council also hit the banning of the weekly magazine The Nation from the high schools of Newark. This action was taken recently by the superintendent of public school, John S. Herron, because of articles

Utah Housewarming

Salt Lake City:—Bishop and Mrs. Stephen Clark of Utah gave an informal housewarming for the new bishop's house and district offices on January 25. A year ago arrangements were made to take over a brick house owned by the district, together with part of the property of the district's girls' school. The remodelled building has offices, a three room apartment of the bishop's secretary, a library, a five room apartment for the bishop and his family, an apartment for guests and also for the clergy of the district when they visit headquarters, which they are being urged to do several times each year by Bishop Clark.

Poteat Answers

Rochester, N. Y. (RNS):—Charges of "bigotry" laid to Protestants and Other Americans United for the Separation of Church and State were answered here by Dean Edwin McNeill Poteat, president of the newly-formed organization. Following issuance of the group's "manifesto" in Washington, D. C., Poteat, president of the Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, came under fire of leaders of the Rochester Catholic Diocese.

Dean Poteat accused his attackers of "personal insinuations" in their onslaughts and labeled as "intemperate aspersions" remarks made in the Catholic Courier-Journal, weekly newspaper of the Rochester Diocese, by the Rt. Rev. Msgr. William M. Hart, editor-in-chief, and the Rev. Patrick J. Flynn, editor.

Msgr. Hart in an editorial called the new organization a "society of organized bigotry" and Father Flynn, in his column, "On Guard," declared: "The spirit of hooded bigotry lives again in the new organization.

By "personal insinuations," Poteat said he referred to the Courier-Journal's attempt to link him with a number of groups which the newspaper termed "Communist-front organizations."

"The manifesto was presented to the American people and must stand on its feet as a careful and objective statement of an American problem," he declared.

He pointed out that the manifesto "explicitly states in its second paragraph that it 'does not concern itself with the religious teaching, the forms of worship or the ecclesiastical organization of the many churches in our country'."

in purpose to the Episcopal League for Social Action (formerly the CLID), received widespread criticism rcently as a result of its annual meeting held in Kansas City. The Denver ministers state that "social action belongs to the essence of Christianity; it is neither an 'extra' nor an appendix. Christianity is a religion with a distinctive character. Its exaltation of moral values and its profound concern for the welfare of persons distinguish it among the religions of mankind. God is viewed not as an aloof spectator but as a participant in history in the interest of a rightly ordered world, a kingdom of God."

But the Methodist ministers of Knoxville, Tenn., having a different opinion of the Federation, passed a resolution "strongly condemning any use of . . . the Methodist Church by any members . . . in furtherance of any scheme which advocates the forcible overthrow of Christian democracy in America or the establishment of an anti-Christian or atheistic philosophy." The resolution was offered by Pastor R. O. Eller of the Central Methodist Church who asked that it "be passed unanimously and without discussion as this is no time to weaken our stand." However there was warm discussion but in the end but one dissenting vote, that of the Rev. J. Monroe Ball, pastor of the Virginia Avenue Methodist Church.

A resolution urging that no delegates be sent by Methodists to the meeting of the Federal Council of Churches "whose views on the above-stated subjects have been substantially questioned" was defeated.

Christian Vocations

San Antonio, Texas:—A conference on Christian vocations was held by the diocese of West Texas recently, with 48 college students, all Episcopalians, present. Bishop Everett Jones was the leader, assisted by three seminarians, Gordon Charlton and Robert Magee of Virginia and Wilson Rowland of Philadelphia, and Mary L. Villaret, director of education in the diocese.

district. And on Christmas 250 came to the church for service at this mission which was closed a year ago.

Laymen Conferences

Philadelphia:—Bishop Hart and Bishop Remington are conducting a series of six conferences for laymen as a part of the program of evangelism.

Rural Life

Burlington, Vt.:—A rural life conference for Vermont ministers is being held at the University of Vermont here for four days this week, sponsored by the state's council of churches. Professors of the agricultural school are lecturing on economics, sociology, crops animals, and adult education.

Women on Vestries

Burlington, Vt.:—When parish meetings are held this year in Vermont women will be eligible for vestries for the first time. Those attending the 1947 diocesan convention voted to strike the word "male" from the canon governing parish elections.

Discuss Vocations

New York: — An inter-diocesan conference for college students on vocations is to be held at Windham House March 6-7. Speakers will include the Presiding Bishop, the Rev. John Heuss of the national department of education, Ellen Gammack of the national Auxiliary, Barbara Arnold of Poughkeepsie, Helen Turnbull, director of Windham House, Katharine Duffield, secretary of college work for the second province.

To Discuss Youth

New York:—Bishop Gilbert of New York is to be the speaker at the annual meeting of the Youth Consultation Service of the diocese, to be held at St. Bartholomew's, February 5th.

Dean Installed

New Haven:—Percy L. Urban is being installed as the dean of the Berkeley Divinity School today, January 29th. Addresses by the Presiding Bishop, Dean Rose of General, Dean Weigle of Yale Divinity School and, of course, Dean Urban.

Services in Lent

Houston, Texas:—The Episcopal laymen's association of this city, an inter-parish group, are again sponsoring noonday services at downtown Christ Church. With the exception of the second week, when the Rev. John F. Butler Jr., of Providence is the preacher, all the speakers are bishops: Bishop Hines of Texas; Bishop Gray of Connecticut; Bishop Block of California; Bishop Brinker of Nebraska; Bishop Kinsolving of Arizona; Bishop Quin of Texas.

Youth May Boycott

Springfield, Mass. (RNS):—Clergymen here have threatened to request their young people to boycott a forthcoming Christian youth rally unless one of their number is given an opportunity to refute the Rev. Daniel A. Poling should he speak in favor of universal military training. Poling, a member of President Truman's commission favoring military training, has been doing a lot of speaking in recent months favoring the proposal, which is disapproved by most of the local clergy.

Religious Garb

Fargo, N. D. (RNS):—Initiation of a referendum measure "prohibiting teachers in public schools from wearing any garb denoting religious order or denomination" was determined upon at a meeting here of the state's committee on separation of Church and state. The meeting was attended by 27 persons, mostly clergy. A speaker declared that in the school year ending last July there were 74 nuns of the Roman Church teaching in North Dakota public schools.

Inter-Communion

London (RNS):—Delegates of the Free Church Federal Council met here with a committee appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury to discuss proposals for full communion between the Church of England and non-Anglican Churches. It was an off-the-record affair but it is understood that they discussed doctrinal standards and ways in which they interpret the nature and function of the ministry. The Rev. Nathaniel Micklem, chairman of the Free Church delegation, and Bishop Rawlinson of Derby presided alternatively. Another meeting is to be held later in the year.

Noted Preachers

Columbus, O.:—Ministers of other denominations have the headlines for the noonday services this Lent at Trinity Church here. Among the well-known preachers are F. Gerard Ensley, Methodist of this city; Harold Metzner, Methodist of Providence; Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York; Boynton Merrill, Congregationalist of this city; John Rhind, Presbyterian of Columbus. Episcopalians on the program are Rector Robert Fay, Assistant Gordon S. Price, Rector Robert L. Bull Jr. of St. Paul's, Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio and Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis.

who talked civilized sense in his Making of Tomorrow, could watch history unfold with a real interpretive ability. Although a member of the DeGaullist movement here, he says he doesn't like it because it holds the seeds of fascism; he states that America is preparing a worse betrayal in Europe than it did in 1920 since it will intervene and demand moral repayment. This reviewer read the book on New Year's Eve and can see no reason for saying that DeSales was a blind guide. The history of these particular years, especially when it discusses men like Hoover, Vandenberg and French collaborators, should be read and thoroughly understood. Politics, whether national or international, is a complex game and, unfortunately, Americans too often treat it as some type of kindergarten ring-around-the-rosie.

The Revolt of Asia by Robert Payne. The John Day Co. $2.50.

This is another excellent addition to the growing library on Asia which indicates that American foreign policy in the East is based on the premises of 1900-1910. The author, who knows Nehru and Jinnah, Shiarir and van Mook, Chiang Kai Shek and Mao Tse-tung, calls the revolt of Asia the biggest single fact of our time since, for the first time, over half the world's people have some new vision of liberty which, borrowing its spirit from American colonists, French and Russian revolutionists and the New Deal philosophy, is adopting the motto: "Freedom or destruction." Mr. Payne maintains, as others have before him, that this do-or-die philosophy is not borrowed from the Soviet Union but that it is definitely opposed to American finance imperialism or the reconstitution of English, Dutch or French domination. Since the fate of the world will more likely be decided by the course of events in China, India and Indonesia than by strikes in France or parleys over Germany, it is incumbent upon any person truly seeking to know his period of history to consider this book.

The Coming Crisis* by Fritz Sternberg. John Day Co. $3.00.

Piling economic fact on economic fact, Mr. Sternberg shows why the capitalist world is heading for a continuation of the 1929 plunge and, logically enough, why this will lead to American fascism of a smooth, creamy but absolutely poisonous type. When Mr. Sternberg wrote his chapters on imperialism, we weren't yet supporting Tsaldaris, Chiang, De Gaulle, et al, to the hilt but he says that we would. When he wrote his chapter on armaments, we were just demobilizing but he warned that the military, historically rightest, and the financiers would demand a "get ready" program, complete with stockpiling and conscription. It is only thus, he says, that they continue to have assured markets plus profits . . . plus full-employment. The pattern of those particular plus signs equals fascism. Read against today's front pages, Mr. Sternberg's thesis makes frighteningly good sense.

MR. M. SCHIESINGER
Layman of Jamaica, N. Y.

I am sure that the writers (Nov. 6, Dec. 11) who objected to Bishop Gilbert's concern for the vast numbers of people who find themselves priced out of life's bare necessities found illuminating answers in your columns. But what a staggering cost to the nation that people cannot perceive behind the clamour against the "police state" a pattern of social thinking expressed in Queen Marie Antoinette's "If they have no bread let them eat cake."

Are they satisfied to leave the solution of such vital questions as labor relations, unemployment, military training, housing to a complacency that advises the victims of spiralling prices to eat less? Frankly I believe many will not like this criticism. But in all fairness, may not the un-Christian thinking on public affairs be justly laid at the door of that element of the press that devotes itself so wholly to red-mongering? What can be more subversive of American ideals that the bedevilment of a man's mind to the point that he can no longer distinguish between an outcry against injustice and disloyalty?

We see this rather neatly in the writer who would oppose Chinese Communism, not with Christianity, but with capitalism.

I am reminded in all this of a man influential in his neighborhood—a political leader and past commander of a post of the Catholic War Veterans. In a discussion with him I made the point that Jaques Maritain, considered the greatest living Catholic philosopher, though he was opposed to Communism, was by no means of the same mind as the American press that is so self-righteous on the subject. My friend's reply was that he had no use for any foreign philosophers—this despite the fact that Maritain's Catholicism must be beyond reproach since he is acceptable to the Vatican as French ambassador. This I think is an example of how the press has befuddled people in their thinking. My Catholic friend might just as well have said that he could not follow the Pope because he was a foreigner, though perhaps he thinks the Pope is a New Yorker.

In any case it is a joy to some of us to find a bishop like the Bishop of New York, who, when others fail, does not look aside from his sacred duty to his flock.

VIDA D. SCUDDER
Author of the series Social Rebirth

Mr. Richard Evans (Backfire, Jan. 8) accuses my series on Social Rebirth of inconsistency. But he misses my central point. I find the Christian Church throughout its history the supreme example of the dialectic paradox on which Marxists dwell. Forever, as in our Lord's day, it seeks to obey the laws of the natural order. Forever it crucifies him: and forever he redeems and recreates it, infusing within it the Holy Spirit of the higher law. In this spectacle, I long found a sharp challenge to my Christian faith. But I like to recall how my first spiritual director, Bishop A.C.A. Hall of Vermont, corrected me when I applied to the First Person of the Blessed Trinity the ancient liturgical phrase, "Father of the Future Age." That phrase, he told me, was addressed to our Lord Christ's continuous patient summons of his Church at once to continuity and to progress sometimes involving revolution, which finds now and then awesome focus in some historic crisis like the present. Or will she heed the call?

Let us pray for light. The grace of God is within her.

THE REAL PRESENCE OF GOD

In his sincere and thoughtful book, Christian Behaviour, C. S. Lewis comes very close to stating the layman's experience with Christianity. But he makes one statement which leads me to believe that his experience has been sadly incomplete. He says, "The real test of being in the presence of God is that you either forget about yourself altogether or see yourself as a small, dirty object."

I question this. Rather, by way of analogy, I should say that the presence of God is, though in greater measure, very like a reunion with a dear friend. When one has grieved a friend so that a deep coldness has set in between us, one may perhaps feel very self-sufficient and belligerently proud for a time. This sage of our relationship is somewhat like the joylessness of enmity with God. Sooner or later, however, one yearns for the companionship and understanding of our friend. A dozen times a day one longs to rush to him with a thought or a generous deed. Pride holds us back. "Let him seek us," we think. ("The minister has not ever called on us," we say when the friend is God.) We sulk and nurse our loneliness.

Then we remember with what love and kindness our friend used to cherish us. Always ready with an encouraging word, he made our burdens nothing. Gloom was dispersed by the very knowledge of his nearness. We throw aside our pride. We rush to apologize for our meanness. Our friend is surprised. He has been near us all the time, ready to forgive us, ready to love us, unworthy though we are. He has never turned against us at all, even when we repudiated his love. The joy which floods us at that realization is but a fraction of that supreme joy which floods the Christian as he approaches the communion table of our Lord, certain that in reunion with him, all one's sins have actually rolled away.

"Small dirty object"? Indeed not! Christ died for the very reason that we should not be small, but large with the infinite source of power which he bestows freely on his own. Dirty? Not when his blood has been shed expressly to cleanse us from sin!

EPISCOPAL LEAGUE for SOCIAL ACTION

(Incorporated as The Church League for Industrial Democracy)

"The Gospel of the Kingdom is of and in itself a social message. We believe that an outstanding and pressing duty of the Church is to convince its members of the necessity of nothing less than a fundamental change in the spirit and working of our economic life. This change can only be effected by accepting as the basis of industrial relations the principle of cooperation in service for the common good, in place of unrestricted competition for private or sectional advantage."

—Pastoral of the House of Bishops.

"It is not enough to say that if we change the individual we will of necessity change the social order. That is a half truth. For the social order is not entirely made up of individuals now living. It is made up of inherited attitudes which have come down from generation to generation through customs, laws, institutions, and these exist in large measure independently of individuals now living. Change those individuals and you do not necessarily change the social order unless you organize those changed individuals into collective action in wide-scale frontal attack upon those corporate evils."

—The Madras Conference and Reaffirmed by the Malvern Manifesto

Undergraduate Gives the Story Of Baldwin-Wallace

Roman Catholic Authorities Tell Students That They Sin by Attending College Chapel

By Arity Jelliffe

Student at Baldwin-Wallace and Communicant of Christ Church, Middletown, N. J.

Berea, Ohio:—A new trend started with the new year at Baldwin-Wallace College. Many of my Roman Catholic friends were talking of being obliged to leave this Methodist school. At first I took it lightly but then became interested because everybody was talking about it. The compulsory religious course and the chapel programs are the cause of the controversy. There were 163 Catholic students here at the beginning of the winter term and they had been told in no uncertain terms that they must leave Baldwin-Wallace immediately if they wished to conform to the doctrines of their Church.

"Catholics may not in good conscience attend a school in which they are obliged to attend non-Catholic chapel services and take courses in religion and religious subjects. No circumstances, condition or precaution can make it lawful; and neither financial loss nor loss of academic credit or degree, nor impossibility of graduation nor any other kind of embarrassment could change the objective wrongness of attendance at such an institution." This statement was made by Mon. Vincent P. Balmot, chancellor of the Roman Catholic diocese of Cleveland.

On Sunday evening, January 11th, a regular scheduled meeting of all Roman Catholic students was held and the position of the Church explained by Fr. Moriarty, a professor at a neaby Catholic college. He said that to remain at Baldwin-Wallace would be to live in a state of mortal sin and that if any of the students died while here they would go immediately to hell. Fr. Moriarty made it clear that these were not merely his own ideas but also those of Bishop Edward F. Hoban.

The controversy was precipitated when a Catholic student asked her priest about the required course in philosophy of religion which uses a text book by Dr. Edgar S. Brightman which has been banned by the Catholic Church. The Needle, publication of the Newman Club, student organization of the Catholic Church, made public the answer that Catholics "under no circumstances or pretext attend a class of this kind." The college however refused to change the religious requirements but did offer four alternative courses. The course on philosophy of religion deals with the nature of religion; its methods; the relation of its method and its content to science and the realm of values; evidences for the existence of God; the nature of God; the nature of man; the relationship of man to God; evil; faith and reason; immortality.

According to Fr. Moriarty "A Catholic has no need to search for religious truth. He is in possession of all religious truths. Once you have found truth there is no need to dabble in half-truths."

He objected to the Roman Catholic students having to study all other forms of religion on the same level with Catholicism; they must look down on the others. He referred to Dr. Brightman's book as "unadulterated trash."

A telephone conversation with Dr. Brightman disclosed the fact that the author of the "unadulterated trash" has been a member of the American Catholic Philosophical Association for the past ten years. He now teaches at Boston University and has recently spoken at a regional meeting of the Catholic Association held in Boston. Dr. Brightman congratulated Baldwin-Wallace for the stand taken on the issue. Many hundreds of others also have congratulated the college, including Roman Catholics.

The other bone of contention is the compulsory chapel attendance. Chapel is held once a week which, in my judgment, is not enough for a Christian College. According to Fr. Moriarty "singing or standing with groups at a non-Catholic service constitutes active participation and mortal sin to a Catholic."

Only one-third of these chapel services can be called religious. The others are musicals or lectures. These programs are the result of extensive study and planning by a special committee of faculty and students. They have also been studied by many other schools and colleges who have wished to follow their excellent planning. The chapel programs have received many favorable comments from all over the country. The idea behind them is not to push Protestantism, as the Catholics seem to think, but to expose everyone to conditions that are conducive to worship. It is possible not to take an active part in the programs, as is evident by the fact that a few of the students make light of the time by studying or writing letters.

Since Baldwin-Wallace stands for the ideal that religion is an essential for education and culture,

Invariably we receive many orders for bundles featuring articles in Lent after this first number is off the press. However there are eleven articles, based on the Agenda of the Lambeth Conference to follow in numbers between now and Easter. To insure delivery of the next number, February 12, we suggest that you wire THE WITNESS at the editorial office, 135 Liberty Street, New York, at once, giving the address and the number of copies desired through the Easter number. Orders received through Saturday, February 7th, will receive the issue of the 12th.

the administration would not change these religious requirements for the Roman Catholics. It was pointed out that the college catalogue clearly states that religious courses and chapel services are required of all students and that Catholics came, presumably, fully aware of this.

Also President L. C. Wright of our college, in a public statement, pointed out that the college is maintained under the auspices of the Methodist Church "and its regulations are in harmony with the Association of Methodist Colleges." He added that "all classes, creeds, nationalities and races are welcomed as students selected on the basis of scholarship and character."

He said further that scholarships are likewise granted solely on a basis of merit though "the college has recently been criticized in certain Methodist circles for admitting so many Catholic students while turning down Methodists and other Protestant students."

As for the chapel programs and the courses in religion, he declared that there had been no basic change in policy for a hundred years.

After presenting evidence to prove that there is no discrimination at Baldwin-Wallace, Dr. Wright concluded by saying that "if the authorities of the Catholic Church feel obliged to dictate to students who are members of that Church, the college raises no objections. Its trustees, administration and faculty will continue to encourage the free search for truth, genuine scholarship and personal religion. The college authorities will be exceedingly sorry for any Catholic students if they are forced to withdraw. The college remains open to them."

The 163 Roman Catholic students were nevertheless told by their Church authorities that they must leave the college or lose their right to receive the sacraments. The choice was left to them. At first all of them indicated that they would leave. However actually but 60 withdrew. At the time of writing 5 of these 60 have returned. Others of them have enrolled in nearby Roman Catholic colleges. We have lost some of our campus leaders because of the controversy. The president of our student council is one and he had but one more term before receiving his degree. Another to leave is one of our outstanding athletes who probably has thereby lost his chance to be on the U. S. Olympic team this summer.

It is the students who are being hurt by this. Many of the Roman Catholic students who did not withdraw are showing signs of nervous strain caused by worry and fear. But I have heard some of them say that their priests back home have advised them to stay. Also since the controversy started there have been applications for admission from Roman Catholics.

Many of us here believe that this Baldwin-Wallace controversy is a test case. There are signs of similar controversies in other colleges. And the students generally think that such an issue should not come up in this day and age. For if the various divisions of the Christian Church cannot work in harmony how can we possibly look forward to world peace?

MEMORIAL TO FOUNDER

Lawrenceville, Va.: — President J. Alvin Russell of St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute formally broke ground on a recent Sunday for the James Solomon Russell Memorial Refectory. The building is a memorial to the founder of the Institute, and the father of the present rector and president. Archdeacon Russell founded St. Paul's in 1888 and remained its active principal until December, 1929, when he was succeeded by his son.

The refectory is to cost $120,000 and is the gift of a friend of St. Paul's. When the donor gave the building it was understood that it would be erected by the students of the trades departments, as has been the case with every other building erected on the campus, as well as many in the community. Archdeacon Russell had firmly believed that the best way to teach the trades was to have students work at real jobs.

In addition to the refectory there is to be a trade school unit which will cost $97,500 which comes from the national Reconstruction and Advance Fund.

BISHOP EMRICH IS ELECTED

Detroit:—Suffragan Bishop Richard S. Emrich was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Michigan at the regular diocesan convention, meeting here at St. Paul's Cathedral on January 28th. Bishop Creighton is to retire on March 31 so that Bishop Emrich will become the bishop of the diocese at that time. The convention dinner was held the evening of the 28th and was followed by an address, in the auditorium adjoining the dining hall, by Bishop Angus Dun of Washington. Bishop Emrich was elected by unanimous acclamation with but one ballot cast.

The late Archdeacon James S. Russell, founder of St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute, in whose memory a refectory is now being built

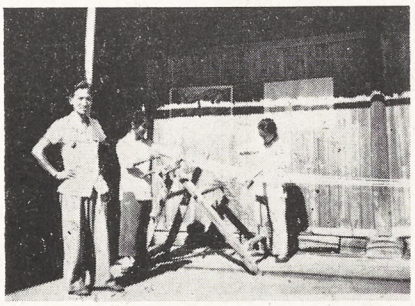
The Kuomintang Is Denounced By Student Leader

Communication from China Was Sent Students Attending Conference But Was Not Presented

New York:—Congressman Walter N. Judd of Minnesota, seeking many millions of dollars for the regime of Chiang Kai-Shek under the Marshall Plan, did his best to line up the students, meeting in Kansas recently to consider Christian missions, to that end. The results achieved were decidedly questionable, as reported here January 15, since a large block of the students refused to follow his lead.

Information is now received that a communication from the National Student Federation of China had been sent to the conference of American students to be read to the 1,800 delegates representing colleges throughout the United States and Canada. It was not read. "Not received in time" is the official explanation.



The communication, signed by Mr. Chang Liao, director of the international department of the Federation of China, first states that the friendship of students on this side of the Pacific "has given us a lot of inspiration and encouragement even in the darkest hours of our struggle," and he, on behalf of the students of China, expresses thanks "for the material and moral support you, out of your own limited means, have sent to China to enable our Chinese youths to carry on with their studies." He then paid tribute to missionaries for their "loyalty to the cause of national liberation and democracy, their self-sacrifice under oppression, their wisdom in counselling" and assures the American and Canadian students "that there will be a great welcome for Christian work by the people in all parts of China."

But after this brief introduction the communication presents a picture of China which would have been a bombshell had it been read at the Kansas Conference.

"With the most reactionary group within the Kuomintang in power, no work can possibly be started and expand and flourish, including religious work," the document declares.

"When the war ended," the statement explains, "how happy we were to trek back to our universities. How happy we were when, in Feb., 1946, all the political parties of China signed an agreement to form a really democratic and coalition government in which all questions and disputes would be settled peacefully. But our joy did not last long. A strong wave of fascist reaction swept through the whole country, sabotaged the agreement, suppressed the liberal and peace-loving influences in the universities and in society. Since then, we students and professors of China, with all the rest of our people, have to live through a period of utter hardness and brutality. Most beastly and bloodthirsty methods are used to deal with us people who do not have any means of resisting them. Innocent people are closely watched for their aspirations for peace and democracy. Concentration camps are full of patriots, young and old. Secret service men are allocated to all universities, schools, institutions, organizations and departments of the government. Pure-minded young people are coerced to watch and report on their friends. There is no room for sincere relationship and fellowship among youth, wherever the secret service men have penetrated. Any slightest provocation would bring upon us imprisonment and torture. What a life is this? It is in every sense a hell! They want to crush our fellow-students morally through severe political and psychological oppression. They are depriving us of our right to live as human beings. Many who did not want to sell their souls have been assassinated or put in concentration camps.

"We just need to give you one instance of the Nationalists' atrocious behavior towards us students, the latest case that has been reported. It is about the treacherous murder of our beloved friend and fellow-student, the late Mr. Yu Tse-san. Yu, the chairman of the student self-governing body of the National Chekiang University, was a major in agriculture and had long cherished the ambition of modernizing farming technique in China. He was an honor student in his field. After attending a friend's wedding he and a group of friends disappeared and the next he was heard of was that he was dead in his prison cell. Stunned by the news, the president, the dean and a group of student representatives rushed out of the campus straight to the jail. There they found the body of the student, lying in bed with eyes and mouth wide open. Blood smeared his forehead and ran down to his neck. There was a deep cut in his throat. The president fainted at the horrible sight. News of the tragedy fast spread over the city of Hangchow, where the World Alliance of the YWCAs was holding its executive committee conference. In the evening that conference received a phone call from the municipal government urging the delegates to quit the city 'at once,' or the regional authorities would not be responsible for their security in case anything should happen. Of course the real point is that they were afraid that the news about Mr. Yu's murder would leak out to the world through the women delegates who had come from all over the world.

"This is only one case of the general situation of catastrophe we people of China are in. The good Christian people of China are by no means spared and have to share in the same peril. Peace-loving Christians are hated and dealt with accordingly because they oppose the civil war and want peace. No consideration is given to their good, selfless intention. We do not want to specify names but Christian leaders, including a Bishop, have been warned and threatened after bribery failed. Just a few weeks ago, Gen. Yu Hsing-ching of Peiping, one of the beloved senior citizens and an ardent leader in Chinese Methodism, has been arrested in the midnight in his residence. He was treated like a robber and we do not know where he is now and whether he is still alive. You have probably only heard of how Christians are giving 'leadership' and 'support' to the Nationalist Party. At most this is true of a very small number among the topmost leaders in the Church. Censorship, propaganda and distorted interpretation have covered up the fact that all our patriotic people of China, Christian and non-Christian, share the exactly same fate and they have all been led to a position of utter disillusionment, as far as the Nationalist regime is concerned. With all the rest of the people, Christians look forward to and quietly strive towards the democratic coalition government in which only there can be true freedom of religion and evangelization.

"Dear friends, we are earnest university students just like you. We have the same ideals of international brotherhood and world peace. We also love our own country and would like our international friends to respect our own government and nation. But today, the suffering and oppressed conditions of our people in the hands of the self-appointed and war-loving officialdom of the Kuomintang are so acute that we must cry out. Our organization, the National Student Federation of China, was founded in the darkest days of suppression. It obtained support and approval of all Chinese students. The KMT government tried to suppress it every possible means; but we have never relaxed our effort in fighting for democracy. Now we have the confidence that the victory will come. One of your most esteemed leaders, Jefferson, once said, 'Rebellion to tyrants is obedience to God.' It must be quite hard for people outside of China to appreciate that saying, although we must hurry to add that in China today what is going on is indeed not a rebellion, but a humanitarian cause of righteousness and justice and peace against hypocrisy, injustice and militarism, a cause to right the wrong that has been committed and is still being committed by the tyrannical rebels to democracy and to our long-suffering and peace-loving people.

"In our people's rise against the tyrannical rule which has seated itself in power, the most unfortunate discovery is that the American government has been giving financial aid and ammunition in large quantities to the Kuomintang. The latter's fighting power and military passion have thus been bolstered. In the name of 'combatting communists,' the Kuomintang reactionaries have attempted to blind us to the fact that their real intention is to deny us democracy and freedom and to maintain themselves in absolute power and corruption. No matter what is the real intention of the American government in giving the supplies and no matter how the American public understands or misunderstands the situation, the naked fact is unalterable: every additional ounce of American military supply comes to boost up the spirit of fascism and to bring about further suppression of the liberal intellectual groups. Just last month, the Democratic League, the only party between the Nationalist Party and the Chinese Communist Party, composed mostly of professionals, industrialists and professors, was outlawed and over twenty of its leaders executed. Yet, some people abroad are still considering the present Chinese government, which cannot even permit the Democratic League to exist, a 'free government'; it is indeed 'free' to kill anybody it wants to! And, just at the beginning of the school term, over 200 professors and more than 3,000 students from universities all over the country have been expelled because of their 'liberal leanings.' All this has been done in China while aids and supplies were forthcoming from America. It is only too obvious that America which is interested in democracy is defeating her own purpose.

"Friends! We are more than sure that the Americans are a peace-loving people. Our two great nations on both sides of the Pacific Ocean have had most admirable friendly relationship. We are sure that you do not want to support a most reactionary regime which suppreses us and is against the interests of yourselves. Why did you permit your government to carry on a policy in China that has created a great deal of misunderstanding and barrier between the peoples of the two countries? Why did you keep silent? The answer to this question is that in the past you did not know, and that you had been misled by propagandists and political adventurists into thinking that there is nothing wrong in supporting the Kuomintang in the civil war. You probably have thought in the past that the struggle in China was basically between two political and military groups—the Nationalists and the Communists—which has nothing to do with the people. Some might even have thought that some group was trying to sabotage the 'democracy' of the Nationalist Party. But, now, you realize that human lives are at stake, not one or two lives, but millions of them. It is basically a struggle of the whole people against the fascist dictatorship and oppression of the Nationalist reactionaries. Would you do something now? Your

The Test of Lent

WHAT are you "giving up" for Lent? It was Bishop Brent who once said that it was more important to "give upward" than to give up. And one who understood human behaviour well, William James, wrote, "Keep the faculty of effort alive in you by a little gratuitous exercise every day. That is, be systematically ascetic or heroic in little unnecessary points; do every day or two something for no other reason than you would rather not do it." So Lent can be constructive and positive. If we make proper use of it it can offer us an opportunity to open up some of the channels of the spirit which have become clogged through lack of use. The world and the flesh are not inevitably evil in themselves but they have an unfortunate way of blocking more important things. Lent calls us to expose ourselves less often to the world and the flesh and more often to these first things. Being somewhat erratic and undisciplined creatures we have to make an effort in regard to this. The religion of Christ always stresses the value of self-discipline, and it urges it unceasingly throughout the forty days as a kind of memorial to him who was the world's most disciplined person.

One obvious way is regular sharing—especially if we would rather not—what we have with others. Another way is to take the time we might give to trivial things and devote it to things that count; aye, to a cause. The Church is such a cause; we might consider giving up an extra hour or so a week to attending one of its services. What are you giving up for Lent? The test is what you put in its place.

"QUOTES"

WHAT shall we do to be saved? In politics, establish a constitutional co-operative system of world government. In economics, find working compromises between free enterprise and socialism. In the life of the spirit, put the secular superstructure back onto religious foundations. Of the three tasks, the religious one is, of course, in the long run by far the most important.

—Arnold J. Toynbee
Professor at University of London

They Call Us Bigots

THE organization to maintain the separation of Church and state (WITNESS, Jan. 22) seems to have touched a sore spot. Roman dignitaries, practically every day since, have handed releases to the press calling the sponsors "hooded bigots"; men with "an utter disregard for facts" and of course "communists."

The word bigot, so freely badgered about, is defined by Webster as "a person who regards his own faith and views in matters of religion as unquestionably right and any belief or opinion differing from them as unreasonable or wicked."

When the story of the religious controversy at Baldwin-Wallace College broke in the papers THE WITNESS thought it would be interesting to get a student's point of view. Miss Jelliffe, whose report will be found on page three this week, is a communicant of a parish served by one of our editors and is a sophomore there. It is printed as she wrote it, without editing on our part. What Roman Catholicism is like in Spain, South America, and other places where they dominate has been set forth repeatedly in books and magazine articles. That similar bigotry is gaining a foothold in the United States seems apparent from recent stories from New Mexico, North Dakota and now Ohio.

Archbishop John T. McNicholas of Cincinnati, the most recent of the hierarchy to roundly condem the pronouncement, characterizes it as "a document bound to foster religious antagonism and to damage the civic friendship among men of different religious faiths, which is an important part of the American ideal and life."

It is our considered judgment that a situation like the one at Baldwin-Wallace is ample justification for the formation of American United for the Separation of Church and State. For if Roman Catholic authorities can act that way at a college where they are, in a very real sense, the guests of a Protestant Church, one may well imagine what would happen if they succeeded in dominating the public school system.

The Un-Read Document

WE ALSO call your attention to the story on page five. In these days of discussion of the Marshall Plan, with Congressman Walter Judd and Mr. William Bullitt urging the granting of sixty million dollars or more to the regime of Chiang Kai-Shek, we know there will be many readers who will follow the suggestion of Mr. Chang Liao by asking their representatives in Congress to oppose any further aid to the Kuomintang. The document, direct from Hong Kong and dated December 19, 1947, requires no comment from us.

Christian Doctrine of Man

by Stephen F. Bayne

The Bishop of Olympia

NOBODY expects the Lambeth Conference to sit down to a theoretical discussion of the Christian doctrine of man. What is more likely to occur is that thoughtful men will try to analyze what is happening to man in this world, and what the Church must do and teach to maintain the Christian idea of manhood and to maintain its relevance to these times.

Any such analysis must take account of at least three great teachings and three pressing dangers.

The first teaching is the reality of human freedom, the assurance that the fight is real and that man's choices, day by day, are real and important. There are persuasive voices in our world telling us that these classic certainties are not so. More than one youngster has gone through school and college to emerge confused and uncertain, wondering whether the choice of decency and truth, courage and fidelity is a real choice after all. Perhaps it is simply dictated by his glands, or the accidents of his infancy, or the patterns of his society. Perhaps man's whole long struggle has been a search after an illusion, the fight unreal, the choices simply reflections of his own need for stature in a ridiculous world. For many a man the nerve of courage has been cut in just this way. His freedom is shrinking, his choices have dwindled to prejudices-in-action. To such men, the Christian faith, the free man on the Cross, the choice of the Cross, the life of duty and responsibility is nothing more than a mockery.

What shall the Church do and teach in the face of this danger? And more important still, how shall that action be maintained in relevance to our times? Simply to call the social sciences hard names is no solution; as far as they are sciences and not lodge-rituals for the insecure, they are open to Christian thought and Christian study. But we must not lose sight of what is at stake—in the issue of freedom it is man himself, single and entire, as Christ saw him, who is at stake.

The second teaching and the second danger lie in man's relationships in society. Put simply, to the Christian brotherhood, neighborliness, society, is a fact, not an aspiration or a mechanism. It is a fact and an end. We are our brother's keepers—not "could be" or "ought to be," but "are." The meaning that man has in human society—his dignity—is a given quantity, and human societies exist in the first instance not to create it but to recognize it and serve it (and indeed to perpetuate it).

When the gravity and reality of human choices is corroded away, the man-in-society ceases to be a brother and becomes a victim of society. Society itself disappears and the state steps into that ethical vacuum; man becomes increasingly a luxury which the complicated and sensitive economic machine can barely afford (indeed cannot afford in moments of crisis); and what dignity he has is reduced to his value to the state. War is the state's characteristic activity; and man may not do more than work or fight. Power, a good servant, has become a bad master. It acknowledges no choices and no end beyond its own being. It is a blind giant levelling every human dream.

Simply to take portentous note of the increasing meaninglessness of modern society is no solution. The Church must and will find ways to break through the insulation which a secular world has placed around us—(the insulation of individualism, of professionalism, of "religion," of the optional Deity)—and regain our essential function of being the meaning-creating agency in human society. As when in the ancient world society had disintegrated into slaves and masters and the Church took the slaves and had them stand up as free men in the brotherhood, so again now must we remember that God is not interested in "religion" but in the real world, and so again make room for man in the brotherhood. And so again will men find meaning in the brotherhood and the altar will regain its lost relevance to the world of the factory and the school.

THE third teaching is of man directly in relation to God. God the creator, God the father, God the judge—and man at every turn not simply the object of divine action but to an increasing degree the sharer in it. Man is not marooned on this lonely planet or in his lonely personality, to make the best of it. God breaks through the veil at every point and unceasingly, neither to mock nor manipulate, but to evoke, to awaken, to excite, to love and be loved. It is incredible—so man thinks as he looks at his brothers and at himself—that God could love these loathsome creatures. But the heart of the Christian doctrine of man is found there and nowhere short of it. Man's dignity, his meaning, his freedom, are what they are and as critical as they are because God has given man the capacity to enter into comradeship with him. What man does with his hands, in a right society, is to create, with God. What man does with his wealth, in a right society, is to receive it as a sacrament, kneeling. What man does with nature, in a right society, is to deal gently and creatively with it. What man does with his brother, in a right society, is to see him, or try to, as God sees him, not in Olympian disdain, but in brotherly love and in endless hope.

The danger here is the perennial one of forgetting God, or imagining him as an absentee landlord. Our Church sometimes seems especially given to this—there is less sense of the supernatural with us than is safe, and more sense of maintaining a proper social acquaintance. Perhaps it is the measured prose of the Prayer Book, perhaps it is the terrific burden of gentility we carry—but our churches often seem to us a refuge from the world instead of a garrison, and our social idealism and action more often stems from a luncheon club than a communion rail.

The presence of God, his love for men, and man's fantastic faith that he is made in God's image and can understand him and work with him —more than that, our dim apprehension that manhood is not something we are born into but is something we achieve by our costly choices in comradeship with God—that manhood is the last secret reserved for those who fight their way up to the throne only to find that God has been with them all the way—those are the flames that warm and lighten man's way in this world. That faith is in deadly peril, from the world and from our own failure to understand it and live by it. It is not an abstraction; it is the guide by which men come to be men and live in peace together. How shockingly irrelevant it often seems!

That irrelevance, I take it, is Lambeth's central problem. That, and the reaffirmation of our freedom, and of our meaning, and of our partnership with God, in terms that will bind us of this communion together.

Travels of a Gargoyle

by Thomas V. Barrett

Secretary of College Work of the National Council

RECENTLY I stopped at St. Ursula's in the Bushes. Father Thaddeus Chancel Bell met me at the bus station. Father Bell had a lovely voice, and in his all black ensemble looked like an unlighted candle in a wrought-iron holder.

"So glad you're here, Father," he beamed, ushering me into a Ford sedan the way a Roumanian deacon leads an archbishop into the sanctuary. "Too bad you couldn't get here for mass this morning. We've been emphasizing the daily eucharist. I think you'll like our little church. We try to do things in the real Anglican tradition. You won't find any Romanism here."

"I didn't really expect to," I said.

"Of course, you could have said mass yourself at the children's altar," he went on.

"Would there have been any children there?"

"Oh no, not on Tuesday."

"I would have been all by myself?" I asked, "Couldn't I have come to your mass?"

"Of course," he said, frowning slightly, "only one does like one's own altar, doesn't one? I could have had an acolyte for you."

"Something there is that doesn't love a wall—that wants it down." I quoted quietly and offered him a cigarette, so we could both burn some incense.

"I gave them up for Lent," he said. "I don't know what your churchmanship is, Father, but I think we must get back to good, sound Catholic practice, and doctrine. We've had too much liberalism in our Church. Have you read Father Cloister's little pamphlet on "The Midnight Mass and Social Reconstruction"? Nothing spiky but an excellent explanation of the Catholic view of authority, sacramentalism and the post-war world. We must teach our people about the Church. They're absolutely illiterate about Catholic doctrine."

I hadn't slept much in my upper berth and was startled to hear myself say a little petulantly, "How are they on Christian doctrine?" Father Bell looked perplexed and began talking again while I remonstrated with myself. After all I had come to learn, not to criticize. Here I was with the pulse of the Church pulsing not four inches away from me. I determined to pay attention or I might miss a couple of vital beats.

"I've instituted a daily eucharist, high mass every Sunday and have been quite successful with the children in having them make their confessions regularly. Some of my people don't like it, of course, but they know nothing about religion and after all, it's the job of the priest to teach them.

We've had so much individualism our people don't have the first idea of obedience to the teachings of the Church."

"Of course," I pointed out, a little disturbed by the rapidity of Father Bell's pulse, "don't you think there is such a thing as an unjust invasion of the individual's soul? A man has some rights."

Father Bell smiled with god-like patience, but a flicker of fear passed across his eyes.

"You sound a little Protestant I'm afraid. The Church knows what is good for people."

"Are there any other churches in town of our denomination?" I asked to change the subject.

"Grace Church, downtown. It's rather a heretical place, I'm afraid. Individualism runs rampant. Father Charity has no sense of the Church. A neck-tie parson. He has afternoon communions, and I'm told accepts divorcees and non-comformists at the altar rail. He's quite active in community things, I believe. But of course, it's a show-place. They just go to be entertained. He's absolutely fuzzy on his doctrine of the Incarnation. I'm afraid he's not very sound."

"What about other denominations?" I asked.

"Oh, Father Romanoff is an excellent man. Thoroughly intelligent. We have a Baptist fellow near us. Impossibly dull; and liberal—dangerously so!" Father Bell frowned with anxiety.

We reached his church and after we had admired his vestments which were of many colors, and I had learned how his altar boys were taught to maneuver at an eight o'clock low mass and a solemn high mass at eleven, I felt I was really getting a dandy stack of information about the Church at work. At low mass the boys form a sort of single wing back, and at high mass they use the T formation; as near as I could picture it. It was quite complicated, but obviously a good thing on the local level.

We had dinner and I attempted to engage Father Bell in a discussion as to whether we could achieve world peace without relinquishing national sovereignty. He wasn't too keen to discuss it, evidently. He said the Church ought to be the Church and teach the things that mattered. I asked him if he wasn't getting more and more impressed with the rise of racial hatreds, and what did he think about the communist influence in America, and if he didn't think the Church, like modern business, was getting to be quite a "Huckster." He parried those questions neatly by asking me if I approved of intinction; what did I think of St. Bonaventura's theory of the reserved sacrament, and was Phillips Brooks sound on apostolic succession. We reached something of an impasse on the lowest level—and I got back on the bus.

I decided I had been cooped up too long as a bureaucrat to understand Father Bell's grass-root orientation. That's what comes of being forced to make plans on the policy making level. You get so you can hardly discern the pulse of the Church Militant.

I opened my Bible again in order to see if I could regain a proper perspective. "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith . . . ye blind guides which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. . . ." I seemed to have struck the wrong passage again, so I put away my Bible and looked out of the window, reflecting on the relation of the manuple to world government. . . . (The second of a series of four articles)

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Lutheran Liturgy

WE EPISCOPALIANS are prone to be so vociferous about our continuity with Catholic tradition in our Prayer Book liturgy, that we often overlook the large debt which we owe to Lutheranism, a reformed branch of Christ's Church equally continuous, in its liturgical traditions, with Western Catholicism. The standard histories and commentaries of our liturgy have not overlooked this indebtedness. Hardly an office of the Prayer Book, from the shape of our Calendar to the formularies of the Burial of the Dead, has escaped the influence of Lutheran rites. Yet we tend to minimize this element in our heritage.

Luther and his disciples anticipated the English Reformers in all their liturgical revisions of the old Latin services. Archbishop Cranmer was thoroughly conversant with their pioneering work. One of the Lutheran Church Orders which strongly influenced him was that of Brandenburg-Nuremberg, published in 1533. This Order was in large part the work of Andreas Osiander, in whose home Cranmer had been entertained the year previous to the Order's publication, and whose niece Cranmer married. The Brandenburg-Nuremberg Church Order was the chief source used in the famous Consultation issued a decade later by the reforming Archbishop Hermann of Cologne. From Hermann's Order Cranmer was to draw many a suggestion for the first Book of Common Prayer.

who do not have access to large libraries well-stocked with liturgical tomes have been handicapped by the paucity of authoritative works giving the history and rationale of the Lutheran liturgical tradition. In 1938 the Rev. F. R. Webber published his Studies in the Liturgy (Ashby Printing Co., Erie, Pa.), a commentary on the Lutheran Communion Service full of historical learning, but designed chiefly as a practical, non-technical guide for pastors and choirmasters. Just this past autumn, however, there has appeared a remarkable, comprehensive work, The Lutheran Liturgy, by the Rev. Dr. Luther D. Reed, published by the Muhlenberg Press, Philadelphia ($7.50). It is no exaggeration to say that Dr. Reed's book is a "must" for all persons interested in liturgics. It is to the Common Service Book of the United Lutheran Church what "Parsons and Jones" is to the American Book of Common Prayer. For over thirty years Dr. Reed has been Professor of Liturgics and Church Art in the Lutheran Theological Seminary, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia. His book is the fruit of a lifetime of study and research and of service upon commissions of worship both denominational and ecumenical. There is no one in the entire Lutheran communion today who has made a greater contribution to the liturgical revival of our time.

There is not a chapter of this book which will not be of interest to Episcopalians; for Dr. Reed has given us not merely a historical and exegetical introduction to the American Lutheran liturgy, but a general handbook to the whole history and philosophy of Christian worship. He has given a thorough discussion both of the influence of Lutheran rites upon the formulation of the Book of Common Prayer, and a fair assessment of the reciprocal influence of the Prayer Book upon the compilation of the Common Service Book. Not least among his valuable contributions is the commentary upon the propers of the Liturgical Year, where comparative tables and discussions are given of the Roman, Anglican and Lutheran collects, epistles and gospels.

Space allows only one quotation—Dr. Reed's judicious comparison of the ethos of Lutheran and Anglican liturgies: "Lutheran liturgical reform was clear-cut and definite where matters of doctrine were concerned; the language of the Prayer Book is frequently capable of various interpretations. The Church Orders contained lengthy doctrinal discussions; the Prayer Book is definitely a service book and nothing else . . . Lutheran unity has always been sought in the sphere of faith rather than in matters of order or externals. The Prayer Book was a more complete and practical liturgy than that in any of the Church Orders . . . Thus, paradoxically, the Lutherans who emphasized faith produced a series of Church Orders, and the Anglicans who emphasized order produced a great Prayer Book. The Lutheran Orders were administered in a spirit of evangelical freedom, while the use of the Prayer Book was enforced by governmental authority" (pp. 129-30).

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE SORRY state of our world certainly will be brought home to even the most calloused by the assassination of Gandhi. He was not only one of the very great men of our time but of all time, truly a saint. It has been nearly two years now since my wife has cried, but as we were busily at work in THE WITNESS office catching up on the bundle orders for this number, a newsboy on the corner shouted out the news and the tears came.

It was in 1931 in London that we had the great privilege of hearing him address about fifty members of the Fellowship of Reconciliation. He was there for conferences on India with British officials and was making no public appearances. But he had agreed to meet with these kindred souls to tell them why he believed his country should be free. It was an occasion nobody could forget — the tiny man, sitting cross-legged on a table, wrapped in his full white sheet. He looked old even then though of course he was not. His arms and legs were like pipestems. He was toothless, except for one upper and one lower which did not meet.

But once he began to speak his presence filled the small hall so that there could have been no person there who was not aware of being in the presence of a man possessed of God. His audience were people who stood for peace and freedom. But even so there were those who differed sharply with him — Englishmen who, whatever their abstract theories about the rights of others, nevertheless contended that it was England's God-given duty to rule over colonial peoples. But Gandhi with his tremedous store of facts, his logic, and above all his faith, convinced even these die-hards of the correctness of his position. "There are no differences between the peoples of India that will not be settled in short order, once the British remove themselves."

The British did remove themselves. And so Gandhi is dead. Proving, some will say that he was wrong. Yet it is my belief that his martyrdom will rather prove to be that great single event which will bring to his beloved India that peace and unity for which he worked, fasted and prayed.

Bishop Arne Fjellbu of Norway Tells His Experiences

Was Encouraged to Conduct Church Services By Red Army Commander at His Liberation

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—Bishop Arne Fjellbu of the diocese of Trondheim, Norway, a high ranking Lutheran, was the guest of honor at St. Bartholomew's here on January 27. He described how he was hiding from German Gestapo agents in Finnmark, northern-most province of Norway, at the time the area was liberated by the Red Army in January, 1945. When Bishop Fjellbu asked permission to conduct religious services for Norwegian troops, he quoted the Russian commander as saying: "I am glad to have you with us, since your work in the resistance movement is well known. You can feel free to use our premises for your religious services."

Bishop Fjellbu reported that Russian troops attended his services regularly. "While they did not understand Norwegian, they appeared attentive and reverent," he said. "Of course, I daresay, good politics prompted them to behave so well. Yes, I felt strange preaching sermons with a picture of Stalin behind me. But since I was using a Russian hall, there wasn't much I could do about it."

The Bishop, who played an active part in the resistance movement and lost his post as a result, said he was dismissed as dean of the Trondheim Cathedral on orders from Vidkum Quisling in February, 1942. He was arrested several times, but finally escaped to Sweden by air, he said.

His fate at the hands of the Quisling government, the Bishop said, was similar to that of the 700 clergymen in Norway, 150 of whom were sent to concentration camps. "Only 30 clergymen collaborated with the Nazis," he said. "They are now either serving prison terms or have been banished from their pulpits."

The Bishop stated that church-going has increased in Norway over pre-war levels because "our churches were the only place people could hear the truth. All sorts of people attended."

While the Bishop showed no bitterness concerning war-time experiences, he expressed concern "over the possibility of losing the values we fought for in the world conflict. When the war came and Christians in Norway had a common enemy in the Nazis, all differences were forgotten. Even the Roman Catholic Church showed its sympathy in our fight. We had a high degree of unity in Norway during those years."

He warned, however, that "those values for which we fought together during the war era are still in the greatest d a n g e r . Disillusionment and hopelessness paralyze mankind. The world today is in deadly peril through lack of confidence."

Asked how this principle might be applied to attitudes of Americans and Russians toward one another, he said: "Statesmen today do not trust each other and such distrust is one of the greatest war-making factors of our time."

Bishop Fjellbu expressed the view that Churches could lead the way in promoting peace "by demonstrating the practical values of cooperation on a world-wide basis." He said it was important for Western churchmen to keep contact with Eastern Orthodox churchmen, and "it is of great value that we as churchmen maintain contact with R u s s i a n churchmen."

While admitting the Russian Orthodox Church had not yet accepted the invitation to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches this summer at Amsterdam, Bishop Fjellbu said it was "of utmost important to continue negotiations with the Russian Orthdox churches."

Back Poteat

Rochester, N. Y. (RNS):—Two hundred Protestant ministers of this area are backing Dean Edwin M. Poteat of Rochester-Colgate Seminary, who was denounced recently by Roman Catholic priests for heading the Americans United for Separation of Church and State. The only negative vote was that of the Rev. Arthur R. Cowdery of the Episcopal Church who stated that he was "in whole-hearted support of the principle which the organization defends but I cannot agree with all of the statements in the manifesto."

A Unique Service

New York:—A unique service of international interest was held recently in St. Paul's Chapel of Columbia University. The occasion was a memorial service held at the request of a group of Indian students for one of their colleagues who lost his life accidentally. These students asked that they might have part of the ceremony according to Moslem tradition, to which faith the deceased student belonged, and also that the chaplain conduct the rest of the service with Christian prayers. Accordingly, the Rev. Shunji F. Nishi, acting chaplain of the university, led a small procession of Indian friends into the chancel and opened the service with sentences and prayer. This was followed by chanting from the Koran in Arabic, and appropriate remarks on the life of the dead student by two of his colleagues. At their request, Prof. Clarence Linton of Teachers College spoke in connection with his work as educational adviser to foreign students, and Chaplain Nishi closed the service with more prayers. The religions represented in the congregation were Moslem, Hindu, Christian and Zoroastrian.

This service pointed up very sharply the peculiar functions which a college or university chapel is called upon to perform. The particularities and identities of each religious tradition were maintained with no conscious attempt to be ironic or to water down the service, and yet at the same time there was a basic feeling of religious unity, which, in the words of one of the speakers, is "brought sharply home to us at the time of death."

Visits South America

New York:—The Rev. Frank L. Titus, assistant secretary of the overseas department of the National Council, is making an inspection tour of several missionary districts in Latin America. He is in Mexico from February 7 to 12; from there to the Panama Canal Zone, ending his trip in Cuba.

Speaks at Valley Forge

Bethel, Conn.:—The Rev. J. Jack Sharkey, rector of St. Thomas' Church here, delivered the address at Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge, Pa. on February 1st.

It was Connecticut Sunday at the chapel and Mr. Sharkey spoke at the invitation of Governor McConaughy of Connecticut. Mr. Sharkey was a former chaplain in the navy and was decorated for outstanding service.

Visits the South

Laurel, Miss.:—Ellen Gammack, personnel secretary of the National Auxiliary, was the speaker at the annual meeting of the women of the diocese of Mississippi, meeting here January 28-30. She is also to speak to a group of girls at the University of Kentucky before returning to New York.

Clergy Conference

Charleston, S. C.:—Bishop Carruthers led a conference on evangelism here on January 20th, attended by 33 clergy of the diocese of South Carolina. The plans of the Presiding Bishop were discussed and the clergy voted unanimously to follow them throughout the diocese, opening with a corporate communion in all parishes the first Sunday in Lent.

Bishop's Son Dies

Phoenix, Ariz.:—Arthur B. Kinsolving 3rd, eighteen year old son of Bishop Kinsolving of Arizona, died on January 22 following an accidental fall. He was attending a young people's party at a resort near here when the accident occurred.

"Putch," as the young man was called, was active at Trinity Cathedral, especially in the young people's fellowship. He also served as a layreader and an acolyte. Affable and possessed of an understanding nature, his presence was always welcomed and his death in the flush of a happy youth is a great loss to all who knew him.

Speaks in Houston

Houston, Texas:—The Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York, was the speaker at the annual dinner of Christ Church here. He spoke on the challenge and opportunity of the downtown church.

Clergy Conference

Ishpeming, Mich.:—The clergy of the diocese of Northern Michigan held a pre-Lent clergy conference here January 20-22, led by Dean William C. Craig of the cathedral at Victoria, Canada. His lectures were based on the primitive Christian experience, the personal contact of people with the living Christ, and the application of this experience as it is shown in the New Testament.

Bishop Page led discussions on the marriage canon and on the fund for world relief. All the clergy of the diocese except one attended.

Another Tucker

Ashville, N. C.:—The third son of the late Bishop Beverley D. Tucker will become a bishop if the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, rector of Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., accepts his election to be the bishop of the diocese of Western North Carolina. Henry St. George Tucker, former Presiding Bishop, is the retired bishop of Virginia, and Beverley D. Tucker is the present bishop of Ohio. Bland Tucker was elected on January 14th at a special convention held here at Trinity Church, on the fourth ballot when he received 13 clerical and 56 lay votes to 12 clerical votes and 15 lay votes going to the Rev. John S. Higgins of Minneapolis.

Foodless Day

Northfield, Minn.: — Students of Carleton College here made January 21 "foodless day" by a vote of the student body. No meals were served in the college's three dining rooms, the money saved being used to send dehydrated food overseas.

Bishop Gilbert Honored

New York:—Bishop Gilbert was the guest of honor, along with Suffragan Bishop Horace W. B. Donegan, at the annual dinner of the Church Club of New York, held February 2. The speakers were Bishop Emrich of Michigan and President Gordon Keith Chalmers of Kenyon College who spoke on religious education in schools and colleges. Judge Robert McC. Marsh, president of the club, was toastmaster.

affirm "God's will for man in every area of life and in terms of the whole truth of God in Christ," James R. Mutchmor, secretary of the board of evangelism and social service of the United Church of Canada, declared here. Speaking at a conference on the Church and economic life sponsored by the Council of Churches of Buffalo and Erie County, Mutchmor denounced "the heresy of freedom that is an effort to make the whole truth out of its 'freedom.'

This heresy is strongly supported by the United States, he said. "It is called the American way of life. In economic terms this includes the anti-Communist oath for labor leaders. It provides common ground for capitalists and Roman Catholics. Many Protestants are tenting tonight on the same old camp ground! But it is a ground of error. It is a heresy—not the full gospel."

Asserting that the heresy is "based upon the teaching that man, as a child of God, must be free," Mutchmor said: "He (man) must enjoy essential freedoms—worship, speech, press and assembly. But free enterprise is not an essential freedom. It is simply one way and a very efficient way of doing business. It has doubled wealth during each generation of the capitalistic period."

The speaker said Communism, although "not a pagan philosophy" is a "Christian heresy," adding: "It asserts that since we are members one of another our society or state should be a collective one. Objectors are to be liquidated. This, says the Communist, is the whole truth; individual freedom has no place in it. This heresy is strongly supported by Russia. It is just as powerfully opposed by the United States. It is attractive and dynamic but it is not the full gospel truth. We should not be witnesses to the making of a part into the whole—for such an effort is error."

Dr. Mutchmor said that "economic democracy includes collective bargaining by industry and organized labor" and he defended labor's right to strike "if deemed necessary." Christians, in facing economic issues, "must not be limited or fenced in by nationalistic concepts, but rather must weigh evidence, whether it be from Socialist Britain, Communist Russia, free-enterprising America or co-operative Denmark," he declared.

The conference, attended by 123 delegates from 14 Protestant denominations, adopted a report stating that foreign aid "should not be made contingent upon trade concessions or political agreements" but "should be given from altruistic motives and for the purpose of bringing world peace. The Church must insist that all persons in need be fed without question and that aid he channeled through non-political agencies."

Leaders in labor, business, industry, religion and education drew up the report which urged the Church "to unite on a peace program; build public opinion behind peace and make its voice heard in world conferences. The conference emphasized that "the Church must stand firm in its position where the welfare of individuals is concerned" and should advise legislatures of the Christian attitude on important issues. The Church should advocate "the principle of a fair wage" but "to put it into operation it must be carefully defined," the report said, adding: "All persons should earn what they receive. The Church should condemn greed."

The report explained that "the Church stands squarely in favor of safe and sanitary working conditions." Co-operation between labor and management was urged. It was the consensus of delegates that "a business is justified in expecting a fair return on capital invested."

Churches can promote racial understanding in neighborhoods housing both Negroes and white persons by "bringing children of both races together in the church school," the report stated.

The Rev. Cameron Hall, secretary of the department of Church and economic life of the Federal Council of Churches, urged that the report be used as a basis for study and discussion in local churches.

Take Religious Census

Columbus, O. (RNS):—The greatest cooperative church effort ever planned for this city found an army of 12,000 volunteer workers making a complete religious census of the metropolitan area and two nearby communities, Worthington and Westerville. With members of all denominations represented among the census takers, more than 100,000 families in the city and two suburban communities were contacted within four hours.

Purpose of the check was to locate families which have not established connection with any church and to bring them into local fellowship. The information obtained was listed on cards which were returned to the Council of Churches office. There the data will be sorted and tabulated and later distributed to various denominations.

Czech Churches

New York (RNS):—Churches in Czechoslovakia have "all possible freedom" in their religious activities, according to Joseph Krenek of Prague, president of the Church of the Czech Brethren. Speaking at the annual meeting of the Friends of the World Council of Churches here, Krenek said the work of the churches is being conducted without interference by government authorities, and that much progress is being made in the organization of new congregations.

He said 60 per cent of Czechoslovakia's 12 million inhabitants are Roman Catholics, while Protestant churches represent about 15 per cent of the population. The Lutheran Church has 450,000 members, the Czech Brethren 400,000, Congregationalists 7,000, Baptists 4 to 5,000, and Methodists 7 to 8,000.

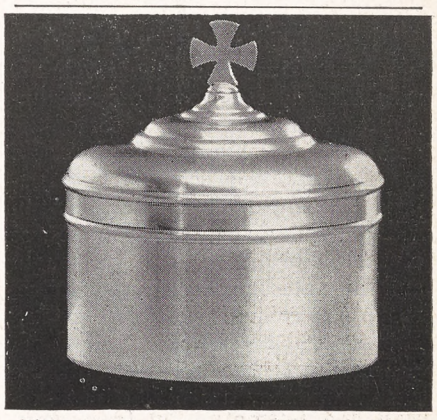
"All these churches are co-operating in a very brotherly way," he added. He said about 40,000 Polish Lutherans now in Czechoslovakia are planning to affiliate with the Church of the Czech Brethren.

Asserting that Russia "is in the family of God, but is a prodigal nation, Krenek said the Christian Church "has a great duty to help this nation see the glory of the Gospel."

The visiting churchman stressed his belief that the Church is faced with "a great missionary opportunity." Most needed, he said, is widespread distribution of the Scriptures to achieve acceptance of Christianity.

"If it is not the Bible that will open the doors between the East and the West," he declared, "no political or economic program will do it."

Miss Hulda Zarnack, president of the Y.W.C.A. in Germany, expressed gratitude for aid received from America in the publication of a magazine which now has a circulation of 30,000. She pleaded for help in obtaining additional paper so circulation may be increased. She said "young people in Germany long for a Christian magazine" and that it would provide "an opportunity for widespread re-education of youth."



Council Asks Amnesty

New York:—The human relations commission of the Protestant Council of this city, headed by Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, has called upon President Truman to grant a "plenary" amnesty to conscientious objectors, rather than the "individual pardons" which were given at Christmas. In a letter to the President, the Rev. Robert W. Searle, executive secretary of the commission, delared the pardoning of 1,523 out of 15,805 individuals "was not an amnesty."

"Any clearcut and defensible principles for selection of so few from so many were difficult to discover in the statement which accompanied the pardons," Searle wrote.

"A recognition of conscientiousness seems to have been denied unless the individual was formally enrolled in a traditional ecclesiastical body," the letter continued. "It seems to have been assumed that moral and religious conviction cannot be developed apart from institutional association.

"We continue to be concerned for these reasons and for the reason that most of those remaining unpardoned are little people without social or political prominence and without the support of powerful organizations."

As precedents for the proposed Presidential action, Searle pointed to the "recent pardon granted to a prominent and popular political figure who was serving sentence for a serious violation of federal laws" and to the "prompt recognition of the justice of amnesty" following World War I.

On Expedition

Boston:—Bradford Washburn, director of the Museum of Science here, and son of the Rev. Henry B. Washburn, former dean of the Episcopal Theological School, is on his way to the mountains of Western China, which includes some of the last unexplored and uncharted areas of the earth. Mr. Washburn is famous as a mountaineer and scientist, particularly for his work in connection with Mt. McKinley, Alaska. The source of the Yellow River will be sought and the little known mountain range, reputed to contain peaks that top Mt. Everest, will be explored.

There are five scientists in the party, and they are flying in a specially equipped C-87, piloted by William P. Odom, who holds the round-the-world flying record.

Urge Church Action

Wilkes-Barre (RNS): — Participants in a roundtable discussion here agreed that the Church should be concerned with the economic life of the American people, and that it should insist Christian principles be applied to social relationships. The seminar was part of a conference on the church and economic life sponsored by the Wyoming Valley Council of Churches in cooperation with the department of the Church and economic life, Federal Council of Churches.

On the question of the Church's concern with wages, prices and profits, the group agreed it was un-Christian to charge prices which result in unreasonable profits.

Taking part in the sessions were Frank W. Pierce, director of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey; Mark A. Dawber, executive secretary, Home Missions Council; Cameron P. Hall, executive secretary, department of the Church and economic life; and Tilford E. Dudley of Washington, D. C., assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Pierce, director of personnel relations for Standard Oil, suggested the Church create a spirit of interest in the "human side" of personnel relations. He urged management to be alive to its responsibilities towards employees, to be interested in job security, and satisfactory working conditions, and to recognize that workers want to be considered part of the "team" of production.

Dudley urged the Church to take a strong position against the accumulation of large profits which he branded as "un-Christian, selfish and greedy and unsound economically."

If the Church had performed its mission in building the type of motives which would have eliminated greed and established a strong brotherhood of men, unions would not have become necessary, he said.

He called upon the Church to take a position in labor disputes, study the facts and present them to church members.

Hall said the Church has a responsibility to keep its people informed on legislative matters and make certain its stand conforms to Christian principles. He stated that the Church, as a property owner and investor, should set an example in the economic field, and that it should not take a "holier-than-thou" attitude when the question of church taxation comes up.

No Merger Planned

Manila:—Bishop Binsted felt obliged to tell the press here last week that the inter-communion between the Philippine Independent Church and the Episcopal Church "in no sense would constitute a merger." Those familiar with the action taken at the fall meeting of the House of Bishops are aware of this fact, but there has been so much controversy in the Philippines between two factions of the Independent Church that the situation had to be clarified.

Bishop Binsted said further that "it is our hope that eventually the Philippine Church will be an indeopposition to the present American government policy in China will be very helpful. It will at least save a few lives, but most likely it will save many lives. We, therefore, urge you to call for the immediate stop of all aids and military help to the KMT regime, and the imperialistic policy of your government. We also urge your helps both in spirit and materials.

"We admire the spirit of western missionaries who, during the war years, remained with us and suffered with us. Now that the American government is responsible for promoting a most unnecessary, destructive, futile and dangerous war in China, we trust that they and their people back home will do their best to influence their government in such a way that the gospel of peace and love which they preach can be realized in China.

"Beloved friends! The tide of democracy is already running high in China. There can be no turning back. The people of China are fully awakened and are determined to take their fate in their own hands. The reactionary forces, with any amount of outside help, have their days already numbered. Their downfall is inevitable. A democratic, coalition government of the people, for the people and by the people cannot be avoided and needs not to be avoided. It will be for the good of all—the welfare of the Chinese people as well as the peace of the world. A new age is coming—a new age of democracy and freedom for all, including religious forces. We do not need to be afraid of it. We should welcome it and work hard so as to have it realized the sooner. Trusting that you will do your part and give us encouragement.

"With fraternal greetings."

Beecher lectures on preaching at Yale, a readable and reasonable approach to theology from the personalist point of view. Beginning with a simplified discussion of the epistemological problem of modern man, he proceeds to apply his conclusions to the fact of "God's Action in Christ" and to the attributes of holiness and love as found in God. The discussion is kept on the semi-philosophic level which is of use to the preacher who would interpret theology to sophisticated audiences.

As a reaction against the total state with all the evil produced by it, there is a natural development in some quarters of a personalism which is in danger of developing into individualism and atomism in our thinking. The argument of this book holds up because of the presuppositions in the chapter on the "Way of Knowledge," which establishes the person as all important. More important than this particular angle of thought is the underlying conviction which holds unfailingly to the fact of "God's saving entry into the world" and the importance of revelation.

Pillars of Faith* by Nels F. S. Ferre, Harpers, $1.50.

The five short chapters are given as a statement of faith in the simplest terms by the professor of Christian theology at the Andover Newton Theological School. In a direct, almost curt manner the primary doctrines of the Christian faith are outlined against the needs and problems of the uncertain, insecure and fearful man postulated by the author. The picture of the average clerk, bricklayer, bank executive, secretary and housewife seems to be a bit overdrawn. Are not the average Christians more like the people of Grand Republic, contented, self satisfied, oversure of themselves? The worried, uncertain people are more liable to be the few leaders who see the problems and the dangers of them. This picture of average man may be true of those who in Europe have had to cut through the sham of life because they face stark reality, but in America men need to recognize their guilt and be shown the insecurity of their present paths. This attitude cannot be taken for granted.

The development of the pillars of our faith historically shows the healthy dependence of current theology upon Christ as central, and the growing importance of the Church in Protestant thought. The path, beginning with Christ who brings light from the other realm to shed upon the dark problems of this, moves to the Holy Spirit, producing a new kind of life, via the Church, the leaven of the world, despite its many lumps, and the Bible, bedrock of faith, to issue in the Christian life, in which God is "the power of our lives, the speech of our voice, and the language of our hearts." A faith based upon these five pillars should indeed be strong in the Lord.

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. SHUNJI F. NISHI
Acting Chaplain of Columbia University

The discussion of "Church and State" in Talking It Over in your issue of January 22, moves me to make a few comments which I hope are not entirely irrelevant. We ought rightly to be concerned with the tactics and the ultimate aims of the "long range program for education" of the Roman Church. The solution of the problem set forth, however, would hardly be as facile as suggested in the war cry of "Separation of Church and State," particularly with the popular interpretation of this principle which is at great variance with the traditional concept. Any such radical separation would leave the Church in a position incapable of saying anything in the realm of politics, "secular" education, or any area of life which falls within the confines of life in the state. It would mean that education would be completely amoral (a situation few of us would condone) since morality is intimately rooted in theology and in the life of the Church in God. If education is made moral, but that moral content cut off from the religious life in the Church which nourishes it, it will in time die.

The whole matter of the separation of Church and state needs serious thought—not in terms of separation, but in terms of the essential relationship between them. No matter how far or radically this separation may be extended, there is still a relationship between the separated members, and this is the "hub" of the problem.

The matter of content of educational policy, etc., would seem more properly to lie in the area of religious liberty and authority as it is related to the state. The principle of religious freedom itself implies authority and is meaningless apart from it. It is the proper balance of the two which appears to have been disturbed in the case of the public schools in New Mexico, financial aid by the state to parochial schools, etc. We need to devote some thought to what this balance is.

In a letter one cannot elaborate, and hence leaves himself open to misunderstandings. But be that as it may, I feel quite strongly that there must be devoted and serious thought given to this entire matter. It is not capable of an easy solution, nor does taking up "principles" without giving them thought, and using them as war cries and slogans necessarily show the way out. Serious thought is no less an obligation and responsibility than devoted and concerned action.

MR. LEON N. NETTLETON
Layman of Harrison, N. Y.

Thank you for including "Travels of a Gargoyle," first travel, in your January 22 issue. It is most entertaining as well as pointed, but I fear that the reading of it, proving that he has the time, is prime facie evidence to any rector that it cannot be aimed at him. I look forward to reading of the next travels.

For us laymen, additional thanks for such columns as your Talking It Over, in the same issue, interpreting for us such controversial and local issues as the State and Schools developments. These too often are so card-stacked in the press that, without eye-opening plain words such as yours, I think we are often prone to lean over backwards in broad-minded brotherliness and say to ourselves, "I guess maybe 'they' have a point in what they say."

MISS D. F. BURNS
Churchwoman of Alton, Illinois

I have noticed in the January 22nd issue of THE WITNESS the article on the Seminary Offerings of last year and I was interested as to the amounts received by the different Seminaries.

I have for some time been interested to know how the amounts are arrived at for I can see how some seminaries could be over-apportioned as to their size and needs while some could be actually undernourished. I notice, for instance, Berkeley received $5,255 and Cambridge $9,316, while Nashotah got $15,312 and Seabury Western $10,531. It would seem to me that all theological funds should go to a board, that board to have had budgets from the different seminaries and the amounts apportioned as to their needs.

I think it would be interesting to know how these funds are disbursed; that is, whether a board, with the various budgets before it, works out these amounts to the seminaries or whether these were funds made payable direct to these seminaries by the different congregations or rather sent to the school of the rector's choice. I am not writing this in a spirit of criticism but rather for my own information.

ANSWER: The resolution of General Convention provides that the offering of each parish shall go to the Seminary of the rector's choice. Generally speaking it means that the offering goes to the seminary of which he is an alumnus.

MISS J. M. ASHFIELD
Churchwoman of New York

The editors are to be congratulated for the excellent list making up the 1947 Honor Roll. It would be hard to do better. That not a single woman is in the list is undoubtedly the fault of readers since we were urged to made nominations. But I do think it a pity that none were listed when there are so many women who have given great service to the Church. I notice that men always dominate your honor rolls, but this is the first time that at least two or three women have not been listed. The editorial board, perhaps, needs more feminine influence.

Freedom of Worship and Belief Found in Yugoslavia

Secretary of the World Council So Reports Following an Extended Tour of the Country

Geneva (RNS):—The Rev. Robert Tobias, American staff member of the reconstruction department of the World Council of Churches, who recently completed a tour of Yugoslavia, declared here that "every evidence" pointed to the fact that Yugoslav churches and people "enjoy freedom of worship and belief."

Declaring that Yugoslav churches "are full and the people indicate a great interest in religious affairs," Mr. Tobias said the government's attitude toward Church life, as expressed by Gen. Ljubodrag Djuric, first secretary to Marshal Tito and head of the newly-formed commission on religious affairs, "is one of interested concern."

"Not only does the government welcome outside aid through the World Council of Churches as an expression of the good will and fellowship of Christians in other lands," Mr. Tobias said, "but also offered to provide facilities through their commission on religious affairs to insure the safe arrival of goods at their destination."

Mr. Tobias said the greatest needs of Yugoslav Churches were food, clothing and books, rehabilitation of priests and aid to Orthodox and Protestant theological seminaries and students. "One can well understand the difficulty of supplying Churches with adequate leadership," he declared. "Five hundred and eighty priests were killed during the war. No students were trained for the priesthood during the five years of fighting, and there exists now only one pre-seminary training school for Church leaders."

Despite the difficulties which the Churches face, which stem from severe war losses and the discontinuance of financial support following the separation of Church and state in Yugoslavia, Mr. Tobias said "there is evidence of new life coming from the roots up." To illustrate this, he said that a group of village priests, who lived in destroyed areas and who were engaged in rebuilding the total community, recently contacted priests in other villages. As a result, a conference of 300 priests gathered in Belgrade. The conference discussed what work priests should perform and what their responsibility would be in the life of their communities. Subsequently, Mr. Tobias continued, the Holy Synod issued a pastoral letter calling on priests to cooperate fully with the people in the program for creation of a new Yugoslavia, beginning in their own villages.

Referring to his meeting with Gen. Djuric of the commission on religious affairs, Mr. Tobias said the General emphasized that the first responsibility of priests was in the realm of spiritual affairs. However, the Yugoslav official said the government hoped that Church leaders would play an increasingly prominent role in the education of illiterates, in cultural activities, in organizing co-operatives, and in humanitarian works. Mr. Tobias quoted Gen. Djuric as saying that "the Churches have a very significant role and ought to perform it side by side with the government. Both the people and the government are concerned that Churches shall continue to exist and properly perform their responsibilities."

Mr. Tobias declared that the efforts of the Yugoslav people to rebuild their nation were "remarkable." "Even the small villages are almost completely restored," he said. "The people are working with a noble determination, a new sense of confidence, vision, and purpose which is most admirable."

DEAN BLOY ELECTED IN LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles:—Dean F. Eric Bloy of St. Paul's Cathedral here was elected Bishop of the diocese of Los Angeles last week at a special convention. He has been the dean since 1937, coming to this city from La Jolla where he was rector of St. James. Previous to that he was the rector of All Saints, Reisterstown, Maryland. He has been prominent in the affairs of the diocese, serving as president of the standing committee, a member of the executive committee of the province of the Pacific and a deputy to the 1943 and 1946 General Conventions. He also is a member of the board of directors of the local Federation of Churches and served as its president in 1946.

PLEA FOR EVANGELISM BY BISHOP EMRICH

New York:—"Observers of our Church life have not generally seen our inner life boiling over into good works and missionary zeal," Bishop Emrich of Michigan told the members of the Church club of New York at the annual dinner on February 2nd. "We are marked by an aristocratic reserve, a 'good taste' which prevents us from doing many of the things which we should do as Christians."

He declared that the Church is "inevitably missionary" and that the Presiding Bishop's call "to aggressive action is merely calling us to an understanding of the Church, its divine function, and asking us to be true stones in the building which our Lord founded. He who does not understand this does not understand the Church and the true concept of the Church carrying on the divine plan." He expressed the opinion that "this sad, decaying world is going to be revived by a revived Church or not at all." He said that the "brilliance around us is accompanied by a deep inner sickness, and the brilliance is like the glory of the autumn woods, so close to death because the inner life is failing. We wait for the depression we do not have the vitality to avoid, and the war we do not have the wisdom to avert."

Bishop Emrich said that the Church must include all, and strongly condemned a "rich church," a "white church" and a "social church." But he said there is a spirit striving in the Church, expressing itself "in a desire for new adventure; a new missionary zeal; an ardor which desires to put a new soul into this sick culture" and he ended with a plea for "aggressive action, with no more 'aristocratic reserve' but a fire and a passion that is needed in our day."

BISHOP LANE BARTON HITS UMT

Klamath Falls, Ore.: — Bishop Lane Barton at the convocation of the district of Eastern Oregon, meeting here February 3rd, spoke vigorously against universal military training. He spoke of "the moral breakdown, the sexual immorality and the frightening incidence of venereal disease" which he said is so characteristic of military life and declared that "our young men should not be exposed to it."

Bishop Barton also pledged the cooperation of the district in the campaign of evangelism and outlined the procedure for the district.

MAKING NEW WORLD OUR TASK

Columbia, S. C.:—Bishop Middleton Barnwell of Georgia, preaching at the consecration of the Rev. Louis C. Melcher to be the bishop coadjutor of Southern Brazil, said that it is the task of Christians "to make the world over into God's kingdom on earth." The service was held at Trinity Church here on February 5th.

"When we raise our voice against any movement in this changing scene which threatens the peace of the status quo in which we have high place and from which we profit, loud will be the cries of acclaim from those who profit most by things as they are," said Bishop Barnwell. "When we find the world loving us then we are in danger, for it is human and natural to love the easiest way, which leads at last to the thirty pieces of silver and the potter's field. Perhaps we will not go this far. We will not conform to the world for we see that it is evil. But we will not oppose it for it is too strong for us. The third alternative is to remain in the world, with its ever-present and entrenched evils, and try to make the world over into God's kingdom on earth."

CONVOCATION OF SAN JOAQUIN

Stockton, Cal.:—Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon and the Very Rev. J. M. Malloch were the speakers at a mass meeting which opened the convocation of the district of San Joaquin, meeting here. Bishop Walters in his address stated that "all Protestants, Catholics, Jews and other religious groups added together constitute only 28% of the population of California. 72% have no known connection with any church whatever, in contrast with the national average of 50%. To all intents and purposes these multitudes must be discovered, invited, enlisted, even re-converted to the Church of Jesus Christ."

WOMEN ON VESTRIES DEFEATED

Detroit:—A proposal from the convention of women of the diocese of Michigan to permit not more than two women at a time to serve on vestries, received more than a majority of votes of the diocesan convention. However, it failed to carry by the two-thirds necessary to change the canon.

Following the election of Bishop Emrich as coadjutor, the convention acted favorably on a request from Bishop Creighton for the election of a suffragan bishop. A special convention will be held for this purpose.

A resolution stating that "all participation in war as it is now developed, even for a good cause, is contrary to God's will" was defeated. A resolution supporting the Stratton bill which would authorize the admission to the U. S. of 100,000 displaced persons each year for four years was adopted unanimously.

CONVENTION OF WEST TEXAS

Harlingen, Texas:—Bishop Everett Jones reported to the council of the diocese of West Texas, meeting here, that confirmations in 1947 reached 766 thus bringing the diocese into third place in the nation in rate of growth. A mission for Latin Americans has been established in San Antonio, and ground has been broken for a new church for Negroes in the diocese.

We like to run summer pictures at this time of the year to help cheer things a bit: this is Layman George L. Ballachey and the Rev. Frank Blackwelder both of Buffalo, and the Rev. Matthew M. Warren of Atlanta talking things over at the Finger Lakes Conference in New York State last summer.

INDUSTRIAL CHAPLAIN APPOINTED

Darien, Ga.:—The Rev. Archer Torrey, vicar of St. Andrew's here, has been granted a year's leave from the church to do rural and industrial chaplaincy work in the diocese of Georgia. He is to conduct missions and study classes among workers, receiving part of his support from the People's Institute of Applied Religion which is directed by the Rev. Claude Williams of Birmingham, Ala.

Texas Votes the Continuation Of Racial Segregation

Efforts Made to Amend Report of Commission on Race Relations Are Defeated by Council

Austin, Texas:—The council of the diocese of Texas adopted a report of a bi-racial commission which was authorized a year ago to make recommendations on race relations. In effect the delegates voted to continue non-segregation for business and worship purposes and segregation for social functions. At diocesan conventions, however, the policy of segregation at social functions will be determined by the host parish after consultation with the bishops and the committee on arrangements for the convention.

The adopted report declares that "the council desires to affirm its loyalty to the Christian Ideal, as recorded in Holy Scripture and the Book of Common Prayer, and it is the earnest prayer of the council that this Ideal may be completely realized and established." However, those responsible for the report recognize "certain present limitations preventing an immediate consummation of the Christian Ideal in bi-racial matters; that the Church of God, as the Body of Christ, is the vehicle through which the Holy Spirit works with human beings, and that there are among our people, both Negro and White, beliefs, prejudices, and inequalities which, in determining a plan by which both races may work effectively within the Church, must be given consideration if any such plan shall be of benefit to both races. The council also recognizes that enduring progress can be made only when the minds and hearts of people, through spiritual education and growth, welcome such advances."

With this for the "whereas" the convention went on to vote the "therefore be it resolved," whereby segregation at diocesan social functions is continued.

The report also had strong things to say about "youth being the life and strength of our future Church" and strongly recommended "that every department and agency of the diocese expend the utmost energy in giving all youth, regardless of race, the very best encouragement, advice, direction and help possible. We deplore advantages given to any group, section, class or division of our diocesan youth if denied any other." The committee then went on to recommend "for the best interest of our diocesan life, until the council may deem otherwise, that camping and any other youth activities, except strictly business or worship sessions, be conducted separately by races."

Mr. Charles A. Snow, a Negro delegate from Houston, offered a substitute motion which asked that Negroes and Whites participate equally in all diocesan functions. It was defeated.

The Rev. Arthur S. Knapp, rector of Trinity, Houston, then offered an amendment declaring that the council does not in any sense "equate the commission's report with the will of God and further laments as a Christian body its stand on the matter." This also was defeated.

Bishop Hines, coadjutor of Texas, is praised for his work on behalf of Church schools

Pro and con arguments, expressing various points of view, came to an end within half an hour when Malcolm McCorquodale of Houston urged an immediate vote, declaring that no amount of talk would change a vote and "the more talk the more hard feelings."

A constitutional amendment which has been under study for a year, permitting women to serve as delegates to the Council in limited numbers, was lost when the clergy voted 30 to 22 for it, thus short of the necessary two-thirds vote. A ballot of lay delegates was not taken since concurrence of both houses was needed. A later attempt to reconsider the vote was lost. The Council approved by a vote of 77 to 71, but later defeated by a margin of four votes, after reconsideration had been ordered, an amendment to the canons which would permit women to serve in limited numbers on vestries.

Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, attending the council, stirred an audience of 1,500 persons with a challenge for realistic Christianity. Reminding that a patronizing Christianity can never come to grips with the problems of the pagan world, he questioned whether we are willing "to live sacrificially, courageously and with great, heroic determination."

Also addressing joint sessions of the council and the house of church women were Bishop Everett Jones of West Texas and the Rev. John DeF. Pettus of Santa Barbara, Cal., both of whom stressed the great opportunities which await the Church in world responsibility. "We American Christians," Mr. Pettus declared, "have the resources to make a mark on the world for hundreds of years."

Budgets were adopted which were nearly twice those of two years ago. Bishop Quin also reported that $910,000 of the second million necessary for the construction of the Church hospital in Houston had been raised and that construction will begin shortly. The council also authorized Bishop Quin to name Christ Church, Houston, as the cathedral of the diocese, and commended Bishop Hines, coadjutor, for his efforts to establish diocesan schools, with negotiations toward this end now being carried on with the War Assets Administration.

NIEMOELLER BLASTS OUR PROGRAM

Frankfurt, Germany: — Pastor Martin Niemoeller issued a 700 word pastoral letter blasting at the American policy in Germany, which was read in all the Lutheran Churches affiliated with the Hessen-Nassau synod which he heads. He said that the American de-nazification program was "sowing new sees of hatred" and he ordered all Lutheran ministers not to participate in it and told all members not to serve as witnesses. He declared that the American law in Germany had become an instrument of revenge and that the attempt to purge the country of the Nazis had collapsed.

Last winter the Rev. Diedrich Meyer-Kluegel, German pastor who at that time was lecturing to German prisoners of war in England under the auspices of the Control Office, charged that Niemoeller had for a number of years been a Nazi himself. This charge was later substantiated by the Aufbau, German language paper of New York, through the publication of evidence presented at one of the Nurenberg trials.

FIND CHURCHES INDIFFERENT

Cambridge, Mass. (RNS):—Cambridge churches, ethnic groups, veterans and other organizations are not much interested in improving racial relations, according to a report of the Cambridge civic unity committee. The committee was appointed by City Manager John B. Atkinson and is composed of 52 members. The report stated that of 36 churches asked if they were interested in a program to improve racial relations only seven sent in replies.

"One of the seven expressed a complete lack of interest in the subject," the committee reported. Of all the veterans' organizations polled only the American Veterans' Committee replied, Manager Atkinson's group said. The report pointed out that all the other veterans' organizations maintain segregated chapters or exclude Negroes entirely.

"Student and youth organizations have taken the most active part in initiating programs to diminish prejudices through the promotion of fellowship," the committee reported.

CONVENTION OF FLORIDA

Jacksonville, Fla.:—Dean Robert Gibson of the seminary of the University of the South was a headliner at the convention of the diocese of Florida meeting here, and told a large dinner meeting that Church colleges and schools are making a "last ditch stand against the disease of secularism."

Dean Gibson deplored as "strange and frightening" the fact that although we have in America the finest educational advantages to be found anywhere, "we are less stable and more confused than any other people in the world." Our education lacks a purpose and is breaking down and crumbling at the roots for lack of money and personnel, he said.

"People are hungry for religion, and unless we return to the roots of our civilization we will wither and die," he concluded.

DELAWARE HAS A SCHOOL

Wilmington:—The department of Christian education of Delaware sponsored a school which met Tuesday evenings in January at the cathedral here, with 230 registered. Giving courses were Dean Robert Hatch, the Rev. John E. Large, Auxiliary President Mrs. W. H. Hannah, Mrs. George Trowbridge of Philadelphia, Miss Avis Harvey of the national Auxiliary, and Mrs. Alfred M. Chapman, also of the diocesan Auxiliary. Leading discussions on laymen's work were Lt. Gov. E. N. Carvel, Dean J. Fenton Daugherty of the University of Delaware, and Mr. Manfred Keller and Mr. Raymond P. Generaux, local businessmen. The Rev. Paul A. Kellogg of Dover gave a course on youth work and Mrs. Leonora R. Harris, Miss Ruth Gill and Miss Florence Miller taught the courses on Church school methods.

CHURCH HOME HAS ANNIVERSARY

Baltimore:—The Church Home and Hospital concluded the celebration of its 90th anniversary on February 9 when 38 student nurses were graduated. The address was by the Rev. Philip J. Jensen, president of the board of trustees. The Church Home and Hospital is unique in that it combines a home for aged women with the facilities of a hospital.

VATICAN WEALTH REVEALED

Rome (RNS):—Repubblica, a small daily newspaper of this city, has charged that a portion of the Vatican's income is derived from gambling houses in Monte Carlo, Italy and Argentina; mines in Bolivia; petroleum trusts in the U. S.; electrical industries in Canada, Argentina and Switzerland and the cotton industry of Brazil. It adds that revenues are also received from "politically influencial" banks in the U. S., Peru, Chile, Ecuador, Argentina and Spain.

"If Pope Pius continues his anti-Communist crusade," the paper states, "he can always count on the riches of the capitalistic world bourgeoisie to further his aims."

Osservatore Romano, Vatican paper, describes the Repubblica as a paper with "communistic tendencies" and says the story is based upon "unfounded contortions of the truth."

The diocese of Michigan recently purchased a new conference and retreat center located near Brighton, adjacent to a 5000 acre state forest reserve. There is a small lake on the property as well as the main house, pictured here, and a number of farm buildings

OVERPAYMENTS ARE MADE

New York:—Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin of the National Council reported on January 27th that every diocese paid at least 100% of its expectation in 1947, and that overpayments totalled $36,157.

Collective Abstinence

IN THE collect for the first Sunday in Lent we pray that we may "use such abstinence, that, our flesh being subdued to the spirit, we may ever obey thy godly motions in righteousness and true holiness." Historically, this prayer grew out of the time of Henry VIII, but it is suited to these days in America. There are great numbers of the world's people that are forced to abstinence, but it is not an abstinence that leads to spirituality. There are parents abstaining from drinking milk so that their children may have it. Such abstinence is not the spirit subduing the flesh. It is the flesh warring against the flesh, and evokes only bitterness and despair. In days of exorbitant prices, most persons are using much of their time trying to figure out how income is going to meet expenses. In a complex economic structure like ours, it is not possible to prescribe simply that if men would just "seek the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, all these things would be added" to them. But, in a profound sense, this is the only prescription that can be written. A more equitable distribution of goods necessary for the physical life of man would permit man to devote more of himself to the distinctly spiritual. The Kingdom of God and his righteousness is when all men "hunger no more." On even a national scale this should be our ideal. To bring about the condition where fleshly needs are met, our nation can pray, and try to live more nearly as we pray, for an abstinence that will subdue the preeminence of the flesh. The revival of rationing and price control is a part of this. There might be some "unrighteous" black markets, but a large percentage of the population would benefit, as before, from a more equal distribution of necessities. High prices might also be started on a downward trend with the reinstitution of an excess profits tax. This collect is a petition for collective abstinence from selfish materialism, profit-taking, so that collectively we may turn ourselves to building the righteous and holy society.

"QUOTES"

IN A southern city there was a busy president of a railroad. Each week he wrote to six of his friends and associates and invited them to attend church and sit in his pew with him on the following Sunday. More than this, he went around and picked them up in his car. His pew was filled with men every Sunday and what is more, that parish was conspicuous for the preponderant number of men active in the church. That is evangelism.

—Bishop Lane W. Barton
Address to the convocation of Eastern Oregon, 1948

Attack on World Peace

THE EXECUTION of the decision of the United Nations concerning the Jewish state in Palestine is now facing the gravest danger. After a two thousand year dream the urgent and tragic problem of Jewish homelessness finally received a solution of international agreement when the UN voted for the partition of Palestine into Jewish and Arab states. During the lengthy deliberations at Lake Success and since, insidious propaganda has been peddled around by all sorts of agents, Arab, British, American. It is being done adroitly in order to thrust Palestine back into the dangerous arena of power politics and oil diplomacy.

The Arab League was quick to grasp this cue from London and Washington and has already launched violent attacks upon the Jewish population. In all the Arab states there is public arming and recruiting of volunteers for the battle of Palestine. The Arab League has embarked upon a campaign of assassination, arson and looting to destroy the very nucleus of the Jewish state.

The obscurity and negativism of the British attitude is giving the Arabs a serious chance of accomplishing their nefarious design in Palestine. There is no doubt any more that the British intent is to weaken the Haganah by disarming them and jailing many of their members at a time when they are desperately needed and by reducing Jewish authority generally to the point where Arab forces can sweep Jews out of the field in short order and thus confront the UN with a fait accompli.

It seems preposterous that a British army of some 80,000 men cannot keep law and order and that amidst extensive British military might 1,500 Jews are held as hostages in the old city of Jerusalem. The truth is that the armed Arabs are swarming in from across the borders unmolested by British authorities while the Jewish defense forces are being disarmed. Whereas vast supplies of war material is supplied to the Arab states by Britain, our government has put an embargo on munitions for Palestine. This unfair deal has rendered the position of the Jews trully desperate. Reports reaching this country from Palestine indicate that arms snatched away from Haganah members are later turning up in Arab hands. An even more ghastly picture is that of the Jews in neighboring Arab countries being held as hostages where they are subjected to a new fury of Hitlerian anti-Semitism. The pious resolutions recently passed at Lake Success condemning and outlawing Genocide obviously did not apply to the Jews. Symptomatic of this situation of double standards of morality is the refusal of our state department to publish the documents which confirm the Nazi role of the Mufti and those who are carrying out his plans. Why is the state department protecting this evil man? In Palestine proper, despite the internal terror exercised by the Nazi Mufti and his adherents, there are responsible Arabs who dare advocate a peaceful modus vivendi with the Jews on the basis of partition. On the day following the UN decision Arab notables of neighboring villages called to congratulate Mayor Oved Ben Ami of Natanyah on the prospect of a Jewish state. Arab members of a League to Combat Anti-Semitism warned Arabs not to be misled by provocateurs. Many other examples of good will could be cited.

When the crucial hour of decision regarding partition arrived, our government rose to the challenge and supported it. We now stand committed to its implementation. The Arab states, members of the UN who themselves are bound by the general obligation on all UN members to settle international disputes by peaceful means and to refrain from the use of force, are now bent on thwarting by violence the UN decision. Will our government accede to such a situation? Is not our decision to back partition an integral part of our foreign policy? If it is, it should be advanced aggressively, not only for our own prestige but for the very survival of the UN. If the Arabs can by the sword alter the settlement which the UN decreed by agreement, the future of the UN is indeed being disastrously undermined. The Arabs by their violence, the British by their acquiescence, our state department by its inaction, are in effect attacking the only hope that exists for world peace.

Surely the United States which voted to create a Jewish state must feel honor bound to see that the citizens of that state-in-the-making, are properly protected against the assaults of those who are defying the will of the majority of the UN assembly. Is there any human justification in delivering the Jews of the Near East to a new era of torture and torment? Will the terrible swarms of persecutions that have hung over the Jews since the early days of Christianity ever cease? Will the world ever permit the Jews to settle down to a peaceful and creative existence?

The answer to these questions lies in the extent to which Christian society in its relations with the Jews is capable of being guided through deeds by the lofty Christian principles which it professes in words. In these days of great world anxiety we do well to recall that the prophets and Christ and his apostles were Jews and that the cornerstone of the universal Church was taken from the house of Israel.

What is Marriage?

ROMAN canon law defines marriage in this way: "The primary purpose of marriage is the procreation and education of children; the secondary end, mutual support and the relief of concupiscence."

To my mind, this is a calumny.

For a young man to propose marriage to a young woman on the basis of having children would be most unnatural. The relationship is first between man and woman, and this relationship is always the most important. It is true that deliberately childless marriages are much more apt to be unhappy than those where children are hoped for; but the bland definition of the canon would seem to place on a lower level those unions where children were wanted but not given. This assumption is just not so.

The "secondary purpose" has one fine phrase, — "mutual support" — which is full of noble meaning. But the other words are proof of a rather low view both of people and of marriage.

Institutions like free love and organized vice exist for the relief of concupiscence. Marriage exists for its sublimation into something much greater, something spiritual.

To say that marriage exists for the orderly satisfaction of a lower urge is like saying that men and women are so beastly most of them had better get married. The idea seems to be to make the best of a bad situation, not to get the most out of a good one. It is the same thing as saying that the orange pit is more important than the orange or the orange blossom. By making marriage a low thing in its essence, it denies to the celibate the right to say that he has given up a good thing for something which, for him, is better. It thus lowers the ideal view both of celibacy and of wedlock. It implies that the sacrament of marriage is first of all merely a license for the creation of something physical, and it equates the creation of a spiritual relationship ("mutual support") with the avoidance of vice.

It sounds more like the reasoning of grumpy bachelors than that of consecrated celibates.

How much better is the definition of the purpose of marriage implied in the blessing at the end of the Prayer Book rite: that people may so live together in this life, that in the world to come they may have life everlasting.

Social Responsibility Of the Church

By JOHN MOORE WALKER
The Bishop of Atlanta

WE MUST get our people to do some systematic thinking on the question of the Church's social responsibility. Either it has; or it has not. Significant consequences to Christian teaching and practice follow upon which of the two positions is held. Hence the importance of a process of sound thinking. There is ground for suspicion, however, that numbers of us are not in the habit of disciplined thinking on the elements of our religion in general and on the social implications of the Gospel in particular. For example, what bearing has the doctrine of the Incarnation upon social concepts? Again, wherein has the giving of a cup of cold water in Christ's name an eternal value? Also, what connection is there between the ethical ideals of the Kingdom of God on earth and the article in the Creed "He descended into hell"?

Queries such as these should stimulate a program of real thinking on the part of the honest Christian because not only of the answers to the questions themselves but also of the fresh approach to familiar notions which these answers suggest. One such familiar notion is evangelism. Not so long ago during a conference on the subject, it was brought out that methods towards evangelism which had met with a degree of success in the past no longer are effective among the unchurched. The usual vocabulary, even the usual concepts, have lost point and appeal. A new common denominator between the preacher and the hearer is required. The social connotation of the Christian creed would go far towards meeting this need.

Another familiar notion is personal religion. Though spiritual longing is a part of our very nature and St. Augustine's well known statement is everlastingly valid ("Thou hast made us for thyself, O God, and our souls are restless till they find their rest in thee"), yet personal religion is not infrequently misconceived. From time to time we are dismayed at the spectacle of a devout and loyal churchman who is impervious to influences which would better the industrial or political order, who with dullness of perception argues that "The Church should confine itself to preaching the Gospel." Good folks these often are, according to their lights, and are worthy of something better than condescension from the more enlightened. The task before us is to win their allegiance to the Church's social responsibility as an integral part of the process of a soul's salvation.

A third familiar notion is the conscience. For a surprising number of people the conscience is restricted in scope to the prescriptions of a class code. "I have always contended," said Newman, "that obedience even to an erring conscience was the way to gain light." And so it is: a man must make good use of the conscience that is his at any given stage of his development. It is none the less true that conscience stands in need of education. Adam Smith spoke of conscience as the judgment which we pronounce on our own conduct by putting ourselves in the place of a by-stander. But had we not better inquire who and of what character is that "by-stander"? Yes, by all means; and let him be nobler than I, let him be a prophet or seer (one of those moral pioneers not too mindful of prudential considerations and with perhaps "a touch of recklessness") then my moral insight will become deeper; my sense of righteousness will expand to include greater areas of living; my conscience, in a word, will grow.

Thus the Church to be alive to its social responsibility must be a thinking Church in that (to paraphrase language of Thomas Carlyle) a thinking Church is the greatest enemy of the prince of darkness.

Central Staff College and Pan-Anglican Congress

by Walter H. Gray

The Bishop Coadjutor of Connecticut

ONE OF the important subjects on the published agenda of the Lambeth Conference is "Anglican Churches: Questions of Organization." While there has been no topics announced for consideration under this heading, there are two which have been frequently discussed here and abroad: 1. The formation of a Central College for post-ordination study. 2. The holding of another Pan-Anglican Congress.

Interest in both of these matters stems out of the need which is widely recognized, for greater unity of interest and action between the several branches of the Anglican Communion. The Lambeth Conference itself is an expression of the recognition of this need. The Conference was called originally to bring the bishops of the various national Churches into closer fellowship and to provide an opportunity for the discussion of mutual problems. However, from the very beginning, there has been wide difference of opinion regarding the proper extent of joint action, and few things have been done together. As a result, the ties between the various national churches of the Anglican Communion have been tenuous, and there has been insufficient interest in our common heritage.

In his report in 1944 to the meeting of the advisory council on ecclesiastical relations, our late Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. James deWolfe Perry, said:

> "An overwhelming majority of professed Episcopalians in the United States are left in ignorance of ecclesiastical relation to the Church beyond their borders, and in an attitude of avowed indifference . . . More serious than the provincial attitude of mind shown by branches of our communion is the disregard of spiritual ties and mutual obligations which should bind them. Such apathy has broken down under the stress of war and the conscious need of each for the other's assistance. Recent visits of English ecclesiastics have done much to overcome persistent isolationism. Such guests from abroad, however, have been regarded by most Americans only as delightful embassadors of good will. More than impulsive acts of generosity and official visits will be needed to bring about a real sense of spiritual unity."

It is necessary only to ask the average Episcopalian, "What is the Anglican Communion?", to learn the accuracy of Bishop Perry's statement. Even many of our clergy, apparently, do not understand the exact nature of our relationship with our sister Churches.

Not long ago a professor of Philosophy, who is also a devoted Churchman, wrote, "Our communion is suffering from its disconnectedness. Our regionalism has been a marvelous heritage, it is true. Without it, I doubt if the Anglican Communion would have survived the American Revolution in this country. It made possible the normal growth of the Scottish Episcopal Church in the past century and has had advantages in the mission field; but we do need a supplement to it. Every branch of the Anglican Communion needs every other branch in this day. In the past mutual aid was furnished; but it was not organized. Now it needs organization. This is an imperative necessity. I think that such a supplementation is entirely in the spirit of our history, for it is a phase of the growth of our communion from a national to an international Church. I believe it corresponds to Hooker's concept of catholicity."

One of the means which would decrease disconnectedness within the Anglican Communion is a "central staff college." This is the designation (derived from military usage) frequently suggested for a college of post-graduate study, with the student body selected from ordained clergymen of all the various national Churches of the Anglican Communion. Such a college normally would have a relatively small group in attendance; but they would be drawn from the ablest and most promising among the men of the Church. They would come for, say, one year of guided study under the leadership of outstanding scholars picked likewise from the entire Anglican Communion. They would concern themselves with any topic connected with the life and work of the Church. The college would be a place for research into the history of the past and informed opinion regarding the problems of the day, to which leaders of the church might turn for counsel.

Certainly the college would provide an opportunity for clergymen from all parts of the world to become better acquainted with each other and with the problems and opportunities of the various sections of our communion.

The cost of such a college, divided among the various national Churches, would be a minor factor. Certain funds are already available which could under specified conditions provide a considerable part of the expense of maintenance, and the facilities of certain existing educational institutions may be offered to such a college if it is authorized.

The need for a college of this sort has been frequently expressed. Over ten years ago a strong plea for one was made by the Rev. Canon W. F. France, formerly overseas secretary of the Society for the Propogation of the Gospel, and now connected with St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, England.

In 1941 at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Bishop Ronald Owen Hall of Hong Kong, said:

> "The proposal for a central staff college for the Episcopal Church throughout the world is, I believe, of first-class importance for the future of our international Church order. To gather together from every corner of the world, for the study of the Church in its relation to Faith and Order, and to Life and Work, every year or every two years, from fifty to a hundred mature priests of the Church . . . would begin to build in the world-wide Episcopal Church a real co-operation in thought and study, in knowledge and in friendship, among those who are to share responsibility for its leadership in the future. . . . This surely would be a matrix from which a new Church order would grow. This would mean a sharpening of the great sword we have inherited and a training of the hand to use it faithfully as a living sword of the Spirit of God."

At the 1946 General Convention the House of Bishops expressed its interest in the idea of a central college of post-ordination study for the Anglican Communion. A committee of that House was appointed to enter into consultation with the Archbishop of Canterbury in advance of the next meeting of the Lambeth Conference regarding ways and means of forming such a college.

A SECOND joint activity which has been proposed, is the continuance of meetings of the Pan-Anglican Congress. The first Congress met in England in 1908. To it came clerical and lay delegates from every diocese of the Anglican Communion, as well as bishops, to discuss their common interests and problems. The delegates were so impressed with the value of the gathering that it was planned to hold a second Congress in 1918; but World War I prevented this, and in the years immediately thereafter interest in this general field was centered in the Faith and Order and Life and Work movements, culminating in the formation of the provisional committee for the World Council of Churches.

However, it is increasingly being recognized that the World Council will not be able to provide solutions for many of the problems within the Anglican Communion, and a suggestion for the revival of the Pan-Anglican Congress was made by the writer in THE WITNESS of April 20, 1944. The general idea was endorsed by the 1945 meeting of the House of Bishops, which, further, authorized the appointment of a committee with power to extend through the Presiding Bishop an invitation to the Archbishop of Canterbury to invite such a Congress to meet in this country. The committee was appointed; but final action must, of course, await consideration of the whole subject by the Lambeth Conference.

The Pan-Anglican Congress could extend participation in joint leadership of and planning for the life and work of the world-wide Episcopal Church to authorized clergy and lay delegates, rather than to have such responsibility dependent solely upon the bishops meeting in the Lambeth Conference. The Congress, however, would not seek to replace, but rather to supplement the Lambeth Conference, and might meet midway between the decennial gatherings of the bishops.

Since there are approximately 325 dioceses of the Anglican Communion, having one clerical and one lay representative from each diocese would only make a body comparable in size to the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies of our General Convention, while the House of Bishops of the Congress would, of course, simply be similar in size to the Lambeth Conference.

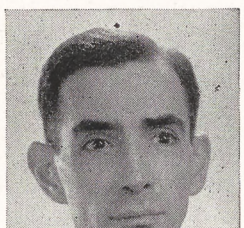
Initially, at least, the Congress would probably attempt to enact no legislation for the Anglican Communion; but certainly it could serve the following purposes:

1. Provide an opportunity for the discussion of problems common within all the member churches.
2. Make plans for missionary strategy and activity on the world scene.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

3. Provide for the maintenance of such joint educational activities as the Central College for post-ordination study.

3. Strengthen the world-wide Episcopal Church by supplying a better "common front" with which to face hostile forces.



5. Provide an opportunity to strengthen the spirit of fellowship within our communion, seeking to rediscover in its completeness the genius of our common heritage.

The Living Liturgy

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Nocuous Innocence

THIS YEAR Holy Innocents Day came on Sunday, so that many more worshippers were exposed to the propers of this feast (or is it a fast?) than is usually the case. I wonder how many of them shared with me a strong distaste for some of the phrases read in these propers. My misgivings are not due to a strong suspicion of the historicity of the gospel narrative. Whether the murder of the little innocents actually happened or not, the story is symbolic of what happens all too often in our tragic world. We need to be reminded of the awful sin of worldly politics preventing as it does the spread of God's peace and goodwill to men. The world of power politics in which we live now in the year of grace 1948 is a heart-breaking exhibition of the Gospel for Holy Innocents.

Neither am I concerned with the technical nicety of whether the Holy Innocents can be strictly taken as Christian martyrs, and therefore deserving of a place in a Christian Calendar of remembrance. What bothers me particularly is the terrible doctrine expressed in the Collect—setting a pall upon the entire service—that God is glorified in the horrible death of innocent infants. The gospel story gives no warrant for any such theological deduction. The phrase: 'to glorify thee by their deaths' is probably lifted from John 21:19; but in that passage our Lord refers to the conscious, deliberate acceptance of martyrdom by St. Peter in witness to his faith in Him. There can be no justification for transferring this theme of glorification of God to the devilish murder by an unscrupulous prince of hundreds of unsuspecting babes.

Moreover the Epistle for Holy Innocents is utterly irrelevant and absurd. The 144,000 'redeemed from the earth' can by no stretch of the imagination be identified with the Holy Innocents. And the further note that this multitude are 'they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins,' is certainly tasteless in this connection, and suggests a point of view which probably not even a monk would defend.

Other anomalies occur in the Christmas cycle of feasts. There is scant reason for a festival of the Circumcision of our Lord. Our 1928 revisers attempted to soften the overmuch emphasis on circumcision by substituting the present epistle for the older lection from Rom. 4:8 ff. But they only introduced further complication. Doubtless their idea was to shift the focus of attention from the Circumcision to the Name of Jesus. But the present epistle is concerned not with the wondrous Name of Jesus, but with the confession of Jesus as Lord in His glorious, exalted state after the Ascension. There would be real gain in changing the title of this feast to The Holy Name of Jesus. In doing so we would need a new collect and epistle. On the other hand, if we care to make the Prayer Book relevant to the need of modern man, it might be more to the point to select an entirely new set of propers definitely related to New Year's themes.

Lastly, the elimination from the Feast of the Presentation of all associations with Blessed Mary's 'purification' would be a great improvement. This could be done easily by dropping the 'commonly called' subtitle of the feast and the first three verses of the Gospel. Primitive, ritual taboos connected with childbirth have no place in Christian worship. It is silly, and in some ways dangerous, to expect people to read in to the propers all sorts of fanciful typology and allegory. It is this antiquated notion of purification which has done more than anything else, I dare say, to kill the Prayer Book Office of Churching of Women. We ought to revamp that Office so as to make it a Thanksgiving for the Child, rather than for deliverance from childbirth, and bring both parents, and not just the mother, into participation in it. Then we could relate it thematically to the Presentation of our Lord as a Child in the Temple of His Father. Possibly this might help in strengthening the Christian family in a time when it is being beset by powerful foes within our culture and society.

The Churches in Mexico Plan A Federal Council

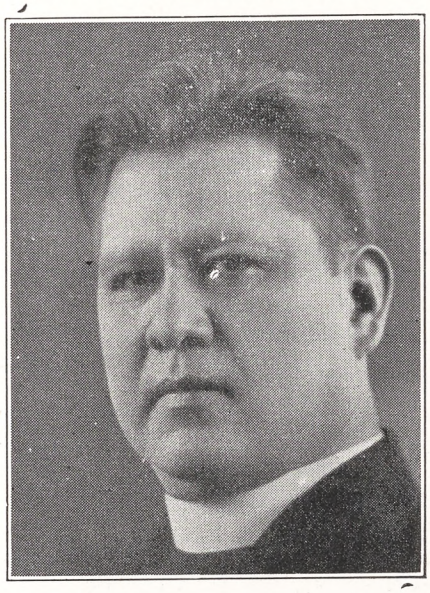
Convention of the Episcopal Church Pledges To Cooperate with Other Protestant Groups

Edited by Sara Dill

Mexico City:—The convention of the missionary district of Mexico, meeting at San Pedro Martir near here, pledged co-operation with other Protestant Churches in forming a Federal Council of Churches in this country. The Episcopal Church here has close to 4,000 baptized members and approximately 2,200 communicants. They are serviced by 22 clergy.

Reports were made on major educational institutions conducted by the Church in Mexico, including Casa Hooker, girls' school in Mexico City; the Commercial Academy at Teloloapan, state of Guerrero; and the St. Andrew Agricultural School near Guadalajar, Jalisco, which includes a theological training center. A report was also presented on the new church of San Miguel being built at Cuernavaca, Morelos.

A special medal and testimonial were presented to Srta. Quinard de Salinas, who has worked as a medical missionary in the town of Nopala, Hidalgo, for 20 years without any outside financial assistance. Last year, despite failing health, Srta. de Salinas treated 1,285 patients.



Site of the convention was the picturesque mountainside village in the shadow of the two famous snow-capped volcanoes overlooking the valley of Mexico. The village itself is predominantly Episcopalian and is noted for the roses it grows for markets in Mexico City, 23 miles away. An Episcopal parish has existed in San Pedro Martir, a purely Aztec community, for more than fifty years.

Bishop Efrain Salinas y Velasco, in charge of the district since 1934, presided at all sessions.

Rome Criticized

Columbus (RNS):—Charging that the Roman Catholic Church in this country seeks "a privileged position in the body politic," the annual Ohio Pastors' convention called on legislators and congressmen "to oppose all attempts to secure special privileges by any religious body for the support or subsidy of church schools."

The convention upheld the principle of Church-state separation and urged President Truman to recall his personal representative at the Vatican. The resolution, adopted unanimously, added that the "Roman Catholic Church maintains a theory of relation of Church and state which is incompatible" with the first amendment. It also asserted that the Catholic Church "has sought financial support for its extensive system of parochial schools from public treasuries. Because we are opposed to religious intolerance and fanaticism, and are irrevocably committed to the American principles of religious freedom," the resolution continued, "we express our good will to all religious bodies. We wish them well in their attempts to teach and practice their spiritual convictions."

At the same time, the convention urged the observance of Reformation Day "to aid in this movement to preserve American religious freedom."

End Segregation

New York (RNS):—Elimination of segregation in Church-operated institutions, especially hospitals and schools, was recommended in a report submitted to the annual meeting of the Federal Council of Churches' department of race relations here. The report proposed that the department continue its co-operation with religious, civic and national agencies in seeking "fair governmental legislation, administration and equitable civil rights for all." It also asked the further development of clinics on the Church and race, and closer co-ordination of interdenominational and denominational programs for race relations.

Another recommendation was that regional committees be appointed to handle problems concerning minorities in a specific area. In this connection, the report suggested a committee of churchmen for the southeast be named.

Reports from 11 denominations presented to the meeting indicated Churches and Church organizations are generally becoming more interracial, but that progress is slow. It was announced that Interracial Clinics have been held in 24 cities and that in some communities they have helped resolve racial tensions.

Oppose UMT

Columbus: — Universal military training was opposed by the hundreds of pastors meeting here for the annual Ohio Pastors' Convention. The Rev. George Lackland, local pastor, in presenting the resolution, charged that more money was being spent illegally by the army for propaganda purposes on military training than ever before.

Chaplains Needed

New York:—The U. S. army is looking for 400 additional chaplains. The navy is said to have similar needs. If interested write the army and navy division of the National Council.

School for Laymen

Washington:—Members of various parishes here have organized a series of formal courses in theology for laymen, as a means of partially offsetting the lack of such courses in schools and colleges. The lectures are in the library of the College of Preachers with the Rev. Albert T. Mollegen and the Rev. Clifford Stanley of the Virginia Seminary as lecturers.

Civil Rights Fight

Newark, N. J. (RNS):—While declining to take an official stand on what it termed "a local matter," the Essex County Council of Churches at its annual meeting here approved the actions of two of its members in opposing the ban of The Nation from Newark high schools. Dr. John S. Herron, superintendent of public schools in this city, recently ordered copies of The Nation off the high school shelves and banned all further issues of the magazine because of three articles by Paul Blanshard which Herron termed "virulently anti-Catholic." The ban was subsequently upheld by the board of education.

Members of the council who opposed the ban were Harold A. Crane, general secretary, and the Rev. Chester E. Hodgson, pastor of Centenary Methodist church and a member of the Newark ministerial association. Both attended the board of education meeting January 27 at which Herron's action received official support.

"We have no quarrel with anybody's religious beliefs," said Crane. "We are not anti-Catholic. But if the Catholic Church is not satisfied with our American democratic way, and wants to dictate what we can do in our public schools as well as in their parochial schools, they are dead wrong. This is not in any sense a religious battle, but an attempt to maintain democratic civil rights for all."

Laymen Organize

Savannah, Ga.:—Headed by William J. Robertson, layman of Christ Church here and the editor of a local newspaper, a concerted effort is being made to unite all the laymen in the diocese of Georgia. The first meeting of the groups so far organized will be held here March 21.

Church Lines Up

Moscow (RNS):—The Russian Orthodox Church is on the side of Eastern countries, led by the Soviet Union, "in the fight against the capitalist states," according to an article in the current issue of the Journal of the Moscow Patriarchate. The article asserted that the international situation reveals two clearly defined camps—capital and labor—and said

Visits Indians

Bluff, Utah:—Spending a night in a Navajo hogan and sharing their sparse food with his hosts was the recent experience of Bishop Clark when he visited St. Christopher's mission here. The Utah Navajo mission embraces 1,800 square miles and the Rev. Harold B. Liebler, in charge, covers it in a jeep since there are no roads and few trails. Bishop Clark was making a series of trips over the outlying country, when the jeep sank in the quicksand, and nothing could move it. Since that country is desert with no population except a few Navajo hogans, the Bishop and Liebler decided to leave the jeep with Brother Juniper who was in the party and walk for help. The walk extended ten miles over desert and mountain, with sand storm, and rain. Arriving at the hogan of Wanda Whitehorse at 8 p.m. they asked for hospitality for the night, which was gladly given. The Whitehorses are members of the mission and more well to do than most Navajoes. Both supper and breakfast consisted of watermelon, ears of corn, and coffee. That apparently is the diet of the Navajoes. The next morning borrowing a couple of Indian ponies, the Bishop and Liebler rode twenty miles back to the mission, again over mountains, ledges, precipices, and sage brush. They arrived safely, and the jeep was eventually pulled out. This is only a routine incident in the life of a missionary bishop, but since the Navajoes are in the headlines these

THE BIBLE IN THE CHURCH

By Robert M. Grant

In lucid and readable style, Dr. Grant begins his book with a study of the interpretation of the Old Testament by Jesus and St. Paul. He then continues with the viewpoints of great thinkers of the New Testament, and carries on the account through the second Christian century.

The schools of Alexandria and Antioch are next considered, followed by a discussion of the philosophy of Augustine and Jerome and then a study of the medieval church.

The Reformation, the Enlightenment, and the exegesis of today are given careful and penetrating interpretation.

STUDIES IN THE MAKING OF THE ENGLISH PROTESTANT TRADITION

By E. G. Rupp

This book deals not only with the great figures and events but also the lesser-known figures and half-forgotten writings. The author tells the story of brave believers and their beliefs, their histories and actions, their influence upon one another, and upon that climax in history, the English Reformation. $2.75

Assails Comic Book

Chicago (RNS):—Work, a monthly newspaper published here by the Catholic Labor Alliance, assailed in its January issue the anti-Communist comic-type book published recently by a Catholic organization in St. Paul, Minn., under the title "Is This Tomorrow?" In a review of the book, which purports to show what would happen to this country, its labor unions, churches and schools if Communism took over, Work declared the comic gave "the impression of hysteria, accompanied by goose pimples and shaking knees."

The Catholic labor paper criticized the comic, put out by a publishing house for Catholic teaching aids, as an "over-simplification."

"It does violence to the truth," the review said. "For this reason it is a terrible way to form a Christian mind."

Asserting that the comic was "a fantasy," the Work review added: "It would nauseate the ordinary worker. Catholic teaching would impress him as kindergarten stuff or the frantic fears of a bewildered old woman. The Communists tried to keep this publication from the mails, but were unsuccessful. We would be poorly advised to regard this failure as our victory. Actually, they would have been doing Catholics in the U. S. a favor. To pick out Communists in the flesh is surely not as easy or as safe as drawing pictures of them in a comic book," the review continued. "Certainly, the man who fights racial segregation is not by that fact a Communist; nor is the man who exploits racial tension. Nor is the man who goes out on strike. Nor is the man who raises a loud cry against repeated injustice and refuses to be quiet.

"While it is true that not all Communists are party members out of devotion to social justice, it is foolish to pretend that many of the causes adopted by Communists are not just causes, and causes where we can little afford not to raise our voices too."

Arabs Spread Violence

Jerusalem:—The tension now prevailing in Palestine has imposed no hardship on the Jerusalem and the East Mission, notwithstanding the hazards to which many of its institutions are exposed. After a negligible disruption of routine during the Arab strike, the schools settled down once more to their daily programme, and at the close of the term the usual parties were held. Mr. Sutton, the American principal of the Bishop's School in Amman, was permitted to hold classes even during the three-day period of passive protest. When feeling was at its greatest height a number of school children demonstrated in front of the Church Missionary Society Girls' School in Amman and broke eight windows.

In Jerusalem about the middle of December (names and exact dates are withheld for obvious reasons) a Jewish Christian was questioned by self-appointed Arab guardians of the peace, who, when he assured them that he was not a Jew, dragged him to one of the patriarchates and asked the priest who answered their ring to identity him. The priest did not know him, and said so. The Arabs then compelled the man to stand against a wall and shot him down. It is perhaps not surprising that, even at this short range, the bullets reached no vital spot. The wounded man regained consciousness after a few minutes and dashed down the lane in the direction of an Anglican church, where he took sanctuary, with an Arab mob hotly pursuing him. The vicar courageously talked the Arabs into departing without violence, and the man is now convalescing.

A short time after the first massacre at the Damascus Gate, the Arabs in the quarter in which the Cathedral is situated erected road barriers with a view to controlling the traffic in the quarter. One barrier was set up east of the Cathedral. Of late the street has been completely obstructed at night. The police cleared the road on Christmas Eve. Riflemen in the vicinity opened fire, and the police replied, but, so far as is known, inflicted no casualties. A bullet passed through a stained glass window in the Cathedral.

On the night of January 1 an explosion occurred in the vicinity of the Cathedral. About three hundred windows were shattered in the various buildings of the Cathedral Close and St. George's School.

Businessmen Meet

Houston, Texas:—Men engaged in the petroleum and chemical industries held a conference here, sponsored by the department of education of the diocese, of which the Rev. Gray M. Blandy is chairman. The leaders was Prof. Richard Niebuhr of Yale Divinity School who discussed the crises of our day; ethics and economic technique; politics. The seventy attending, averaging under 35 years of age, pitched in at the discussion time following each lecture with such gusto that it was hard for the chairman to shut them off after an hour of debate. There were clergy present but by request they were enjoined to silence as mere spectators.

It is planned to follow up this affair with discussion groups in parishes where the application of Christian principles to economic and political life can be thoroughly discussed.

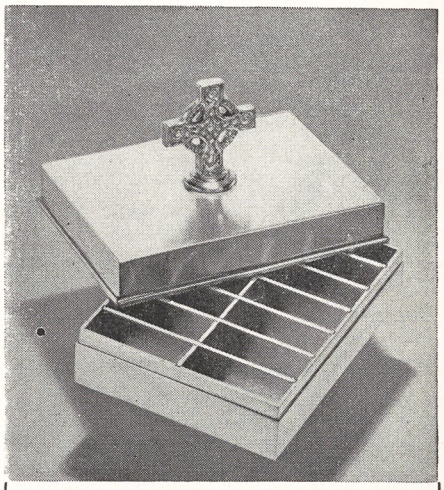
Shock Is Cured

Albany, N. Y.:—Singing in the choir of St. Thomas' Church, New York, has done things for 11-year-old Richard F. Van Wely of this city.

His mother describes it as a form of treatment for an emotional shock suffered by her son back in November, 1944. That was when Mrs. Van Wely was notified by the war department that her husband, Pfc. Richard C. Van Wely, 33, was missing in action in Germany. The family held the usual high hopes until seven months later when official confirmation of his death was received by telegram.

During the long, tense period of waiting, Mrs. Van Wely noticed that Richard was deeply affected by the thought that he might never see his father again. After he had gone to bed at night she often found him sitting in his room holding his father's picture and crying. The youngster's spirits sunk deeper when the notice of his father's death was received. The family physician was called but his efforts to rouse Richard from his doleful lethargy were plainly ineffectual.

Mrs. Van Wely waited nearly a year to see if Richard would emerge from his emotional crisis. Then she decided he needed a chance to mingle more with other boys his age and develop new interests to take his mind away from the father's death.



Her chance came when Dr. T. Frederick Candlyn, organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas', selected Richard for entrance to the school. In the fall of 1946, he packed up and started off to New York. At first he was lonesome. The 40-odd boys in the choir school were strange to him, and the two hours of voice training each day were arduous. But Richard was eager to adjust to his new surroundings, and once he became interested in the school's athletic and scholastic program, his transition was complete.

Today, Richard is reluctant to discuss his ideas about the future, but he has some very definite theories on what he wants. "I want to stay at school two more years," he says, "and then if my voice shows promise I will enter a music school for older boys. Perhaps by that time I'll know what I want to be."

World Day of Prayer

New York:—The 55 Protestant Churches of lower Manhattan will hold their annual World Day of Prayer services on February 13th, in the morning at St. George's and in the evening at the First Presbyterian Church. This annual observation is now held in about 15,000 American communities and in more than 50 countries. The first prayers each year are said in the Fiji Islands at the edge of the international date line and extend through the 24-hour period until the final prayers are said on the St. Lawrence Island in the Arctic and in the Tonga Islands.

The speaker at St. George's will be Mrs. Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati and Mateo Occena of the Philippines the speaker at the evening service.

Oppose Military Training

Albany:—The Council of Churches of New York state has reiterated its opposition to universal military training. The Council, in what it termed "support of the United Nations and condemnation of militarism," listed the following eight objections to UMT: (1) It was hastily introduced and rushed through committee without adequate hearing. (2) It does not indicate any overall military policy in keeping with modern scientific strategy. (3) It provides no exemption for divinity students and no appropriate alternative training for conscientious objectors. (4) It permits segregation, and does not prohibit discrimination on account of race or national origin.

Also (5), there is no satisfactory provision for the termination of conscripted service. (6) There are no limitations of the power of the military in dealing with non-conforming and independent trainees. (7) It has extraordinary powers over the independence of civilians who may unintentionally become involved in connection with recalcitrant trainees. (8) It provides the President of the United States a basis for the assumption of dictatorial powers without an existing state of war with a foreign power.

The resolution further charges that the use of large standing armies is now obsolete "in prospect of atomic warfare," and the practice of universal conscription by many European countries has not prevented war, and has often encouraged a resort to war.

Conscription was also condemned by a vote of 35 to 2 by the ministers of Buffalo, N. Y., who termed it a "betrayal of our historic democratic tradition" and "a possible step toward bureaucratic fascism." The resolution declared that the proposed act is "a vicious bill and indicative of the type of fascism toward which militarism is moving in the U. S."

REV. OSCAR J. F. SEITZ
Professor at Bexley Hall

You can hardly imagine what a shock it was to find my name on the WITNESS Honor Roll for 1947. While I cannot imagine who is responsible for the generous words about my work here at Bexley, I hope you may be able to convey to the proper persons my humble gratitude. Conscious as I am of the inadequacy of that work, I can only accept this undeserved recognition as a spur to worthier efforts in the fields mentioned in THE WITNESS. Whatever I may have done in this respect, I have found the paper a constant source of stimulation and help. Thus any honor really reflects back upon the editors of THE WITNESS for the contributions it has long made to the common cause. The two notable series of articles on social issues which have been the bases for some very profitable study and discussions among the students at the seminary make us look forward to the beginning of another series. The response of the men has been out of all proportion to my small efforts.

REV. EDWIN T. LEWIS
Rector Emeritus at Whittier, Cal.

Thank you for the two excellent editions featuring our theological schools. I found that your articles not only interested the laity in general but also a possible candidate or two for the schools themselves.

MR. ALLEN B. MCGOWAN
Treasurer, Diocese of New Jersey

THE WITNESS for January 29 reports under the title "Large Bequest to Churches" a legacy having been left by the late Mrs. Hamilton Fish Kean to the trustees of Church Property of the Diocese of New Jersey, and also indicate in the same report that a similar bequest was made to the Episcopal Fund of the diocese.

It is true that the trustees of Church Property of our diocese did receive a substantial bequest under this will. However, the Episcopal Fund of the diocese of New Jersey received nothing, but the Episcopal fund of the Diocese of Newark did benefit under this same will.

Upon reading your news item it would be inferred that two funds of the diocese of New Jersey benefited, whereas the actual facts are that one fund in the diocese of New Jersey and one fund in the diocese of Newark were beneficiaries.

This report has already caused some embarrassment, and I hope that you will make correction in an early future edition.

MISS RUTH HAEFNER
Churchwoman of Portland, Oregon

The Episcopal League for Social Action number (Jan. 29) is excellent. I wish especially to commend Rev. John Burgess for his article on the Negro. I long have looked for such an article. We who have labored in inter-racial groups have often been puzzled by the apparent indifference of Negroes. Some of the most sincere and capable people participate in such events but once because they see futility and cannot understand why they were given the run around by the so-called Negro leaders.

Mr. Burgess gives insight into this situation and presents the issues in such a Christian spirit that neither group can take offense and I hope many of us can go on amicably from here. However, I will say that in times of crisis in this community because of the forthright stand of a few Negro ministers, the laymen of the other churches practically forced the hand of the others who heretofore had remained aloof. A few forthright souls in any group gives courage to all. This analysis by Mr. Burgess is an answer to many queries and I hope for its wide distribution.

MRS. HERBERT A. BUSSE
Churchwoman of Lewiston, Maine

I was considerably interested in the article by the Rev. Richard R. Beasley (WITNESS, Jan. 22). I wonder if the orator-audience relation isn't rather different from that of preacher and congregation. The orator has an ever changing audience and one that he is trying to work into a lather for his own immediate purposes. The preacher on the other hand faced with the same people Sunday after Sunday is trying to instill our deepest and best truths. And, with the exception of those who attend church for the purpose of having their emotions played on, a congregation when it has heard a man often enough is apt to be more interested in the message than the effect.

And is it our aim to pack them in? I would like to quote from a letter I received some years ago, while away from home, from a clergyman of our Church: "I don't honestly think it makes very much difference if the local rector is dull. This American entertainment complex is depressing. There's a subconscious hankering for a good show to be put on even when, theoretically, we go to praise the Lord; to let go of ourselves into his hands and to be renewed with a fresh slant and a fresh approach to God's world and to his children who (most of them very dull) inhabit it. Without any bitterness implied it seems to me highly probable that there are a host of infinitely more interesting people in R - - - - who are worth infinitely less than the dull parson and the church which he serves, and which no dullness of his can impair."

Should not quality be our first objective? Certainly our Lord did more with twelve men that the whole Christian communion is doing despite its numbers.

MR. JOHN G. MOORE
Layman of Chicago

Social justice, international brotherhood and better race relations are certainly the concern of the Church. But there must be other reasons for placing names on an honor roll. As far as I know all those listed in the WITNESS of January 22 deserve the honor, but it would help I think to have a few selected for merely doing the sometimes thankless job of helping to maintain a struggling parish.

Roman Priests Launch Attack On Bishop G. B. Oxnam

Brand Him as Communist and List Leadership Of Council and Planned Parenthood as Proof

By W. B. Spofford

Morristown, N. J.:—Bitter opposition has developed here against the scheduled appearance of Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam as the speaker at a Washington's Birthday dinner. The attacks were instigated by pastors of Roman Catholic churches who denounced Bishop Oxnam from their pulpits at services on February 1.

Monsignor John J. Sheerin, pastor of St. Margaret's, declared that Bishop Oxnam could not be termed a "patriot" and said that he was a member of a number of "questionable organizations," which the pastor characterized as "communist." He appealed to veteran organizations to do something about preventing Bishop Oxnam from appearing.

At the Assumption, the Rev. Edward J. Barrett called the Methodist leader a "wolf in sheep's clothing," and listed a number of organizations to which he said the Bishop belonged, all of which the pastor branded as "subversive." They included the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, the Friends of Democracy, the Committee on Militarism in Education, the People's Educational League.

The organizations have been listed at various times by the House Committee on Un-American Activities as "communist" and "subversive." None of them are remotely "communist" and a number of them, notably the Fellowship of Reconciliation and the Friends of Democracy, are vigorously anti-communist. The People's Educational League, which has not existed for years, made small loans to workers who desired to take courses in colleges. The Committee on Militarism in Education, which ceased to exist about ten years ago, was headed by the Rev. Nevin Sayre and the Rev. A. J. Muste, and its purpose was to oppose military training in colleges. The Council of American-Soviet Friendship has for its purpose what its name implies. Its president is the Rev. William H. Melish, associate rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, and the director is the Rev. Richard Morford, Presbyterian. All desiring to work for friendship between the two countries are welcome to membership, irrespective of political belief or affiliation. Members of the Communist Party are therefore admitted along with anyone else, but officers insist that it is not a so-called front-organization.

Also, quite apart from what the organizations may or may not stand for, Bishop Oxnam is not a member of any of them. This information was given us by his private secretary and was confirmed by each of the organizations listed.

However the blasts by the pastors were effective as far as stirring up this community went. Commander Ralph D'Olivo Jr. of the local Legion post issued a statement the following day expressing "real apprehension so long as groups are able to secure speakers to promote their evil work and espouse a cause that is alien to the religion of Christ and Judaism. We do fear so long as groups tolerate conditions whereby such speakers under the guise of academic freedom can teach our youth a way of life that eventually will destroy the sanctity of the home, that undermines faith in God, that causes them to scorn respect for constituted authority and sabotage our revered constitution."

Commander D'Olivo, a Roman Catholic, did admit that the constitution provides for free speech and that since the constitution "has not been changed, altered or amended in any way" it would be impossible for his organization "to stop any individual from speaking anywhere even though we do not agree with what he is speaking about." However he proposed that this difficulty with the constitution (which apparently he does not revere as much as he professes since he suggests that it be "changed, altered or amended") can be met by having the Legion "present a very capable and able speaker to present The American Side of the picture. We do stand for 100% Americanism and if need be will fight to protect that right again as we did before."

Daniel A. Marinaro, officer of the local post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, likewise a Roman Catholic, also broke into print with a large paid advertisement, in which he called Bishop Oxnam a "diabolical force," part of his "proof" being that the Bishop served a term as the president of the Federal Council of Churches "and went immediately from that position to the presidency of the Planned Parenthood Association on which Communist leaders over here look with much favor." He ended his tirade with the usual "therefore it behooves every loyal American etc. etc. etc."

Meanwhile the Protestant ministers of this city, including the Rev. Cornelius Trowbridge, rector of St. Peter's, and also the chairman of the board of the national Parenthood Federation, have urged the Washington Association, under whose auspices Bishop Oxnam is to speak, to stick by their guns. But apparently such support was hardly necessary since Mr. W. Lloyd Smith, president of the association, immediately met the attack by the Roman priests and the leaders of the veterans head-on. He stated that Bishop Oxnam would speak; that he is a man of high calibre and integrity, well qualified to speak to the association and that he would welcome the Bishop as guest of the organization.

A check with Bishop Oxnam's office brings the information that his address for the Morristown meeting was prepared before this controversy broke and that it is based upon the Second Inaugural Address of George Washington.

Incidentally, by way of a plug for THE WITNESS, an article by Bishop Oxnam on the "Relation of the State to Education" will be featured in one of our issues in Lent as a part of the series on topics to come before the Lambeth Conference.

DELIVERED BY HELICOPTER

Tucson, Ariz.: — Bishop Kinsolving told the convocation of Arizona, meeting here Feb. 5, that a Quonset hut, given for use as a chapel on an Indian reservation at the Grand Canyon, would be delivered by a helicopter. The Rev. Leon N. Laylor, chaplain of the student center at Arizona University, also announced that barracks had been given for use on the campus, and that the chapel would be a memorial to Bishop Kinsolving's son whose death from an accident was announced in a recent number of THE WITNESS.

Reports of expanding work throughout the district were made.

DEAN AVERILL DIES

Phoenix, Ariz.: — The Rev. Edward W. Averill, former dean of the cathedral at Fond du Lac, Wis., died here on February 2 following an emergency appendectomy.

BAPTISTS GIVE US A CHURCH

Marshfield, Mass.:—The Baptists of this town have turned over one of their church buildings to the diocese of Massachusetts, asking only that a minister be appointed who will assist the clergy of other churches in religious work. The last Episcopal Church, before revolutionary times, was located on a distant hill and members thought it should be nearer home. Farmers got tired of the dispute so one night hitched oxen to the building and moved it nearer. Today this building is part of the Grand Army hall. A mission was established here in 1916 and services have since been held in a schoolhouse.

CONSECRATION DATE IN WYOMING

Laramie, Wyo.:—The Rev. James W. Hunter, rector of St. Mark's, San Antonio, will be consecrated bishop coadjutor of Wyoming at St. Matthew's Cathedral here on April 7. The Presiding Bishop will be the consecrator with Bishop Zeigler of Wyoming and Bishop Jones of West Texas the co-consecrators. Presentors will be Bishop Clingman of Kentucky and Bishop Zeigler of Minnesota. Bishop Brinker of Nebraska will be the litanist and Bishop Haines of Iowa the preacher. Attending presbyters will be the Rev. W. B. Myll, assistant at St. Mark's and the Rev. M. B. Hitchcock of Casper, Wyoming.

Corporate communions of the men and boys of the Church will be held in parishes throughout the country on Washington's Birthday, sponsored by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew

ARCHBISHOP ISSUES A DISSENT

London (RNS):—The Archbishop of Canterbury sharply dissented here from a recent ruling by the House of Lords that the procreation of children is not the principal end of marriage. He was referring to the case of "Baxter v. Baxter" in which the husband asked for a nullification of his marriage on the ground of non-consummation, charging that his wife had refused intercourse except with the use of contraceptives. The House refused the decree, holding that the marriage had been consummated despite the use of contraceptives.

"The doctrine of the Church is, and remains," the Archbishop declared, "that the procreation of children is one of the principal ends, if not the principal end, of marriage. It is a Christian duty of a man and wife, unless prevented by physical causes, to have children, and either partner, by seeking to prevent this against the will of the other is guilty of grave sin in defrauding the other and disregarding mutual marital obligations."

He further challenged the House of Lords' ruling by asserting that "consummation, which means completion, has not been reached, if, by the use of artificial means, procreation has been wilfully and deliberately prevented."

On the other hand, he said the House of Lords' ruling may have a beneficial effect in preventing trial marriages which could be voided by collusion of both parties.

"Had its decision been otherwise," he said, "the range of cases that could claim nullity decrees for willful refusal to consummate might have been seriously enlarged. A door would have been opened in the case of every childless marriage to collusive applications for nullity, and thus to trial marriages, with nullity as a way of ending them. The Church is, therefore, relieved by this judgment, in that it limits the range of willful refusal and of nullity decrees on that ground to cases in which marital intercourse is altogether refused. But the insistence of the Church upon the obligation of parenthood as the chief end of matrimony remains untouched."

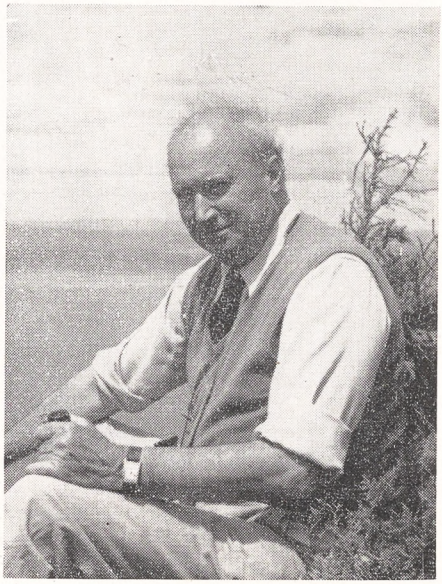
Bishop Scarlett Urges Planned And Controlled Economy



He Also Cautions Against a Hate Campaign As a Part of European Recovery Program

St. Louis:—Bishop William Scarlett pleaded for a "planned and controlled economy" in his address to the convention of the diocese of Missouri, meeting at Christ Church Cathedral here February 2-3. He spoke of the rising prices in the country and said that he often wonders "what became of the confident predictions of many of our friends to the effect that if price controls were lifted, prices would quickly readjust themselves and reach a lower level. Instead of this the spiral continues to wind its way upward. And every new loop in the spiral makes clearer to us the need of a more carefully planned and controlled economy. There is a lot of sheer greed in this inflationary movement and it is the essence of democratic futility not to control this menace in the interest of the general welfare. Those who have something to sell, or those who have powerful unions to fight the battle for them, can ride the elevator of inflation. But the man or woman with a fixed income or a fixed salary sees the income or salary diminish in purchasing power day by day, and the savings, built up over a lifetime of economy to provide for his old age, melting away. It is a shortsighted policy indeed on the part of the leaders of our country. Economic laws are not 'acts of God,' into which category, wickedly named, all problems are tossed about which nothing can be done. They are not beyond human control. They are subject to human intelligence. And, as the history of every country that has experienced severe inflation indicates, it is a fatal policy which allows inflation little by little to undermine a country's middle class which is the bulwark of its stability."

His remarks on the subject took a decidedly practical turn for the lay delegates when he said that he has written to every vestry asking that the salary of their minister be reviewed in the light of rising prices.

Bishop Scarlett made a strong plea for full and adequate support of the European Recovery Program but added that if to get it through Congress "it is necessary to whip up a kind of war hysteria and stir up hatred of another country, then the evils would be greater than the good which would come out of it."

The Bishop also told the convention about the negotiations between the St. Luke's Hospital board of directors and the synods of the Presbyterian Church serving the eastern Missouri area to expand the hospital's facilities and to operate it under joint sponsorship. Bishop Scarlett stated that the movement was a step toward unity — "The Presbyterian Church and the Episcopal Church have made many advances toward organic union on the national level. Since it has faltered somewhat on that level, let us further it on the local level." He stated that new articles of association had already been drawn up, subject to ratification by the hospital association and approval by the synod of the Presbyterian Church.

Bishop Scarlett of Missouri relaxes while on a summer vacation in Canada. He deals strongly with domestic and international problems in his convention address

He informed the convention of the part played by the diocese in the Delmo Homes project in southeast Missouri, where facilities were provided by which evicted sharecroppers, both white and colored, could own their own homes. A large number of families have purchased their homes since the project was saved for them by preventing it from falling into the hands of private real estate agencies.

LAYMEN SPONSOR SERVICES

Charleston, S. C.:—Laymen of the various parishes in this city are sponsoring noonday services held at St. Michael's in Lent. The preachers are Bishop Carruthers, Bishop Everett Jones, the Rev. Moultrie Guerry of Norfolk, Va., Bishop Louttit of South Florida; the Rev. Louis W. Pitt of New York; Bishop Pardue and Bishop Phillips.

PROTESTANTS DENOUNCED

Madrid (RNS): — An article by Bishop Zacarias Vizcarra, spiritual director of Spanish Catholic Action, denouncing "propaganda against the Catholic religion" by Protestant sects in Spain appeared here in Ecclesia, official Catholic Action publication.

"Spain has not had the misfortune of changing its religion," Bishop Vizcarra wrote, "and does not wish that other people, less fortunate in this respect, should come here to offer her participation in their misfortune."

Asserting that only one in every 4,000 Spaniards is a "dissident" the bishop declared that "Catholic nations, which preserved the spiritual integrity which all Christian nations possessed before the division of Christianity, have a right to impede heretical contagion by prohibiting its propaganda."

YOUTH MEETS IN SOUTH

Monteagle, Tenn.: — The youth commission of the Church met here at DuBose Conference Center from January 29 through February 4, to plan a program for another year and to evaluate past work. There were 42 delegates present, representing the eight provinces and 26 states. Dan Plunket of College Park, Ga., 20-year old chairman of the commission, declared that "Church youth must lead in showing Christ to a world that needs him. Quibbling and babbling over non-essentials is the devil's work. Our chief task as Christians is to present a common front to convert the world." He made this declaration following the unanimous endorsement by the meeting of the Presiding Bishop's call to evangelism.

The conference was supervised by the Rev. William Crittenden, the Rev. Charles E. Fish and Miss Mary M. Brace, national executives of the division of youth of the National Council.

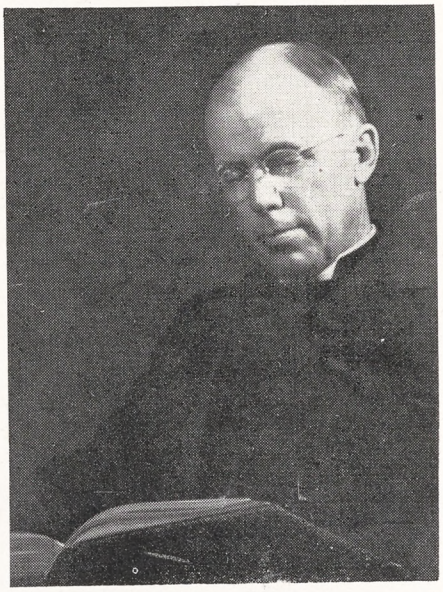
GUEST PREACHERS IN LENT

Philadelphia: — Noonday preachers in Lent at Christ Church here are the Rev. Thomas Heath of Buffalo; the Rev. Clemens Kolb of the University; the Rev. W. K. Russell of the Friends Service Committee; the Rev. P. F. Sturgis of Philadelphia; the Rev. R. C. Batchelder of Lancaster, Pa.; the Rev. W. C. Munds of Christiana Hundred, Del.; Methodist P. W. Hoon of Germantown; the Rev. P. M. Sturtevant of Haddon Heights, N. J.; the Rev. W. H. Aulenbach of Germantown and Rector Felix Kloman.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS OPPOSE UMT

Syracuse, N. Y. (RNS):—Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York was among the six religious leaders of this city to issue a public pronouncement opposing compulsory military training. They state that such a program is "undesirable" for the following reasons: it would be an admission that the UN cannot produce a peaceful world; would excite an armament race; create a false sense of security; divert public funds to defense preparations; interrupt education of youth; have a negative moral influence on youth.

BISHOP CARRUTHERS HAS MISSION



Cheraw, S. C.:—Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina conducted a preaching mission at St. David's here from February 1 through 5.

BISHOP IS NOW ACTING DEAN

Minneapolis: — Bishop Benjamin T. Kemerer retired as suffragan bishop of Minnesota on February 1 and the same day became acting dean of St. Mark's Cathedral until a new dean is elected. He was also guest at a banquet on the 2nd, presided over by Bishop Keeler and attended by clergy, lay officials of the diocese and their wives. He was presented with a purse.

MOTION PICTURE CONDEMNED

New York:—A 20th-Century Fox film, "The Iron Curtain" is condemned as "war propaganda" by a number of religious leaders who demand that "the release of this film be stopped as a violation of the U.N. declaration against war propaganda and as a grave threat to our security through this incitement to war." The statement was sent to Spyros Skouras, president of the company, with the declaration that just as "fear, suspicion and hatred were the tools with which Hitler and Goebbels fanned the flames of world war two" so this film "can only increase the atmosphere of hysteria leading us down the road to war."

The Rev. William C. Munds, rector of Christ Church, Christiana Hundred, Delaware, is one of the preachers this Lent at Christ Church, Philadelphia

Episcopalians to sign the statement were Bishop John Moore Walter of Atlanta; Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired bishop of California; Bishop Arthur W. Moulton, retired bishop of Utah; the Rev. Charles B. Ackley of New York; Dean John W. Day of Topeka, Kansas; Mrs. Virginia F. Durr of Alexandria, Va.; Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Cambridge Seminary; Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley and Miss Mary van Kleeck of New York.

GOODWILL SERVICE IN PANAMA

Colon, Panama:—A service dedicated to the cause of goodwill among men of all nations and races was held here at Christ Church. The service was entirely in Spanish, the first time such a service has been held in the history of the Church in this district. Robert G. Bailey, American consul and Gov. Alexis Vila Lindo read the lessons, the service being read by Rector John R. Chisholm and Archdeacon Jack Townsend. Other clergy taking part were Dean R. B. Ferris and the Rev. Lemuel B. Shirley of Rio Abajo who attended the preacher, Bishop R. H. Gooden.

BISHOP BAYNE ON RADIO

Seattle, Wash.: — Bishop Stephen F. Bayne Jr. is now doing a broadcast each Sunday from 3 to 3:30, Pacific time, over KJR. The music is by Organist Eugene Nye and members of the choir of Trinity Church.

ERIE LAYMEN ORGANIZE

Erie, Pa.:—Bishop Sawyer is organizing the laymen of the diocese of Erie into "Bishop's Men" following five conferences held last fall in the five districts of the diocese. A conference was held over the week-end of February 1 when there was discussion of evangelism, missions, youth, the spiritual life, church attendance, social action, unity. Those present, called key men, returned to their parishes to carry on similar discussions there.

Each man in the organization is provided with a "bishop's bank" into which he will drop a coin each day for advanced missionary projects.

PLAN CENTERS FOR STUDENTS

Birmingham, Ala.:—The convention of Alabama called upon the people of the diocese for $260,000 for the building of adequate student centers at the universities and colleges in the state. The campaign will be conducted by laymen who insisted at the meeting that this sum be sought rather than the $150,000 proposed by Bishop Carpenter.

The Rev. John Heuss, National Council's head of education, was the dinner speaker, stressing the strengthening of education in both church and home.

BISHOP LARNED ON VISITS

Geneva: — Bishop J. I. Blair Larned, in charge of American Churches in Europe left here on February 12 to visit churches in Florence and Rome. He plans to return here by March 2.

EDITORIALS

A Leap Year Must

IT WAS the astronomers of Julius Caesar who finally fixed the calendar and added a day each fourth year to even things up. No one knows what wag, what Sadie Hawkins started the odd custom of encouraging maidens to pursue and woo the elusive male come leap-year. The thirteenth century knew of it, but how effective it has been who would dare admit? At any rate this year we have an extra day presented to us to use as we will.

It can hardly be assumed that these things were in the mind of the august National Council when February twenty-ninth, infrequently but happily a Sunday this year, was set aside to raise a million dollars on that single day for the Presiding Bishop's fund for world relief. Compared with what other Churches are doing, this is a modest sum. Since it is generally accepted that most of the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church are salaried people and therefore not likely to receive another day's pay, this extra twenty-four hours will hardly swell their income. But this thereby offers us an additional opportunity to indulge (that is the word) in some really sacrificial giving. Why not take one three hundred and sixty-sixth part of 1948's net personal receipts and devote it to the overwhelming need the fund is called upon to meet? The appalling need that we, in rich America, can alleviate to some small degree hardly needs to be again called to our attention. Food and clothing, orphanage and hospitals, churches and the support of those who administer these must be provided. Yes, it is a must.

The great danger to our souls is that, through constant exposure to these basic and desperate requirements, we become case-hardened. We need a dramatic reminder; such has been offered to us. It is said that the American people are usually either in a state of apathy or hysteria. Let it be closer to the latter when February twenty-ninth rolls around and the Presiding Bishop calls upon us to give—to really give. We who do not know in our personal experience what hunger and cold and hopelessness mean—let us give. Not of our own, for what we possess is not really ours, but as generous and conscientious trustees of the abundance which we have received from God's hands.

"QUOTES"

OBVIOUSLY every one of us has a human will, and very human reactions, to life and its circumstances. Most frequently these responses are at variance with the Divine will. It is only through real effort, discipline, and a surrender of ourselves to God that these rebellious and selfish wills of ours can be transformed. It is only reasonable that we should make such special efforts during Lent, that period of the Church year when we commemorate our Lord's time of fasting and prayer. If He needed it, how much more do we?

—Peyton R. Williams
Rector of Christ Church,
Nashville

Bodies As Well As Souls

WE PRAY that God may "keep us both outwardly in our bodies and inwardly in our souls" in the collect for the second Sunday in Lent. Christianity revealed that God was concerned with the whole of man. God became incarnate, the word was made flesh. Much of religion outside of historic Christianity is "spiritual" religion, in which the physical and material side are thought of only as evil. In the gospels we are constantly impressed with Christ's concern for both the spiritual and physical well-being of humanity. He heals sick minds and bodies. He feeds the hungry with the bread of life, and the loaves and fishes. In the final judgment, those who receive his blessing are those who have shown friendship and sympathy towards the stranger, the prisoner and the sick; as well as those who have met the needs of the hungry, thirsty and naked. True Christianity could never console the starving with a promise of "pie in the sky, bye and bye." It has always ministered to spiritual and physical hungers here and now. This prayer has to do with such matters as housing, health insurance, world relief. God loves bodies and souls. If we would do "all such good works" as he has prepared for us, then we too, as Christians, make these problems a field of endeavor. Wretched shacks and tenements cause untold damage to bodies and souls, and if real estate interests are disturbed because we call for radical improvements, we do not falter, because we are working together with God. If we insist that everyone must have opportunity for medical care, even though it means a complete change in present practices, and we have the wrath of many descend upon us, we do not cease, for God wills healthy bodies, and souls. We cannot escape our responsibility to make sure that all men in every country have enough of the necessities for physical life, and that such distribution at the same time allows them to maintain freedom and independence of soul. This petition throws us into the whole realm of social relationships where men's bodies and souls are affected.

Relations with Other Episcopal Churches

by Sumner Walters

The Bishop of San Joaquin

THIS short article is mainly to bring us up to date regarding relationships since the Lambeth Conference of 1930, in the light of what that Conference and previous ones advocated. Our full title, "Relations between the Anglican Communion and other Episcopal Churches," has reference to those Churches whose ministry includes the order of bishop, transmitted by consecration or ordination, in unbroken succession from the first century.

The largest ecclesiastical body having episcopal orders is the Roman. Many of her members are of liberal tendencies, but the Church's official position continues to be entirely opposed to the recognition of the validity of Anglican orders or ministry. Cardinal Mercier was the last Roman Catholic leader to carry on "conversations" with those of the Church of England, with Rome's approval. Since 1928 Roman Catholics have been prohibited from engaging in conferences on Reunion.

The Lambeth Conferences of both 1920 and 1930 stated "that there can be no fulfilment of the Divine purpose in any scheme of reunion which does not include the great Latin Church of the West, with which our history has been so closely associated in the past, and to which we are still bound by many ties of common faith and tradition."

The Conference of 1930, however, re-asserted the Anglican rejection of the Vatican decrees of 1870 concerning the infallibility and universal Episcopate of the Bishop of Rome. At the same time the Conference acknowledged Rome's historic primacy, as was admitted by the early Fathers and by several Ecumenical Councils, Primus inter pares, "First among equals."

As we watch the methods of the Roman Church in this country there is little to encourage our Anglican dream of being the bridge Church between Rome and Protestantism. It is a pity to isolate ourselves and to withhold from cordial cooperation with the Protestant Churches lest Rome will look upon us with even greater disfavor. If one end of our bridge is pretty securely connected with Protestantism, the other sticks out like the arm of a cantilever which is never joined and completed by one from the other side. According to Rome our orders are invalid, our priests are no priests, our bishops are no bishops, and that's that.

There are nineteen Eastern Orthodox Churches, —Russian, Greek, Ukrainian, Romanian, etc., recognizing the ecumenical patriarch of Istanbul as their senior in dignity, but "first among equals." Each of the nineteen is autonomous, with its own patriarch or metropolitan. The seven ecumenical councils of the early Church are the basis of their faith.

The Lambeth Conference of 1920 stated clearly, for the information of the Orthodox bodies, that we regard ordination as conferring grace, not merely a setting apart to an ecclesiastical office.

Of very great importance was the Declaration of July, 1922, by the Patriarch and Holy Synod of Constantinople, accepting the validity of Anglican ordination, as containing all essentials necessary from the Orthodox point of view. In 1936 the Romanian Orthodox Church pronounced favorably concerning Anglican orders.

The most important of the Eastern Churches are the Armenian, the Jacobite, the Coptic, and the Assyrian (ancient Nestorian.) The Lambeth Conference of 1930 observed that in many cases a study of the present teaching of the Eastern Churches reveals that a certain heresy about the person of Christ associated with the Church in the early days of Christianity has long since passed away.

Mar Shimun, Patriarch of the Church of the East and of the Assyrians, came to America to live in 1937. With this Church and with the others named the Anglican Churches have cordial relations. However, there has not been a specific effort made to establish inter-communion or to seek mutual recognition of orders.

THE Old Catholics center in the See of Utrecht, Holland, which became independent of Rome as early as 1724. Their numbers were strengthened by many who refused to accept the doctrine of Papal Infallibility in 1870. There are three bishops in Holland, three in Germany, one in Switzerland, six in the Polish National Catholic Church in America.

In 1874 our House of Bishops appointed a committee to maintain friendly relations with the Old Catholics. In 1931 the Bonn Agreement recognized full inter-communion between them and the Anglican Church. In 1934 General Convention officially approved this agreement and provided for receiving into communion with the Protestant Episcopal Church individual congregations professing the Catholic Creed but not using our forms of worship.

The Philippine Independent Church separated from the Roman Catholic Church in 1902. In 1947 our House of Bishops granted their request for episcopal consecration of the bishops of the Independent Church by those of the Protestant Episcopal Church. After careful, preliminary consideration this may be regarded as an important step toward increasingly closer relations between the two Churches.

In 1946 Bishop Tucker communicated to the House of Bishops the terms of the Bonn Agreement, bearing upon the plan of intercommunion between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Polish National Catholic Church. These three main points are

1. Each communion recognizes the Catholicity and independence of the other, and maintains its own.

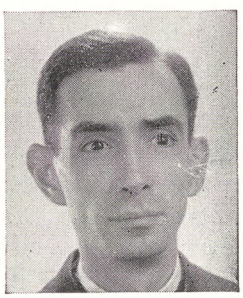
2. Each communion agrees to admit members of the other communion to participate in the sacraments.

3. Intercommunion does not require from either communion the acceptance of all doctrinal opinion, sacramental devotion, or liturgical practice characteristic of the other, but implies that each believes the other to hold all the essentials of the Christian faith.

In June, 1947 at Albany the above agreement was further affirmed and amplified.

The Lambeth Conference of 1920 quoted the Archbishop's Commission of 1911 regarding the Church of Sweden: its succession of bishops has been maintained unbroken, and it has a true conception of the episcopal office; the office of priest is also rightly conceived as a divinely instituted instrument for the ministry of Word and Sacraments, and it has been in intention handed on throughout the whole history of the Church of Sweden. The main differences from Anglican practice are in the place of the Diaconate and in the administration of Confirmation.

At the same 1920 Conference were recorded these excellent words: It is clear that when the day comes for definite proposals of formal intercommunion to be made, they will have to be based on a large-hearted tolerance on both sides, and a readiness on the part of each Church to be content with holding its own uses and practices without attempting to ask for conformity to them on the part of the other.



Let us conclude this review with words worth pondering and I trust, increasingly accepting:
Ubi Christus, ibi Ecclesia

Baptizing Pagans

A RECENT pupil of mine has written me that if he remembers rightly his study with me of early Church History, the ancient Christians regarded every convert from paganism as a potential liability. Hence they exercised all conceivable care and caution before admitting anyone to the full privileges of Church membership. He went on to remark, in applying this lesson to our modern scene, particularly our current interest in the Episcopal Church in evangelism, that he saw no great advantage in a Church of two million pagans becoming a Church of three million pagans!

Certainly any program of evangelism must take into account the kind of preparation made for Christian initiation, and the safeguards provided for the due execution of promises made at Baptism and Confirmation. It is high time we Episcopalians did some serious re-thinking of many practices connected with Christian initiation which we have taken for granted. What I want to present here are certain questions which I think we should be thinking about, questions which arise out of the directions of our Prayer Book rubrics. I do not claim to have the answers. But I do believe that unless we find a commonly accepted solution of them, we are in real danger of trying to make a Church of two million pagans into a Church of three million pagans.

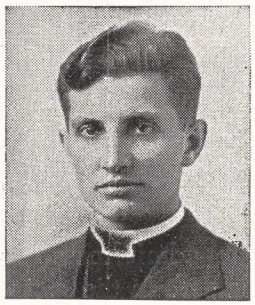
Immediately there comes to mind the problem of Sponsors at Baptism. In the ancient Church Sponsors were guarantors that the person initiated into the Church was not a police spy. But with the nominal Christianization of medieval, Western society, and the development of infant baptism as the normative practice, the institution of Sponsorship became transformed—quite naturally and properly—as a guarantee of loving concern and care for the religious nurture of the baptized. This medieval ideal has survived in the intentions of our Prayer Book rubrics and promises at Holy Baptism.

There is nothing wrong with the ideal. But in actual fact we know that conditions of modern society make it impossible for many sponsors to fulfill their obligations, even though they have a most sincere desire to do so. Population is so much more mobile today than it was in the Middle Ages. All too many sponsors find themselves soon removed and distant from any personal oversight of their charges, despite the rapidity and ease of modern communications. One cannot give proper religious nurture to a child by mail or long-distance telephone. Often we parish clergy find ourselves confronted at the very time of administering Baptism itself with sponsors 'by proxy.' Then again many sponsors are persons of advanced age, grandmothers and great aunts, who do not live to see their Christian wards brought to the bishop for Confirmation.



Our American Prayer Book was cognizant of this situation at the time of its very first formulation, since it admitted—what the English Book has never allowed—parents to serve as Sponsors. This was realistic. Even so, we have never made specific in rubric or canon what traditional rubrics assumed; namely, that Sponsors ought to be not only baptized persons, but active communicants of the Church. Possibly we ought to abandon the whole system of Sponsorship, or at least make it exceptional rather than normative. In its place we should insist that all baptisms be public, in the presence of the congregation, and make the parish community as a whole responsible for the religious nurture of children.

As a matter of fact this responsibility of the entire parish has generally been assumed to be taken care of by our Church Schools. How few parishes, however, can boast of the effectiveness of this particular institution! Curriculum, physical equipment, trained teaching staff, parochial interest—these are all woefully inadequate in most parishes. Is it really fair to ask sponsors to promise that they will take heed that the child will learn all the things "which a Christian ought to know and believe to his soul's health," when we do not provide them with the means of doing so? A parish which is not concerned with developing the very best program of Christian Education has no excuse for criticizing sincere, but handicapped sponsors. Nor should it be surprised that so many of its baptized members remain unconverted pagans.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

A DECADE ago, Graham Greene, one of the best of our contemporary mystery writers, shifted his field briefly and penned The Labyrinthine Ways (printed in this country with the title The Power and the Glory). Stylistically, it was a superior novel dealing with an evil and adulterous priest caught up in the whirling events of the Mexican revolution. Hounded by the pricks of his conscience for his personal excesses and hunted by the forces of the new regime because of the criminal excesses of the institution that he represented, the man stumbled through the matted and be-flowered jungle seeking redemption. I thought that it was a fine novel of both religious and revolutionary fanaticism devoid of humility, justice and charity.

Now, John Ford, Hollywood's best director, has brought the book to the screen. Filmed in Mexico with a superb cast made up of Henry Fonda, Ward Bond, Leo Carillo, Pedro Armendariz and Dolores Del Rio, The Fugitive is a technical jewel. Photography and action are truly blended. Unfortunately, the incidental music, performed for the most part by disembodied voices, frequently destroys the artistic unity and disrupts the continuity. But, from an exclusively technical point-of-view, this film is a masterful production.

Anyone who reads books and goes to the movies, however, knows that Hollywood has no great scruples about transmitting the written word honestly. The Fugitive is a prime example of this lack of integrity. No longer is the priest an evil man —he is the embodiment of all the virtues. All of the people love him and protect him from the ruthless and atheistic forces of the revolution, who delight in shooting men and whipping women. The picture ends with the fugitive priest shot even as a man knocks on the door of a ruined chapel and announces: "I am the new priest." Thus, we get a morality play which has direct bearing on the state of today's world. As one of the persons who worked on the film in Mexico said: "I wouldn't say that it is a fascist picture—I would simply say that Franco would love to distribute it."

In making the picture, the producers have deliberately ignored Mexican history. The state of the Roman Catholic Church in that country, as in many places elsewhere, can't be interpreted without bringing in the criteria of total history. To be in Mexico and to see more churches in a village that there are adobe shacks for the villagers; to see peons share-cropping ecclesiastical lands; to see golden altars confronting diseased and swollen-bellied Indian children is to make one praise God for the fact that his purpose is worked out in mysterious ways. Because the producers have ignored these historic realities, I believe that they have given us a perverted and dishonest picture. The fact that when I saw it approximately one-third of the audience was made up of Roman Catholic priests would seem to indicate that it is wonderful propaganda for that communion. As a Christian priest, I hate to see religion defended by this kind of chicanery which will automatically outrage any person of good-will who has ever read a history of Mexico, Spain, Portugal and other Latin countries.

Travels of a Gargoyle

by Thomas V. Barrett

Secretary of Student Work of the National Council

AFTER leaving St. Ursula's in the Bushes, I wandered around the countryside on a bus, drinking plenty of fresh air. Then I took a train to Boledo, arriving on Sunday morning at the Church of the Holy Advertisement. The Rev. J. Huckster van Shister met me at the station.

He was a smallish man with patent leather hair —he looked as if he had an aspirin tablet hidden away among his teeth somewhere. We climbed into a brand new Pontiac.

"How did you get a new car?" I asked. "Did you have to wait two years?"

"Only a week," said van Shister, winking wisely. "It's who you know these days. I have a friend in the car business. I gave him a character witness in a law suit once—he kinda felt obligated."

We started off briskly and van Shister pulled a gaudy church bulletin out of his coat pocket. The name of the Church stood at the top over a poor photograph of what appeared to be the junior choir. Under that in cold Caslon were the prophetic words, "The Family Church That Is Moving Forward." Below that were the names of seventeen vestrymen, the staff and the man who took out the ashes.

"It takes publicity to put the church over these days," said van Shister. "We've got to sell the church to the public. Make them church conscious —that's my job."

"By the way," he continued, after a brief meditation on salesmanship, "what are you preaching about this morning?"

Not being a person who revels in giving homiletical previews, I announced with a dignified taciturnity, "About God, I guess."

"Fine," burbled van Shister, giving the steering wheel a pat. "Fine. I'd rather you didn't say anything about money. Some of my people don't like it. And nothing controversial, you understand. I don't like to hear the clergy criticize the Church, or anything like that — not that you would do it. I think we ought to be hopeful in these days — after all, they look to the Church for comfort and hope."

I opened the bulletin again and was startled to see my face glaring back at me. Under the photograph were the words, "Come hear this prophetic voice." Feeling like Frank Sinatra at a Finishing School commencement, I said timidly — "The prophets used to be critical at times, as I remember." Van Shister waved the point to one side.

"Got to keep the people happy these days. My people don't come out unless they get something encouraging." He continued immediately, "What was your sermon text last Sunday, by the way?"

"Feed my sheep."

"Very good — how did you develop it?"

Now that is one kind of instruction I do not ordinarily enjoy, but after all I had come to observe how things are done on the local level, not to be perverse and objectionable. I gave the Rev. van Shister my three precious points, but that did not seem to satiate his desire. "What illustration did you use on that second point?" he urged, glancing at his watch.

I told him a story that popped into my mind, deciding to leave it up to him to make it relevant. Van Shister stopped the car and took out a notebook. "That's excellent — excellent!" he beamed, "I must write it down. What other illustrations did you use?"

I gave van Shister all there was to give of my humble homily, down to the last question mark, meditating the whole on the "Rape of Lucrece." Van Shister would have been a star as a dentist. Before we started on our way again he had probed every cavity of my poor mind. It didn't seem quite cricket. I had been going along with a comfortable little crop of sermons tucked away,— poor things but mine own. By the time we got to the church I had lost them all. A feeling of desolation swept over me. Yet, it was followed by a wave of hope, as van Shister gave me his sermon replete with gestures. However, desolation settled down again as he informed me that he heard it from Bishop Stuffington, who got it from Deacon Katz. The original message it seemed, came from Henry Slane Hosdick over a national hook-up.

Van Shister delivered one of my sermons during the announcement period while he promoted the activities for the week, and sold the congregation a pancake supper, a new electric range for the rectory, and the visiting voice of prophecy, wisdom, and frontier Christianity. I discovered it was I to whom he referred in the last briefing.

After the service he was highly elated, and after filing his notes on my sermon, made out the service book, noting that 405 souls had attended service. As a bureaucrat who deals with facts and figures this interested me since during the announcement period I had counted only 212 including a small promoted creature in the front pew who was eating peanuts. However, I never prided myself on being a mathematician and no doubt my count was grievously underestimated.

WE BATTLED during lunch about the need for better posters, an over-all parish program, which I gathered was intended to remove all piety from the people and replace that antique virtue with "up-and-comingness." Van Shister was a self termed "live-wire" in the midst of so many live-wire vestryment, and up-and-coming children. I wondered how they all escaped a short, but vital, circuit.

He had some lovely posters and charts, and told me how to get money from people without really divulging the purposes. By a process of semantic hyperbole, and giving everybody something to do to make him feel important, throwing a slogan barrage all over the place, and waking up the children of the parish at dawn so you can get them to canvass their little colleagues before breakfast, an amazing sum of money can be raised at any time. Van Shister had some dandy slogans, like "Join the Church — the joint of the World," and "Christianity has the Answer — Who's got a Question?" and "Faith for money — the Christian Stock Exchange."

On the way to the station I asked him what the answer really was, but that didn't seem to interest him; and when I asked how one could help a doubter to find faith in God, it seemed to unnerve him completely so that he ran the car up over the curb, grazed a telephone pole, and gave me quite a scare. So, I kept quiet. Evidently on the local level it isn't wise to go behind the slogan.

I asked him about the race problem, which was one of my stock questions, but he said the Negroes wouldn't get anywhere until more of them got to be live-wires and really publicized their needs.

When I got on the train I was a little confused about the whole business, and felt empty as a drum, save for an inner conviction that I was filled with a new kind of prophecy — and save for a sign which Van Shister pinned to my coat, which read, "Church of the Holy Nomad — Enter, Rest and Pray." I was embarrassed and really did not feel up to the part I was supposed to play. I tore most of the thing off, leaving just one word to advertise myself —"nomad." It seemed a bit more honest.

I sat down and meditated in slogans and then opened my Bible seeking solace. Again I came on a perfectly irrelevant passage —"In returning and rest ye shall be saved — in quietness and confidence shall be your strength." Poor old Isaiah! What a promoter! That kind of publicity would never do on the local level today.

Town and Country Conference In Fifth Province

Effort Made to Establish Basic Philosophy To Underlie All Rural Work of the Church

Edited by Sara Dill

London, Ohio:—Urging that the Church do a better job of training rural ministers, Bishop Herman Page of Northern Michigan, told the first annual town and country conference of the fifth province that something must be done to get more men into this particular phase of the ministry; to break down their feeling of isolation and inferiority as compared with the so-called "urban ministry" and to give them a much greater measure of economic security. The conference, which was attended by representatives of all thirteen dioceses in the province, was held from February 3rd to 6th at Orleton Farms, here.

Taking as their theme, What Is The Rural Ministry, the delegates heard presentations from the Rev. Clifford Samuelson of the department of domestic missions; the Rev. James Plankey, Church of the Advent, Chicago; Prof. Wm. V. Dennis of Pennsylvania State College; the Rev. E. Dargan Butt of Seabury-Western Seminary and Mr. Alex Short, chief of the Ohio wildlife conservation extension service.

Prof. Dennis' report showed that, while the population of the province was 66 per cent urban, the communicant strength of the Episcopal Church in that area was 95 per cent urban. Claiming that the rural ministry was the most important missionary field today and characterizing it as the "feeder-belt" for the urban church, Prof. Dennis stated the primary job was to awaken the total Church to the job that it has to do.

In dealing specifically with the rural situation, Prof. Butt said that there are three basic aims in the establishment of town and country church work: to give the rural people a sense of self-respect; to allow them to use self-government in the establishment and administration of their parishes and to work for complete self-support. From the very nature of our Church, which is so predominately urban, the rural population, at present too often have a feeling of being considered second-best.

Mr. Plankey, stating that the face-to-face community relationships of town and country life made the use of laymen in church work most practical and necessary, discussed ways and means for achieving comprehensive lay leadership in such parishes.

The Rev. Samuel Keys of Waynesville, Ohio, who was general chairman of the conference and president of the town and country department of the province, set the tone of the conference by stating that its purpose was not so much to develop successful techniques but rather to establish a basic philosophy which should underlie all of the Church's rural work.

The conference went on record as giving vigorous support to the present program of the Church's national rural work, under the direction of Mr. Samuelson, and urged that more pamphlets, papers and tracts dealing with this phase of the Church's life be published and distributed.

Bishops for Preachers

Birmingham: — Bishops are the preachers this Lent at noonday services at the Advent here. Bishop Clingman of Kentucky preached last week; Bishop Hines is preaching this week. Others to follow are Bishop Penick of North Carolina; Bishop Keeler of Minnesota; Canon Michael Coleman of Canada; Bishop Oldham of Albany; Bishop Carpenter of Alabama.

Round Table Meetings

Detroit:—The Round Table Fellowship, a Lenten program for adults of the diocese of Michigan, got under way February 16 at St. Joseph's and will continue for five consecutive evenings. Leaders are the Rev. F. E. Reinartz, Lutheran of New York; the Rev. W. H. Aulenbach of Philadelphia; the Rev. Almon R. Pepper of the National Council; President Gordon K. Chalmers of Kenyon; Bishop Emrich.

Women Nominated

Seattle, Wash.:—A woman got at least as far as to be elected an alternate delegate to the synod of the Pacific when the diocese of Olympia met here in special convention on February 1. Two women were nominated but when the question was raised as to whether or not the synod would seat a woman, the husband of one of them was substituted for her. Bishop Bayne then ruled that since the last General Convention had seated a woman deputy that the name of Mrs. Adam Catteral should remain on the ballot. She was made an alternate.

When the regular convention meets in May steps will be taken to amend the constitution and canons of the diocese.

Parish Celebrates

Philadelphia: — Bishop Oliver Hart is to open a week of celebration on February 29th at St. Stephen's, marking the 125th anniversary of the parish. Others to take part in special services during the week are the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis of New York; the Rev. Robert O. Kevin of the Virginia Seminary; Dean Charles Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School. The speakers at the dinner on March 3 will be Gouverneur P. Hance, founder of St. Barnabas Brotherhood, and I. Smith Raspin, warden of St. Stephen's. There will be a musical service the evening of March 7, closing the celebration, with Edward E. Allen of Boston and H. B. Rumrill of Berwyn, Pa., as speakers.

The Rev. Alfred W. Price is the present rector of the parish.

Services in Lent

New York:—The noonday Lenten preachers at St. James' Church here are the Rev. James Paul, vicar of Holy Trinity; Bishop Oldham of Albany; the Rev. Harold H. Donegan of Hartford; Bishop Ludlow of Newark; the Rev. Cornelius Trowbridge of Morristown, N. J.; the Rev. V. B. Stanley Jr. of Princeton, N. J.; Dean Robert Hatch of Wilmington; Archbishop Carrington of Quebec; Suffragan Bishop H. W. B. Donegan of New York. Preacher at the morning service on Ash Wednesday was Rector Arthur B. Kinsolving and in the afternoon, Bishop Gilbert of New York.

Niemoeller Rebuked

Stuttgart, Germany (RNS):—Pastor Martin Niemoeller was rebuked here by General Lucius D. Clay for urging Germans to refuse to participate in the de-nazification program.

"It is distressing to me," General Clay said, "that a minister of a religious faith advocates disrespect and violence to a law. Every citizen has the right to criticize and urge that a law be changed. It is not good citizenship to tell people to disobey the law."

While the general said no action against the pastor was contemplated, he did not rule out action depending on the effects of the clergyman's stand.

Church Threatened

Detroit:—The future of Detroit's oldest Protestant church building is a subject of increasing discussion in civic circles these days. For Mariners' Church, which will celebrate the centenary of its building in 1948, is precisely on the site of a new 80-million dollar civic center development. The plans do not include the preservation of the historic edifice. What to do?

Excavations for the first unit of the planned civic center development, a veterans' building, have already been completed on a site immediately west of Mariners' Inn, which is adjacent to the church building. During the excavating, the remains of a wharf said to be built immediately after Detroit's founding in 1701 were uncovered, as were also portions of a fort erected during the period of the War of 1812. Mariners' Church itself stands next to the site of a tavern which was the first seat of Michigan's government.

Built, as its name indicates, to minister particularly to the maritime population of Detroit's waterfront, Mariners' soon became a parish church. Noon-day Lenten services, the first in the United States, it is believed, were begun in 1877. Whether any other church had noon-day

5 MILLION NEW VOTERS NEEDED!

Democracy must be made to function effectively in order to survive. Individual citizens must regain a sense of personal responsibility which manifests itself at the ballot box.

Spiritual Mobilization, a crusade for saving basic Freedom in America, is sponsoring a campaign for 5,000,000 new voters in 1948 to be registered through the churches of all denominations nationwide.

We can save Freedom if we make it work. And it is positively thrilling to feel the response of pastors everywhere to this campaign.

Some pastors have set up committees that are calling on every family in the parish. Some have tables in their vestibule each Sunday morning with Registrars present.

A pastor in Illinois, commenting on this new Campaign said, "If Spiritual Mobilization accomplishes this goal it will have justified its 13 years existence — apart from other good it has done."

If you want helpful tracks, write our office in Los Angeles. If your Ministerial Association would welcome a presentation of this Campaign by one of our Area Representatives, notify us.

If YOU are not already part of our Crusade, if you have not signed the simple Representative's covenant, do so now. Tear off the blank below and mail today. We need and will welcome your cooperation.

Lenten services before that date would be of intense interest to Mr. George W. Stark, Detroit columnist, who is organizing a citizens' committee for the preservation of Mariners' Church. Mr. Stark is also a member of the board of trustees of the old parish.

An interesting architectural feature in Mariners' Church lies in the fact that, due to shortage of funds with which to build the proper kind of structure, the first floor was designed for commercial establishments. Here, in 1849, the Detroit Bank began its career as one of Michigan's largest banking institutions, with offices on the first floor of the church. At the same time, Detroit's post office was for eleven years a tenant.

Among other unusual features are pews of hand-carved Michigan walnut, with one-piece plank backs. The alter is also hand-carved walnut. An organ, installed shortly after the building of the church, is still in playable condition.

Special services are held from time to time at Mariners'. On Good Friday, throngs of people attend services, coming mostly from six large office buildings which are within easy distance of the church.

The Rev. G. Paul Musselman, rector of Mariners', and his assistant, the Rev. Austin J. T. Ecker, also head the work of the Detroit Episcopal city mission society, with a staff of 20 clergy, social and institutional workers. Mariners' Inn, housing 140 men, which is adjacent to the church, will be torn down with the blessing of the board of trustees, and tentative plans are under way to erect a larger institution elsewhere in the city.

Meanwhile the controversy rages as to the future of the Mariners' Church building. The city planning commission, charged with the civic center development of Detroit's long waterfront, states that possibly the city will move this historic old stone church to a point along the river, but not on the civic center, and there it could become the nucleus of a maritime historical museum.

At present, three marine organizations use the buildings of Mariners' as a meeting place, and hold special services there. The administrations to non-Roman Catholic children in Detroit's juvenile court is carried on by two clergymen and two lay people working out of Mariners' Church.

As it would seem that there is every reason to preserve the tradition and also the fabric of the old church, the people of the diocese of Michigan are watching the developments with interest, and many of them are taking an active part in a campaign to that end.

THE NEW BOOKS

SYDNEY A. TEMPLE, Book Editor
Excellent Good *Fair

What is a Man*, by Robert Russell Wicks, Scribners. $2.75.

The subtitle of this pleasant little book by the former dean of the Princeton Chapel is "A design for living that makes sense." The Lord's Prayer, regarded as a "universal formula for understanding human nature," furnishes a framework within which are asked 131 questions (in italics at the head of each section), some real, more of the "leading" type, bearing upon the Christian interpretation of life. Answers, mostly rather tangential than direct, are given with an abundance of anecdote and apt quotation.

Dean Wicks writes, "Vagueness is of the very essence of this [Biblical] faith" (p. 72); and while a theologican can recognize in his book the main outlines of the Christian view, with some perspectives beautifully etched, there seems to be undue hesitation to deal definitely and precisely with some of the real questions raised.

—LAWRENCE ROSE

The Goodly Fellowship of the Prophets* by John Paterson, Scribners, $3.00.

One who is looking for a good book on the prophets, or a suggestive presentation for help in preaching in adult classes, Dr. Paterson's work is to be highly recommended. Because the book is built upon lectures used with theological student, ministerial conference and adult education groups, rather than a research work, it is readable and easy flowing with many pertinent illustrations and comparisons between the prophets and other parts of the Old and New Testament writings.

Scholarship may sometimes be allowed to slip by too easily when, for instance, he admits that a passage is of doubtful authorship yet proceeds to quote it fully to illustrate the prophet under consideration. But on the whole this general acceptance of the text makes for a less broken commentary and for the use intended it is not out of order. After all, the layman who reads his Bible doesn't have the doubtful sections marked in red ink in his version and the prophet must stand on the whole text, valuable as detailed criticism may be to the scholar.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. JAMES S. GILBERT
Rector of St. James', Kingsessing, Pa.

It is my hope that the matter of mixed marriages will be considered at a meeting of the House of Bishops. The agenda for Lambeth has been completed and the subject evidently will not be discussed there. It will be interesting to know the opinions of the WITNESS readers.

Too often when one talks with young persons, communicants of this Church, contemplating marriage to a Roman Catholic, one gets this statement, "We are going to be married by a priest. I don't have to give up my religion if I am married by a priest. But he has to give up his Church if he is married in the Episcopal Church."

When we agree to our people marrying under this sort of arrangement we are meek to the point of implicitly acknowledging that we are in error. If a person has vowed to follow Jesus Christ as his Lord and Saviour and accepts the doctrine of the Anglican Communion as the adequate statement of Christian truth how can he sign an agreement to permit another group of Christians to dominate the religious atmosphere of his family? We should as a Church state our position thus: "The Roman Church is in error. Any person promising to permit his unborn children to be raised in that communion is violating his convictions as a communicant of the Episcopal Church. We consider therefore, that such an agreement implies lack of confidence in this Church as it hath received the Catholic faith, and therefore, separates the individual from this apostolic fellowship in Christ."

I trust that as a Church we shall express ourselves with clarity and conviction.

REV. FRANCIS M. WETHERILL
Staff of St. Simeon's, Philadelphia

Thanks and praise for the article on Travels by a Gargoyle No. 2. Bishop Kinsman used to tell us the chief drawback to Protestants is their lack of a sense of humor. Our "Catholics" in the Church always appear to be so happy about their religion, while the majority of us take it so seriously that we are too often loggy and ponderous about our faith and explanations of the brightness and stimulus of the gospel. Mr. Barrett has done an excellent piece of writing with the most effective tool. Yet he inserts it under the skin with that dexterity and charity which does not sting. He holds a mirror up to the professional priest in a strong light and a happy glow of fun. Few of us have this wise technique—the strongest method in argument. May the readers of the WITNESS and other church periodicals get the same fun out of their writings as your readers do today.

MR. EMIL OBERHOLYER JR.
Layman of New York City

I enjoyed "Travels of a Gargoyle" (WITNESS, Feb. 5). In style only it is rather reminiscent of some stories formerly printed in the now defunct Chronicle but that is where, fortunately, the resemblance ends. Evidently not intended as a satire on ritualists as such, or even on clergymen who preach and teach theology and doctrine, the story certainly is alarming. It is hard to believe that the Episcopal Church has priests who consider sanctus bells, maniples, and the proper procedure of spreading incense, more important than some of the urgent questions of the day, on the outcome of which may depend not whether sanctus bells will grow in popularity or not, but on whether there will be any churches in which they might be used at all. Perhaps Father Thaddeus Chancel Bell is one of those unfortunate priests who would prefer six office lights and sounding brass on the steps of the altar to a congregation aware of its responsibility to community and world.

Churchwoman of Chicago

The communication that came from an officer of the Student Federation of China (WITNESS, Feb. 5) is most alarming. In these days when radio and press are unceasing in urging the U. S. to support the corrupt Kuomintang it is good to see something on the other side. Let us hope that there will be many readers who will call this communication to the attention of their representatives in Congress and urge them not to prolong the civil war in that country by making further grants to Chiang Kai-Shek.

MISS FLORENCE NOURSE
Churchwoman of Cleveland

The news story by Arity Jelliffe about the situation at Baldwin-Wallace College (WITNESS, Feb. 5) brought out the important points in the controversy which have had large space in newspapers here. I congratulate her on an excellent job. Most Protestants I am sure have every desire to get along with Roman Catholics. The question is, do they want to get along with us? One would hardly think so from this factual story.

As beautiful as the bells of Flanders

The New 61-note CARILLONIC BELLS

brings peace to the heart with harmony in the heavens

DOWN THROUGH THE AGES, the hearts of people have ever hearkened to bells. In good times and bad, their inspiring tones have been the very voice of humanity—proclaiming jubilantly in victory, tolling mournfully in defeat, sending forth an incisive warning at the approach of danger. In the magnificence of their message, they've brought hope to the despairing, lifted peasant to the stature of prince, given kings rich knowledge of their subjects' hearts.

This love of bell music has waned not a whit, but today the ideal instrument for giving it full expression is the 61-note "Carillonic Bells." To one who has heard the fine music of a Flemish carillon, this new instrument will be a source of wonder. With neither a great mass of bells nor a fortress-like tower to contain them, "Carillonic Bells" send forth the music of centuries in the most glorious tones imaginable.

The 61-note "Carillonic Bells" is not to be confused with chimes, nor even with bells of the English type. It is a carillon, capable of whispering softness or tremendous volume; of unlimited harmony, rich and clear. It can be played inside as well, with or without an organ.

Here is a carillon that any church or institution can afford. We'll be glad to send you complete details and to help you with any advice; just write Dept. W-81.

The National Council Approves Budget For This Year

Report by Secretary of Religious Education Calls for $200,000 Budget for Department

By W. B. Spofford

Greenwich, Conn.:—Money and an eye-opening report on religious education by the new head of the department, the Rev. John Heuss, headlined the meeting of the National Council which gathered at Seabury House, February 17-19.

A budget for 1948 of $3,449,248 was adopted, which is about $300,000 over the budget for last year.

Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin reported that total receipts to the Reconstruction and Advance Fund, as of January 31, 1948, were $7,425,196, with a balance on hand of $85,418, the rest having either been expended or allocated for work still to be done.

Presiding Bishop Sherrill, reporting about Seabury House, said that $140,000 had been raised, which provided the purchase price of $100,000 and some necessary equipment such as beds, linen, tables for the dining room, a tractor. There is need, he said, for about $80,000 to put the place in perfect condition and to carry on until General Convention of 1949. It costs about $15,000 a year to maintain and operate the property, above rentals and receipts from the various groups using the facilities. He stressed that Church officials who live there pay rent. They are Mr. Earl Fowler of the overseas department and the Rev. John Heuss, head of the department of education. There is now a plan to remodel one of the buildings as a home for the Rev. George A. Wieland, head of the home department, and possibly other places will be built for other members of the 281 staff. Bishop Sherrill suggested that dioceses or individuals might want to erect a house as a memorial.

Great confidence was expressed that a million dollars for relief would be raised as a result of the broadcast by the Presiding Bishop this coming Sunday—February 29. Robert D. Jordan, head of promotion, reported that over 600 stations would carry the program; that well over 80% of the parishes were known to have arranged to hear it in churches; that 3,021 of the 4,500 clergy had ordered material, including 750,000 envelopes. All of which resulted in a deserving pat-on-the-back for Mr. Jordan in the form of a resolution, and a direction that he arrange to use radio next fall in connection with the every member canvass.

Money also loomed large in the discussion of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, with Bishop Penick of North Carolina presenting the viewpoint of the trustees of the American Church Institute for Negroes. The Council had previously allocated $192,000 from the R. & A. Fund to the seminary for buildings and other expenses. Since then, however, the trustees of the Institute voted to ask that payment should not be made at this time because there is a question whether the school should remain at Petersburg, Va. Bishop Sherrill also visited there and came to the conclusion that money should not be spent to erect new building on the present site. The Council therefore expressed the hope that the trustees of the seminary would agree to allow the Council to hold the $192,000 in reserve until final decisions are made, paying the income from the fund for the support of the school.

What excitement there was at the meeting was supplied by the Rev. John Heuss who, as the new secretary of education, ripped into the educational methods of the Church and declared that "if some madman had set out deliberately to evolve a plan of educational confusion for a Church, he could not have done it more effectively than we have done it with the best of good intentions." He told of "inadequate and jumbled lesson material"; declared that the total time that a child spends in a Church school "is only about three full days in twelve years"; said that most teachers are without training but are usually "just people of good heart who have responded to an urgent appeal by their rector." Even priests, he said, have not had teacher training, in seminary or elsewhere, and "most of them simply do not know how." He insisted that "the best that can be said is that the Episcopal Church is playing at the serious task of educating its youth. The best that can be said for the Sunday school system is that it is a futile gesture in the direction of education and nothing more. The secular world looks at it, laughs and passes on. Many of our own Church people look upon it with scorn and have ceased to send their children."

The secretary then outlined what the department should be like to get maximum results, which he said should be approved by the Council and recommended to the 1949 General Convention. The plan calls for a director; a division of child and home with executive secretary and various assistants; division of youth, with a staff of four; division of audio-visual education, with a staff of three; division of adult education, with two people; division of curriculum and material development with a staff of ten; a division of field service, with ten provincial field workers.

So this half day of the Council's meeting also ended up with money, for with travel expenses, salaries for 15 stenographers in addition to the executives and their assistants, the program will cost in the neighborhood of $196,000 a year.

Action: 1) the immediate creation of an audio-visual education division, with a secretary to be paid $6,500; 2) the appointment of a committee to study ways of securing more effective co-operation in adult education between the various agencies of the Church; 3) a committee to study methods of financing the production of the proposed new curriculum and other educational needs; 4) approved in principle the report by Mr. Heuss.

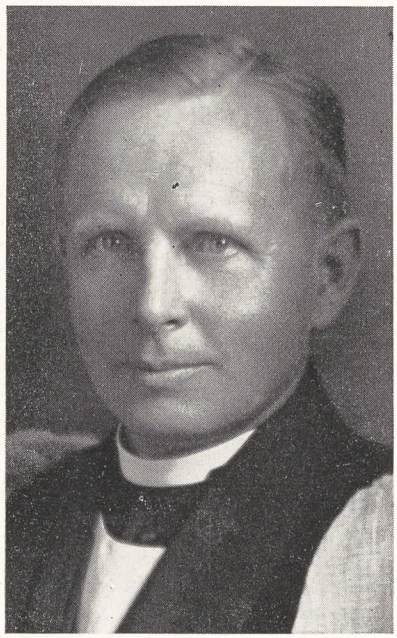
ed for a committee on Church and state and said that specific issues have arisen which concern Church people; the taxing of church property; appointment of government representatives to religious headquarters (Myron Taylor at the Vatican); federal and state aid to parochial schools; inclusion of lay employes in the social security system. The Council voted to set up a committee to deal with the matter.

Suffragan Bishop Donegan of New York, reporting for a committee, expressed great dissatisfaction with the material available for preparation of persons for marriage. It was recommended that special literature should be prepared for clergy and people, based upon these principles: 1) instruction should be rooted in a Christian interpretation of marriage; 2) it should be clearly and simply written; 3) a repressive and moralistic tone should be avoided; 4) recognition of the changing social conditions of life; 5) recognition of the personal equality of men and women as well as their different roles and responsibilities; 6) the essential goodness of the instincts should be affirmed; 7) recognition of the various stages in the development of normal sex life; 8) attention given to the moral questions involved in decisions when to have children.

The report was received with the general understanding that the recommended material would be prepared at once, and that the question of financing would be faced when the manuscript is well under way.

Finally WITNESS readers who are interested in China (issue of Feb. 5, page 5) and the request of President Truman last week for a $570,000,000 grant to the government of Chiang Kai-Shek, will take note of the fact that St. John's University in Shanghai has been completely closed because of student disorders. This means that the students have gone on strike as a protest against the Kuomintang. Bishop William Roberts reported to the Council that the university would not be reopened until parents of students assure the university authorities that there will be no further disorders. He asked for $2,500 for faculty salaries for one or two months since there will be no income from tuitions.



The Council voted to leave the matter in the hands of Overseas Director Bishop Bentley and Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin.

AUXILIARY BOARD HAS MEETING

Greenwich, Conn.:—The state of the world seemed a matter of such serious moment to the board of the Auxiliary, meeting here at Seabury House, February 13-16, that they devoted a long session to a discussion of the matter. The following statement was the result: "Keenly aware of the chaos and confusion in today's world, the members of the board are positive in their expression of the certainty of the Christian faith, and in their conviction that the Church has something greater than atomic power. . . .

"As Church people we will work for the Marshall plan, not for any political motive, but because we are concerned that children of God about the world be restored to self-respect and self-support. As Christian people, facing possible world-destruction, we will try to be God's instruments to help build one world, bringing a Christian motivation and dynamic to some form of world government. As Christian people, we should make an effort to understand Russia and other peoples, and should read and study to this end.

"Furthermore, any attempt to solve the problems of the world today means that Church people must find a solution to division in Church groups based on differences of race or class. . . . The world situation brings a new sense of urgency to St. Paul's message that 'there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, for all are one in Christ Jesus'."

Bishop Edwin A. Penick of North Carolina presented the views of the southern bishops in regard to the future of the Bishop Payne Divinity School at the meeting of the National Council Appropriations from the United Thank Offering were made for work in China, Virginia Islands, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Alaska, Philippines, Liberia and the dioceses of Eau Claire and Vermont. Total receipts so far for the UTO to be presented in 1949, compared with previous offering at the same point in the triennium: Jan. 31, 1945: $529,924. Jan. 31, 1948: $733,847—a gain of about $204,000.

EXPLOITATION HURTS MISSIONS

Salem, Ore. (RNS):—The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, former moderator of the Presbyterian Church, told the pastors of Oregon, meeting here in convention, that American capitalistic exploitation and Anglo-Saxon racial discrimination were the two main obstacles to the missionary spread of Christianity in Asia.

The pastors endorsed the recommendations of the President's committee on civil rights and also supported the Stratton bill to admit displaced persons to the United States. Universal military training was opposed; the Marshall Plan was approved.

SUPPORT FOR INDIA IS SOUGHT

Kirkwood, Mo.:—The Rev. Charles Kean, president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, announced last week that the organization will seek funds for a Thanksgiving Fund for the United Church in India. A general appeal will be sent out in March, following the raising of the fund for world relief. The Rev. Gardiner M. Day of Cambridge is the chairman of the campaign and chairmen have been appointed for each of the eight provinces of the Church.

Mr. Kean stated that "Episcopalians who believe in the United Church of South India as the greatest step forward in Church unity in modern times will be asked to demonstrate their faith. Sympathy and support must be more than verbal. It is hoped that every parish, where there is sympathy with the United Church, will receive an offering in some manner for this purpose and that interested individuals will likewise add their support."

Public Schools in New Mexico Run By Roman Church

Sworn Affidavits Reveal that Parochial Schools Also Are Supported by Taxation

Washington (RNS):—The Rev. J. M. Dawson, acting executive secretary of the organization recently formed to maintain separation of Church and state, charged here that "almost incredible violations" of Church-state separation are occurring in New Mexico "under the aggression of the Roman Catholic Church." Returning to his office here after a trip to that state where he investigated alleged infringements of religious liberty, Dawson asserted that state officials had "condoned or tolerated" the violations.

Citing sworn affidavits, he charged the evidence showed that "schools which are listed in the Church's records as parochial schools are entirely supported by public taxation."

"In many of them," he said, "textbooks pertaining to the Catholic faith are paid for by the state. Garbed nuns and priests are the teachers. Religious insignia decorate the walls of school rooms. Protestant children are graded on the catechism and punished for failure to attend mass."

A report on the public-parochial school situation in Dixon, N. M., described as "characteristic of 20-odd other places in that state," was turned over to Dawson by "responsible citizens and legal advisors." According to Dawson, the report disclosed that "special Catholic editions of textbooks" are officially listed as state-approved and are in use in many public schools. He said the report further charged that these texts are used not only in schools staffed by Catholic nuns and brothers but in "other schools wherein there are controlled school boards."

According to the report, "there are 135 nuns and brothers and one Catholic priest on the public payrolls of New Mexico teaching in tax-supported schools." Their combined contracts call for an annual salary expenditure of $375,657, it was said.

Contending that the Catholic Church is conducting the public schools of the state, the report charged that in Sandoval County, N.M., there are "31 brothers and sisters teaching in the public schools alone, and for the last several years the paychecks of these brothers and sisters were made directly to their orders in a combined check rather than a separate check" to each.

The report asserted that the schools in question are conducted "to all intents and purposes as parochial schools are conducted, and it is reliably reported that all these schools are considered under the jurisdiction of Father Bradley (Rev. William T. Bradley, Archdiocesan director of schools), as parochial schools, by the Church itself, and the teachers openly take their instructions and orders from the Catholic officials and, as a matter of practice, no orders are given either the state board (of education) or the county board unless approved by the Archbishop (Most Rev. Edwin V. Byrne of Santa Fe)."

Bishop James M. Stoney of New Mexico and Southwest Texas has had to meet the problem described in this news story

Dawson declared that the report "represented many of the facts in the case" and was in agreement with his own observations.

He said officers of the Dixon, N. M., free school committee plan to file suit as soon as a $2,500 retainer fee is raised for legal counsel. Dawson, who also visited New Mexico in his capacity as executive secretary of the joint conference committee on public relations of the Baptists of the United States, said he met with denominational missionaries to investigate alleged religious discrimination and persecution of Indian converts to Protestantism.

OXNAM ANSWERS ARCHBISHOP

Manchester, N. H.: — Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam came to this city last week to reply in a broadcast to a radio address given here February 1 by Archbishop Cushing of Boston, in which the Roman prelate charged that the newly formed group to maintain separation of Church and state were responsible for a wave of anti-Catholicism and a "tempest of talk in behalf of Communism."

Bishop Oxnam stated that "One of the most unfair parts of Archbishop Cushing's speech was the attempt to use the smear word 'Communism' when he referred to the distinguished leaders of the Protestant communions. Archbishop Cushing knows well that these leaders are Christians, not Communists. He knows they are men who believe in the democratic way of life and abhor dictatorship. Surely he must know that the truest way to defend ourselves against the attack of totalitarianism, whether it be from the left or right, is to use our own democracy to build a society so just and brotherly that no infiltration is possible."

Commenting on the difficulties encountered by Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches in understanding each other, Bishop Oxnam said Protestant Churches were organized "around democratic principles."

"The form of ecclesiastical government in Protestant churches is determined by the people," he continued. "The form may be Episcopal, Presbyterian or Congregational, but in Protestantism it is democratic because the governmental form is determined by the people. Protestant bishops are elected by the people. Protestant church law is enacted by the people. Protestant church finances are managed by the people.

"We do not say that our Roman Catholic brethren are wrong in having an organization which, from our point of view is authoritarian and autocratic. We simply say it is hard for us to understand each other—we think differently upon the fundamental question of religious liberty."

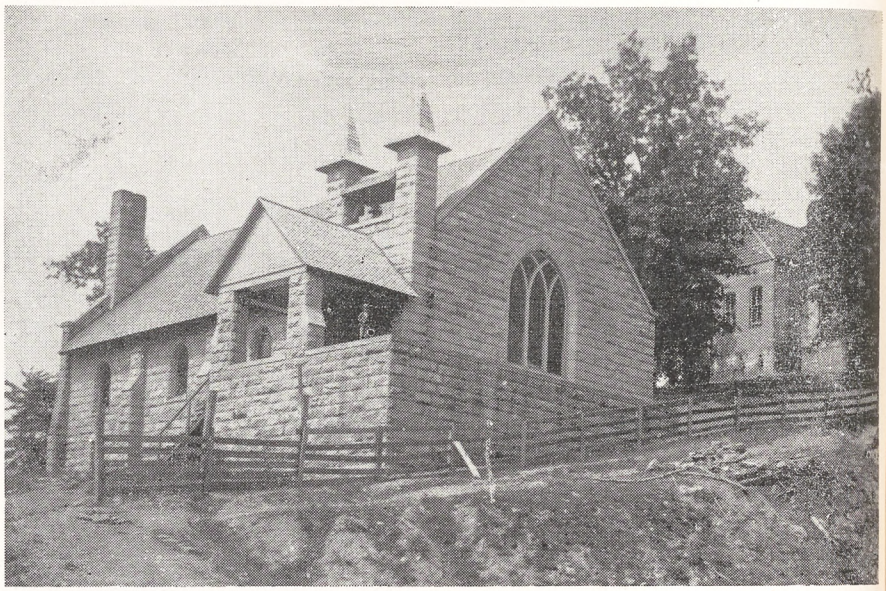
Bishop Oxnam was invited here by the Manchester Ministers' Association. Two members of the Association protested the invitation, however, on the ground that "no service can be done to Christian truth or charity by pouring oil on flames already lit."

Meanwhile in Morristown, N. J. Roman Catholics continued their attack on Bishop Oxnam, prior to an address he delivered on February 23 at a Washington birthday meeting (WITNESS, Feb. 19). It was in the form of a large advertisement, paid for by the local council of the Knights of Columbus, charging the Bishop with being a "Communist" because he had supported the drive for medical supplies to the Loyalists during the civil war in Spain and had sponsored the American Friends of the Chinese People, an organization which sought to aid the Chinese in their resistance to the Japanese. The advertisement even listed as further proof that Bishop Oxnam was a "Communist" the fact that he had been invited by the government of Yugoslavia to tour that country with a group of Protestant ministers last summer, even though he had not accepted the invitation.

PHILIPPINE LEADER IS OPTIMISTIC

Manila (RNS): — Confidence that the Philippine Independent (Aglipayan) Church will "rise out of its decadent state and become a truly strong national Church," as a result of recently established inter-communion with the Episcopal Church, was voiced here by Aglipayan Supreme Bishop Isabelo De Los Reyes, Jr. Interviewed following a birthday luncheon given in his honor by the bishops of his Church, Bishop De Los Reyes said he expected the Aglipayan Church, which has two million adherents, "will have an infusion of new life through intercommunion with the Episcopal Church."



The bishop disclosed that the first step toward intercommunion between the Aglipayan Church and the American Church took place recently when he and Bishop Manuel Aguilar "quietly became deacons and priests of the Episcopal Church," with the Rt. Rev. Norman Spencer Binstead, Episcopal Bishop of the Philippines, officiating.

According to Bishop De Los Reyes, the ordination of the two bishops was necessary "to correct a lack of valid ordination." He said the grant of apostolic consecration will take place after Lent, possibly with Bishop Binstead and Bishop Kennedy of Honolulu as consecrators.

Besides Bishops De Los Reyes and Bishop Aguilar, Bishop Gerardo Bayaca will also be re-consecrated. Bishop Bayaca is a former Roman Catholic priest, Bishop De Los Reyes stated, and "hence his ordination is valid and he needs only re-consecration."

Bishop De Los Reyes admitted that the Aglipayan Church is poor and lacks schools. He said it is also low in prestige, and "some Aglipayans are now ashamed of their religion."

"However," he predicted, "a change will come after intercommunion with the Episcopal Church is completed."

When they built St. Thomas', Beattyville, Kentucky, they made sure it was high enough to be safe from floods. It may be put to the test this spring. The late Bishop Lucian Lee Kinsolving of Brazil taught in the Sunday School of this church and it was here that he decided to enter the ministry

PARENTHOOD TALKS PROTESTED

New York:—A radio broadcast supporting the Planned Parenthood Federation have been protested by a considerable number of Roman Catholic listeners, according to James M. Gaines, manager of New York's WNBC. The criticized program was interviews with Mrs. Alan Valentine, wife of the president of Rochester University, and Pierre S. du Pont 3rd of Wilmington, Delaware. The program mainly was a discussion of the economic reasons for child spacing and the scientific value of research about reproduction. The station manager said that birth control was not mentioned and that the only controversial feature he could discover was the repeated use of the words "planned parenthood." He told a luncheon meeting of the federation however that "if this is a controversial question we will give equal time to any qualified person who requests it," adding that this was the policy of the station. He indicated that a number of phone calls has suggested that the Rev. Robert I. Gannon, president of Fordham University, should be invited to present the other side.

UMT BRANDED AS HITLERITE

Washington: — Universal military training was branded as "operation goosestep," another "Hitler youth movement" and the sure way to the "police state" by speakers who addressed the more than 1,000 young adults meeting here as the National Youth Assembly. The chairman was the Rev. John Darr Jr., Congregationalist, who disavowed any affiliation between the assembly and "any existing religious, educational or political organization."

LESLIE GLENN IS ON LEAVE

Washington:—The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of St. John's here, has been granted a leave of absence for a year. He is at present in charge of St. John's. Montclair, N. J., where he will remain through Easter.

Our Common Blindness

WISDOM is often found in simple things. Truth is oft compressed within the covers of a jest. At least a grain of such wisdom is found in a little poem by John Saxe. The poem tells the story of how five blindmen, who by feeling with their hands, sought to discover something of the nature of an elephant. Each of the blindmen touched a different part of the elephant and each got a different impression. The blind man who touched the tusk thought the elephant to be like a spear; the trunk gave the impression of a tree; the ear gave the impression of a fan; the tail gave the impression of a rope; the side gave the impression of a wall. These blindmen, with only their own impressions to guide them, disputed loud and long and "though each was partly right, all were in the wrong."

Frequently, both clergy and laity alike fall into the mistake of the blindmen in their search for truth. Based on only their own impressions and experiences they "dispute loud and long and stiff and strong, each in his own opinion." How much better it would be if an effort was made to try to understand the whole picture. If the blindmen had cooperated and had sought the other fellow's point of view, then they all would have arrived at some sane conclusion regarding the nature of the elephant. All would have profited by the spirit of cooperation and understanding; all instead of shouting their own opinions, would have been a little closer to the truth. For truth is not the monopoly of any one person or group of persons. Problems confronting individuals, or groups of individuals, cannot be solved by each shouting his own opinion.

Why should not the clergy and laity of the Church, by their willingness to learn through cooperation and understanding of the other points of view set the example for a secular world to follow. Most certainly the great problems in labor relations, race relations, international relations, cannot be solved by shouting the louder for one side or the other. Efforts must be made and continued to be made to come a little nearer to the truth of the whole.

The peace and well being of a family group depends on the willingness of the members of the family to understand the point of view of the others. The same holds true in any problems which may confront a parish church. The peace and well being of any group depends on the willingness of all concerned to learn and to cooperate. Shouting loud and long and each in his own opinion did not help the blind men. It will not help us.

A real effort to understand the other fellow's point of view and through cooperation arrive at some conclusions a little nearer the truth which we all seek, is the need. This will take courage, and honesty, and humility and patience. Then, even if we fail in our efforts to better understand others, we will have developed something of the best that is in us.

"QUOTES"

CAN you have a civilization without great thoughts, and where do great thoughts come from — out of dynamos or arithmetic books? No, great thoughts come out of the souls of men. They are as much a necessity to human society as fire, light, or the capacity to shoot a rocket up 114 miles, or to release radioactivity God had thought was penned up. The scientists actually are not going to save the world. It will have to be saved by somebody else, if it is saved.

—ROYCE BRIER

Overcoming Our Enemies

WE PRAY in the collect for the third Sunday in Lent that God will "be our defense against all our enemies." We might ask who these enemies are. If we turn to our newspapers, we can easily discover quite a number that are so considered. In many ages of Christian history, men have been sure that we have not "enemies," but an "enemy." In our own day, there are writers who do not hesitate to mention the traditional enemy, the devil. De Rougement and Lewis have given him a publicity that makes him almost acceptable as a power in the world. However too easy acceptance of a single source of evil can blind people to the multiplicity of enemies, and personalizing that source as outside the self may be only an attempt to escape the reality of enemies. It can be noticed that even in small babies there are enemies to be fought. Who has not seen the enemy of pride, or self-centeredness, revealed when the little innocent is put down in his crib after a bit of fondling? If the parent does not fight that enemy, he is on the way to becoming a floorwalker. Gluttony is frequently present in the "little dear," and the resulting regurgitation makes for considerable laundering. Greed manifests itself in incessant grabbing and seeking to acquire everything in reach, and if that enemy is not dealt with, chaos ensues.

It is not easy to overcome these enemies, and the several others, and they persist in the growing human life. When any individual fails to recognize these enemies it is impossible for him to combat them and they become the ruling force in his life. Those motives which are most powerful conquer a man, and he begins to think of them as the highest and best. Classically enemies now become gods. The great tragedy comes when men, in community or national groupings, have sanctified the enemies. Then pride becomes imperialism and white supremacy. Greed issues in an acquisitive society where all values are reckoned in terms of how much one can get. Recognition of the enemies, the deadly sins, must precede imploring divine aid in the combat.

Relations with Non-Episcopal Churches

by Edward L. Parsons

The Retired Bishop of California

THIS is a story of great hopes, some successes and a lesson in the patience of God. The Lambeth Conference has from its first meeting (1867) felt a "concern" for the unity of the Church; but it was not until 1888 that it got down to business in the matter of non - Episcopal Churches. In 1886 the American General Convention had declared its readiness to negotiate concerning unity on the basis of four Articles. These in brief were (and are) (1) The Holy Scriptures as the ultimate rule and standard of faith. (2) The Apostles' and Nicene Creeds. (3) The two Sacraments ordained by Christ and (4) the Historic Episcopate locally adapted in its administration. This declaration the Conference of 1888 accepted as an adequate statement of what the Bishops believed the Anglican Communion would consider basic in a reunited Church. The four Articles became known as the Quadrilateral, a name suggested by the Rev. Wm. R. Huntington who first formulated them in a sermon a decade earlier. He showed me (over fifty years ago) the memorandum upon which the action of the Convention of 1886 was framed.

So far so good! The Anglican Communion looked out upon the Christian world and said "Here are the things we think basic—all else is a matter of negotiation, of compromise or of accepted diversity." But a difficulty arose at once which has plagued us ever since. In briefest form it is the question whether the Historic Episcopate is a matter of order alone or of faith. Is it important because of its place in history and its practical values or is it something upon which the whole structure of faith, worship and discipline depends? The American Bishops included it as part "of the sacred deposit of Christian faith and order committed by Christ and his apostles to the Church." Yet it was well known that many of the evangelical Bishops would not deny the validity of the Sacraments in non-Episcopal Churches. The conference committee quoted the American statement but in their comment speak of it as "Church government" and "the ancient Church Order." The resolutions (official action of the whole Conference) go no further than the use of the term Historic. This declaration summed up the action of the Conference of 1888.

There were no cases to consider and in 1897 and 1908 the situation was little changed. But the Conference of 1920 is memorable. In the atmosphere of hope generated by victory in war and the formation of the League of Nations and by the unprecedented cooperation of religious groups in ministering to the armed services the Conference put unity first and issued "An Appeal to all Christian People." It was an earnest and profoundly touching declaration. It came from the hearts of the Bishops and it touched the hearts of all Christians who knew that the divisions in the Church are a denial of Christ's will.

In the Appeal two points call for notice. The first concerns the ministry. The first three articles of the Quadrilateral are restated, the fourth is not only a restatement, but completely changes the emphasis. It asks not for the Episcopate but for "a ministry acknowledged by every part of the Church as possessing not only the inward call of the spirit, but also the commission of Christ and the authority of the whole body." The paragraphs which follow present the Episcopate as historically and in experience offering the best claim to secure such a ministry.

The second point to note is that following a cordial acknowledgment of the spiritual reality of non-Episcopal ministries the letter states that if other communions accept the Episcopate our ministers would in turn "accept such commission or recognition as would commend it to their congregations." The Appeal recognizes implicitly that the problem in dealing with non-Episcopal Churches always boils down in the end to the matter of the ministry and the interpretation of it. The Episcopate is commended on historical and practical grounds. There is no hint that any special doctrinal interpretation would be required. On the other hand there is a distinct assumption that the non-Episcopal ministries whose spiritual reality is admitted are not on an equality with ours. In a union those other ministers would receive Episcopal ordination; ours a recognition or commissioning. The old difficulty lay there unresolved. Anglicans of "High Church" or Anglo-Catholic views accepted at the moment the Appeal but would nevertheless insist that the Catholic order of the Church is part of its faith. Protestants of non-Episcopal Churches of course would not accept an inferior status for their ministry not even when disguised by the contention that it is of a different kind; ours priestly, theirs prophetic.

BUT the Appeal was hailed with joy. It contributed to the growing 'Faith and Order' and 'Life and Work' movements. It led to many discussions and conferences especially in England—and when the Conference of 1930 met many leaders of the Protestant Churches especially of the English Free Churches hoped to see the Appeal of 1920 lead on to some definite implementing. They were disappointed so far as any new proposals were concerned. But the Conference did three important things: 1. It reaffirmed the action of 1920 and in the report of the Committee on Unity which is not part of its official action but from which it did not dissent, developed at great length the historic functions of the Episcopate but asserted that we do not insist "upon any theory or interpretation of it." 2. It accepted the general scheme for the South India Reunion and expressed "our strong desire that as soon as the negotiations are completed the venture should be made and the union inaugurated." 3. It would not disapprove the action of any bishop who would authorize a communicant to receive Communion in a non-Episcopal Church where an Anglican service is not available.

These actions confirmed not only the 1920 Appeal but its broader implications. In the South India plan which was happily consummated in the services at Madras last September the Episcopate was accepted as an historic office with historic functions but no special doctrinal interpretation was required of the clergy or laity; and the equality of all ministers in the Church however ordained was accepted as an interim arrangement. And in the resolution concerning Communion in non-Episcopal Churches it is obvious that the "spiritual reality" as ministries of the Word and Sacraments is definitely accepted. Any other interpretation would condemn the bishops as making mock of sacred things.

That is the story in great brevity of the Lambeth Conference's approach to the problems of unity with non-Episcopal Churches. Thus it has stood in the past. It is now 18 years since it met. The world has changed—views have changed and, one wonders whether the Conference will move along the path it has so far followed or turn another way. That there will be a very determined effort to turn another way cannot be doubted. The point of attack will be upon the position accepted by the Conference in the Appeal to all Christian people, and again in its action concerning the South India plan that the acceptance of the Historic Episcopate does not require the acceptance of any particular theory or interpretation of it. It will be claimed that the Anglican Communion is committed by its formularies to the position that the Episcopate is part of the faith, that therefore no non-Episcopal ministry can be recognized as "equal" nor any union consummated unless the non-Episcopal Church accepts this so-called Catholic doctrine. That is the position held in the minority report presented to General Convention in 1946 which said in effect that any other than an Episcopally ordained ministry is "repugnant to the mind of Christ." This extreme position represented e.g. by the American Church Union overlooks the fact that in the Church of England since the Reformation and in the Episcopal Church in America throughout its history the evangelical position has always been recognized; that today a very large number of bishops, priests and laity hold it; that the New Testament gives no support to it which cannot be questioned and that the one real claim of the Anglican Communion to "Catholicity" is its freedom and comprehensiveness. There is much talk by those who have tried to block union with the Presbyterians, of the open door with Methodists. Offer the Methodists Apostolic Succession, not as we all hold it, but as a necessary doctrine and see what happens.

But the real trouble lies in the doctrine of the Church. The Evangelical holds that it is a living, growing thing, this Body of Christ, that it is not a legal corporation, that its canons were made for man and not man for its canons. The Lambeth Conference has, hesitantly it is true, but definitely acted upon these grounds and opened the way to achieve unity and Catholicity without forfeiting freedom and diversity. We do not know at this writing just what our Commission on Approaches to Unity will present to the Conference. We do know that it will have a direct bearing upon our negotiations with the Presbyterians and Methodists. Let us pray that the bishops may act with wisdom and with Christian courage. The Quadrilateral and the Appeal stirred high hopes. South India was a definite success. But it is 60 years since the Quadrilateral appeared and nearly as long since Inter-Church Councils began to be effective. God's purposes work out slowly "be the people never so impatient."

A Program of Development

by Walter Mitchell

The Retired Bishop of Arizona

THE agenda for the Lambeth Conference begins with the Christian doctrine of man; next, The nature of the Church and its unity; third, The Anglican Churches; fourth, the growth of the Anglican Churches. One of the sub-heads of this is, "A Program for the Development of the Anglican Churches," and I have been asked to discuss that. Let us consider it from two stand points—from within and from without—i.e., quality and quantity.

Last fall the National Council became greatly disturbed over a report by the head of the department of publicity, Mr. Jordan. There was earnest talk how to set the Church going again. The Bishop of Washington was reported to have said in effect that it would not be much use to add, by however so large a number, people like ourselves. The inference seemed to be that our first responsibility is to convert our present members, ourselves. To improve the quality. Let us consider that.

It is, indeed, foolish to plan to lengthen our cords (bring in more people), until we shall have first strengthened our stakes (improved the quality of the life of our present members). So, the first question is how to make ourselves more like our Lord? Or, better, how to let him make us like himself? Manifestly, the first step is to see ourselves as he must see us. He sends us into the world but warns us not to be of it. But we are of it and we know it. He was God filled, God centered; we are self filled and self centered. God's will is to evangelize all men; our will is to look out for number one and our own parish or diocese, as the case may be. Almost any advance will cost money. When one is proposed, our first reaction is apt to be, "How much will that cost me, or my parish, or my diocese?" by "cost," we mean cash. By "cost," our Lord means life. The National Council saw that something radical had to happen to the Church before it could function in accordance with our Lord's known will for it. Surely, there can be no doubt about that.

We face an utterly new world. We have come to the end of an age. We face another and vastly different one. Our ways of living and thinking were not good enough for the age we are leaving; they are certainly not for the age we are entering. The development of atomic energy will make the natural world unlike any we know. Only the future can tell what are the profound changes to which our race will have to adjust itself. Those who have read du Nouy's Human Destiny, will agree that we are face to face with a new world of the mind and the spirit. In my college days we were told that perfect adaptation to one's environment meant endless life. Du Nouy, if I understand him, shows that adaptation means stagnation; only those who refuse to conform and fight to change their environment survive and improve. This is as true in the spiritual as in the natural world. Our Lord said a like thing but we have paid little attention: Be ye "therefore perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

If we agree that we need a new Church for the new Age, how shall we bring it about? A major surgical operation—a spiritual one—is the answer. Bishop Dun was right. No use to talk about evangelism (increasing our numbers, quantity), until we become evangelized ourselves; until every one of us begins to pray daily, and to act on the prayer, "Lord, revive thy Church beginning with me." To begin with, that means a radical change in our leadership. Not necessarily a change of leaders but a change in them. Or, if a retired bishop may say so, a change in us. It is never pleasant to criticize others, especially ones close to us, but, to use a favorite saying of mine, "The work comes first." We workers are not anything like as important as we may have been led to believe. Here today, gone tomorrow and soon forgotten. It is the work—the extension of the kingdom through the Church—that matters. Not only is it unpleasant to say what follows but others resent it. In a recent synod a report on this subject signed by a consecrated layman, an old and faithful archdeacon and myself created quite a row. We were charged with attacking the clergy. Others, privately, said the report was true but such things should not be said publicly. We face a new age. We must have a radically new Church. The time for pussy-footing is gone.

Dr. Fulton, editor of The Church Standard, lecturing to us students at Sewanee, said that many of his contemporaries had become bishops but that he had not known a single one of them to grow spiritually thereafter. That shocked me so I have never forgotten it. It is not at all true to my experience but there is some measure of truth still in the statement. If true at all, surely a new quality of leadership is in order. For example, we bishops, like other clergy, preach a lot about living sacrificially. I do, and one turns from the pulpit with a warm glow around his heart, as though he had really done something. But nothing happens. The people know how precious few of us, including myself, do any particular sacrificing. It is not easy. Once, when the then Bishop of Liberia resigned, I all but volunteered to succeed him if the House of Bishops approved. Why I did not is another story but afterward I realized that the reason for doing it was fallacious. I knew beyond any peradventure one would just have to live sacrificially in Liberia; it would be easy to do there and so difficult to do here. But the fallacy lay in the fact that not all of us can go to Liberia but all of us are called to live sacrificially. Of course, to the extent that we bishops do not set an example we can hardly expect others to do so.

SOME years ago I was visiting the successful rector of a growing parish. He surprised me by saying he wanted to leave. I asked what the trouble was. He said none but the congregation had grown beyond the ability of any one man to be a real shepherd to all the people. At that it was nothing like as large (some 500 communicants) as some of the monstrosities on which we pride ourselves and which, as a rule, are the most inefficient ones in the Church. When I suggested that it should be easy to leave he said, "It is not at all; bishops do not call you to smaller parishes (which tells quite a story in itself), but to larger ones and I certainly do not want a larger one." I think that is not too exceptional. No wonder men are encouraged to become career men! That is, a young man makes, as he is told it is, the great sacrifice of entering the ministry. Having made that initial sacrifice (?), many seem to feel that thereafter it is right to be as ambitious in a material way and as calculating as one in any other work. He knows he will be sent to the sticks upon graduation, unless he should be fortunate enough —as he would regard it—to become a curate in some big parish. But he plans to leave the sticks, be "promoted" at the first opportunity and he is. He behaves himself, works hard, makes no trouble for his bishop and presently he is "promoted" again to a larger parish and larger salary. He becomes known as a "safe" man in the diocese, prominent laymen take note, he is "promoted" again and again and at last becomes rector of a large city parish or a dean or a bishop. Somewhere along the line he married and, apt as not, his wife was selected with an eye to her ability to aid his ambition, one of her qualifications might be that she have wealth. Let me hasten to add that these men are exceptions but they have great influence in setting the standards. Most of our men just go about their work with no eye out for promotion and yet, as a rule, if called to a larger and a larger work, they are apt to accept. On the other hand there are those who stay put until God makes it clear they should move, but whether to a larger or smaller work is immaterial. There are more of these than we may realize. In getting men for the hard, unromantic but very rewarding work in Arizona, men were called regardless of their present salary and for years I was able to say that, with-without exception, every missionary had resigned work paying from $600 to $2,000 more than he was receiving in Arizona, plus the higher cost of living there.

Our lay leaders are affected by this "promotion" policy. Time and again they accept the resignation of their pastor "not wishing to stand in the way of his bettering himself." I soon learned that it was inadvisable to tell committeemen or vestrymen that the man I proposed was receiving more money where he was; so often they felt there was something wrong with him. Once however, I was privileged to lead a conference of the laymen of a great diocese. Some 90 men, among whom were several of the leading men of the state gave up the last and longest vacation of the year to attend this one. We were talking seriously about the deep things of life and the Church. They were not angry about the leadership they were being given but hurt. One man said, "Do you know, my rector has told me he did not want me to be interested in anything outside the parish." When I protested that there could hardly be another like him in the Church, a dozen or fifteen men rose to say the same thing.

Many of our clergy are licked; they confess defeat. A larger number are apologetic about their work and their leadership. During the last forty years it has been my lot to attend worship in a great many parishes and missions. No matter how important the meeting about which the pastor is giving notice, one gets the notion that he does not really think the meeting important and would not blame the people if they did not attend; but he hopes "those who find it convenient will." This attitude is reflected in sermons. Two years ago I was privileged to lead a session of the School of the Prophets, a product of the wisdom of Bishop Block. It is a refresher course for younger clergy. Each man brings two sermons he has preached to his people, preaches one which is criticized by the school and both are gone over by the leader. My comment was that there was not a sermon in the lot. They were more lectures or essays on interesting subjects and well done; but they had nothing to do with the proclamation of the Gospel of salvation and the relation of the hearers to it. So frequently we preachers say "It seems to me" or "I think"; so rarely, "Thus saith the Lord."

To go back to the matter of a career, many men deliberately accept big parishes for the very purpose of raising more and ever more money for the general work of the Church. The men in the choir of one such, used to try to guess how many times in the sermon the rector would refer to the quota for the work of the Church. Another led his parish to spend more on others than on themselves. As a student at the General Seminary, I attended St. Bartholomew's one Sunday because the newly elected Bishop Brent was to preach. The rector, Dr. Greer (afterward Bishop of New York), asked the people to give $80,000 there and then for the new Bishop's work. He had provided pencils and cards in the pews. As I remember, the people did more than that. St. Thomas, New York, had completed raising a huge sum for a new stone Church and parish buildings when the San Francisco disaster occurred. Dr. Stires, afterward Bishop of Long Island, led the people to give the entire amount to the Church in the diocese of California. But such men are in a decided minority.

How to improve the quality? I heard of one parish which changed, from the kind for instance, which spends more on its own music than on extending the kingdom through the Church to a great missionary parish with new life in every organization. When asked how it happened, the rector replied that he had decided the parish needed a new rector and that he would be he! The Lord revived that man. To make it difficult to be confirmed in Arizona, one had to be under instruction for three months. Like the Bishop of Washington, we felt we had enough dead wood already.

May not the reason for this situation be due to the fact that we have accepted a lesser and lower standard than our Lord revealed to us? It is surprising how many of us, bishops, priests and people think of the Golden Rule as the Christian standard when, in fact, it is not Christian at all. It was the highest the Jew ever saw. But when, toward the end of his life, our Lord wanted to give his followers a commandment, it was so utterly different from the Golden Rule or any other of the Jewish commandments, that he could only describe it as a "New Commandment." We are to love others as he loves us which is a vastly different proposition. So much for quality.

Given quality, quantity will care for itself. One day one of the leading lawyers of Arizona accosted our missionary in his town. He said he had been observing the missionary for four years; the missionary had something in his life which the lawyer said he just had to have. Quality produces quantity. There is nothing wrong with the Church but us members. She has everything. Outsiders know that even though they despair of us. Billy Sunday was quoted as having said once that "If the Episcopal Church ever gets religion look out!"

We face a new Age. It needs what every age has needed—Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever—and consecrated men and women to make him known, not by words but by our lives.

A Word With You

By

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Pagan

THIS word is most attractive to the young, to whom it means freedom from Respectability, and her Cinderella sister—charming but mistreated—Unconventionality. It brings to mind tropic islands in a limpid sea, untrammeled by missionaries, clothiers, and anyone over twenty years of age. Or perhaps it recalls Swinburne's idea of the classical world, before the "pale Galilean" had ruined everybody's fun.

As a matter of fact, the pagan world was cold, cruel, frightened, and lonely. What were common practices would today be considered bestial crimes. Sensitive people were usually too concerned with their own headaches and heartaches to have much time for the plight of others. Festivities were more useful as times of forgetting than remembering.

"Pagan," in Latin, meant "countryman." Since country people were usually ignorant of, or indifferent to, the wars which citizens of Rome thought so necessary and glorious, the word took on the connotation of "slacker."

Are you so busy, sifting through the ashes of your life to see if there are any rose petals left, that you cannot be concerned with the plight of others? Are you indifferent to the battle for the Kingdom of God? Then you are a more typical pagan, really, than any nubile, caramel colored beauty on the island of Neva-neva.

World Council Lists Leaders For Amsterdam Assembly

Dulles, Judd and Niebuhr Are Among Those Headlined in Release of American Office

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The names headlined by the American publicity office of the World Council of Churches as the top-flight Americans to attend the assembly, meeting this summer in Amsterdam, are John Foster Dulles, who has been named a consultant; Prof. Reinhold Niebuhr, who is an alternate for the Evangelical and Reformed Church; Bishop Oxnam, delegate of the Methodist Church; Congressman Walter H. Judd, delegate for the Congregational-Christian Church; Dr. John R. Mott, delegate for the Methodists and Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council of Churches who attends as delegate for the Episcopal Church.

Others who have been appointed "consultants" in addition to Mr. Dulles are Mrs. Willard MacAfee Horton, president of Wellesley; the Rev. Roswell P. Barnes, a secretary of the Federal Council of Churches; Prof. John C. Bennett of Union Seminary; the Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, executive head of the Federal Council of Churches; Prof. Walter M. Horton of Oberlin College; Prof. O. F. Nolde of Philadelphia.

The list of delegates and alternates, released by the Rev. Henry Smith Leiper, associate general secretary of the World Council, consists of 137 representatives of 20 denominations. Total American participation will include 200 representatives from 25 denominations, divided as 75 delegates, 75 alternates, 25 consultants and staff and 25 accredited visitors. A further list will be issued when the other churches appoint delegates.

The Episcopal delegates and alternates (who attend and are not merely substitutes in case delegates find it impossible to attend) are Presiding Bishop Sherrill, Miss Leila Anderson of California, Bishop Dun of Washington, the Rev. Thodore P. Ferris of Boston, Mr. Clifford P. Morehouse of New York, Mr. Taft, Bishop Sturtevant of Fond du Lac, Dean William H. Nes of Nashotah. Another Episcopalian who will attend as a member of the staff is the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins of Washington, Conn.

Consider Ministry

Lincoln, Mass.: — Bishop Nash told the 55 men from New England colleges, meeting here February 6-8 to consider the ministry, that "it is the greatest call God gives to man." Dean Charles L. Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School said that "all of a man's life is a preparation for the ministry." Various phases of the work were presented by the Rev. Francis O. Ayres of Waterbury; the Rev. Rollin Fairbanks of Boston; the Rev. Elson Eldridge of Nashua, N. H.; Mr. Robert Hall, student at ETS. One of the most interesting talks was by Businessman Byron Atwood of Salem, Mass., who presented a layman's view of the ministry.

To Elect Suffragan

Detroit:—The diocese of Michigan is to hold a special convention on April 8 to elect a suffragan. The standing committee, enlarged by four others, is a committee to receive names for consideration. The secretary is the Rev. Henry Lewis of Ann Arbor.

Primate Urges Unity

Ottawa (RNS):—Archbishop George Frederick Kingston, Primate of the Church of England in Canada, declared here that he saw no reason why the unity of Christian communions could not be brought about through cooperation between Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches. The archbishop called on the Christian world to unite in cooperation to solve global problems.

He spoke before an audience of 1,000 which included Prime Minister Mackenzie King, Sir Alexander Clutterbuck, British high commissioner, and other notables.

Marshall Plan

Washington (RNS):—A meeting to support the Marshall Plan is to be held at Washington Cathedral on March 11th under the joint auspices of the Federal Council of Churches and the local Church Federation. Speakers will be John Foster Dulles and Bishop Angus Dun. Willard Thorp, assistant secretary of state for economic affairs, also will speak, and it is expected that General Marshall will attend.

City Workers Honored

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—The policeman, street cleaner and the school teacher will carry their chins a bit higher in this city on February 29. On that day a service will be held at St. Mark's Cathedral honoring city and school employees. Police and firemen, as well as other city employees, will attend the service in a body. Years back—25 or more—Dr. Bill Keller of Cincinnati launched such an observation on Memorial day in that city, but as far as is known St. Mark's is now the only church in the country conducting such a service.

Mayor George W. Welsh will read one of the lessons and Lester C. Doerr, superintendent of high school instruction in the public schools, the other. Dean H. Ralph Higgins, who started the honor service in 1940, will take the service.

Protestants Protest

Washington (RNS):—Formal protest against alleged persecution of Protestant minorities in Italy was lodged with the Italian embassy here by an American Protestant group headed by the Rev. Frank B. Gigliotti, an official of Citizens United for Religious Emancipation. The protest claimed that alleged Roman Catholic-inspired anti-Protestant attacks had already "disturbed and seriously clouded relationships" between the Italian and American peoples.

Citing a recent attack on a Pentecostal open air meeting near Rome, the protest declared that "we have reached the end of our patience. We

New York:—With the ordination to the priesthood of Mons. Isabelo de los Reyes, Jr., and Bishop Manuel N. Aguilar of the Philippine Independent Church, arrangements are now being made for their consecration. Bishop Norman S. Binsted of the Philippines is hoping it may be possible to have the consecrations sometime in April, and has written to Bishop Harry S. Kennedy of Honolulu inviting him to attend and take part in the service. Bishop Kennedy believes it may be possible for him to fly to the Philippines so as to arrive there about April 5. Presiding Bishop Sherrill has sent a radio message to Bishop Kennedy urging him to go to the Philippines for this service.

Oppose UMT

Grand Rapids, Mich. (RNS): — A resolution opposing compulsory peacetime military training in the United States was unanimously adopted by nearly 100 members of the pastor's section of the International Council of Religious Education, which held its annual session here. The pastors reaffirmed their action taken at last year's meeting here, scoring UMT because "it is a violation of the rights of conscience and a system dangerous to the moral and spiritual emphasis of Christian education.

"To take unilateral action in the direction of compulsory military training indicates a lack of faith in the United Nations," the resolution added.

Western Michigan

Grand Rapids: — Evangelism was stressed at the convention of Western Michigan, meeting here January 27-28. Bishop Whittemore presented an evangelical program for Lent; urged the passage of the Stratton bill which would admit 100,000 displaced persons from Europe annually for the next four years; asked for a generous offerings for the Presiding Bishop's fund on February 29 and favored the Marshall plan. He stated that Senator Vandenberg, whose home is here, should know that the diocese of Western Michigan is behind him in his foreign policies.

ern colleges. The speakers were Prof. A. T. Mollegen on "Christianity in a day of crisis"; Bishop Goodwin on "the rural ministry"; the Rev. Charles Sheerin on "the urban ministry." There was a panel on various aspects of the ministry led by Rector T. H. Evans of St. Paul's, Charlottesville; Prof. Reuel L. Howe and the Rev. A. J. DuBois of Washington. Others to address the students were Dean Zabriskie and Prof. Jesse M. Trotter.

Preach in Boston

Boston:—Preachers at the noonday Lenten services at Trinity here are Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania; the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn of Washington; the Rev. Lesley Wilder Jr., assistant at St. Thomas', New York; the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker of New York; Prof. F. W. Dillistone of Cambridge Seminary; Bishop Budlong of Connecticut. The services in Holy Week will be taken by Bishop Nash and Bishop-Suffragan R. A. Heron.

Potent Factor

Manila (RNS): — Although Communists are leading the trade union movement in India; there is "no immediate prospect" that the country will turn Communist, Rajah B. Manikam, executive secretary of the National Christian Council of India, Ceylon and Burma, declared here. Manikam, who was elected chairman of the newly-formed joint commission set up here under the auspices of the International Missionary Council and the World Council of Churches to promote Protestant missionary work in East Asia, spoke to students of the University of the Philippines before leaving for Bangkok, Siam.

He admitted, however, that Communism is "a potent factor" in India because the country is "a land of extremes, where a few enjoy unlimited affluence, in contrast to millions who can barely keep body and soul together." He said that industrialization is proceeding too rapidly, thus giving Communists the opportunity to dominate the movement for labor unionization.

According to Manikam, India's Christian population, embracing about 5,000,000 Protestants and an equal number of Catholics, is not alarmed by the transfer of power from the British government to the Indians, but "welcomes it. The

Where Does Your Parish Stand?

Slightly over one-third of the parishes of our Church have in past years responded to the appeal for support of Theological Education. (How would you like to drive your car in low gear all the time?)

Every one of our Seminaries belongs to the whole Church, works for the good of the whole Church and depends upon the whole Church for support. The Dean of any of them will supply materials for an offering in your parish.

constituent assembly," he reminded his hearers, "has promised freedom to preach and to practice and propagate one's religion."

The Indian churchman asserted that the widespread impression that India is torn by communal disorder is "all wrong." He stated that 97 per cent of the Indian population is enjoying peace and order, and only 3 per cent are affected by the fighting between Moslems and Hindus."

Chinese on Visit

San Francisco: — Bishop N. V. Halward, assistant priests of Hong Kong and South China, with six Chinese priests and one deaconess, arrived here on a unique visit. They are visiting a number of dioceses in the United States, with a view to observing various aspects of the work of the Episcopal Church to enable them to receive spiritual, mental and physical refreshment. The group is not making any appeals for funds, nor will they be speaking much about China in public.

Five of the group, the Revs. Kong Chi Wing, Chung Yan Laap, Roland Koh, Cheung Lok Heung and Deaconess Lei Tim Oi, are from the diocese of Hong Kong and South China. In addition there are the Rev. Mr. Ytu from the diocese of Fukien and the Rev. Jordon C. L. Liu, who has been assisting Bishop Y. Y. Tsu at the central office of the Chung Hua Shing Kung Hui in Nanking.

All members of the group went through a hard time during the war, some of them in territory occupied by the Japanese, and others in free China.

Believe in God

Princeton, N. J. (RNS):—Results of an 11-nation Gallup Poll indicate that the highest proportion of people who believe in God reside in the United States, Canada, Brazil and Australia. The poll showed that Brazil has the highest proportion of those believing in God, with 96 per cent. Australia and Canada each have 95 per cent, while the U. S. has 94 per cent.

More than nine out of ten Americans profess a belief in God, the poll said, but only two out of three Frenchmen believe in a deity. France, with 66 per cent, showed the lowest proportion of people believing in God. The United States ranked fifth in the proportion of persons who expressed a belief in life after death, with 68 per cent. In first place were Canada and Brazil with 78 per cent. Norway and Finland ranked next with 71 per cent and 69 per cent, respectively.

Four principal replies were received to the question: How do you imagine life after death to be? These replies were: (1) Complete happiness, joy, peace, quiet; (2) reward for virtue, punishment for sin; heaven or hell; (3) dream-like, disembodied, inanimate, spiritual; and (4), as described in the Bible.

The poll also indicated that faith in God varies by age. In the United States, it showed more older people believe in God than younger ones. Also, according to the survey, faith in God diminishes as people get away from nature and the outdoors.

The poll covered the U. S., Canada, Brazil, Australia, Great Britain, Norway, Finland, Holland, Sweden, Denmark and France.

Adult Education

Sacramento, Cal.:—A three days' experiment in adult missionary education, accompanied by a series of "Christ for the World" exhibits, illustrating many phases of the Church's work, was carried out successfully at Marysville, Sacramento and Santa Rosa, in the diocese of Sacramento by local committees assisted by members of the National Council staff. Exhibits included richly colored textiles, carved wood and other works of art, native products and handicraft from Alaska, China, Cuba, the Hawaiian Islands, Japan, Mexico, Panama, the Philippine Islands, and elsewhere. Each "court" displayed a map, portraying the Church's missionary activities. Persons appropriately costumed were on hand to explain the exhibits and distribute copies of missionary folders. In other courts were altar frontals, vestments and vessels, with devotional literature. Tables elsewhere showed pamphlets, books and posters illustrating the Church's program in Christian education, college work, laymen's activities, rural work, social relations, Woman's Auxiliary and welfare projects. The Church Divinity School of the Pacific and St. Margaret's House in Berkeley, California, were represented among the photographic exhibits.

Healing Missions

San Diego, Cal.: — Missions of spiritual therapy are being held during Lent in a number of parishes by the Rev. John Gayner Banks, director of the Fellowship of St. Luke. The churches are the Heavenly Rest, New York; St. Stephen's, Philadelphia; St. James', Richmond, Va.; St. Agnes', Washington; Grace Church, Wilmette, Ill.; St. Augustine's, Chicago. In the late spring Mr. Banks is to go to England for two months of study of the work of healing being done in churches there.

MR. ALEXANDER L. TINSLEY
Layman of Plainfield, N. J.

As a subscriber to THE WITNESS for a number of years I wish to voice my protest against the tone of the editorial "Attack on World Peace" (WITNESS, Feb. 12). I suppose we have gone too far to retreat (may God forgive us) from our action in the UN in favor of the partition of Palestine. Such action has not met with the approval of other nations if I am correctly informed, especially of the one most concerned, Great Britain. Russia, with whom we have differed in practically every other matter is our lone supporter. Even the Gentiles resident in Jerusalem, as I understand it, are opposed to the partition.

MR. ROBERT C. MARTIN JR.
Layman of Ft. Devens, Mass.

In regards to Travels of a Gargoyle (WITNESS, February 5, 1948), may I make a few suggestions to you, purely in a non-partisan spirit?

Humor, particularly satirical humor, almost demands the light touch which is a result of the author's sympathy with the individuals whose incongruities of conduct are exposed. The "gargoyle," himself, is patently the victim of a deep and bitter hatred toward sacramentalists and all they stand for, which makes his "humor" heavy-footed and futile. This is a pity; because a truly amusing sketch might be built around Fr. Thaddeus Chancel Bell, which could illustrate basic practical difficulties of contemporary sacramentalist practice.

The implication that Catholics are reactionary because they are Catholics is completely without substantiation. A far more likely explanation is that many Catholics are reactionary because many Episcopalians in general are reactionary.

Finally, the humanist attitude of the admirable Fr. Charity seems to bear little relation to the attitude of distrust, suspicion, and contempt toward other Christians which this particular travel of this particular gargoyle obviously is meant to inculcate in both Catholics and anti-Catholics who read about it. If "Charity" is an adequate label to tie on the local archetype of anti-Catholicism, might it not be wise to practice Charity itself in the content of the article?

MR. HENRY C. JOHNSON
Student at Centerbury College

I read with interest your article by the Rev. Thomas Barrett in the February 5th issue. Undeniably there is much of genuine humor and much that can be taken to heart by all in that article. But beneath the surface, though I might attribute it to a hypersensitivity, I seem to sense much that is destructive rather than constructive. There are several little things, but two or three of them seemed to give the essence of the article and they caused me to wonder a bit. I guess we are overemphasizing the value of the Holy Eucharist. Ezekiel was apparently wrong when he glimpsed all life as flowing from the foot of the altar. Then too, I now see that it is really not so bad to be "hazy" on the doctrine of the Incarnation; it is no longer the central fact of the Christian faith. And, of course, as to the after-dinner conversation, we are a bit foolish to conclude that the outside of a man is only the manifestation of the inside. I guess that the sacramental system will no longer change men. Perhaps the priesthood has no place in the reordering of the world. Still, I think there may be those who see something in the relationship of "the maniple and world government."

I am a postulant. I now understand that I have envisioned the wrong thing. It must have been my youthful impetuosity. I can see that a priest is not to interfere in the lives of men. It may well be that he no longer ministers the medicine of the world. The Catholic idea of grace must not really be expressed so clearly in the Prayer Book after all. The sacramental system is outmoded. The priesthood I had envisioned as the visible link between God and man is no more. These words now sound hollow as they have come through the years—

"O Almighty God, who hast committed to the hands of men the ministry of reconciliation;. . . ."

And yet, I am not so sure they do.

Church of South India Appeal Launched in America

Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship Heads Drive for Funds to Sustain Missionaries

By Gardiner M. Day

Cambridge, Mass.:—The Church of South India being a union of the Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist and four dioceses of the Anglican Church in South India was inaugurated on September 27 1947, in St. George's Cathedral in Madras, India. It was the first time that Churches of such differing polity had actually entered into organic union. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, president emeritus of Union Theological Seminary, has called it "the most significant event in ecclesiastical history since the Reformation." The four dioceses of the Church of South India, Burma and Ceylon entered the union after the Lambeth Conference of 1930 had given its general approval to the original scheme and the Lambeth consultative committee had approved changes made in 1938 and 1943 and the special committee appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Derby, in 1946 had approved the plan. Not only was approval given but the Lambeth Conference and the "Derby committee" encouraged the Anglicans in South India to enter into the union. The report of the latter committee ends with these words:

> "With this hope in view a majority of the committee thinks that the Scheme should go forward. The committee as a whole, if the Scheme comes into operation, would desire to wish Godspeed to the Church of South India, and to follow its fortunes with warm sympathy as well as with prayer."

One can readily imagine the shock which the Anglicans in South India received when they learned last May that the standing committee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel had passed a resolution which terminated the salaries of their forty-four missionaries and workers in South India as well as grants from the general and medical fund amounting to 25,000 pounds as of December 31, 1947. This meant that if their missionaries were to enter into this plan, in which they believed it was the will of God for them to enter, they would automatically cut themselves off from their source of income. Thus it became obvious that those in the Church of England who opposed the union were going to try to prevent by economic pressure the Anglican Church in South India from entering into the union. Fortunately the Archbishop of Canterbury realized the enormous injustice of this move on the part of the SPG and at a meeting of the standing committee called the following month the Archbishop reviewed the entire relationship of the Church of England to the proposed inauguration of the Church of South India and after a heated discussion the following resolution was passed:

> "That the standing committee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, believing that provision to continue former SPG work in South India within carefully prescribed conditions, to be inconsistent neither with the terms of its charter nor with the declaration of policy made at its special meeting on May 8, sanctions the acceptance of subscriptions for this purpose and the payment thereof into a separate account."

The Church Times reported that at one point in the discussion "the Bishop of Derby said it would be a great tragedy if people who thought as he did should be driven out of the Society." The Archbishop himself declared that "the one act of treachery would be the withdrawal of the Anglican element. It must be maintained bearing its full contribution to the life and tradition of the Church."

The Archbishop also wrote to Canon Elphic, of Bangalore, India:

> "I am very glad to have your letter as it enables me I hope to straighten some things out. Above all I hope I can encourage you and your fellows to join the South India Church, happily knowing that your place in the Church of England is secure at least until Lambeth, 1948. My own sure belief is that Lambeth, 1948, will continue that security."

All those who believe in Christian unity and hope and pray for the success of the Church of South India may rejoice that the Archbishop has spoken so clearly on this matter. At the same meeting the SPG voted each missionary one year's honorarium as well as the continuation of the educational and medical grants for a period of six months.

Nevertheless it is quite obvious that those who opposed the union were trying thereby to prevent the Anglicans from entering the union by economic pressure. It seems fairly evident considering the present economic condition of England and the generous help which England is giving the suffering people on the Continent of Europe that the deficit thus created by the SPG action cannot be made up by funds available through the Church of England. Consequently the Church must depend upon the help of friends of Christian unity all over the world.

Knowing that they faced a serious situation, two days after the inauguration the continuation committee of the Church of South India established a thanksgiving fund by passing a resolution which read in part:

> "It was resolved that a fund should be established immediately to meet all expenses not otherwise provided for and that this fund should be ultimately under the control of the synod of the Church of South India. There may be many who will desire to express their profound thankfulness to God for his wonderful grace in bringing about this longed for union of the Churches and this fund will give an opportunity for such thank offerings to be received and to be used to the best advantage in the service of the Kingdom of God through the Church of South India."

Many of us not only have rejoiced at this great venture of faith on the part of fellow Christians in South India but we earnestly hope that this union may blaze the trail for many similar unions in other parts of the world and thereby bring us closer to the ultimate goal of a united Christendom. Therefore all who believe in Christian unity should welcome this opportunity of testifying concretely to their belief by making a contribution to the thanksgiving fund and wherever possible affording to congregations and other Christian groups the opportunity of making contributions. Gifts now have the added value of giving encouragement and courage to those who in the midst of so many difficulties and so much uncertainty have entered into this union.

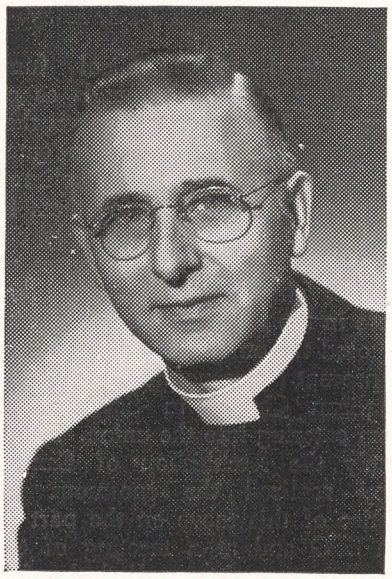
Inasmuch as our Church does not have any missionaries in South India at the present time the quickest way to insure the rapid transmission of funds is to send them to Mr. Harold Belcher of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, with the request that they be transmitted to Bishop Hollis. As the American board has representatives in South India Mr. Belcher has graciously agreed to forward all contributions as soon as they are received.

BISHOP OXNAM SCORES FALSE PATRIOTISM



Morristown, N. J.:—One result of the attack upon the patriotism of Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, led by Roman Catholics of this city, was the largest crowd ever to attend the annual Washington Birthday luncheon of the Washington Association, local organization. He had been attacked in sermons from Roman Catholic pulpits and through paid advertisements in the local newspaper, almost continually since February 1. On that Sunday the two local R.C. pastors charged him with being a "communist," "subversive," a sponsor or member of several so-called "front" organizations. (WITNESS, Feb. 19).

In his talk Bishop Oxnam said, "We need more faith in democracy and less fear of Communism. Communism will never win a democratic and just America." He scored the House un-American activities committee investigations, declaring that the American people can "strike Communism a harder blow when we abolish Jim Crow cars than when we summon movie actors to the klieg lights of Washington."

"I am one who rejects Communism," he continued. "I do not believe its philosophy of materialism, its use of dictatorship, its theory of social development, and its economies will ever bring freedom to man or abolish the exploitation of man by man."

He urged "realistic, creative, courageous, and constant" patriotism which seeks to provide adequate health service for "all the people," an improved insurance plan for aged persons, higher teacher salaries and the abolition of racial segregation.

tive genius and mass production have gone so far," Bishop Oxnam said, "that the common man now believes it is possible to produce enough food and clothing and shelter to bring every man the physical base upon which the life of the spirit may be reared. He holds that it is only ignorance and selfishness that stand between him and the realization of his desire for abundant life.

"And wise men, patriotic men, will consider that fact, and dedicate their genius to the high task of becoming one with Jesus of Nazareth who said 'I came that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly'."

ST. FAITH'S HOUSE TO CLOSE

New York:—The trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine have exercised an option whereby they will take over St. Faith's House, where the Training School for Deaconesses is located, and remodel it for cathedral offices. The Rev. Charles N. Shephard, warden of the school, announces that it is the hope of the school "that the educational resources will continue to be devoted to the training of deaconesses."

CHURCH DESTROYED BY FIRE

Danville, Pa.:—Christ Church and parish house here were completely destroyed by a fire which raged for several hours, February 13th. The 66 year old beautiful Gothic structure, a landmark in the community, collapsed as more than 200 firemen from Danville and seven neighboring towns fought the flames in subfreezing temperatures, hampered by a sleet storm and a broken water main.

The steeple crashed into the courtyard, almost hitting the rectory which was partially damaged. It was reported that the rector, the Rev. Squire B. Schofield, lost nearly all his furniture and possessions. Total damage to the property and furnishings was estimated at $775,000.

The church was built in 1882 at a cost of $240,000 as a memorial to Peter Baldy, senior warden, and his wife, and was one of the most beautiful and largest Episcopal churches in Pennsylvania.

OFFERING FOR CHINA

Austin, Texas:—A thrilling—and unscheduled—part of the program of the associated women of the diocese of Texas in their recent annual meeting was an offering of $245 for the Church's work in Yun-Kwei Province, China. The offering was made after an address by the Rev. John DeForest Pettus, rector of All Saints'-by-the-Sea, Santa Barbara, Cal., who told of the work of missionary clergy and doctors there. Incidentally, St. George's Church, Port Arthur, Texas, pays the salary of a native clergyman in Yun-Kwei Province. Mr. Pettus urged that other parishes might use this more permanent method of supporting missionary work.

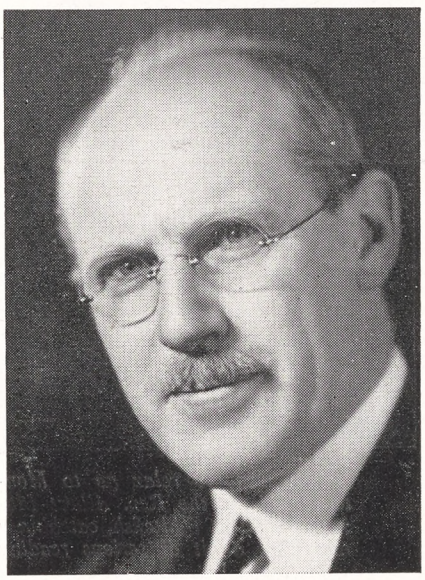
Country Parson Gilbert Dies After Evening Service

Won National Fame for His Unusual Methods In Ministering in Connecticut Rural Areas

Middletown, Conn.: — The Rev. George B. Gilbert, one of the most colorful of the priests of the Episcopal Church, died here on February 20 of a heart attack. Himself a farmer as well as a parson, he supported his family largely by farming and yet found time to run churches successfully. A number of years ago he was selected by Harper and Brothers to write his biography and their statement that he was a "typical country parson" brought protests from critics, one declaring, "There is nothing typical about him . . . this is the story of a precedent-shattering individualist."



Mr. Gilbert was a country missionary who gave his parishioners ice cream and coffee along with the sermon, illustrated his discussions of the Gospel with lantern slides, and carried a portable phonograph to his pulpit to help out his preaching. He visited farms and homes over the seventy square miles of his pastorate to provide haircuts and market reports as needed, mend the plumbing of his flock and help with the hay pitching.

"It is not church form that makes good Christians," he wrote in his autobiography. "Too often the theologian doesn't know how to get along with people. The Church cannot fail to be ineffective unless its clergy reach the poor."

Preacher Gilbert considered it silly to follow Church calendars. "The time to have the great festivals of the Church is when people can get there. Easter comes too early in the year for most of the people in my churches. The roads are impassable. So I just wait until the weather gets good and then send notices that Easter will be next Sunday."

He also had little use for Sunday schools. "The catechism says that a child should be brought to the bishop to be confirmed when he can say the Lord's Prayer, the Creed and the Ten Commandments and all other things he ought to know for his soul's health. Anyone who comes to church certainly knows the Lord's Prayer, the Creed and the Ten Commandments, and anyone who listens to me preach regularly knows 'all other things he ought to know for his soul's health.' So we just don't have Sunday school in my churches. Instead I use the time either giving the kids haircuts or fixing them up a clam chowder."

Mr. Gilbert was the originator of the "Pastoral Parson" letters, a feature of the "Rural New Yorker." He contributed those homespun reports of a country preacher's life and problems from 1920 to 1940, when he turned the feature over to a successor.

The Rev. Henry Smith Leiper, American secretary of the World Council of Churches, announces plans for the first assembly to meet this summer in Amsterdam (see page 13)

Mr. Gilbert was a member for one term of the lower house of the Connecticut Assembly and for a period he was chaplain of the state senate. He also had served on the Middletown city council and the Middletown board of education.

Born on a farm near Randolph, Vt., Mr. Gilbert started teaching school at the age of sixteen to put himself through Trinity College at Hartford, Conn. Living mostly on cocoa and crackers and with no time for anything but hard work, he completed the course and entered Berkeley Divinity School. Afterward, he said that the schools had failed him in his preparation for the ministry and he devised his own creed: That the Church should conform to the needs of the people.

In Mr. Gilbert's opinion, his own Emanuel Church in the village of Killingworth demanded a minister who could enjoy Sunday baseball; keep the sermons short and sprinkle them with good stories; serve up a picnic in the church, and go on a Sabbath fishing expedition. With such methods, he built the shabby, seldom-used little church into a thriving congregation.

For many years Mr. Gilbert also served two other churches in the area, making his rounds first on a bicycle, then with horse and buggy, and later in a wheezing old automobile. In 1941, he retired from the ministry officially, but his retirement was as unorthodox as his ministry: he continued as minister-in-charge of Emanuel Church and worked as hard as ever. He preached his final sermon at a prayer meeting the night before he died.

STUDENTS MAKE A SURVEY

Detroit: — The possibility of establishing a mission in the Herman Gardens housing project in the western section of Detroit is being explored at the present time. This project is the result of a survey undertaken last November, at the request of Bishop Emrich, by 26 members of the Canterbury Club of Wayne University under the leadership of William I. Johnson, diocesan lay reader, and the Rev. Seward H. Bean, chaplain of the Canterbury Club. Meeting at St. Matthias' Church on the afternoon of November 30, the survey group proceeded to cover the housing project, which sprawls over a quarter of a square mile and in which 9,000 persons live. Seven hundred calls were made, of which 350 brought responses, but only 9 of these families claimed allegiance to the Episcopal Church. In addition, 200 calls were made in the district consisting of private homes, where it was found that the percentage of Episcopalians was much higher.

There is no Episcopal Church for four miles in any direction from Herman Gardens, and no Church with any direct transportation for a distance of six miles. While the survey was planned mostly for the purpose of securing information, the prospects seemed favorable for the organization of work in that area, and consequently letters were sent to the 20 Episcopal families located, inviting them to an organization meeting. These letters, together with newspaper and other publicity, reached a considerable group. The organization meeting was held, as a result of which Bishop Emrich gave permission for the renting of space in the Ruddiman School, in the Herman Gardens area, and for the starting of services.

The first service was held on February 15, with 22 present. The Rev. Percy D. Jones, assistant minister at St. John's, celebrated the Holy Communion and preached the sermon. It is planned to organize a Church school in the near future, and Mr. Johnson, the lay reader, will for the present supervise the work of the new mission. So far, no name has been chosen.

DISCUSS VOCATIONS IN TEXAS

Austin, Texas:—The diocese of Texas will conduct its first vocational conference for church women March 12 to 14 with Miss Helen Turnbull, director of Windham House, as leader. Sponsored by the personnel committee of the associated women of the diocese, the conference's purpose is to present opportunities for a vocation in Church work to college graduates and students and high school seniors. A recent questionnaire sent to the clergy of the diocese indicates that numerous girls are already interested in Church vocations. The conference will be held at the administration building of the Lower Colorado River Authority on Lake Buchanan, 65 miles northwest of Austin.

At the recent annual council the diocese approved a committee report recommending the establishment of a graduate training center for women religious workers in Austin. A special committee with executive board representation has been assigned the task of working out details of the proposal. It is hoped that the center may be opened by September. It probably will be a cooperative project with the Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

SCHOOL CONTROVERSY BRINGS SUIT

Santa Fe, N. M. (RNS) :—Harry L. Bigbee, local attorney, announced here he will file suit "in the near future" to attack "religious encroachment in public schools."

He will bring the suit, Bigbee said, in behalf of a "group of interested citizens from several parts of the state" and plans to name as defendants "the state school superintendent, the state board of education, the governing boards of 28 New Mexico school districts in which members of Catholic religious orders have been employed as teachers and the 136 such teachers."

Bigbee explained he is prepared to pursue the case through the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary, because

If you want to relax go to Montana. This is the Rev. Albert Masuda, rector at Whitefish, catching a nap after a bit of serious reading

"I feel there may be little chance to win the case at a lower level." The projected court action, according to Bigbee, will be directed "not alone at Catholic nuns and brothers teaching in public schools but also against the use in public schools of Catholic-indoctrinated textbooks."

He added that the case will also charge violation of the first amendment to the U. S. Constitution, "the laws and constitution of New Mexico concerning free text books and those concerning the teaching of religion in public schools."

Meanwhile the attempt of the group of Dixon citizens to rid its public schools of Roman Catholic nuns and priests as teachers has the support of the N. M. Protestant ministers convocation. Meeting at Albuquerque, they voted to organize a state council of churches and directed its finance committee to raise funds to aid Dixon Protestants. Bigbee, addressing the meeting, said that $375,657 was distributed as the teachers' payroll to the Roman Catholic Church last year. He declared that the amount was paid by the state without any deductions for income tax, federal or state.

QUOTE SYSTEM FOR PRESS

New York: — Only "properly accredited" press people, from both the secular and religious press, will be admitted to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam, Holland, August 22 to September 4, according to Henry Smith Leiper, secretary of the American Committee for the World Council. He stressed, however, that "as a general principle all press representatives who apply are to be accredited" as "there can be no discrimination shown."

A quota for the press representatives of Holland has already been established, and one for the United States will be considered later. Holland will be allowed two religious and eight secular reporters at the assembly. Leiper said the number for the U. S. "will be determined largely on what turns up in applications." He pointed out that restrictions on press coverage at Amsterdam are necessary because of the limited facilities available, and are aimed primarily at curbing the attendance of a disproportionate number of feature writers and reporters from any one religious communion.

Asked if correspondents of Communist papers would be accredited, if they replied, Leiper said they would be, but that it would probably be necessary to have some system of priority for large, influential papers. "We just won't have room for everybody," he observed.

DIRECTS WORK AT SHRINE MONT

Orkney Springs, Va.:—W. E. Moomaw, business manager, is making the arrangements for the conferences and other activities this summer at Shine Mont, Church conference and vacation center. A conference for the young people of the diocese of Washington will be held for ten days in July, followed by a clergy conference. There will also be a seminar program which is being arranged by Canon George J. Cleveland of Washington Cathedral.

EDITORIALS

This Is It

THERE are some who have held consistently that, "It can't happen here," while others were just as sure that unless we were vigilant the loss of true democracy could happen here. The day of academic consideration of the possibility has passed for the campaign to regiment the minds of our youth has officially been inaugurated by the United States office of education. Fifteen leading educators have been added to the office to work on the project, heading up school authorities in all parts of the country to work on a volunteer basis. The announced purpose of the enterprise is to instill in all young minds the sanctity of the status quo in the United States.

Fear has been expressed by many educators that the strengthening of the U. S. department of education, together with increased federal aid for schools, would result in an attempt to dictate what should be taught in the schools. The present campaign proves that such fears were well founded. We have been warned that the immense investments of the military department in scientific pursuits in the colleges would effect free education. Can any school receiving such large grants from the military afford to hesitate in the "patriotic" duty of falling in line with the aims of this project? A series of conferences, to be held in every state in the union, will bring together school and college officials, according to the newspaper announcement. Three of the principles to be promulgated at these meetings are especially interesting:

(1) "The positive values of democracy as well as the negative aspects of communism and fascism are to be taught." No negative aspects of 'the American way of life' as now constituted are to be allowed. A teacher who dares to indulge in constructive criticism of our present set-up or to suggest improvements therein will be anathema. Our seminaries should cease the study of the works of William Temple, for he once stated that, "we need the freedom of democracy combined with the responsibility of communism." To quote that statement in an American classroom is henceforth treason.

(2) "Give to the young people a clean understanding of the essential elements of the American way of life." It is noteworthy that a "clean" rather than a "full" understanding of our present situation is to be given. Evidently this means that a whitewashed version is to be doled out. Certainly young people in their innocent condition are not to be exposed to all the facets of our "dog eat dog" philosophy which the world knows as the American way of life.

(3) "Young people should know what communism and fascism have done to make cannon fodder of youth." Are young people to be taught that Hitler, Mussolini and Tojo used universal military training to make cannon fodder of their young people? Or will they be instructed in the methods of the Kuomintang which uses 80% of its national budget for war activities or of Greece which decrees death for anyone who dares participate in a strike, as examples of democratic systems? Perhaps they are to underline the purity of the United States in this matter for by our increased activity in atom production we are preparing for a Hiroshimo method of producing atom fodder rather than cannon fodder.

We don't believe that Dr. Studebaker's project will work in this country. For all its weaknesses and imperfections, we have enough faith in American democracy and in the men and women who compose it to believe that they will rebel at this attempt to use the schools for indoctrination rather than for education. We believe that the commissioner of education underrates American educators when he presumes to put upon them the task of regimenting the minds of the youth of our country.

"QUOTES"

RECENTLY a mother said to me with a certain satisfaction, "My son never goes to church any more. I don't think he has attended for several years, but he will never be anything but an Episcopalian. No one could ever make him leave the Episcopal Church." Well! Has he not already left the Episcopal Church? Isn't quitting it leaving it? There is surely no consolation in reflecting that your child will not go into some other church although he has quit the church of your choice. It would be better for him if he did go to some other. He would be giving some outward expression to his Christian life. The Episcopal Church is not strengthened by persons who admire it in a sentimental fashion, but never give any time, thought, money, or service to it.

—Bishop Carruthers

Wrath and Mercy

WE ARE reminded of God as wrath and mercy in the collect for the fourth Sunday in Lent. We acknowledge that we are deserving of punishment because of our evil deeds, and yet strengthened by God's lovingkindness to try and live beyond the consequences of our wrongdoings. Here is that marvellous attribute of God,—his patience. His wrath and judgment have descended upon civilizations and institutions, but only after man's misdeeds have laid provocation upon provocation. Beginning with Abraham, and through the whole prophetic teaching of the Old Testament, God has been revealed as staying destruction as long as some men would repent and return to him. In the preaching of John the Baptist, as well as in the Gospel, the note of judgment is tempered with that of God's forgiveness after repentance.

Even knowing this, however, his patience with humanity in the present age is a great marvel. Increasingly we find our society placing property and material values above human values. Christianity proclaims that man is potentially a son of God, and that the whole of creation before man exists only that it may serve man. Whenever loyalty to property wins over human welfare, God's purpose in creation has been affronted. Restrictive covenants, and the many forms of discrimination because of race, are among these affronts. If the Palestine partition plan is abandoned by our government, oil properties will have been the guiding principle, not human welfare. Yet God does not send the consuming fire. He is patient. It may be that he sees some are floundering towards repentance. They may, with his help, be able to call others to the change of mind which must precede the Kingdom. Punishment is not escaped by confessing misdeeds, but the awful wrath is "relieved." In order to have this accomplished, we pray in the words of this Collect.

Discipline in Marriage Questions

by Lane W. Barton

Bishop of Eastern Oregon

THE subject is a happy one in that it injects into a discussion of marriage the idea of discipline. Not a little of the unhappiness in many modern marriages can be traced to the failure of young people to realize the close relationship between marriage and discipline. Christian marriage involves discipline, because the Christian life is a life of discipline. Whether we take the words of Jesus with regard to the vine and the branches and the pruning to which the branches are subject on the part of the husbandman, or his words, "he that would be my disciple, let him take up his cross and follow me," we cannot escape the emphasis upon discipline. Two people cannot possibly live together on intimate terms in the same house without exercising discipline upon each other. Therefore, it is quite sound to think of marriage in relationship to discipline.

While our primary interest lies in considering the discipline which discipleship to Christ and membership in the Christian Church imposes upon the parties to Christian marriage, it will be well first to consider the discipline which marriage itself imposes. On the human level there is an inner discipline. Marriage in spite of the gay, irresponsible and quite superficial happiness of courtship and the honeymoon, involves a discipline which is born of the troubles and the responsibilities and the problems which come to most married couples. It may be financial worries, or illness, or the difficulty of learning to live upon intimate terms with another human being. Whatever it is, it is a form of discipline. Whenever a couple celebrating their golden wedding anniversary tell me that they have never had an argument or a problem I suspect one of two things; either they are both colossal liars or one or the other has been a putty-type personality and they have missed the fun of learning to live together. For the difficulties and troubles natural to marriage we can thank God, because it is the discipline imposed by such situations which helps to transform the superficial puppy-love of the honeymoon into the profound love and respect and devotion which come when a man and a woman share and solve their problems and difficulties. The wise parson will not miss the opportunity to prepare young couples for this sort of discipline and for the rich reward which comes to those who make wise use of it.

One might ask, how can a young couple be made to endure this discipline of marriage? Many of our divorces come because neither party to the marriage is willing to put up with the inconveniences and hardships. This suggests another kind of inner discipline, the discipline born of the conviction that their marriage is a part of God's plan and purpose for them, and that their marriage is a tool placed at their disposal for the fashioning of a Christian home and for the nurture of Christian character both in their children and in themselves. Once two young Christians come to feel this inner discipline, there wells up within them a power which carries them through the difficulties of marriage to the deep love and companionship characteristic of Christian marriage.

But there is also an external discipline in this matter of Christian marriage. God is the author and source of that discipline. The blessed relationship we call marriage is not simply the result of a biological urge but, as the Prayer Book reminds us, is "instituted of God." And because this relationship is instituted of God, and because God in Christ intended his disciples to have the benefit of an external discipline, we have the Church or the body of Christ, that members of it might have the help which this discipline affords.

We might put this discipline in two categories. In the first place there is the discipline of public worship. Take the sacrament of the Holy Communion. When a young couple offer themselves to God in the service of the Holy Communion, "Here we are, dear God: we want to make our lives count as husband and wife; we want our home to be a haven of blessing and of peace: we want to be thy servants in the rearing of a Christian family; we need thy help. Take and use us as thou wilt," there are bound to be results, and that marriage is bound to issue to the glory of God.

There is another external discipline exercised by the Church as the body of Christ. It comes from the Church as fellowship. A story will illustrate this point. During the past year, a young woman sought out her rector to arrange her marriage to a young soldier. It had to be in the middle of the day on the coming Sunday, because the lad was to sail for overseas and had been granted only a few hours' leave. The only time possible was immediately following the eleven o'clock service. Because the bride's family had been connected with the parish for at least three generations, the rector persuaded her to let him invite the members of the congregation to remain for her wedding. The congregation entered into the spirit of the occasion and the church was filled with her friends and the friends of her family. Before the bride and groom left the altar for the recessional, the rector said to her, "As you leave the church, look at that congregation. They are your friends. They are pulling for you. As long as you live they will be praying for you." Granted, this situation was forced. She would, but for the exigencies of war, have had her wedding at the more fashionable hour of 8:30 Saturday evening. But it was a situation which gave the imagination a chance to play with the idea of what might happen if our modern marriages could be as much a part of the worship of the Church as that one was, and of what might happen to marriage if each young couple might see themselves as part of a fellowship,—a Christian fellowship, mind you,—which cares for them, which is intensely interested in them, which counts upon them, and which carries them continually in its prayers.

LAMBETH is to discuss the subject of "Discipline in Marriage Questions" and this article is about to conclude without mentioning the attitude and action which Lambeth might take. Obviously, the subject has to do primarily with the matter of the discipline which the Church is called upon to exercise in the case of those who fall short of the Christian idea of marriage and suffer the catastrophe of divorce. It is the conviction of the writer that if the Church could exercise and encourage in the lives of her young people the kind of discipline mentioned, there would be fewer cases of broken marriages. But a few words must be said in relation to discipline with regard to the remarriage of divorced persons. Three points are suggested as an approach to this matter. The first has to do with an oft repeated remark by the late Bishop Page of Michigan, a man intensely happy in his own marriage but who had the deep sympathy to appreciate the problem of those who were unhappily married, "A mistake in marriage,—which is the easiest mistake to make, which a man or woman can make in perfect good faith,—must not be the only sin the Church will not forgive!" Another approach comes from the remark of Bishop Coadjutor Emrich of Michigan to the effect that the Church can ill afford to base its marriage discipline upon the attitude of celibates toward marriage! My own experience has been that the most bitter, bigoted, and cruel reactions toward this problem of marriage discipline come from celibates, and spinsters. Why must those who know least about marriage have most to say about how to deal with its problems?

The third point is suggested by the fact that much of our difficulty comes from persons who have been very casual and indifferent members of the Church. These are the people who never attend church nor support the church until they want to be married. I recall one couple who asked to "hire" the church for their wedding. They wanted the scenery and the atmosphere and the church with the longest aisle! Then they import a florist to hide everything churchly in the sanctuary, and a social secretary to tell the rector how to perform the ceremony according to the most approved social etiquette. The writer is not as contemptuous of these folks as he appears. The fault lies rather with a congregation which permits this "undisciplined" use of the church. The fault lies also with a Church, clergy and laity alike, which is satisfied to admit to confirmation persons who are so superficially and inadequately trained as to know nothing of the discipline of the Christian life. There will always be a need for the Church to exercise discipline where marriage has been dissolved by divorce. We hope and pray that this discipline may be exercised according to the mind of Christ. There is especial need, also, for mercy and understanding toward those whose difficulties arose prior to their connection with the Church. But there will be less need for this discipline if we can take steps which give to those admitted to the Church in baptism and in the ratifying of their baptismal vows in confirmation a solid grounding in the faith and fear and love of the God we see in Jesus, and a loyalty to Jesus as Master and Lord. This means preparing young parents at the time of their infant's baptism to enable them to carry out in the home the implications of Christian baptism. It means adequate preparation of young people for confirmation. It means adequate incorporation of every baptized and confirmed member into the fellowship of the body of Christ, not as an aggregation of the socially elite, but as the closely knit family of the redeemed. The more intense the discipline from within, the less need there will be for discipline from without.

by Everett H. Jones

The Bishop of West Texas

ALMOST any member of our communion, whether clergyman or layman, when asked the question, "What is the genius of the Anglican Communion?" would mention our effectiveness in the field of worship. We have a rather smug assurance that what we have is near perfection. It is surprising how early this conviction can appear. Here in the diocese of West Texas we had recently an amusing example of what I mean. A Church School class of young children had been taken by their teacher to a service of another denomination. As they discussed the experience afterward, a little boy in the class said to the teacher, "Did you notice, Mrs. Smith, that they didn't have any altar?" The teacher said, "Yes, I did." "And they don't have a font for baptism." The teacher nodded. "And they put the pulpit in the center instead of on one side," the boy continued. His teacher agreed with all his observations. Whereupon he concluded, "You know, Mrs. Smith, I guess we have the real McCoy."

I confess that after an inspiring service in which the spirit of the Book of Common Prayer has found vital interpretation. I often think to myself: "Truly this is as it should be. If we were only as right in our religious education, our stewardship, our work with young people, our missionary zeal, as we are in our worship!"

Apparently a good many people in our sister communions have a similar attitude toward our gift for worship, for the Prayer Book has become the happy hunting ground of our liturgical-minded brethren. The results, I might add, are not altogether satisfactory. This thought has often occurred to me after attending one of the synthetic services of worship achieved by choosing elements from one source and another: there is a real difference between a Christmas tree that has grown through the years in the forest and one that has been put together in the town square by sticking evergreen branches into a wooden pole.

It is appropriate that one topic on the agenda of the Lambeth Conference is "Ideals and Forms of Worship." Recently the Archbishop of Canterbury, in commenting on this subject, has said: "It will be for the Conference to consider and survey the general position of the Anglican Communion, together with the nature and the responsibilities of its special tradition. On the positive side, that means considering the strength of its tradition and its essential place for the full witness of the Catholic Church. Thus the Conference will be led to think of the special responsibilities which rest upon the Anglican Communion in these turbulent days. It will also consider no doubt how that tradition finds embodiment in the ideals and forms of worship which are characteristic of our Communion.

"On the other side, it will be necessary to consider dangers which threaten our Communion and its tradition or, if you like to put it so, the centrifugal forces which may be detected. Some of these are due to external, geographical and historical causes, but some of them are internal to our Communion itself and have a bearing on the diversity of forms and ideals of worship within our Communion. How far can that diversity go? What are the essential qualities which must be preserved as necessary parts of the Anglican tradition? While thus certain dangers will have to be considered, I am sure that the main stress will be on the positive side, setting out as clearly as can be the ethos of Anglican worship, both in what it shares with other Communions and in what differentiates its own distinctive position."

"What are the essential qualities which must be preserved as necessary parts of the Anglican tradition?" This, I believe, is the key sentence in the above statement. It accents the fact that we are intent upon preserving "qualities" rather than "forms." There is a human tendency whenever we have had a deep spiritual experience to believe that the experience is inseparable from the setting in which it came to us. There is a similar tendency to believe that any change in the words which express our faith will mean a change, and possibly a dilution, in the faith itself. It is important for all of us to remember that the Prayer Book as we know it and love it is the result of many changes and adaptations; it is the product of historic evolution. We have a growing liturgy. If it ceases to grow, it will cease to live!

A recent writer has pointed out that the present burst of life in the field of architecture, at a time when there is a dearth of new art forms, is due to the combination of fidelity to the past with boldness of innovation. There has been an appreciation of traditional forms along with openness of mind concerning the possibilities of novelty. So in the Anglican tradition we need a fidelity to our Catholic and historic faith combined with a fresh and contemporaneous expression of that faith in terms for today. Like the householder in our Lord's parable, we must bring out of our treasure "things old and new."

WE FACE again the perennial responsibility of our comprehensive Anglican tradition: we are both Catholic and Protestant; we believe in both the priestly and the prophetic elements in worship; we accept both the revelation of God in the past and his continuing revelation in the present. Our task, in the words of the preface in our American Prayer Book, is to find "the happy mean between too much stiffness in refusing and too much easiness in admitting, variations in things once advisedly established." The Lambeth Conference can be of great help to all of us if wise guidance is given on this most important question: How can we bring our historic faith and worship into vital union with the needs and problems of modern men? This is not a new problem but it has a new urgency. For at least two reasons we must press on to a more adequate solution than we have found thus far.

In the first place, some solution is necessary if we are to realize our potential ministry to the world around us. I have no personal complaint with the forms of the Book of Common Prayer. I have been nurtured by them and I love them, even when they use language it has taken me a long time to understand. I would never want a change in the wording of the Lord's Prayer or the Creeds. But I do believe we would seem to many a visitor more real and vital in our worship if we changed archaic words to their modern equivalents, and if at intervals there were expressions so startlingly contemporary that a participant in our worship would say, "This historic Church is talking to me and to my generation." I am inclined to favor a shorter alternative form of Holy Communion which might be used, with the permission of the bishop, for those occasions when the present liturgy is too long. And I think there is good reason for the permissive use of intinction, as an adaptation in method of administration which involves no change in our belief or teaching about Holy Communion.

I offer these suggestions as a present extension of the kind of adaptation which created the English Prayer Book of 1549 and the American Prayer Book of 1789. Their purpose is not to change the faith but to make it more available. They grow out of my conviction that we have not begun to reach the troubled and groping spiritual seekers all around us who do not realize we have what they are looking for.

Constantly I am aware of two paradoxical truths about our Church: it seems strange and remote to those who know it slightly, and it seems gloriously adequate and soul-satisfying to those who know it well. To some extent, this is an inescapable dilemma. I would never favor reducing the language of devotional experience at its best to the level of the spiritual beginner. There will always be a certain gulf between the language and atmosphere of "the society of the redeemed" and that of the pagan and secular world. What I am contending is that we who are happy within the Church ought to reach out to those who are confused and seeking, not only by our personal interest and concern but also in the very liturgy itself.

The other reason for urgency in this matter of a sound adaptation of our worship is so that we may make our full contribution to the liturgical movement now spreading throughout Christendom. In many branches of the Christian Church there is evidence of a desire for more satisfying forms of worship, forms which will have historic validity and also a modern relevance. In this movement the Anglican tradition is a subject of frequent discussion. Here is an area in which we are strategically situated to meet a recognized need and to share with others that which God has entrusted to us.

We need to be reminded in our dealings with our fellow-Christians of other Communions of the two emphases made by the Archbishop of Canterbury in his statement quoted above. We have both a negative and a positive responsibility. We must, to be sure, protect that which is unique in our tradition and safeguard it from dangers, both those from without and those from within. But we have also the responsibility of presenting winsomely and sharing freely the treasures of our heritage. It is imperative that our zeal to "protect" should never exceed our zeal to "share."

Writing recently in the quarterly, Christendom, Dennis de Rougemont said: "The true problem of the century is that of the community. It is bound up with the problem of a common language. Liturgy can contribute toward recreating and authenticating this language; but only under two equally determinative conditions: it must remain Biblical at its source, and it must find a contemporaneous form."

We of the Anglican tradition have before us "an open door." We have the ingredients for "the common language" of Christendom. All the central notes of New Testament Christianity which are being re-discovered today are the familiar overtones of the Book of Common Prayer. Our liturgy is not only "Biblical at its source" but has had the enrichment and testing of long historic usage. If we can show a parallel creative and contemporaneous adaptability, we can scarcely foresee how great may be the purposes of God for us!

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THOSE attending General Convention, 1937, probably will remember Merwin K. Hart. He was the flag-drapped gentleman, of our communion I am told, who started out early that year to prevent the CLID (now the Episcopal League for Social Action) from holding forums. A smart man, he never functions as an individual but always through organizations, of which he is said to have several score to use as the occasion demands. In this case he came up with the Church Layman's Association. Whether anyone belonged besides Brother Hart no one ever knew, but the device was sufficiently effective to get yards of space in the papers. In fact he did the job so well that "standing room only" signs had to be hung each day at the forum meetings, and both Houses adjourned promptly to take in the show.

Came war, with its united front against Fascism, and Mr. Hart dropped from view. But he's back, functioning now as the president of the National Economic Council, Inc., reaching his public through a weekly newsletter. The January 15 number is an interesting document. In it he has high praise for Franco; protests against the trials of Nazi civilians; declares that the U. S., through "false propaganda" was "lured into a thing called the United Nations"; states that it is because of the Communists that "the country for some years has been rocked with agitation to protect Jews and Negroes from discrimination."

And just what does Churchman Hart recommend to his clients by way of protecting themselves from Communists, Jews, Negroes, this "thing called the United Nations" and "something called Democracy"?

These are his words: "We have one concrete suggestion to make to every citizen who is impressed by the potential danger. Let him possess himself of one or more guns, making sure that they are in good condition, that he and other members of his family know how to use them, and that he has a reasonable supply of ammunition. . . . We advise all our readers to proceed lawfully to equip themselves so they and their households may not be defenseless if what happened in Spain and France happens here. It will be better to have guns, and have them ready, and not have to use them, than to have the need for them arise and not have them. The Lord helps those who help themselves."

So sit down quietly and ask yourself what would happen in these United States if such advice appeared in the Daily Worker, communist newspaper. Mr. Hearst would run out of red ink in 24 hours and Congressman Thomas and his Un-American Committee would stage a show in Washington that would make the Hollywood purge seem as quiet as a mill pond on a hot summer night. Yet Mr. Hart's call to arms was unmentioned in the newspapers and Mr. Thomas and his colleagues are too busy sniffing for "Reds" to bother with Mr. Hart, though their attention has been called to his blast.

And don't think, please, that Brother Hart isn't adequately supported. Unlike most of his "organizations," this National Economic Council, Inc. has a board of directors. Among them are Charles G. Dawes, former vice-president of the U.S.; John J. Raskob, director of various corporations; O. A. Taylor, vice-president of S. H. Kress & Co.; Thomas Creigh, former general counsel of Cudahy Packing Co.

Then too I was interested to find as one of Mr. Hart's directors, Prof. William Starr Myers of Princeton. I'm interested because I met Prof. Myers a few months ago when a number of us met

Announce Schedule of Sessions Of World Council

The First Assembly Will Open in Amsterdam August 22 with John R. Mott First Speaker

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—A tentative schedule of sessions for the first assembly of the World Council of Churches, meeting at Amsterdam, has been announced. The opening service will be on the afternoon of August 22 with John R. Mott speaking on the general theme of the assembly, "Man's Disorder and God's Design."

A review of the historical interdenominational movements leading up to the first assembly will highlight the first plenary session on the evening of the 22nd. Addresses will be given by the Rt. Rev. George H. K. Bell, Bishop of Chichester; Bishop Ingve Brilioth of Sweden; Dr. Marc Boegner of France; and Dr. John A. Mackay of the United States.

On Monday morning, August 23, the constituting assembly will receive a report from W. A. Visser 't Hooft of Geneva, general secretary, on the program undertaken by the Council's provisional committee during the decade since it came into being at Utrecht in 1938. His report will be referred to four special committees and by the close of the day it is expected that the preliminary stages in the formal organization of the World Council will have been completed.

Also on the 23rd, Karl Barth, Swiss theologian, will make the opening statement on the work of the World Council's study commissions, and Prof. C. H. Dodd of the U. S. will discuss the Biblical basis of the assembly's theme.

The four study programs will be presented on Tuesday, August 24, by speeches on the various subjects to be considered: "The Universal Church in God's Design," Bishop Gustav Aulen of Sweden, chairman; "God's Design and Man's Witness," Prof. Hendrik Kraemer of Holland, chairman; "The Church and the Disorder of Society," Reinhold Niebuhr of the United States, chairman; and "The Church and International Affairs," Mr. Kenneth Grubb of England, executive chairman.

From Wednesday, August 25, on, the assembly will be divided into sectional meetings for six days of study. Delegates will devote morning sessions to consideration of the reports presented by the four commissions all of which will be ready in galley proof by the time of the assembly, and which will later be published in book form.

Afternoons, the four special committees will be in session. One will study the constitution as now framed, plus seven or eight proposed amendments; another will seek to establish the policy of the World Council as an organization; the third will handle the administrative details of the Council; and the fourth will consider miscellaneous concerns of the various national Churches, including anti-Semitism, women in the Church, mutual aid among the Churches, and training of lay leadership. All commissions and committees will report back to the plenary sessions in the closing days of the assembly, which will end on Saturday, Sept. 4. The plenary sessions, it was said, will adopt and not just receive the various reports submitted to it, subject to possible revision from the floor.

There will be three public meetings during the assembly, the first on "The Christian Witness in the World," the second on "The Christian Witness in the Social and National Order," and the third on "The Christian Witness and the International Order."

Alternates to the assembly will have study sessions of their own, while a more popular program will be arranged for visitors and guests.

Henry Smith Leiper, associate general secretary of the World Council, announced that briefing conferences for American delegates, alternates and press representatives who are going to Amsterdam will be held in New York City on April 19 and in St. Louis on April 26. A conference is also being considered for the West Coast. Preliminary to the assembly, it is planned to hold large ecumenical services in churches throughout the country on Whitsunday, May 16, to focus the attention of Protestantism on the imporportance of the sessions at Armsterdam.

speakers appearing before a committee of the state legislature. The crowd of 150 persons that jammed the small room applauded frequently as the speakers, one Negro and seven white, urged approval of bills now before the legislature.

The Rev. W. L. Ransome, president of the local civic council and the only Negro to speak, said that the segregation repeal bills presented a fine opportunity for Virginia to show President Truman that the state "can handle its own affairs without his help." He said that Negroes were asking for the legislation and that "nobody from outside, no radical group, is telling us to do this," nor should the committee "hold it against us" if some undesired and unsolicited "radicals" appear in behalf of the bills. "You know it is easy to stick with the status quo," he said. "A body at rest remains at rest. Unless somebody agitates this thing it will be just as it is until Gabriel blows his horn."

Another speaker was the Rev. Carroll Brooke, Episcopal rector of Staunton, who explained that he spoke as an individual and not for the Church. He appealed specifically for the repeal of segregation statutes covering trains, streetcars and buses as the first step. He pointed out that such segregation already has been ruled out in interstate commerce. A member of the committee asked Mr. Brooke if he favored repeal of the law forbidding intermarriage, to which the clergyman replied "that's the same old red herring, continually being thrown into this situation" and declared that it has "nothing to do with what we are discussing here."

ble permanent organization will be planned by the committee, which will be enlarged as other denominational groups have opportunity to name representatives.

The persons attending the meeting here were from 20 states. Throughout the country, it was stated, there are about 350 Protestant institutions for the aged. Roswell P. Barnes, associate general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, said there had been no consistency of policy and practice among Protestant agency services to the aged.

The Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, Episcopalian and a secretary of the Federal Council, explained the conference was called to give opportunity for institutional executives to exchange ideas and information, and develop improved service through cooperative action of homes for the aged.

Vital Issues

Englewood, N. J.: — The high schools of Newark, N. J. recently banned numbers of The Nation because they carried articles by Paul Blanchard on certain practices of the Roman Church, particularly in the field of medicine. Rector J. A. Mitchell of St. Paul's here, doubtless had these in mind when he announced a series of talks on Tuesday evening in Lent on "Is the Episcopal Church both Catholic and Protestant?"; "The Relation of Church and State"; "Religion in the Public Schools"; "Religion and Medicine."

Brotherhood Service

Detroit: — An excellent presentation of the Christian philosophy of race relations was made by the Rev. John M. Burgess, chaplain at Howard University, Washington, in a sermon delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, at an inter-racial service. The cathedral was well filled for the service. Participating clergy included, besides Mr. Burgess, Dean John J. Weaver; the Rev. F. Ricksford Meyers, rector of St. Matthew's; the Rev. W. B. Spofford, Jr., Executive Secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action and rector of St. Thomas'; the Rev. Wm. B. Sperry, rector of Christ Church, and chairman of the diocesan department of Christian social relations (under whose auspices the service was held); and the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, diocesan director of social relations, who arranged the details for the service.

Special invitations to the service had been issued to the members of the Episcopal Games League, the National Association for the Advacement of Colored People, and the local alumni of Howard University. Representatives of the choirs of St. Cyprian's and St. Matthew's Churches led the music.

Following the service, a reception, attended by hundreds who had been present, was given in the Cathedral House by the Women's business and professional league of the cathedral.

Later in the evening, another reception for Mr. Burgess was held at the home of Dr. Canute G. Constable, an alumnus of Howard University, for the Detroit chapter of Howard alumni.

Mr. Burgess is the first denominational chaplain to be assigned by a Church to Howard University, and has oversight of more than 600 Episcopal students there.

UMT Condemned

Newark, N. J.: — The board of social relations of the diocese of Newark went on record at a recent meeting as being opposed to universal military training. The resolution was sent to the judiciary committee and to congressmen of the state. The resolution received opposition and failed to pass unanimously.

Sherrill to Lecture

New Haven: — Presiding Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill will give the six Lyman Beecher lectures at the Yale Divinity School April 13-15.

Clergyman Honored

Martinsville, Pa.: — The Rev. Charles C. Fishburne Jr., rector of Christ Church here was named "Martinsville's first citizen of the year" at the annual dinner of the Optimist Club. He was selected particularly for his work with young people and with charitable organizations.

New Secretary

Washington:—Miss Gertrude Orr has been appointed executive secretary of the department of promotion of the diocese of Washington. She has been a newspaper reporter, publicity and screen writer and has published several books for children.

There Is Unity

Rome (RNS): — Organized here a little over two years ago, Unitas, a Jesuit-sponsored movement to promote the unity of all Christians, has extended its work to Lombardy and now has a flourishing center in Milan, as well as in Rome. The organization is headed by the Very Rev. Charles Boyer, S.J., dean of thology at the Gregorian Pontifical College in Rome, and is the first of its kind to be endorsed by Pope Pius XII.

In recent weeks, numerous meetings and lectures have been held in Milan, Piacenza, Pavia, Bergamo, Brescia, Varese and Marate, all in the Lombardy province. At these sessions prominent Jesuit and non-Catholic speakers stressed the need of uniting Christians in efforts to promote international good will and to combat anti-religious influences.

The speakers all emphasized that Unitas is looking "more to resemblances than to differences" in seeking the union of all Christian denominations. Similar lectures and meetings are planned by Jesuit leaders in other towns throughout Lombardy during May.

According to Unitas' official organ — also called Unitas — the movement's chief emphasis to date has been on reunion of the dissident Eastern Orthodox Churches with Rome. The journal has urged that "with good will, differences can be bridged." Meanwhile it has given increasing attention to the problems of Protestant reunion with Rome.

Unitas has frequently declared that out of 800,000,000 Christians, only 400,000,000 are Catholics while 150,000,000 are Oriental dissidents, and 200,000,000 Protestants, the remainder being members of Eastern Catholic Churches in union with Rome.

Jesuit contributors to Unitas have stressed that "for Catholics unity is not a good that is absent and necessary to attain but a good already possessed, which must be communicated," as enjoined by the Catholic belief in "the unity of one Sheepfold under one Shepherd."

Making It Easier

Toronto (RNS): — James Cardinal McGuigan, Archbishop of Toronto, is getting unexpected aid in his request that Roman Catholics abstain from alcoholic drinks during Lent. A local tavern-keeper placed a sign on his premises reading: "During Lent no Catholic will be served. Signed, the management, cooperating with local Roman Catholic headquarters."

Not Attracting Men

Indianapolis (RNS): — Protestantism in Indianapolis lacks attraction for men, is failing to reach low income groups, and is barely keeping pace with the population growth of the city. These facts were revealed in a report based on a detailed statistical study of Protestant churches here compiled by Frederick A. Shippey, director of research for the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church.

The survey showed that:

1. Only 29.2 per cent of all Protestant church members are males.

2. Laborers — who comprise over 26 per cent of the employed population — make up only 8.6 per cent of Protestant church membership.

3. Between 1930 and 1945, when Indianapolis grew 15.6 per cent, church membership increased by 16 per cent.

4. In spite of the population growth, Sunday school enrollment between 1930 and 1945 dropped 10.3 per cent.

5. An average of only 31.4 per cent of Indianapolis Protestants attend Sunday morning services and only 6.9 per cent attend evening services.

6. An estimated 50,000 persons of the Protestant faith are unreached by the churches.

Other findings disclosed by the survey were that less than half of the Protestant church membership contributes regularly to the churches; and Protestant preachers are poorly paid. The survey indicated that 37.1 per cent of the ministers make between $2,000 and $3,000; 17.7 per cent earn between $1,000 and $2,000; 24.8 per cent get $3,000 to $4,000; and only 7.1 per cent receive over $5,000.

Shippey said the survey proved that "urban church work is not sufficiently aimed at males" and that "few churches have a vital program for adult males." He said the survey advanced 11 recommendations to improve the Protestant church situation here. Among these were:

1. Broadening of pastoral counseling to include juvenile delinquency, adult crime, alcoholism, racial problems, and labor-management problems.

2. A house-to-house religious census to locate "the many thousands of unchurched residents."

3. A study of occupational distribution of church membership.

4. Appointment of an interdenominational committee to study the Sunday school situation thoroughly.

5. Investigation of the small percentage of church members who contribute regularly to financial support of the church; and

6. Leadership training schools for Sunday school officers.

The Completeness of Christ

By James Thayer Addison

Price, $1.00

A Review by

The Rt. Rev. Norman B. Nash
Bishop of Massachusetts

"Dr. Addison, author of 'Our Father's Business' has given us another lucid, devout and helpful devotional book. His style, like his thought, is clear and direct, and he writes from his heart as well as his head, from mature religious experience and conviction as well as from sound Christian learning.

"The six brief chapters, which give the book Lenten form, deal with God's seeking grace, Christ as the light of Life, His completeness, His companionship in suffering, the Church as His body, and Christian love for God and neighbor. The familiar doctrines are all freshly treated, and the chapters abound in original insights and reveal a serene faith. Frank but not unfair criticism of the Church for its inadequate fidelity to its true nature as the body of Christ will perhaps disturb some, but certainly stir others to a more strenuous effort to make their churchmanship more nearly Christian.

"The Lenten preacher will find such inspiration in this deeply felt and finely written book."

and it is expected that the other three will do so. The questionnaire asked the church affiliation of each candidate and the extent of his church activity. Also listed were fraternal affiliations, previous public offices held and the war record service. The candidates were also asked what they thought were the most pressing needs of the city.

Europe Fears Us

Grand Rapids, Mich. (RNS): — A warning against the effects of American policy on people abroad was issued by two speakers at the annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education here. Many sincere Christians in Europe fear the United States more than Russia, Paul G. Macy, director of the World Council of Churches' midwest region, declared. He explained that Europeans are greatly concerned about the spread of Communism, but they "desperately fear that the way in which the United States goes about meeting the problem will lead to war."

Frank S. Mead, former editor of a religious magazine, charged that American "imperialism" is hampering the growth of Christian principles in American outposts. "Nine out of ten average Americans have the idea that God arrives with the color guard—that the will and love of the Almighty start working immediately as the Stars and Stripes are run up the flagpole over American-occupied territory," Mead said.

"The truth is that there is a tremenous gap between the color-guard and the home missionary, the religious educator who follows the troops."

Unique Service

Columbia, S. C.:—Bishop Melcher, coadjutor of Southern Brazil, prepared a class for confirmation at Trinity Church here while he was rector. On February 22 Bishop Phillips of Southwestern Virginia, a former rector of the parish, read the opening part of the confirmation service. Then Bishop Gravatt of Upper South Carolina presented to Bishop Melcher for confirmation the class that he had himself prepared.

Bishop Bentley Talks

Newark, N. J.:—Bishop John Bentley, vice president of the National Council, was the speaker at the meeting of the Auxiliary of the diocese of Newark, meeting at the cathedral house on March 3. He told of the work of the Church in foreign fields.

Leads Quiet Day

Detroit:—Bishop Emrich of Michigan conducted a quiet day for the clergy of the diocese on February 16. The theme was evangelism.

Miller in Detroit

Detroit:—The Rev. Randolph C. Miller of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific visited this city February 18, addressing a meeting in the afternoon on teaching techniques and materials to be used in Church schools. He then addressed about sixty teachers and clergy at a dinner meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral, also on the subject of education.

under the chairmanship of the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker to see if anything could be done about merging a couple of our Church papers. Prof. Myers was all for it. Only he had conditions: one, that "there is no place in the Episcopal Church for an ecclesiastical New Republic"; and, two, "I will have nothing to do with any enterprise with which any Spofford is connected."

So you see I have to be careful. Prof. Myers may have followed the advice of Fellow-Director Hart and got himself a gun and "a reasonable supply of ammunition."

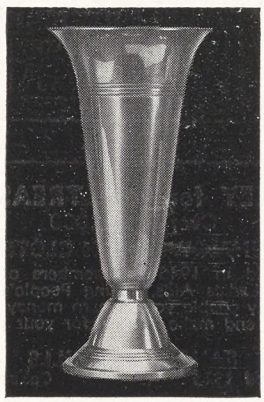
First a confession! Before I had read Miss Fisher's admirable introduction, I felt prejudiced against this book because it seemed to me that things spiritual or philosophical, which I supposed this volume to contain, belonged to men and women alike.



As I followed the first of the readings for the days of the twelve months, I found prejudice abating, and by the time I had concluded the December section, it had disappeared. For I discovered, as you will, that in this small volume, which is neither profound nor mystical, the authors speak directly to the minds and hearts of us who are ordinary women, doing the work of life in home, office, school or elsewhere. While the meditations are arranged by months and days, dates are unimportant. If you are not in the mood for "March," which is religious, and are thinking about home and children, turn to "June" where a mother discusses Larry, Dan and Little Sister.

The twelve women who collected or wrote the selections, are broadly educated and splendidly equipped through their own living to advise the rest of us. The English preacher, Maude Royden Shaw is perhaps the most notable.

MARGARET HAYES.

Letters of the Scattered Brotherhood*, edited by Mary Strong, Harper & Bros., $2.00.

The universality of mysticism is illustrated in the quotations which introduce each of the hundred odd meditations which make up this collection. Emerson and Shakespeare, the Hindu Veda, the Wisdom of Solomon, Lao Tze and the Shepherd of Hermas provide texts, as do the writings of Lord Whitehead, St. Augustine and Heraclitus. It is with the inner life that the book is concerned. Into the pattern of worldwide mysticism, the Christian faith is interjected, as in the passage, "(When) you sit in silence with the Word you become one with the Spirit, with the power back of all manifested life, infinitely gentle when you give yourself to it."

Though there is little of the penitential approach to be found, the positive note of hopefulness, joy and beauty is probably needed at a time when pessimism and condemnation has become the vogue in so much Christian theology. "These are iron times for the nations," one meditation begins. "Be all the more disciplined in your emotions, for you will hear cries of fear and the cowards will try to force you into their quaking cul-de-sacs." Christian confidence is certainly needed now. With hate and fear propaganda filling the newspapers and popular magazines, men and women certainly have to seek the inner power of God in order to follow the advice with which another reading closes, "And remember never knit your brow, keep it holy!"

There will be those who will call such hopeful mysticism an escape medium from the reality of life. If it is, certainly it is as commendable as an escape mechanism as mystery movies and sex heavy best sellers. When modernism in the Church preached an easy pie-in-the-sky theology, true Christianity reminded men that they were still miserable sinners and that progress toward the kingdom of God was neither as easy nor as automatic as some then thought it to be. Now, with the pendulum swung, and men's hearts failing them for fear, they perhaps need to hear the words of John Donne (1573-1631) which express the theme of this book: "Religion is not a melancholy, the spirit of God is not a dampe!"

VERY REV. EDWARD R. WELLES
Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo

May I appeal through your columns to the clergy and laity of the Church who live in communities where there is a public library, to further the Presiding Bishop's program of evangelism in one specific way: namely, to find out if their public library possesses a copy of the Authorized Version of the Holy Bible with Apocrypha, and a copy of the Book of Common Prayer (chancel edition with large type). If the library does not possess these basic volumes, they could be purchased inexpensively and given to the library which would welcome them. These two books taken singly or together are a powerful force for evangelism in these days.

VERY REV. ROBERT HATCH
Dean of the Cathedral, Wilmington

Wholehearted congratulations on your editorial of February 12 on our clear duty in regard to the UN plan for Palestine. It is shocking that so many Christians remain indifferent to what is taking place. What happens in Palestine will affect not only our Jewish brethren but also the UN itself, which means all of us.

CARL HERMAN VOSS
Staff of the Church Peace Union

Congratulations on the excellent editorial, "Attack on World Peace," in the issue of Feb. 12. It was a splendid piece of work. I wish that more Christian leaders would speak out on the Palestine problem. To me this whole question, as your editorial so aptly stated, is the determining factor in the UN's future. The tone of this editorial is in accord with the prophetic leadership THE WITNESS has been giving during the past 25 or 30 years. Thank you for it.

THE REV. W. C. SEITZ
Professor at Bexley Hall, Gambier, O.

It should be called to the attention of your Mr. McCandless that the Anglican doctrine of the purposes of marriage, as stated in the Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England is as follows: "First, it was ordained for the procreation of children, to be brought up in the fear and nurture of the Lord, and to the praise of his holy name. Secondly, it was ordained for a remedy against sin, and to avoid fornication; that such persons as have not the gift of continency might marry, and keep themselves undefiled members of Christ's body. Thirdly, it was ordained for the mutual society, help and comfort, that the one ought to have of the other, both in prosperity and adversity." The Lutheran doctrine is the same (cf. Concordia Encyclopedia, art. "Marriage"); so is the Calvinistic doctrine (cf. Westminster Confession, ch. XXIV,II); so is the Eastern Orthodox doctrine (cf. Orthodox Confession of the Eastern Church, Question CXVI); as well as the Roman doctrine, to which Mr. McCandless refers in your issue of February 12.

It is unfortunate that a priest of the Church should fail to recognize the statement of a universally accepted Christian truth simply because he finds it in a Roman Catholic source and to make it the object of his attack.

It is even more regrettable that a Christian teacher should imply that certain "natural instincts and affections, implanted by God" are essentially "beastly" and "low" and that sexual concupiscence is somehow or other a "lower urge" than, let us say, hunger and thirst. Such views as those expressed by Mr. McCandless are an insult to our creator, a denial of the holiness of the married state, a fruitful source of immorality, of psychological impotence and frigidity, of marital maladjustments and infidelities and certainly should not be propagated in a Christian periodical.

EDITOR'S NOTE: A similar communication, with the quotation from the English Prayer Book, came from the Rev. Marshall M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Milwaukee. He concludes: "The similarity between the Anglican and Roman statements, although it may surprise some, will probably interest all."

Million Dollars in Four Hours Reported a Success

All the Reports So Far Received Indicate That a Considerably Larger Sum Is Likely

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—You have sat by your radio on election night and tried to figure who has been elected on the basis of early returns. It's hazardous business. In my town, for instance, one presidential year, a neighbor started calling in his friends at seven to drink champagne over the great victory. Being on the other side of the political fence I got unholy joy out of seeing all his lights turned off about nine o'clock.

So maybe I'll have to start eating words instead of peanuts come another week, but as things stand it seems safe to say that more than the asked-for million was raised on February 29 with that Presiding Bishop's talk over his "Presidential Coverage—600 stations—coast to coast" hookup.

Reports indicate large congregations everywhere, with people getting a lot of fun out of it, particularly in sneaking a look at their watch from time to time while the rector was reading prayers to see whether he was going to hit it on the button. In addition to this timing angle, the sporting instinct also came into play with people saying, "I'll bet we can raise that million bucks in four hours for world relief."

Telegrams started coming in at the Church Missions House early Monday and are still coming. Reports still are meager, but here are those that are in: Southern Ohio gave assurance that the diocesan goal of $35,000 has been reached. Maine telegraphed that it had $4,700 but that on account of a heavy snow storm it had not been possible to communicate with a number of parishes so the figure will be increased; Rhode Island reported $14,527; Vermont, $3,266; Central New York, $17,666; Pittsburgh, $18,639; Kentucky, $7,057; Lexington, $2,557; Trinity Cathedral, Newark, N. J., $2,500 and South Florida, with a goal of $11,494 wired, "we are over the top."

Upper South Carolina, with a quota of $3,952, reported on March 3 that $10,056 had so far been raised. Eau Claire has $1,007 a few hours after the close of services on the 29th, with more apparently to come; Northern Indiana, $3,000; Wyoming, $1,267; Arkansas, $3,528; Olympia, $5,000; Sacramento, over the top with a goal of $2,471 and Spokane reported $6,100 with an objective of $4,445.

The diocese of Atlanta reported $9,686 which is about $2,000 more than its goal; South Carolina $8,312 which is double the sum given to the relief fund last year; the diocese of Rochester about $11,000 which is considerably over last year. All of these are first reports, with more donations expected.

THE WITNESS checked with a number of the New York City parishes and in every case the rector reported that a sum more than anticipated had been raised, and in every case they stressed that donations were continuing to be received by mail. Here are figures, all in round numbers: The Ascension, $2,500; Grace Church, $3,500; St. Bartholomew's, $4,000; St. Thomas' Church, $6,000; St. George's, $5,100; St. James', $4,900; All Angels', $1,500; the Epiphany, $2,000.

Mr. John Irwin, press representative at 281, states that most reports so far received indicate "Christmas and Easter congregations," that the Presiding Bishop was heard clearly; that congregations were enthusiastic about the network arrangement which made possible the broadcast directly to the people. He states that "from the incomplete returns available at the time it seems evident that where parishes followed the plan suggested by the National Council, the whole plan was a success, either reaching or passing the predetermined goal. Some of the variations of the plan seemed successful too." (Meaning, I take it, where the rector read the address of the Presiding Bishop since the church was unsuited for broadcasting because of interference or the difficulty of wiring in some of the larger churches.)

The one sour note was the fact that station WBBM, the Columbia network in Chicago, completely failed to give the broadcast, with about 100 rectors forced to meet the emergency the best they could — in most instances by reading the address which had been sent all rectors in advance. Just who is to blame for the slip-up nobody seems to know. At first the management of the Chicago station passed the buck to Columbia headquarters in New York. They passed it right back. Finally Mr. Frederick Faulkner, station manager in Chicago, issued a release to the papers regretting the error and offering Bishop Conkling the fifteen minutes at whatever time he may wish for whatever message he cares to give over the air. There are stories of sabotage on the part of some employee of another religious faith but so far there is completely nothing to indicate the truth of any such yarn. It probably was just a mistake on the part of someone, who probably will be fired, and that will be that.

There is another story going around which ought to be put straight before this piece ends. It is that the cost of the hookup approached $100,000 and that this was too much money to spend. Fact is most of the stations donated their time. There was the cost of special wiring in a few instances. But it can be stated authoritatively that the entire campaign, including printing, transcriptions, records, advertising, was less than 3%. All of which brought the remark from a man who knows about such things, "That is mighty cheap money-getting."

FACULTY MEMBERS ORGANIZE

Greenwich, Conn.:—Members of college and university faculties who are Episcopalians, — two of them from each province, — met at Seabury House and formed an organization to be known as the national association of faculty Episcopalians. They conferred for three days on such topics as: the Christian professor in the classroom; responsibilities of the Christian professor in his relationship with students outside the classroom; The relationship of the Christian professor with his colleagues; The purpose and work of the guild of scholars; the spiritual and moral needs of faculty churchmen.

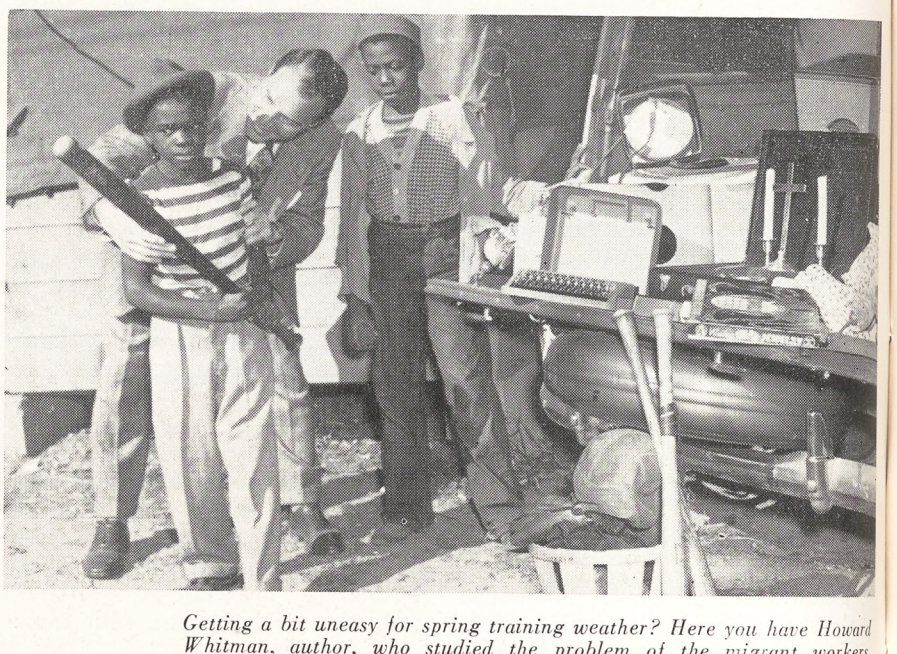
Presiding Bishop Sherrill made the opening address on the meaning of the world-wide mission of the Church, and the final session was led by the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell. The general purpose of the conference was stated as being the consideration of ways in which faculty churchmen might play a larger part in the presentation of the Christian religion to students and faculties of our colleges and universities.

Temporary officers of the new association are: Virginal Hancher, Iowa University, president; Virginia Harrington, Barnard College, vice-president; Dr. Edward McCrady, University of the South, and Dr. Elliott Van Diller, Mills College, regional representatives; the Rev. Thomas (Gargoyle) Barrett, division of College work of the National Council, secretary.

A selected group of faculty churchmen will be invited to become charter members of the association, including members of the present guild of scholars, to which this association will be a complementary body. General invitations to join the association will be sent out before May to all Episcopal members of faculties and administrative officers.

The national commission on college work and the division of college work of the National Council have expressed the opinion that this new association will be of great importance in the Church's work on the campuses and will prove to be of significance to the members of the association and to the Church's mission to the world of our time.

The activities of the association are to be directed towards four basic purposes drawn up by members of the conference. These are: 1. To promote a sense of companionship among those engaged in scholarly pursuits who have a common realization of loyalty to Christ and a common appreciation of the beliefs and practices of the Episcopal Church.



2. To encourage one another to make plain within the academic framework our faith in the centrality of God in human thinking and action; and our common concern that this centrality be recognized in education.

3. Through publications and conferences mutually to enlarge our knowledge of the Christian religion and of its relevance to the whole field of intellectual and moral affairs.

4. To deepen our own devotional lives; to make them honest, mature and consonant with modern knowledge.

CHURCHES JOIN FOR SERVICES

Lowell, Mass.:—St. Anne's here is the center for the city-wide community services again this Lent, sponsored by the ministers' association. The church is located in the heart of the city and the services held each day at noon are attracting increasing crowds. Another unique event at St. Anne's is the university of life, held on six Sunday evenings and sponsored by the council of churches. Lecturers this year include three Episcopalians: Dean Edwin J. Van Etten of Boston; the Rev. Richard G. Preston of Worcester and the Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks, chaplain at the Massachusetts General Hospital. The school this Lent has an enrollment of about 1,100, with an added number attending the service that is held before the sessions. The rector of St. Anne's is the Rev. Laurence H. Blackburn.

Getting a bit uneasy for spring training weather? Here you have Howard Whitman, author, who studied the problem of the migrant workers, teaching an aspiring Jackie Robinson how to handle a bat supplied by the Eastern Harvester, one of the three large station wagons used among migrant workers by the Home Missions Council

OUTDOOR PREACHING BY STUDENTS

Berkeley, Cal.: — The students of the Church Divinity School here and of St. Margaret's House, deaconess training center, have organized a program of outdoor preaching. Those taking part have a brief time for study and prayer with the Rev. J. Henry Thomas and then go forth to some corner or vacant lot with a portable organ for a service.

Native Missionary Transforms A Village in Mexico

The Rev. Jose Gomez Brought Water and a Fine Church to the People of Colorful San Pedro

Mexico City (RNS):—This is the story of the Rev. Jose Gomez, an Episcopalian clergyman, and how he brought an ancient, sun-baked Aztec town of 1,000 souls to vigorous life. The story starts in 1930, when Mr. Gomez, fresh from the Philadelphia Divinity School, was assigned to the parish of San Juan Bautista in the town of San Pedro Martir, about 23 miles from here. San Pedro, which dates back to pre-conquest days, clings tenaciously to a mountainside. Looming above it are Mexico's two famous volcanoes —the placid "Sleeping Princess" and the ominous cone-shaped Popocatapetl.

Young Mr. Gomez loved the beauty of the place and resolved to help its simple, wholesome inhabitants. That's how he became interested in San Pedro's water problem. Much of Mexico is parched. dry land and San Pedro was no exception. From time out of mind its people had trudged to the neighboring village of Tlalpam, three miles away on the dusty road that girdles the mountain. There they filled skins, kegs and casks with water and plodded back to San Pedro, bowed under the weight of their burden. The luckier ones saddled two kegs across the narrow backs of splindly-legged burros.

San Pedro waited 400 years for Mr. Gomez—and water. The young clergyman first caused a collection to be taken up in the town. Fourteen thousand pesos—an amazing sum for so backward a village—was contributed. Then he got a delegation to go to Mexico City for a parley with government officials. They offered the 14,000 pesos. It wasn't long after this that the miracle of water in San Pedro was a reality. The precious liquid was piped over the mountains a distance of 30 miles. A reservoir was constructed in San Pedro to hold the supply. The government even constructed a community washing center and a bath house in the middle of town.

Encouraged by the results of their cooperation, inspired by the Episcopal minister, the residents of San Pedro promptly tackled the problem of raising a more profitable cash crop. Mr. Gomez studied the question, then suggested that flowers would sell at good prices in Mexico City's nearby market. Carnations were tried without much success—the mountain soil wasn't just right. So the carnations were dropped and rose bushes planted in their place. Soon San Pedro became not only the remarkable pueblo of water, but the unusual town of the roses.

The Rev. Charles H. Cadigan has resigned as rector of Christ Church, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, and will this summer enter an industrial plant to work with management and labor in formulating policies

One of Mr. Gomez' parishioners then donated land for a school. The government agreed to build it. Five hundred of the congregation got together and put up a parish hall. Later — in 1937 — the congregation wanted a new church. Again they pooled their efforts—a device learned from Mr. Gomez — and dynamited rock for the church foundation from the mountainside. In three years they had their church.

In 1944 — after 14 years among his people at San Pedro — Mr. Gomez was called to a new assignment. He was sent to Mexico City where he was made dean of the Cathedral Church of San Jose Gracias, a post he still holds.

But the simple people of San Pedro have never forgotten their Mr. Gomez. For during the 14 years he was among them, more good things came to them than had come for many a hundred years before.

CHURCH ENTERS THE BARROOM

Detroit:—The effect of religious services by television upon men standing in barrooms was revealed by the first service to be televised by a local station. The service was evening prayer and included a pageant presented by the young people of St. Paul's Cathedral. A layman who sat in the WWJ studio and witnessed the televising of the service made the following comments:

"When I received an invitation to attend the televising of a service from St. Paul's Cathedral, I approached the whole thing with a feeling of fear. I fully expected that this would be a rather cold and formal sort of thing, from which one would not get very much. I suppose I felt it would be like the moving picture version of a book which I had read and heard reviewed from time to time. Thus the entire affair would be very matter-of-fact.

"Nearly all churchmen know and love Evening Prayer; we know where it starts, and we know where it stops. But I must confess that the first thirty seconds of that service, as it appeared on the television screen, changed my whole opinion of the possibilities of the church over the air.

"In the room with me were two other churchpeople, who had been raised in the church and who know the service from start to finish. It was interesting to note their reactions to the events appearing on the screen. The woman replaced her hat; the man forgot to light his cigar; and as the service progressed through the processional hymn, the opening sentences, the prayers, the general confession, I could hear my companions entering into the service along with the congregation seated in St. Paul's Cathedral, two miles away. This was also true of the creed and the other responses during the service.

"A moving pageant took the place of a sermon, and as we sat there in the darkness, one could feel the spirit of the service coming across the screen. Thoughts of the possibilities now open to the church, — carrying the services, visually, to the sick, the shut-in, hospital patients, men in prison, and many more ran through my mind. All the warmth of the great service could be felt, somehow, in that little room, as the cameramen swung their instruments from priest to altar to congregation, and to the altar again. And we three felt, as we sat together in that small place, that it was good to have been there.

"Several days before the service was to take place, I jokingly charged Dean Weaver with driving Episcopalians 'to drink' because so many of our television sets are installed in taverns and bar-rooms. I understand that the radio station conducted a survey shortly after this televised broadcast, among some of the taverns. The general reaction seemed to be that as the service unfolded itself on the screen, first of all people stopped smoking to look and to listen, and then many who usually spent the evening in that place disappeared at the close of the service. Could this mean that we have found a means of converting people at a distance? It is the prayer of many who witnessed the telecast that our church may continue to pioneer in this new and fascinating field, and so bring the good news of Christ into the lives of many now untouched."

CALIFORNIA BUYS A RANCH

Healdsburg, Cal.: — A ranch near here has been purchased by the diocese of California for a youth center. Known as El Rancho del Obispo (Ranch of the Bishop), the property covers 65 acres and includes three houses, swimming pool, tennis court, baseball diamond and horse show grounds. The three houses, one a 27-room home, can accommodate 150 persons.

The ranch will be opened this summer and, according to Bishop Karl Block, will attempt to show young people that "democracy is the political expression of Christian affirmation." Bishop Block said the center would equip youth to face "present day ideologies — the isms that are not social theologies, but competing religions."

Though emphasis will be on youth conferences the year round adult members of the diocese will not be forgotten, the bishop said. Retreats are planned for lay members of the Church and for the clergy. "We are not unmindful of the older people," Bishop Block explained. "But we do realize they have reached a period of rigidity in character and attitude which makes it more profitable to expend much of our time and strength on the young people in the hope that they can become leaders in their communities."

INTERCOMMUNION MATTER MADE CLEAR

Buffalo, N. Y.:—When the committees of the Episcopal and Polish National Catholic Churches, dealing with intercommunion, met here recently they cleared up a matter which has been misunderstood by some Episcopalians. An agreement of a previous meeting of the commissions was interpreted by some to forbid occasional reception of the Holy Communion by a member of one Church at the altar of the other Church "except under stringent restrictions." All commissions at the last meeting here "agreed that this is not the intention of the article in question" and that it means that the "occasional receiving of Holy Communion in the other Church by a member of either Church in good standing may be permitted as a token of our intercommunion."

The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, a member of the Episcopal Commission, states in a letter received with the minutes of the meeting, that "this action is intended to make plain that occasional reception of the Holy Communion at the altar of the other Church is quite permissible, in the same way that a communicant may go to the Holy Communion occasionally in other parishes of his own Church."

WEST AFRICAN CHURCH

London (RNS):—Ten Anglican bishops met recently in conference at Accra, capital of the Gold Coast Colony, to prepare a constitution for a self-governing Church of England province of West Africa, it was learned here. The new province would be independent of the already-existing province of South Africa and would have its own archbishop. The bishops' meeting was a sequel to a conference in 1945 at which a draft constitution was drawn up and submitted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who returned the draft with certain suggested modifications.

The constitution as it now stands would, if accepted by the bishops, provide, among other things, for a House of Bishops, a House of Clergy, a House of Laity, and the establishment of a theological faculty.

Present at the conference were Bishop John O. Aglionby, of Accra, who presided, and the bishops of Gambia and the Rio Pongas, Lagos, The Niger, and Sierra Leone. The conference was opened by a service at Accra's Holy Trinity church, attended by the acting governor, high government officials, and representatives of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches of the Gold Coast.

A program of character education based upon the Beatitudes is being conducted at Christ Church, Lexington, Kentucky. The program is under the general supervision of Ophelia S. T. Carr, Rector James W. Kennedy and Ellis F. Hartford

Both in Body and Soul

THE collect for Passion Sunday calls for a broad vision. We pray that God will mercifully look "upon thy people," "that they may be governed and preserved evermore, both in body and soul." His people are you and I, and all who call on his name in every place. Our imaginations must stretch to include worshippers in all parts of this land, with varying rites and practices. We also picture those on Pacific Islands, men and women in churches in Moscow, in Spain, in China and Japan. God's people are everywhere, and we are praying that all may be governed and preserved. It is easier to make the words of another prayer sincere, rather than this one. We can pray "that all who profess and call themselves Christians may be led into the way of truth," and feel that God will not be entreated for all because some do not hold the truth just as we do.

But asking God to be merciful to all who call themselves Christians is another matter altogether. It runs contrary to the cherished feelings of most of us. It is sheer idealism to consider the preservation of the body and soul of a brother Christian, if he happens to live in a country with which we are at war, or with which we may possibly be at war. It is not quite so fantastic, but still idealism, to say that our social and economic order on a world scale should be so governed that every one who called himself Christian would have the necessary material things to preserve "body and soul." To many in this country, it seems unthinkable that there should be equal opportunity for the care and nurture of all Christians' souls and bodies, and some would go so far as to limit it simply to white Protestants of a certain economic level. This collect is a prayer for the classless society, and on a world scale. May it bring to us the vision of God's people, and a knitting of our wills with his that we may all "be governed and preserved evermore, both in body and soul."

"QUOTES"

THE desperate plight of the people of Europe requires immediate and generous aid by the United States. The Church can exercise its leadership in this situation by endorsing a program of aid on the conditions that the fullest possible use be made of agencies of the U.N. in carrying out the program; that it in no way interferes with the right of the European people to work out their own way of life, politically, economically and socially as seems best to them; that effort is made to re-establish trade and other relations between eastern and western Europe on which the permanent economic recovery of the continent essentially depends. The Federal Council's statement on the European Recovery Program notes these conditions and they should be emphasized in our consideration of the matter.

Propaganda in the Church

A PERUSAL of the February number of Forth left the impression that all is well in this best of possible worlds. In China a bishop was consecrated, described as an "intrepid leader." We do not know Bishop Liu and we hope that he is just that. But from the article there is nothing to indicate that either the bishop or the editor of Forth are aware of any struggle in China between the people and a government that is condemned even by our state department as corrupt and weak. Certainly there is nothing in the story to intimate in the slightest where Bishop Liu stands in this civil war, the outcome of which will determine the way of life for many millions for generations.

Then we are informed of the restoration of a church in Tokyo. But we searched in vain for some mention of the reconstruction—or lack of it—of Japan in a democratic, political and economic sense. An article about a school in Jerusalem is more encouraging for there is a hint that there are some tensions between Jews and Arabs. But when the author got to the point where he said "given an atmosphere of free association, they can and do live happily together" he stopped. He might well have put in a plug for a forthright policy on the part of the U. S. to back a U. N. force to implement its decision, thus making possible that "free association" the author thinks desirable.

But perhaps the best clue to the editorial mind came in a profile sketch of Charles Julian Symington in the series, Churchmen in the News. Mr. Symington is quoted as saying that "the Church should not take part in political discussions but should concentrate in training young men in the seminaries so that they would be better prepared to deal with the practical problems in their parish duties. Veterans during the war had to meet grim reality and they will insist on greater reality in the Church's program."

It should not be necessary to point out the absurd contradiction here, but the editor obviously failed to see it or he would not have printed it. The official organ of our Church is following the secular owning class in directing the clergy to "keep to their altars" and out of controversial, worldly matters. Forth might better quote from various Pastorals of our Bishops which have, innumerable times, declared that the Church must take stands in secular affairs.

A Central Staff College

ONE of the subjects for discussion at the Lambeth Conference is the formation of a Central Staff College for post ordination study. The college, as Bishop Gray pointed out (WITNESS Feb. 12), would be "one of the means which would decrease disconnectedness within the Anglican Communion."

The leadership of the college would come from outstanding scholars of the Anglican Communion, with a student body of selected clergy. The college would be a definite step in the better understanding of the common problems which confront the Church today. It could be "a matrix from which a new Church order would grow." We agree with the potentialities of such a college if stress is laid on a study of contemporary problems.

Perhaps Lambeth could go even further and devise a way in which the work of the college could be extended so that more clergy would benefit from its organization. Perhaps some kind of an extension, or home study department, could be created. This department could publish curricula, bibliographies, outlines of its findings and suggestions for study at home or in local groups.

An extension department would accomplish a two-fold purpose. Not only would it extend the work of the college by making its work available to more clergy, but it would be a means of encouraging planned study on the part of the clergy. Some kind of a citation might be made to those who completed a certain amount of work.

We hope Lambeth will take positive action on the proposal. We further trust that the Bishops will explore the possibilities of making the work of the college more effective through an extension department.

Youth and Sex Behavior

by Charles F. Hall

The Bishop Coadjutor of New Hampshire

ONE of the quickest ways to win a nod of approval today is to suggest that "young people are going to the dogs." That is the starting point for this article. Someone better equipped for the task could level his remarks against the full range of "immoral society." In this survey we shall deal specifically with the problem of sex behavior as it confronts young people today.

"Moral man" frequently calls youth to account for the confusing social problems of these times. "Now, when I was young. . . .!" he reminisces. After he has bathed himself in glowing memories of his youth and the golden generation of his early years, he takes a quick look at the young folk of today and concludes that they are "going to the dogs." And he has statistics to prove it! We won't itemize these sordid facts but "moral man" knows that modern youth has broken all records in the field of immorality. That is a fact about our young people today. And here is another. One of the gravest moral problems of the younger generation is the older generation. The Victorian elders of our time expect youth to live up to their remembrance of their own moral standards in youth, and they don't.

Here for example is the way "moral man" sizes up modern youth: "Young people of today live in a perpetual round of amusement. They go about by day and night in perfect freedom. Their sole occupation is to drive about and amuse themselves with dancing. They read improper books and the foam of a poisonous philosophy falls from their lips." That happens to be an excerpt from an article in the Ladies Magazine, published in the year 1800! Let it be said then that one of the first social needs of our day is an older generation which has not forgotten its youth and is ready and eager to help young people intead of using them as a convenient scapegoat.

The Church has been reluctant to assume a role of leadership in sex behavior guidance. It has passed the buck to doctors and scientists. With precious few exceptions the Church has been saying, "We know our young people are baffled by the problems of sex. We know too that we are not equipped to give them the proper instruction. That is not our responsibility. The best we can do is advise parents to tell their children the 'facts of life' or to send them to a qualified specialist." There are two negative results to this daring decision. First, young people learn far more about the "facts of life" in the latrines of the world than in their own homes. Second, in discovering that the Church has refused to deal with this subject young people have too often decided that sex is a sinful fact which they happen to be stuck with. If the Church turns thumbs down on the problem and parents dismiss it casually, it must be one of life's miserable unmentionables. So youth learns about sex the wrong way. Suppression breeds secrecy and ultimately, ignorance and tragedy.

Some years ago a son of mine embarked upon a wretched habit. At the age of three he became a garbage eater. His mother noticed his apparent lack of appetite at meal times and began to investigate. One day she caught him in the act. Stealthily, when he was sure no one was watching, he opened the garbage can and methodically sorted out its contents. He separated the coffee grounds from the orange skins and the egg shells from the burnt toast. When the feast was ready he called his two year-old girl friend to share the garbage with him. That evening my wife and I decided to inaugurate three positive measures to curb this perversity. The first step was instruction. We taught our son the difference between garbage and food. Second, we guided him to a right choice in the matter. Finally, by constructing a simple device we made it most inconvenient for him to get the garbage. To be sure, there were other garbage cans in the community, but once we had sealed the most accessible one we discovered that he left the others alone.

"Which things are an allegory." Sex is like food in so far as it serves a creative function in life, is basically a normal, healthful urge and calls out appetites that are vital for purposeful living. But like food, sex can become garbage. When this natural urge is relegated to the trashland of society it becomes a breeding ground for spiritual and physical disease. We introduced three positive measures to curb the garbage practices of our son: instruction, guidance and prevention. Those same factors can be employed by the Church in dealing with the problems of sex behavior that confront youth today.

Consider first the measure of instruction. Professor Kinsey, in his recent report to the nation on the sex behavior of man, demonstrates the virtue and weakness of science in this field. His is a frank, fearless statement of facts as observed by scientists going it alone. "Shocking" is the first word this survey calls to mind. It is "tragic" too. But suppression of such fact-finding will not change garbage into food. Vital instruction always begins with an honest appraisal of actual conditions.

So much for the positive side of the scientific approach. Here is its weakness. You can't measure man in a test tube. You can study the physical nature of a person in a laboratory but you can't explore the potential of his soul under a microscope. Professor Kinsey would say to a young man, "It is my conclusion after 12,000 observations that your future sex behavior is at the mercy of your first sixteen years of life." Thus science confronts young manhood with the same cure that is suggested for baldness: either change your ancestors or grin and bear it. But is that all? What would Professor Kinsey say about the St. Augustines in the world?

UNDOUBTEDLY the preadolescent years of any person's life are the most vital in forming his pattern of sex behavior. Consequently it is within this age span that society must provide the best instruction and influences. That is precisely where the Church comes into the picture. It must break through the barriers of prevailing Victorianism, face facts squarely and deal with them openly. We have our parish youth groups, diocesan organizations, a nation-wide society of Church youth, summer conferences and winter convocations, and yet how rarely is the subject of sex included in the curricula of such assemblies. Most suggestions that a clergyman and doctor appear at a youth forum to discuss the problems of sex behavior are instantly stormed under by an angry chorus of Mr. and Mrs. Hushers. Although such folk are the first to say young people are "going to the dogs," nevertheless when such positive measures of instruction are suggested they cry, "Don't! You'll only make matters worse." This Victorian bottleneck can only be broken by some fearless and determined pioneering in the Church.

We have some literature on sex behavior that has a Christian ring to it but most of this material is designed for the post-adolescent age. We need more pamphlets and books on this subject that carry the authority of Christian teaching as well as the assurance of scientific conclusions. Here is one vital area of life where modern science and the Christian Church must make their observations together, report facts, and say with conviction: "This is the way. Walk ye in it!"

While we are on the subject, today's parents can use some instruction too. Recently an open forum was held in one of our churches on the subject, "Juvenile delinquency in our community." The participants began with a polite discussion about broken windows in deserted houses and ended up by learning about raped youth in disinterested homes. When that particular forum ended there was general agreement on one fact: the subject for discussion was wrong. They were dealing with parental failures. They decided that it was not so much a case of delinquent youth but of preoccupied and careless parents.

The second measure in dealing with the problems of sex behavior is guidance. It is here that the Church can make a contribution peculiarly its own. A scientist like Professor Kinsey can assess the facts of human sex behavior and chart a course for youth, indicating the rocks and dangerous rapids they must avoid. A doctor or a psychiatrist can assist youth when they hit those rocks and rapids. It is the responsibility of the Church to tell youth why they are making life's journey, to assure them of its divine purpose, and to teach them God's love for all his children whether they are on the rocks, in the rapids or clear of both in open waters. That is Christian guidance and youth needs it today!

When our young people can see for themselves that the Church has taken an intelligent stand on the problem of sex behavior, and is out to help them instead of condemning them, they will respond and advance with assurance. They don't like to eat garbage! They are ashamed of themselves when they do. But nothing will turn youth into garbage-eaters faster than a censorious Church.

Prevention is the third step in dealing with the problem of sex behavior. Rescue stories are always inspiring and Christian history is full of them. St. Francis, Augustine, Mary of Magdala, and unnumbered others testify to the truth of our Lord's parable of the prodigal son. But the Christian gospel is not all curative. Basically it is preventive. When Jesus said "Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea"—he was not concerned with cure but with prevention. Don't let it happen! Surely in dealing with youth and their sex behavior that must be said again and again. Let us put more prayer and action into our preventive ounces and we won't be staggered by such curative pounds.

St. Paul had a word for us on preventive measures when he said, "I keep under my body." And a little girl made it even stronger when she misquoted Paul in her memory work, saying, "I keep my soul on top." That is the prime purpose of all Christian efforts in this arena of life: to help youth to keep their souls on top. But consider some of the agents of trashland they must encounter. There are the movies—and their name is legion—which advertise and justify loose moral standards. To date the Church has done little to curb this mighty monster. We let youth eat garbage in the cinema six days a week and expect them to appreciate good food in Church on the Sabbath. The emphasis should be in the other direction for Christianity is our daily bread and not simply a Sunday dinner.

As you read this you may say it sounds puritanical, and by modern standards I suppose it does. But take a moment and add up the score: seductive shows, easy liquor, cheap magazines, sexy books—make them available for youth, give them a car to speed them on their way, and then start praying! For too long we have been thinking largely in terms of cure. It's about time we began to act preventatively. All of these trashland agents wield a heavy influence upon the sex behavior of youth. Until we take their measure we shall resemble nothing more nearly than a florist raising orchids in a greenhouse and transplanting them into zero weather.

The last word on this subject is cooperation. The Church can provide a Christ-inspired leadership in guiding youth beyond the rocks and rapids of moral tragedy. It can be the spearhead of all combined efforts in destroying these demoralizing influences that surround our young people today. But the Church must also encourage the mind of science, the hands of social agencies and the heart of the home to team up with it in this Christian crusade for youth. That is a large order but the stakes are even larger. Today as never before the Church is called by Christ to help youth to keep their souls on top.

WHAT IS A LIBERAL?—I.

THE answer to this question depends on where you sit. In some parts of the South, the Baptist Church is conservative, and the Episcopal Church is liberal. In New England, the Episcopal Church is called conservative, and the Unitarians are liberal. Many parishes are liberal theologically and conservative in economics, and vice versa.

Twenty years ago, most seminarians hoped they were liberals of one sort or another. Today they describe a liberal as one who believes that all we have to do is perform a little kindly act now and then, which will push the escalator of inevitable human progress even faster.

As one who calls himself a Liberal, I feel this is a bit severe. But we have been at fault in making a free and easy doctrine out of Liberalism. It is more properly an attitude toward doctrines.

A Liberal is one who feels that people are more important than rules. The test of rules for him, is how well they work in the salvation of individuals. "The Sabbath was made for man," he quotes, "not man for the Sabbath."

The Liberal is a mite dubious about the churchman or statesman who puts the "welfare" of people (as defined by his own philosophy or ideology) above their happiness, or their personal choice in any matter. It is too easy, reasons the Liberal, to be philosophical about the other fellow's toothache. Some of the greatest fanatics and disciplinemongers in Church and state are not much given to self discipline. Mussolini was ready to fight until the last Italian was killed; that is, up to, but not including, himself.

The Liberal feels that the universe was created to produce and support human life of the personal (spiritual) kind. When laws and rules and philosophies contribute to that cosmic purpose, they are good and God-revealed. When they don't, they aren't.

Travels of a Gargoyle

Secretary of College Work of the National Council

I STOPPED for a few hours to see the Rev. Neo Hardway. He was a nice burly fellow with a furrowed brow and a delapidated Chevrolet. He said the fact that the Chevy ran at all was a paradox. His pulse was very vital and challenging, but rather irregular, it seemed to me. We talked about war and peace on the way to his church.

"You see," moaned Hardway, or Neo, as he asked me to call him, "it's a great paradox. As Spiney would say. . . ."

"Who's Spiney?" I interrupted. Neo looked at me in amazement.

"Spinegold Wiener—you've certainly heard of him."

"Oh—of course—I don't know him well enough to—call him by his first name. Excuse me, you were saying. . ."

"The paradox is," continued Neo, scratching his right ear with his left hand, palm outward, "that we are following the possibility of an impossible ethic. On the one hand, there's the kerygma, as Stiff would say, and on the other hand as Taul Pulich says. . ."

"Just a second. Who is Stiff?"

"Why Stiff Clanley, of course."

"Oh."

"Where did you go to seminary?" asked Neo, curiously, wrapping a long arm around the spokes of the steering wheel while he blew his nose.

"General," I answered, reaching with a right hand behind me to get a cigarette out of my breast pocket. I was getting a little confused at the grass root terminology of my pleasant friend.

"Neo-Thomism is dead," he pronounced creasing his forehead like a waffle. "But the paradoxical thing is that many of these charismatic liberals are flopping over into Neo-Thomism."

I was ashamed of myself for having become so simple minded in my bureaucrats niche, but determined to bluff my way through. "Of course, it is somewhat paradoxical that the pneumismatic Methodists have almost abandoned their early neuresthenic pleuroma in favor of a pacifistic anonymous."

I happened to look out of the car at that point to see a small boy kicking a tin can into a veritable shambles. It seemed delightfully direct and simple, but there must have been a paradox in it somewhere; or perhaps, it was clearly an existential maneuver.

"Of course, Kieerekegaard would say," pursued my relentless companion, "that faith itself is highly tinged with polarity."

"Do you think people find it easy to believe in God these days?" I asked abruptly wondering what a straightforward question might do to Neo's paradoxes.

"Do you mean the God of the Liberal, the Neo-Thomist, or the Soma-somatic?"

"Increasingly, Christian people, torn apart by paradoxes, neuroses, complexities of modern civilization, and the libido given to no profound meonic faith seem to be, or have been," I said frowning over my elbow. Neo's face lit up with pleasure at my Continental construction, and as we meandered through his church, which was built in the form of a paradox, he gave me a dissertation on kerygmatic doubt.

When I got back on the train (entering backwards by way of the freight station) I felt I had never been so challenged before. It seemed as though I had really got my fingers on the pulse of the Christian religion. The whole business was perfectly existential. I could hardly wait to get back to 281 and write a communique on my newly discovered paradox. Yet as we rolled on toward Chicago, I began to wonder if the grass roots were not a bit tangled in my mind. I envied the simplicity of a man in the diner who ate his peas with a regular spoon and informed me that it was raining out. There didn't seem to be any doubt about it. It was all quite natural. I looked; it did seem to be raining out.

"You're a parson, aren't you," he charged.

"Yes, I am, I believe," I said faking a pleasant grimace.

"That's a good life," went on the man, so simply it was almost childish. "We need goodness in the world. We need men who can teach us to find God. Cause, if we find God we'll get justice. And once we got some justice fer everybody—we'll get some freedom and peace. Glad to meet you."

Evidently the man didn't know how complex a kergygma can be. I went back to my berth and opened my little Bible. I struck another irrelevant passage. "But Jesus called them unto him and said, suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." The whole passage sounded too simple. It didn't take into account the whole challenging grassroot thinking of Kieerkegaard, or Freud or Neo-Hardway. I gave it up and went to sleep.

I got back to my niche, put my feet on the desk and began sending out long range over-all policy and plans for the men in the field. Now that I have seen the Church at work I feel I know what is needed. I have taken the pulse of the Church on the local level. There's a lot of vitality if you only go out and look for it. I guess my trouble was that I, sitting here in this bureaucratic niche making blueprints, understood a really vital Church as one which went out to transform its community, and to stand up for justice to all peoples, and to shout about freedom from the rooftops, and to tell people about God so they could repent and believe, and take a walk in the sun. I see now I was unrealistic and rather old fashioned. I guess that doesn't go down in our day. You can't build an "on-going Church" or make any real challenge that way. To-day you have to have new techniques and new programs of action to be really vital. I found out there are at least four different ways to do this.

1. You get a bunch of people together and build a church on a nice street and get them all working hard to fix up the Plant which involves many committees and meetings. This way they really develop a lust for organization, and records, and Venetian blinds, and enlarged chancels and sheer spiritual vitality just floods the place. (This method takes a good deal of physical energy, but it works.)

2. You get a bunch of people together (usually a smaller bunch) and teach them a lot about the fine points of theology so they can spot a heretic a mile off on a dark night. And then you get them together as often as possible inside the church, away from other people (especially the Congregationalists) and let them learn how to execute ecclesiastical minuets. The average bunch will get very excited about this and just yearn for more knowledge of what the Church was doing day before yesterday; and, it helps to take their minds off the race-problem and war, and politics and all those secular things.

3. You get a bunch of people together and integrate them around a slogan. Then you put up charts all over the parish house and vestibule and on the elm tree in front of the rectory, showing the percentage of growth Sunday by Sunday. If there is no growth you take these charts down and start a contest in the Ladies Aid to see which lady can bring the most visitors to tea on Wednesday. If you keep up this bombardment of posters, slogans, charts, graphs, and thermometer contests long enough you can really get an aggressive church operating at top speed.

Pretty soon every child in Sunday School will be so persuaded of the truth of Christianity he will arise every morning with clear eyed resolution, and as he rushes for the bathroom he will be heard chanting, "Sell that Church!"

4. You call your people together (the more frowns they have, the better) and then you talk to them and discuss paradoxes, and make out that everything is profound, and polar, and insoluble anyway. After a reasonable amount of time you can get them all walking stealthily around knitting their brows like anything, and muttering about Kieerkegaard and the confusion, predicament, degeneration and neo-plasticism of modern man. When you get to this stage you've really got something fresh and vital. It's a sort of parochial indigestion that you're after, and once you show the people how easy it is you've got all kinds of frustrations, neuroses, anxieties, insecurities, melancholias, and maladjusted chromosomes to work on and you can really go places.

So now that I've been in the field talking with some of the boys who are getting right down to the grass-roots, on the local level, perhaps I can get better orientated to the Christian religion—on the national, policy-making level.

(More Travels of a Gargoyle will follow presently.)

United Church Agency Proposes One Financial Drive

Community Fund System Will Greatly Increase Giving in Opinion of Money Raising Experts

Edited by Sara Dill

New York (RNS):—A nation-wide centralized financial campaign is being proposed by the Owen L. Coon Foundation of Chicago to the eight interdenominational agencies now considering merger into the National Council of Churches of Christ in America, and to the American Committee for the World Council of Churches. Purpose of the unified effort, according to Carl L. Anderson, executive vice-president of the Foundation, would be to raise "more money for administration, for a nation-wide program of research, and for use of modern mass media of publicity." The plan, in effect, would inaugurate a Protestant "community chest" type of drive for the benefit of interdenominational groups.

Details of the proposal were explained by Mr. Anderson at a meeting here of the Council of Men's Work Secretaries, composed of lay leaders of 20 religious groups and denominations. He described the plan as "an endeavor which will mean a great step forward for Christianity."

A private philanthropy, the Foundation is a non-profit corporation established by Owen L. Coon and his family. Mr. Coon is chairman of the board of the General Finance Corporation in Chicago, and chairman of the board of the Chicago Terminal National Bank.

Agencies to which the plan is being submitted, in addition to the World Council's American Committee, are: Federal Council of Churches, Foreign Missions Conference, Home Missions Council, International Council of Religious Education, United Council of Church Women, United Stewardship Council, Council of Church Boards of Education, and Missionary Education Movement.

If agreement is reached to enter upon the project, as at present outlined, or in an amended manner, the Foundation would be ready to provide the campaign counsel and personnel required to conduct the enterprise in 1949 for the budgets of 1950. To implement the campaign, the agencies would authorize a co-operating committee, made up of the directors of each agency and one or two board members appointed by each agency. Its first task would be to set up nationally a temporary organization, possibly under the name, "Christian Laymen's Association," to be composed of prominent national leaders. Then three functional groups of individuals, each a technician in his particular field, would be enlisted for a research commission, a modern media commission, and a fund raising commission. These would immediately begin activities in their assigned fields of endeavor.

The research commission would explore "the present operations and the possibilities of the Christian Church at three levels: local, national, and in the foreign field." The modern media commission would draw up a program "for telling the story of the influence of Christianity and what Christianity means in a fashion that can be understood by the man in the street, through newspapers, national magazines, radio, television and the movies. The fund raising commission would work with the firm of fund raising counsellors which it selects, receive and approve plans, strategy, devices, personnel, manuals, publicity, timing and all campaign matters.

Pointing out that all funds except those from denominational boards must come from the local level, the Foundation would work through local city, county and state Councils of Churches or such other local agencies as may exist. If necessary, new federations or councils would be set up, at least temporarily, and their budgets for 1950 would be raised at the same time.

To emphasize the need for a centralized financial campaign, the Foundation parallels the situation of the church agencies and that which existed for social welfare agencies in the 1920s. When the latter were formed into Community Funds, it said, a phenomenal growth took place in the number of contributors and the amounts subscribed.

Cowboys and Indians

Grand Rapids, Mich. (RNS):—An experiment in capturing childhood interest in cowboys and Indians for the benefit of missionary work is paying off in a novel way here. The "whoopin' and ropin'" of a class of young "rangehands" from the Old West who "ride again" every Friday afternoon in the parish house of St. Mark's Cathedral, actually is planned that way. The Trailblazers club for boys from 8 to 11 is a fan club for western Indian missions. While learning to rope and use stock whips, and playing western ranch games, the youngsters are learning about mission work in the western states.

Leader of the club is the Rev. H. Leigh Pink, curate of the cathedral and a former British and Canadian newspaperman, whose experiences with rodeos and ranch life in the U.S. and Canada now "pay off in a spiritual way." Canon Pink, dressed in western togs, tells missionary tales, shows movies and photographs and demonstrates the trade of the cowboy. The boys, in equally fancy dress, learn the wide-open spaces are now fenced-in range land and that Indians now are often cowboys and ranchers themselves.

And every week each boy drops a dime or two into a miniature log "bunkhouse" bank. When the banks are full, the youthful cow-punchers vote on the particular mission to which the money will be sent. Current favorite of the youngsters is a Wyoming mission group, perhaps because of the exciting tales Pink tells about the Blackfoot Indian chiefs. In his newspaper days, Pink served a stretch as publicist for western rodeos in Canada, and also fictionized the scenario for "The Miracle Rider," one of Tom Mix's last pictures.

Oppost UMT

Los Angeles (RNS):—Resolutions opposing universal military training, and endorsing the report of the president's committee on civil rights were adopted by 150 delegates to the annual conference of the Southern California Council of Protestant Churches.

Another resolution endorsed the proposed State Liquor Control amendment (soon to be voted upon) which would remove liquor control from the State Board of Equalization and place it in the hands of local communities.

Pleading for greater cooperation of all Protestant churches in spiritual, moral and social matters, Dr. E. C. Farnham, executive secretary of the Los Angeles Church Federation, said that such unity of purpose and action would not interfere with the expression of denominational and individual liberty "which is inherent in Protestant philosophy."

"The stifling of individualism in religious matters is as undesirable as the regimentation of individuals by the state," he said.

Oppose Bus Funds

Atlantic City: — Use of public funds for the "direct or indirect" support of church schools was opposed here by the annual conference of the American association of school administrators. The resolution, one of 22 introduced by a committee, declared: "We believe the American tradition of separation of Church and state should be vigorously and seriously safeguarded. We reassert the right of special interest groups, including religious denominations, to maintain their own schools as long as such schools meet the standards defined by the state in which they are located. We believe that these separate schools should be financed entirely by their own supporters. We therefore oppose all efforts to devote public funds either to the direct or indirect support of such schools."

One session of the conference was devoted to a discussion of religious training in the schools, including the released-time plan. However, no resolution on this subject was introduced.

Lambeth Campaign

London: — Bishops attending the Lambeth Conference this summer are going to be put to work. Plans for a "Lambeth Campaign" throughout England, with teams of overseas bishops visiting each diocese, has been approved by the missionary council of the Church of England Assembly.

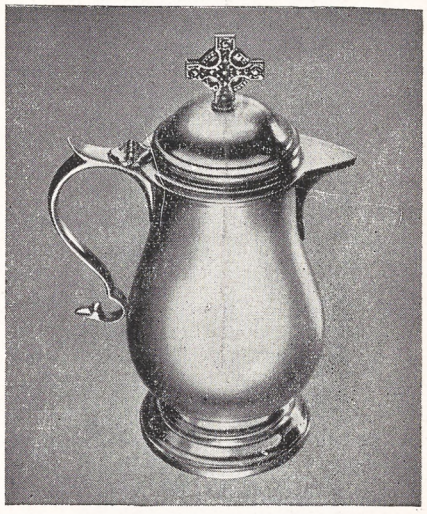
Bingo Condemned

Detroit:—The executive council of the diocese of Michigan adopted a resolution last week condemning bingo and other gambling games as a means of raising funds for churches and charity. Copies were sent to the governor, prosecuting attorney, police commission, with the suggestion that they see that present laws are enforced.

End Segregation

Richmond, Va.: — The executive committee of the Virginia Council of Churches has adopted a program of interracial cooperation calling, among other things, for repeal of state and city laws forbidding the holding of unsegregated religious meetings in public buildings. The action came shortly after the close of a week-long Protestant preaching mission here, in which Negro churches did not participate because of the law requiring segregation in public buildings. Negro groups had been invited to take part, but said they could not do so if the policy of segregation were followed. Main sessions of the mission were held in a city-owned auditorium, and the sponsoring committee said it had to abide by the segregation law.

In its program of interracial cooperation, the Council's executive committee said it did not attempt to speak in the name of its 15 member denominations but was offering recommendations for the rallying of sentiment for action.



Revival Meetings

Jesup, Ga.:—The Rev. Archer Torrey, Episcopalian who recently joined the staff of the People's Institute of Applied Religion, began a series of revival preaching services at St. Paul's here the last week in February. The services have been well attended by Episcopalians and others. His theme has been "The Holy Bible, the basis for abundant living" and he has emphasized that God gives man food, peace and self-respect but that man has turned these into famine, war and self-despair.

Better Relations

Cleveland (RNS):—Since the partition of India there has been a definite swing toward Christianity, especially on the part of Moslems. Bishop Clement D. Rockey made that report here after flying half way around the world from his missionary headquarters in Lucknow, India.

Here for a six months' visit, Bishop Rockey further disclosed: that Gandhi's memorial rites, in which Hindus, Moslems and Christians participated, did much to better relations between the warring groups; that national leaders are seeking new industrial outlets in larger cities of India; that new interest has been aroused in bringing education to the masses.

"These," said Bishop Rockey, "are the outward sign of a new force in India. What they may mean to our missionary enterprises isn't at all clear at the moment. Because of large shifts in population, one of our large Methodist colleges dropped from 1,100 students to 250 within a few weeks. In other missionary centers, there has been little change because of the partition. If we can keep the spirit of religious freedom alive during the next few years, much may be accomplished."

Movement for Peace

Fargo, N. D.:—"North Dakota pushes for peace," is the slogan of a state action committee of clergymen and scientists which has launched a campaign to discuss world peace in all urban communities. Meetings are scheduled in the four largest cities of the state—Minot, Bismarck, Grand Forks and Fargo. At these meetings, committee leaders explained, local committees will be set up which in turn will hold meetings in smaller cities in their areas, until this type of meeting has been held in every town and city of North Dakota of 1,000 population or over.

Ordination of Women

Copenhagen (RNS):—The Danish parliament has passed unanimously a bill permitting ordination of women in Denmark's state Lutheran Church, despite objections by a large group of clergy and laymen who regard the new act as contrary to ecclesiastical tradition. All nine bishops of the state Church have announced they will accept women ministers in their dioceses, but so far only two bishops have intimated they will be willing to ordain women themselves. One of the bishops modified his position by stating he will only ordain women elected to serve in his own diocese.

The new act provides that where a woman is elected a minister in a parish whose bishop declines to ordain her, the parish may be transferred to the jurisdiction of a bishop who will be willing to confer ordination.

Two women are expected to be ordained in the next three or four weeks as a result of the new legislation. One is Miss Johanne Anderson, who was offered a post last year as minister of a Lutheran congregation at Noerre Alslev, in the Danish island of Faltser. The parish is in the diocese of Odense, whose bishop, Hans Ollgaard, is one of the prelates willing to ordain women. The second woman is Miss Ruth Vermehren, who for many years has been working among the inmates of a Copenhagen women's prison and has had the permission of her bishop to administer the sacraments.

Passage of the bill has led to speculation whether ministers and laymen who regard the ordination of women as contrary to the conservative interpretation of Holy Scripture may decide that the Danish Church is no longer a true Church and form a new "confessional front."

Brotherhood Week

Owensboro, Ky.:—The Rev. Benjamin W. Tinsley, rector of Trinity Church here, was one of five ministers to participate in a broadcast stressing brotherhood between races and creeds. Others taking part were a Rabbi, the pastor of a Baptist Church for Negroes, a Methodist and a Congregationalist.

TWO WAYS OF LIFE

There are two contending forces locked in world-wide conflict. On the one hand the collectivist point of view, which carries on under various banners. On the other hand the individual free way of life.

These forces operate in spheres of politics, economics, and most every sphere of life and thought.

Many who dislike Stalin, Marxism, etc., heartily applaud economic schemes which stem from the Communist root and threaten Freedom.

Moral and spiritual implications in this conflict are basic, and in relation to them there can be no compromise. It is as much stealing for a state to take something which belongs to someone and give it to someone else as for a cattle rustler to steal a steer. Social sanctions have been spawned around falsehoods until the moral fiber of the human family is greatly weakened and calls for spiritual revival.

If you believe Freedom is in peril and would like to ally with others of us who share that conviction and are trying to do something about it, let us hear from you.

Crime Prevention

Louisville (RNS):—A girl in criminal court whipped out a pistol and aimed at Officer Joe Martin. She pulled the trigger, and when the gun failed to go off, exclaimed: "I won't miss the next time." Charles E. Keller, a Louisville attorney, told the American Business Club here that she — and thousands of other criminals — must be rehabilitated. The girl got a two-year sentence and Keller asked the businessmen: "Are we going to wait two years for her to shoot Joe Martin before we try to readjust and rehabilitate that girl for society?"

"The girl cannot be left to our institutions alone," he continued. "Here is a job for the Church. Church congregations have something to do besides congregate. The Protestant churches of Louisville have been working for seven years on a policy of active study and assistance to public institutions, trying to give them an aim in civic life. And when they have an aim, we make sure they don't forget to pull the trigger. Although divided by creeds, Louisville churches are united in deeds."

Keller referred to the committee on institutions of the Louisville Council of Churches. The committee is a continuing study of public institutions and social welfare conditions. Keller said his group originally faced two objections to the policy of cooperation with public officials. Some thought the group would be embroiled in politics, "but we have cooperated with Republicans and Democrats alike."

Others said "You can't accomplish anything without the whip of public criticism," the attorney commented. And he went on to say the success of this approach can be measured by "what we have done, what our public officials say about us, and the unsolicited national publicity of press services and magazines."

Keller compared objectives of the churchmen to those of a police crime prevention bureau. "If the police department recovers your watch after it is stolen, that is spectacular; it makes the headlines. But if the crime prevention division prevents your watch from being stolen it gets no public acclaim but it is worth just as much to you," Keller said.

THE NEW BOOKS

SYDNEY A. TEMPLE JR., Book Editor

_The Bible in the Church_ by Robert M. Grant. Macmillan, $2.50.

From the very beginning the Christian Church found itself in possession of a compilation of writings which it inherited from its parent Judaism and which it regarded as authoritative in matters of faith and conduct. In the course of time it produced its own compilation, the New Testament which it came to regard as equally authoritative. Along with the Old Testament, the Church inherited the problem of applying to contemporary situations pronouncements, which must be accepted because of their Divine origin, but which were separated from it by centuries of time and wide divergences in language and forms of thought. This is the problem with which every generation has had to cope; this is why the Scriptures must always be "interpreted."

In his book of nearly two hundred pages, Prof. Grant gives an outline of the way in which the problem has been treated by various individuals and "schools," beginning with a brief survey of our Lord's attitude towards the Old Testament and ending with a discussion of the "five relatively distinct groups of interpretations" in modern Protestantism. In a concluding chapter, he emphasizes the necessity in any genuine study of the Bible for both a rigid "philological-historical" approach and a "theological" in which the "theological interpreter . . . is aware of the significance of events from the standpoint of Christian history."

The book is well documented with eleven pages of "notes" and a "select bibliography" of four pages. The style is uniformly lucid. The reading of it is commended to anyone who takes seriously the study of the Bible, and it should be a required assignment for all seminary students.

The flowing lines and varied blues of the figure of the Virgin, the random placing of her monograms, the delicately drawn Child and attendant angels, recalls the tapestry-like quality of windows of the later middle-ages. This window, of richly textured quiet coloration, with its playfully irregular canopy framework, creates a pleasant, intimate atmosphere most harmonious in the smaller church.

a particular thesis. What makes this book unusual is that though the scholarship is profound and the investigation penetrating, it reads as interestingly as many novels and holds the attention much more successfully than many of the books on popular religion. As one reads this book he realizes that the Hexateuch is a story about real people, not a collection of legends or historical illustrations serving the purpose of later editors.

From the Song of Deborah to Jeremiah's interpretation of the destruction of Jerusalem, Prof. Simpson shows the development of a response made by the people to the inspiration of God, working from within. The theme of the book grows out of the "momentary monotheism which had issued from the self-surrendering acceptance of the power manifesting itself in the storm and the volcano." The author does more than comment on the Bible, for in a sense he continues the activity of the Bible editors. As the later redactors saw meaning in the movements of the tribes and developments in national history which they explained by their additions to the origin accounts, so the explanations here given explain the activity of God as he inspires the leaders to make appropriate response to the external stimuli.

This volume will cause the reader to think again of the fundamental meaning of the Old Testament revelation. If the assumptions of psychological reactions in the primitive people seem to be overdrawn, as they do to this reviewer, or if the scholarship appears to be unnecessarily advanced, this is probably all to the good. Too many of us stop thinking after we have left seminary and need to be stirred up. Only thus may our interpretation of the Old Testament retain a living vibrance as we present it to our people.

Danger From the East* by Richard E. Lauterbach. Harper Bros., $3.50.

The ex-chief of the Time-Life Far Eastern bureau covers post-war Japan, Korea and China and comes out on the opposite side from Henry Luce's "American Century." While pointing out that Japan is peaceful on the surface, he claims that McArthur's democratic revolution by fiat is a failure which only strengthens the status quo and which, now, has as its point of departure the idea of making the Japanese islands a stationary plane carrier in the Pacific. Both the Soviet Union and the United States are guilty of evil in Korea, he claims, but that at least the former has made fundamental changes in distribution of goods and land, while we have depended on opportunists and fascist collaborators for the most part. The story he gives on China simply backs up people like Agnes Smedley and Edgar Snow and, while adding nothing new, does give a play-by-play description of the Marshall mission to that country. Even as this is being written, the papers announce that the Chinese are rioting before the British and American embassies, demanding that we get out of their country. This book seems to indicate that the rioters have justice on their side.

H. C. Holdridge
Brigadier General, retired, Washington

After my retirement from the army, my interest was drawn to the program of the armed forces for compulsory military training. As a result of my intimate knowledge of the army, gained during thirty years of service, it became clear to me that not one argument advanced in support of the program would stand up under close analysis.

The only justification for such a program, which is contrary to every principle upon which this nation was founded, would be positive assurance that it would guarantee national security. In the age of the atom bomb and other weapons of terror, reliance upon the obsolete weapons contemplated under the proposal would constitute a danger to national security by giving us a false sense of security. This would be the major military blunder of our day, just as the major blunder prior to World War II was the purging of General Mitchell's concepts of air power. Not only would it result in insecurity, but it would lay the foundations for a new American militarism which would endanger the social, political, and democratic institutions of the country, and would be a fatal step toward World War III and the annihilation of civilization.

Mrs. Gertrude W. Scott
Churchwoman of San Pedro, Cal.

I agree with the Rev. Francis Wetherill about the "Travels of a Gargoyle." They are clever satire, refreshing in the midst of more serious fare. But alas why must he refer to them as a "happy glow of fun"? Of course they sting. They are intended to do so. I have not asked Mr. Barrett about this, nor do I know him. But on the face of them the "Travels" are the sort of expert needle work that is useful in waking up the self-satisfied and the self-righteous.

The Rev. David M. Talbot
Curate at Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

Concerning Tom Barrett's articles, they are extremely well done. However I am tempted to submit one entitled "The Gargoyle Comes to Call." The presence of the higher-ups sometimes so flusters those of us with ordinary mentalities that it seems safer to talk of incense pots and parish houses rather than to trot out our thoughts about the more important things to a man we have never seen before and perhaps will never see again.

The Witness is doing a good job. Keep it up.

Mr. Clinton Fritsch
Layman of Highland Park, Illinois

I have just finished reading Massey Shepherd's Living Liturgy in The Witness of the 12th. I believe the article explains most clearly why the seminaries are not getting all the contributions they sorely need. Holy Writ tells us the Innocents were slaughtered, but he throws doubt on the story—so we cut that out of our Bibles. Also we cut considerable out of the Prayer Book, later in the article. If I grant him the privilege of eliminating part of the Bible, he surely must grant me the same privilege—and neither of us can object if others do the same, and where does that lead us?

He also speaks of "hundreds" of babes whereas, if I'm not mistaken it is generally accepted, as it would be today in a village of that size, that 25 would more probably be the number.

In these days we all are troubled enough by doubts, and do we have to read a Church paper to have our doubts strengthened? It would seem only reasonable to have such a paper strengthen our faith, instead. Mr. Shepherd has had so many good articles that I hope he'll have more—and in the meantime we would do well to hold steadfastly to the Bible and Prayer Book.

I do not care to receive The Witness any more as I do not like the pro-Russian attitude or the undue emphasis on race relations.

Miss Jean Roberts
Churchwoman of Los Angeles

The number devoted to the Episcopal League for Social Action (Jan. 29) was exceptionally fine and it is a great comfort to be made aware that there is such an organization in the Episcopal Church dealing with vital issues. So much that we hear these days from clergymen is vague and unrealistic; mouthing phrases but never getting down to concrete issues. Mr. Burgess deals courageously with the race question; Mr. Hobbs surely made it clear that we are in great danger of losing our American democracy; the younger Spofford did a fine job in giving us an alarming picture of these times. I want to congratulate the League and also The Witness for devoting a number to the organization. May both prosper.

The Church Periodical Club Celebrates Anniversary

Has Given Sixty Years of Notable Service
As It Looks to Greater Usefulness Ahead

By Phyllis Dettmers

Co-chairman of the CPC Publicity Committee

New York:—The Church Periodical Club is celebrating its sixtieth anniversary this year. Starting in 1888 as one woman's practical solution to a problem, the CPC has grown until it is today one of the cooperating agencies of the National Council, with a director in each diocese, and a secretary in nearly every parish throughout the country.

It so happened that during the eighties, Mrs. Mortimer Fargo, a member of the Church of the Holy Communion in New York, had spent some time in Wisconsin and Michigan and had noted with concern the lack of good reading material available to members of the clergy in the remote sections of these states. Libraries were few; few, too, were the clergy who could afford to buy the books or subscribe to the magazines they desired.

On her return to New York, Mrs. Fargo began forwarding her own church periodicals, and, with the encouragement of her rector, interested a group of women in the parish in doing the same. On January 10, 1888 they met to organize and give a name to their undertaking—and thus the Church Periodical Club came into being.

In 1892 Mrs. Fargo died. By that time, however, her idea had taken healthy root and spread beyond her own parish and diocese until, when the CPC was incorporated that same year, there were 42 branches, sending out nearly 5,000 magazines regularly.

As the idea of the CPC became known, appeals for reading matter began to come in increasing numbers. Soon the different branches found themselves collecting and sending out not only church magazines, but periodicals and books of all sorts, children's games and toys, music, pictures, scrapbooks — all sorts of educational and recreational materials. Nor were the clergy the only recipients; before long the CPC was sending to schools, hospitals, prisons—to missionaries, social service workers, teachers, librarians, doctors and nurses, at home and abroad, wherever there were minds to be taught and guided and no other means of obtaining the needed tools.

The early growth of the CPC was greatly helped by the Woman's Auxiliary, which, because of its well developed organization in the mission field, became a logical channel for the distribution of CPC magazines and books. This spirit of close cooperation has continued over the years, and in some sections of the country today the Auxiliary is the instrument through which the CPC carries on its work.

Increased activity naturally brought the need for a businesslike —as well as enthusiastic—organization. The early work had been carried on entirely by voluntary gifts. Incorporation in 1892 was the first step toward providing for permanent financial support. Soon afterward an endowment fund was made possible through a substantial gift of Mr. Fargo, in memory of his wife. Other funds have been set up from time to time, one of them in honor of Miss Mary E. Thomas, for many years executive secretary of the Club. A special books fund, which provides new books for the libraries of Church institutions and for Church workers, was established as the corporate offering of parishes and dioceses throughout the country.

A most important step was taken in 1919 when the National Council was established, and the CPC designated as one of the cooperating agencies, with an annual budget for its administrative work. By this time the CPC had proved so helpful in the field of rural and foreign missions, and in its close cooperation with chaplains of the armed forces in World War I, that its service was recognized as an integral part of the Church. This steady growth was in no small measure due to the devoted work of Miss Thomas. During this period Mrs. Otto Heinigke, one of the original members, served as national president from 1908 until her death in 1937.

The setting up of a national office in New York (made possible by the National Council grant) provided a means for coordinating the activities of parish and diocesan groups. This office is the clearing-house through which those who wish to share their current magazines are given the names of individuals who have requested such publications. Decisions on over-all policy and administration of the general funds are the responsibility of a national board, the members of which represent all sections of the country.

In each parish and diocese, the work is self-supporting, each group choosing its own means of raising the necessary funds for local work and for contributions to the general work, such as the books fund and the Tokyo project (both described in other articles of this issue.) A secretary, appointed or approved by the rector, is in charge of each parish, and is the first point of contact for members.

The diocesan director, appointed by the bishop, guides and integrates the work of the parishes under her, and serves as middle-man between them and the national office. Following the general Church pattern, the dioceses are grouped into provinces, each having a representative who attends the semi-annual national board meetings to report on the accomplishments and needs of her section of the country.

During World War II, as in 1917-1919, the CPC was able to supply uncounted tons of reading matter for the armed forces—recreational reading for troop transports, training camps, recreation centers, for navy, merchant marine and coast guard ships; and, working closely with chaplains — Bibles, Prayer Books, hymnals and other religions publications for the spiritual encouragement of our men and women in uniform.

With the end of the war and the re-opening of communications, the CPC, along with the entire Church, is confronted by a tremendous task to be attempted in China, Japan and the Philippines; and always at home the need continues to supply our remote missions, schools and hospitals with necessary books. Only by the steady development of a new generation of ethical, democratic leaders all over the world can we hope that mankind will cease its warring. The role of fine books and magazines in this great educational work needs no elaboration. The CPC starts its second sixty years with a greater need to fill than at any time in its history.

New York:—The Church Periodical Club recently received an expression of congratulations and best wishes from St. John's University, Shanghai, China. The beautiful scroll, pictured on the cover, states in the large center characters "Praiseworthy things given to the forest of scholars." The translation of the characters at the left is "Greetings from the St. John's University Library, Shanghai" while those at the right state: "To the Church Periodical Club on the occasion of its 60th anniversary."

A letter from Librarian Vi-Lien Wong accompanied the gift in which he writes of the great help the C.P.C. has been in building up the university library. "From April 1922 to June 1941, a total of 2,480 books and 296 subscriptions to periodicals was donated to St. John's," he writes. "Though the needed support was interrupted by the war, it was soon renewed at the beginning of 1946 so that a continued gift of 162 books and 56 subscriptions has been received from the Club. It is appropriate on the occasion of the 60th anniversary of the Church Periodical Club to express our appreciation and admiration of this useful organization. We take this opportunity to thank all the good people who are making it possible for the Club to donate books and periodicals. We send out hearty congratulations and best wishes."

St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, lost the greater part of its medical library during the war. Bishop Binsted appealed to the Church Periodical Club and already 800 books have been sent, with more to follow. The story is told by Mrs. Edwin Gibbs elsewhere in this number

TELLS OF LIFE IN MANILA

By BERNICE JANSEN
Teacher at St. Stephen's Chinese School

Manila:—I don't believe that anyone or anything could have prepared me for the frightful devastation of Manila or the countryside. Nothing is more depressing than broken shells of buildings and homes. One sees twisted bits of once beautiful Spanish grill work on the old houses. Now squatters have moved into these derelict houses, making them look even worse with patchworks of rusty iron sheets. And there are always those horrible piles of garbage and tin cans that no one seems to have moved away. Everywhere there are huge bomb crater holes not yet filled in, to say nothing of the sidewalks that are dangerous to walk on because of broken-off lamp post stubs and the huge piles of garbage.

We live in the slum section of town. . . . Pigs and goats and mangy dogs wander about in search of food in the garbage piles, while huge flies swarm over everything. This isn't a pleasant picture, but it's just as well that you know it and not think of the Orient as a place where "they are making a swift recovery."

Our section wasn't burned nor destroyed during the war, and therefore thousands moved over here for safety and have stayed ever since. The children who were taught to steal from the Japanese have found it so easy and lucrative that they continue to take our sewer pipes, rain spouts, playground equipment and anything else they can lay their hands on. These hoodlums are a pathetic group, for they are judged too old to start in the first grade of the already overcrowded schools. They tear around the streets carrying toy guns, sling shots and sticks for fighting, and they squat at the corners of the buildings to gamble.

Constance Bolderson, our principal, and Miss Schaeffer and I teach at St. Stephen's School. There are over 900 children in the school built for 500. In spite of being packed to the doors, we manage to have quite a high standard of teaching

The Books Committee of CPC Serves a Great Need

Many Thousands of Books Have Been Sent To All Parts of the World in Recent Years

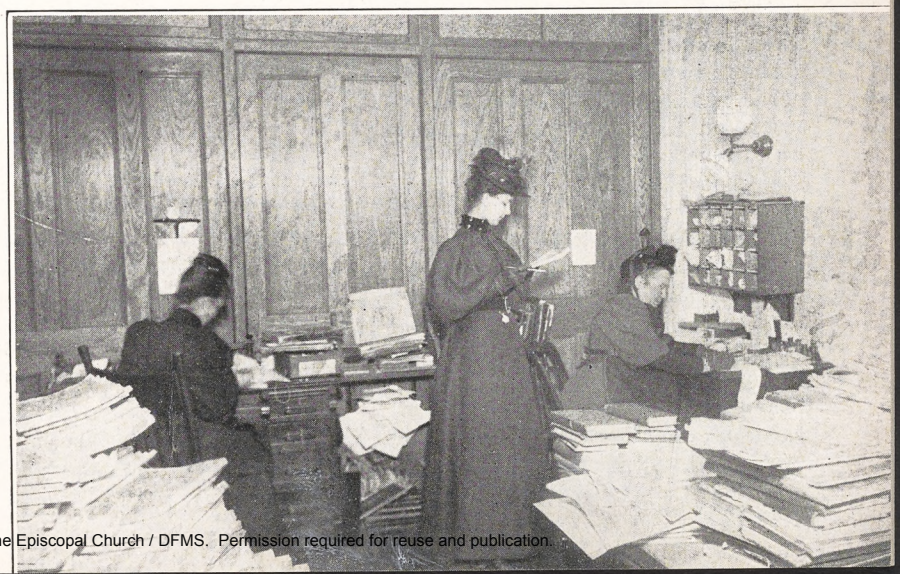
By Anne C. Gibbs
Chairman of CPC Books Committee

New York:—Soon after Mrs. Eliot Moody became president of the national Church Periodical Club, she appointed a books committee, consisting of a chairman and three members, to receive and consider all appeals for reading matter which were sent to the national office. This committee holds regular monthly meetings except during July and August when urgent appeals are referred to a member. The funds used to purchase books and for magazine subscriptions are derived from money set aside for this purpose in the annual budget of the national CPC, from contributions from interested friends, and from interest received from several memorial funds. Recently special funds have been set up to be used for gifts of books and subscriptions to be sent to China, Puerto Rico and Brazil for use in the theological seminaries.

It is a matter of regret to the committee that in order to make a fair distribution of the funds at our disposal, it is not possible to grant more of the requests received. All appeals are carefully discussed at the meetings and the immediate need of the applicant is considered. Many of the lists sent to us are very lengthy and must be cut; others certain titles of books long out of print, and are refused as the committee does not have the facilities for locating and obtaining such books. Applicants often ask for books to be used in establishing personal libraries. Such requests are refused except in the cases of clergymen or students who require certain books for their work or studies.

Since its inception in 1943, the books committee has distributed over 7000 books and given several hundred of magazine subscriptions, not including many renewals. All books given were not new. Often it is possible to fill out a list of books requested from dealers in used books and from gifts of books offered to our office. No book is ever sent out unless it is in very good condition, that is, clean and no pages missing.

Appeals for reading matter come to us from all over the world as well as from the United States. They come from bishops and other clergy, students, missionaries, hospitals, church and mission schools, and individuals in China, Japan, Siberia, Trans-Jordan, South America, Australia, Nicaragua, Alaska, Canal Zone, Haiti, Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic, Virgin Islands, and lately from Jerusalem.



The books requested cover a wide range of subjects, among which are the following: theology, religion, education, social and racial problems, medicine, surgery, nursing, therapeutics, art, music, history, biography, architecture, and agriculture. Schools ask for encyclopedias and dictionaries in several languages, text books for all grades of school children, and books of supplementary reading for younger children. During the war, many chaplains were supplied with Bibles, Prayer books, hymnals and religious tracts, and we now have a constant demand for used Bibles, Prayer Books and hymnals with and without music and children's books.

Fiction, new and old, is in great demand. It is interesting to note that new fiction requested is always of fairly recent date, while old fiction desired is for books no longer in active circulation, and generally difficult to procure.

The committee has been able to aid expatriated missionaries whose books were either lost or destroyed during the war. The Church Missions House asked for help from the Church Periodical Club in the task of supplying, with books necessary to their work, these persons who were returning to their stations abroad.

Negro and Indian mission schools have been encouraged by gifts of books and pictures. A Church Army worker was delighted with, and so grateful for, a subscription to a New York Sunday newspaper. At Christmas, parochial branches of the Church Periodical Club sent long desired books to clergymen whose names are kept on file in this office.

Soon after the close of hostilities in the East, Bishop Binsted of the Philippine Islands wrote that the greater part of the medical library of St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, had been lost or destroyed and asked if the Church Periodical Club could help to restore it. Realizing that such a gift would require more money than the committee had at its disposal, it was decided to write each diocesan director explaining the urgent need of St. Luke's and asking for contributions. The committee was not too optimistic of an enthusiastic response, but almost immediately checks began to arrive at the office. Even the smallest of our dioceses were eager to have a share in this project. The appeal was sent out in June, and by September, three months later, over $3000 had been received. Before the end of September, 300 medical books on all subjects necessary for the work of doctors and nurses had been purchased, packed and sent on their way to

That "New Look" is not so new. This picture is one of the earliest in the archives of the sixty-year-old Church Periodical Club and shows a number of well-dressed ladies packing books and magazines for the Club at St. Bartholomew's Church, New York

Manila. In all, 800 books have been sent to St. Luke's and there is still a balance in the fund which will be used to purchase new books, to replace old ones, and to renew subscriptions for medical magazines. The committee was greatly assisted in the difficult task of selecting these books by the interested cooperation of the publishing firms, and also by the librarians of several hospitals in New York who were most helpful in furnishing lists of the books in their medical libraries.

Many grateful letters are received and a few excerpts may help to an understanding of the importance of the work of the Church Periodical Club in the distribution of reading matter to those who otherwise might be unable to obtain it.

From a Negro Bishop: "I am interested in religious books and books of fiction which deal with inter-racial and inter-national matters, as I appear before groups concerned in social justice, human brotherhood, cooperation and relations, also of a new world social order now in the making. I am not only thankful but grateful for the books received from the Church Periodical Club."

From Alaska: "The recent package of books which you sent to St. Mark's School arrived in good condition. It was a very nice selection, and the staff and children will enjoy them. I personally will pass them on to someone else who shares my fondness for mystery stories."

A hospital in Puerto Rico: "You know that when you are working in a hospital where you have many problems, it is the greatest aid imaginable to have the most recent discoveries concerning diseases and operations. Medications are also suggested in these books and magazines and so the doctors like to have them at hand in the hospital library."

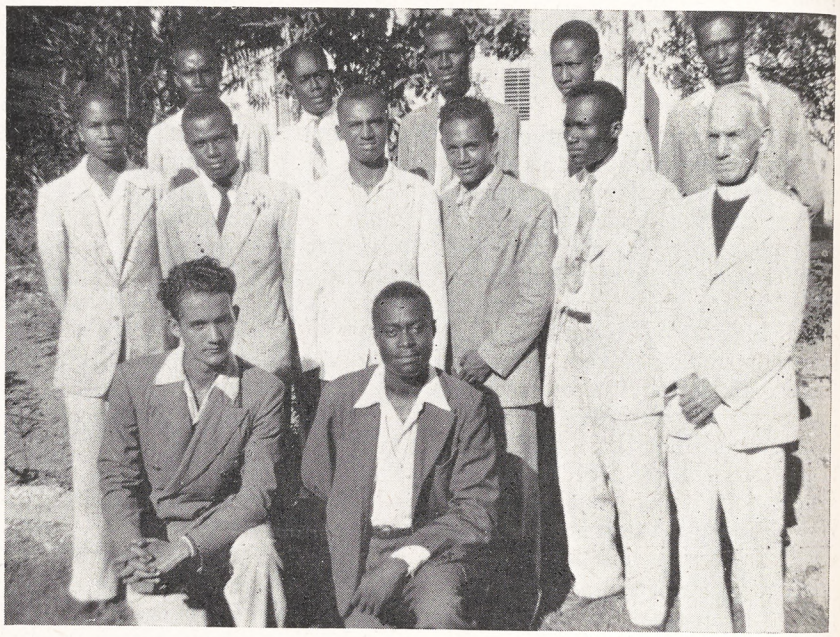
From British Honduras: "The books and magazines do lighten our leisure hours and provide relaxation. After I am through with them I pass them on to the people living on our coral isle and up our creeks and rivers on condition they pass them on to others and in this way a great many people profit by your kindness."

An Indian mission worker: "St. Luke's is a field mission—chapel, vicarage and community center of the San Juan Mission. The San Juan Mission has its headquarters at Farmington, New Mexico, and is the headquarters of all work—medical, spiritual, social service and evangelical—of the Episcopal Church among the Navajo Indians in New Mexico. I am grateful for your interest in us and hope that the work we are doing among the Navajos justifies the kindnesses of our many friends."

These are typical of the many letters received from Church workers at home and abroad, one of whom recently described the Church Periodical Club as "amazingly like the mythical fairy Godmother who produced an answer to every need by waving her wand."

OVER A MILLION WAS RAISED

New York:—The Presiding Bishop issued the following statement on March 10, announcing returns on the February 29th offering for world relief up to that time: "With deep gratitude to hundreds of thousands of donors, we have now passed the minimum goal of one million dollars. However it should be borne in mind that the need is so great that every additional gift will bring relief to many sufferers throughout the world."



Donations are still coming in, with some dioceses not having yet reported at all, so that the total offering will be considerably more than the million. Officers at 281 state that the entire sum raised will be turned over at once to Church World Service who have the sole responsibility of distributing every penny donated.

The largest amount received from a single parish, up to March 10, was $15,569 "with more to come" from Trinity Church, Boston, where the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris is the rector. It is thought unlikely that any parish will surpass this figure.

CPC AIDS THE WORK IN PUERTO RICO

By CHARLES F. BOYNTON
Bishop of Puerto Rico

San Juan, P. R.:—There is probably nothing more expensive or difficult to compile, in the book line, than an adequate theological library. After the National Council had generously made it possible for Puerto Rico to open a local seminary, we were still faced with the problem of both finding and purchasing the basic books required.

Dean P. D. Locke and twelve seminary students in the District of Puerto Rico. Bishop Charles Boynton writes of them: "They have fine minds and figuratively eat up the commentaries and other books sent to us by the Church Periodical Club"

A letter, with but a 5-cent air mail stamp, written to the CPC, brought forth an immediate response. Five hundred dollars was voted for this specific purpose; and little by little the volumes began to come to us—volumes from England and volumes from the States, new volumes and used volumes of classics now out of print and almost impossible to find. It was like an extended Christmas. And the little seminary of San Miguel in San Juan, Puerto Rico, now has a fundamental theological library of which it is far from ashamed.

The little West Indians in the American Virgin Islands are very poor. But in spite of their poverty,

EDITORIALS

Church Periodical Club

WHO is a member of the Church Periodical Club? Whoever wants to share his magazines or books with his neighbor in some isolated spot where these are lacking. Joining the CPC is as simple as putting a plain wrapper around your already-read magazine and mailing it to your CPC friend in Arizona or Kentucky or Maine—in Alaska, Puerto Rico or Liberia.

This sending of current magazines from one individual to another is the foundation on which the CPC is built. But its activity is by no means limited to this. The work may be as extensive and varied as the imagination, energy and time of its members. It may be coordinated with other hobbies and interests, with other Church groups and programs.

Do you collect victrola records or reproductions of fine paintings? Do you teach—languages, history, science, Sunday school, handicrafts, or whatever? Does raising a family and making an attractive home take all your waking hours? Do you subscribe to magazines on world affairs, education, health, sports, interior decorating, stamp collecting, or some other specialized interest? Do you work with the deaf, the blind, or other handicapped people? Whatever hobby or serious interest is close to your heart, probably its printed literature is one of the materials with which CPC works. Sharing your own periodicals is the first and most personal step, out of which many a warm and enduring friendship-by-mail has developed, to enrich the lives of both donor and recipient.

Next comes the parish group — the interested members who gather to work out their own projects. A happy social evening may grow out of making scrap-books or rehabilitating toys for a children's hospital—out of creating new Christmas cards from old for a mission where there is no gift shop. A party or dance may raise contributions for the national Books Fund, to buy needed technical volumes and classics for Church workers. A group of young mothers may want to gather together their children's outgrown books for a mission school where the youngsters cannot get enough stories and pictures. Or several parishes may decide to band together to "adopt" a mission.

Those of us who live in cities or suburbs, or can drive to a good-sized town, take our books for granted. More often than not, the only problem is to find sufficient leisure to read what we choose from the tremendous bulk of available literature. When one is hurrying to get through the tasks of a crowded day, it takes a little thought to realize that many ill or isolated people, with no access to books, music or hobbies, count the slow minutes one by one. It is not easy, in the midst of accepted comforts, to imagine the many hospitals, missions and schools, devastated by war, now struggling to resume their work of teaching and healing, without the necessary textbooks, without the inspirational books that help give inner strength in the face of great obstacles.

Don't let your current magazines or recent books gather dust, once you have read them. Find out from your parish secretary how to go about sharing them with someone who would look forward with joy to their regular arrival. Or, should your parish be temporarily without a secretary, write to the national office of the CPC at 120 East 22nd Street, New York 10, N.Y. for information.

"QUOTES"

THE Church Periodical Club offers recreation, knowledge of the outside world, refreshment, education and comfort to our many missionaries, including our twenty-five native clergy who are engrossed in the difficult task of ministering to over sixty-five missions. So we take the opportunity of this sixtieth anniversary of the C.P.C. to express our deepest and sincerest thanks for helping to do the Church's work in Creole-French-speaking Haiti where most of our clergy and all of our seminarians read, write and speak English.

Sacrificial Suffering

PALM Sunday, in its collect, states "that all mankind should follow the example of his (Christ's) great humility." The great act of humility referred to is the patient suffering of not just a man, Jesus, but the passion and crucifixion of the Son of God. St. Paul insisted that the cross of Christ was a stumbling block to the Jew, for the Jew could not accept the fact that the kingdom could only be established by the sacrificial death of the king. To the Greek, the cross was foolishness because God, who was pure spirit, could not appear in flesh and die as a common criminal. For many, the significance of Holy Week is still both a stumbling block and foolishness. It is difficult to become completely convinced that sacrifice is the only way that leads to real life.

God has shown us on Calvary that such is the truth. In the Gospel he was forever speaking of taking up the cross. But we would like to avoid it. In almost every phase of Church life, where above all, the principle of sacrifice for the good of all ought to prevail, there are signs of seeking to forget it. We are called upon to give money that we may "bear one another's burdens," but if we even give, we stop short of the point where it hurts, or requires any sacrifice.

We are often convinced that certain actions in the community would lead to more justice for others, but we do not take them because it might make the powers that be withdraw support from the church. We know that we ought to work with other Christians, and become more united with them, but we do not want to give up one cherished form or practice of our own that we may do so.

Clergyman still the prophetic urge for fear that they will get a "bad name," and thus they proclaim the "foolishness of the cross." We cannot expect the world to go forward into the kingdom until we ourselves set an example of sacrifice, "losing our lives" for his sake and the gospel's. We need conviction from the cross that sacrificial suffering is God's will for his children.

A Joy of Arctic Life

by William J. Gordon Jr.

The Bishop-Elect of Alaska

IN THE summer of 1943, our marriage vows one day old, Shirley and I started our journey from Seward, Alaska to Pt. Hope, my new charge on the Arctic Coast. We stopped in Nenana a few days for my ordination to the priesthood, and then proceeded to our new work on the extreme northwestern tip of the Alaskan mainland—a little Eskimo village of two hundred and sixty-eight people inside the Arctic Circle by a hundred and sixty-seven miles.

We found ourselves in a new world. The only other white resident was a school teacher, and he left us his work added to that of the mission when he was transferred a few months later. During the late war years there was a temporary army weather station with a small personnel in the village. I found I had a parish of five Eskimo villages extending over four hundred miles and containing almost six hundred baptized Eskimos. The chief mode of travel was, and is, by dog team, and four arctic winters have now taken me almost six thousand miles with team and sled.

The wife of the Bishop-elect of Alaska, Mrs. William J. Gordon Jr., starts on an eighty mile dog-sled trip with her husband. Like all missionaries those in Alaska depend upon the Church Periodical Club

One of our first thoughts was of the eight-month arctic winter, characterized by week-long gales and long dark winter days (as I am writing this the wind is blowing outside at exactly fifty miles an hour!). A friend told me of the work of the Church Periodical Club; so I wrote the New York office and sent a list of several magazines and books, hoping to get one or two of each. Much to my surprise in our next mail, once a month, I was told that all of my requests had been assigned to various parish groups and was even asked if there was anything else that I needed!

Soon the magazines and books began coming, and now, five years later, the CPC is one of the real joys of our arctic life. Certainly not just our lives either because the books and magazines we have received have been passed on to army personnel, to government school teachers, and most of all to our Eskimo people. Whenever I pause with my dogs at some winter camp immediately some hopeful parishioner asks if I brought any magazines. I vividly remember two copies of some magazine that I read from cover to cover while stormbound in a little igloo home along the trail. As I finished them I passed them on to old folks and children, and how their faces lit up as they looked for hours at the pictures, sitting there on the rough driftwood floor.

We have truly enjoyed the periodicals sent, but even more joy has come through the very real friendships we have made through the CPC. We can name almost a dozen personal friends in as many states, all met first through the Church Periodical Club. Early in my ministry here the CPC at Herkimer, New York, sent me a copy of Bowie's "Story of the Bible" for use in the Church school. I wrote the donors and thanked them and they wrote back with real interest in our work. Since that time we have had a veritable shower of CPC blessings from this group, and they even asked for something else that they could do. So I told them of the little village of Pt. Lay, 165 miles north of Pt. Hope, where all of the village people are members of our Church. A native layreader carries on the services as a volunteer except for the three occasions during the year when I can visit the village with the ministrations of the Church. At Christmas time the only presents received by our people are the ones the mission is able to give, so we like to do all we can for them. However, in the past we have only been able to provide for the children, while the older folks, much like children in their simple joys, have had nothing to gladden their hearts. The CPC at Herkimer has taken over the job of providing for the older people completely for the past three years, and each February when I visit Pt. Lay now smiling faces say, "This Christmas was the best one we have ever had—even better than last year." It would be very hard to convince the Pt. Lay Eskimos that there is no such thing as fairy godmothers!

At Pt. Lay there is an attractive twenty-one year old girl named Rose Tingook. Rose has been diagnosed an active tuberculosis case and has been restricted to her home in the village. Since there are many thousand tuberculosis cases in Alaska less active than hers, and since the available beds in tuberculosis hospitals are about one to each ten cases, she has been refused admittance to any institution. Her family is very poor and able to do little for her. Last spring I wrote the Pt. Lay "godmothers" in Herkimer and asked them please to include a special present for Rose in the box this year to brighten her life a little. To my great surprise Rose received not one special present, but several boxes, not just from Herkimer but from all over the diocese of Albany. With these boxes went personal letters, and now Rose knows that though she may be denied admittance to the hospital she is not without friends and that her loving heavenly Father has not forsaken her. One of the most moving experiences of my arctic life was a private communion service I was privileged to hold for Rose in her little igloo home last winter.

Space does not permit me to mention the host of other services of similar nature the CPC has rendered St. Thomas' Mission. Magazines have been sent to our layreaders in the various stations—to men who have given freely of their time to God and to the Church with no thought of pay in return. Most of all, prayers have gone up to the throne of God for us, for our family, for our people, and for our labours for his kingdom. Many are the faithful ones who are the missionaries at home, but surely not the least among those who have been upholding our arms in the Arctic have been the loyal members of the Church Periodical Club.

The Tokyo Project Of the CPC

By

DOROTHY McKECHNIE

The Chairman of the Project

AT THE triennial meeting held in Philadelphia in September 1946, the Church Periodical Club voted to undertake a special project for the next three years. This was to be the task of raising at least $5,000 for books for the library of the Seminole Indians in the Everglades, Florida, looking at pictures sent by the Church Periodical Club to the Glade Cross Mission

The reasons for devoting time and money to restoring the library of this college in a former enemy country are perhaps best expressed in the words of Bishop Sherrill and General Douglas MacArthur, both of whom regard the teaching of Christian ideals and ethics as basic to the development of Japan as a peaceful member of the world society of nations.

Bishop Sherrill said: ". . . It is not enough to attempt to build democracy in Japan—democracy must be undergirded by Christianity if it is truly to endure. . . . This gift of books will be of inestimable assistance to Japanese Christianity, with an important bearing upon the future peace of the world."

General MacArthur's response to a letter acquainting him with the plan was: "It is needless to say that anything we can do to disseminate the enlightened spirit of Christianity among the Japanese people is Christian endeavor of the highest order, and more than this, encouragement to the strengthening of those spiritual forces which alone can ensure the future peace of the world. You have my most hearty wishes for the success of this lofty purpose."

The connection between the Church Periodical Club and the Church in Tokyo is not new. As far back as 1919, Bishop Reifsnider, then head of St. Paul's College, Tokyo, asked the CPC to provide a $15,000 library for the college—this being one of the requirements of the Japanese government for granting St. Paul's rank as a university. This fund was fulfilled — and its success formed the basis for gifts of books, which have been given over the years, to other universities, hospitals and schools in the Orient.

Toward the end of World War II, the buildings (including the library) of the Central Theological College at Ikebukuro were almost completely destroyed—and in their destruction was lost one of the means of awakening the imagination and action of potential Japanese Christian leaders of the future.

The newly appointed dean, Paul Y. Kurose, found himself and his staff faced by almost insurmountable obstacles. Again Bishop Reifsnider appealed to the CPC—and again the CPC is turning to Church members all over the country for cooperation in this far-reaching project.

Mr. Douglas Overton, former missionary, now on the staff of the American consulate, has sent the following description of what books mean in post-war Japan: ". . . My thoughts run to the Central Theological College at Ikebukuro, on the outskirts of Tokyo. Once the pride of the Nippon Seikokwai (the Holy Catholic Church of Japan), today its classrooms and dormitories lie in ashes and the barren walls of its gutted chapel stand solitary in a field of rubble. We have the students and the faculty to staff the Central Theological College;—what we lack are a few simple materials which will make the difference between a barren refuge and a community of earnest men praying, studying and working together. Our first need is Books—the Church Fathers, the great English Divines, the moderns, books on sociology, psychology, history, Hebrew, Greek and Latin. Only when we have these books can we send forth well-trained pastors to staff our churches in Japan.

"Back home we are all used to having scores of books around us in our homes, schools, and libraries. In Japan it is different. Today the cheapest kind of book costs a week's wages. . . . As a Churchman and a member of the occupation forces, I can only say: Send us the materials so we can produce men capable of leading this disillusioned people from the darkness of war and its aftermath into the light. Only then can we say that the work of the past six years is finished."

With this triennium approximately half over, $2500 has thus far been contributed to the CPC fund for the library of the Central Theological College. Money and Books are both urgently needed. Those who wish to contribute should do so as follows:

Money (check or money order) should be sent to the national CPC treasurer:

Mrs. Robert W. Arwood

Kansas City 6, Missouri

Books: clergymen or their families having books suitable for a theological library should send them to:

Rev. Kenneth A. Viall, SSJE
c/o Religious Division, CIE
GHQ Tokyo
APO 500, San Francisco, California

A list of such books sent, and an approximate valuation should be sent to:

CPC Aids Teachers

By
FRANCES MARKLEY ROBERTS

LONG before Americans used the alphabet to describe every imaginable theory or government agency, CPC was already an accepted abbreviation at St. John's. It meant fresh magazines on the racks in the library, last month's news to offer for term papers in modern history, formulae from chemical abstracts for student-manufacturers, one-act plays for the drama club, even detective stories for the addicts. Beyond all these was the fact that for many of us this was the one personalized touch with members of our Church at home.

My own family's connection with the CPC for twenty years makes a typical case study of CPC personality. Mr. Roberts read in The Spirit of Missions that the CPC wished a copy of Amiel's Journal. So he took his own copy from the shelf, sent it from Shanghai to New York, and at the same time asked if any reproductions of western art were available for my new course in this subject. Color reproductions, photographs of statues and buildings began to arrive, often accompanied by notes of interest in the university and in our work.

Here in China, the pictures (many of them European travel mementoes, dear to their owners) were used by three colleges; for good pictures are scarce here. They appeared in student art exhibits, as illustrative material for courses in history, literature and art, and were the basis for a series of lectures before the American Women's Club in Shanghai. I have always regarded the New York CPC office's gift of a book on how to catalogue a picture collection as the ultimate touch of consideration. Unfortunately, many of the best pictures were victims of war; but the surviving ones form the nucleus for a new collection.

The St. John's University library has been a special project of the CPC for some years. Considerably due to CPC interest, students and faculties of other institutions, as well as foreign commissions and travelers, come to find necessary material in our reference books.

This is one of the poorer mission churches in the district of Haiti. Here also the clergy depend largely upon the CPC for books and magazines

When I was refugeeing with the children in Honolulu, at the time of the Pearl Harbor attack, Bishop Littell's home almost at once became a center for countless books and magazines. CPC members and officers put these on boats which touched at the Island, and in this way they were carried to countless military personnel and refugees.

The women of the CPC have given much more than their books and pictures and periodicals. They have blessed many of us in the mission areas of the Church with warm friendship and a personal Church connection. In these years of regimentation, budgets, rules, questionnaires and applications, there is something joyously Christian in the direct personal relationship the CPC has maintained with all of us.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

One Sacrament or Two?

ONE of the things we need always to bear in mind in our preinitiation instructions, whether to sponsors or to confirmands, is the close relation of Baptism and Confirmation. They are not two distinct sacraments, but correlative and interlinked parts of one sacrament. Confirmation is complementary to Baptism, not merely supplementary. I dare say that Archbishop Cranmer would not agree to this statement, and certainly the medieval scholastic theologians would not. But neither Cranmer nor his scholastic predecessors were infallible. The whole weight of New Testament and patristic evidence agrees in the principle that both regeneration and the gift of the indwelling Spirit are normal, necessary elements in full initiation into the Body of Christ.

Our Prayer Book forms betray the confusion of an attempt to find a compromise between New Testament teaching and later developments of doctrine, both medieval and reformed. Taken by itself, for what it actually says, the rite of Baptism in the Prayer Book suggests that water baptism is a full initiation into the Body of Christ. It beseeches God not only for the forgiveness of sin and spiritual rebirth, but also for the gift and sanctification of the Holy Ghost. The 25th of the 39 Articles reinforces this view by stating that Confirmation is not to be counted among the sacraments of the Gospel, being one of those 'commonly called Sacraments' which 'have grown partly of the corrupt following of the Apostles.'

Close examination of the Confirmation rite reveals a confusion even more confounded. The lesson from Acts read at the service implies that the baptized persons presented for Confirmation have in no way received as yet the gift of the Holy Spirit. The ancient Gelasian prayer which the Bishop reads immediately before the laying on of hands conforms with the New Testament teaching —at least in the original Latin wording of the prayer. For it comes from a time when Confirmation immediately followed Baptism in water, when the two offices were in actuality one continuous service. But Cranmer made in 1552 a deliberate alteration in the central petition of this prayer. Instead of the supplication: "Send into them thy Holy Spirit," he substituted: "Strengthen them with the Holy Ghost, the Comforter." Thus he endeavored to perpetuate the scholastic doctrine that Confirmation is but the strengthening of a gift already received, and not the imparting of the indwelling Spirit in its fullness for the first time. Yet strangely enough, as though forgetful of the doctrine which he espoused in the Articles, he left in the prayer said by the Bishop after the laying on of hands gracious reference to 'the example of thy holy Apostles.'

The effect of these ambiguities has been the seemingly inevitable division into 'two schools of thought' among Anglican theologians with regard to the meaning and significance of Confirmation. The finer subtleties of the question probably do not worry the average parish priest in his customary pastoral duties. But they create serious tension whenever we get to discussing the opportunity of reunion with other Christian bodies. The broad churchman, like Cranmer, will insist that Confirmation is highly desirable, but by no means indispensable; the Anglo-Catholic, with a fine disregard of the scholastic doctrine of Confirmation, will insist upon the scholastic inclusion of Confirmation among the 'seven sacraments' most certainly to be received in Christ's Church.

We need a thorough reconsideration, without controversial rancor, of our whole tradition of Christian initiation in its historical, theological and practical aspects. We do not need to deny either that the Holy Spirit comes into a personal, effectual relationship with those who are baptized and regenerated in His Name, or that He is given only for 'strength and increase' at the time of Confirmation. What we do need is a clearer conception of the reciprocal relationship of these two rites, which were in origin but two parts of one rite. One of the best ways of clarifying the problem would be an experiment, all too rare among us, of having both Baptism and Confirmation administered at the same time, in one continuous service, when the Bishop makes his visitation to the parish.

What About Your Library?

The C.P.C. of the diocese of Long Island has made arrangements whereby one of our national Church weeklies is in each of the thirty-four public libraries in Brooklyn. CPC Board Members Report On Many Activities

They Describe Projects and Achievements Of Organization Throughout the Country

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The national board of the Church Periodical Club held its semi-annual meetings at Calvary House on February 25th and 26th. A feature of the conference was the reading of reports by provincial representatives, describing projects and achievements of the CPC throughout the country.

New England:—Mrs. Laurence E. Pope of Massachusetts reported that in addition to the sending of magazines and periodicals by individuals, special projects had been undertaken by several dioceses. Connecticut CPC members divided into archdeaconries, each of which made itself responsible for the needs of a chosen mission—sending all types of printed material required for the work of that mission. Rhode Island has become interested in sending material in Braille to blind persons, as well as helping with mountain missions and contributing to the general Book Fund. Massachusetts has had a drive to raise funds for the Tokyo Project, and collected $250 in 1947. One parish sent a trunkful of nurses' textbooks to the Rev. J. Crawford Brown in China.

New York and New Jersey:—In this province, Mrs. H. J. Jackson of Scarsdale, N. Y., emphasized that the eight dioceses were united by what she called "the backbone of the CPC"—that is, the sending of periodicals and books personally from donor to recipient. Building on that foundation, the different groups have expanded their work to furnishing libraries at home and abroad in colleges, schools, hospitals and prisons. Several dioceses have organized their own libraries, with CPC members as librarians. One group has provided current literature for a neighborhood recreation room for elderly people. Another sends religious literature for the use of Auxiliary workers among college students; and two memberships in the theological book-of-the-month club have been taken out for missionary bishops.

This province has a special interest in the Seamen's Church Institute, and provides quantities of reading material of all sorts, as well as interesting other agencies in the needs of the Institute. One diocese is cooperating with the Women's Auxiliary to supply Prayer Books and hymnals in Spanish to a mission congregation; another sees that each of four public libraries receives our own Church magazines.

Washington:—Miss Florence Hyde of Washington, D. C., reported that new books were being sent for the library of the Bishop Rowe Memorial Church House, under construction at Fairbanks, Alaska. Bishop Bentley, in charge of erection of the Memorial, asked that there be as many volumes as possible about Alaska and Alaskan interests. To this end, Miss Herbert, head of the Washington, D. C. public libraries, furnished an Alaskan bibliography; Bishop Bentley made selections from this list; the books were purchased, and into each was put a CPC bookplate with the name of the donor.

Numerous requests are received in this province for books and magazines in Spanish and French, as well as for British magazines. As a Christmas project one small parish in the diocese of Bethlehem sent 25 boxes of new toys and 40 dolls to St. Luke's Hospital in Manila. Miss Hyde closed her report with a tribute to Mrs. Bosley F. Crowther, recently resigned as treasurer of the Washington province after forty years of service to the CPC.

The Mid-West:—Mrs. H. A. M. Staley, of La Grange, Illinois, said that work had been so extensive and varied in her province that it was difficult to give a concise yet comprehensive report. One of the most unusual projects, however, was the raising of money to purchase visual aid machines and educational films for the Oneida Indian Mission School. One diocese has given a subscription for a talking record edition of a monthly magazine to a group of blind veterans. Another has provided an excellent library for the new Episcopal student center at Ohio State University. Many new school textbooks are sent from this province to Deaconess Bedell for her Seminole Indians at the Glade Cross Mission in Florida.

The Northwest:—CPC work in the Northwest was described by Miss Carolyn E. Punderson of St. Paul, Minnesota, 1st vice-president of the national CPC board and representative of her province. This section of the country, with its own great missionary districts and extensive work among the Indians, offers CPC members plenty of active work right at home. However, directors try to keep a good balance between this and the equally necessary work for those overseas.

Because of the great geographical distances in the Northwest, the work is chiefly carried on through the splendid cooperation of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Books, magazines, pictures, games and music have been supplied for the Indian Schools of South Dakota, through the combined efforts of the CPC and WA. Record albums, music for school glee clubs, handicraft materials, interesting and timely books, all serve a deeper purpose than recreation alone in the development of these teen-age citizens in isolated areas.

The Colorado CPC has undertaken a diocesan project of making transcriptions of Episcopal services to be broadcast over the smaller radio stations. They also recently sent nearly 700 pounds of crayons, books, scissors, etc., to St. James' Hospital at Anking, China.

In Minnesota the CPC maintains a diocesan book fund at the Episcopal church shop. This has been of great assistance to the rural and younger clergy. Recently a churchwoman in the northern part of the state called on the CPC to help her distribute a library of over 2000 volumes. Recipients included schools in Minnesota and South Dakota, St. Faith's School in Yangchow, China, Miss Helen Boyle, Sagada, P.I., and Friends of the Library Association, who send books to the war-torn countries of Europe.

Detailed reports were not received from three provinces, but board members familiar with these sections of the country spoke of many newly-organized CPC projects, particularly in the west and the southwest.

Opinions Vary

Washington: — An 8-1 Supreme Court decision ruling unconstitutional a religious education program conducted in Champaign, Ill., public school buildings had church leaders puzzled as to the scope of the decision.

The question was: does the ruling affect only religious education programs which are carried on in public school buildings, or does it apply to the released-time religious education system generally?

Although released-time programs are conducted in three thousand American communities, in the vast majority of instances they are not held in public school buildings. Pupils leave the public school and take the religious instruction at a local church or synagogue of their choice.

The Rev. Herman E. Wornom, executive secretary, board of Christian education of the Protestant Council of New York, stressed that although eight Supreme Court judges agreed on the unconstitutionality of the Champaign program, four made it clear that the decision did not necessarily apply to local practices which differed from the Champaign case. He emphasized that the way was left open for further testing.

The Rev. J. M. Dawson, secretary of the newly formed group to maintain separation of church and state, Protestants-United, gave his personal views though stressing that the organization itself has not yet commented officially. He said that he was "exceedingly happy over the decision" for the following reasons:

1. "It serves as the greatest single safeguard to separation of church and state outside the first amendment itself.

2. "It is a positive protection against the menace of sectarianism in our public school system, hence it is insurance of religious liberty and mutual good will among the sects.

3. "It is a direct service to the home and church, the divinely appointed agencies for proper religious instruction, in that their responsibility is challenged to provide something vastly superior to the weak substitute attempted on released-time under the framework of the compulsory school law.

4. "It produces a keen sense of obligation to strengthen yet more and more the high moral and spiritual values now being taught under the democratic processes of the public school which have resulted in the highest type citizenship, as crime statistics abundantly show."

Women Back Report

Orlando, Fla. (RNS):—The women of the southeastern jurisdiction of the Methodist Church, meeting here, passed a resolution supporting the civil rights report. It stated that they would back all measures which have for their goal the "achievement of civil rights for all people in this nation, including millions of citizens in this southland."

The Terrible Meek

Los Angeless—The Episcopal League for Social Action here presented the passion play, The Terrible Meek, in St. Alban's on March 12. Participating in the dramatic recital dealing with international peace were Edith Wynne Matthison (Mrs. Kennedy) and the author, Charles Rann Kennedy. Receipts from the play are to be used for the work of the League in this city.

Printing Shown

Philadelphia: — An exhibition of historical material of the Episcopal Church was on display in the print room of the Philadelphia Free Library, March 1-12. Early and recent issues of all Church periodicals were shown, as well as ancient and original documents of diocesan and general Church history; unique editions of the Bible and Prayer Book; pictures of bishops, historic churches and curios of various kinds.

Bishop Hart officiated at the formal opening and the lecturer was Canon Cyril Hudson of England, who is a special lecturer at the Philadelphia Divinity School. Many Church schools and other parish groups visited the exhibit.

Read Jerusalem Compassed by Armies in Forth for March

THE NEED THIS YEAR IS MORE urgent than ever, reports the Church's Chaplain in Jerusalem. Multiplied responsibilities, insoluble problems confront Christian leaders in the distraught land where once Christ walked. Congregations fluctuate; schools have been damaged and more severe havoc lies ahead; hospitals face appalling deficits. Your gifts this Good Friday not only will relieve a desperate financial situation but will bring courage and hope to the Bishop in Jerusalem, his helpers, and all those committed to their care.

Assembly Build-Up

New York: — The World Council of Churches is asking that Whitsunday, May 16, be observed in churches as world assembly day, according to the Rev. Henry Smith Leiper, American secretary. Observances will honor the first assembly which will be held this summer at Amsterdam. There will be a special service at Washington Cathedral and also services in Los Angeles and St. Louis, both sponsored by the local church councils.

CPC AIDS WORK IN PUERTO RICO

or perhaps because of it, they have a heart-breaking love and yearning for books and pretty pictures. An appeal for children's books was answered in a way which took our breath away. Box after box came by passenger boat and freighter, until over a thousand little books had been distributed amongst the Virgin Island parishes. At All Saints', St. Thomas, where there are over 900 children in the Church School, Miss Mary Frances Bemont is still handing out these books as prizes for excellence in work, perfect attendance, etc. A child's book, with pictures, is the finest prize imaginable, and a home with such a book in it is twice blessed. (I was recently informed that Miss Bemont is running out of books, and would appreciate any amount more.)

In St. Paul's Church, Frederiksted, St. Croix, the books have been made into a lending library, the children themselves cataloguing them and building up a lending file. These books are so loved, they are almost worn out from constant use, even though they have to be read by lamp light or by the light of the tropical moon. It is literally unbelievable how so little can mean so much.

But children's books and theological books and Church periodicals are not the only stuffs of which the CPC blessings are made. Miss Sarah G. White, R.N., director of St. Luke's school of nursing, at Ponce, has never failed to receive the most technical medical book or magazines, needed to help maintain her school as the highest ranging school of nursing on the island. Miss Ethel Robinson, teacher at the agricultural school of St. Joseph, Quebrada Limon, P. R., can use even more good secular magazines for boys and English books in her classes. And I can testify personally to what a very famous cook book, sent by the CPC, has meant to Miss Bemont in St. Thomas!

"And there are also many other things . . . the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself would not contain the books that should be written."

because the children are so eager to learn. Our Chinese and Filipino teachers are excellent and we all get on very well together. The children really get a workout—mornings they study English and Tagalog and afternoons Chinese. Last fall we celebrated our 30th anniversary with a three-day program and church services. A wealthy Chinese Christian gave us an assembly hall, which will be started this winter. Now we are working on a campaign to raise money to enlarge the school building.

Another reason why so many churches choose "Carillonic Bells"

All over America today, CARILLONIC BELLS are sending forth the sweetest bell music ever heard. Often those clear, beautiful harmonies are being played automatically. One of the advantages of choosing CARILLONIC BELLS is that with them you can use the Schulmerich Automatic Roll Player.

This new automatic roll player is not a phonograph or wire-recording device, but a musical instrument to play an actual set of CARILLONIC BELLS. With its plastic rolls, you can bring the brilliant, hand played arrangements of America's outstanding bell artists right to your community. Operated manually, or automatically through a program clock, the new Schulmerich Automatic Roll Player can play the great hymns of the church daily . . . speak a joyous message at noon or a reverent benediction at evening.

Hear CARILLONIC BELLS with this new, wonder-instrument! Give your church a new, inspired voice in the community, day or night. For information, write Dept. W-82.

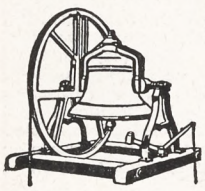
supporting. The people contribute hours of time, as well as a great deal of money and enthusiasm to the church, which is packed every Sunday with people of all ages.

To us, who are representing you and the Church, the CPC means a great deal, for it is through books and pictures that we can do our best teaching. We workers rely on the CPC to give us magazines to keep informed and refreshed. When I first arrived here and saw what little there was to work with, I immediately wrote and asked for things and they came! We have no libraries here, so all we read is through the generosity of the CPC at home. . . .



The seminarians, whom I am also teaching, come from the isolated mountain regions, where our missions lost everything during the war. Bontoc, for instance, before the war, was one of the flourishing stations, with well-equipped buildings and a good start to run the mission work and the outstations; but now there is just one building left there. The poverty of the people is appalling, and yet they give of what they have, and donate hours of time to help improve the grounds, or work on the building. Our schools in Bontoc and in the outstations are poorly equipped, but the teachers are good and make up in zeal what they lack in techniques.

For our work out here we need hundreds of religious pictures, large-size Nativity Christmas cards, Sunday school materials, picture books, etc., to supply the isolated mission stations, who were bombed and burned out. Anything that is an illustration does twice the work of a word picture for these simple but earnest people.

RT. REV. EDWARD L. PARSONS
Retired Bishop of California

May I make a correction in my article on Lambeth and Unity which appeared in your issue of February 26? Speaking of the position of the American Church Union in regard to the ministry, I said "the New Testament gives no support to it which cannot be questioned." Unfortunately I failed to notice that the context makes 'it' refer to the Evangelical position, and that consequently I said precisely what I did not mean to say. The American Church Union position is questioned by nearly one third of the Christian world and by a great number of Christian scholars. The Evangelicals believe therefore that such a position cannot be made a requirement for unity. I regret having made so careless a mistake.

THE REV. GERALD V. BARRY
Rector of Christ Church, New York

My congratulations on the lead editorial in the issue of February 26th. You certainly have presented a nicely balanced viewpoint. As you say, it takes "courage, and honesty, and humility and patience" to understand the other fellow's point of view. Why cannot this be applied more often to matters of churchmanship as well as to "problems in labor relations, race relations" etc.

I think probably THE WITNESS tries to do this more often than other church weeklies — but both have a long way to go The dog-eat-dog attitude leads to nothing but disaster, and I, for one, will welcome the day when THE WITNESS, together with others of our church papers, strive to promote that "peace and well being of a family group (which) depends on the willingness of the members of the family to understand the point of view" (of each other).

MR. ROBERT C. MARTIN JR.
Layman of Ft. Devens, Massachusetts

Your news item concerning the action of the council of the Diocese of Texas (WITNESS, February 12, 1948) correctly gave prominence to the staggering lack of Christian understanding exhibited by that body. However, I think it would be a very good idea if you could point out editorially that a basic fallacy is involved in the words of the report, "prejudices . . . which must be given consideration if any such plan shall be of benefit to both races." This form of statement incorrectly puts the argument on a purely humanistic basis where it is possible to argue very convincingly for social discrimination. People who say that racial traditions, economic situations, even mental, physical, and moral traits of different races preclude the success of anti-discrimination programs can often make an excellent prima facie case.

We Christians ought to be able to recognize that the injustice of racial segregation has no more to do with the Christian answer to the question of race relations than have the prejudices of either race. The Church, in its program of redeeming the world, needs these people. If their presence offends other Christians, that's too bad. The whole issue is: Can the Church redeem the world when its forces are racially divided? I take it that the answer is and always has been: No. The question is not: Will this program "be of benefit to both races"? Indeed, it is conceivable that such a program might turn out to be of immediate "benefit" (in the sense in which the council evidently means it) to neither; but that fact would still not detract from the urgent necessity of ending racial segregation now.

THE REV. E. D. MURDOCH
Rector of St. Matthew's, Linton, N. D.

THE WITNESS should be complimented and in every Church home, if for nothing else than "Talking It Over." For the love of our country do keep exposing fascists. Some one has to keep at it, and more follow and use your expositions to help in this fight against the great pusch of the fascists than you probably think. After all there will always be more of us than there are of them, even if they have the guns Mr. Hart suggests and the money. But they will plaster us, that's for sure, and information that is reliable is so very hard to get. Out here in North Dakota a hundred people have asked me since January, "Well, what is the truth? How can we know what to believe when we read?" If we could get a paper like THE WITNESS into every home it would make them think.

A bouquet also to "Travels of a Gargoyle" which are clever, entertaining and give us all pause lest we get too far of the middle road or out on a limb.

Church of South India Moves To Widen the Union

Former Anglican Is Elected the Moderator At Synod of Newly Created United Church

Madura, Ind. (RNS:) :— The first synod of the new Church of South India voted at the opening of five-day sessions here to extend invitations to other Churches of the area to negotiate during the year "with a view to a widening of the union."

The invitation, it was announced, will go to all Churches linked to Christian councils in India, and will be aimed especially at several Lutheran Churches of American and Scandinavian affiliation, and at Baptists who have shown some interest in joining the new Church.

Major business at the opening sessions was the election of officers, marking the end of the Church's interim government and the establishment of a permanent administration.

Elected Moderator was the Rt. Rev. (now the Most Rev.) Michael Hollis, Bishop in Madras, who was appointed to serve not only during the first synod meeting, but also at the next convocation. Formerly of the Church of England, Moderator Hollis was a don at Oxford University, England, and later a missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, an Anglican organization.

Another ex-Anglican was elected Deputy Moderator. He is the Rt. Rev. Chirakarottu K. Jacob, Indian-born bishop in Central Travancore, who was formerly vice-principal of Bishop's College at Calcutta. Bishop Jacob is the only delegate thus far selected by the united Church to attend the assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam, Holland, next summer.

The Rev. John S. M. Hooper, a former British Methodist who headed the interim government for five years, was named secretary. For thirteen years, he had been secretary of the joint committee which brought about the Church union.

The Church of South India came into formal existence last September with the union of the four Anglican dioceses of Madras, Travancore, Tinnevelly and Dornakai, the South India Provincial Synod of The Methodist Church, and the South India United Church, the latter body itself a union of Presbyterian and Congregational Churches. It comprises a Christian community of about 1,200,000, divided into 14 dioceses, five of which are headed by native Indians.

LEPROSY COLONY TO BE MOVED

New York:—Word has been received at the headquarters of the American Mission to Lepers from Bishop Harris of Liberia and Dr. Aage J. Christensen of St. Timothy's Hospital, Cape Mount, that the Liberian government has given the mission a 500 acre land grant for the relocation of the leprosy colony from Maaseteen Island in Fisherman's Lake near Cape Mount to more fertile lands and salubrious climate 35 miles inland. The new location will provide a patient capacity of 50, and will have good rice lands to enable patients to raise their own food.

Dr. Christensen also reports that the government granted the colony about $1,500 and promised an annual appropriation for the work. The American Mission to Lepers provides an annual maintenance grant of $2,000.

FIVE YEAR PLAN OF JESUITS

Rome (RNS) :—Riccardo Lombardo, one of Italy's best known Jesuit priests, announced a five year plan for Roman Catholics in a recent address in Naples. First year: the need for reconciliation between different political parties to bring about common efforts to fight inter-group hatred and promote practical programs for social improvement. Second year: revival of the supernatural life among Christians through spiritual exercises and other means. The object will be to increase the number of "militant" Catholics ready to take an active part in the general mobilization against materialism. Third year: spreading the doctrine of social justice through discussions of labor problems and the setting up of Christian labor organization. Fourth year: Promotion of Catholic propaganda, modernized to reach the masses more effectively. This will call for the organization of scientific institutes, increasing the number of schools, using movies, radio and other communication media. Fifth year: the organization of an Italian Catholic elite adequately prepared and equipped to help the Church and their country in the face of "imminent international catastrophe."

E. R. P. ENDORSED WITH QUESTIONS

Chicago (RNS) :—The peace commission of the Methodist Church endorsed the European Recovery Plan but with qualifications. "We express the hope," the statement declared, "that the program will not be an extension of American imperialism in Europe; that the nations helping will be free to choose their basic economic pattern and that the doors be left open for other nations to participate in its scope and work."

The commission also said that "a fresh attempt" must be made to break down tension between Russia and the United States.

"We affirm our conviction that war between the two countries is not inevitable," the commission declared. "Our worst menace is a spirit of hopelessness and suspicion. Our real security is in understanding and tolerance of different points of view. We ask that the members of our churches give new study to the field so that there be developed a public opinion so necessary to overcome the obstacles threatening the peace of the world."

Acknowledging that improvement of relationships between the two countries is difficult, the commission went on to declare that "we do not underestimate this task but the alternative of war is so awful to contemplate that we are convinced that a fresh and continuous attempt must be made at once."

REPORTS ON LEPROSY

New York:—Dr. Eugene R. Kellersberger, general secretary of the American Mission to Lepers, described the plight of leprosy victims in the far east as "tragic and deplorable" when arriving here on March 13 after a five month tour of leprosy missions in the Orient. He called upon churches and the medical profession to aid in providing more supplies of drugs, more doctors and nurses, more facilities for the care of patients.

Large areas of China, particularly, have no provisions — government or private — for the care of leprosy patients, Dr. Kellersberger said. In the West China province of Szechuen, for instance, with a population of 60,000,000, there is only one small institution with a capacity of 50 male patients. The great need for China, and for the Orient in general, is for large agricultural and industrial colonies "where men and women can live like human beings and know that God loves them and their children too," Dr. Kellersberger stated.

"Instead," he said, "the lives of thousands of children, leprosy's chief victim, are endangered by their daily contact with infectious cases who should be institutionalized, but cannot be for lack of facilities for their care — or for the care of the children."

Reconstruction of pre-war mission colonies in Burma, India, and China, abandoned in the face of hostilities is proceeding slowly, Dr. Kellersberger reported, and few which have been re-established are able to operate at full pre-war capacity. Shortages of medicines, chaotic conditions and lowered standards of health resulting from war and post-war conditions are further obstacles to leprosy control.

During his journey Dr. Kellersberger completed arrangements for the establishment of regional leprosy training centers at Chiengmai, Siam, and in connection with medical schools of Cheeloo University, Tsinan; West China Union University, at Chengtu, Szechuen, and Vellore Medical College at Vellore, India. These centers are among the first units of a world-wide post-war leprosy prevention program of the American Mission to Lepers by which doctors, nurses, public health and church workers will be trained for regional campaigns for detection and treatment of early leprosy cases and for wide public education in leprosy prevention.

According to Dr. Kellersberger, supplies of the newly developed drugs, diasone and promin, first made available through the American Mission to Lepers this year, are proving far from adequate even for initial experimentation. Since December, 1946, supplies valued at $84,500, have been sent to leprosy missions in 23 countries and many government colonies. "It will take a long time to supply enough drugs for the patients now in controlled experiments in leprosy institutions; and by that time, we hope, there will be thousands more under the care they need so desperately."

Throughout the world there are an estimated ten million leprosy victims; approximately 1% of these are under care of any kind.

CHURCH GROUP BACKS HOUSING PLAN

Newark:—The social service commission of the diocese of Newark was largely instrumental in launching a united drive for a housing plan in the state. They called a meeting of civic, labor and Church groups, meeting at the diocesan house, with two committees set up to work for public and private housing on a state and local basis. The meeting also endorsed federal and state bills providing for slum clearance and new housing. Edward L. Parker, co-chairman of the housing committee of the Board of Christian Social Relations, said that it was a generally accepted principle that the state would not allow anyone to starve but that it had allowed its housing to get to such a state that families had been almost forced to freeze. Rev. Harold Onderdonk of Essex Falls and the Rev. Andrew Van Dyke of Hawthorne took leading parts in the conference.

Educator Bids Church Conform To Court Decision

First Reaction to Decision Is Confusion With Varied Actions the Result in Nation

By W. B. Spofford

Chicago:—Roy G. Ross, head of the International Council of Religious Education, said March 11th that the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Champaign case must be conformed to "in both the spirit and the letter" of its interpretation of the law. His statement was the first officially issued on behalf of the Council, which advises 3,000 communities on released-time programs involving 2,000,000 students in 46 states.

According to Ross, approximately 40 per cent of these students attend classes in public schools and "it is obvious that this will mean the discontinuance of the use of public school buildings." But as for the other 60 per cent, who attend religion classes outside school property but during school hours, the opinion of the Court is not clear, Ross said. Granting that the decision "constitutes a great blow to weekday religious education," Ross said that the dissenting opinion of Justice Reed plus supplementary statements by four of the other judges did not indicate that a majority of the court actually was opposed to released-time itself in all cases.

"It would seem that a majority of the justices clearly did not desire and would not approve invalidation of the released-time principle," he said. "It is my hope that our Protestant church forces working together in the International Council will take three steps:

"First — that the churches will seek further clarification of the law with respect to the released-time principle. The Supreme Court decision does not seem to clarify this issue.

"Second — that the churches will help week-day schools to adapt existing week-day systems so that they will be brought fully within the law as interpreted by this and other decisions of the Supreme Court.

"Third — that the churches will give attention to the increasing secularism which seems to be augmented by this latest decision of the Court regardless of its intention and that it will take steps to obtain laws which will make constitutionally possible the wholehearted cooperation of church and state in the pursuance of their respective functions."

Meanwhile "complete accord" with the decision was expressed on March 15 at the headquarters of the newly organized Protestant and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State. At the same time this group endorsed efforts by educators to seek ways and means of including religion "in the process of public education."

In its statement the organization declared the central issue clarified by the Supreme Court was that the state (that is, public school authorities) had jurisdiction over students while they were receiving "church-provided religious instruction." The Protestant organization expressed doubt that the "actual results of released-time justify the zeal with which it has been promoted or the regret with which its nullification may be received."

Roy G. Ross of the International Council of Religious Education

"There are certain bad social effects," it said, "that flow from the practice of dividing school children according to their parents' religious faith and marching them to separate schoolrooms or church buildings. Such a dramatization of creedal or racial differences tends to freeze sectarianism and to undo the democratizing influence of the public schools. Protestants should not have allowed the Jews to stand alone in sensing this evil effect."

Conceding that "religion rightly belongs in the general educational process," the group warned against "tampering" with the principle of separation of Church and state in the effort to get religion within that process.

As for action in various cities, in St. Louis the superintendent, Philip J. Hickey, stated that he will ask the next meeting of the board of education to drop the released time classes which are taken by about 22,000 pupils. In New York state officials have decided to continue religious training programs, pending a test case in Rochester which presumably will determine the applicability of the decision for the state. In New York City there are varied opinions with William Jansen, superintendent of schools, saying that it was his "guess" that the ruling would not affect the school system very much.

At Harrisburg, Pa., Ivan M. Gould, general secretary of the states council of Christian education, said that he agreed with Justice Jackson that the decision would invite a flood of suits and added that "Until such suits reach the Supreme Court we may not know the constitutionality of week-day religious instruction under Pennsylvania law which takes place outside of the public school, nor the constitutionality of Bible reading in the schools, nor the constitutionality of singing Christmas carols, nor a host of other related problems. Therefore, until further decisions are reached I would urge that ministers and laymen, from Protestant, Catholic and Jewish groups confer with local boards of education and through mutual trust and understanding develop the most effective plan whereby pupils in given localities may receive religious instruction during the days of the week."

Taking the stand that "We don't teach religion in the schools here, but release pupils to go to religious classes," Michael F. Walsh, Rhode Island state director of education, said the U. S. Supreme Court opinion may have no effect on religious instruction classes now conducted in a dozen R. I. communities. Even in South Kingstown which has suspended religious classes in the high school pending a ruling by the town solicitor, the classes were held after school hours, Walsh said, and so should not be affected by the court opinion.

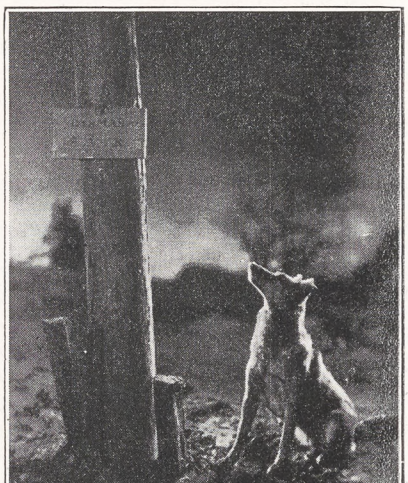
In Roanoke, Va., educators and church leaders have adopted a "sit tight" attitude and seem to be in no hurry about giving up their program, which is very similar to the one in Champaign, Ill., where religious leaders went to the schools at certain periods to teach. In Minnesota leaders say that released-time programs will not be affected.

In North Carolina, where 37,518 pupils are now taking Bible courses, elective and supported entirely by funds raised by churches, the opinion is that the program will be continued. The Council of Churches in Ohio has ordered the continued operation of its widespread church-school program. In Los Angeles schools will continue to allow students to leave classes for 40 minutes a week for religious instruction, pending a ruling by a county official on the court's decision. In Indianapolis the decision is to go ahead with the plan provided by the state law which permits the release of children for religious instruction up to 120 minutes each week on condition that none of the taxpayers' money is used. Classes in that city are always held in churches nearest the schools and never in the schools themselves.



Even in Champaign, Ill., where the original suit was brought, children are continuing to receive religious instruction in the public schools, despite the Court's ruling that it is unconstitutional. It is explained that the school board has 25 days to put the ruling into effect, while others believe that it will be possible to continue the program, which has been in effect since 1940, if students are sent to churches for instruction instead of having religious instructors go to the public schools as at present.

So it can be said that religious instruction programs for the most part are operating as usual, with no indication that there is any rush by either Church leaders or public school officials to change anything because of the decision. They are just sitting tight waiting further developments.

CANAL ZONE SEEKS DIVISION

Ancon, C. Z.:—The question of dividing the district of the Panama Canal Zone will again come before General Convention presumably. In any case when the convocation of the district met here February 23 a resolution was adopted stating that such a division is desirable due to the enlarged size of the district through the adding of Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

When this matter came before the first General Convention that the late Bishop Irving P. Johnson, WITNESS editor, attended as a bishop there was prolonged discussion as to what the two districts should be named, if divided. After listening to the debate for what seemed an unnecessarily long time, the Bishop of Colorado walked to the front of the House from the back bench, asked for recognition and stated: "This is a very simple matter. Let's call one district Colon and the other Semi-Colon and get on with more serious business."

LESLIE GLENN VISITS SAVANNAH

Savannah, Ga.: — The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, formerly rector of St. John's, Washington, and T. M. Cunningham, local layman and attorney, gave the addresses at the dinner of the Episcopal men of Savannah, held here March 4. Both talked about patriotism, the American way of life and democracy, and urged a firmer stand against Russia. Bishop Barnwell and the local clergy sat at the speakers' table at the dinner which was attended by 237 laymen.

TEXAS STUDENTS BACK CIVIL RIGHTS

Austin, Texas (RNS):—Seven student organizations of the University of Texas have endorsed the President's civil rights program. The statement says that since the state has been unwilling to guarantee rights and privileges to minorities "we feel that the only solution lies in federal legislation."

The Woman's Auxiliary of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, however feels differently about it. Because the state's council of church women endorsed the program, the parish group voted to withdraw from the council, charging that the state organization had entered politics by its action.

WORLD SERVICE DIRECTORS

New York: — Churchman Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y. has been re-elected president of Church World Service. Other Episcopalians on the board of directors are Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York and the Rev. Almon R. Pepper of the National Council staff.

REAFFIRMS OLD PRINCIPLE

Philadelphia:—Historic Christ Church here, in a parish meeting on March 7, reaffirmed its belief in the principle of the separation of Church and state as expressed in article one of the ten original amendments to the Constitution. Those attending the meeting also approved the activities of Protestants and other Americans which seeks "to revive in the public mind a clear understanding of the constitutional basis upon which religious liberty has been guaranteed, (2) to redress the specific violations which have recently come into force, and (3) to resist further encroachments upon this constitutional principle."

The Rev. E. Felix Kloman is the rector of this parish which is closely identified with the early history of America.

URGE UNITED STATES TO BACK UN

Richmond, Va.:—Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, former Presiding Bishop, is heading a committee of 25 prominent citizens here who are urging the strengthening of the United Nations "before it is too late." He has announced that petitions will be circulated for people to sign calling upon President Truman and members of Congress to empower the UN to enact, interpret and enforce world law to prevent war.

Easter and World Despair

W. MACNEILE DIXON in The Human Situation writes: "Whence come our present discontents? Unless I am greatly mistaken from the collapse of the high-pitched expectation of a regenerated human society. . . . The bubble has burst."

These words were written ten years ago, and much has happened since then to emphatically confirm them. Doubtless their author would speak more strongly today. It is not pessimism; it is the sheerest realism to admit what the majority of the human race tries not to see; we may likely have but a few more years to live on this planet.

The Christian is committed to realism; pessimism ought to have no part in his thinking. For the unbeliever the outlook is gloomy indeed, but not for the follower of Christ—though man as "a microbe clinging desperately to a bit of dust" be near extinction. So Easter, 1948, takes on new meaning. It is not that we turn to the promise of eternal life because of our despair. Rather it presents itself to us as an old and trusted friend whom we had known and loved and almost forgotten about. Resignation has no part in this; we shall struggle to make this earth and ourselves worthy of the Creator up to the moment of destruction. The warrant we need is found in the sixth chapter of the first epistle of Timothy, "O man of God; fight the good fight of faith. . . . Lay hold on eternal life whereunto thou art called."

"QUOTES"

DEATH is as old as life, yet when death touches our own, it is a new experience. Sin is venerable but when we are gripped by temptation, it is a battle to be fought and won. So it is with the Good News of Eastertide. If we could only grasp its meaning for our world and for ourselves, all things would be made new. Selfishness would give way, the burden of sorrow and of despair would be lifted. Men would live as the children of God. Here then is Good News. The Lord is risen. He is risen indeed!

—HENRY K. SHERRILL,
The Presiding Bishop

The charge comes to vindicate our belief. "If immortality be untrue, it matters little whether anything else be true or not." Man would be less than man if he did not bring all his powers of reason and imagination to bear on that statement. For, if immortality be untrue, what of God? He becomes an erratic and sinister swindler and cheater content to laugh at man writhing in futile agony. What becomes of life? It is a transparent mockery, deluding those who function futilely in it to live and suffer and die—for no other end. What becomes of the universe? It is nothing but an ostentatious and sham setting before which unwitting humanity carries on a delirious and meaningless shadow-play. What becomes of human love? It is, as Maugham once thought, "only a dirty trick nature plays upon us to continue the species." What becomes of faith and hope and beauty and truth, courage, kindliness and human decency? They are as unreal as irridescent bubbles on the slimy surface of decaying and putrid corruption.

These are facts to be faced relentlessly. They do not prove the fact of eternal life but they provide the starting point. Accept them and the universe is irrational—meaningless. Yet scientific philosophy increasingly insists that the universe is rational; science itself is without meaning unless this be so.

It was Jesus' conviction that life was stronger than death. The Christian's immediate task is to question until he convinces himself that this is true —or accept the consequences of its being untrue. To do else, to be apathetic, is to fail to fulfill his manhood as thinking, reasoning being. It is too late to avoid the issue now; it is, simply, man's destiny. The alleluias that spring from a multitude of hearts on Easter day are the vocalizing of a conviction that no changes or chances of this mortal life, no matter how seemingly ominous, can swerve. Therein lies our victory, the victory that overcometh the world's despair.

Our Christian Commitments

THE department of international justice and goodwill of the Federal Council of Churches, whose policy committee is headed by John Foster Dulles, recently petitioned Congress in support of the European Recovery Program. The statement, signed by 725 leading Protestants, presented explicit qualifications:

"That the motives and objectives behind the program should be essentially moral and spiritual and should be above political partisanship and considerations of narrow self-interest.

"That the right of European nations to choose their own way of life should be safeguarded.

"That these nations should carry out their expressed purpose to work cooperatively, establish and maintain monetary stability, and reduce trade barriers.

"That the relevant agencies of the United Nations should be encouraged to undertake an increasingly important role in the recovery effort.

"That trade between western and eastern Europe should be encouraged.

"That, if required to assure a fair allocation of needed goods, necessary government controls should be adopted.

"That an undertaking so conceived and directed merits our material sacrifice because it is a cause which enlists our Christian conscience and conforms to our Christian commitments.

"We appeal to the Congress of the United States to adopt such legislation as will carry forward the European Recovery Program in the spirit of these recommendations."

The Federal Council has been effective in giving religious sanction to the Program, notably through the service held March 11 at the Washington Cathedral where Secretary Marshall, John Foster Dulles and Bishop Dun were the speakers, with President Truman, Secretary Forrestal, Justice Douglas and other notables in the congregation. Yet at this widely publicized meeting nothing was said about the qualifications which were the conditions for the endorsement of the Program by the Federal Council, under whose auspices it was held. Nothing was said about encouraging the UN to undertake an increasing role in the effort; nothing was said about the right of European nations to choose their own way of life; nothing was said about increasing trade between eastern and western Europe.

It was held during a week of war hysteria verging on panic. Mr. Truman, the very morning of the Cathedral service, asked Congress to add $55,000,000 to the $522,000,000 already spent in stopgap aid, with the expressed hope that it would be the determining factor in preventing European nations from choosing a way of life distasteful to us. General Chennault explained to the American (and Russian) people, with maps, how the Soviets could be destroyed with atom bombs; former secretary of state, James F. Byrnes, got front pages by declaring that war with Russia was but a few weeks off; Senators, Congressmen, newsmen and commentators vied with each other in press and radio with cries of "hurry, hurry, an enemy is about to destroy us."

During this time it was Senator Robert A. Taft, alone among top leaders of the two major parties, who said anything to allay our fears. He declared that "We have to work on the theory that there's going to be peace. There is no sense in appropriating five and a half billion dollars for a European recovery program if there's going to be war." He said he disagreed with Mr. Byrnes, and elaborated on his disagreement by stating that Russia is only consolidating the sphere of influence that was awarded her by the Yalta agreement, and he even described the latest events in Czechoslovakia as nothing more than "a consolidation tactic."

As for Italy, Senator Taft said: "If the Communists win the election in Italy, what can we do? That's no military move." Which, we think, is more in line with the pronouncement of our Church leaders "that the right of European nations to choose their own way of life should be safeguarded" than anything that was said at the service a couple of days before in Washington Cathedral.

The Bulletin, official organ of the Federal Council, stated in the last number that "no permanently healing influence can be exerted by the Marshall Plan if that plan is misused as an instrument of coercion in a cold war" and the editorial further states that "the Churches are wholly in agreement with Secretary of State Marshall that E.R.P. 'is directed not against any country or doctrine but against hunger, poverty, desperation and chaos'."

We believe The Bulletin is right. We hope Secretary Marshall is. There will be a greater chance that he will be, in our judgment, if Church leaders speak out promptly and vigorously about the qualifications that they themsevles laid down, instead of limiting themselves to publicizing the endorsement of the Program, which is all they have done up to now.

It would be embarrassing, for us anyhow, to admit that Senator Taft, alone among candidates of the major parties, has moral courage based on insight. It would be still more embarrassing to admit that he has more of both than has yet been shown by our Church leaders.

But that, at the moment, is the fact.

"For They Were Afraid"

By

STEPHEN F. BAYNE JR.
The Bishop of Olympia

SOME studious lad called my attention the other day to the well-known fact that the latter half of the last chapter of St. Mark, (from verse 9 on), is omitted in many manuscripts and very likely is not part of the original text at all. This he did not to destroy my faith but to point out what a curious ending that gospel must have had if the guess of the scholars is right—"They fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled and were amazed: neither said they any thing to any man; for they were afraid."

What an odd Easter sentiment. Afraid of what? Certainly not afraid of a comforting if slightly incredible assurance that however inexplicably and undeservedly they would be given life and immortality after they die. Surely not terrorized by the annual message of the spring flowers and the miraculous awakening of nature, etc., etc.

What is there to be afraid of in Easter? I have been wondering; and the longer I think about it the more I am moved by the strange words. If the Easter story is true, maybe we ought to be afraid. If the story is true, then it means that God does break into human history and reigns over it. If the story is true, then he is greater than any human institution, any mortal limitation, any safe category, any accustomed traditions or patterns of thought. If death cannot contain him, then surely nothing less can.

And if that be so, then where are we? A friend wrote from England not long ago "A great revival of the spirit is urgent. But such a religious movement will not now come from the Church. I don't know where it will come from, but if it does come it will be in the form of newly emerging people's movements analogous to the ground-swell of the freshly-forming political movements of our times."

I don't necessarily agree with him. But if what he says is true then there is something to be afraid of in Easter—not that there will be a great revival of the spirit outside the Church, but that the Church has been tried and found wanting—tried by her Lord who would not wait for her sentimentalities and her impurity but who left her facing an empty tomb while he himself went on with his people.

If death cannot contain him, then certainly the neat and sentimental categories of an unfaithful and unconsecrated Church cannot. We don't know whether St. Mark could see that far ahead; perhaps it's only a question of how deeply he could see. But at all events we can begin to appreciate what St. Mark was thinking about.

I do not suggest that you subtract the joy from Easter. I do suggest you add the trembling and amazement. If Christ be risen from the dead, then remember that he has gone on before us, that the tomb is empty, that he is the Lord, that all men and all history are his kingdom. May he bless us in that remembrance, in gravity and in freedom and in the unconquerable will to serve him!

The State and Education

by G. Bromley Oxnam

The Methodist Bishop of New York

THE President's commission on higher education declares, "A prime responsibility of a government in a democracy is to provide equal opportunities for all its citizens to receive a high quality education." It was the judgment of the commission that "to discharge this obligation, it is thus the fundamental obligation of government to establish a sound system of public education and to support it to the fullest extent possible." The commission concluded, "The responsibility for providing a strong system of public education does not, however, deny in any way to any individual or group of individuals the right to attend, or to establish and support in addition to public schools, a private or denominational institution for the purpose of providing, within limits prescribed by law, a kind of education which such individuals or groups deem more suitable to their particular needs and beliefs. It is just as undemocratic for the government to restrict in any way this fundamental right as it is for government to fail to meet its prime responsibility for a strong system of public education. Nevertheless, any diversion by government of public funds for the general support of non-publicly controlled educational institutions tends to deny the acceptance of the fundamental responsibility and to weaken the program of public education." This commission, therefore, was clear in the conclusion "that state and local educational bodies be able to exercise at all times the right to reveal and control educational policies in any institutional agency for which public monies are appropriated and expended."

ences that distinguish the approach of the totalitarian state from the approach of the democratic state to education. The relation of the state to education is of vital concern to the Church, and will be determined in large measure by the nature of the state. If the state be totalitarian, education will be considered but one of many means to achieve the totalitarian will. The totalitarian state assumes that the state has the right to determine the philosophy to which every individual who lives within the state must give assent, and the state is therefore justified in mobilizing every impact upon the mind—school, press, church, radio—to the end that the citizen shall accept the predetermined philosophy. Conformity is demanded, and freedom is denied. Government does not derive its just powers from the consent of the governed. The governed are governed, and that is all there is to it. There is no first amendment to a totalitarian constitution forbidding legislation respecting establishment of religion. Within democratic society, as we understand it in the United States, there is an order of government and a realm of freedom. In the latter are the civil liberties, and among them we have recognized the right of the Church or individuals to maintain educational institutions expressive of their basic convictions.

But the state also has a duty. It has the duty of providing such education for its citizens as will enable them to use freedom and to maintain it. The state, therefore, is a democracy regarded as an instrument to be used by the people and for them, has under the democratic decisions made by the people, moral obligation to rear its citizens in the ways of freedom, that is, of democracy. The President's report states, "Education is an institution of every civilized society, but the purposes of education are not the same in all societies. An educational system finds its guiding principles and ultimate goals in the aims and philosophy of the social order in which it functions. The two predominant types of society in the world today are the democratic and the authoritarian, and the social role of education is very different in the two systems. American society is a democracy: that is, its folkways and institutions, its arts and sciences and religion are based on the principle of equal freedom and equal rights for all its members, regardless of race, faith, sex, occupation, or economic status. The law of the land, providing equal justice for the poor as well as for the rich, for the weak as well as the strong, is one instrument by which democratic society establishes, maintains, and protects this equality among different persons and groups. The other instrument is education, which, as all the leaders in the making of American democracy have pointed out again and again, is necessary to give effect to the equality prescribed by law." American education has demonstrated the principle of diversity in unity, and thus is both progressive and creative. The Church has a great stake in supporting public education since public education is not only a bulwark of democracy but rears the type of mind pledged to freedom, freedom that is essential to the propagation of religion.

THE Church has full opportunity within our democracy to maintain such schools as it may desire. It has the high privilege of serving in such fashion in the home, in the community, in the Church, as to bring to society full understanding of the moral law and likewise of the Christian faith. This the Church has done to a far greater degree than many realize. There are those who, for ulterior reasons, are today condemning our public schools as "godless" schools, and as "immoral" schools. Those who so condemn the schools for the purpose of securing public support for sectarian education not only bear false witness but endanger democracy. The truth is the teaching staff of the American school system has come from our homes, our schools, and our churches. It is overwhelmingly Christian in its view, and the character education of the public schools will stand the closest scrutiny. These critics would do well to read the Year Books published by the American Association of School Administrators. This Association is composed of the superintendents who direct our school systems throughout the nation, and is a department of the National Education Association of the United States. These Year Books reveal the philosophy which guides the superintendents and makes its way through the school system. A recent yearbook entitled "Morale for a Free World" is sufficient answer to the charge of "godless and immoral." In outlining the attitudes that must be embraced by all men are such paragraph heads as "Love of Truth," "Freedom Under Law," "Fellow Feeling," "Respect for Human Dignity," and "Personal Responsibility." Under "Respect for Human Dignity," the Year Book states, "All men must be felt by all men to possess the high potentialities of human nature. As in universal religions all men alike are conceived as souls worthy of God's grace and providence, so all men must be thought of as having the capacity for truth, for artistic creation or enjoyment, and for moral goodness. They may be considered as ends in themselves and as educable. All men must be encouraged to take a pride in the creative achievements of all other men as achievements of the race of man for which they may claim a vicarious credit. The sense of human dignity is not a description of the actual condition of mankind but a faith in man which sees the best in every man and gives every man the benefit of the doubt. This faith will tend to confirm itself, since men will try to live up to what is expected of them—and often will succeed." The Year Book then considers morale-forming groups and lists the family, the neighborhood play group, the church or religious group, the school, and economic group. References to the church are enlightening. "The church or religious group is one of the earliest with which children (some children) find themselves affiliated. For the small child, the sanctions in general duplicate and intensify those of home and school. Church, however, has an aura of mystery and authority—an authority of unique quality, not only because it derives from the unknown but because it is accepted also by adults, and because it is generally accompanied by ritual and music and invested with esthetic and emotional appeal. The church and Sunday School at their best are like day school, too, in providing child companionships and inspiring adult leadership. In addition to contacts with the church as an institution, the child receives religious influences in the home that from his earliest years help to shape his character and his system of values. By the pattern of family living, one child learns to be truthful only when personally convenient; another is taught that honesty is the best policy; another is taught to reverence truth as a religious principle of conduct. Many homes that have lost contact with the organized church still are transmitting a partial religious heritage that adds a strengthening element to character. In other homes, where the child is taken at an early age to church, the religious teachings of the home are amplified and enriched by the services of the church itself, and the child develops loyalties and attitudes of service of lasting import."

As we approach this issue now, we do well to affirm the American principle that public funds shall be used for public education. We do well, likewise, to maintain the institutions of the Church in the freedom provided by the democratic ideal. But we should support them. The present attempt to drain off vast sums from public education for the support of sectarian education is, in reality, an attempt to destroy the public educational system. Personally, I prefer our American way where my Protestant sons and daughter sit beside Roman Catholic boys and girls, Jew by Gentile, black by white, native-born by foreign born, and there in the public school learn to live together in mutual respect, mastering that understanding of one another essential for subsequent living in society. To separate our children at the elementary level in secretarian systems is to divide the community, and when these sectarian systems demand public support, it is to destroy public education.

There is no reason why the recommendation of the committee on religion and education, entitled "The Relation of Religion to Public Education: The Basic Principles," a report of the American Council on Education, should not be carried out. There is a difference between the study of religion and the teaching of religion. It is quite proper within the public system to study religion and to become acquainted with the place of religion in history, its significance in sociology, its contribution in art and in music, its place in philosophy and psychology. We do not wish the student who graduates from the public school system to be illiterate in the realm of religion. But, for churchmen, religion involves much more than study. It involves commitment. We seek to win the individual for the Christ. We seek a decision, the complete giving of the self to him, his way, his truth, and his life. This is properly the function of the Church. It is not properly the function of the school, in a democratic community with its many faiths and its population of no faith.

Let the state maintain the great public system; let it improve it; let it build the democratic ideal into the lives of students and create the character essential to the maintenance of the democratic ideal. Let the Church contribute Christian character to the community so that that character may express itself in the great democratic decisions that govern in the realm of education and other social and international relations. The separation of Church and state does not mean the separation of religion from the state. Religious men will act in terms of religious principles, as citizens, and in the decisions that are made within freedom. We do well to glory in the public system and to maintain it at the highest possible level. We do well to glory likewise in the freedom that gives to the Church full religious liberty, including the liberty to maintain its educational institutions. Let us support them. They make their contribution when, as institutions within the realm of freedom, they are creatively Christian and challenge the public system to higher and higher attainment.

All this assumes the democratic community. In the totalitarian community, there is but one choice, that is the choice of resistance and refusal to conform, and the willingness to accept the consequences. It is here that the blood of the martyrs becomes not only the seed of the Church but eventually the flower of freedom.

Church's Duty to Witness

by Karl M. Block

The Bishop of California

CHRISTIANITY has become a minority movement, statistics to the contrary notwithstanding. Contemporary events have so sharpened fundamental decisions that profession or mere lip service to Jesus Christ and his way of life can no longer in this cynical world maintain the illusion of reality. The word "witness" has, in concentration camp, in prison and on the battlefield, recaptured its literal meaning of "martyr." Despite our failure thus far to win the peace, we must not forget that we had in the recent world tragedy a vindication of the sovereignty of God, an unequivocal revelation that Christ is the Lord of history, that evil has within it the seeds of its own destruction, and that we may well believe, with Robert Louis Stevenson, that "whatsoever is good, as God lives, is permanent."

It is profoundly humbling to receive the testimony of those who came out of great tribulation, for it has something of the quality of apostolic witness. They learned that man's extremity is God's opportunity; they discovered, as never before, the efficacy of prayer, and the Bible was revealed to them as a living contemporary word. Inspired by their courage and reinvigorated by the sincerity of their witness in imminent peril of death, the Church throughout the world may well reaffirm its faith in unequivocal terms—a faith reenforced by sincere and cogent example.

Customary, conventional Church witness, life and activity can not possibly meet the needs of a distraught, disillusioned, cynical and disunited world. It should require no sustained appeal to get Christians to accept gladly responsibility for the destitute and the needy, or to pledge their support to efforts made to remove injustice and oppression from our beleaguered earth. But the effectiveness of our witness will be geared essentially to the reality of our own spiritual revival and reformation. The virus of the world has gotten into the bloodstream of the Church; we have lost the keen edge of our moral sensitivity, the feeling of urgency and creative passion which have marked great periods of spiritual revival in the past, and are preeminently needed in a day of crisis.

Moreover, we may well be in the process of enslavement by our national culture which, though dedicated to a fine humanitarianism, cannot remotely be equated with the Christian conception of the city of God on earth. The Church must develop finer men for a better society. The moral climate of any group stems up from the individuals who compose it.

Frankly, the practice of our Christianity today is not good enough to help save the world. We need to relate the spiritual ministries of the Church more intimately to the needs of the common life, else we become increasingly irrelevant in the sweep of contemporary history. It is no mere platitude to insist that to provide an adequate Christian witness we must, as a people, return to our deserted altars; we must habitually be alone with God in retreats and at other times of worship, meditation and withdrawal, where we can best receive the inflowing of the tides of the spirit.

THE Church must develop a creative passion to win men to Christ and his way of life. For too long it has been an inverted pyramid, resting on its apex rather than its base. Through self-consciousness, a sense of inferiority or indifference, or the very mind-set of reserved Episcopalians, many otherwise loyal Churchmen have delegated to the clergy and a devoted few men and women the evangelistic responsibility which belongs to every sincere follower of Christ. We have permitted the Communists to demonstrate the effectiveness of the methodology of Jesus—his use of a small wholly surrendered group, to provide a type of witness which is at once convincing and permanent. The priesthood of the laity can be best implemented through the establishment of Christian "cells," reproducing themselves in arithmetical progression. Every available medium, the press, the moving picture and the radio, can be used to witness.

The Church must reestablish contact with all the eccentric circles of our social living if the Gospel in all its moral grandeur is adequately to be proclaimed. Studdert Kennedy once said, "Nobody worries about Christ as long as he is kept in the churches, but there is always trouble if you try to let him out!"

If we sincerely believe that Christianity is supraracial and that democracy is indivisible, let us declare it by the witness of our attitudes and conduct. International problems must first be solved on the home front, on Main Street. Current behavior of Christians in the United States on the issue of race must inevitably influence for weal or for woe the progress of the missionary enterprise throughout the world. Too often sincere resolutions of councils of churches, conventions and synods are rendered worse than meaningless when the secular community, largely on economic grounds, supplies the enemies of the Church and of the republic with devastating propaganda by overt acts of racial discrimination and injustice.

At a recent conference in San Francisco, a professor from the state university told of the fruitless effort of a colleague to purchase a home for his family and their new baby in the area adjacent to the school—because he is a Chinese. The gentleman in question is one of the most famous bio-chemists in the world whose research has put mankind in his debt perhaps for generations to come. A technician had to buy land for him some ten or more miles from the city. Thus a stupid and brutal minority is able to sabotage essential goodwill, and to negate the efforts of far more representative Americans to establish a spirit of brotherhood with the winsome sons and daughters of Cathay.

The conference last July, in Whitby, Canada—conscious that a divided Church cannot successfully oppose the forces seeking to capture the minds and hearts of men, and realizing the priority of Christ's continuing unfulfilled command for us to preach the gospel to every creature—set for the Churches five challenges to qualify them for the task of evangelism confronting us today: Let us accept them as the basis of our witness!

1. To revive and deepen its inner life, so that we grow in devotion to our Lord, in the discipline of the Christian life, and in cooperation with Christian service.

2. To foster and encourage within its ranks a sense of responsibility as members of the Holy Catholic Church so that this ecumenical consciousness should be shared by each parish and individual.

3. To promote the mission spirit, so that through the witness of the Church communities may be made more Christian and the proclamation of the Gospel more effective.

4. To mobilize and train our laity for service, especially in the sanctification of home life, in winning the youth for Christ, and in the interpenetration of the common life by Christian principles and ideals; and, finally,

5. To develop in its members the sense of Christian stewardship to the support of existent churches and to the evangelization of areas now unreached by the Gospel.

WHAT IS A LIBERAL? II

THE last time this column appeared, I pontificated that a Liberal was one who was more interested in people than in rules. If that statement is true, which are the more liberal politically, the Communists or ourselves?

Internally, it would seem to be obvious that we are. If you don't like what American newspapers say, you can still start one of your own. I am under the impression that this would be unhealthy in Russia.

On the other hand, our obeying the rules has led us to support a brutal enemy government in Spain, and a Greek regime that reeks with graft.

The Communists set up shop as outlaws, at the turn of the century. Traitors were dangerous, and had to be liquidated for the safety of the others. Witnesses and records were as much shunned as they were among the vigilant committees in the west in the early days. They broke the law in self-protection. Minority rights meant the extinction of the majority.

Our method is evolutionary (constitutional)—theirs is revolutionary. Prosperity will be our ally; chaos will be theirs.

They will be impatient because we temper our desire for the good of the majority with a respect for the rights of the minority.

What does the rest of the world think? Most of our fellow men are dark-skinned, and desperately poor. Perhaps they have heard that the rights of dark-skinned Americans are still limited. Are they too philosophical, or too inert, to become impatient, too? If we are careless about this, our acolytes may die for our indifference; the members of our church school kindergartens may someday be weeping for their maimed sons.

I believe economic freedom, in the form of capitalism, holds the best hope for other freedoms in the world of the future. (I know I speak as the recipient of an undue portion of its benefits, but I am trying to see it without bias.)

Our democracy is the best system. Still, the man riding the best horse doesn't always win the race. If democracy means anything, it means that more depends on us than on the system, and this must be more true in democracy than in any other system.

An Easter Message To Nurses By Chaplain General

He Also Tells the Associates of the Guild Of the Important Work of the Organization

Edited by Sara Dill

Newark:—The Rev. John G. Martin, chaplain-general of the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses, sent the following message last week to nurses who are members of this Church organization:

It is said that, many years ago, when Christians met on Easter Day the customary greeting was, "Christ is risen!" to which the answer was given, "The Lord is risen indeed!" Thus folks reminded each other of the joyful tidings which were passed along after the first Easter Day when the empty tomb surprised the faithful followers of the Lord. The truth is borne in upon us that death is the gate of life. The sting of death is taken away by the redemption of the world by our Lord, Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us and for our salvation.

God takes the thing which we deplore and changes it into a path of glory. Instead of death being an ending, it becomes a beginning. It is the only gate which opens to us a fresh life where the spirit will come to its own. Hope springs eternal in the human breast and it is bolstered by our observation of the continuity of life in all of nature.

The experience of the Cross is brought to our minds in the dawning of each spring. The acorn seems to decay as it breaks its shell, but through that death there appears the next life with the baby tree exhibiting its birthmark and seeking the mothering shelter of earth and the warming rays of the sun, and it soon takes shape that points the way to life as a great oak.

So we should not despair when the tragedy comes to us of the loss of our dear ones. God's grace sustains in the knowledge that he cares and that he receives them as his own. The atonement means much to us.

The resurrection of Jesus leads our thoughts to the final rewards of God's children at the end of their

There Is Work To Be Done

A few months ago we had an urgent plea for help from China.

In the prewar years the Kimber Den Leprosarium at Nanchang—so called because the Rev. Kimber H. K. Den is its founder and honorary superintendent—was a neat colony of 150 patients on 50 acres of land, its twelve buildings—and the lives of its patients—centering around a small Anglican chapel.

Then the war came, eight long years of war. The patients dwindled from 150 to 50. A bomb completely destroyed the chapel. Food shortages, lack of medicines, lack of man's every necessity took a heavy toll of life and spirit. Saddest casualty of all was Mr. Tong, the colony's superintendent. He chose to stay with the patients in their lean years, and he contracted leprosy. Even the end of war and occupation brought no relief, for those who had supported the colony were no longer able to do so. And so the plea for help came to us.

We have helped the Kimber Den Leprosarium so far as it has been within our means. We sent one thousand diasone tablets for Mr. Tong's care. We gave the colony $4000 for a year's maintenance and $3670 for building repairs and for a farming and industrial program to help make the colony self-supporting.

These things we have done, but they are not enough—not enough to rebuild the chapel, to provide medicines in sufficient quantity and maintenance for the patients until the colony's friends in China can resume its support.

THE AMERICAN MISSION TO LEPERS needs your help. Will you share in this work to be done in China?

lives of service. Each soul has its opportunity to prepare for eternity. Think of the lowly dandelion, bursting forth in its glorious yellow petals but soon to lose them as it develops into its crowning stage of dying — the delicate seed-globe which must break up and be scattered by the wind. It gives all it has and nothing is left. But the seeds yield new life over and over again.

How rich the world would be if the standard of giving were like that of the dandelion — people making themselves poor as Jesus did for the sake of others.

I am proud of nurses. They assist in this process of life and death which are so closely related. They expose themselves to the sordid eventualities which most of us shun. They assist the stricken through the gate when they can no longer keep them here. They learn the intimate lessons of life at both ends — birth and death — and serve beautifully. They pray with their hands as they skillfully apply the teachings of their profession. Surely, God blesses them as they partake in the work of human redemption.

The Chaplain-General also announced that the biennial council meeting of the Guild will be held in Boston, October 30-31. Following business meetings on Saturday, there will be a dinner meeting at which an eminent speaker will give the address. The following day there will be corporate communion and breakfast, services in the Boston churches, tea at the Boston City Hospital, and the Florence Nightingale service at Trinity Church that evening. Local arrangements are being made by the Boston branch of which Miss Ethel E. Carlson, R.N. is president, and Miss Katherine F. Clark, 116 Charles Street, vice-president and secretary. With the announcement the following statement about the work of Guild Associates was made by Dr. Martin:

The nurse is a busy person. Her hours of service are often long and at times when the rest of the world sleeps or indulges in recreation. Moreover, the nurse holds herself in readiness to answer calls which may come at any time of day or night. It is a comfort, therefore, to have some associations in which she may feel confident that her interests are protected and her plans carried out. It was a wise provision of the founders of our Guild to include in its membership those who admire nurses and wish to help them. There has grown up a sisterly devotion between nurses and associates in which the latter often exert a protecting influence over the lives and interests of nurses.

The Guild provides a convenient vehicle for the expression of the associates' concern in behalf of nurses. Their activities are numerous. The branch secretary may be an associate and, especially if she has some leisure time, she may be of great assistance to the president in arranging the meetings and program of activities.

In some branches associates find delight in calling members to their homes for occasional teas or parties which, of course, are pleasing to all nurses. Associates attend to the business arrangements of such functions as card parties, sales, entertainments, outings, etc. In Cleveland, Ohio, associates have a major share in the project called "Opportunity Shop" where clothing and furniture are contributed and sold — an exchange center which nets a considerable profit. The proceeds help to swell the fund devoted to scholarships for nurses.

In Jersey City, N. J., an associate was president of the branch until a few years ago and the members were so appreciative of her work that the branch was named after her.

Associates often assist in making arrangements and acting as ushers at the annual Florence Nightingale services. In the Orange, N. J. branch, where boxes of surgical supplies and clothing are sent to missionary posts, the associates have always been an important factor. In fact, there are so many ways in which associates serve that it is safe to say that the branch is immeasurably stronger which assigns to them important duties which they are always glad to perform.

So, strengthen the branch by enlisting the interest of associates and find how their love of service brings light and joy to all.

S. P. C. K. Anniversary

London (RNS): — Celebrations were inaugurated here to commemorate the 250th anniversary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, oldest missionary organization in the Church of England. Founded March 8, 1698, the society, through its charity schools, was largely responsible for the development of popular education in England.

Anniversary rites began with a service at St. Martin's-in-the-Field, Trafalgar Square, and will end a year later with thanksgiving services

LEARN AT HOME Simple as A-B-C—lessons consist of real selections, instead of tiresome exercises. Each easy lesson adds a new "piece" to your list. You read real notes, too—no "numbers" or trick music. Method is so thorough that some of our 850,000 students are band and orchestra LEADERS. Everything is in print and pictures. First you are told what to do. Then a picture shows you how. In a short time you may become a good musician!

in Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral.

Biggest event of the celebrations is expected to be the overseas service at St. Paul's on May 27, when the preacher will be the Rt. Rev. George F. Kingston, Bishop of Nova Scotia, and Primate of All Canada. About 180 bishops from home and overseas dioceses are scheduled to be present.

Visits Bulgaria

Sofia (RNS):—Bishop Cecil D. Horsley of Gibraltar arrived here from Istanbul on a tour of his diocese, which stretches from Gibraltar to the shores of the Caspian sea. He is the first Bishop of Gibraltar to visit Bulgaria since 1940. Following his arrival, Bishop Horsley paid a courtesy call on Exarch Stefan, supreme head of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, and later visited the famous Orthodox monastery at Rila. The bishop also conducted two morning services at the British minister's residence, where he was staying. In addition, he baptized a group of children belonging to the British and American colonies.

Bishop Horsley was due to visit Bucharest, Romania, but will return to Sofia to address the English-Speaking League before proceeding to Belgrade. He was named to the Gibraltar see last year, succeeding the Rt. Rev. Harold Jocelyn Buxton, who resigned after holding the office for 14 years.

Women Back Rights

Dallas (RNS): — Six civil rights points were unanimously endorsed by the 155 delegates to the annual meeting of the Texas Council of Church Women here. The Council claims 800,000 members in Texas from practically all Protestant denominations.

The six points endorsed by the women were: (1) To strengthen the machinery for protecting civil rights of all people and for states to set up permanent commissions on civil rights to complement a federal commission on civil rights. (2) The right to safety and security against lynching, police brutality, involuntary servitude and injustice in courts. (3) The right of everyone to citizenship and its privileges of voting and bearing arms. (4) The right of freedom of conscience and expression. (5) The right to equality of opportunity, employment, education, housing and health service. (6) The right to public service and accommodations.

Parish Celebrates

Philadelphia:—St. Mark's church here is to celebrate its 100th anniversary on April 25, according to an announcement by Rector William H. Dunphy. The celebration actually starts on the 20th when there will be a reception arranged by George Wharton Pepper, former U. S. Senator, who is the rector's warden. The following day there will be a lecture on stained glass by Joseph Reynolds of Boston, and on the 23rd one on architecture by Walter H. Thomas.

Bishop Hart will confirm at the centennial celebration on the 25th, and that afternoon the preacher will be Bishop Oldham of Albany.

the vestry has announced that further payments averaging $11,000 a year will be made until the entire mortgage has been liquidated.

In addition to the usual parochial activities this historic church shows its interest in this artistic community by making available its facilities to the village art center, which shows the work of new artists; a clay club for beginners and advanced students; a College of the City of New York modeling class; the stage and auditorium are used by the American National Theatre Association for auditions and rehearsals; a canteen for the youth of the neighborhood; and a camera club. The gardens of St. John's are well known in the village.

Watch Values

New York:—The Church Fire Insurance Corporation is continually reminding its clients to bring their insurance on churches and other properties up to present day values, although of course the responsibility to do so rests entirely with the vestries.

Recently it suggested to St. Paul's Church, St. Joseph, Michigan, that it do so. They complied, increasing the insurance from $30,400 to $54,375. Almost before the ink was dry on the policy, the church burned, and they were paid $54,375.

Another church sustaining a loss a week earlier had not heeded the warning. Its insurance was only about one-quarter of what it should have been or $28,000. Consequently, while losing $17,404 in the value of the property destroyed, it only received $4,348 in compensation from the insurance, because it had not complied with the coinsurance requirements. To have complied with them (and thus merit the reduced premium rate), it should have been insured for about $112,000. If it had done this, it would have received the full amount of its loss.

MRS. GERTRUDE W. SCOTT
Churchwoman of San Pedro, Calif.

The Rev. James Gilbert (Feb. 19) proposes to correct the evils arising from mixed marriages between Episcopalians and Roman Catholics by "separating the individual from this (the Episcopal) apostolic fellowship in Christ," on the ground that "the Roman Church is in error" and no one has a right to promise to permit his unborn children to be raised in its teachings. He is thinking only of our Church's loss in communicant strength and the Roman Church's all-too-realistic methods of taking it from us. Yet if the good of unborn children is to be our basis of argument (it should be) let us not be too hasty in adopting the legalistic "Catholic" weapon of excommunication. That will only divide still more grievously the family into which the children are to be born. Souls are lost that way.

Mr. Gilbert is too ready to defend the Church by adopting the over-cruel and dangerous weapons of a Church he criticizes.

THE WITNESS continues to be thought provoking and informative. I enjoy it very much and buy it weekly at St. Peter's, my parish church.

RT. REV. WALTER H. GRAY
Bishop Coadjutor of Connecticut

I have read with interest the editorial in your March 11th issue on "A Central Staff College" for the Anglican Communion. I am sure the committee of our House of Bishops will be glad to have in mind the suggestions you make and, if opportunity is offered, to present them for consideration at the proper time. There seems to be wide interest in this whole matter and many people have expressed the hope that such a college may be brought into being.

MISS GRACE CARLETON
Churchwoman of Detroit

While agreeing almost wholly with the Bishop of Eastern Oregon's article on "Discipline in Marriage" (WITNESS, March 4), I am somewhat startled by his one sentence attack on celibates and spinsters. As a spinster of long standing I have always thought that my views on the married state were those of all right thinking people. Recently it has been my disillusioning duty to learn something of the reasons for divorce.

I would suggest that the Bishop of Eastern Oregon read carefully the court findings of some of the divorce papers that come to him with request for permission to be remarried within the Church. It would appear to any reasonable person, I believe, that the findings upon which many divorces are based could only be described as absurd by those whom one would think of as Church people.

To be conservative I would estimate that at least fifty per cent of the marriages dissolved by our civil courts could readily have been saved had the parish clergy been on their jobs. Clergy, when they are well fitted for their ministry, know their people. And knowing them can see when things begin to go wrong with a marriage. And seeing they should act and not stand by while the young people of our Church appeal to lawyers for advice and counsel in a matter which to me, as a spinster, appears to be spiritual.

Why the Bishop of Eastern Oregon should feel that he must attack celibates and spinsters for their "bigoted, bitter and cruel reactions" in this matter is something I cannot understand. While I would not presume to make suggestions to our bishops and clergy I cannot but feel that it would be well if they were closer to the people of the Church and not as is so often the case harried and burdened by parish administration. After all the Church is the people and the bishops and clergy are but servants in our Father's house.

What is wrong with your editor? Does he not have a blue pencil?

ANSWER: In regard to the last questions, it is the policy of THE WITNESS not to blue pencil any contributed article that is signed by the author. When we accept a contributed article, it appears as written even though the editors may disagree with statements in it.

THE REV. JOHN F. DAVIDSON
Trinity Church, Norwich, Connecticut

It is time I got around to saying thank you for the splendid instruction and inspiration your little paper provides. We have little trouble in finding five buyers for the copies which come in each week. Personally, I trust you will stand firm to your forthright point of view and let the chips fall where they may. Sincerity is surely what the world has a right to expect from the Church and churchmen, and we can scarcely blame those who forsake our ranks if they find timidity in the face of our national or international problems amongst our leaders—bad enough to find it among our members.

Should you or any of your readers know of a teaching chaplaincy about to be vacant, I should be grateful to hear from them. After three years teaching in China and eighteen in Canada, with a good bit of parish work thrown in, I am now greatly enjoying this year of parish experience, but am moved to go back to my old love—that of teaching and work among students. I should prefer the north to northeastern part of the country, and to be in or near a metropolitan center.

Power to your editorial elbow, sir; and may you be able to hold the price of your little dynamo down to the dime level! May you get an ever widening audience.

An Episcopal Clergyman Tells Of Situation in South

Declares That What the Southerner Wants Chiefly Is a Chance to Be Fair to Others

By Archer Torrey
Priest of the Diocese of Georgia

Brunswick, Ga.:—There is a tendency among Americans who have not lived in the south to judge the south by its representatives in Congress and the Senate. Because of this, there seems to be a widespread attitude that all southerners are reactionaries and that anyone who has a good word for the south must be a reactionary, too. It should be borne in mind that these "spokesmen" for the south do not represent the people of this section of the country. The two labor congressmen in Washington represent more voters than all the congressmen from South Carolina and Mississippi put together. The reason? Most southerners are not voters—the poll tax, threats of violence, and the total absence of any real choice when they do vote keep them from the polls.

How has the south come to such a pass? Its history, of course, goes far back. It began with the Yankee slave-traders, reached its climax in the Civil War, and has been cultivated ever since by the ever-present and ever-growing need of monopoly capital for cheap labor and cheap raw materials. These can only be obtained by keeping the south in a condition technically known as "semi-colonial dependency." With this goes pressure to prevent industrialization of the south in order to keep competition to a minimum.

How has this been done? The basic technique, of course, has been the "divide and rule" policy of fomenting racial antagonism. The loudest "southern" Negro-baiting demagogues are always found to be backed by Wall Street owned "southern" corporations. Since this is an anti-democratic program, it has been supplemented, inevitably, by other fascist techniques — anti-Semitism, anti-capitalism (strictly phony), religious escapism, and rabid sectionalism. Actually, most southerners think of themselves as Americans, and are profoundly embarrassed by the un-American behaviour of the self-appointed "spokesmen" with which they are afflicted. Why do the honest elements not speak out more vigorously? They have been—until recently—isolated from one another by actual fear of violence and by the impression created by the press and the "nice" people that anybody who really believes in democracy in the deep south is, though a very fine and idealistic individual, quite by himself. There are yet thousands who have not bowed the knee to Baal, but our Elijahs still do not know about them.

What is the solution? There can be no final solution until the grip of monopoly capital has been broken through the unity of the southern people. The many who believe that this must and will be done base this conviction on their belief in the basic goodness and honesty of the southern people. They know that the apparent political immorality of our people is due to the fact that we have had, for many years, only crooks to choose between. If one politician is as big a thief as the next and you are hungry, why not sell your vote, and why fight for the right to vote at all? When southerners are presented a real opportunity to elect a genuinely honest man, neither fear nor money can stop them any more than those things can stop Americans anywhere else.

What evidence is there that the south contains numerically large positive forces and powerful democratic traditions which can and will break the hold of the minority of fascist-minded elements? Ample.

To begin with, there is the old but not-quite-forgotten anti-slavery and anti-secessionist tradition going back to the earliest days and perhaps most strongly expressed by the first Georgia settlers under General Oglethorpe. A resolution passed January 12, 1775, endorsing the proceedings of the first American Congress, by "the Representatives of the extensive District of Darien, in the Colony of Georgia," said:

"5. To show the world that we are not influenced by any contracted or interested motives, but a general philanthropy for all mankind, of whatever climate, language or complexion, we hereby declare our disapprobation and abhorrence of the unnatural practice of slavery in America . . ., a practice founded in injustice and cruelty, and highly dangerous to our liberties (as well as lives), debasing part of our fellow-creatures below men, and corrupting the virtues and morals of the rest; and laying the basis of the

Since THE WITNESS wants its readers informed about the work and thought of the Church, we are glad on occasions to turn over a number to an agency or organization for the presentation of their program. When this is done the editor chosen by the particular organization has a free hand. Articles in the number do not therefore necessarily represent the viewpoint of the editorial board of THE WITNESS. Indeed this is true of all signed articles that appear in our pages. In this particular number the editors did not even see the articles contained therein in advance of publication. liberty we contended for . . . upon a very wrong foundation. We, therefore, resolve, at all times, to use our utmost endeavours for the manumission of slaves in this Colony . . ." Nor is this tradition buried. The quotation above is taken from the introduction to Clods of Southern Earth, a widely circulated and steadily selling book by the famous Georgia mountaineer poet, Don West.

Not only was anti-slavery sentiment widespread in the south from the beginning, but even among slave-owners there was a broad anti-secessionist trend. General Robert E. Lee, himself, was opposed to secession, though he went along when the die was cast. Many southerners never did, especially in the mountains, whither they had fled to escape the pressure of the coastal plantation system.

Today, the tradition of freedom and independence is still strong among the southern mountain people. And when they move to the lowlands again, attracted by the prospect of steady wages in the mills, they become militant fighters for the betterment of the working people as they discover that there is such a thing as wage-slavery, little better than the starved and isolated life in the highland coves.

Also, from the beginning of the coming of the Negro to the south, there has been an "unbowed" tradition among these people. The many pre-Civil War slave revolts are not forgotten. The thousands of slaves who preferred death to bondage and who fought their masters or walked into the sea have their proud descendants carrying on the struggle for freedom in countless organizations of the Negro people. Nor have these same people forgotten the many fine and educated (some slaves were educated by their masters, others had to get their education secretly) freemen and ex-slaves who served in the legislatures and local governments from the end of the Civil War until, in a few cases, very recent years. In a few counties of the "Black Belt" there are actually no Negro share-croppers, with the majority still owning the land given them either by their former master or by the U. S. government under the "forty acres and a mule" policy. This is not to deny that the majority of the rural Negro population in the south still lives under an antiquated and un-economic plantation system which an Episcopal clergyman serving in a rural area recently stated, "is hardly different from slavery." These people, of course, do not enjoy the most elementary civil rights.

Perhaps the strongest and most positive tradition in the south is the Populist tradition. The Populist movement of the 1890's swept the south, and brought with it organization of the farmers and Negro-white solidarity on a scale never seen before or since. It was side-tracked by the introduction of racism and wrecked by the power of big business. But it is not dead. Such widely differing politicians as "Big Jim" Folsom of Alabama and "Old Gene" Talmadge of Georgia have based their appeal on populist sentiment among the rural masses of the south. Many, of course, have forgotten that Populism was originally a Negro-white movement, and that no help can come to the rural people when they are divided among themselves. But many, too, have not forgotten.

The greatest recent influences on the southern people, of course, have been the New Deal and the anti-fascist war. Tied as the New Deal was to the apron-strings of corrupt political machines, it nevertheless opened new vistas of hope to millions of hungry and oppressed southerners. Roosevelt lives today in the south. He is the great hero of the southern people, white as well as black. And anyone who aspires to influence must reckon with his spirit. The cynical abandonment of the Roosevelt program by the Democratic Party is, quite simply, the reason the "Solid South" has cracked to pieces. Only one who follows in the New Deal tradition, not in the imaginary "tradition" of the five percent ante-bellum slave-owners and their fawning apologists, can gather together the pieces.

It is hard to assess the effect of the recent war on the south, since the effect was not on the surface political but moral and economic. On the one hand, it gave southern people a taste of industrialization (which has since been snatched away) and of full employment and, on the other hand, it helped many millions to a clearer realization of the nature of fascism and its ultimate fruits. Those who died for democracy are not quickly forgotten, and those who have returned brought with them a new outlook. Today, if one hears white supremacy talk down at the barber-shop, one is also likely to hear from some world war veteran, "That's Hitler talk!" These veterans will be heard from, and are already being heard from. They are active in the spreading people's movement.

The Shape of Things to Come

In addition to such major trends among the vast majority of the population of the south, there is a strong democratic potential in the more recent woman suffrage movement, expressed today in the Parent Teacher Associations, the League of Woman Voters, and other women's organizations. There is also the steadily growing trade union movement and,

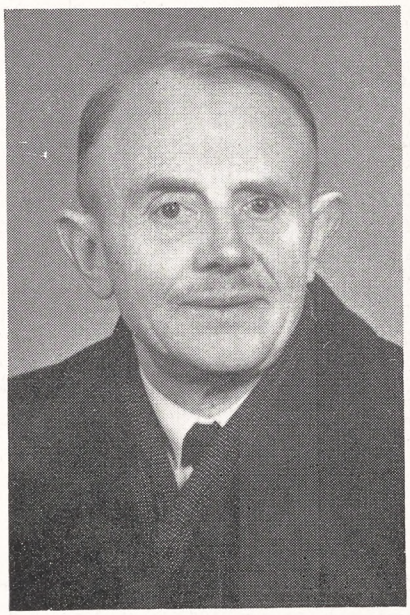
Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship Aids a German Pastor

Adopts a Parish with Aim of Sending Large Supply of Goods to Meet Widespread Needs



By Winslow Ames
Treasurer of the E.P.F.

Springfield, Mo.: — The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship concentrates its foreign relief work on the communities in the cure of the Rev. Wilhelm Mensching, German pastor who throughout the Hitler regime kept unbroken his peace testimony, his prayers for all people and nations, and his membership in the International Fellowship of Reconciliation. His Evangelical Lutheran church at Petzen near Bückeburg in the British zone of Germany is the only church to serve four villages with a total population of 3400; 1400 of these are people who have come in from the east, and of them 600 are Roman Catholics. There has been great friction in predominantly Protestant Germany of the American and British zones over the influx of refugees from East Prussia and Poland who were often Roman Catholic, and it speaks volumes for Pastor Mensching that his community undertook responsibility for all the new arrivals regardless of religion.

The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship has undertaken, in adopting the parish, to send large supplies of goods in the order of need. The first shipment was of 4400 pounds of shoes and shoe-repair materials. These EPF bought from Church World Service, with EPF members undertaking to replace by donations in kind all the shoes thus sent. A second shipment made through CRALOG consists of powdered skim milk, relief cereal, and fats, to a total of $1000.

Wilhelm Mensching has been notable for his powerful writing, for his youth conferences, held usually in Whitsuntide, and for his personal influence exerted through these two means. One of the things he asks for is paper, which can be bought in Sweden with dollars, for use in enlarging that influence; another is the means of building a large youth center. His community has even questioned whether, rather than receive more than the average help going to Germany in food and clothing, they should not ask for materials for such a youth center. Recently Oskar Schmitt, an old IFOR colleague in Bückeburg, has undertaken the translation into German of Richard Gregg's The Power of Non-Violence.

An EPF delegate who is also attached to the American Friends Service Committee, George Hogle of Salt Lake City, now works with Wilhelm Mensching, who described him in a recent letter as "the best possible representative of America among our young people and in general."

HISTORIC SERVICE IN MANILA

Manila, Philippines: — Bishop Binsted has fixed Wednesday, April 7, as the date for the consecration of the three bishops of the Philippine Independent Church, which was authorized by the House of Bishops last November. The service will be held in St. Luke's Cathedral here, with Bishop Binsted the consecrator and Bishop Kennedy of Honolulu and Suffragan Bishop Wilner of the Philippines as the co-consecrators. Bishop Wilner will preach. Those to be consecrated are Mons. Isabelo de los Reyes, Jr., supreme bishop of the Independent Church; Mons. Manuel N. Aguilar, Bishop of Laguna, both of whom were ordained deacon and priest by Bishop Binsted in January, and Mons. Gerardo M. Bayaca, Bishop of Tarlac and Zambales, who is in priest's orders of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Freund, who now teaches at Ozark Arts and Crafts at Springfield, Mo., has had exhibits in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Seattle and in the Library of Congress.

NIKOLAI BERDYAEV IS DEAD

Paris:—Nikolai A. Berdyaev, professor at the Russian Orthodox Seminary located here, and considered one of the greatest of Christian philosophers, died here at the age of 74. At the age of 25 he was exiled from Kiev, his birthplace, for criticizing the Orthodox Church under the Czar as "a political body at the mercy of the civil power." After the revolution he was appointed a professor at Moscow University but in 1922 he was exiled by the government as "an upholder of religion."

Berdyaev remained loyal to the Russian Orthodox Church and also to the Soviet Union although he was always an outstanding opponent of Marxist atheism. In an article he wrote for THE WITNESS some years ago he said: "A man can become an atheist from intellectual conscientiousness, because he is seeking for the truth; because he is unable to reconcile himself with the evil and suffering he sees in the world around him. Atheism may, in fact, represent a dialectical 'moment' in a search for God, a purification of our veneration of God from the elements of idolatry. It is not the one who says 'Lord, Lord' and does evil, who is full of hatred, revenge and murder, who is a true Christian. Only one who does the works of Christ can be a Christian. While there is a great deal which is negative and which is open to criticism in Marxism, so that we cannot accept it, at any rate so far as social truth is concerned, there is more on the side of Marxism than on that of the feudally capitalistic Christianity, of which Cardinal Goma and General Franco are worthy representatives."

FRANKS LECTURES AT VIRGINIA

Charlottesville, Va.: — The Rev. Vincent C. Franks, rector of St. Andrew's, Jackson, Miss., delivered a series of lectures on "Beliefs that Matter" during the "religious emphasis week" at the University of Virginia. Classes were dismissed for an hour, March 16-18, and the auditorium of the university was filled with a capacity crowd of students and faculty members.

CHURCH ARMY HAS CONFERENCE

Cincinnati: — The Church Army sponsors a conference April 6-8 on various phases of its work. The opening sessions, held at the Advent, are on rural work, with the second day devoted to urban work and meeting at Christ Church. The sessions on the final day will be held at the training center here and are on the future plans and work of the Army. Various Captains and Sisters of the organization will lead in the discussions and give the addresses.

CHINESE LEADERS CONFER

Anking:—A conference of the clergy and women parish workers of the district of Anking was held at Wuhu, March 3-8, the first to be held in ten years. It was attended by 18 clergy and 8 women workers. The leader was Bishop Robin Chen who gave a series of addresses on the revolutionary character of the Christian message. In addition the Rev. Victor Hawyard, secretary of the National Christian Council, gave addresses on the forward movement in the Churches of China; Prof. T. C. Kuan of Nanking Seminary gave addresses on the Christian home and M. C. Swen, of the faculty of Nanking University lectured on audio-visual education.

The Power and The Glory

MINISTERS ASK CONGRESS TO STAY CALM

Denver (RNS): — Congress was urged to remain calm in the face of "the fear and hysteria sweeping across the country and increasing because of the emergency action of the President" by the ministers' alliance of this city. The clergymen declared that they did not know "whether this is a part of the effort to secure passage of universal military training or a real international emergency." They also asked that all UN agencies be used "before any unilateral action be taken and that every possibility of pacific settlement of the present difficulties be fully explored." They further called upon the government to give the public "the fullest information about the existing international situation and especially about every step contemplated that might involve the American people in war."

The State and Personal and Communal Problems

by W. Appleton Lawrence

The Bishop of Western Massachusetts

LONG ago, the Pharisees tried to trap Jesus with the question, "Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not?" "But Jesus perceived their wickedness . . . and saith unto them, 'Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.' "

The interpretation of this cryptic reply depends, of course, upon what things we believe belong "unto Caesar" and what things we believe belong "unto God." History gives constant and vivid illustration that the claims of each definitely impinge upon the other, and inevitably produce conflict as those claims climb toward totalitarianism by either.

Our American system of government departed from all precedent and set up the principle of "The separation of Church and state." But the mere enunciating of a principle is a far cry from solving the problem, even though our constitution does declare, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." It has been said before, but it needs to be re-said today with special emphasis and vehemence, that "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance," for there are definite and recognizable trends which, for good or for ill, are definitely altering the frontiers of human freedom.

The great ancient documents of human rights, such as the Magna Charta and the American Bill of Rights of 1789, all define what the government shall not do to the individual, and we find that principle embodied in the Jeffersonian statement that "That government is best which governs least." But in recent years, as society has become more complex in its organization and activities, the tendency has been, not so much to demand that the state keep out, as to ask it to come in and provide certain conditions which seem important to the living of a full and satisfying life. In the Bill of Rights which President Roosevelt proposed, the government was to provide for every citizen: "the right to a useful and remunerative job, adequate food, clothing and recreation." The bill demanded, also, "the right of every family to a decent home, a good education, and adequate protection from the economic fears of old age, sickness, accident, and unemployment."

The extent to which such rights would require national planning and social controls, may not now be fully apparent, but that they would require much more than those we have at present is plainly evident. As a matter of fact, we quickly discover that complete devotion to personal liberty soon upsets our sense of equality, and an uncritical emphasis on equality tends to gradually but surely limit our personal liberties. If we would maintain equilibrium, we must indeed be eternally vigilant. Democracy usually calls for the cultivation of the middle way, and it is that which we advocate in facing the definite problems which confront us.

LET us look at some of those problems which seem most acute at the present moment. For instance, if separation of Church and state means a complete severance, and that is what many would demand in their fear of the growing pressure and inroads into the public treasury by the Roman Church, what about the tax exemption privileges which all churches at present enjoy? The historical ground for such exemption was cut away by separation and disestablishment. The old practice has continued simply through custom and public sentiment. Legally speaking, taxation is now the norm, exemption the abnormality. The Church is not really free so long as the state holds this threat of the possible withdrawal of this privilege, which, if taken away, would certainly seriously cripple the work of the Churches. If we clamor loudly for the separation of Church and state in one area, we should not resent it if the state should take us at our word in another area.

There has been some discussion and demand that the Churches be included in the Social Security Act. I personally believe that we should seek such inclusion, but in so doing, I do not think we ought to be blind to the fact that this is an excise tax which, if not paid, will give the government power over the Church to penalize it in punishment.

The recent withholding tax even goes so far as to make the Church the servant of the state as its collecting agent. This may seem to be but a bit of machinery to save the government labor, but actually may prove an embarrassing matter, if the state starts to spend this money in ways which the Church disapproves. Already, I know of some sensitive spirits who conscientiously object because they do not believe in war as a method of settling international disputes, yet, because the tax is subtracted before their salary ever reaches them, find thirty cents of every dollar of tax withheld used to prepare for possible future war, and another thirty cents to pay for past wars.

All of which opens up the whole matter of the growing, grasping for power by the state. The Army and Navy Bulletin has reported frankly, "Today the army has virtual control of foreign affairs. The chain of control in diplomatic hot spots, both in the execution of basic policy and in the formulation of ad hoc arrangements, lies almost totally in the hands of the military authorities." I might go on and show how the military has been reaching into science, industry, education, and even public relations, so that last year the army was the third largest advertiser; and now the army is planning even greater control over the American people through universal military training, so that, as Col. Edward A. Fitzpatrick openly states, "A major part of the adult civilian population will be reserves in the armed forces under military control." We watched the growing power of the military in Germany and Japan in the years before the war with apprehension which was justified. Other countries are watching the United States today with the same concern. We said then, "It cannot happen here." They say, now, "It is happening in the United States."

Space does not permit the development of the many other points where the interests of the state cross and conflict with both our personal and communal rights and desires. In Europe the friction created reached the point where the lid blew off. In the United States the issues still seethe beneath the surface. The time has come, we believe, when we must rethink this whole principle of "separation of Church and State," the results and repercussions of which are just catching up with us. God and Caesar still claim man's complete allegiance. The words of Jesus are as true and thought-provoking today as they were long centuries ago. The changed conditions however call for solid and serious thought and eternal vigilance all the while.

Love or Armageddon

by William R. Huntington

A Former Witness Editor Now Doing Relief Work in Europe

MEN are about to let loose on the earth misery, death, waste, and destruction beyond everything of the sort we have already known and possibly to such an extent that everything we have called civilized and prided as progress, and for which generations of our best souls and hearts have labored, may be lost for centuries, if not for ever. Is this any concern of the Christian Church?

During a year in Europe I have seen in appalling quantity and in heart-rending detail the ruin and suffering left by the last war. If I should attempt in this brief space to describe the unearthly desolation of the bombed cities or the wretchedness of personal life without sufficiency in any of its essentials, food, clothing, shelter, health, family, companionship, work, or hope, I should add little to the pictures that have been put before the world in such countless appeals and reports that no one, whether or not he has seen with his own eyes, can be in any doubt either as to the depths of horror that have been reached or as to the millions of persons affected. Whatever I say here can of course add little to anyone's thinking, but whatever little it is, I must try to emphasize what I think is most important: the relevance of all this disaster and suffering. It is not somebody else's. It is ours. We share responsibility for it. We share its effects. If we do not recognize it in time as our own serious illness, we shall be the victims of its spreading, and perish.

To stay abroad as much as a year in relief work is to feel this more and more, that all this talk about the oneness of the world is right. The oneness is real. Nationality is of no fundamental importance whatsoever. One has volunteered for "foreign" service. One has always thought of that subjectively, referring to those served as "foreign." One finds, of course, that it is oneself who is "foreign." One wants to drop the word altogether. People everywhere are basically the same, from every human and Christian viewpoint. These are not just empty words but have practical application to every phase of our predicament, and if we are to get out of the latter we must apply them all down the line. Not just to relief drives or Friendship trains but to all our social and political relationships.

Take the Marshall Plan idea, for instance. If this could be separated from power politics altogether, it would be a good and generous thing as far as it goes. But it does not go far enough for the needs of the times, for the requirements of real human solidarity, and it is for this reason indeed that it is so subject to entanglement with power politics. It remains essentially unilateral, national, American. We cannot save Europe or ourselves by gifts or loans. The situation is beyond any such comfortable aloof remedies. We can save ourselves and Europe only by throwing in our lot with theirs, whole-heartedly, for better for worse. If we acted as real neighbors, we should open up our economy to whatever nations were ready to federate with us, and share with them the same freedom of movement of persons and goods and currency that we now enjoy within our own states. In such a free extended community, recovery would come quickly and naturally. In such a community, the hope of progress towards a better life would become vigorous again, which would be the surest and healthiest safeguard against the fever of violence and despair that now rages. Against the will to create such a community is only inertia and national selfishness, a fallacious theoretical self-interest at that. What excuse has the Christian Church, standing for the unity of mankind, for not proclaiming such a course the social duty of our time?

If one of our states were ravaged by earthquake or some other disaster, the rest of the nation would come to its assistance as rapidly and as efficiently as the reparative forces of the body concentrate on healing a wounded part. The already existing sources of materials and credit and labor and enterprise would turn towards rebuilding and rehabilitation without its being necessary to create anything as cumbersome and artificial as a Marshall Plan. I cannot go about these dreary listless rubbled cities of Europe without hearing a voice screaming in my ear: "Where are the bulldozers? Where are the steam-shovels? Where are the cranes, the trucks, the masons, the steelworkers, the carpenters? What are we waiting for?"

SHOCKING as is the inadequacy of aid to recovery, however, the greatest and most dangerous failure to apply the fact of human unity lies in the preparation for further warfare. How can it be possible that we see what we have just done, and learn no lesson from it? How can we face these millions of miserable individual lives and be so callous as to plan moves that would repeat even one of these inhuman tragedies, much less many more millions? One thanks God for the kindness of those many people who have given much to feed and clothe and mend some of the poor children and helpless persons of the present wreckage, but what is one to think when one sees the smiles of today so overshadowed by the shadows of tomorrow that one feels as if this present relief is only something like the breakfasts served in prison before dawn to the condemned? There is no question that the morale of Europe has gone steadily down during the past year. Today you can hardly find a man anywhere who does not expect war soon again, who does not feel absolutely helpless in the face of this expectation, who is not therefore without spirit for the future. And where can a man look for any hope?

The shame of the Christian Church today is that no one looks to it. The world divides itself into two camps of terrible force and prepares for Armageddon, brothers against brothers, "democracy" against "communism"—ideologies each containing at their best the growth of the seeds of Christianity; each at their worst, exploitation and despotism, denying Christ altogether. Had the Church made the most of its two milleniums in bringing the Gospel teachings into social affairs, this impasse could never have come about. Had the Church at present the strength of the moral position it is supposed to stand for, it could raise the voice of authority that is needed to call a halt to this madness and bring about reconciliation. But the tragedy is that the Church, except here and there in the by-play of intrigue and local politics, is not even a significant factor in this drama. Does any commentator or current historian give it any importance whatever? Does anyone expect that either America or Russia will be at all affected in her course by, of all things, the Church?

What could the Church do? It could be bold enough to apply the gospel of love to all men and renounce all participation in war or preparation for war. The Vatican could do this and, through its remarkable organization, which operates so smoothly in all intra-ecclesiastical matters, bring the great body of its followers to practical pacifism. The World Council of Churches could do the same, with less solidarity perhaps, but with tremendous effect nevertheless. If it comes into being this summer on any lesser platform, in fact, it will be stillborn. Unless the Church can rise up from its lethargy and its egocentricity and proclaim its willingness to risk meeting its enemies with love, there is no hope for it, or for mankind. Christendom cannot be saved with atomic bombs, and neither can democracy or the proletariat. Someone must be able to persuade one or the other of the antagonists to lay arms aside, or we are doomed. Then America will have learned the hard way that these war-born sufferings are her sufferings, because they will be in her own land, and her people will not have to travel across the seas to see what they are like. Lay down your arms, America. That is the only way you can win over the east. That is the only way you can reach your true greatness. Have faith in yourself, in democracy, in mankind. Dare to use your strength only to help people, even your enemies. Dare to meet even ruthlessness with the overpowering discipline of love.

The Bishops and War

By

PAUL GLIDDON

Clergyman of the Church of England

SINCE bishops are regarded as particularly cautious in their public pronouncements, it can be assumed that the 1930 Lambeth Conference, then dealing with such a controversial issue as war, was careful not to be more downright than necessary. Therefore, when it asserted that "the Christian must condemn war, not merely because it is wasteful and ruinous, a cause of untold misery, but far more because it is contrary to the will of God," we may be sure no weaker words could properly express the bishop's convictions.

While the Conference did "not deny the right of a nation to defend itself if attacked," it did pass a resolution affirming "that war as a method of settling international disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of Jesus Christ." Further, it was convinced that "the Christian Church can make no terms with the idea expressed in the phrase 'My country right or wrong' " and that "the state can only demand the whole-hearted loyalty of its citizens when its action is guided by the same moral principles as the private citizen is taught to apply in his relations with his neighbors."

Few of the things for which the 1914-1918 war was fought were ultimately realized, indeed some of those it sought to destroy were more firmly established after victory than they had been before the war began. The results of the recent war seem likely to be no more satisfactory, confirming the late Lord Allenby's belief that victory produces only Dead Sea fruits. We entered the war that Poland might be free and we left it with Poland bound to Russia. Although such sacrifices were made that fascist and nazi dictatorship might be brought to an end by a dictated peace, dictatorship has certainly not disappeared from Europe, while, two and a half years after V-E day, the first words of the dictated peace had still to be dictated.

Of course it is true that, like any great crisis, war does disclose wonderful qualities of selfless courage in men and woman who might otherwise be dismissed as just very ordinary. But that in itself no more argues in favor of war than the deliberate sinking of a ship could be justified on the ground that it would certainly disclose the heroism of some who would never be suspected of such high quality. And it is not only the best in man which war reveals; the beast in man comes into his kingdom. This places a solemn responsibility upon the Christian conscience, for we are taught to pray that we may not be led into temptation and that must require that we should also avoid exposing others to temptation. The unspeakable conditions under which war has forced millions to drag out their lives, the lust and the hate that it engenders, the dismemberment of the family and the rupture of precious traditions are evils inseparable from great modern wars and often less easily remedied than bodily wounds. There are fifty divorces in England today for every one that there was in the year before the first world war. This, quite apart from the over-crowding caused by the destruction of hundreds of thousands of dwellings, does not suggest that war is any final safeguard to hearth and home. A Christian who can retain any faith in modern war must somehow persuade himself that, in agreeing to war, he is not also regretfully assenting to the maiming or slaughter of numberless service men and women, to the orphaning or killing of frightened children, the starving of the homeless aged, to a rapid rise in venereal diseases and the unbridling of lust. Christians must know that these things will happen and can be far more certainly counted on as happening than the attainment of the objects for which the war is fought. He who wills the end also wills the means. Of the means he can be certain; it is the end which is clouded in doubt.

THE bishops were surely right in declaring that "the Christian Church can make no terms with the idea expressed in the phrase 'My country, right or wrong'," for such a principle would not only excuse a Christian from criticism of any atrocity the government of his particular country might perpetrate, but would also make the national state, not the Christ of all nations, the final arbiter of conscience. The claim that Christ is King of kings, Lord of lords, the only Ruler of princes, must mean that he has not only a supernational authority but also an authority which, for a Christian, is greater than any earthly king or governor. His law is not subject to the law of man, for it is he who brings all things into subjection under his feet.

To many people it may seem astonishing that the bishops should have suggested that war is contrary to the teaching and example of Jesus Christ, for they argue that he not only taught that laying down one's life for one's friend was an example of perfect love but that he also did, in fact, die to save others. Therefore they feel that any suggestion that war may be opposed to Christ's example disparages something which calls forth on the greatest scale that very willingness to sacrifice self which he himself commended.

But, although a nation may be destroyed in time of war, its consuming purpose is, not to see to it that its own forces are destroyed, but that it is the people on the other side of the fighting line who lay down their lives for the enemy country. It is on a government's ability to avoid an over-large number of its own people dying for their country that victory depends. But Jesus Christ did not die while planning the death of other men; the only death that it has even been suggested that he may have planned was his own. Although he applauded a man giving his life for his friends, the behaviour of those for whom he himself died shows very clearly the sort of people he found it possible, in the compassion of his heart, to call his friends.

Although Protestants may have been mistaken when they have accused the Jesuits of teaching that the end justifies the means, and Jesuits may have been justified when they repudiated the charge with much of the indignation shown by St. Paul in face of a similar accusation, still it must be acknowledged that war can only be sanctioned if this is indeed a correct moral principle. Actually the taking of a man's goods or of his life would not be excused by any modern government simply on the ground that the country was at war; it would be excused on the ground that it was engaged in a righteous war. It is the righteousness of the end which is held to turn what would otherwise be regarded as criminal murder into legitimate killing, or what would otherwise be theft into a praiseworthy capture. Means which would normally be regarded as cruel, or even disgusting, are thought to be justified if only through them can be established that opportunity of freedom without which a man's soul is cramped and his hopes destroyed.

And yet, the moment this principle is accepted, the moral basis of society is imperilled. A government's freedom in time of war to do what would ordinarily be regarded as evil is not lightly set aside when the war is over and, since what is sauce for the very large goose is also sauce for the very small gander, the common citizen assumes a similar license. Thus anyone who can persuade himself that action from which he might otherwise shrink will, in fact, benefit his family or give greater independence to himself, can easily become convinced that the doubtful means is stripped of all shame by the desirable end. The moral collapse which so monotonously follows even those wars undertaken for the highest ideals is probably due to no cause so much as the acceptance of this insidious principle.

It is the consideration of these things which has caused a number of men and women who would wish to be accounted loyal members of the Anglican Communion to look with great hope towards the gathering of the bishops at Lambeth this July. They cannot feel that the bishops will be content merely to reaffirm what was said in 1930 but rather that they will act on the declaration of that former Conference—"In these movements towards peace . . . the Church should take the lead." These priests and lay people trust that, in the light of the dreadful experience of a second world war, the bishops will be given the power to guide the feet of a hesitant Church into the final ways of peace, so that she may turn her back forever on the deluding claims of war. They would not presume to sit in judgment on the past, nor debate the proper place of war in an age that has gone by, but they would look with hope towards the future and pray that, in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, it may be freed from the fearful shadows which have darkened the days that have gone. At the last Lambeth Conference the bishops did declare their belief that "as the Christian conscience has condemned infanticide and slavery and torture, it is now called to condemn war as an outrage on the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all mankind" but, unfortunately, they proceeded so to qualify their words that, before long, many of them were taking some share in this same outrage.

Unless the Church can decide to condemn all war in all circumstances, it is difficult to see how the complete frustration of evangelistic work, both at home and abroad, can be avoided. If there is once more to appear the sorry spectacle of those who own allegiance to one Lord being engaged in mutual slaughter—that most awful of civil wars, civil war in the Civitas Dei—then the dwellers in the darkened corners of the world will find little to lighten them in Christendom save the lurid fires of war. At home those who have drifted from the Church will certainly not be brought to understand the love of God until Christ's own society demonstrates that it is to be understood as a love which never changes into anything less than love.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

THE Church, historically, has been continually concerned about the free dissemination of information and ideas in this country. In the past it has battled and, today, it would continue to battle to the last ditch for the right known as "the freedom of the pulpit," recognizing that any attempt to stifle prophetic preaching would be to destroy the judgmental responsibility of the Christian faith.

In our own era, we Americans use the phrase "freedom of expression"—meaning, among other things, a free press and a free radio—as a rallying cry for the world. Since however our press and radio are truly "big business," featuring many of the worst features of monopoly, we realize that we use this fine slogan, "freedom of expression," with our collective tongue in our cheek. We know that, one by one, the liberal and progressive commentators are taken off the air, leaving the field as the exclusive domain of men like Fulton Lewis, Jr., and Henry J. Taylor. Thus the American public seldom gets the fruits of "freedom of expression" since they don't get the facts on the 'other side' which would enable them to make a rational and mature judgment.

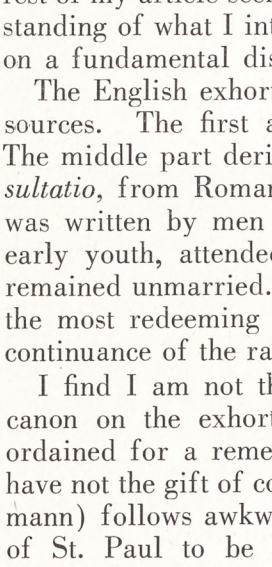
In the past, organized society—meaning government—has found it necessary to protect the right of free expression. In 1939, the Federal Communications Commission passed the Mayflower decision which sought to make the public interest paramount in radio. In issuing the decision, the F.C.C. stated: "Under the American system of broadcasting, it is clear that responsibility for the conduct of a broadcast station must rest initially with the broadcaster. It is equally clear that, with the limitations in frequencies inherent in the nature of radio, the public interest can never be served by a dedication of any broadcast facility to the support of his own partisan ends. . . A truly free radio cannot be used to advocate the causes of the licensee. It cannot be used to support the candidacies of his friends. It cannot be devoted to the support of principles he happens to regard most favorable. In brief, the broadcaster cannot be an advocate."

As interpreted by the F.C.C. in subsequent decisions, this did not mean that radio stations had to steer clear of hot issues. Rather it meant that it had to give both sides of the argument as a public service. Likewise it meant that editorial opinion on the air be clearly and explicitly labeled as such. (A good example of 'editorializing' is continually shown on the Sunoco "Three-Star Extra" sponsored by the rugged Republican Joseph Pew of Pennsylvania.)

The Commission, now that it has been cleared of any 'New Deal' taint by President Truman's new appointments, is going to reevaluate the Mayflower decision. The National Association of Broadcasters, through its president, Justin Miller, is working overtime to scrap the decision. The N.A.B. is the N.A.M. of the air-waves.



In a period when fundamental freedoms and civil liberties are being undermined in the name of fundamental freedoms and civil liberties, you might want to make yourself vocal on this issue. For background material, I suggest you read Shall Radio Take Sides in the Feb. 21st issue of The Nation and the book, The First Freedom by Morris Ernst. And then, if you conclude that you wish to exercise the right of citizenship, you might write a letter to the Federal Communications Commission, Washington, D. C.

A Word With You

"Words Unnecessarily Coarse"

I REGRET that my column on marriage in the issue of February 12 was marred by an egregious oversight. A courteous letter from Mr. Garnett, of Christ Church, Milwaukee, points out that the Roman canon on marriage (which I disparaged because it puts the most spiritual reason for marriage last) has a close parallel in the exhortation in the marriage service in the English Prayer Book. This was also pointed out by Professor Seitz of Bexley Hall, in a letter printed in "Backfire" in the issue of March 4. His enthusiastic condemnation of the rest of my article seems to be based on a misunderstanding of what I intended to express, rather than on a fundamental disagreement between us.

The English exhortation has two badly blended sources. The first and last phrases are Sarum. The middle part derives, through Hermann's Consultatio, from Roman canon law. This canon law was written by men who had left family life in early youth, attended monastic schools, and had remained unmarried. They seem to have felt that the most redeeming feature of marriage was the continuance of the race.

I find I am not the first to have criticized the canon on the exhortation. The phrase "It was ordained for a remedy . . . that such persons as have not the gift of continency might marry" (Hermann) follows awkwardly on "(it) is commended of St. Paul to be honorable among all men." (Sarum) Bishop Barry in The Teacher's Prayer Book calls this "coarse; the admiration of celibacy represents marriage as a condescension to weakness." Bishop Cosin referred to "words unnecessarily coarse." The American Prayer Book, whose compilers omitted nothing without cause, contains only the first and last parts of the exhortation, which came mostly from Sarum, and they left out the part from Consultatio. It must have seemed unnecessary or unedifying to them. The Proposed English Book of 1928 alters the statement radically: "It was ordained in order that the natural instincts and affections, implanted by God, should be hallowed and directed aright."

In this connection, one must note with approval the action of the committee on marriage instruction in reporting to the National Council that basic

Statement of Faith and Order By Unity Commission

To Be Submitted to the Lambeth Conference And Is Largely Based on the Quadrilateral

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity has prepared a Statement on Faith and Order in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral. The 13 page mimeograph report was sent to all bishops of the Episcopal Church last week, with the statement that it was prepared for submission to the Lambeth Conference.

The commission, after quoting the 1946 General Convention resolution on unity as its "directive," presents this statement "as a basis for intercommunion, looking toward organic federation with other Christian bodies."

"Intercommunion between two Churches is understood as meaning that members of either Church shall be permitted to receive Holy Communion in the other, and that ministers of either Church shall be competent to celebrate the Holy Communion in the other.

"One example of intercommunion now actually in effect is that between the Anglican and Old Catholic churches in Europe and America. The Bonn Agreement, which is the basis of this intercommunion though not necessarily normative for all future agreements, reads:

'1. Each communion recognizes the Catholicity and independence of the other, and maintains its own.

'2. Each communion agrees to admit members of the other communion to participate in the sacraments.

'3. Intercommunion does not require from either communion the acceptance of all doctrinal opinion, sacramental devotion, or liturgical practice characteristic of the other, but implies that each believes the other to hold all the essentials of the Christian faith.'

"Organic federation, which presupposes intercommunion, may take any one of several forms. It may be: (1) a federation, such as now exists among the Churches of the Anglican Communion, with a council whose functions are purely advisory; (2) a federation which has an advisory council as in (1), and in addition merges administrative and missionary agencies, the autonomy of the uniting Churches being not affected; (3) a federation which merges administrative and missionary agencies as in (2), and in addition has an overall legislative body with limited delegated powers."

Most of the lengthy report is given to the reprinting of historic documents dealing with the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral; the statement of the House of Bishops meeting in Chicago in 1886; the declaration of the Lambeth Conference of 1888 which reaffirmed the statement of the American Bishops; the Appeal to All Christian People of the Lambeth Conference of 1920 which is further reaffirmation; the Lambeth Conference report of 1930 which enlarged upon that part of the Quadrilateral dealing with the Historic Episcopate; finally the affirmation on Faith and Order of the Edinburgh Conference held in 1937 in which, the commission states, "we can join with other Christian bodies."

In conclusion the commission states that this new statement "is not a complete formulation of the faith and order of the Church. It is an exposition of the background and chief implications of the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral, and is to be regarded as the possible precursor of a unity to be achieved tomorrow, not as the unalterable basis of a unity to be realized today. We hope that the document will form a useful instrument of further negotiation with those Christian bodies which may be willing to join with us in seeking a way into that unity to which our Lord is calling all Christian people."

Bishop Robert Strider of West Virginia is the chairman of the Commission; the secretary is Dean Alexander Zabriskie of the Virginia Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Threat to Union

Madura, India (RNS):—Efforts to cope with "the first major threat" to its union were made here at the first synod of the new Church of South India which came into existence last September as an amalgamation of Anglican, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed elements. It was announced that the threat had come from the decision of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, mission organization of the Church of England, to withdraw support from missionaries and pastors affiliating with the united Church. This decision, the synod was told, had had especially serious effects in two northern dioceses of the new union. The synod adopted a resolution declaring it had learned of the developments with "great concern" and pledging the "active support" of the whole Church in measures to protect the union.

It was decided to send the Rt. Rev. A. B. Elliott, Bishop in Dornakal, to Calcutta, seat of the Anglican metropolitan to deal with "a certain very marked situation" in that area. In addition, the new moderator, the Most Rev. A. M. Hollis, was instructed to hold discussions in the affected dioceses and Bishop Packenham Walsh, an ashram leader, was asked to hold retreats, as means to remedy the situation.

The role of women in the affairs of the Church was also forcefully presented by Mrs. Frank Whittaker of Hyderabad state, wife of the Bishop of Medak. She pointed out that most of the 14 dioceses of the new Church had sent only one woman to the first synod and one diocese had sent none, and she challenged the synod to give women a bigger role in its leadership.

The synod voted at sessions here to permit its single diocese in north Ceylon to negotiate with other Ceylon Churches on the question of possible union of all these Churches in the large island near the northern tip of India. A suggestion by some synod leaders that the whole Church of South India should be represented in the Ceylon negotiations was rejected on the ground that the Ceylon union project "has taken such a definite shape that the Indian Church could exert little influence by coming in at this time."

Another reason given for non-intervention was that a large measure of agreement has been reached in Ceylon whereby ministers would be re-commissioned by the laying-on of hands. It was agreed that since the re-commissioning idea was abandoned by the Church of South India before union occurred, the latter's entry into the Ceylon discussions might raise more problems for both areas than it would solve. Churches involved in the Ceylon negotiations include the Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, and Baptists.

Hit Segregation

New York:—Deploring restrictive covenants based on race as "a violation of our Lord's testimony about the dignity of human personality, justice and love," the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches has pledged itself to work against their use and has urged members of the churches to do likewise. In a statement adopted at its quarterly meeting here, the executive committee asserted that "the pattern of racial segregation in housing is largely due to the use of restrictive covenants based on race."

"It forces its victims — Negroes, Japanese-Americans, Jews and other minorities — to live in segregated areas which become overcrowded with the increase of population," the statement said, "causing deterioration to physical property, community facilities and services. It violates the right of the property owner to sell or lease regardless of race and the right of a member of a minority group to live wherever he desires and his financial means permit."

The committee added that this situation "has a grave effect on the spiritual, moral and human values of the people in the area," and that "the realization of 'a non-segregated Church and a non-segregated society' is made impossible."

Toynbee at Columbia

New York:—The prospect of the western civilization will be the theme of four lectures to be delivered at Columbia University by Arnold J. Toynbee, the author of A Study of History. He deals with "western prospects and non-western experience" on April 12; "the problem of war" is his subject for April 14; "The problems of class" on April 19 and "the conflict between heart and head" on April 21.

Parish Celebrates

Detroit:—Judge Henry S. Hulbert, former judge of the probate court, was the speaker at the morning service at St. Joseph's on March 7 which marked the 40th anniversary of the parish. He was one of the original laymen who secured the present site. He told the large congregation that the ten laymen who founded the church were discouraged by Church leaders because it was thought that

Who has more intimate contact with life and death than the trained nurse? In the warfare against disease she fights on the frontier. She serves and soothes those whose hope appears to be lost. Equipped with Christian faith, she supplements her scientific knowledge and skill with an unseen power to comfort the afflicted for whose care she dedicates her life.

The Guild of Saint Barnabas for Nurses endeavors to give spiritual stimulus to nurses through the kindly ministrations of Chaplains and Associates who find eminent satisfaction in aiding them to achieve the virtues that are essential in the practice of their profession.

the project was too ambitious. At the first annual meeting there were 69 members; seven years later there were 475. He told of how these ten men had helped build with their own hands the small chapel which was the first meeting place of the parish on the new site. This building now cares for the school classes and other parish activities.

The original St. Joseph's was built in 1883 in the downtown part of the city. It was sold in 1906 when the major part of the congregation joined with St. Paul's and Grace Church to form St. Paul's Cathedral. The original group of laymen of the parish purchased 200 feet of frontage on Woodward Avenue in 1907, which is extremely valuable today because of the growth of the city. Outgrowing the chapel the congregation built its present structure about 20 years ago and it is considered one of the most beautiful churches in the city, containing fine wood carving, paintings and mosaics.

The indebtedness was cleared 18 months ago when the building was consecrated by Bishop Creighton. The Rev. William C. Hamm is the present rector.

Hit Truman Program

Washington (RNS): — Use of the European Recovery Program as a "weapon of political warfare" was condemned here in a statement by E. Raymond Wilson, executive secretary of the Friends committee on national legislation. He urged this country to "divert the added billions proposed for arms into food and reconstruction materials for war-devastated lands." Wilson said that "what humanity desperately needs now are world-wide programs of healing and reconciliation. Instead of armament races which plunge nations into war let the United States call insistently for world-wide reduction of arms as proposed in the United Nations Assembly resolution of more than a year ago."

Commenting on President Truman's appeal to Congress for universal military training and the draft, Wilson declared that "if universal military training and peacetime conscription were assured roads to peace, then Europe should be the most peaceful area on earth, because Europe has had conscription over a longer time than any part of the globe."

"Neither political appeasement, armaments races, threats of war nor military rivalries," Wilson said, "can overcome our fear-ridden and war-racked world, or insure the peace."

Urge New Tax Law

New York:—The executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches has urged changes in the tax law so that the present limitation of 15% as deductible for contributions to religious, educational and charitable agencies be increased. The committee also expressed the opinion that the use of the "standard deduction" in its present form "tends to discourage the making of contributions since the individual receives the same deduction no matter whether he actually makes any contribution or not."

Extend Program

Boston:—Eighteen parishes of this city are experimenting with an extended two or three hour church school program on Sundays. According to the Rev. David R. Hunter, religious educational secretary of the diocese, "the one hour Sunday session is completely unsuited to meeting the needs of the highly secularized culture of our day. As this movement grows and as teaching increases, the work of the church with its children will be entitled to be called education."

Gets Clothing

New York:—A shipment of 665 bales of clothing and 615 bags of shoes has been sent to Yugoslavia by the Church World Service. Distribution will be under the auspices of the national religious commission of the country, which is the newly-organized liaison body between the churches and the government. The shipment is the first to be made under the terms of an agreement reached by the Yugoslav government and the World Council's department of reconstruction.

Patriarch Is Victor

Chicago:—Signal victory was scored by Eshai Mar Shimun XXIII, patriarch of the Assyrian Church, in the circuit court of Cook County on March 2 when the judge signed a decree making final his decision in the battle between the exiled Patriarch and the pretender, Zadook Yohanan, described by the Assyrians as a Judas. The decree forbids Zadook or his congregation to use the designation Nestorian, or Church of the East and in effect it bars him from using the name Mar Shimun.

Importance of the decision lies in the fact that Zadook had obtained admission to the local Church Federation and was working hard to be a representative of the Nestorians at the world assembly at Amsterdam this summer.

The story, as brought out in court, is that while the real patriarch was in a detention camp in Cyprus, it is charged that Zadook came to this country and presented himself to numerous groups of members of the Assyrian Church as their ruler and head. He obtained ordination from a Bishop Carfora whose career here has led him in and out of the police courts a number of times.

Zodook claimed that the title of "Mar Shimun" was conferred on him by the government of Iraq. Assyrians living in the U. S. say this was a recognition by the Moslem government of Iraq of his services in betraying the Christian Assyrians to their slaughterers. Patriarch Mar Shimun has received word from his people in Iraq that these murders are still going on, but his protests to the U. S. and the U. N. have been in vain, while his protests to the British government resulted in his exile. From only one quarter did he obtain sympathy — the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church as a result of the interest and activity of Bishop Sumner Walters of San Joaquin.

Now that his position has been strengthened by the decision of the Cook County court, the Patriarch plans to appeal to the Christian conscience of America to save the Christian Assyrians from complete destruction by the surrounding hostile Moslem world — a slaughter said to be condoned by both the British and American governments, because Iraq controls oil.

The Rev. Roswell Barnes, co-director of the Federal Council of Churches, has informed THE WITNESS that the Council has never recognized Zodook and added, "fact is, I have never heard of him." When the Rev. Henry Smith Leiper, American secretary of the World Council, was asked for comment, he stated that a number of people presented the claims of Zodook and urged that he represent the Assyrian Church at Amsterdam. But he said that Mar Shimun had been a member of the World Council for many years and would be a representative of the Assyrian Church this summer at Amsterdam. He also said that no recognition had been given, or would be given, to Zodook.

But one hesitates when one hears they also urge the inclusion of the English exhortation in our Prayer Book. Can they possibly mean the one in the present official English Prayer Book (1662), which is inconsistent with itself, with the rest of the service, and with their stated principles; which is reproving and grudging in tone?

Nor should the fact that the vast majority of southern churches are democratically governed be overlooked in assessing the potential strength of anti-fascist forces in the south. While a young Southern Baptist minister recently remarked, "The Church is the main bulwark of fascism in the United States, today," there is, nevertheless, a strong sense of justice and democracy among the people of the "Bible Belt."

Why, then, have all these elements not succeeded in bringing progress to the south? Why can we expect that they will soon do so? The answer lies in the absolute control of the political machinery by the successors of those who, broken by the Civil War, exchanged support by northern monopoly capital for control of their section of the country. To maintain this control they have effectively sowed suspicion and hopelessness among the great bulk of the people, have isolated the honest people from

THROUGHOUT the year, Churchmen come to us for assistance in selecting a suitable Memorial or Gift for their Church. Years of experience has enabled our staff to give your inquiries intelligent and prompt reply.

Brass and Silver Ecclesiastical Appointments, Cruets, Oil Stocks, Lavabo Bowls, Private Communion Sets, or a Book of Remembrance are popular Memorials. Also Altar Service Sets, Lecturn Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals are choice items.

Our Spring Catalog is now Available. Send for a copy.

one another, and have reduced many millions to economic and legal helplessness. It is a well-known fact that almost any southern white farmer or worker will work with almost any Negro on a man-to-man basis—until another white man comes along. Then, fearing criticism or ridicule, he adopts the pattern of white supremacy and "talks down" to or ignores the Negro or says, "I'll see you later." Many have said to me, their pastor, "I know the colored people have a right to vote, but nobody else thinks so," and it is very hard for the pastor to convince each that there are many others who share his sentiments, for they have lived with these others all their lives and never heard them express such sentiments or seen them act in such a way. The very real fear of physical violence prevents many southerners from being what they really want to be, themselves.

What, then, is going to happen in the south? When are the southern people going to find an opportunity of expressing their best selves instead of their worst?

It is already happening. Many "liberals" who have long supposed that the "common people" of the south are ignorant and bigoted and must be "educated," are beginning to align themselves with other progressive elements who have always recognized the great reservoir of democracy and decency among the people, and are more and more openly speaking out and organizing this force. There are still some, of course, who persist in maligning the masses of the southern people and in taking the self-righteous attitude that the liberals and the liberals alone know what is good for the south and that they must stoop down and raise the ignorant masses, even against the will of those same masses. The movement in support of Henry Wallace, as well as that in support of men within the Democratic Party—such as Gov. Folsom of Alabama and the Rev. Joseph A. Rabun of Georgia—who campaign on platforms almost identical to Wallace's modern-day populism, is growing steadily. The growth of these movements daily exposes the bankruptcy of the old-line politicians and their inability to stir up hatred or hysteria against any real program for security, health, education, peace, and civil rights—on a bi-racial basis. Instead, they are desperately trying to keep these elements inside their camp where they hope to be able to limit their effectiveness.

An interesting experiment in Negro-white unity is being worked out in Brunswick, Ga., where the local People's Progressive Party club (bi-racial, as is the P.P.P. throughout the south) has adopted a set of by-laws making it possible for either Negroes or whites to call for "a vote by groups" which will ensure that any measure will have a clear majority of both Negro and white groups before it can pass. Many, even outside the club, think "it's only fair." It allays the suspicions and fears of each group toward the other and prevents either being used against the other. Whether or not this particular formula is the last word, it symbolizes something that is almost here in the south—the end of divide and rule. There is a wistfulness in the way many are watching such experiments, hoping secretly that they will succeed and that it will soon be safe to get on the bandwagon. What the Southerner wants, above all, is a chance to be fair. Today, more, than at any time in history, we are determined we shall have that chance.

_Not As the World Giveth_ by Philippe Vernier, Fellowship Publications, $1.50,

Have you ever wondered how well you would stand up under a jail sentence? Philippe Vernier was never bored a minute, he explained to the translator of this volume, Edith Lovejoy Pierce, following as he did a prison schedule of prayers, singing, exercise and the writing of these meditations. One who reads this volume can understand that he was never bored nor lonely for he was never alone. To one for whom, "Love is a march forward, a succession of conquests, a series of discoveries," every day must be an adventure in abundant living, wherever it is spent.

Never before have I read one page meditations which were so complete and so convincing. Each is like a poem, in which not a word could be changed for improvement. The total impression given brings you closer to God, yet causes you to look more searchingly at your own life. If you have read treatises condemning the sin of pride, read some of these meditations in order to see pride crack. Do you seek greater humility? Find in this volume a close association with true meekness which stands close to the master.

Philippe Vernier was, and is, a pacifist. His terms in prison were a result of his refusal to take up arms. Yet this is not a book especially for pacifists, it is a volume for any one who would be a Christian. We all find that our greatest problem is to find peace in ourselves, to be Christian enough to be worthy of the things we profess. In these pages the path to that peace may be found.

Peace or Anarchy by Cord Meyer, Jr., Little, Brown & Co., $2.50.

Who could better speak on the horrors of war and the way of its avoidance than one who decided, while in a scooped-out hole on an enemy beach in the Pacific, that he would find an answer to the question if he ever came out alive? As a representative of veterans on the staff of a U. S. representative to the San Francisco conference Cord Meyer was able to pursue further his determination to find the answer to the question he had asked himself while engaged in the job of "kill or get killed." In Peace or Anarchy he gives one of the most comprehensive and well reasoned evaluations of the world armament race that is to be had anywhere. He shows with cool honesty the price of preparedness and the road to war which ends in a state of "Collective Insecurity."

Against the Baruch plan he suggests a plan for survival with which most Americans, after reading this book, will certainly agree. Unfortunately, after proving that the position of armed threat will not save the world he gives as an absolute alternative a suggestion which, in the present state of hysteria caused by militaristic propaganda cannot possibly be put into effect immediately. The attitude of people must be changed; a sense of confidence and hope must supplant the present depression of fear and fatalism which hold the world.

It is not true that a plan, however well worked out, will give confidence to men. Contrarily, only upon the basis of a confidence and hopeful conviction in the hearts of men of good will can any international plan be put into effect. Somebody must take the lead in changing the direction of men's thoughts from militarism to redemptive love based upon the brotherhood of all men. Nowhere else in the whole field of men's rational experience can such faith be found save in the belief in the redemptive love of Christ. Nowhere else in the world can the race for militaristic domination be turned save in the most powerful nation in the world, the United States.

The plain fact is that the Church in this country has, in large part, become a sounding board for the humanistic doctrine of power rather than love in world relationships, reflecting the propaganda of the American Legion with no unique Christian contribution to make to the settling of differences in a divided world. Until the Church rediscovers its universal faith in the efficacy of all embracing love, no plan or series of plans can break through the iron curtain of hate which we as a nation are building about us.

THE REV. HARRY LONGLEY
Rector of St. John's, Charleston, W. Va.

Hats off to the Church Missions House and the Department of Promotion and Publicity for the magnificent job done in putting over the Presiding Bishop's radio broadcast! The task was carried through down to the very last detail, done promptly, and with amazing efficiency. This is the kind of aggressive leadership which the Church has long sought from its headquarters in New York.

I want to congratulate the editors of THE WITNESS for a splendid job they did with the number of March 18 devoted to the Church periodical Club.

THE REV. GILLETT BECHTEL
Associate Pastor, Methodist Church, Tucson, Arizona

I want to say how much I have enjoyed the "Journeys of a Gargoyle" that a friend of mine loaned me. I showed these copies of THE WITNESS to a fellow Methodist minister and he wondered if perhaps "The Church of the Holy Advertisement" was not a Methodist Church. I told him he might take some comfort in finding that all the commercialists were not confined to the Wesleyan connection. The approach of Mr. Barrett is as refreshing as it is penetrating.

THE REV. PHILIP P. WERLEIN
Rector of St. James', Baton Rouge, La.

I have had an experience here as rector of St. James' Episcopal Church which I think I ought to share with the other clergy of the Church so that they might be on their guard.

A certain man came to see me and said that his name was Alvin Augustus Merritt. His wife's name was given as Dianne. His story was that he had been working with Stone & Webster in Virginia, but that owing to his wife's health he had to move to a warmer climate. Also, because of excessive hospital bills, he was without money. He was well dressed and gave the appearance of being a gentleman and a graduate engineer as he claimed. His suavity and bearing impressed me so favorably that I gave him financial help and by means of introductions enabled him to get a well paying position as an engineer. This firm even bought an automobile for his use. He stayed with the firm for about two weeks when he stayed home from work because of an alleged sore finger and soon after disappeared taking the car and I presume his wife with him. Since his departure a number of bad checks have turned up and the disappearance of a diamond ring which he took from a woman on the pretense of having the diamond cleaned was revealed. Both he and his wife seemed to have quite a knowledge of the Episcopal Church and even claimed that they were communicants of St. Luke's Church, Salisbury, North Carolina. However, a letter from the rector indicates that he could find no record of them.

The Episcopal clergy are urged in case this man should turn up to call in the police at once and get them to send a wire or to make a telephone call to the sheriff of East Baton Rouge Parish, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

MRS. JOHN G. JACOBS
Churchwoman of Brooklyn

Thank you very much indeed for the excellent articles on Youth and Sex Behavior by Bishop Hall of New Hampshire. It is true certainly that this subject must be dealt with by our churches and it is fine to have such a sane and yet stimulating presentation as that offered by Bishop Hall. May I take the opportunity also to thank you for the fine series of articles on the issues to come before the Lambeth Conferences. I have profited by them all.

MISS GEORGIA MARSHALL
Churchwoman of New York

The March 18 number of THE WITNESS is very good proof that the women of our Church can offer real leadership and have great ability. For this was one of the most interesting numbers of a Church paper I have ever seen and I was struck by the fact that nearly all the articles and news stories were written by women. Don't disillusion me now by telling me that they had to be re-written by men.

ANSWER: The material was presented as received, with no re-writing by editors.

A PETITION Addressed To
The Bishops of the Anglican Communion At the 1948 Lambeth Conference

WE, the undersigned, being Communicants of the Anglican Communion, recall with thankfulness the declaration of the 1930 Lambeth Conference that "war as a method of settling international disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ."

We believe that the experience of the second World War has confirmed this judgment. It has shown how war undermines general morality by lending support to the doctrine that evil means can promote righteous ends, by weakening the sense of truth and the values of family life, and by treating national rivalries as of greater significance than the unity of the universal Church. We have also observed how the traditional methods by which Christians have attempted to limit the effects of war have been swept away—a process culminating in the horror of the atomic bomb.

We therefore humbly beg Your Graces and Your Lordships to declare that all participation in war as it has now developed, even for a good cause, is contrary to the Divine Will, and to affirm that the right method of resisting evil is that of positive Christianity, as shown, not only in the witness of the Society of Friends, but also in the resistance offered to Nazism by the pastors of the Church of Norway and of outstanding Christians in Germany and other countries.

Job Restrictions Protested By Women of Church

Detailed Analysis of Women's Work in Church In Many Countries Will Be Made at Amsterdam

Greenwich, Conn.:—Church women are puzzled by some of the job restrictions imposed on them by their churches, and would like to be judged on the basis of their "ability, experience, and education," rather than on their sex, Mrs. Samuel M. Cavert, of the study department of the World Council of Churches said here.

Speaking before 50 Church women including the elected heads of women's organizations of 19 major Protestant denominations, and representatives and observers from seven foreign countries, Mrs. Cavert stated that "leading Protestant and Orthodox Church women are asking that the goal of their full citizenship in the Church shall be explicitly recognized in all quarters, and be self-consciously adopted and striven toward."

Mrs. Cavert's report to the Church women was based on a survey being conducted by the study department of the World Council of Churches on the topic "The life and work of women in the Church." The study will be presented in final form at the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam this summer, and will include a detailed analysis of women's relation to the church in 58 foreign countries.

Mrs. Cavert said the survey showed that "some progress has been made to elevate the status of women in the Church," but that many women throughout the world who "have knocked at the doors of their Churches seeking vocation, have found those doors were not opened except in a rather niggardly way."

"The result," she continued, "has been in too many quarters a caricature of the kind of woman who 'does church work' and the kind of work which she is pictured as doing. It is these results which devoted and self-conscious Church women are trying to overcome."

Turning to reports from specific countries, Mrs. Cavert said that in Denmark where a "considerable number" of trained women theologians only lack ordination to accept pastorates, only one of Denmark's nine Bishops has "unequivocally stated his willingness to ordain a woman."

The Rev. John E. Large, rector of St. Andrew's, Wilmington, Delaware, is broadcasting meditations each Sunday over a station of that city

While not as rigidly opposed to women clergy as Denmark, Churches in other European countries were pictured by Mrs. Cavert as practicing "various forms" of discrimination against women clergy. She quoted from a Swiss report which stated that "whenever a new post is created for a woman theologian or one is filled, the old doubts and objections are raised."

Mrs. Cavert emphasized, however, that women were not seeking to launch a "suffragette movement" for the ordination of women clergy, but were simply "trying to find the best means of serving the Church in whatever capacity their abilities and skills would merit."

While noting the growth in the number of women engaged in professional and volunteer Church work, Mrs. Cavert's report showed that Church workers, "especially those in local church work are apt to feel their status in the Church is low."

One report submitted by an American Protestant denomination, expressed the view that "everything is expected of a pastor's woman assistant, from doing an incompetent janitor's job to pinch-hitting for those who fall by the way," Mrs. Cavert said.

Another report from an American Church group noted that "women in Church professional work although conforming to the general heightening of standards still find themselves in most cases without any professional recognition."

Mrs. Cavert said that reports from Oriental countries stressed the "increasing difficulty" of keeping Church women workers. Quoting from the Egyptian report Mrs. Cavert said: "It is getting harder all the time to secure professional Church workers because of competition with government, armies, and business. A drastic change in salaries and pension scales is needed."

ELECTION TODAY IN MICHIGAN

Detroit:—A special convention of the diocese of Michigan is being held today for the election of a suffragan bishop. A committee to receive nominations is placing the following men before the convention: the Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, rector at Bar Harbor, Maine; the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's, Detroit, and the Rev. Gordon Matthews, executive secretary of the diocese.

At the service preceding the convention Bishop Emrich is being installed as bishop of the diocese by Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee, the president of the fifth province. The preacher at the service is Bishop Whittemore of Western Michigan. Other bishops attending are Bishop Herman Page of Northern Michigan, Bishop Horstick of Eau Claire, Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis, Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana and Bishop Sawyer of Erie.

CANTERBURY COLLEGE HAS DISASTER

Danville, Ind.:—A cyclone hit this town on March 26, doing considerable damage to Canterbury College, co-educational, liberal arts college which was taken over by the dioceses of Indianapolis and Northern Indiana two years ago. Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis, who came here the following morning, reports that the storm hit at 5:30 p.m. with people telling him that "there was a roar like a freight train running into the house." President Edgar C. Cumings was ill in bed. Hearing the roar, without time to get into the basement, he and Mrs. Cumings and their two sons, ages 4 and 6, dived under a bed. The top of the house was completely lifted off, the walls all caved in, all the windows were broken, and the home left a shambles, beyond any repair.

The western part of the town was practically wrecked. The telephone building had the front taken off and how the girls on duty escaped death is still a mystery. A church of another denomination had part of its roof destroyed. The administration building of the college was damaged but can be repaired.

The Rev. L. C. Wolcott, a teacher at Canterbury, was returning from conducting a Good Friday service in Bedford and was just entering Danville when the cyclone struck. Flying roofs, fallen trees and wires made him abandon his car and he walked, ran and crawled the half mile to his home. The roof was practically gone, all the windows were out, but his family was not hurt. They turned their home into a receiving station for the injured and kept several there for the night since the houses of several neighbors were demolished. An automobile, from a private garage some hundred yards away, was deposited on the foundations of what had been the Wolcott's barn, a mass of twisted wreckage.

Bishop Kirchhoffer wires that Canterbury needs the interest and support of the Church to repair the great damage done.

DICK MORFORD CONVICTED

Washington:—The Rev. Richard Morford, Presbyterian, who is the director of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, was convicted last week of contempt of Congress. The conviction came as the result of a citation by the Un-American Committee two years ago when Morford failed to turn over files and records, including a list of contributors.

In a statement on behalf of the Council Mr. Morford declared that the conviction gives the house committee the right to smear and pillory those Americans and American organizations whose goal it is to preserve the peace, on the only basis on which peace can be preserved: collaboration and friendship between the United States and the Soviet Union.

"We confidently expect," Mr. Morford added, "that a review of the case by a higher court will vindicate our fundamental contention that the Un-American Activities Committee acted beyond its proper scope and authority and in violation of the Constitution."

"It may sound fantastic," the statement said, "but the government's contention in the trial was that the very name of the organization was subversive because it contained the words 'American-Soviet friendship.' Another incredible argument of the government during the trial was that one of the declared purposes of the Council—'to take specific action against anti-Soviet propaganda aimed at dividing the United Nations'—necessarily meant that the Council would put forward pro-Soviet propaganda which in itself must be counted subversive. Further, the government contended that any criticism of the administration's foreign policy, no matter how mild, was to be condemned as subversive and un-American."

CHARGE BIAS FOR UMT

Washington (RNS):—Public hearings on universal training before a committee of the Senate were described by 15 leaders of national organizations as "a mere formality because the committee has already made up its mind." A number of clergymen signed the statement, including the Rev. Charles P. Boss, head of the Methodist's commission on peace, and the Rev. J. M. Dawson, recording secretary of Americans United.

COMMITTEE ON COOPERATION

Montreal:—Bishop John Dixon has announced the formation of a department of inter-faith relations for the Montreal diocese of the Church of England in Canada. It is headed by the Rev. John Gore, formerly a professor at the Pacific School of Religion, who stated that the purpose is to advance understanding among Protestants, Roman Catholics and Jews, as well as to serve the cause of Protestant unity.

EDITORIALS

Further Intrenchment

A YEAR ago, in announcing that our subscription price had to be advanced, we presented facts to show the necessity. The chief items were increased cost of paper and two wage increases over a twelve month period, to the union members who do our mechanical work. Those familiar with the printing industry in Chicago know that the unions asked for another wage increase on January first, the contention being that it was necessary to meet increased living costs. Many shops refused the request, with strikes resulting so that many publications either suspended until the dispute is settled or now issue miniature bulletins. The firm that prints THE WITNESS however met the demands so that this magazine has appeared regularly each week, with its customary size and format.

The added costs were of course passed on to us, requiring some action on our part. We are determined not to increase the subscription price further. Instead we will publish a sufficient number of sixteen-page issues in the weeks ahead to keep THE WITNESS reasonably solvent. That is, we will do what most magazines do; print the number of pages each week that are required to handle the volume of news, advertising, etc. Some weeks, therefore, you will receive a twenty-page magazine and other weeks sixteen pages, until such time as we can find a more satisfactory and permanent solution to our problem. The indulgence and cooperation of readers is urged until that day arrives.

Votes For the People

WHILE Congress debates weightier matters, the citizens of the District of Columbia are working on a bill to bring democracy at home. Today, the District is governed by Congress through a 52-man commission established in 1878. Every so often, both Congressional houses have to take time off from Russia, U.M.T., price control or labor and seriously discuss whether or not wrapped straws should be served in soda-fountains in the neighboring community. Admittedly, it is absurd and, since the District citizens can't vote, it is a negation of fundamental democracy. Now, a carefully studied District Charter Bill, receiving bipartisan support, is under discussion. It would give the District citizens the right to vote for a city council of their own choosing and exercise the same rights and responsibilities that the rest of us have. You might help by writing your senators and representatives urging passage of the Bill.

Commandment Nine

THERE can be honest differences of opinion concerning such a controversial issue as Universal Military Training. We are unalterably opposed to it, and we believe on rational, honest and realistic grounds consistent with the Christian ethic. The President of our House of Deputies, the Hon. Owen J. Roberts, is for it in no uncertain terms. Indeed, most of his time these days is spent in lobbying and testifying for it in Congress as head of the National Committee for U.M.T. In a democracy such as ours, such activity is a legitimate and even necessary component of the democratic process. Yet, there are certain standards which must be applied to the lobbying technique. One of them is honesty. In testifying on U.M.T. in Washington, Mr. Roberts, according to the daily press, said that the opposition to U.M.T. centers in the Communist Party and, for the most part, is inspired by them. Poppy-cock! Every Christian body in this country, including the Roman Catholic Church and the Federal Council of Churches, has at one time or another come out against it and most of them are still sticking to their position. Mr. Roberts knows this. American labor is unanimously against it as are such groups as the Progressive Citizens of America and the Americans for Democratic Action. Mr. Roberts knows this. And yet, adding to the hysteria of our time, he says the opposition is part of an "evil, subversive plot," thus following the standards of the daily press and a bewildered culture. The ninth commandment reads: "Thou shalt not bear false witness." We commend it to the immediate attention of the President of our House of Deputies!

"QUOTES"

IT IS reasonably certain that man knows enough science and engineering, and has the organizational skill and experience, to provide all peoples with the fundamental necessities of life and to satisfy the principal motivating desires of normal people of all races, creeds, and colors. On the other hand, it is equally uncertain that we as a people, or the peoples of other nations, have the necessary inner spiritual qualities to build a happy world of peace and good will. All students of the human scene have eventually concluded that man-made societies must always fail unless they are composed of people intellectually free and with deep spiritual convictions that place others before self.

The Work of a Bishop

by W. Appleton Lawrence

Bishop of Western Massachusetts

IN THE Form of Ordaining or Consecrating a Bishop, as set forth in our Prayer Book, a rubric provides that after the Gospel "shall follow the Nicene Creed, and after that, the Sermon." But it stops there, without mentioning the subject or purpose of the sermon, whereas in The Form and Manner of Making Deacons or of Ordering Priests, the rubric is quite different. There, it is very explicit in stating, "There shall be a sermon or exhortation, declaring the duty and office of such as come to be admitted Deacons (or Priests); how necessary that Order is in the Church of Christ, and also, how the people ought to esteem them in their Office."

I do not believe that this difference is an accident or a mistake. I believe that it is both intentional and significant. If it had been otherwise, it would certainly have been corrected over the years. The difference seems to me to grow out of the fact that although years ago, when these services were first compiled, it might have been necessary to explain and emphasize the office of priest or deacon, the office of a bishop was assumed and accepted without argument or definition. It did not need defense or protection. It stood by its own strength and merit. Its natural assumption was as simple and as commonplace as the acceptance of night and day.

I think it is too bad that in these days, when negotiations looking toward unity with other Christian bodies are in process, that there are some within our Church who seem to think that the order of bishops needs to be protected and defended by argument; that somehow it may be debased or destroyed by mere association. It would seem to me that the counsel of Gamaliel, years ago, was wise then, and is still wise and good today: "If this work (or office) be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." Such dangers as may threaten this Apostolic office would seem to me to come from within, through secular infiltration and popular pressure, rather than from without.

To check up on this possibility, I should like to have you consider the picture of the office of bishop as set forth in the Prayer Book service, and the practice and pattern which we find quite evidently expected and demanded of a bishop by the members of our Church today—consented to and in some cases perhaps even encouraged by the bishops themselves. It is my hope that by this comparison and contrast, we may all be led to think more seriously about our part and place in the making of a bishop, and perhaps change somewhat our present conception of what we should expect bishops to do and to be today.

I doubt if you who are Church members realize what a large part and place you have, not only in this consecration service itself, but also in the days that follow, in adding to or detracting from the consecration of him whom you have called to be your bishop, by the demands you make of him and the expectations you embody. I am perfectly sure that the people of a diocese can do much to make or to break the work and spirit of their bishop. But let us proceed with this comparison between these past and present conceptions.

Immediately following this sermon, two bishops will present the Bishop-elect to the Presiding Bishop and the two bishops assisting him, after which testimonials will be read, certifying to the evidence of his election, of his ordination to the diaconate and to the priesthood, and to the consents of a majority of the standing committees and bishops of our Church. This procedure makes it quite evident that a bishop rises from the ranks of the laymen to the ministry, and through the lesser ministries to the office of bishop. It makes plain, also, the fact that he is a bishop not simply of the diocese which is to be his jurisdiction, but a bishop of the Church of God, for his election is not valid or complete until a majority of the bishops and standing committees have formally given their consent.

This bit of drama, for such it is, should certainly help us to realize that the bishop is, first of all, a human being. He has in his life the same temptations that all people face. He has the human weaknesses which beset each and every one of us. He will make mistakes, just as others make mistakes. But nevertheless, because of his proven fitness and ability, he has been the choice of laymen, priests and bishops of this Church, to serve in this office of responsibility and authority.

As a measure and proof of his loyalty and catholicity, the Bishop-elect is thereupon asked to give his "Promise of conformity to the doctrine, discipline, and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church," thus bearing testimony to his immediate and worldwide responsibilities and relationships.

The Presiding Bishop then quite naturally, one might say almost inevitably, asks for the prayers of the congregation, that the bishop may be strengthened in spirit for the task and the responsibilities ahead, for it is plainly evident that it is only by the power of God and through fellowship with the faithful, that the bishop can effectually fulfill this office. By himself, he is only a human being. It is only as he is empowered by God's Holy Spirit, invested in him by the Church through her duly authorized officers, that he can be a bishop; and it is only as he is supported by the prayers and assistance of the members of the Church, that he can do the work of a bishop.

It is well for you people to remember this. Your prayers are asked at his consecration. They are needed throughout his ministry. Every time you participate in the service of Holy Communion, or Morning or Evening Prayer, you pray for the bishops of the Church. As you do so, pray for your bishop by name. Pray earnestly, sincerely, devoutly, that he may receive the blessing, guidance, and strength of the Almighty. His is a hard task, with great demands, yet with great possibilities. It is heartening for a bishop to know that his people are praying for him; that what he does, he does not in his own right nor in his own power, but in your name, and through the grace of God.

THEN, as the Prayer Book says, "In order that the congregation present may have a trial and bear witness how the Bishop is minded to behave himself in the Church of God," the Presiding Bishop proceeds to ask him eight carefully chosen and well-considered questions.

His affirmative answer to the first question gives us all assurance that he feels truly "called" to this ministration. This is important, emphasizing as it does that this office is not a mere man-made device for the better administration of the Church, but an expression of the Apostles' teaching and fellowship. It is well, however, for the congregation to notice that in none of the eight following questions which give the picture and pattern of this office as provided by this service, is any mention made of a bishop's duties as an administrator, a money-raiser, a creator of programs, a social lion or a Church dignitary. All these may have their place in life but they certainly do not need to be the work of a bishop. The very first requirement for a bishop is that he should recognize himself a servant of God and of his fellowmen.

The next two questions follow up this thought in the emphasis upon the Holy Scriptures. The bishop is to read the Scriptures. He is to seek a proper understanding of them. He is to teach nothing as necessary to eternal salvation except what may be found in the Scriptures. He is to instruct the people out of the said Scriptures. He is to teach and exhort, with wholesome doctrine, and drive away from the Church all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to God's word.

But how can a bishop do all these things if he must be in his office every morning? He cannot. He can only do it if priests and people not only refrain from making undue demands upon him, but actually expect him to devote himself chiefly to these more spiritual interests and activities. The Church of England still has a few bishops who are also scholars. Here in America, it would be hard to point out even one. It may be a hopeful sign that in the last three years, three men who have served as professors have been elected to the office of bishop. Time will tell. But I am sure of this: that this emphasis in the life and work of a bishop can only be restored by a change in the idea and expectations of the members of the Church as to the duties of a bishop.

The next two questions refer to the manner and emphasis of a bishop's living, "that he may show himself in all things an example of good works unto others." Please note the emphasis of the words used in the questions asked. He is to "deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts." He is to "live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." He is to "maintain and set forward quietness, love, and peace among all men." He is "diligently to exercise such discipline as by the authority of God's Word is committed to him."

There are hardly words which would today describe the ordinary pattern of a busy bishop's life. These several requirements might, it seems to me, be summarized into, "simplicity, serenity, and spiritual authority." But do people expect bishops to be simple, to live simply? Again, it may be a hopeful sign that by the pressure of circumstances, English bishops are being compelled to leave their palaces. Here in America, I can name several bishops who would be far happier, I am sure, and, I think, more effective, if they were allowed to live more simply, with less formal entertainment, less insistent demands to grace this occasion or to serve as "window-dressing" at that affair. Much too often, bishops are invited and expected to play the part of a Church dignitary, rather than to serve as the chief shepherd of the flock; to be a "man among men," rather than a man of God.

As for serenity. I admit my surprise when I was told that my predecessor had had no telephone in his office, and could only be reached through a message at home; but after ten years as a bishop, I know from bitter experience that a telephone and serenity do not easily mix; and now I am trying to discover a formula which will combine easy availability for real needs, with proper protection from petty interruptions. If your bishop is to keep his consecration promises, he must have your help in this.

As for authority. There is in the world today, it is true, a trend towards authority, but unfortunately it is a type of authority which is imposed from without,—often an arbitrary authority of a formal and ecclesiastical variety, almost always of man's making and man's enforcement,—rather than arising from within. The discipline and authority referred to in this service is the kind of authority shown by Jesus, when it was remarked that he taught them as "one having authority, and not as the scribes." It is a spiritual authority which must ultimately rest in the laws and purposes of God. It is the authority of truth, based on right, not on force. The Church in her historic form and present organization (of which all of you are a part), is the conserver of this authority. The bishops are charged with the responsibility of its interpretation and application.

IN THE next question, the bishop-elect is asked if he will be faithful "in ordaining, or laying hands upon others"—I imagine, in confirmation as well as in ordination. Here, again, is an emphasis about which many have been lax, both in providing candidates of the best quality for the ministry, as well as in setting proper standards for confirmation.

There is a great and critical shortage in the ministry of our Church today; but the Church needs better men even more than she needs greater numbers. Candidates for the ministry must inevitably come from the laity. That they have not been forthcoming should be a matter of deep concern to all of us. Do you know how many clergymen your parish has supplied in the past 25 years? Then compare that with the number your parish asked from the Church during that period? How is it with the diocese as a whole? And then, how about confirmation? How many persons have you personally brought to confirmation in the last ten years? Clergymen are not the only ones charged with this responsibility. Every Christian is called to bear witness to his faith. In the diocese of Dornakal, India, no one can be confirmed until he has brought someone else to baptism. I had a woman in one of my parishes who brought at least one candidate to confirmation every year. The care which a bishop can use in laying hands upon others is largely determined by the quantity and quality of those who are presented to him. This is as much your responsibility as his.

In the last question, the bishop-elect is asked if he will show himself gentle, and be merciful to poor and needy people, and to all strangers destitute of help. It is very unfortunate, I think, that the ordinary bishop's life usually does not deal much with such people. His dealings for the most part are with the influential, the important, the respectable, and well-to-do, but it need not be so. There are opportunities in state hospitals and other public institutions, in jails and prisons, on the back roads and in city slums, where a bishop's visit might be unexpected, but, from that very fact, all the more welcome. A bishop's jurisdiction includes not simply the men and women whose names are upon the parish records. He is also the shepherd—perhaps especially the shepherd—of the poor and the needy, the lost and the lonely, the unchurched, and the "forgotten man." That is, according to the picture and pattern of the Prayer Book service.

What a bishop is called to be and do, according to the questions of the Prayer Book, and what a bishop actually is and does in most dioceses today, are, I am sure you will agree, not one and the same. But they can be much more closely approximated if you will help to make them so.

Following these questions, the Presiding Bishop leads in prayer that the bishop-elect may have strength and power to perform the duties of his office. He is then clothed with the rest of his Episcopal habit, and kneels in humble supplication as the Veni, Creator Spiritus is sung antiphonally. Then the Presiding Bishop, together with the other bishops present, lay their hands upon the head of the bishop-elect, while the Presiding Bishop says the sentence of consecration, in which he charges the bishop to stir up the grace of God which is given him by the imposition of hands, "for God hath not given us the spirit of fear but of power and of love and soberness." Notice, please, the word "us"—that the Holy Spirit is a corporate, not an individual, gift. Then the Presiding Bishop delivers the Bible, telling him to think upon the things contained in this Book, and "be to the flock of Christ, a shepherd, not a wolf; to feed them, not devour them; to hold up the weak, heal the sick, bind up the broken, bring again the outcasts, seek the lost." It is a solemn and significant moment. The Church, represented by her laity and ministry, through her bishops, serves as the means and channel of God's Holy Spirit to empower a bishop in the Church of God. It is an act in which each of us has part and place, as a member of the body of Christ; but it conveys a power greater than the sum total of all human action, in that it proceeds from God himself.

The natural, one might almost say, inevitable, result is a spontaneous desire to give, to serve, to go out and tell others the "good news" and spread the grace and power of God. So, in keeping with this sentiment and spirit, the offering follows. Surely this offering today will be far more meaningful than most. You will place upon the alms basin not only your offering of this world's goods, but also, figuratively speaking, you will give yourself in order that, later on, after the alms have been presented, and "the full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation and satisfaction" has been offered at the altar, the words of the celebrant, "and here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies," may indeed be your words, and you will back up those words with action in the days ahead.

The consecration of a Bishop ought also to be the consecration of the priests and people of the diocese. It is only as both consecrate themselves to God, that much of significance in the work and worship of God can be accomplished. There is tension in the world today—tension in the life of each of us. The world is making demands upon us. A spirit of secularization has entered into the life and work of the Church. I hope that what this service may do for all of us is to make us think not so much of what the world demands of us, as of what God expects of us, and of what we owe to him.

Is It True What They Say About Henry?

By
C. E. BERGER
Rector of St. Anne's, Annapolis

THE Episcopal Church wastes no love on Henry the 8th of England, but because we are frequently maligned through inaccurate historical references regarding his connection with the English Reformation, we must from time to time set the record straight.

The popular libel "Because Henry the Eighth wanted a divorce he started the Episcopal Church," is utterly false. He didn't want a divorce, but an annulment, and he was born about 1450 years too late to "start" the Church. Henry was instrumental in separating the Church of England from the power of the pope, but after his death, his work was undone by his daughter, Queen Mary. The Church was restored to papal power and Parliament received papal absolution for its acts. With all of Henry's work undone, how could it be said that he started the Episcopal Church?

Ultimate separation of the Church of England (of which the Episcopal Church is a daughter) from the pope came during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. She revived certain Parliamentary acts of her predecessors. When she had contributed her part to the English Reformation, however, the Church of England still used the same buildings, had the same ministry, the same faith, and the same service (with slight alterations) that it always had had before. To say that Queen Elizabeth started the Church of England or that her father did is, therefore, like saying that an overhauled automobile is brand new.

Although he ended his days as a scoundrel, Henry the Eighth was not always in disfavor with people and pope. As Duke of York, he did not expect to become king. This prompted many to say he should be groomed for a career in the Church, since as a youth he was outstandingly pious, learned in things religious and popular with the people in general. He wrote a book against Martin Luther (who launched the Reformation), and this so pleased the pope that the latter gave Henry the title "Defender of the Faith." It is interesting that the most maligned of English Kings should have been the recipient of this papal honor.

Travels of a Gargoyle

By
THOMAS V. BARRETT
Secretary of College Work of the National Council

ONE of my friends who is a top-drawer operator on a kind of intermediate level believes that if I continue my survey on the grass-root level, something vital may happen on the national level; something really challenging.

On my spring trip this year I stopped at Bloomtown to visit the Rev. Thomas E. Wangelist. Wangelist was three times my size and had muscles all over him. I thought he might have helped me with my three suitcases; it would have been a nice local-level gesture. But Wangelist had other matters in mind. He was brimming with vitality, though it was only six a.m.

"Good morning, good morning," he boomed, leading me to a Ford sedan. "My, it's good to be up and about this lovely morning—and so good to see you." He clapped me on the back cheerfully as he opened the door of his car; the blow sent me hurtling into the tonneau on top of an old inner tube, sixteen copies of "The Nonchurchman," and a tricycle. I climbed out after my luggage, and tried to hide my natural, early-morning gloom.

"I see you've been distributing religious literature," I said.

"Oh yes," he replied, watching me struggle with the suitcases, "I always carry some with me. But nothing will save men today except man-to-man evangelism. We need to witness our faith publicly, don't you think?"

His eyes glittered with eagerness to be off witnessing somewhere.

"We need more personal conversion," he went on. "Commitment; our religion has no buoyancy; we don't pray enough."

"I guess you're right," I said, trying to pray as we rounded a corner buoyantly.

"We pray in church, but do we go out and ask people to pray with us?" He glittered at me so brightly I had to squint my eyes. "How long since you prayed with your secretary?"

"Months," I confessed gloomily, "even years. On the national level we're not oriented to the life of prayer. But she types very well, and . . ."

"As I was saying," Wangelist went on radiantly, "personal evangelism is the cure for the world's troubles. Spiritual Resuscitation is the key-note for our time. A Prayer a Day keeps Communism Away. Don't you think we owe a lot to the Booktermites?"

"Probably so," I answered casually, gazing out the window at the unresuscitated face of a policeman, "but I could wish they were a little more bookish."

"We've had too much intellectualism," glittered Wangelist. "You must meet Joe Brazil. Unlettered, but he does God's will in the baggage office at the depot. If only more people would witness publicly to God as Joe does. He's thoroughly reborn." Wangelist looked at me till I felt pretty sodden. Only once-born I guess; I didn't seem to have any glitter at all.

"What do you think of Staasen?" I asked sliding the question edgewise through the glitter.

"If we could only get our statesmen to ask the Master's guidance. . . ." Wangelist began.

"How do you know they don't?" I interrupted.

"They don't witness publicly to their conviction," he objected.

"I was always under the impression," I said, feeling somewhat hurt about the suitcase episode, "that a man's work, and how he does it, is a sort of public witness."

Wangelist looked as if he hadn't heard me, so I brooded for awhile silently, trying to work up some glitter. We had breakfast and went around to the Parish House. Wangelist said he and the staff always had morning prayers, and he would be glad to have me join them.

"This morning we are having our devotional time in the organ chamber," he went on smiling happily. "The organ tuner is here; we would like to draw him into our little circle."

"What if he would prefer to be left alone with his tuning problem?" I asked, loathe to disturb a man at work.

"We must give him an opportunity to commit himself; to make his surrender," Wangelist said.

I wasn't quite habituated to Wangelist's orientation. As I followed the staff to the organ chamber I couldn't help recalling a piece of verse I read somewhere,

"Beware of coming too much to the surface
And using for apparel what was meant
To be the curtain of the inmost soul."

Probably just a once-born poet.

I knelt down over a six-foot piccolo stop, while the organ tuner banged around a diapason. The prayer service was sincere and intimate; I hadn't got so intimate with myself for years. But the tuner didn't pay much attention, far as I could see. Obviously not interested in second birth. The fellow lacked glitter.

During lunch we had a discussion about the evangelism college students were doing. I said I thought they should spend their time studying, and Wangelist thought they'd all probably had enough brain work and ought to be seeking the lost, and confessing their spiritual resuscitation. As the day wore on I began to get the feel of Wangelist's approach. It was simple once I got it. It's mainly a matter of forgetting intellectual dilemmas, and the problems of society, and the modesty of the soul, and just surrendering yourself to the Lord especially when there are lots of people around so you feel like Cornwallis at Yorktown.

Before I left, Wangelist and I prayed all over the place, and witnessed in front of a clerk in a cigar store, and three men painting a lamp post. I was getting more buoyant by the hour. Wangelist dug up Joe Brazil when we got to the station. Joe said he'd check my suitcases. He preached me a short vital sermon, and lost himself so completely in his witnessing that he put two suitcases on the wrong train. But he was cheerful about it and told me not to worry about possessions. "Lay not up for yourself treasures on earth," was the way he put it. He took the other suitcase and hurled it into a truck twelve feet away. The suitcase broke and released my household equipment.

"Change and decay in all around I see," chanted Joe.

"Shall we pray for guidance?" asked Wangelist.

I gave Joe a tip which he put in a portable alms box hanging from his belt. I got on the train with a glittering smile of farewell.

"A prayer a day. . . ." I reminded Wangelist, and waved good-bye. Taking out my Bible for guidance, I opened it. Never seem to strike a relevant passage.

"And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men . . . but thou when thou prayest, enter into thy closet. . . ."

That would never do in an atomic age. I went into the smoking room at the end of the car. Some men were talking about the economic situation. Apparently wheat or something had dropped somewhere.

"It's all the fault of this darned administration," one man said.

I knelt down under a wash-basin and let my eyes glitter up at them,

"Shall we pray about it?" I asked smiling buoyantly.

The Society of Friends Resents Charge of Owen Roberts

Other Religious Groups Testify on Universal Military Training Before Senate Committee

Edited by Sara Dill

Philadelphia:—A charge by the President of the House of Deputies of the Episcopal Church that the "organized core of opposition to universal military training centers in the Communist Party" was strongly resented at the annual meeting of the Society of Friends (Quakers) meeting here. The statement was made by Owen J. Roberts, former Supreme Court Justice, who was elected head of the House of Deputies at the Philadelphia General Convention and thus became the first layman to hold the office.

Richmond P. Miller, executive secretary of the Friends' central bureau, said that "we resent such statements," while Mrs. Esther Holmes Jones, chairman on a committee to draft a resolution on the international situation which is being sent to President Truman, declared that "Friends consider themselves part of the 'organized core' in this issue. Sharing with us are a number of official bodies and boards of the Catholic and many Protestant Churches, including Methodist, Presbyterian and Lutheran."

Also in Washington, where representatives of a number of Churches testified before a committee of the Senate on the U.M.T. bill, a number spoke feelingly about Justice Roberts' remark.

Paul Goering, Washington representative of the Mennonite Central Committee, told the Senate Committee on Armed Services, that Roberts' statement was an indirect attack upon his denomination's 400-year-old opposition to all forms of peacetime conscription.

He added that the remark was "likely to prove damaging to the anti-UMT cause and might frighten those who have to date held views opposing the measure."

Ora Houston, of the Church of the Brethren Service Committee, said he believed Congressional leaders would not be unduly influenced by Roberts' statement.

"As I view the situation," he said, "Congressmen who have not decided finally on their personal position with respect to UMT are looking to the grass roots for their cues."

At Baptist headquarters here, Roberts' view was labelled a "loose generalization."

The Rev. Albert Render, the rector of St. Mark's, Havre, Montana, in a moment of relaxation

Hits Foreign Policy

New York:—Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam charged March 30th in an address here before 800 persons that President Truman has not done everything to avert war with Russia and urged that "every possible step be taken that can keep this catastrophe from mankind." He warned that "a foreign policy based upon the erroneous assumption that an ideology can be contained by force leaves the initiative in Communist hands, directs our attention to the building up of military might, and creates the impression that war is inevitable."

Bishop Oxnam urged that the U.S. invite Stalin to conference, "to sit at the table and there seek to work out some understanding that will avert war." He suggested that the President should "send a delegation of the best minds of this nation to that conference, tough minds, democratic minds, religious minds."

"If we made such an effort," he said, "and gave it proper publicity throughout the earth, and the peoples of the world knew that the United States of America, facing the threat of war, had done all in its power to avert it, that result alone would justify the conference. But I believe greater results might follow."

He also proposed that delegations representing religion, science, art, labor, education, business should go to Russia at once to confer with similar representatives there, "solely for the purpose of coming to understand each other," and that similar delegations should come here. Bishop Oxnam urged the President to send a delegation of religious leaders to confer with church leaders of the world. This delegation would express to them the President's "sincere desire for peace and his prayer that religious leaders everywhere may seek to develop the public opinion essential to peace."

The Methodist leader questioned whether the President has made "full use" of the United Nations. He urged Mr. Truman to instigate the summoning of a special UN session "to present the whole issue and there to seek solution." Declaring that "the Church has a stake in all this," the bishop stressed that "the churchman must speak; the churchman must act to the end that this nation takes every possible step to avert war, to build democracy, to maintain peace."

Also speaking at the luncheon, which was given in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Oxnam, were Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill and the Rev. Ralph Sockman, pastor of Christ Methodist Church, New York.

$348,807, for immediate use, leaving out $5,000 as the fund's balance. This allocation was of money received since the beginning of 1948, the largest part since February 29, when Bishop Sherrill's radio appeal was made.

Most of the undesignated money was allocated through Church World Service, for its relief program which averages 50% to Asia and 50% through the Churches of Europe. Included are such items as aid for the Finnish Orthodox Church, for the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, for the Serbian Theological Seminary (for displaced persons) at Dorchester College, in England, and the emergency fund of the American Bible Society which is filling vast demands for Bibles for the use of Churches in Finland, Greece, the Philippines, China, Russia, replacing Bibles destroyed in the war.

Other uses being made of money contributed by Episcopal Church people include the shipment of clothing, food, agricultural supplies, and the program for displaced persons.

Clergy Salaries

New York:—A higher proportion of parish income goes towards the rector's stipend in the case of smaller parishes than is true of larger parishes. This fact is brought out in a study just published by The Church Pension Fund. Parishes with annual income of $3,000 to $3,500 pay out about 57% of this as stipend to their rectors, on the average. Parishes with $25,000 to $30,000 income apply about 20% as stipend.

Graphs are given in the leaflet relating the size of parishes and missions to the stipends they pay. The size is measured by two yardsticks, namely the number of communicants and the annual income. Data for 1,966 congregations were used, ranging in size up to communicant groups of 1,500 people and up to annual income of $40,000. Only congregations served by one clergyman were studied. The sample was considered a definitive one for the purpose.

The Pension Fund in 1947 published a fairly complete study of the ecclesiastical income (salaries) of clergymen. This new study focuses on the congregation as a unit, and what it applies as stipend, rather than on the clergyman and what his total stipend, often from several different sources, may be.

Compensation of $3,500 a year, including rectory rental allowance of one-sixth of the cash salary, is typical of what parishes with 300 to 400 communicants and parishes with $7,500 to $10,000 annual income pay their rectors, according to the report. The earlier study brought out that the average stipend of the whole group of active clergy runs about $3,450 a year.

To Meet Methodists

Boston:—Presiding Bishop Sherrill is to speak at the quadrennial general conference of the Methodist Church when it meets here, April 28-May 9. Trinity Church also is to be loaned to the Methodists for a service of Holy Communion. Top speakers during the sessions are to be John Foster Dulles, Congressman Walter H. Judd, who is an ardent sponsor of the nationalist government of China, the Rev. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptists. Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York is to deliver the episcopal address which presents the composite convictions of all the Methodist bishops, similar to a pastoral of the Episcopal bishops.

About 800 elected delegates, representing 150 annual conferences, 66 bishops and 92 overseas delegates are expected to attend the conference.

Good Friday

Buffalo (RNS):—Nearly 2,000 stores, offices and plants gave employees time off Good Friday to attend church services. At the request of Protestant and Roman Catholic leaders, many business places closed during the three-hour period. Cooperation in the interfaith effort was urged by the committee for the more reverent observance of Good Friday, composed of Protestant and Catholic clergymen and laymen. Started four years ago, the observance has received increased backing each year and is one of the most effective channels of interfaith cooperation in this city.

Business places that agree to participate are given posters for display purposes. The posters bear the inscription, "Attend Church Good Friday — A Worshipping Community — We will close 12 to 3 p.m., Good Friday."

made in a letter addressed to Attorney General Tom Clark by Rev. W. H. Jernagin, director of the Washington bureau of the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches of America. Jernagin declared the situation "outranks anything that has happened to my people in many years." He asserted that the campaign "is being deliberately played down by the newspapers in most instances and generally is not even treated by the press at all."

"The majority of these cases appear to involve Negro veterans, and generally in those communities where Negro veterans and other citizens have dared to speak out, thus facing the mob and possible lynching," Jernagin said. He added that a "factual report" in his possession spoke of "two lynchings and two near-lynchings involving Negro veterans within the last three months, one of them having taken place last month."

"It is my feeling," his letter to Clark continued, "that this is a deliberate drive being conducted by southern white leaders to discourage passage of Civil Rights legislation, including the anti-lynching bill, which has been advocated by the President and you as attorney general of the United States."

Jernagin urged Clark to act immediately "to bring the full weight of your office and the department of justice to investigate and bring to justice those responsible for these denials of civil liberties to Negro citizens in the South. I do not believe that our government can long tolerate a situation which comes close to being the same as that we cry out against in the so-called police states of Europe."

Deportations Condemned

New York:—Several church people are among the fifty or so persons to sign a letter addressed to President Truman, protesting against the arrest and proposed deportation of aliens who have been active in the labor movement and the Communist party. The letter gives the opinion that "the attempted deportation of non-citizens on the ground of political opinions is a violation of the Constitution of the United States and of the Bill of Rights. The activities of the justice department in carrying out these arrests, and their attendant newspaper publicity, are therefore political in character and not legal. We condemn these arrests as endangering American democracy and the rights of all of us, citizens as well as non-citizens, since they provoke hysteria and discrimination. We are alarmed by the attempt that is thus being made by the attorney general of the United States to use his high office to further political persecution and for partisan political purposes."

Church people to sign the letter were Miss Sarah Cleghorn of Philadelphia; Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley; President Benjamin E. Mays of Morehouse College and vice-president of the Federal Council of Churches; the Rev. Lee H. Ball, New York Methodist; Bishop G. E. Curry of Jacksonville, Fla.; Rev. Armand Guerrero of Chicago.

Peace in Hungary

Budapest (RNS):—Hope for more friendly relations between Church and state in Hungary was expressed by speakers at Lutheran gatherings here attended by the nation's top-ranking political leaders. Presiding at services in the Central Lutheran church commemorating the centenary of Hungarian independence, Bishop Bela Kapi, president of the Hungarian Lutheran synod, read a declaration calling for an end to "regrettable tension" between Church and state.

"We are anxious that this tension should disappear," the declaration stated, "and appeal to the government to start negotiations toward this end as soon as possible."

The congregation who heard this appeal included President Zoltan

Year of Destiny 1948

Many vital, worldwide issues, will be resolved this year and influence the entire earth for generations.

Things cannot stand still in Europe or in the Orient—nor can basic issues remain status quo here in America.

There are enheartening signs that Freedom may be revived and vouchsafed. That would give hope and succor to most else that matters.

What happens in America will be a primary factor in what happens everywhere else. This is a year in which every eligible citizen should share the responsibilities of decision at the elections.

But millions of eligibles are not even registered! Fifteen thousand pastors, banded together through Spiritual Mobilization purpose to get 5 million new voters registered and to the poles. We believe that to be a spiritual service in the interest of spiritual freedom—to preserve the democratic process and to undergird the dignity of man against the "New Leviathan" state.

Every minister who reads these words should write for our tracts and further information. There is no obligation. We need your help. Thousands are enlisting each month. Will YOU help us help save Freedom in the world during this year of epochal importance?

Tildy of Hungary. Communist Premier Louis Dinnyes was the "star" guest at services conducted by Bishop Louis Ordass to mark the reopening of a Budapest Lutheran church rebuilt through a state grant after having been destroyed during the war. He told the congregation the Church ought to use its "highly respected" influence "to ensure in conformity with the Gospel, that the working people of Hungary would enjoy more rights after their many sufferings."

Meanwhile, the Communist newspaper Szabad Nep (Free People) paid unusual tribute to the Hungarian Lutheran Church and especially to the declaration read by Bishop Bela Kapi. It said that the Lutherans' "positive attitude and sincere good will" toward Hungarian democracy "evoked the sympathy of followers of other churches."

Spare Jerusalem

London (RNS):—A demand that Jerusalem and its surrounding towns and villages be "kept inviolate" in the present Arab-Jewish conflict was made in a joint appeal here by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, Britain's top-ranking Anglican leaders.

"Is it impossible that now at this late hour, but still before it is too late," the appeal asked, "that all parties to the conflict shall determine that this area shall be kept inviolate till it can be handed over at the earliest possible moment to the Trusteeship Council?"

"Let the future of the rest of the country be fought out, if it must be, elsewhere," the appeal added, "but not in the Holy City."

Declaring that decision in the matter must come from within Palestine and that it rests primarily with political leaders, the archbishops urged at the same time that religious leaders of the Christian, Moslem and Jewish faiths "demand, in the name of the three religions, and of the God to whom they all look, a holy peace in Jerusalem."

It was announced that Dayan Harris M. Lazarus, Acting Chief Rabbi of Britain, has given his "unreserved" support to the archbishops' joint appeal.

THE WITNESS has presented vital facts about China. With our government now prepared to give added billions to support civil war in that country I hope that you may continue to do so. I have just read a statement by Mr. Edgar Snow, an authority on the Far East, who says that "there is nothing more stupid on the record of our foreign policy than present American support for the dictatorship of Chiang Kai-shek, in war against the Chinese people. Nothing less than a major American military operation, carried out by American troops and costing billions of dollars, to end in making a colony of China, can save this hopelessly corrupt regime. Even General Marshall knows that. Then why are we wasting more millions on a cause we know is indefensible? Is it the road toward world leadership in peace and progress to line the pockets of Chinese gangsters, profiteers and black market operators? We must stop adding to the misery of people who never did us any harm or we shall surely suffer for it in a day of reckoning."

We need to heed these words of Mr. Snow.

MISS WINIFRED E. HULBERT
Churchwoman of Westwood, Mass.

Being unable to attend the Maundy Thursday celebration of the Lord's Supper, I tuned the radio hoping to find music other than saxophone swing. Here is what I picked up in five minutes in a tour of the dial.

"Mr. Keen, I know Isabel was murdered. Jim Stanner was standing right by."

"Now you wait right here in the living room"—in Gracie's best baby-talk—"and don't let my husband see you."

"Mr. Queen"—man's voice shaking with fright—"I've never had part in a bank robbery before. I'll lead you right to him." Knocking and a stern voice demanding, "Open in the name of the law."

"Now Mr. Barnes, what talent brings you to our unusual musical show?" Mr. Barnes answers, "I make musical instruments out of plumbing fixtures."

Jazz music at a dozen stations, most of them jostling and blurring each other, drowning out another half dozen speakers all wanting to be heard. A faint, far-off orchestra, like a breath from the south, playing Mendelssohn's Spring Song, which the jazz obliterates.

Gracie's husband has evidently discovered the other man. "I'll tear him to bits. He's working my territory." A wild shriek. A shout, "Go out and tear that wolf to pieces, Bill."

A sponsor is talking fast about "the slacks that give the finishing touch to the costume" and a hair's-breadth further on the dial I learn that "Among thousands of brands, people flock to our coffee."

Mr. Queen apparently has discovered a body. "Look where his hand touched the wire. Mingo's been dead two days. Somebody else robbed the postoffice."

Another voice: "Every minute an accident happens on some highway in this country. Start being accident-conscious today."

A five-minute news summary: more money needed for France; meat packers strike and pickets are arrested; the coal stoppage; Senator Somebody insists that the oleomargarine bill will be re-introduced; a constitutional amendment for something or other.

Much clapping, a burst of so-called music, a jovial voice: "Introducing Bugs Bunny. Mamma, mamma, I just ran in to remind you that kids love Chuckles . . ."

Another burst of sound, frantic clapping, and a cheer-leader pep-boy announcing, "Nine o'clock. Time for Willy Piper."

Finally, at the bottom of the dial, a super-Sinatra croons intimately, "Love is funny, or it's sad; or it's quiet, or it's mad; it's a good thing, or it's bad . . ."

All this during the hour which commemorates the Last Supper, after which love in human form prepared himself for the immortal sacrifice. Is this the "Voice of America" on whose decisions in the coming hours rests the fate of nations?

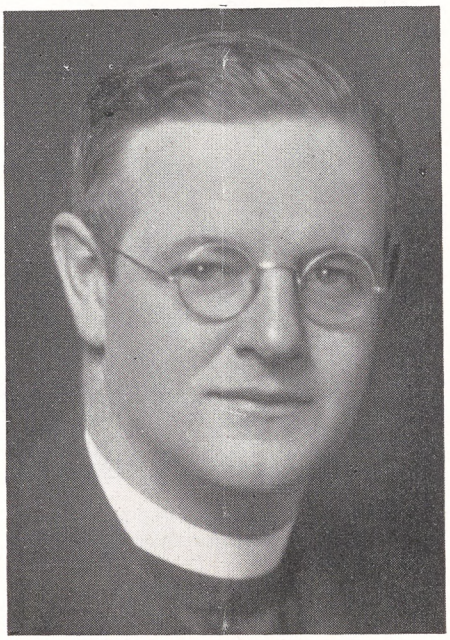
Freedom of Pulpit Is Defended By J. Howard Melish



The Wife of a Vestryman Calls in the Press For a Conference Unauthorized by the Board

By W. B. Spofford

Brooklyn:—What started out to be an inside-the-family controversy at Holy Trinity Church here threatens to become an international incident, due primarily to the inability of the wife of a vestryman to resist the temptation to talk. The rector and associate rector are the Rev. J. Howard Melish and the Rev. William Melish, father and son. The senior Melish, 74 and vigorous, has been rector for 44 years and during all this time has spoken his piece forthrightly, particularly in the fields of social action.

However, in spite of this tradition for liberalism of which the parish has always been justly proud, the current American jitters has had its effect upon at least that part of the parish that comprises the vestry. For some time these men have objected to the "outside activities" of the younger Melish, particularly his chairmanship of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship. So they prepared a letter rebuking him, dated March 15, which they figured on mailing to members of the parish, hoping to stir up enough opposition to the young clergyman to force his resignation. As first planned, this letter was to go out the same day as the Easter letter, also signed by the vestry, in which they stressed a generous offering. However Rector Melish was of the opinion that letters of such a divergent nature would hardly be conducive to a large offering (which the parish received incidentally) and so advised against it. In doing so he stated that he had no objection to a "referendum" on his son's extra-parochial activities after Easter, providing it went to those on the parish rolls who were qualified voters.

However this didn't suit the vestry, so they obtained names elsewhere when the parish list was refused them by the rector, and their letter of March 15 was mailed on the 30th. It called the activities of the younger Melish "most detrimental to the interests of Holy Trinity Church" and "We should appreciate your views," with a ballot and stamp addressed envelope enclosed to facilitate the "yes" or "no" vote.

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., died of a heart attack on April 5. He was fifty years old. Prior to becoming rector of this downtown parish in 1942, he served from 1938 as vice-president of the National Council. He has previously been rector of Grace and Holy Trinity, Richmond, and of St. Paul's, Chattanooga.

He was a trustee of the Virginia Seminary and was president of the Episcopal Service for Youth. He was also honorary canon of Washington Cathedral, a member of the executive council of the diocese and chairman of the department of social relations of the diocese.

It was at this juncture that Mrs. Bruce Bromley, wife of one of the nine vestrymen, grabbed the headlines. Being a member of the civil service commission of the city, she knows her way around. She called a press conference, after the manner of bigshots at the U.N. She did it on her own, according to vestrymen I was able to reach by phone. One stated simply that Mrs. Bromley acted only for herself. Another said: "No such press conference was authorized by the vestry, that I can assure you. Mrs. Bromley is the wife of a prominent vestryman so I assume that he knew about it. Anyhow the vestry did not authorize it." I got the impression that these men would have been just as well pleased if Mrs. Bromley had kept quiet and let the vestry handle the matter in their own way, though of course, things being as they are, they did not put it in so many words.

To the newsmen Mrs. Bromley branded the younger Melish as a "half-baked follower of a half-baked Henry Wallace" and stressed that she was "tired of hearing about our 'free pulpit.' It is free only for the Melishes. Our governing body, the vestry, is even less free than the members of the church. I am glad that our vestry at long last has seen fit to ask for the opinion of our membership. Our ministers have never asked for it."

Rector J. Howard Melish, characteristically, did not wait for any seventh inning before going to bat. The very next day, March 31, parishioners received a letter from him in which he urged them to express their minds on the matter.

"We have three little boys in our family," he wrote, "and we do not propose, God helping us, to see them or your sons, killed in the next war. If there is to be a next war it will be with Russia. The time to prevent that war is now. We are for honorable understanding — not for appeasement, nor for getting tough with Russia. The Russian people and the American people need not go to war with each other if their leaders will seek peace and understanding."

In regard to the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, of which the younger Melish is chairman, the letter pointed out that "six Episcopal bishops, including the Presiding Bishop, are continuing to endorse this organization and to support it in its work for peace. The things which this organization has been advocating are things which have behind them a very considerable measure of Church support."

The rector then went on to say: "I believe in the sense of fairness of all our people. This Sunday I shall have completed my 44th year in this parish. You know the policies for which I have consistently stood, and that you have consistently supported. Together we have maintained a free church, where its ministers have had the right to say what they believed in their hearts to be true. We have never asked for agreement on specific issues. We have asked for freedom. Together we have stood for peace, based on honorable dealings between all people. I cannot treat these two issues (freedom and peace) lightly. Nor can I believe, after these 44 years, that you can treat them lightly either."

The following Sunday, April 4, Rector Melish exercised that pulpit freedom he advocates. The occasion was his 44th anniversary as rector and he briefly told the story of the parish and what it had always stood for. His punch line was this: "A clergyman is not an employee of the church and this parish has never limited its ministers to the common round of parochial duties. It has left them free to serve the larger community. A pulpit that merely utters things that everybody accepts is an absurdity. The real test of freedom is disagreement, and very radical disagreements at that."

The sermon was preached before one of the largest congregations to attend Holy Trinity on an ordinary Sunday for a long time. After the service a reporter asked twelve persons for their opinions on the action of the vestry. None of them supported the vestrymen in their criticism of the associate rector. Their general point of view was expressed by Mr. Charles Julin who has been a member of the parish for 30 years: "My personal view of the situation is this: Mr. Melish is here on Sunday to conduct service. What he does during the week is his own business and it is perfectly all right with me."

Whether members of the parish generally will take the same view on the ballots they are returning to the clerk of the vestry remains to be seen. We'll know, presumably, on April 19 when the vestry holds its next meeting.

BISHOP NASH HECKLED

Boston:—Bishop Norman B. Nash of Massachusetts was heckled by a legislator at a hearing on a birth control bill at the State House here on March 30th. He was reading a statement urging approval of the initiative petition to legalize birth control in the state when he was interrupted by Representative J. F.

Bishop Norman Nash of Massachusetts speaks for birth control bill

Diniz of New Bedford, who accused the Bishop of trying to "glorify" himself. When Mr. Diniz continued to speak, Bishop Nash took a seat with the remark: "If the gentleman has the floor, I'll rest."

The audience at the hearing hissed Diniz, whereupon Senator Ralph W. Hahar, Republican and chairman of the committee, apologized for the incident by stating that the committee regretted the treatment the Bishop had received from a committee member, whereupon Bishop Nash resumed the reading of his statement. He declared that the present state law discriminated in favor of Roman Catholic morality and violated the freedom of conscience of Protestants, Jews and other non-Catholics. The birth control bill, he declared, "represents our rightful claim to that freedom, and in no least degree violates others' freedom. We therefore demand this conscientious freedom as our right, and shall not rest until we achieve it."

The controversy over the proposed bill, which is bitterly opposed by the Roman Catholic Church, has resulted in a number of disturbances at the hearings.

CONSECRATION OF DEAN BLOY

Los Angeles:—Dean Francis E. I. Bloy will be consecrated bishop of Los Angeles at St. Paul's Cathedral here on April 21. Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, former presiding bishop, will be consecrator, with Bishop Parsons and Bishop Robert Gooden the co-consecrators. Bishop Lewis of Nevada and Bishop Clark of Utah are to be the presentors; Bishop Block of California will read the litany and Bishop Avery Mason of Dallas will preach.

RUSSELL HUBBARD IS ELECTED

Detroit—The Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, rector of St. Saviour's, Bar Harbor, Maine, was elected Suffragan Bishop of the diocese of Michigan at a special convention here on April 8th. He was elected on the 2nd ballot. Mr. Hubbard, 45, is a graduate of Harvard and Virginia Seminary and did graduate work at Cambridge University, England. He was assistant at St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.; rector at Vermillion, S. D., and was rector of St. Martin's, Providence from 1932 to 1941.

GLENN RETURNS TO PARISH

Washington—The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, who served St. John's, Montclair, N. J., for a number of weeks while on a leave of absence from St. John's Church, here, has returned to the Washington parish. He was recalled by a newly elected vestry and took the services on April 4th.

RETIRED RECTOR OF ST. JOHN'S DIES

Williamstown, Mass.: — The Rev. J. Franklin Carter, 84, retired rector of St. John's here, died on March 31. One of the most beloved men of the Church, Dr. Carter was rector here from 1900 to 1931 when he retired. But he came out of retirement and served as rector from 1943 to 1946 while the present rector, the Rev. A. Grant Noble, served as a navy chaplain. Dr. Carter was an enthusiastic member of the Episcopal League for Social Action and was a member of the Advisory Board of THE WITNESS for many years.

EDITORIALS

False Impressions

WE REGRET the nature of the witness made before the Congressional hearings on universal military training by a prominent member of our Church. The witness, legitimately speaking in favor of U.M.T. in accordance with his personal convictions, was the Bishop of Southern Ohio, Henry W. Hobson. The unfortunate portion of his testimony was his statement that he was sure in his own mind that the majority of Episcopalians are for U.M.T. Bishop Hobson of course has no way whatever of knowing how the million and a half communicants of our Church think about this question. Also he carefully pointed out that our Church had not officially supported the Federal Council's official action against U.M.T. This is correct—our representatives on the executive committee did disassociate themselves when the vote was taken. But this does not mean (as newspapers, and undoubtedly Congressmen also, interpreted it to mean) that our Church is in favor of U.M.T.

It is likewise interesting to note that Bishop Hobson, of all the Church leaders to testify at the hearings, was the only one to receive wide coverage by press and radio. It is not a mere coincidence that he was the only prominent Church leader who was speaking in favor of the bill.

The part that hurts, however, is the way Bishop Hobson has, as far as the public is concerned, committed the Church on this issue before the Church has even made up its mind.

The Democratic Way

LAST week the Congregational-Christian Churches voted on a proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. We like the way they did it. Every communicant member had a vote. This means that the results will be slow in coming in. It also means that they will have some validity. No one will wonder if the vote could have been swung the other way by the election of different delegates, as some of us wondered after the last General Convention. No one will wonder if the Congregational-Christian churches will renege in a flurry of words four years from now. No one will wonder what the average parishioner and average clergyman thinks.

Many of the votes are cast under the spell of emotion rather than thought. This is also true of votes cast by the distinguished members of General Convention. Delegates are often known to vote in order to applaud the best speaker, or to soothe the poorest loser, or to repay other delegates for social recognition or other favors. When the voters are more numerous, the chances of such mishandling of delegated power are very much less.

Many vestrymen, many delegates to diocesan conventions, and perhaps most delegates to General Convention, think they have been chosen, not to represent the lay people, but because the people have confidence in their judgment. That feeling has a basis in fact, but it can be overdone to the point where a man forgets his duties as a representative. When he likes the sermon, the candidate, or the motion, he assumes that everybody does. The church never seems crowded to him unless some stranger sits in his pew or steps on his hat.

Some day we should like to see a people's referendum on Church unity. It could be limited to regular contributors, perhaps. And we should like to see, as part of it, the second question which the people of the Congregational-Christian Churches are voting affirmatively by an overwhelming majority according to latest reports: "If the proposed union goes through, will you go along with it?"

Perhaps some of the sheep could set an example for some of the shepherds.

"QUOTES"

IN THIS day when man's inhumanity to man threatens the world with another, and I believe final, holocaust, there is but one final hope — our youth. Only in the Christian youth of our nation can we find the clear thinking, free of prejudice and bigotry, which can lead us from the jungle savagery of another war. Our young people may lack experience, but they also lack the memory of failure. They may be impetuous, but they are optimistic. They may not have learned all the teachings of history, but they know it is their world and their future that will be burned away by atomic fission. I for one say, let us turn to them, not with the patronage of superior knowledge but with the humility of those who have failed and now need the clear vision of their youth.

The E. R. P. in Spain

THE experts say that Adolph Hitler died.
(Although it took them some time to decide.)
But others feel that Adolph found in Spain
A welcome warm, a comfy place to hide.

So if food goes to Spain by Marshall Plan,
Will meat go from my table to that man,
While others starve? Nay, let your tears be dried.
He was (or is) a vegetarian.

Let's Face a Few Questions

by Robert B. Gooden

The Suffragan Bishop of Los Angeles

I REALIZE that it is much easier to ask questions than answer them. I hope that in this friendly discourse I will not be considered a Communist, a Red, a fellow traveler, a comrade, if I mention a few questions that have been in the minds of millions and have been given voice to many times. The Constitution notwithstanding, it is rapidly becoming dangerous to speak unless in the language of the yes-man. It is becoming dangerous even to think, because people are commanded under oath to say what they are thinking. If they refuse they will go to prison. If they are even suspect, they lose their jobs and are left to starve or live by their wits. The liberties which our forefathers came here to enjoy, for which they fought to establish and maintain, which they made definite in a Constitution, and Bill of Rights are in greater danger than ever before in our history. We take for granted today infringements on our liberties which would have horrified preceding generations. By liberty I do not mean unqualified freedom to do anything, but liberty made large and generous under law for the welfare of all the people.

In the middle ages people who were arbitrarily dubbed heretics were brought before tribunals where they were condemned beforehand and then delivered to punishment or death. Three hundred years later in the land of the free and the home of the brave, we have substituted for religious heresy, political heresy, and economic heresy, and the situation is as tense today as it was in mediaeval religious controversies. This is the attitude of many so-called leaders and men in public life today. It should be curbed or we will be overcome by the very thing we fought to destroy. For example, near my home not long ago a group of people were gathered together in a private home for political discussion. During the meeting, a gang of men, some of them armed and wearing Legion caps broke into this private home and ordered them to disperse within ten minutes or drastic action would be taken. When the householder protested at the action he was assaulted and wounded in his own home. I am glad to say that most of these men were convicted in a subsequent trial but punishments were light. One could not but feel that the authorities sympathized with the marauders rather than with the victims.

I believe the attitude of the American people is against all this, but they are so lobbyless and unorganized that even under our splendid system there is very little they can do against entrenched power. There is an American iron curtain which keeps the real truth from the people. There are so many top secrets that one would think we are so childish that we ought not to be told the truth. Jesus said the truth makes us free. Liberty and peace and truth and righteousness walk together. I believe the American people want world peace and peace at home and are willing to pay any price short of invasion and slavery to secure it. I believe they want the United Nations to function and develop. I believe they want no more territory and that this oft-repeated statement was meant literally. I believe they want to be helpful and are willing to pour out their wealth anywhere if they are really sure that their wealth will help misery and poverty, will help nations to get on their feet, and not be used primarily for purposes of war or to line the pockets of despotic grafters.

We might ask, can we have confidence in our leadership today? There are doubtless many honorable men but not many able men. Does the welfare of the people really guide their policies or is it the welfare of small entrenched groups on the theory that the ordinary folk should feed from the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table. It would appear that our truly great men are not interested in statesmanship but in private businesses which put together are more powerful than the government and they leave political leadership to politicians whom they can manupulate at their pleasure. There is undoubtedly a lack of confidence in leadership today and a kind of indifference to what it does and thinks. They seem to fear for example to come to grips with the high cost of living because it may hurt important people and expect an undisciplined people like ours to go all out for poultryless and eggless Thursdays and meatless Tuesdays. Meanwhile things to eat and roofs for shelter go higher and higher.

It has long been a principle that civilians should govern in the United States, that the military should be subordinate to the civilian. The President seems to have an almost worshipful reverence for high ranking military officers with the result that they seem to dominate in important positions. I think they are able to do a good job and they do it but at the same time good army and navy men may not have good successors. Give such people power and the arms and the authority to back it up it would be easy to have a military state. The people would not desire it but would be helpless. Hanson W. Baldwin, the military analyst of the New York Times in a recent article which has been listed among the ten most important magazine articles for December, calls attention to the fact that the military now sit in positions of American civil authority. Admiral Leahy is the President's personal chief of staff. General Marshall is Secretary of State. Assistant Secretary of State for occupied areas is General Saltzman. Japan is governed almost unilaterally by General MacArthur. Korea is governed by a general. Germany by General Clay, Austria by General Keyes, General Smith is Ambassador to Moscow, Admiral Kirk, Ambassador to Belgium, General Wedemeyer headed a special mission to China. In South Africa and Panama retired generals head the embassies, and in South America some thirteen American military missions exercise political power. Two generals are potential candidates for the presidency. These are good men, but their experience in foreign policy is limited. They have had no special training for this work and as Mr. Baldwin says, "it is a pattern to be watched." It certainly is a question how far under our system should the military exercise civil authority without turning the United States into a military state.

ANOTHER question in the minds of people is aid to Greece, Turkey, and China. If this means food, shelter, medical care, and economic recovery only, there is no doubt what people will say to that question. As far as we can see behind the iron curtain three fourths of the aid to Greece goes for armaments to keep a civil war going there. It goes to maintain the decadent remnants of the German Hohenzollern family on the throne of Greece. It surely is a question what fellowship the democracy of America can have with the corrupt German throne in Greece. We have just learned that a billion and a half of unused lend-lease war materials has been given to Greece. Also we have sold ships, I think mine-sweepers, which cost six hundred million to Greece for sixty thousand dollars. Over the protest of American shipowners we propose to give them five hundred American ships and now in the Mediterranean we have aircraft carriers, warships and we are shipping marines over there with heavy arms for a little friendly practice in war maneuvers. It is aid to Greece but the starving are still starving and the rich are still very rich. The question mark surely is there. George Polk, Cairo correspondent for C.B.S. asks if aid to Greece is simply preparatory to fighting the Russians, and is Greece to be our military base. He says many believe Greece would be untenable the first day of an east-west war. It is all very confusing and full of questions.

We have donated $100,000,000 to Turkey. A real hand-out. When Bishop Gilbert spoke recently of 300,000 undernourished people in New York he received no help and was called an agent of Moscow but the Turks get a hundred million. There is surely a question here if we consider the story of Turkey. It is a despotic, one-party-government Moslem State. They fought against us in the first world war and refused us aid in the second world war. They have been ruthless to other peoples and almost destroyed the Armenian people by wholesale butchery. They became rich out of the second world war and are "fat and well-liking." Still we donated out of tax money to these people a hundred million dollars. When I look at some checks our people receive in white collar work after the withholding tax is taken out I begrudge a hundred millions to Turkey which they do not need for food, clothing, and shelter. Why do they need it?

Then there is the question of China where it is proposed to give a billion and a third for aid. In a recent article on this question Harold Ickes says, "I would not begrudge any amount of money that we could afford to spend in China if it would result in a democratic government. But we know from sad experience that the greedy grafters who surround Chiang-Kai-shek would put into their own pockets from a third to a half of any sum that we might send to China. So cynical are the light-fingered members of the Kuomingtang, that, according to excellent authority, they even barter and sell to the so-called Communists arms and supplies while in transit from the United States to China." President Truman generously gave to Chiang-Kai-shek 271 ships many of which are used to smuggle arms and supplies to so-called Communists. The Nationalist soldiers sell their arms to the so-called Communists which were sent from America. Chinese officials have private deposits in the United States in excess of two billion dollars in American currency. Just how we can create a government of the people, for the people, and by the people by pouring out our tax money into China or into any country is a big question.

Then there is the question of our relations to Russia. Are we one hundred per cent right and perfect and are they one hundred per cent wrong and devilish. Do oil, and greed, and profits, and international big business contaminate us in any way, or are the motives of our politicians pure, kind, charitable and undefiled. Do we desire to provoke a war with Russia? We have just been informed by Admiral Nimitz that the ships going to the Mediterranean are capable of carrying atom bombs. If there is such a war, how much better off will the world be? For my own part I think such a war is unnecessary and truly unthinkable. I believe that we can find a workable agreement with that great nation if we are fair, honest, and just and that should be our long range purpose rather than a quick rush to arms. After all every nation has the right to its own internal affairs, but it does not have the right to interfere in the affairs of others except when asked to help in the way we have done in Cuba, or the Philippines and in other places. No nation ever has the right to commit acts of aggression. It is possible that few nations are really ready for self-government. English speaking peoples give a fairly good example of that greatest of all arts but the finger is often directed at them. They often seem to have the form of it but seem to deny the power of it. The answer to these questions and many similar questions lies in the United Nations. It has always seemed to me like a new day of Pentecost when the United Nations was born. Our part in it seemed like an atonement for our defection from the League of Nations. We have put a question mark into the United Nations which should be removed. We should make this organization work as it is our one definite and concrete hope.

The great and overall answer to every question lies in the Church and the gospel of Our Lord, but the Church will have to do much more than at present if she is to count for anything. She needs more courage, vision, faith, charity, devotion, and then the will to do. At present we seem to be mending our fences and keeping a struggling organization alive by main effort. When the members of a great parish give less than two cents a month each for making Christ known through missions it is hard to see how Christianity can become relevant in these mazes of question marks. Before we can make the United Nations answer the many questions the Church must put Christ into the hearts of all peoples. It can be done but not as we are going now. We love to think how we are for Christ and Russia against him. My final question, are we any more Christian than Russia? Do we dare say "yes" to that?

New Books

 Excellent  Good * Fair

The Lost Gospel, and other sermons based on short stories. By Robert E. Luccock. Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

These sermons are based mostly on the clean limbed, keen-eyed, wholesome sort of short stories The Readers' Digest likes to regurgitate. "The author presents the sermons out of the conviction that effective preaching must appeal to the eye and heart as well as to the eye and ear," says the book jacket. He does not seem to have any other burning convictions, and his message is never so urgent as to leave him incoherent. His illustrations are inserted too gracefully, and too frequently, to inspire confidence in their pertinence.

The book is earnest, and interesting both in matter and manner. But its Gospel is that according to St. Optimism, and the attitudes which lead to successful careers and those which lead to spiritual inner victories are often equated.

We Were Thinking . . .

WE WERE thinking about a talk we had with one of the department heads of the National Council in which it was pointed out that the Church cannot provide a sufficient number of trained clergy to meet special contemporary needs. He showed that in the short summer training programs that are available to students and clergy alike, the Episcopal Church outnumbers other denominations in its attendance, and yet, it produces fewer men who have been able to continue their studies in concentrated graduated work. This paradox is partially explained by the diocesan commitments that the majority of our postulants and candidates stand under, and which are prohibitive of graduate study in specialized fields.

While we recognize only too well the plight of our dioceses, there is yet much to be said and done toward the solution of the problem of the need for specialized clergy. It is our contention that a man who can valuably serve the Church in a national capacity should not be bound by diocesan commitments. The Church would have suffered great loss had St. Paul limited his efforts to Corinth, rather than covering the whole Mediterranean world; so today, the Church will suffer if we confine specially talented men to small parish activities, when they can best serve in national capacities.

It is urged that a committee appointed by the Presiding Bishop be granted the right to select a maximum of five men a year from the graduating classes of our seminaries to serve as his candidates. This selection is to be made on the basis of the abilities of the men under consideration, the men's own desires, and the needs of the national Church. Following the completion of seminary, these men will be sent on to further study in their specialized fields, at the expense of the Church, and with the completion of this, will be required to serve in the national Church for a specified period of time. Should this system be utilized over a prolonged period, the Church would soon have within its own ranks clergymen, well-trained in such fields as social service, religious education, publicity, educational chaplaincies, etc., who could provide our dioceses and parishes with material worthy of our Christian heritage.

Editor's Note: Rarely does a Church magazine present anything by men studying for the ministry. With the conviction that opinions of these younger men will stimulate thinking in the rest of us, we have invited two men at the Episcopal Theological School to write a column from time to time. It is the work of roommates, the result of what they call "armchair quarterbacking." They say also that "some of the material may be impractical, but that is, perhaps, the students' privilege. Whether practical or not, it represents honest opinion."

We recognize the hue and cry that will be raised against this suggestion, but it is high time that the Church begins to recognize that if it is to take its stand against a pagan world, it must produce psychologists, philosophers, educationalists, etc. from its own members, men who are first Christians, and then specialists.

The Age of Confirmation

LAST time we raised the question of the adequacy of our present system of Sponsors at Holy Baptism. Another question which we need to reconsider seriously, in view of environmental conditions in modern society, is the proper age for Confirmation. The Prayer Book speaks vaguely of 'a competent age,' which has traditionally been interpreted as about the age of twelve years. Some bishops refuse to confirm children who are younger; and many parents refuse to permit their children to prepare for Confirmation before the age when they themselves were confirmed.

Since our Prayer Book rubrics were drawn up and our traditions on this matter established we have learned much about child psychology and pedagogy. I recall that the first book I ever reviewed was a learned German dissertation by a Lutheran pastor on this very subject—for the Lutherans have the same tradition as to age of Confirmation that we have. He had spent many years of investigation and experimentation on the subject, and his conclusions were summarized in my review as follows: "The author points out that the religious maturity on the part of the confirmands, presupposed in the confirmation vows, is utterly wanting in evidence; that the disappointments over the failure of the act of Confirmation to come up to the tense and excited, often magically conceived expectations of the confirmands are perilous to their further religious growth. Moreover, the difficulties are increased through the conflict between the promises demanded by the confirmation vows and the ideals of other values set by the 'world' of daily life and occupation."

This last observation refers, of course, to the fact that so often adolescents not long after their confirmation leave their homes for boarding school or college. It is not secret that American education today, even in many so-called Church schools, exerts about every influence except a Christian one. The result is that many of our confirmands are lost to the Church during the course of their higher education.

These remarks would seem to suggest that we need to advance the age of Confirmation until some time well along in late teens or twenties. There can be little doubt that decisions made at a later age will be more mature and hence likely to be more lasting. In this case we should possibly have fewer confirmands, but a larger proportion of them would stick. We need here the considered opinion of our division of College Work of the National Council and of parish clergy who have given especial attention in their ministry to young married couples, and possibly also a poll of those who have served as chaplains in the armed forces.

On the other hand arguments can be made for moving up the age of Confirmation from twelve to seven or eight years. By introducing children to the fullness of liturgical life and sacramental grace as a normal part of their early experience we can give them unseen but powerful sources of strength to steady them when the physical and psychological problems of early adolescence and teen-age arise. It is not necessary that they understand fully the meaning of sacramental grace—(how many adults have a clear intellectual grasp of it?)—so much as that they experience participation of complete membership in the family of God. The Roman Church has taken its stand on this side. Not only does it confirm at an early age, it even admits children to Holy Communion before Confirmation. The wisdom of the Church of Rome respecting human psychology, if not its wisdom respecting other matters, is worthy of serious consideration.

By and large, however, the problem may not be one of any specific age at all. Children no less than adults differ so in aptitude and temperament that it is unwise to generalize. Moreover the environmental situation, especially as regards home and family life, is so varied, fluid and complex today, that it is dangerous to treat all children of families on our parish rolls alike.

Editors of Protestant Journals Deal With Live Issues

One of the Highlights of Annual Meeting Was Press Conference with Henry Wallace

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The editors of Protestant periodicals, about 75 of them, voted endorsement of the European Recovery Program at the close of the three-day session of the Associated Church Press. The resolution however stressed that the plan should be "so conceived and administered as in no way to jeopardize the right of European nations to choose their own way of life, and that the relevant agencies of UN be urged to assume increasing responsibility for programs of recovery and rehabilitation among the nations."

Resolutions were also adopted supporting establishment of an international police force, efforts of the United Nations for the preservation of peace, admission of displaced persons to the United States under the Stratton Bill, movements toward unity among Protestant churches, and wider use of lay leadership in religious circles.

Other resolutions deplored the "present agitation" for universal military training as "unnecessary for national defense and as a moral wrong against the youth of America," and assailed the liquor traffic as "anti-social in nature and a menace to public order and the general welfare."

Pointing out that "one of the limiting weaknesses of contemporary religious journalism seems to be its lack of coordination, direction and common purpose," the Associated Church Press voted to ask member periodicals to set aside November as a month of emphasis on human rights. The executive committee was authorized to secure articles on human rights from leading authorities for possible use of the membership. Attention of the churches was called to the objectives of the Report of the President's committee on civil rights which have to do with protection of human life against mob violence; equal opportunity and reward in employment regardless of race, religion or national origin; the elimination of segregation in all forms; and protection of the right to vote by all citizens in all sections of the nation. It was recommended that a continuing discussion of the report on civil rights be carried on in the papers represented by the Associated Church Press, "giving it unbiased interpretation and urging application of its principles in corrective and constructive measures."

Discussion of a motion picture entitled "The Iron Curtain" led the editors to adopt a resolution urging Twentieth-Century Fox, producer of the film, to reconsider its decision to release the picture in the near future. Member periodicals of the ACP were asked to investigate the film "and warn their readers as to its potential danger as war propaganda."

Protests against the release of this picture have been widespread. The ministers of Madison, Wisconsin, have addressed a letter to Eric Johnston, movie czar, stating that "this film is so designed as to create suspicion and hatred of the Soviet Union and that it is definitely propaganda inciting to war." A similar protest has been made by a large number of clergy, including the following Episcopalians: Bishop Walker of Atlanta; Bishop Moulton, retired bishop of Utah; Bishop Parsons, retired bishop of California; Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon; the Rev. Charles B. Ackley of New York; Dean John W. Day of Topeka; the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School and the Rev. W. B. Spofford, managing editor of THE WITNESS.

One of the highlights of the annual meeting of the editors was a luncheon given them by Henry A. Wallace at which he asserted that "for the first time in the history of the world, the application of Christian principles has become absolutely mandatory today." He stated that he has invited the editors to lunch with him "in the hope that you would express to me what you think is essential in this extraordinary crisis that has come upon us through the unleashing of new forces in science. Tell me what can be done in your realm, and I am aware how important it is, if we are to meet the challenge that lies ahead of us."

Most of the time was then devoted to questions addressed to the third party candidate by the editors on such subjects as the European recovery program; universal military training; his suggestions for resolving differences between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. and his views on Palestine.

On the European recovery program, Mr. Wallace asserted that he had advocated "what was essentially the Marshall plan" before Secretary of State Marshall had advanced his proposal, but that he felt the program "should be routed through the United Nations." He added that funds should be made available to the various countries according to damage suffered in the war and according to need. Mr. Wallace charged that the program "has become infected with the Truman doctrine," and that money is being made available "not to help the poor and the hungry, but to contain Communism and Russia."

"I was for the humanitarian aspects of the program very strongly," he said, "and I still am. When there is hunger or grief or war in any part of the world it affects us and is our concern, but not in the spirit of preparing for war with Russia." The ERP, he added, "is definitely anti-Russian."

Asked if it were possible for the U. S. and Russia, with different ideals and ideologies, to reconcile their differences, Mr. Wallace said that to answer in the negative would be to succumb to "a philosophy of despair and I am an optimist." He said that he believed "a modus vivendi can be worked out."

Questioned on universal military training and the need for preparedness in the event of war, Mr. Wallace replied that "if we think in terms of the next war, the only effective weapon is a world mechanism for peace." Then he added, "but if we're out to conquer the world, that's something else again." He said he saw no value to the U. S. in UMT.

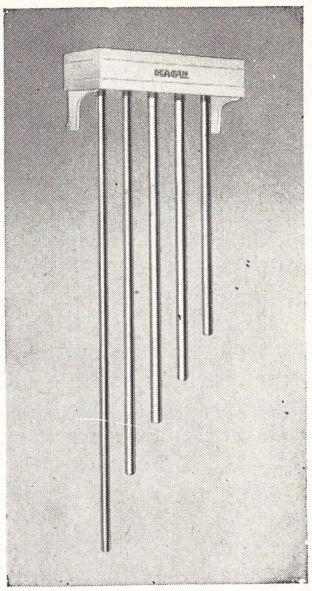
On the subject of Palestine, Mr. Wallace observed that reversal of the United States' position in favor of partition "has come close to killing off the United Nations for good."

Noting that so-called Christian nations "have been responsible for most of the bloodshed in the world," Mr. Wallace said that "we are always shedding blood in the name of Christ, are we ever going to preach peace?"

In the only reference made during the luncheon to his political aspirations, Mr. Wallace commented that he welcomed the support of "any man as long as he supports what I stand for, the kind of program I've been preaching."

Bishop Favors UMT

Washington:—Scores of Church leaders have testified before the Senate committee on armed service against universal military training. However two Churchmen have voiced approval: Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio and the Rev. Carl McIntire, the head of the fundamentalist agency, the American Council of Christian Churches, and who is a bitter opponent of the Federal Council of Churches.



Bishop Hobson stated that whereas he spoke only as a "private citizen," he was "certain in my own mind that the great majority of Episcopalians would be in support of the position that I take." Conflict between what he called "totalitarianism" and "our way of life" he said "threatens to break forth into violent open warfare" so the Bishop urged that "totalitarian aggression" be opposed "by adequate means which our opponents will heed." Strong statements denouncing Russia, he said, should be "backed up with sufficient armed strength" so that the Soviet Union and other nations will know we mean to "back those words, if necessary, with action."

Bishop Hobson also told the committee that the Episcopal Church had not officially endorsed the position of the Federal Council of Churches which has got on record as being opposed to universal military training (see editorial).

Speaking for the Federal Council at the hearing was the Rev. Walter Van Kirk who declared that the Council "believes the crisis which now confronts the world is of a kind that can best be met by accelerating the economic and social recovery of Europe and Asia."

"The Federal Council," he said, "strongly believes that the existing crisis in international affairs is primarily social and economic in character, and as such, can best be met by measures designed to promote economic recovery and social stability on a global scale." Van Kirk warned that what the world needs is not a "race in armaments but a demonstration by the United States that our country is determined to combat international unrest and disorder by the use of constructive and cooperative policies for human welfare.

"Such policies will enlist the confidence and creative energies of peoples around the world and will bring to our people greater assurances of peace than can be found in the adoption by the United States of a system of compulsory universal military training." Declaring that the churches were strongly opposed to the government's assuming of responsibility "for the indoctrination and discipline in the matter of citizenship," Van Kirk said "it has been

Orthodox Congress

Bucharest (RNS): — A delegation representing the Romanian Orthodox Church left here for Moscow for preliminary discussions prior to the convening of a pan-Orthodox Congress, which is scheduled for this summer under the presidency of Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Church. Matters to be discussed include (1) the attitude of the Roman Church toward the Orthodox Communions in recent year; (2) the attitude of Orthodox leaders toward the World Council of Churches; (3) the validity of Anglican orders; (4) the proposed adoption of the Gregorian calendar.

Chattanooga, Tenn.: — A resolution expressing the "conviction that it is most important to the welfare of the whole Church that the Bishop Payne Divinity School be continued and supported" and that "it be improved and enlarged" was passed at a meeting of the provincial council of the province of Sewanee, meeting here. The report on Negro work was made by a committee headed by Bishop John Moore Walker of Atlanta and recommended a modus vivendi in dealings of whites with Negroes, which includes elimination of prejudices and establishment of frankness rather than condescension as a basis for relationships.

The conference was held at the home of Mr. Z. C. Patten, a member of the council.

Discuss UMT

Detroit: — A panel on universal military training was sponsored by the diocesan department of social relations at St. Paul's Cathedral on April 1st. Speaking to a large crowd of Church men and women, the arguments pro and con on this topical subject were presented by a panel of four under the direction of the moderator, the Rev. I. C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit. Members of the panel were: In favor of UMT—Brig.-General Owen J. Cleary, head of the Michigan state liquor control commission, and Mr. Dale McIntyre, radio announcer for station WJR. Against UMT—Mr. Brendan Sexton, assistant director of region 1, U.A.W.-C.I.O., and the Rev. Sydney A. Temple, Jr., WITNESS editor and secretary of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship.

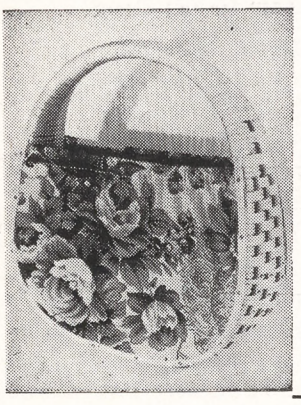
Church and State

Rome (RNS): — A volume containing "secret documents" purportedly showing the Vatican has consistently violated its claims to political neutrality, especially during the past three years, has appeared here and is being widely heralded by the extreme leftist press. The book contains 558 pages and appears to have been printed in Lugano, Switzerland, but according to non-Communist leaders, it was actually printed by Communists in Turin. It quotes from Vatican documents dated October 15, 1945 to March 11, 1948.

A preface states the quotations are being published "to prove that the Holy See, instead of remaining neutral and trying to work as a mediator contributed with all its strength to aggravate tension, increase hatred, and stimulate antagonisms between conflicting parties in Italy."

"It is hoped," the preface declared, "that the publication of these documents showing the true relations between the present Prime Minister of Italy and the Holy See will open the eyes of political leaders all over the world, and thus result in the radical separation of religious and political powers."

"In this way," the preface added, "men and nations will be able to arrive at a calm understanding and thus avoid war, at the same time opening up a peace era with greater prosperity for all peoples."



Ransack Churches

Cambridge, Mass.: — Seven churches here have been ransacked since Easter Monday. The diocesan house in Boston also was broken into sometime during the Easter week-end. The last two churches here to be entered were Christ Church where the vandals stole $15 from the alms box and also smashed closets containing communion silver, though nothing was taken; and the Unitarian Church nearby where $40 in cash was stolen and also two checks totalling $30. In the latter church offices and meeting rooms were messed, with papers and books strewn about. Among the other churches to be broken into was St. James.'

How Christ Church was entered is still a mystery since no windows were forced and police found all doors locked.

A report stated that ERP should not be made a weapon of military and political warfare; nor should it be used to dictate what sort of economic system a country should have, nor be used to influence elections. "The U. S. should demonstrate now, in action as well as in words, its loyalty to the United Nations," the Quakers asserted. "The proposed program of universal military training and selective service are directly contrary to a resolution adopted by the UN General Assembly on December 16, 1946, calling for regulation and reduction of armaments."

New York (RNS): — About one-third of the total vote by Congregational-Christian congregations on the proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church have been cast, with 65% favoring union. Massachusetts, with the largest vote, has not yet reported and it is pointed out that the voting in that state would bear heavily in determining whether or not the necessary two-thirds favorable vote would be obtained.

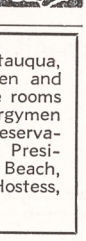
Pastor in Trouble



Cumberland, Md.: — Pastor Richard H. Bready of the Methodist Church here is in difficulties for having accepted an invitation to pray at a recent meeting of the Progressive Party held in Baltimore. The board of his church claims that the church has suffered because of the pastor's activities on behalf of Henry Wallace for president. The board has asked the district superintendent of the Methodist Church to rescind his preaching license. The matter will come before a meeting on May 9.

Moral Approach

Pittsburgh (RNS):—In the army's latest move to check venereal disease chaplains are stressing the importance of good morals, according to Col. Ivan L. Bennett, chaplain for the 2nd army area. Speaking at a recruiting meeting of the Pittsburgh chapter, national association of army-navy chaplains, Col. Bennett declared that under the new system one hour a day is spent in discussing moral issues with recruits.

"The chaplain uses a fatherly approach in dealing with the men," he said. "He talks straight from the shoulder and stresses the importance good morals play in society." The chaplain system replaced the medical practice of equipping soldiers with contraceptives, a plan which seemed to give passive approval to wrong moral practices, Col. Bennett said.

A series of experiments at the Ft. Knox, Ky., training grounds have shown chaplains to be remarkably successful in handling the problem, Col. Bennett indicated. He said one chaplain working with a group of 600 men who had the highest percentage of disease in past years recently chalked up a perfect record, the percentage falling off to zero.

REV. W. R. BROWN
Rector of St. Michael's, Hays, Kansas

THE WITNESS reports gleefully the successes of February 29th: "people getting a lot of fun out of it, particularly in sneaking a look at their watch from time to time while the rector was reading prayers, to see whether he was going to hit it on the button." I have heard of joy in the life of prayer, now we understand it better. Or who was the wise historian who said that Rome fell, not because of the barbarians, but because the priests had come to smile at one another over the sacrifices?

Fine editorial, "Both in Body and Soul."

MISS WILMA SMITH
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

Am I to assume that quoting Senator Taft approvingly (WITNESS, March 25) in an editorial means that you have endorsed him as your candidate for the presidency of the United States? If so, I am extremely disappointed. There has never been an election, in my judgment, as vitally important as the one this year. It is abundantly clear that Mr. Truman is leading us down the path to world war three. And I cannot imagine any Republican who is apt to be nominated doing anything different in these days of near-panic. Mr. Wallace on the other hand speaks courageously and intelligently for peace and should therefore be supported by sincere Christians who are aware that the issue of war or peace is the paramount one of our day and generation.

DR. J. C. FLANAGAN
Layman of Montreal, Canada

In your latest article "What is a Liberal" you state that economic freedom in the form of capitalism holds most hope for freedom in world future. I am a minister's son, brought up in the true Catholic faith. I have succeeded in the capitalistic system according to secular standards but now that I understand it, were I not doing everything I can with myself and my substance to bring about its downfall by democratic means, substituting for it a cooperative economic system as a means of getting our daily bread, I would be unfaithful and hypocritical to the faith of Christ crucified and resurrected.

I plead with you to examine more closely the things you are saying in this regard because I almost lost my life in World War I, and did lose many of my boyhood friends. My son served in this one and unless you and I examine more closely the present relations of humans in the getting of our daily bread, my grandchildren will be in the next. Christ became incarnate to let us see and hear the way, the truth and the light, and it surely was not competitive capitalism, otherwise why his judgment today?

Dr. Temple in "Christianity and Social Order" is very prophetic and in his "Social Witness and Evangelism" clarifies things simply.

Surely it behooves us, you as a young man and I as an older one, to examine our Christian duty and privilege more realistically. I speak not as a crank nor, I think in confusion. My experiences have been many and varied and I know that my Redeemer liveth.

MR. JAMES WATTS
Churchman of New York City

The articles in THE WITNESS for April 1 were interesting. But does Mr. Huntington really mean that he believes the Vatican should require all Roman Catholics to accept pacifism? It seems to me that I recall having heard a good many criticisms of the Vatican for seeking to impose its views on world affairs upon members of that Church.

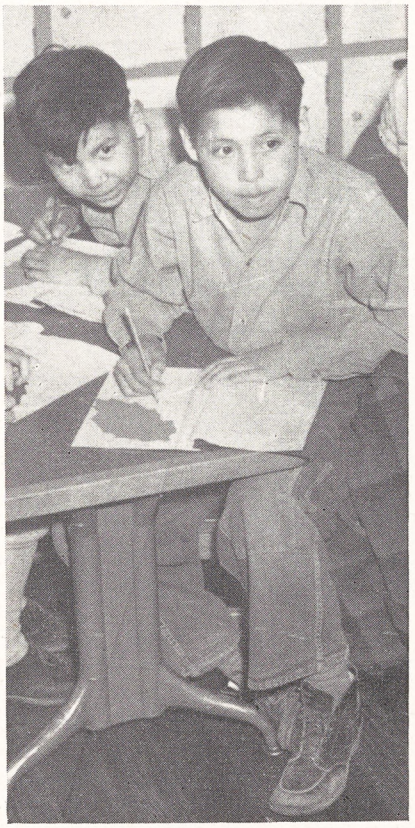
Home Missions Council Works With First Americans



A Long Range Program of Rehabilitation Is the Vitally Important Consideration

By Mark A. Dawber
Executive Secretary of the Home Missions Council

New York:—Because of the terrible physical distress that has overtaken certain Indian tribes during the recent months, the American Indian has been given much publicity. Among the several groups affected, the Navajos have doubtless suffered most. In recent years they have become the nation's foremost Indian problem. Due to the rapid increase in population, the reservations upon which they were placed cannot support them. They have less land for some 65,000 today than they had for some 9,000 at the time of the treaty in 1868. Moreover the land has become impoverished due to overgrazing, and so steps must be taken to get some 20,000 off the reservations and a program instituted to make possible a better economic foundation for those who remain on the reservations.

Two programs are now being introduced. One is the immediate relief program which involves about $2,000,000 appropriated by Congress — $500,000 for food and clothing and $1,500,000 for relief work. The welfare program for supplying food and clothing is well under way. The immediate suffering has been relieved. The second part of the program — work relief — is now being planned. In connection therewith it is hoped that a portion of the fund might be used to relocate some 5,000 off the reservation. The development of several new communities in areas where the Navajos have been going for part-time work as migrants is now being explored.

The most important consideration however is the long-range program of Navajo rehabilitation. This has been prepared by the Department of the Interior and is to be submitted to Congress at an early date. This program will have regard to the following needs: (1) soil and water conservation and range improvementment; (2) completion of irrigation projects; (3) development of lumber, coal, mineral and other physical resources; (4) development of community enterprises and industries; (5) relocation and resettlement; (6) development of off-reservation opportunities; (7) hospital and health service; (8) education — school buildings and teachers; (9) road construction; (10) better water supply. Some $90,000,000 is required to meet this program over a ten-year period. The Home Missions Council of North America is cooperating toward getting this program considered by Congress. It is also cooperating in the present relief situation.

These keen and handsome Indian boys are learning fast in a school of the Home Missions Council

One of the great needs is a literacy program. Some 40,000 Navajos can speak only the Navajo language, and of these some 30,000 cannot read or write their own language. The Home Missions Council is engaged in a literacy program for these Indians. The Laubach method is being applied, and we are much encouraged with what is being done. In March the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque invited our missionary to give a thirty-minute demonstration before classes in English, modern languages, and education, using two young Navajo girls, completely unlettered and non-English speaking, reports The Gallup Independent. "Miss Hoskins taught the girls in fifteen minutes to read a complete sentence and understand what they were reading, in spite of their shyness in unfamiliar surroundings." We are hoping to be able to employ a number of young Navajos to carry on this literacy service as part of the work relief program, also as an educational project in the long-range program.

This literacy work becomes increasingly important as the long-range program goes into effect. Health improvement, the understanding of the plans of the government for resettlement and the development of industries, all depend upon the Indians being able to understand what it is all about. Unless they can be helped to read their own language, the majority of the older Indians will not be able to fit into the advance program. Moreover, it is now well established that many of the younger Indians who speak only Navajo will not be able to learn English except as they first are able to read in Navajo.

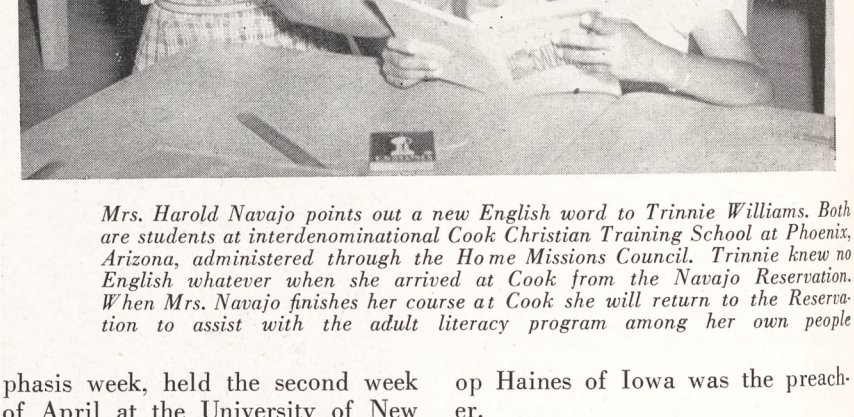
From a religious point of view literacy is also important. The Bible is only now being translated into the Navajo language. But what good will it do unless the Navajos are able to read the language?

To the end that all these important programs may be fully shared we are making this attempt to develop a more literate people. It will be a slow, long-time process, but we have made a good start and we look forward to the months immediately ahead to see some real progress in this field of service.

COMMITTEE SEES THE MAYOR

Columbus, Ohio: — A mob of hoodlums, described by some as juveniles or juvenile delinquents, broke into the home of a young Communist in this city and demolished it. The young man and his wife and one year old baby apparently had been informed that such a visit was coming and were not at home.

The incident, according to the Rev. Robert Fay, rector of Trinity Church, came as the result of tension fomented by the local press which has been engaged in a red-baiting campaign.



Within 24 hours of its occurrence a committee of citizens, including clergy of the Episcopal Church, lawyers, professors from the state university, business men, called upon the mayor and requested a public assurance that fundamental liberties would be protected. The mayor refused to make such a statement himself but called in the police chief who did release a somewhat innocuous statement to the effect that right of law-abiding citizens would be protected. The incident and the reaction to it did apparently have the effect of quieting the hysteria.

The press also has attacked a number of progressive groups, notably at the university YMCA, charging it with harboring Communists. Here also the Church has been on the side of civil liberties, notably through the activities of the Rev. Almus M. Thorp of St. Stephen's Church and his curate, the Rev. Phil Porter Jr.

The executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action, the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., also went to Columbus when he heard of the near-riot for the purpose of conducting an investigation and helping with anything he might do. He commended the clergy and other leaders of the community for taking immediate action and stated that similar action should be taken in all communities if anything of the sort breaks out in their areas. Pressure should be at once placed upon the civil law enforcement authorities.

RELIGIOUS EMPHASIS WEEK

Durham, N. H.:—The Rev. Russell Hubbard of Bar Harbor, Maine, suffragan bishop-elect of Michigan, was the headliner during religious emphasis week, held the second week of April at the University of New Hampshire. The theme for the meeting was "Faith for Our Times." "Other Episcopal clergy taking part were L. B. Davis, rector at Exeter, N. H.; the Rev. C. L. Morrill, rector of St. Paul's Concord, N. H. and Randall Giddings, chaplain to Episcopal students at the university. The university religious council composed of Hillel, Newman, S.C.M. and Canterbury clubs, combined to present the forums and discussion meetings.

Mrs. Harold Navajo points out a new English word to Trinnie Williams. Both are students at interdenominational Cook Christian Training School at Phoenix, Arizona, administered through the Home Missions Council. Trinnie knew no English whatever when she arrived at Cook from the Navajo Reservation. When Mrs. Navajo finishes her course at Cook she will return to the Reservation to assist with the adult literacy program among her own people

JAMES WILSON HUNTER CONSECRATED

Laramie, Wyo.:—The Rev. James Wilson Hunter was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Wyoming here on April 7th at St. Matthew's Cathedral. In the procession of about 100 that opened the service, in addition to bishops and clergy, were the governor of the state and the president of the state university, and a number of laymen who hold office in the district. Bishops taking part in the service, in addition to the Presiding Bishop, were Bishop Clerk of Utah, Bishop Gesner of South Dakota, Bishop Barton of Eastern Oregon, Bishop Clingman of Kentucky, Bishop Keeler of Minnesota, Bishop Zeigler of Wyoming and Bishop Jones of West Texas. Bishop Haines of Iowa was the preacher.

An informal reception for the Presiding Bishop was held the evening before the service, attended by several hundred, including two blanketed Indians. A luncheon honoring the new bishop and his wife was held following the consecration.

MYRON C. TAYLOR AND THE POPE

Warsaw (RNS): — Three newspapers here simultaneously launched attacks on the Vatican. One of them accused the Pope of having entered into an agreement with Myron C. Taylor, President Truman's personal representative at the Vatican, to support rightest elements in the Italian election. (Mr. Taylor, an Episcopalian, is a member of St. Bartholomew's, New York).

Home Missions Council Helps The Migrant Workers

Its Staff Members Follow the Migrants
As Migrants Follow Crops Over Country

By Edith E. Lowry
Executive Secretary of the Home Missions Council

New York:—Agricultural migrants are increasing. A conservative estimate of today's numbers counts two and a half million. In a measure, increasing also is the demand for migrant labor. Mechanization throws sub-marginal farmers into the migrant stream, and in turn calls for their labors in greater numbers for shorter periods—to do the part of the job that machines have not yet been devised to accomplish. The consequent irregularity of employment, always an uncertain factor in the migrant family budget, becomes constantly more hazardous.

Simultaneously with these developments, 1948 sees the collapse of the federal farm labor program. Government health and clinic services for migrants were eliminated in July of 1947; liquidation of government housing for migrant labor followed. Rentals for farm labor homes have risen as much as a hundred per cent.

In the face of this crisis the Home Missions Council is straining its resources to expand the service for migrants begun in 1920. For a field staff of fifteen ministers and community workers to attempt to do a job in twenty-three states sounds fantastic; yet that is what they do, and to a remarkable degree it is an effective job.

The seasonal nature of migrancy serves one good purpose. As migrants follow the crops, the Home Missions Council follows the migrants. The staff member who spends November to April in Florida works in Maryland and Delaware in spring and early summer, and in New Jersey and Pennsylvania from July to October. Texas or Arizona in winter means summer in Minnesota and Michigan or in California and Oregon. In peak harvest seasons the year-round staff is supplemented with 200 college and seminary students, oriented in a training institute and carefully supervised during their six weeks to three months service.

High standards are maintained in selecting the field workers. Training, experience, and personal qualifications are carefully weighed. Background in sociology, economics, and religious education must be supplemented with skills in counseling, recreation, community organization, and human relations.

Their primary function is interpretation of the migrant and his disadvantaged way of life to the community, to public and private agencies, and to employers; to interpret and to expose migrancy less as an economic sore than as a human problem. How can migrant parents maintain a wholesome pattern of family life, the staff worker points out, when they and the 5.4 children that statistics assign them are housed in a single room? How can their children finish even one grade of school when three months is a long-time residence in a single place? Where will they turn for help in time of sickness when clinics and welfare services close their doors to "non-residents?" What is the cumulative psychological effect on the human spirit of continued loneliness and exclusion and insecurity, of being always an outsider who belongs nowhere?

The strength of the Home Missions Council program derives from the state and local committees organized by our staff. Committee membership includes representatives of councils of churches and church women, of existing organizations and agencies of every sort, of the press, and of growers who employ migrant labor. These members in their turn interpret the migrant to their own constituencies; raise a budget; and solicit volunteers to help with recreation, classes and clubs, and integration of the migrant into community activities. Sometimes they help to staff a vacation church school for migrant children; when instead they bring it about that migrant children are welcomed into full participation in the local vacation church school, then the process of community integration is really functioning.

Migrant children hear a story told by one of the college volunteers assisting in the Home Missions Council migrant program in Ohio

The influence of a well-organized Home Missions Council program in one migrant center as a demonstration and stimulus to other communities can be partly measured in terms of the requests that have come to us over the years to extend our services. Our work in the far west, which now spreads over eleven states, began in 1924 as the result of a letter from a church woman in Oregon, who had heard of our program in the east and asked for help with the children of migrant cherry pickers. A minister's wife in Judsonia, Arkansas, called our attention to conditions among the strawberry pickers. A request from the Consumers' League of Delaware gave the initiative to our now flourishing Maryland-Delaware program. In New York State, Home Missions Council child-care centers have now been taken over by the state and the growers' association, releasing our staff to concentrate on a ministry to every member of the migrant family.

A great lift to our program has been the acquisition this year of three mobile units, which we call Harvesters. One is the gift of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Protestant Episcopal Church. These station wagons, equipped with recreation aids, books, motion picture projector, record player, and portable organ and communion service give the migrant a sense of community and a realization that the Church is his friend and cares what happens to him. A ministry on wheels reaches many more migrants in the course of a harvest season than has previously been possible.

But there is still room for expansion, for even now we touch not many more than a tenth of the total number of migrants. Most of all do we need intelligent understanding of the migrant and his problem on the part of the general public. This the Church men and women in whose name we work can help to foster. They can make it their business to know whether or not their state has a migrant problem; what legislation their state provides regarding inpection of farm labor housing and sanitary facilities, regulation of child labor, facilities for child-care and schooling for migrants. In no state are all of these protections and services one hundred per cent perfect. A request to the Home Missions Council (297 Fourth Ave., New York 10) will bring information about the national migrant situation; the name and address of the state migrant chairman; and (for a $.25 handling charge) a packet of materials for speakers.

URGES UNITY AT LOCAL LEVEL

Philadelphia: — Bishop Angus Dun of Washington, speaking at a dinner attended by 700 under the auspices of the Philadelphia Council of Churches, said that the division of the Christian Church is both a "scandal and an offense" and he urged greater unity, beginning at the local congregational level. He said that the will to unity could not be achieved at the top alone. He warned that efforts at greater unity, like the assembly of the World Council this summer, would be without firm foundation unless individual members of local churches see the need for greater unity.

"The lack of mutual concern among the denominations, the competitiveness of the different Churches is not only an offense to God but to the unbelieving and half-believing world," he declared.

"Needle in the haystack, two by two;
Skip to my Lou, my darling."

DIFFERENT KIND OF PRESENT

Meyersburg, Pa.:—The Rev. Glen B. Walter, rector of the Redeemer, Sayre, has been supplying a newly organized mission, St. Barnabas, here. The other evening when he came here for a service he found the choir of Christ Church, Towanda, present, and there was a congregation of over fifty. Following the service Mr. Walter was asked to call a meeting of the congregation. Curtains were drawn across the chancel. He was then asked to turn his back and not look until told. When he looked he saw a 125 pound dressed pig. The people had heard that it was his birthday and so presented him with this new kind of a "birthday cake."

DELEGATES FROM SOVIET ZONE

Berlin (RNS): — Two delegates from the Russian zone in Germany are to attend the general conference of the Methodist Church when it meets in Boston, April 28 to May 9. They are the Rev. Friedrich W. Meyer from Annabert, Saxony, and Walter Ritter, layman, from Netzschkau, Saxony. Both will represent the Central Germany Conference of the Methodist Church. Permission was granted by the Soviet authorities without delay and without bureaucratic difficulties. The delegates have already made plane reservations and are now awaiting permission from the United States to enter the country.

Our Pretensions

WE MAY be able to find many reasons why universal military training is dangerous to the American way of life. But one of the sharpest arguments was made by Mr. Philip Randolph, the president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and the Rev. Grant Reynolds, former chaplain who is now the commissioner of correction of the state of New York, at the recent hearings of the armed forces committee of the Senate. They endured segregation in the armed forces in the last war because Hitlerian racist doctrines were an even greater threat than our own discriminatory practices. Now they do not see any enemy of our country on the horizon that threatens them in the same way. So they have flatly stated that they will call for civil disobedience if universal military training is passed without provision for non-segregation.

The only reaction that many of the Senators had was horror. It would have to be an emotional reaction, because logic would demand acceptance. It requires mental gymnastics to get around the idea that if we are going all out in this country to preserve the democratic way of life, then we had better have democratic practices at the core.

We salute Mr. Randolph and Mr. Reynolds for their dramatic unveiling of the dishonesty that is at the heart of our pretensions to democracy.

"QUOTES"

AN EDITORIAL in one of our leading papers, referring to some of the great issues that we face, closed with this sentence: "This is no time for little men or little motives." There is a unique service that only the Church can render to the world at our door. We may speak of new trends but there are eternal Christian verities that are unchanged and unchanging. Christians must have a conviction. They must live with conviction and they must plan with conviction: the conviction that Christ spoke to the world in salvation and power.

—MRS. J. D. BRAGG
President of the Home Missions Council

Fortieth Anniversary

1948 marks the fortieth birthday of the Home Missions Council. During its first thirty-two years the Council led a double life. The Council of Women for Home Missions and the men's Home Missions Council were both organized in 1908. Interdenominational cooperation was the order of the day, and the same year saw the beginning of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Until 1940 the two home mission groups followed parallel lines, but unlike the parallels of geometry, which continue to infinity knowing not what the other does, these met and eventually merged into the Home Missions Council of North America as it is known today.

During the parallel period, each group became identified with a distinct philosophy. The men's group functioned largely in terms of fellowship and of exchange of ideas and plans; the women's council engaged actively in supporting and administering projects.

In 1919-20 the Interchurch World Movement made an extensive survey of the home mission field. The findings emphasized special needs in the area of migrant labor. This report became a springboard for interdenominational effort. By allocation the problem of agricultural migrant labor was assigned to the Council of Women for Home Missions, which immediately undertook a field program. Migrant labor engaged by lumber, oil, and mining interests became the responsibility of the men's Council, which assigned them by special agreement to individual denominations.

With the merger of the two councils, both philosophies were integrated into the total program of the Home Missions Council of North America. Representatives of the Home Missions Boards of the twenty-three constituent denominations meet in committees to coordinate programs and consider common problems; and the executive staff administers special projects on an interdenominationl basis at the request of the boards.

A glance at the list of committees appointed by the boards for conference and consultation suggests the scope of interdenominational home mission interest: Alaska; Christian Approach to the Jews; Church Building and Bureau of Architecture; City and Bilingual Work; Comity and Cooperation; Intermountain Area; Missionary Personnel; Policy; Promotion and Publicity; West Indies; Youth and Student Work.

On the project level, the interdenominational ministry of the Home Missions Council includes agricultural migrant labor, Indian work supplementary to denominational missions, and a Negro program in the rural South. These programs are supported in part by appropriations from some of the constituent boards and in larger measure by offerings from World Day of Prayer services on the first Friday in Lent, sponsored by the United Council of Church Women.

Among the representatives of the Protestant Episcopal Church taking an active part in the Home Missions Council are: Rev. George A. Wieland, member of the executive committee; Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, recording secretary of the Home Missions Council and member of the town and country committee; Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, member of administrative and policy committees; Miss Ellen Gammack, member and former chairman of the committee on missionary personnel; and Rev. Almon R. Pepper, member of the committee on city and bilingual work.

The Home Missions Front

by William Clemes

Director of Missions Public Relations Office

WHY Home Missions? Critics ask the question, and to uphold their argument, point to the fact that the United States is already a Christian nation. Send missionaries to India, China, and Africa, they say. We don't need them here.

What are the facts? America has two and a half million migrant farm workers, whose intermittent income often totals less than $500 a year. America has 60,000 ill and half-starved Navajo Indians. America has two million sharecroppers in the South, their standard of living comparable to that of the average Chinese or East Indian.

And what about Georgia's K.K.K. recent beating of two newsmen? About the possibility that Congress has voted to confiscate the land and timber resources before the settlement of Alaskan Indian claims? What about the restrictions under which Negro Jackie Robinson played during his first season with the Brooklyn Dodgers? Isn't work needed among New York City's growing Puerto Rican population?

The Rev. Mark A. Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council, recently said that New York City represents the greatest missionary field both in the United States or anywhere else in the world. A walk through New York's Bowery or Harlem will emphasize what Dr. Dawber means.

There can be no doubt what home missions means to needy areas within the United States. Christianization must see vital growth here through home missions just as it must abroad through foreign missions. But where do we start? What is to be Protestantism's strategy on the home missions front?

The Home Missions Council exists to answer such questions. It represents the Home Missions Boards of twenty-three Protestant denominations, including the Protestant Episcopal. What are some of the policies and plans being shaped by council members? What important movements are playing a part in the over-all strategy of Protestant missions?

A report by a special committee on the future of Home Missions says that one of the most far reaching developments in recent years has been the unprecedented population shift caused by the war. Excluding the members of the armed forces, about one eighth of our population changed residence within four years. During the first post-war year, more than six million civilians changed homes.

This resulted in a redistribution of special racial elements, namely, the Negroes. It changed the social composition of many communities; affected the stability of the family and other social institutions, including the Church; involved the establishment of new communities. The Council feels this population shift calls for a study to determine whether social injustice or lack of economic opportunity caused the migrancy, and what the Church can do to remedy the causes of migrancy.

To cope with the problems of post-war migrancy, the Council believes a new kind of ministry will have to be developed. For example, instead of building churches to serve just certain groups, the Council sees the need to serve the whole community, coupled with an extension of the ministry to new communities, migrant groups, and others unreached by existing agencies. Above all, the Council sees the need for an intensified and co-operative evangelistic effort.

Tied in closely with the problems caused by population shifts is the Church's problem of dealing with special racial groups. The Council always has stressed a pioneering ministry to all racial and social groups. In the past, this has been done along lines of group segregation. Recent developments however show that this sort of ministry should be discarded in favor of a more realistic approach.

The Council now recommends that every means be found to eliminate racial segregation, and to bring the Christian ministry to all people on the basis of community, irrespective of race or social status. This calls for joining forces with groups outside the Church in positive measures to relieve tensions and promote mutual understanding among all races and classes.

One reason the Council urges prompt action in this field is the rapid growth of secular movements.

"In all the wide, strange world, at least a cat is company," is the caption given this picture by the Home Missions Council worker who sent it in from the migrant field

Many such organizations have taken a firm stand on questions of social welfare, at the same time playing down the spiritual values involved. Protestantism divided organizationally, and even in point of view of many vital issues, is at a disadvantage. The Council feels, therefore, that any action in the field of race relations must be undertaken as far as possible on a cooperative basis, if such action is to be effective.

These, then, are some of the more general problems facing the home missions enterprise here. What about specific areas for the future development of home missions?

ONE of the most needy and in some respects the least cultivated areas on the home missions field is Alaska. This area has not only had a tremendous post war population growth, but is rapidly becoming the left flank in the defense of the North American continent. Those great defense preparations along the western shoreline—at one point 100 miles from Russian territory—are themselves a missionary challenge.

Take Fairbanks. It is the center of great activity and rapid development. Thousands of defense workers, tourists, settlers, homesteaders, and soldiers throng its streets. Ladd Field, a military base, is on the outskirts of town, and one of the country's largest air bases is close by. Yet Fairbanks, representing a vital link in our national defense, accepts and condones prostitution. Its ill-famed row of brothels known as "The Line" runs along Fourth Street in the heart of town, less than a block from the offices of the United States Marshal and other Federal officials.

Prostitution in Fairbanks is not only a mockery of our American morals but constitutes a threat to health. The American Medical Association, which sent a group to report on medical conditions in Alaska, reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association of October 25, 1947 that "venereal disease is one of the serious medical problems of the Alaskan territory." The Churches and other civic groups have been too weak and small to overcome the forces of well-organized vice. They admit to their failure.

The liquor traffic in Alaska is another problem home mission boards might well tackle. Alaska has the highest per capita expenditure for liquor of any country in the world. In Ketchikan, a population of 6,000 spends nearly $5,000,000 a year for liquor, only about $130,000 for education. Joe E. Brown, the comedian, once described Anchorage as "the biggest saloon I have ever seen." The American Medical Association report referred to earlier says that "alcoholism plays an important role in spreading venereal disease. General Everest, the commanding officer of Ladd Field, informed this group that most of the soldiers infected stated that they had been intoxicated at the time of exposure."

Still another field for interdenominational teamwork in Alaska can be found among the Eskimos and Indians. Most denominations connected with the Home Missions Council have started splendid projects among these groups.

However, recent legislative developments are beginning to threaten native groups with serious economic hardship. A bill passed at the last Congressional session authorizing the Secretary of the Department of the Interior to sell timber on the Tongass National Forest is a measure against which home mission boards can unite. On the surface, the bill looks good. It provides mutual benefits to both the United States and Alaska by permitting the Secretary of the Interior to sell timber to commercial companies for pulp wood and paper manufacture.

But behind that bill is a story of discrimination and unfair treatment. While the bill promises that royalties received from the sale of land will be impounded to meet any judgments in favor of the Indians, no procedure has been set up to enable the Indians to secure this money.

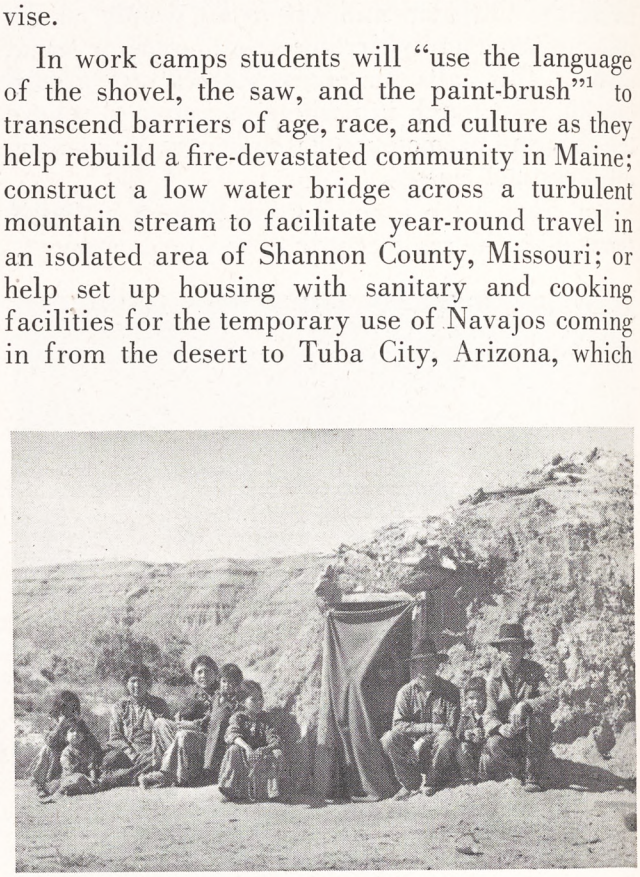
Complicating the picture is the fact that Indians have no deed or records to show possession of the land. Before the white man, the Indians impressed people that certain lands belonged to certain individuals by staging feasts and ceremonials. Congress has passed measures recognizing these possessory rights, but little has been done to settle them.

Meantime a San Francisco court has handed down a decision making the United States the sole landholder in Alaska. The court says we paid Russia $7,000,000 for control of Alaska, and $200,000 for a clear deed to all the land. This makes Indians squatters on their own homeland. It might well prevent them from ever realizing any benefit from the sale of timber and other resources.

In our zeal to help Europe it might be well to focus attention on our own people. It is a task for which home missions is admirably well suited, and to which the Church must devote the best resources of its energy and Christian faith. It is a task for united denominational effort. A beginning has been made among denominations toward an Alaska Council of Churches. The cooperative approach is essential to ultimate solution not only of Alaska's social and spiritual problems, but those of America and the world.

The Summer Service Enterprise

By



LOUISA R. SHOTWELL

Assistant Secretary of the Home Missions Council

"WE DID everything from scrubbing floors to preaching," wrote a Princeton Seminary student about her 1947 summer under the Presbyterian Board of National Missions at Ows-Lee Parish in the Kentucky Mountains. Begun in 1915 by the Congregational Church, picked up by other denominations and agencies, and greatly expanded in the 1930's by the American Friends Service Committee, student summer service by 1948 has snowballed to colossal proportions.

Upwards of three thousand students from seminary and graduate schools, from college, and even a few from high school will participate this year in summer service projects. From practically all of the thirty-two sponsoring agencies come reports of applications from twice as many qualified candidates as they have resources to place and supervise.

In work camps students will "use the language of the shovel, the saw, and the paint-brush"[1] to transcend barriers of age, race, and culture as they help rebuild a fire-devastated community in Maine; construct a low water bridge across a turbulent mountain stream to facilitate year-round travel in an isolated area of Shannon County, Missouri; or help set up housing with sanitary and cooking facilities for the temporary use of Navajos coming in from the desert to Tuba City, Arizona, which now has no place for Indians to stay overnight.

This hogan on the Navajo Reservation is home to the grandmother, the mother and father and the seven children. They sleep on sheepskins laid out on the dirt floor. They haul their water five miles. Wild peaches and pinon nuts serve as staples of their diet, varied occasionally by mutton, rabbit or goat meat. They speak only Navajo Several denominations organize caravans, in which teams of volunteers come together for training and spend each succeeding week in a different community directing recreation and giving the pastor a lift with his local youth program. At the end of the summer the caravan teams meet to share their experiences and discover ways of applying what they have learned to their home communities.

A variation of the summer service pattern is work in industry, sponsored chiefly by the YWCA, YMCA, and related groups, with students living cooperatively, getting their own jobs on the production line, and sharing a guided program of discussions with labor, management, and community leaders.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in its summer opportunities emphasizes community service. Some of its students this summer will conduct vacation church schools on the Crow Creek Indian Reservation in South Dakota. Others will direct recreation in a Negro mission in Cincinnati or work with interracial children's clubs in a Philadelphia church neighborhood house. In the rural field some will share the parish program of the Honey Branch Mission in a mining and mountain top area of southwestern Virginia; some will participate in rural training institutes like that at Valle Crucis, North Carolina, followed by eight weeks of field work.

Across the country from New York to Oregon the Home Missions Council will place two hundred students in 1948 to assist with family ministry in agricultural migrant labor camps. Under careful supervision they will organize recreation for all ages, make friendly calls in migrant shacks, conduct classes in crafts and story-telling, arrange worship services, and help to interpret the migrant to the community that depends on his labors but often resents his presence.

Representing the youth interests of the twenty-three mission boards constituting the Home Missions Council, the youth and student work committee has just issued Vacations That Count,[2] a guide book for the student going for the first time into summer service. Written in a lively style by one herself not many years removed from the student category, it manages to present a wholesome and even glamorous challenge while offering the student practical advice on how to get along with his fellow workers and with the community; how to avoid entanglement in local feuds; how to use resources at hand, enlist local leadership, estimate his own abilities in terms of the job to be accomplished, write a news release, give a talk, make a parish call. Interspersed are wise admonitions on dress, dating, regular hours, letter-writing, diary-keeping, and similar tense and tender subjects.

The parent who covets summer service experience for his college son or daughter can do no better than to drop carelessly on the family coffee table a copy of Vacations That Count. If the summer service idea hasn't yet caught up with his offspring, this should turn the trick.

Progress in the Rural South

by Harry V. Richardson

Director of the Home Missions Council Program in the Rural South

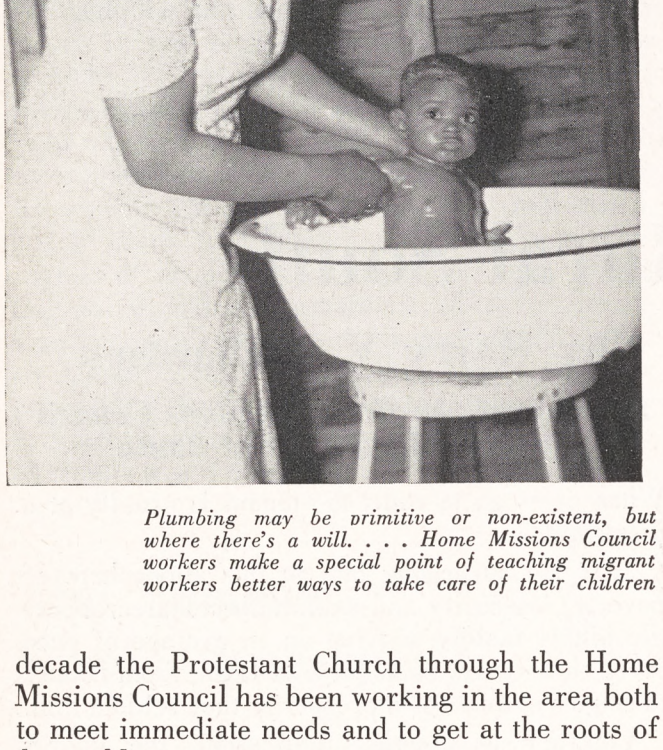
AT THE present time there are between five and six million Negroes in the rural South who make their livings wholly or partly on Southern farms. This body of people, representing nearly half of the Negro group in America, have long constituted one of the nation's severest social problems.

Three-fourths of those who farm are sharecroppers; that is, they neither own nor effectively control the land that they work. Their income is small and uncertain, often insufficient to meet a year's current debts. As a rule houses are shabby and unsanitary, homelife is loose, and most of the cultural values that make up the American standard of living are almost completely absent.

In addition to their economic and cultural poverty, the sharecroppers enjoy little security in their communities and little legal protection. Agreements covering tenure and crop division are generally unwritten, which means that financial settlements are often unsatisfactory if not dishonest. When cases go to court the tenant is usually at a disadvantage.

It is not surprising that in this atmosphere of poverty, insecurity and exploitation sharecroppers are highly mobile, moving on an average of once every three years from farm to farm, from county to county in quest of a prosperity they seldom find.

Contrary to popular impression, the poorer agricultural classes are not overly religious. Church membership among them is low, and the type of church service offered to them is low. Ministers are generally poorly trained, and seldom live with the people, with the result that the church has little effect upon the daily life of the country Christian.



These conditions are true for both white and Negro sharecroppers, but for the Negro they are aggravated by the Southern race problems which intensify troubles and make simple living often a difficult problem.

Then to make matters worse, there is today the fact of change, swift and sweeping, in Southern agriculture. The movement of the cotton center from the Southeast to the Southwest; the mechanization of cotton production in all its phases; the change to cattle raising in the Southeast; the increase in large, heavily capitalized farms; the increasing use of machinery and heavy equipment—these changes are steadily throwing thousands out of work, altering old patterns of living, and generally adding to the instability and insecurity of the disadvantaged masses in the rural South.

But the sharecropper problem, bad as it is, is by no means new to the Church. It has long rested heavily on the nation's conscience. For nearly a decade the Protestant Church through the Home Missions Council has been working in the area both to meet immediate needs and to get at the roots of the problem.

In general, the Council works through the churches in the area. For instance, there are today over 24,000 rural Negro churches in the South with a membership of nearly three millions. Recognizing that this church can be a tremendous force in improving rural life, the Council conducts a two-fold ministry to rural churchmen. The first effort is to train ministers now in service to be better social as well as spiritual leaders of their folk. Institutes, short courses, extension classes and workshops all offer to the earnest pastor a wealth of opportunities for self-improvement. The studies are suited to adults of limited academic background. Courses range from purely theological subjects, such as study of the Bible, to practical subjects such as making the home more Christian or setting up a local credit union.

In 1947 the Home Missions Council conducted 37 institutes, 16 extension classes and 21 workshops, with a total attendance of 1563. Of that number 279 were rural church women, who took courses in church and home improvement.

Although the Council works directly in the field, its work is primarily demonstrational and initiatory. The number to be served runs into the millions. No one central agency can effectively serve so many. The role of the Council is to pioneer in methods and activities that can be adopted by the interested church bodies. This has already happened in the case of institutes. Today practically all major denominations conduct institutes for training their rural pastors. The Council works with the various Church bodies to extend their rural training services.

Training pastors in service is one means of attaining immediate improvement, but the most effective attack on the problem lies in training a new crop of rural ministers, young men trained from the ground up specifically for rural church leadership. In cooperation with the Phelps-Stokes Fund fourteen rural church departments have now been established in as many strategic Negro theological seminaries. Each department offers courses in the rural church sufficient to constitute a major field of study. During the seminary years students get practical training in supervised field work. Upon graduation they are prepared to give to rural communities the kind of trained resident leadership which is now so sadly lacking. In the past school year, two hundred seventy students were enrolled in the departments, and thirty were majoring in the rural church. This number of consecrated, trained young leaders, though small, bespeaks a new day, a better day in the disadvantaged areas of American agriculture.

To conduct this program of rural church development, the Home Missions Council has recruited and trained some twenty young people of outstanding leadership, who are now at work in nine Southern states. It has also trained a number of others who are working in their respective denominations.

The roots of the sharecropper problem lie deep in social and economic conditions. Patience and persistent work are necessary if the problem is to be solved. But given enlightened, consecrated Christian leadership, this problem, like all problems, in time will yield.

Peace Train Carries Pilgrims To See the President

Draw Up a Program for Peace Which Is Being Urged Upon Governmental and U.N. Officials

Edited by Sara Dill

Los Angeles:—A Peace Train that carried 250 clergymen and other religious leaders to Washington to urge peace to President Truman and other officials of government, left here April 21. It will be joined by other delegations from San Francisco, Portland and Salt Lake City. Leaflets, which have been sent to thousands of churches on the Pacific to urge the project, states that "Recent acts of our government have drawn us closer to war with Russia. War menaces American lives and American freedom. We have ignored the United Nations and gone backward to the old European methods of power politics and military alliances which led to the last two wars and which threaten to lead us to World War III. Those methods must be abandoned. Let us return to the American tradition of peace and justice through a union of states. We must speak loudly to restore civilian control of our government and its diplomacy. Let us organize a Peace Train to bring to Washington our demand for a constructive peace program. Our government should summon, at once, all nations to a world constitutional convention, like the one held at Philadelphia in 1787. Let us work through a supranational government to stop aggression and totalitarianism. Let it police the world in our stead. In the meantime, let us work through the U. N. and other international organizations, not outside them nor against them. That is the American way, the democratic way. Our lives and liberties are at stake. Let us speak up while there is yet time."

Word has also been received that a similar Peace Train left Portland, Oregon, on April 20, which will join the California train in Chicago where a two and a half day conference will be held with ministers and scientists before going on to Washington. It is expected by the promoters of the project that large numbers will join en route. Before leaving Portland a training school was held with the following nine-point program resulting:

(1) Refer the European Recovery Program to the UN and offer to increase appropriations to equal those for war purposes. (2) Recall our military missions from all over the world. (3) Announce to the UN our desire for universal abolition of compulsory military training. (4) Reduce American tariffs to encourage trade and continue full support of the international trade organization. (5) Turn over American foreign air bases to the UN for trusteeship. (6) Establish a policy on immigration and naturalization that will treat all peoples equally, and open the door to more than our share of refugees. (7) Announce our willingness to participate in an international constitutional convention which shall be open to all nations which are willing to join. (8) Antidote inflammatory speeches by Americans. (9) Appropriate as much money for research in human relations as for weapons. "We must show by deeds that we do not want war with Russia."

found that they had created a unique situation in the musical world. They had given American organists a beautiful and flexible bell instrument with almost unlimited scope, but they soon discovered that only a small collection of bell music was available for its performance.

As exclusive producers of "Carillonic Bells," Schulmerich Electronics decided to find a way to interest composers in writing music that would swell the world's file of bell compositions. Schulmerich's recent contest for the best compositions for "Carillonic Bells" was the result, and the winners proved that American composers can meet the standards of the old world. The judges of the contest felt that the great dynamic range of "Carillonic Bells" permitted the contestants full sway of their creative talents, and inspired some future classics in bell music.

The distinguished judges — Harl McDonald, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, James Francis Cook, editor of Etude, John Finley Williamson, president of Westminster Choir College, Princeton, N. J., and Seth Bingham, associate professor of music at Columbia University and organist of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, N. Y. — unanimously picked Mr. Robert S. Elmore's poem Speranza as the winning composition. His opera, It Began At Breakfast has the distinction of being the first American opera to be televised, and his symphonic and choral works are finding favor with major conductors and organizations, among whom are Leopold Stokowski, Frank Black and Eugene Ormandy.

David S. York of Princeton, New Jersey, won the second prize for his Divinum Mysterium which is the second movement of his original organ sonata. Mr. York is a graduate of Yale University with a bachelor of music degree and in 1946 received a master of music degree from Westminster Choir College, majoring in composition under Dr. Henri N. Switten. At present Mr. York is assistant to the head of the theory department of Westminster Choir College and organist at the Second Presbyterian Church of Princeton.

Third prize was awarded to Rollo F. Maitland of Philadelphia for his composition, Poem for Bells with Organ. The entire nation knows of Dr. Maitland's fame as a composer and organist.

The winning compositions will be made available in printed form in the near future.

Sacramento Convention

Eureka, Cal.:—The convention of the diocese of Sacramento met at Christ Church here, April 5-6, with Bishop Lane Barton of Eastern Oregon the speaker at the convention dinner. Business was largely routine, though Bishop Noel Porter would hardly say so since he was handed a purse of $2,500. He also announced that Trinity Church, Sacramento, was now the Pro-cathedral of the diocese.

Lexington Cathedral

Lexington, Ky.:—Bishop Moody of the diocese of Lexington has announced plans for a cathedral in the mountain town of Beattyville which will be "missionary in nature but unconventionally broad in scope." The reason for Beattyville, he said, is to dramatize interest in missionary work. It will have no active parish but will provide the diocese with a non-parochial center belonging equally to each parish and mission. He stated that no denominational lines would be drawn as to its use and that it would be open to other church groups.

Bishop Moody also announced the intention of building in Lee County a conference and recreational center, which he hopes will become a focal point for evangelism and youth work.

Elected Bishop

Boston:—A theological student at Boston University has been notified of his election as a bishop of the Greek Orthodox Church on the island of Cyprus. Markarios Kykkotis, 34, said he would return to Cyprus this month to assume the bishopric of Kition. He will thus give up a scholarship awarded him by the Methodist Church in this country. His new diocese includes 60,000 communicants out of a population of 400,000 persons on the island. He will be the youngest of four bishops there.

Church School Service

Edge Rock, Calif.:—Children from all parts of the diocese of Los Angeles gathered in the bowl of Occidental College here on April 11 for their annual service and mite box rally. Ordinarily held in the cathedral in Los Angeles, the service has become so popular that it was decided to hold it this year in the bowl which seats about 4,000.

Bishop Loring Dies

Springfield, Ill.:—Bishop Richard T. Loring, 46, consecrated Bishop of the diocese of Springfield only last October, died here on April 16 after a brief illness. He is survived by his wife and three children, and by Bishop Oliver Loring of Maine.

Visiting Bishops

San Francisco: — Three visiting bishops were guests of honor at the convention of the diocese of California, meeting at Grace Cathedral here April 13-14. Bishop Thomas Wright of East Carolina preached the sermon at the service that opened the convention; Bishop Stephen F. Bayne Jr. of Olympia was the speaker at a missionary mass meeting; Bishop Winfred Ziegler of Wyoming was one of the speakers at a joint meeting. Bishop Bayne also was the speaker at a dinner in the interest of the college work program of the diocese. Bishop Karl Block of course presided at all sessions and meetings.

New Dean

Los Angeles:—The Rev. John M. Krumm, rector of St. Matthew's, San Mateo, California, has accepted an election to the deanship of St. Paul's Cathedral here. He takes over his new duties on April 20, the day before the present dean, F. Eric Bloy, is consecrated bishop of the diocese. Mr. Krumm, 35, is a graduate of the University of California and the Virginia Seminary and did graduate work at Yale Divinity School while he was assistant at St. Paul's, New Haven.

Plan for Peace

Washington: — The churches of the nation were called upon by a group of 125 leading churchmen from 12 denominations and 20 states, meeting in an emergency session here April 6-8, to take immediate action to oppose "the effort to put the United States on a wartime basis," and to restore to civilian leadership the policy-making powers of the government.

In a program which called for a national movement, directed toward Congressional action, the churchmen asked for the defeat of Selective Service and UMT, the advancement of peace through the development of the United Nations, the continuance of the "policy of sincere and patient negotiation without threat of military force," U. S. leadership for world-wide disarmament under law, "fresh efforts to find a basis for the control of atomic energy under the United Nations," and the utilization, as fully as possible, of international machinery in carrying out the European Recovery Program. Early passage of legislation supporting entrance of a fair share of DP's, and Congressional approval of the World Health Organization, three-year extension of Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and re-enactment of grain controls for non-essential uses were also advocated.

The churchmen, not content with the adoption of basic principles, created a national strategy which is intended to reach the grass roots. Local churches are being called upon to begin immediately an expression of individual opinion through letters, a door-to-door peace information service, and the utilization of all forms of communications to broadcast the message of realistic peace.

"It is our purpose to establish immediately a national movement to carry out the principles which we have adopted at this conference. This movement is to be channeled through all existing agencies now organized, by the various Protestant denominations, to further the interests of world peace. It will also be coordinated into the peace programs of such organizations as the Federal Council of Churches and the United Council of Church Women. It will utilize all means of communications. The movement, while operating on the national and state levels, will be centered chiefly in local communities," the strategy report said.

"We call upon the American government and the American people to take vigorous leadership in applying principles of love, law, justice, and moral responsibility," the churchmen said. "We call upon all Christians to undergird the program for peace in confidence and faith that empowered by God they will speak with clarity and force to their representatives in Congress in order that our national action may be directed toward the peace of the world."

They challenged the nations of the world to give us a portion of their national sovereignty in the interests of lasting peace. "We believe the foreign policy of the United States should be based upon the determination to achieve peace through developing the United Nations rather than upon unilateral diplomacy backed by military might," the report declared. "World peace demands that nations limit national sovereignty in a world system under law. We believe, therefore, that American policy should have as its objective the patient, persistent development of the United Nations in the direction of some form of world government."

While supporting ERP the churchmen said that "we believe that no aid program should be tied in with military purposes, but related so far as possible to the organized agencies of the United Nations such as the Economic and Social Council where no veto exists. We recognize that the solution of the world's problems makes imperative increased sharing and sacrifice to an extent not yet contemplated by our citizens. The real enemies to be overcome are hunger, poverty, desperation, and chaos. A large section of the American people have thus far failed to align themselves with the suffering of others. The challenge of the emergency is for Christians to make the essential sacrifices that all mankind may share in the human dignity that we cherish for ourselves. It would be far wiser to utilize a large proportion of the American budget for such needs rather than to dissipate it in military re-armament."

Dies Suddenly

Emmorton, Md.:—The Rev. Bates Gilbert Burt, a retired clergyman of the diocese of Michigan who has been officiated here at St. Mary's Church, died suddenly on April 5. He has been rector of All Saints', Pontiac, Mich., from 1922 to 1947 and played a distinguished part in the life of the diocese. He is survived by three children, one of whom is the Rev. John H. Burt, chaplain to Episcopal students at the University of Michigan.

Active Laymen

Columbia, S. C.:—Laymen of St. John's here, organized as a committee on evangelism, gave a five minute devotion broadcast daily over a local station each day in Lent. Each of the forty men taking part read from the Bible, gave a brief talk and closed with prayers. They were also responsible for the mid-week services in Lent, one of them taking the service and another leading a discussion on some phase of Christian work. Further, the men met Sunday evenings in the parish house to discuss various phases of evangelism.

Benefit Bazaar

New York: — St. Bartholomew's Church will hold a bazaar, April 22-23, the proceeds of which will go to St. Timothy's Hospital, Cape Mount, Liberia; the work of the Rev. Kimber Den with blind children in China; the support of the social service work of the parish. Special features will be a sports shop, millinery fashion show, bridge, white elephant booth, flower shop, country store and game booths. The Rev. C. P. Deems, assistant to Rector Paull T. Sargent, is the director.

Bishop Whittemore of Western Michigan, preaching at the service of installation of Bishop Richard Emrich as diocesan, held at the cathedral the same day, stressed the great need of a teaching ministry and a learned people. He mentioned the gift of teaching which Bishop Emrich has and dwelt upon the need for such a gift at this time when new life is stirring the Church. Other bishops attending the service were Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee who, as president of the province, installed Bishop Emich; Bishop Page of Northern Michigan; Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis and Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana. In the procession were representatives of the mayor and common council of Detroit; a number of clergy of other communions; representatives of the A. F. of L. and the C.I.O., the local Council of Churches, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

United Ministry

Cambridge, Mass.:—An excellent example of co-operative work and worship is given by the United Ministry to students at Harvard. For four years the Protestant and Jewish faiths have worked together in this co-operative organization. A chaplain for students assigned by the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and Unitarian churches worked together through the United Ministry together with the Society of Friends, the International Student Association and the Inter-denomination of Phillips Brooks House.

The chaplains of the different churches and the secretaries of the organizations meet every month to discuss matters of mutual interest and to make plans for their combined religious impact upon the thousands of students in Cambridge who attend Harvard, Mass. Institute of Technology, Radcliffe and less well known institutions.

The student work of the Episcopal Church is carried on under the direction of the Rev. Frederic B. Kellogg who is the chaplain for students under the Rhinelander Memorial Foundation. The base of his activities is the chaplain's house which stands alongside Christ Church. Mr. Kellogg holds a student communion service in Christ Church every Sunday morning at nine o'clock, and a meeting of the Canterbury Club at his home in the evening. He takes part in the services of Christ Church and receives every possible support in his work from the rector, the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, and the vestry of historic Christ Church.

While the Canterbury Club and the various other clubs meet every Sunday evening several times a year the students of all the churches represented in the United Ministry join for a service of worship followed by an address on some phase of religion by an outstanding speaker.

Rector Retires

Minneapolis (RNS): — The Rev. Frederic Tyner is retiring as rector of St. Luke's here, but in announcing that he will turn the job over to a younger man, the 70-year old parson states that he has no intention of giving up his ministry. For the past 22 years he has presided at annual "golfers' dinners" which, over the years, have been attended by hundreds of golfers. Mr. Tyner is known to thousands also for his column in a local paper called "What's Your Score?"

Newark Dean Speaks

Atlantic City, N. J.:—Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark, an editor of THE WITNESS, was the speaker at the annual dinner of the Episcopal Service for Youth, held here April 20. He spoke on the philosophy of a Church social agency.

Bishop Creighton Better

Detroit: — Bishop Creighton, retired bishop of Michigan, and Mrs. Creighton left here immediately following his retirement on March 31 and are shortly to take up residence in Washington, D. C. Before doing so the Bishop is to enter a hospital for a complete check-up. His condition when he left Detroit was reported as "fairly good."

Canon French Honored

State College, Pa.:—A chancel window was recently dedicated at St. Andrew's here in thanksgiving for almost thirty years of service to the parish by the former rector, Canon Edward M. Frear and Mrs. Frear. A reception in their honor followed the service.

Memorial to Primate

Toronto: — A committee of 40 members of the Church of England in Canada is seeking $50,000 for a memorial to the late primate, Archbishop Derwyn T. Owen. The plan is to establish a lectureship on the theme, "The Church in Relation to Present Day Problems," and two scholarships for theological students.

Child Guidance Clinic

Newark, N. J.:—Following an address by Spencer Miller Jr., who is the commissioner of highways of New Jersey, on the growing movement in the Oranges and Maplewood for a child guidance clinic, the board of social relations of the diocese endorsed the project.

New Headquarters

Charleston, S. C.:—The diocese of South Carolina has moved into its new headquarters at 138 Westworth Street, Charleston, 6.

DR. BERTHA P. RODGER
Churchwoman of Ridgewood, N. J.

That was a splendid article by Bishop Hall on "Youth and Sex Behavior" (WITNESS, March 11). It is high time the Church became more actively interested in these problems of young people.

Few will disagree that the home is the best place for sex instruction to be given. There it can be suited to the needs of each child as they arise and the ideals of the family passed along. It is not the actual facts but the attitudes toward them that are so important. However, leaders of young people find that the home has not been doing the job. Young people are confused and misinformed and unwilling to talk things over with their parents—or unable to. They are pathetically grateful for a chance to talk frankly with someone in whom they have confidence and whose knowledge they respect.

There is a fine opportunity for the Church to give them the help they need and want. It means far more than just teaching the facts of reproduction. It means real education for marriage and parenthood and Christian family living.

At least one diocese is putting into operation a plan for such education. Are there others?

MISS C. M. WEEKS
Churchwoman of Boston

There is an occasional number of THE WITNESS that brings me that peace and quiet that I look for in the church. However too often I am urged to stir myself about something; to protest against what you consider an infringement of civil liberties; to urge more rights for Negroes; to write Washington about something or other. Since these things upset me so, I am asking you to discontinue my subscription.

MISS MARGARET JAMES
Churchwoman of Montgomery, Alabama

Here is a suggestion from the deep south to those of you in the north who are vigorously fighting for anti-segregation down here. Show us just how real and sincere you are in your desire for this movement. Get busy and plan to work out a mass migration of Negroes from our section to yours. Work on it just as you would for foreign refugees. Begin finding openings for them up there in work—begin a campaign for good housings for them in the midst of your own residential sections. Open your homes to them until they can be accommodated. Open your church doors wide for them to enter every Sunday, in hordes, to worship. . . . Be prepared to meet them in close social contacts everywhere you go. We are "from Missouri" down here and must be shown, instead of being criticized and preached to by a section that has little or no Negro problem to meet.

Until you do this, and face the real issue, and prove that such an intolerable situation is possible — we find your arguments very empty. For instance, if we listen to the articles written by members of the Negro race, urging common church worship, the result would be a very real race problem. Such close social contacts are unthinkable, and would only mean a gradual dying of the church down here — or perhaps services held in private dwellings. Here is an opportunity, therefore, for the advocates of anti-segregation in the north to really work towards the first convincing step in the movement. Take them all up there — and work from there.

REV. DAISUKE KITAGAWA
Pastor, Twin City Japanese Christian Congregation, Minneapolis, Minn.

In the House of Representatives is now pending a bill introduced by Congressman Walter H. Judd of Minnesota (HR 5004) which proposes to provide the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all immigrants having a legal right to permanent residence and to make immigration quotas available to Asiatic and Pacific peoples. In brief, this bill will do away with the Oriental Exclusion Act of 1924 entirely, thus completing the steps in the right direction which were taken by the United States Congress when it repealed the Exclusion Act against Chinese, Filipinos, and the East Indians.

One unfortunate factor in connection with this legislation is that it is so closely connected with the Civil Rights Program put forth by President Truman which the political forces of the South are deadly set against.

In view of the fact that the entire world is looking up to the moral leadership of the United States as well as her political and economic power, it is of vital significance that the darkest spot of this nation's law, namely, the immigration and naturalization restrictions on the basis of racial background, be eliminated. It is from this standpoint that I feel the Church people ought to give all the support they can to this bill.

As you probably know, at present, Asiatics, except the East Indians, Chinese, and Filipinos, are barred from both naturalization and immigration privileges. As one of the Asiatics, the Japanese have been, and still are, "aliens ineligible for naturalization" and as such are subject to unjust legal discrimination in the form of anti-alien land laws in some states and inability to engage in certain occupations and professions. As long as this discriminatory law is in effect, even Nisei veterans, who risked their lives for this country, have acts and are denied the protection to which returned to find that they are not entirely free from property loss by way of escheat they are entitled.

. . . . What They Say About Home Missions Council Work . . .

. . . among MIGRANTS . . .

May we congratulate the Home Missions Council of North America . . . for its fine work among the agricultural camps of Kern County. . . .

There is a tendency, through the flood of news stories on the plight of European and Asiatic peoples, to forget that we have here at home many people who need help and whose economic position is such that educational and recreational opportunities are extremely limited. . . .

Every assistance should be extended to these (Home Missions Council) workers, who are true missionaries in a field which has been all but forgotten but whose need is still great, not only for material sustenance, but for spiritual assistance.

EDITORIAL "Fine Work" in the BAKERSFIELD CALIFORNIAN, February 1948

. . . among SHARECROPPERS . . .

It seems to me that the Home Missions Council cannot possibly be engaged in a more important work than the encouragement of this program for the training and inspiration of rural ministers in the Southern states. The Phelps-Stokes Fund is glad to be associated with this really important enterprise.

. . . among INDIANS . . .

In our particular area we are in the heart of the Choctaw Nation and many Indian students come to us. These will be the leaders of their generation and I feel that the program of the Home Missions Council, as it reaches these students through such work as that of your Director of Religious Activities, will be the means of raising the standards in many ways, particularly spiritually, of these people.

as for every member of the 23 communions that constitute it, the Home Missions Council is the instrument of united Protestantism on the home mission front. To the secular world it represents the degree of Protestant concern for the sore spots on our national scene. It solicits your support.

Chinese Christian Tells Story Of Changli Incident

As One of Those Taken Prisoner He Relates What Happened on Much-Discussed Occasion

By Dr. H. Y. Chang
Professor at Yenching University

Hartford, Conn.:—I have been greatly surprised to see the reports and read the letters from missionaries in China about the Changli Incident of May 18th to 21st, 1947.

Changli is an important town in Hopei Province on the Peiping-Mukden Railroad, and the location of one of the Methodist mission stations. Early in the morning of the 18th, just after midnight, the town was attacked by the Chinese Peoples Liberation Army forces (Communist), said to number about 20,000 men. They took captive three American missionary women, about thirty Chinese pastors, teachers and evangelists, and five hundred middle school students, boys and girls. I myself was one of the captives. We were informed that they intended to burn down the foreign buildings on the campus. We left the town about six that morning under guard of a small detail of Communist soldiers who led us out of the city and away from the severe fighting that was going on all around us. They marched us slowly until about the middle of the afternoon, telling us they wanted to take us over the mountain to their main base; they finally agreed to let us stay overnight in a village at the base of the mountain, about ten miles from Changli; we were given food and accommodation. We returned to Changli on the afternoon of the 19th. The buildings on the campus had been robbed; seven thousand bags of UNRRA flour stored in a barbed-wire classroom had been taken and distributed to the people and the Communist troops. One building used as an office by the Chinese UNRRA had been burned. (Funds for the rebuilding of this building were later allocated by UNRRA-Ed.)

As a participant in this experience I want to describe it as it appeared to me, a Chinese Christian. This attack by the Communist People's Liberation Army troops was a part of a battle stretching about thirty miles along Peiping-Mukden Railway, with Changli as a major target of attack. The attacking forces were not an unorganized mob, but well-trained, able-bodied fighters, highly disciplined and well-equipped, some of them carrying American weapons.

The attack on the mission compound, the capturing of teachers and students, the plan to burn down the mission buildings, were all deliberate. The motive was opposition to American imperialism; they suspect Christians as collaborators with the reactionary Nanking Government and American imperialists. They thought they could carry these captives away to their area and "re-educate these foolish and semi-reactionary Christian people." They were eager to get us "over the mountain to the main base." The secretary of the provincial government met us after we had gone about seven miles, welcomed us happily, and said that for a long time they had been planning to capture such a group. He said he knew the morning's trek had been a tense experience but that "over the mountain you will feel a new atmosphere; the only thing you will miss in your new environment will be the two-story American type of buildings of the mission compound. You will not need to worry about your economic life—you will have food, clothing and shelter, more than sufficient; there will be no inflation to worry about because we share and everyone produces."

It is a mistake to credit our release and the decision not to burn the buildings to the tact and persuasive talking we Christians did. The incredible degree of reasonableness on the part of the Communists was a major factor in the situation. We Christians have to admit that we have had an impatient, intolerant, irrational and unchristian attitude toward the Communists; we have to admit that within Church groups Communism is not freely and fairly discussed but that an intense feeling of it as a menace does exist. A humble and careful examination of our experience with the Communists those days leaves us with a feeling of shame. When we suggested that we rest that night and postpone the decision about going over the mountain Mr. Lin, the Communist representative, said he thought this was

Editor's Note: The Changli Incident is frequently mentioned in any discussion of the relationship between the missionary work of the Church and Communism in China. An American missionary of the Methodist Church, Perry O. Hansen, reported in July, 1947 as follows: "Recently a mob of Reds came to the Changli Compound after midnight, forced several of our missionary women on a long trek, looted wildly, stealing all hospital supplies, burned one residence and planned to level the whole set of buildings, forcing the schools into village rooms without any equipment. Only the presence in the compound of some unusually wise and tactful Chinese men who were able to make a fearless and unanswerable argument in favor of the work of the mission, prevented complete destruction of the property."

A different picture of the Incident is here presented by Dr. Chang who recently arrived in the United States to do graduate work at Hartford Seminary. Also a Methodist, he was at the Compound at the time of the Incident and was himself taken prisoner. In addition to being a professor at Yenching University, Dr. Chang is editor of the Christian Farmer magazine and the head of the literature department of the Christian Rural Service Union.

To Report Conferences

The Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector of the Ascension, New York, and WITNESS editor, will report both the Lambeth Conference and the meeting of the Assembly of the World Council of Churches, for this magazine. He will leave for London in July to cover the meeting of the Anglican archbishops and bishops, and will then go to Amsterdam to report the World Council meetings in August. Mr. Foust was the chaplain at West Point from 1933 to 1937 and was dean of the cathedral at Bethlehem, Pa., until 1945 when he became the rector of the Ascension. He has been a member of the editorial board of THE WITNESS since coming to New York and has been chairman of the board for the past year and a half.

a good suggestion. He took out his map, studied it to find a village that could best accommodate this large group; he chose Changkuochuang, about three miles away, a village at the base of the mountain. "There are no troops there and you will feel free as you spend the night." We arrived there at four o'clock; they gave us food ration slips, the same as they issued to their troops; they refused the idea that the mission would later repay; rice and flour were distributed and we cooked it ourselves, in little groups.

The Communists listened to our presentation of the effects of their proposed actions. In attacking Christianity they are attacking something that is good, not something that stands for wrong. Their attempt to reeducate this group of captives would end in failure; no change in them could be made under such circumstances; peoples can change, but the time and form of change has to be considered; the group had left the school under armed guard and under intense gun-fire; the shock suffered by the relatives and friends of the captives would also condition the captives psychologically; there would be rampant talk and gossip, crystallizing into tales about Communist raping of girls; these false tales would be given exaggerated radio and newspaper circulation; the effect on the outside world ought to be considered.

Then there were the three foreign women. We suggested that the best policy of a revolutionary group is to win the people, not only the people of our own country but the people of other countries as well. Undebatedly, American imperialism is not shared by progressives and decent Americans; so a distinction between the decent populace and the reactionary political and military groups is highly necessary. A fair deal to those individuals would be convincing evidence of power.

On the question of burning the houses, we suggested that it was destructive, contrary to their reconstruction program and would but feed the argument of those who say Communists are destructive, that they kill, fire, rape and plunder. Here was a chance to stop these accusations by "removing the fuel from the furnace," as the Chinese proverb says.

The effect of the Communist treatment on our captive group also deserves mention. We were deeply impressed with their discipline in sex behaviour. About midnight three of us, including the principal of the school, went around to the houses in which the girl students were accommodated; we wanted to cheer them with the possibility of a return to Changli the next day. In the third house a peasant with a long white beard was the host. "Teachers," he said to us politely as he pointed to the north with his right hand, "don't worry about these men from the North"; then he pointed to the south, and in a changed tone he said "Those from the South are not reliable." This was an old man, completely ignorant about names of parties and armies; but from his personal experience the difference in the behaviour patterns of the two contending groups was utterly clear to him. The Communist army was of the North and the National troops of the South. One of our fellow captives was a young woman with a few months' old baby. On our way back to Changli we got acquainted with her and she told us that her husband was police head of a certain government coal mine area; they had been visiting relatives in Changli when they were captured. She said, "I used to hate Communists without any reason. My home was not in the area they control and none of my relatives or friends had ever suffered from their hands; but I just hated them as a matter of course." Then her expression changed and she said, "The experience of these two days' captive life with them has changed me like heaven and earth." Then she went on feelingly, "There was no reason for them to treat me exceptionally generously. At every meal they saved two eggs for me from the nutrition provided for their wounded soldiers; each time I refused to take the eggs; but they insisted that I must have them, for the good of the child." Then she gaily displayed the bundle of Communist bank notes that she had from them as a gift for traveling expenses.

The Presiding Bishop is to be the consecrator, with Bishop Davis and Bishop Randall as co-consecrators. The sermon will be by Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh. The service will be at St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo

The experiences of those days challenge us Christians to self-examination; as preparation for such examination we could well take Jesus' words, "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, and perceivest not the beam that is in thine own?"

I want to go back to the question of robbing of the mission campus. Some government school students were carried away as captives too, but their school was not robbed. The Communists flatly admitted that the robbing of mission buildings was an expression of their anti-American imperialism feeling. They accuse the Christian Church of collaboration with the corrupt officials and reactionary militarists of the Nationalists. They say the Church always sides with and follows the steps of the Nationalists and pays little attention to the needy peasants in the liberated areas. One of their publicity men remarked sarcastically, "The formula of the Christian Church is 'Desert the people; Be Anti-Communist'."

One fact we must note about the robbing: it was done also by the local people, by the near-by neighbors. Three days after the Communists had left the city the rear court of the hospital was found, early in the morning, crowded with the returned furniture and equipment. Strict military orders from the Nationalist army had forced the people to give back what they had been permitted to take under the Communist occupation. Some of the Christians wanted to discover and prosecute the neighbors who had stolen the goods, not realizing how this vindictive attitude would strengthen Com-

Our Rural Work

STATISTICS tell us that there are more people in the country than there are in the city; more people who are eager for the gospel of redemption. But the work of a priest in that field is a specialized ministry. The system for organizing a rural parish or mission is not "the city system cut down to the scale of the country." It is rather a peculiar type of work. By placing a premium on the city ministry, that is to say, by making the city ministry the goal of every priest, we negate the purpose of the Church, which is to bring souls into contact with the kingdom of God. The average salary offered to a rural clergyman in one of our larger dioceses is $2,328 a year with a house while in that same diocese the salary offered to a city cleric averages $3,438 a year with house and certain other benefits such as telephone and utilities. Taking the standard of values currently applicable, it would appear that the most important ministry in the eyes of the Church is that of the city parish. Why do we have so many clergy changing jobs in the country with short average tenure in a parish or mission while the normal turnover in city parishes is so much less with a correspondingly longer average tenure?

If we devise a system whereby the country cleric is made a "country cousin," the country cleric sooner or later gets the idea that his ministry is the less important in the eyes of the Church. You say that that is not what the Church intends—and perhaps you are right. But if we do not make the rural ministry as attractive as the city ministry, we shall not be getting rural experts in the country, but simply men who could "not make the grade in the city." Is it necessarily true that a man who cannot do a good job in a city parish is good enough for the rural ministry? It would appear that that is precisely what we are saying when we allow such a wide discrepancy in the salaries of the clergy.

True as is the statement that "there is a peculiar talent to running a large parish," is there not an equal amount of truth in the contention that the country cleric has a peculiar job which requires a special talent? If we think that this is true, then we must want to do something about it. There is a way to do something about it, but it is a way which eliminates competition among parishes and clergy: competition among the parishes because the offer of an outstandingly large salary would be made impossible, and among clergy because they will not all be competing for the few large parishes in a diocese.

For many years we have cloaked under the heading of humility the idea that clergy in smaller parishes and missions should not compete for position because they are called to serve the master. But each of these men is the head of a family, and his family must be fed and clothed. If a smaller parish cannot afford to feed and provide a living for him and his family, then he must seek a larger parish which will be able to do so. You can counter this argument with the statement that no parish should have a minister who cannot afford to pay him, but do you mean that? Do you mean that none except those who can afford it should hear the gospel of Christ?

We go even further to implement this inequality in the Church today, because the Church Pension Fund, which provides a pension for an aged cleric upon his retirement, bases its assessments and pension payments upon what the man's average salary has been for the years of his ministry. In other words, the measure of the reward which we mete out to one who has served faithfully as a priest is how much he earned during his ministry. No other factor is taken into account in the calculation of the pension of a clergyman. That does seem a bit unjust, does it not?

There are certain questions which must be faced unequivocally. Is the city ministry more important than the rural ministry? If not, why do men tend to gravitate toward the city for their ministry? Why is it common thought in our dioceses today

THERE is nothing more delightful than men who are learned gentlemen and also humble Christians, but the Church has suffered from those who have felt that it was enough to be the one without concerning themselves much as to whether they were attempting to be the other. One can never quite get away from those verses in the song of the Blessed Virgin, when she exultingly sings of the time when God shall exalt the humble and meek and send the haughty empty away. The words to me have a very real meaning and I rather fancy Europe would be a joyous place today if prelates and princes had spent more time on the significance of these words and less on the pomps and vanities of their respective official positions.

that after a young priest is ordained, he will go to the country for experience, experience to be used in his later ministry not in the country, but in the city? What are we going to do to overcome the wide discrepancy in clerical salaries?

At least one solution is offered in the basic salary schedule now under study in several dioceses of the Anglican Communion and already in its first stages of operation in one—Johannesburg in South Africa. We cannot offord to ignore this positive step toward the correction of a fault which has become increasingly more glaring through inattention on our part.

WE ARE happy to present this week an interesting and properly disturbing article by one of the foremost theologians and leaders of the Church of England. Alec R. Vidler is librarian at St. Deiniol's Library at Hawarden in Cheshire, England. This is the library at Gladstone's old home and is a place where clergy and others may come for periods of study. He was at one time a member of Selwyn College in Cambridge and a priest of the Oratory of the Good Shepherd. He has written a number of books, including The Development of Modern Catholicism (in collaboration with Dr. Wilfred Knox) which is a study of the development of liberal Catholicism in the Anglican communion. He is also the editor of Theology, the leading Anglo-Catholic theological journal.

PARDON ME, BUT YOUR ENTOMOLOGY HAS BUGS IN IT

AN ARTICLE in a diocesan magazine by one of my favorite religious educators contains the bland assertion that Beatitude means "Be-attitude." Ever since people discovered that Atonement was really derived from "At-one-ment," we have been treated to this sort of uplift by way of inspired but fallacious etymology.

I don't want to spoil anyone's fun, but it spoils mine when I am told that bliss means "blessed," that carnival means "farewell to meat," that a belfry without bells is no true belfry, or that liturgy means "the work of prayer." Boon does not mean the thing I pray for, but the prayer itself, and it has nothing to do with jovial companions. Anthem does not mean "something offered," any more than "tedium" derives from Te Deum.

False etymologies sometimes teach false lessons. You don't have to be blithe to be blessed. You can relax the flesh at a carnival without planning to give up meat. Liturgy means "public work," and this true meaning has rich connotations.

I hope no one will ever ask us to believe that since an umbrella-stand is where you stick umbrellas, Hindustan is where we should stick all Hindus.

We Were Thinking . . .

WE WERE thinking about a story that we heard which dealt with a Roman priest who had been invited to speak to a group of Protestant clergy on the subject "Dead Heresies." He remarked, following the question period, that it was evident to him that many of the heresies were not as dead as he thought! This story has a point to make to those who are planning the evangelization program for our Church.

In Ephesians it is said that our strength as Christians lies in "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all," and it struck us that the reason why our Church needs evangelization is that no longer do we preach "one Lord," nor do our laity abide by "one faith," and as a result we do not present to our world the solid front of a community living within the confines of "one baptism, one God and Father of us all." It is a fact of history that where Jesus Christ is truly preached, and where one faith is truly believed, there is no necessity for evangelization, for the good news is there in that preaching and in that belief. This unity is essential to our faith, and once we venture outside these bounds, no longer do we preach good news, but rather we preach old gossip that, in one form or another, man has articulated ever since he realized that he was different from the animal that pulled the plow. When we step outside of this unity, we step right into heresy.

To the thinking clergy and laity, this point need not be labored further, but let us proceed to what we would suggest as at least a partial solution. We think that an inclusive questionnaire should be compiled by the theologians of our Church which would cover, in terminology understandable to the layman, the basic points of our faith. The questions should be simple and either multiple choice or true-false. These should then be sent to every parish in the country to be presented to our confirmed members. With adequate presentation, honest answers would be received. No names would be required, the only stipulation being complete parish coverage. The forms would then be sent back to the diocesan or national headquarters, where the results would be tabulated. Each parish would be notified of its own particular weaknesses, and its clergy could then concentrate sufficient energy towards their remedy. Both the diocesan and national Church would benefit greatly in that they also could redirect their efforts toward the elimination of their known weaknesses. Periodic polls would indicate success or failure, gain and loss, and our evangelization would then be a directed, concentrated effort of a united Church striving for a common goal.

The Protestant Episcopal Church In the U.S.A.

by Alec R. Vidler

Priest of the Church of England

WHATEVER doubtful or disputable statements I am about to make, I can without fear of contradiction assert that the title of this Church is cumbrous. It is a title to which other objections also can be and are raised. But it is difficult, things being what they are, to propose an acceptable alternative, and I did not hear of one. The title is then likely to continue in use for some time. I do not know how to account for the absence of a familiar abbreviation of it. The Americans have reduced the practice of referring to their institutions by occult groups of letters to so crude an art that it seems curious that they speak of the P.E.C. or of PECUSA much less frequently than in England we use the abbreviation C. of E. for the Church of England. It will however be convenient if I may use one of these abbreviations here.

This article does not purport to be a report on the present condition of the P.E.C., based on a comprehensive survey of the facts. It is a piece of rank ecclesiastical journalism. I shall record some observations and reflections that are the result of my tour in the U.S.A. I shall be prepared for my American friends to tell me that some at least of my observations are superficial and of my reflections rash. Both anyhow are subject to the limitations on which I insisted in an earlier article in Christianity and Crisis entitled The Appalling Religiousness of America and which therefore I need not repeat. I cannot say that the principal observations in that article were not intended to apply to the P.E.C., since they were the outcome of experience acquired chiefly within its frontiers and by a critic who was being entertained not altogether unawares. While those observations are here presupposed, I can thankfully add that I found much more comprehension of the questions I asked under the heading "Sect versus Church" among Episcopalians than among other American Christians.

A visitor from the C. of E. finds himself much more at home in the P.E.C. than ought to be the case. The extraordinary hospitableness of his hosts heightens the impression, but, quite apart from that, it is remarkable to find an institution so much like the C. of E. in the U.S.A. I remember attending evensong in the General Theological Seminary in New York soon after I had disembarked, and reflected how pleasant but how odd it was to find something so familiar in that incredibly strange and cosmopolitan city. But was it right that an Englishman should find himself so much at home? The force of this misgiving will not be felt by any who retain the illusion that the U.S.A. is an Anglo-Saxon country. It is only when you realize of what an astonishing variety of races and nationalities America is made up that a Church as predominantly, if not as purely, Anglo-Saxon as the P.E.C. will strike you as incongruous; that is, if the Church aspires to be, as I presume it must aspire to be, the Church of the whole American people. This Anglo-Saxon flavor of the P.E.C., which is most evident in, but by no means confined to, the Eastern States, is recognized as a serious handicap by discerning members of the Church, and it will not be easy to overcome it. I met one exceptional rector who told me that his congregation consisted chiefly of Italians, to whom the characteristic stock-in-trade of Anglicanism means precisely nothing. This is then a Church that will have to become more of a fellowship of reconciliation and to develop a capacity for bold experiments and imaginative pioneering if it is to transcend its present refined, restricted and characteristically suburban appeal.

Not only are these experimenting and pioneering qualities at present inconspicuous, but there is less in the tradition of the P.E.C. than of some other American Churches to inspire them. It was through lack of these qualities that the P.E.C. lost its opportunity during the drive to the West in the last century, when it left other Christian bodies to evangelize the new settlers. It is commonly said that the Methodists went out West on horse-back, the Baptists by coach, while the Episcopalians waited until there were Pullman cars. Considerable efforts have since been made to capture the lost ground. They would perhaps be more successful if the P.E.C. in its upper ranks were less conservative. As is well-known, this is on the whole a Church of the privileged classes. Its bishops, I was told, are usually selected from the successful rectors of fashionable city or suburban parishes, though there has recently been some improvement in this regard. A rector, who himself had leftist sympathies, lamented to me that the P.E.C. is becoming increasingly "the Republican Party at prayer," and I found that many others, in whom those sympathies were less apparent, allowed the justice of the description, though one queried the words "at prayer."

Perhaps "conservative" is not the apt term; lack of enterprise would be better. This comes out in the Church's architecture and in its theology. It is exceedingly disappointing to find that even today the P.E.C. is still tied to imitation Gothic. If it can do no better than imitate, it would do well to revive the eighteenth century architecture as has been done, for instance, in the chapel of the Yale Divinity School, which is enchanting. As it is, the C. of E. has produced far more in the way of new and living and exciting forms of ecclesiastical architecture, although the P.E.C. has resources which we cannot now-a-days emulate. This appears to be a distressing sign of sterility.

The Church's theology seems to have been similarly, though less dismally, afflicted. The P.E.C. has more than its share of scholars of outstanding learning and ability, and a supply of competent theologians of which we might well be envious; its theological seminaries are much more adequately staffed then our theological colleges, and more encouragement is given to promising young scholars. But there is nothing like as much as one might expect to show for the advantages. It was disconcerting to discover with what veneration English theology is regarded when one knows how little warrant there is now for that sentiment. There are plenty of native resources in America that are not yet being properly tapped and worked. Theology in the P.E.C. is generally sound and solid of its kind, though it has its section of stale "Liberal Protestantism," but either way there is lack of movement and fresh air. Men are fearful of breaking new ground or of thinking dangerous thoughts. In every direction "safety first" seems to be written up—in the moderation of episcopal pronouncements; in the anxieties of Anglo-Catholic orthodoxy, and in the slowness of the younger evangelicals (who as with us show most signs of life) to steal the thunder of Catholicism.

So much for the lack of enterprise which is acknowledged and deplored by the most sensitive minds in the Church, and I hasten to add that there is promise of better things in the air, if not yet in print. The P.E.C. cannot be altogether unresponsive to the restless and surging vitality that is everywhere characteristic of the U.S.A. It is pertinent here to remark that this Church's influence in the universities is out of all proportion to its size in the country, and there is a rising generation of ministerial and lay students who have a deeper vision than that of perpetuating the American way of life and who are ready for radical changes.

With a bolder leadership and a clearer sense of its vocation the P.E.C. might quite rapidly be transformed and make a vigorous impact on the life of the whole people in which it is set. At present it is bogged in party feuds much as the C. of E. was twenty years ago. An alarming feature of the P.E.C. is the tendency to develop monochrome dioceses: that is, dioceses of one ecclesiastical color. There is an area in the middlewest known to the sophisticated churchman as the "biretta belt." This is possible because each diocese elects its own bishop and a bishop has so much direct or indirect power and patronage that, if he is sufficiently narrow-minded, unwise and determined, he can pack his diocese with clergymen of his own views.

Members of the P.E.C. resignedly mutter and even on occasion shrilly shout the old Anglo-Catholic, Modernist or Evangelical phrases which we used to know so well, but which—although the Church Union, the Modern Churchmen's Union and the Church Association still survive—have ceased to signify for most of us. But deliverance might come and spread more swiftly in America than here, once the theology of the Bible is released and the contradication between a religious party or club and a Church is perceived, and unless I am mistaken these things are beginning to happen.

At the moment, unfortunately, the Church is suffering from the way the negotiations for union with the Presbyterians were handled or mishandled. There seems to have been a grave lack of ecclesiastical statesmanship in these proceedings and in consequence nerves have been left sadly frayed. I got the impression that the Episcopalians are not yet ripe or qualified for union with Presbyterians or anyone else; it would be to their credit if they were. I will venture the mad hope that when the time for an act of unification comes the P.E.C. will be united first with a Church that is comparatively poor and socially inferior, even if theologically more remote. A union between two Churches as superior and prosperous as the Presbyterian and the Episcopalian is more than somewhat awful to contemplate, if I may say so.

BUT I do not want to give the impression that the C. of E. has nothing positive to learn from the P.E.C., which in fact seemed to me far ahead of us in many practical aspects of Church life. I have already alluded to the fact that its theological seminaries are much better staffed than ours, and on the intellectual side can do a much better job. They seem to be comparatively weak however on the side of training in the spiritual life. A similar contrast is apparent if you compare the Anglican and Free Church colleges in England.

Then the P.E.C. has actually got or is doing a lot of things that we wistfully or vaguely talk about. In the College of Preachers at Washington, for example, it has an instrument of post-ordination education which we should do well to imitate, since it is unlikely that we shall be able to start anything more efficacious.

And it has a revised Prayer Book, and all the editions are identically paginated. Thus worshippers can easily be helped to follow the services, and the Church shows much skill and care in the way it gives this help, as it does also in the welcome it extends to visitors. The C. of E. by comparison appears to be cold and grossly indifferent about whether people participate intellectually in its worship. The American clergy extend much more careful preparation upon their services than we do as a rule, though I should say that modes of worship in the P.E.C. are too elaborate and ornate. There is much carrying of flags; usually the stars and stripes and the Church flag. This looks rather too nationalistic. On the other hand, the custom at Washington Cathedral of interceding on each Sunday for a different state in the union and of displaying its flag seems admirable.

There is also a superfluity of candles, and an interest and a taste in ecclesiastical millinery which did not appeal to me. It was Bishop Johnson of Colorado, the first editor of THE WITNESS, a high churchman and a great bishop, who said: "The trouble with the Episcopal Church is that there are too many solemn asses celebrating solemn masses." I failed to discover why it is that when receiving Holy Communion an American high Anglican genuflects four times, where an English high Anglican does so only once or twice, and an Irish Roman Catholic not at all. A reformed movement in this Church will probably have a certain note of austerity.

Parochial finances in the P.E.C. are managed with enviable efficiency. Each autumn a budget for the coming year is made out; then fifty or a hundred laymen canvass the whole congregation and find out what each member will promise to pay week by week. They continue the canvas until the whole budget is met. Moreover, budgets are very much larger than those to which we are accustomed, and there are comparatively few endowments. The budgets are so large because churches are much more adequately staffed and equipped. For example, no American congregation of any size and standing would leave its rector to deal with his correspondence and other routine work, without the assistance of a professional secretary. Each church maintains offices and club rooms, etc., that make a corresponding church here look mean and shabby. They reckon that if you are going to run a church you should do it efficiently, and surely they are right. Nor do they waste their resources, as we do, by trying to maintain a great many superfluous and obsolete establishments. Likewise they aim at making the Sunday Schools even more efficient, attractive and up to date than the day schools: indeed they have much to teach us about the technique of religious education.

All this is not accounted for merely by the fact that the average member of the P.E.C. is better off than the average member of the C. of E. The truth is that they support the Church in a much more business-like and handsome manner. The clergy find that emigrants from the Church of England, and faithful ones at that, have to be told that where in England you may feel quite satisfied if you give one shilling a week, you are expected in the P.E.C. to give the equivalent of at least five shillings.

I can do no more than make the barest mention of a few other points that struck me. The clergy keep regular office hours in the well-equipped offices in their churches so that everyone knows when they are available for interviews. The P.E.C. is also much more ambitious and thorough than the C. of E. in its work in universities and colleges; every church near a university—and universities abound—has a Canterbury Club for college students. Last but not least, American Episcopalians have gone much further than we have in the practical recognition of the value of psychiatry.

In short if the P.E.C. at present has serious shortcomings, it also has great assets. It is impossible to move about in it for long without becoming eager to see it developing its resources and rising to its opportunities, for the language of "the great opportunity," which trips so lightly but with such futility off the lips of some eminent ecclesiastics here, this really means something.

Canterbury College Trustees Vote to Carry On

Previous Action to Close the Institution Is Rescinded Due to a Determined Effort

Edited by Sara Dill

Indianapolis, Ind.:—The trustees of Canterbury College, meeting here on April 12, unanimously rescinded their previous action to close the college taken a week before. The new action was taken because a small group of laymen, led by a member of the church in Danville, where Canterbury is located, and a priest of Chicago, had previously met and established a foundation which has for its purpose "the raising, investing and holding of funds to stabilize the financial structure of the college."

This group met with the trustees and in the words of Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana, the president of the trustees, "presented a plan with so much faith, enthusiasm and common sense that the trustees felt that an entirely new element had been added."

The foundation will have the broader base of the entire Church to work with, it being the purpose of its directors to integrate the college into the life stream of every parish and diocese of the Church. The sum of $20,000 is the immediate need to complete the semester, after which larger funds will be sought to build up and enlarge the college.

In the meantime President Edgar Cumings has resigned as president of Canterbury, effective August 31, to take a position at DePauw University, and the Rev. Douglas R. MacLaury of Chicago has been made vice-president by the trustees and will take over the presidency on September 1.

Bishop Mallett, in his statement, says that the "crisis produced by the announcement of the closing of the college raised a most unusual response from all parts of the Church, and we found that there was much more interest in our college than was ever imagined. . . . The fact that Canterbury College had not yet captured the imagination of the entire Church as being one of the greatest opportunities for missionary enterprise in the country was not to be held against the laity or clergy of the Church. The real needs of the college were not known but the crisis produced by its closing brought to the attention of dozens of lay leaders all over the country the desperate need the Episcopal Church has for a co-educational liberal arts institution of higher learning."

Bishop Conkling, in commenting on the closing of the college, said that "it is utterly unthinkable that this college should be closed before the wider Church has been given an opportunity to give its support."

Mrs. F. Eric Bloy is the attractive wife of the newly consecrated Bishop of Los Angeles

It was also announced that bishops, lay leaders and students from all over the country have wired and written of their hope that funds will be forthcoming to keep this college for the Church.

Mr. Skyler Mowrer, chairman of the newly organized Canterbury College Foundation, has announced that the incorporation will be completed within a few days; that gifts and bequests will be tax free and that offerings are acceptable immediately at the foundation's office located in the administration building of the college at Danville, Indiana.

Warns Against Disaster

Boston:—War with the weapons at present available to mankind would be so destructive of life and civilization that it would be a disaster for both sides and would constitute a true divine judgment upon us all, Bishop Norman Nash warned in an address which opened the convention of the diocese of Massachusetts, meeting at Trinity Church here April 14. The Bishop, addressing about 1,200 clerical and lay delegates, lashed at those Church members, some "far from perfect, who act in un-Christian ways, though claiming to act and speak for God. Self-righteous claims are being made by American Christians that in the present conflict between capitalism and communism; between America and Russia, we have God on our side and that war with Russia would be a holy war. Since some of our ideals are Christian, such as the dignity and worth of every man because he is a child of God, we too easily overlook our own violations of this ideal while condemning communism's rejection of it.

"There is so much of this sort of self-righteousness in the utter-

The next day delegates passed a resolution warning people to be "on their guard against hysterical fear of communism," declaring that such fear "may lead to fighting that danger with weapons destructive to the treasure we seek to guard."

Presiding Bishop Lectures

New Haven: — Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, giving the Lyman Beecher lecture at Yale Divinity School, deplored Church complacency about the urgency of the times. He said that "we are not going to solve the problems by purely economic, political or military measures. Such methods have never permanently solved any issues. The gospel of Christ supplies the only answer entirely germane to the needs of the present world."

He asserted that a divided Church made impossible any united attack upon paganism, and that the power to present the central truth of Christianity is limited by disunity. He stated however that there is a growing unity among Christians.

Paper Licensed

Berlin (RNS):—Authorities in the Soviet zone have licensed a new monthly magazine of the Evangelical Church in Germany which is to be devoted to promoting religious instruction in schools. Each issue is expected to have 300,000 copies which is far more circulation than any other religious periodical licensed by the western powers in Berlin. Religious relations officers of the British, French and American zones are said to be "greatly interested" in the action.

Organizes Ex-Catholics

Berlin (RNS):—A new Church movement called "New Catholic Episcopal Office" has been announced here by self-styled Bishop Claus Sommerfeld, a former member of the Cistercian Order who was excommunicated from the Roman Church in 1927. He explained that the aim of the movement is to gather together former Catholic priests and laymen who have been separated from the Roman Church "for any reason whatever."

There appears to be no evidence that "Bishop" Sommerfeld ever received valid episcopal consecration.

Consecrate New Church

Americus, Ga.:—Bishop Barnwell consecrated the new Calvary Church here on April 11th. He also confirmed the second class presented this year by the rector, the Rev. William C. Baxter.

Urge Unity

Saratoga Springs, N. Y. (RNS):—A resolution urging that the general conference of the Methodist Church, opening this week in Boston, appoint a commission to "explore a possible merger with the Protestant Episcopal Church" was adopted by the Troy Methodist conference. Bishop Oxnam of New York stated that leaders of the two Churches had recently conferred informally on the question.

No Negro Delegates

Beauford, S. C.:—The convention of the diocese of South Carolina turned down the second reading of a proposed amendment to the constitution which would allow Negro communicants representation in diocesan conventions. The clergy voted for the measure, 20 to 2, but there was sufficient lay opposition to prevent proponents from mustering the necessary two-thirds vote.

The motion passed last year, as

Save Canterbury College For the Church

Surely there must be $50,000 somewhere in the Episcopal Church for Christian education

Canterbury College is the only co-educational liberal arts college in the Episcopal Church.

It is only two years old.

It hasn't even had a chance yet to be integrated and infiltrated into the life stream of the Church.

Even without adequate housing it has 350 enthusiastic students and 30 completely loyal qualified faculty.

It needs a girls' dormitory, a new heating system, and a college building which was destroyed recently by a tornado. All these things can be remedied in due time. But by June 1st the college will close its doors forever and the Church will have failed once more (remember Racine, Jubilee, and others) if $20,000 is not forthcoming from somewhere. $20,000 is needed immediately. The Trustees reluctantly voted to close the college two weeks ago. The rumor and alarm flashed over the Church. A student uprising, a vote of confidence by the faculty, and nationwide reaction to this crisis caused the Trustees to reconsider in order that the entire Episcopal Church might be allowed a chance to save Canterbury.

The Episcopal Church needs this College. We believe you will confirm this if you know the facts and the immediate need.

Imagine—only $50,000 a year! Certainly some of you can send large gifts and all can send small offerings. Be fearless in making our needs known.

Can we not have an immediate and generous outpouring from all over the nation in response to this crisis in Christian Education?

Write or telegraph us today what you can or will do. Remember, by June 1 we must have $20,000.

Send all communications and make checks, money orders, etc. payable to it had also four years ago, but in each case it was killed on second reading.

Peace Plane Also

Los Angeles: — Fifty clergymen and laymen left here on April 25 on a Peace Plane for Washington where they will confer with President Truman and other government officials. It supplements the Peace Train (WITNESS, April 22) which left on the 20th carrying large numbers of Church people from western states. The main objective of the pilgrimage is to emphasize proposals to strengthen world organization.

Equality Provided

Prague (RNS): — Legal equality for all religious groups and the right to practice religion freely, subject only to "the public order and good morality" are specified in the proposed new constitution of Czechoslovakia. It provides that "everyone has the right of subscribing privately or publicly to any religious creed or to no religion" and also states that "all religious creeds and non-religion are equal before the law." The constitution states further that "everyone is free to carry on functions related to his religion or non-religion."

Brooklyn Battle

Brooklyn:—The controversy at Holy Trinity Church here between the Melishes, father and son, and the vestry again got front page billing on April 22 as a result of another statement released by the vestry (WITNESS, April 15). This time the vestry declared: "We do not wish to deny Mr. Melish the right or the opportunity to express his views as a private citizen if he believes them to be correct. We do object, and a great many other members of the parish object, to the inference given the public, even if unintentionally, that his views have the support of the parish of which he is the assistant minister." The statement also widened the controversy to include all clergymen by stating that "the issue here is whether it is proper for a minister of the Church to lend support and give weight to his views. This issue goes far beyond the Church of the Holy Trinity."

The vestry received 306 replies out of 550 parishioners to whom they sent a letter. Of these 156 stated that the views of the younger Melish were detrimental to the parish while 136 said they were not, and 14 had no opinion. It is learned however that a considerable number supported the rector and the associate rector by writing them directly and these "votes" were not included in the above tabulation.

That's where the matter stands at this writing, though it is likely that Dr. and Mrs. Melish will issue an answer presently, as they did on the occasion of the first letter of the vestry.

Hubbard Accepts

Detroit: The office of the diocese of Michigan announced on April 21 that the Rev. Russell Hubbard, rector at Bar Harbor, Maine, has accepted his election as suffragan bishop of the diocese.

Support UN

Spokane, Wash.: Christians should support the United Nations as the only hope for world peace, Bishop Arthur W. Moulton, retired bishop of Utah, told the convocation of the district of Spokane, meeting here April 11-12. He made an impassioned plea for study and understanding of the international organization which he described as one of the greatest achievements of Christian idealism.

Bishop Cross announced to the convention that for the first time since before the war all congregations of the district are supplied with clergy.

Religious Education

Harrisburg, Pa.: — The executive council of the diocese of Harrisburg, meeting at St. Stephen's Cathedral here on April 8, adopted a resolution in which they urged clergy and laity to intensify efforts in weekday religious education and "to continue to make use of the released time opportunities as provided by the department of public instruction" of the state.

A copy of the resolution was sent to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Church Unity

New York:— A committee of Protestant leaders, with Presiding Bishop Sherrill present as an observer, met here last week to make plans for a conference on unity to be held in the fall of 1949. All churches interested in union will be invited to participate. A conference will be held this October, with each participating Church represented by two delegates. This group will continue to serve as a planning committee for the larger conference a year later. Douglas Horton, secretary of the general council of the Congregational Christian Churches is the chairman.

To Study Conscription

London (RNS): — The British Council of Churches is to make a study of the "educational, social and moral implications" of peacetime conscription. Anglican Bishop Leslie S. Hunter of Sheffield, stated that "there is a too easy identification of national service with military service." He suggested that the experience of countries where conscription has been long established shows that it is "a corrupting influence in society."

Pray for Peace

Grand Rapids, Mich. (RNS):—All of the Protestant Churches here have issued a united call for prayer to prevent "the ominous drift of civilization toward another world conflagration."

Prayers for Peace

Philadelphia: — Bishop Hart and Bishop-Suffragan of the diocese of Pennsylvania, issued a "call to prayer for peace" to be observed April 12-17. The call asked "the God of the nations to preserve us, both friends and enemies, from the consequences of stupid and senseless hate."

Liturgical Conference

Dallas, Texas: — Leaders of the second liturgical conference to be held in the diocese of Dallas, May 11-13, are Dean William H. Nes of Nashotah House, the Rev. William H. Dunphy of Philadelphia and Bishop Mason of Dallas. Another conference will be held in September with the Rev. A. G. Hebert of Kellum, England, as the leader.

South Carolina Meets

Beaufort, S. C.:—A rotating executive council was approved at the convention of the diocese of South Carolina, meeting here at St. Helena's, April 13-14. Members will be elected for three years and will not be eligible for re-election until after a lapse of a year. Addressing the convention was Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council, who spoke on evangelism. Bishop Carruthers in his address placed three objectives before the diocese: the building of a camp-conference center; wholehearted participation in the program of evangelism; a substantial contribution toward the restoration of world peace.

Elected Bishop

New York:—Dean Stephen Tsang of St. Paul's Cathedral, Hankow, China, has been elected Bishop of Hankow, according to radio to the National Council. He is now in the United States but plans to return to China soon. He will succeed Bishop Alfred A. Gilman who retired upon attaining the canonical retiring age, but has been in charge of the diocese pending election and consecration of his successor.

Convention of Georgia

Thomasville, Ga.:—Bishop Henry Louttit of South Florida preached at the service which opened the convention of Georgia, held here at St. Thomas' Church, April 6-7. Bishop Barnwell gave his address the following day, giving the opinion that "with the passage of time and with patience and with sympathy, and with perfect freedom of choice, different peoples in different places, with different past experiences, will work their problems out."

He went on to say that "if there is any nation in the world whose ideas you hate, the only way in the world to defeat that nation is to have better ideas," later on in his address stating that "you do not add force to an idea by putting a gun in its hand. Fighting tells who is the stronger, but it does not tell who is the wiser."

Bishop Barnwell also spoke of the need of larger giving for missions which so inspired the Auxiliary that plans were made for a campaign for new mission churches and for the repairing of others. The convention also voted to have a survey made of the diocese, to be followed with a campaign for $75,000 for new churches in the missionary areas.

A highlight of the meeting of the Auxiliary was a discussion led by various experts of religious education, with special stress on the effect of the recent Supreme Court decision outlawing religious instruction in the public schools.

Clergy Wives Meet

Dallas, Texas:—A conference for the wives of the clergy was held in the diocese of Dallas for two days in Easter week, with 28 of the 36 present. They started off with a luncheon at the home of Mrs. C. Avery Mason, then, appropriately enough, they went to see the movie The Bishop's Wife, after which there was a dinner party at a country club. A retreat followed, with the Rev. Samuel West of Wichita, Kansas, the leader. Following the holy communion service, the second day was devoted to a series of meditations. The conference ended with a talk by Bishop Mason, followed by discussion.

The whole affair was financed by Mr. George Beggs of Fort Worth, who was pleased enough with the whole thing to promise to do the same thing next year.

Clergy Seminar

Orkney Springs, Va.:—A seminar for the clergy will meet at Shrine Mont here, July 26-August 6, with Bishop Henry St. G. Tucker, former Presiding Bishop, the honorary dean.

Chinese Christian

munist (and local, popular) accusation that foreigners emphasize property rights rather than human understanding of the people around them.

The mission had been established in Changli for decades; why should a hospital which obviously helps people in need be subject to looting? Quite a bit of popular resentment has accumulated through the years over the perhaps necessary insistence on routine and technical procedures in running a modern western-style hospital, giving often the impression that the doctors and nurses were cold and arbitrary toward people; this feeling easily explodes at a time of crisis such as civil war conditions create.

The accounts and interpretations of the Changli Incident presented to American Christians by missionaries have shown uncritical prejudice against Chinese who are Communist; have shown distortion of fact based on that prejudging, and have shown a perhaps unavoidable but still unpleasing nationalistic sentiment. The pitiless support given by some missionaries and Church people to those who are responsible for the fratricidal civil war—the Kuomintang and the United States—alienates many non-Christian Chinese, builds up a hatred of America, and deeply disturbs many of us Chinese Christians.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. JAMES D. ROSS
Churchman of New York City

The April 1 number devoted to the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship was an excellent piece of work. I am not myself a pacifist, nor do I agree with some of the views expressed in the number. But in these days of such violent war hysteria I am sure we must all be glad that there is an organization in the Episcopal Church that is working vigorously for world sanity.

Student at Union Seminary

I read the article by the two seminarians in the April 15th issue with great interest and am in complete agreement with them. This letter has to do with the footnote at the bottom of the page, in which there was somewhat of an apologetic attitude for the publication of an article by seminary students.

I am a seminary student myself, finishing my second year now, and going to Alexandria next year to finish my senior year. Since I have been in seminary one thing has struck me decidedly, and never more so than the day I tried to preach on the subject when we were asking our parishioners to support the seminaries, and that is that the lay people of the Church have little or no idea of what goes on in a seminary. One is amazed in conversation with the people with whom he works to find how little the problems with which the seminarian is confronted means to them. This is of course only part, and a small one, of the laymen's fault. It is primarily the clergy's fault, because those live issues which one discussed with such vigor in seminary are forgotten and filed away with the other forgotten notes.

The genius of the Anglican Church has always seemed to me to be that it avoids the rigorism of both Rome and Geneva. As a result of this we are able in seminary, as elsewhere, to take quite different opinions on subjects, staying within, of course, certain limits. It is almost a truism to say that this is the only way that the Catholic faith can be in an ever continuous stage of development as it was before the Reformation.

The whole point of this is to say that perhaps having more word from seminarians who are in direct contact with the live issues, both theological and social, may be quite enlightening. Theology is by no means the stuffy intellectualism which some people would have us believe. It is concerned with the fundamental realities of all of us. It may be of interest to occasionally hear from those who are involved in the study of those truths, and not so much from those who have either lost contact with such study, or who have an axe to grind. The seminarian of today is the theologian of tomorrow. Congratulations on your step forward.

Church Institute For Negroes Investigated By Council

Committee Recommends that Its Functions Should Be Carried on by National Council

By W. B. Spofford

Greenwich, Conn.: — The excitement at the meeting of the National Council at Seabury House here, April 27-29, was caused by the report of a committee on the work of the American Church Institute for Negroes. The Institute, while the creation of General Convention, is an independently incorporated affair and is not administered by any department of the Council. The study of its work, authorized at a previous Council meeting, carried out the mandate of the 1946 General Convention to look into "its corporate status; its relation to the General Convention, National Council and affiliated institutions, and report its recommendations resulting from such study to the next General Convention."

The committee, headed by Bishop Peabody of Central New York, got the help of Bishops Dagwell, Haines and Bland Mitchell, and also President L. H. Foster of Virginia State College, Mr. Don Davis, comptroller of Hampton Institute, and Prof. Niles Carpenter of Buffalo University. The report states that the administration costs of the Institute are high, last year being $34,000 out of a total budget of $222,000; that it is not effectively controlled by National Council or General Convention; that it takes little positive concern in the educational programs and standards of its institutions, which, the report states, may have a bearing on the "unfortunate condition of its member schools as regards accreditation" and also that "the Institute has shown little constructive interest in dealing with the religious aspects of the various schools."

The committee therefore came to these conclusions: One, that since the Church now has organic and centralized leadership in the National Council and its officers, we believe that the functions now carried on by the Institute should be resumed by the National Council; two, that the Episcopal Church should take due cognizance of the current status of the American Negro and should further recognize local leadership, Negro and white, in the planning and management of the institutions; three, that the Church is justified in maintaining only those institutions that render a unique or special service; four, that the National Council has an obligation not only to the Church but to its Negro members to exercise a more positive role in the expenditure of the large sums it grants these institutions, and, finally, that a consideration of the budgets of the various institutions instead of a lump appropriation is desirable.

As for recommendations the committee offered these: one, that the Council exercise its prerogatives and elect a board of trustees from its membership as provided in the charter; two, that such a board assign the institutions and the affairs of the Institute to the proper department of the National Council, which should receive adequate funds from sources formerly available to the Institute in order to enable it to do the work efficiently; three, that the board transfer the assets of the Institute to the National Council; four, that the board dissolve as speedily as practicable the American Church Institute for Negroes with due regard to obligations toward employees and dependents and to the preservation of legal and financial interests.

Statements were made by Mr. Louis Hunter, treasurer of the Institute, and the Rev. Cyril E. Bentley, director, after which they voted that the study be referred to the trustees of the Institute for detailed study and reply to the National Council. Also the Presiding Bishop was asked to appoint a committee to confer with a committee of the Institute and to report at the October meeting of the Council. All of which ought to make the October meeting worth a trip to this Connecticut town.

Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin reported on money matters after which the Council voted a 1949 budget of $3,650,000, which is approximately $150,000 more than this year, and about $450,000 more than the budget for 1947. Mr. Franklin said that trust funds are in good shape, with a credit balance in the profit and loss account of $821,172; with the market value of securities exceeding book value by $195,571.

Mr. Robert Jordon, reporting for the department of promotion (with a nice hand for his million-dollars-in-four hours job), said that the department had been obliged to devote most of its time for fund drives of a crisis nature, but that "it is now high time to return to its basic purpose that the membership of the Church may be won to the support of the program of the Church in parish, diocese, nation and world." A statement of policy and procedure will be presented at the October meeting, but Mr. Jordon indicated that he would then propose "a full staff of able, well-trained, adequately financed field men to cultivate the field."

Presiding Bishop Sherrill said that Seabury House needs about $75,000 for repairs, painting, renovating of three houses on the property so that they can be occupied by rent-paying members of the Council staff, and he also said that he hoped that additional houses might be built for staff members.

Evangelism was discussed at some length, with Bishop Sherrill saying that the first step, visitation and Lent corporate communion, was "very spotty." Several Council members said that the need now was for schools of religion, study groups and other methods of building up a body of Church people who would then know enough about their religion to go out and talk about it. Bishop Sherrill said that this might well be the next step. Several bishops present stated that one of the marked features of the campaign up to now was the eagerness of lay people to take part in it, but every one seemed to agree that knowledge of the Church and the Christian religion was necessary for successful work in personal evangelism.

Plans for the next triennial meeting in San Francisco in September, 1949, and money grants were the chief concerns of the executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary meeting April 23-26. They voted $40,000 to the theological seminary in Japan and $9,000 to St. Margaret's School there. They also voted money for the renovation of buildings and for equipment of various sorts for missionary stations both at home and abroad.

The money voted at the last board meeting to buy a building at Danville, Ind., for a chapel for Canterbury College was rescinded and the sum appropriated for a residence for the principal of St. Faith's School, Yangchow, and for part of the building program of the Christian College, Madras, India.

The Rev. Thomas (Gargoyles) Barrett told the women of the work in colleges and the Rev. Arnold Purdie, assistant in the department of social service, addressed the board members on its work.

HAMILTON WEST ELECTED

Jacksonville, Fla.:—The Rev. Hamilton West, rector of St. Paul's, Augusta, Ga., was elected bishop coadjutor of Florida on April 28th. Mr. West is a native of the south, but the early part of his ministry was spent in Idaho. In 1936 he became chaplain to Episcopal students at the University of Florida where he remained until 1941 when he took his present position. He was a deputy to the General Conventions of 1943 and 1946 and has been a member of the National Council since 1945 as the representative of the province of Sewanee.

CALIFORNIA BREAKS PRECEDENT

San Francisco:—The 98th annual convention of the diocese of California broke all precedents, of that diocese or any other, by electing a woman as a member of the Standing Committee. She is Mrs. Norman B. Livermore.

HANDS-OFF POLICY ON CHINA

Montreal (RNS):—The synod of the Montreal diocese of the Church of England in Canada voted last week to request the Dominion government "to take an open stand against intervention in the civil war in China, whether by giving financial aid or by the export of arms or munitions of war under any pretext whatever." The motion, submitted by the social service committee, was urged by Dean K. C. Evans who was born and educated in China. He declared that "It is impossible to accept the various comments on the internal situation coming out of China without knowledge of the country and present conditions there."

INTERIM REPORT ON EUROPE

New York:—Bishop Blair Larned, in charge of the American Churches in Europe, has sent an interim report to the Church press in which he sets forth his observations about the work there. He states that there "has been constant worry due to political uncertainty" and yet the work of the various churches has gone ahead. He writes of the "merciless bitter, anti-American propaganda" with posters showing the United States "as a fearsome octopus, stretching out its ugly tentacles to embrace countries all over Europe," which American government officials have met by publicizing "the amount and nature of our gifts for relief."

He tells of meeting the Communist mayor of Florence, who spoke at an outdoor service at which a statue of George Washington, damaged by the war, was re-dedicated. He also says that the mayor attended a tea at the rectory of St. James' Church, where the Rev. Sturgis Riddle is in charge. Also he tells of two visits to Paris where "I have seen at first hand the progress of our work at Holy Trinity Cathedral under the leadership of Dean O'Ferrall."

The Rev. and Mrs. William H. Brown Jr. of St. Andrew's, Lexington, Kentucky, assemble their sons, daughters and grandchildren at the recent celebration of their thirtieth wedding anniversary

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS

Garden City, N. Y.:—The training of children in the Christian way of life is primarily the responsibility of parents, only to be supplemented by religious education in Church schools, declared several speakers at a conference on religious education held here under the auspices of the diocesan department. The speakers were Bishop Jenkins, retired bishop of Nevada, the Rev. Gregory Mabry, rector of St. Paul's, Brooklyn, and the Rev. Wesner Fallaw, professor at Andover-Newton Seminary.

The department is sponsoring a school of religion for adults and a training institute for teachers this spring at Bay Shore for the archdeaconry of Suffolk, with various clergy of the diocese as teachers, with several similar conferences planned for the fall.

The Role Reversed

BASED upon the dynamic and realistic understanding of the nature of man and society, it should be a reasonable assumption to expect that the Church would be pioneering ahead of the so-called secular world in the area of human relationships. As we know—and should humbly and shame-facedly acknowledge—this is not often the case today. This past week between eight and nine thousand social workers convened in Atlantic City for the National Conference of Social Work. Concurrently the annual Church Conference for Social Work was held in the same city.

The Good News of Christ would indicate that the latter gathering should be leading the way for the larger body. However the role was reversed. Whenever a professional social worker attended the plenary sessions of the Church conference, he breathed a sigh of relief upon returning to the secular but somewhat vital atmosphere of the National conference. It was obvious that much of the discussion on the respective roles of Church or state social service responsibility, as voiced in the Church conference, would have been dead and unrealistic argumentation even in the era of Warren Harding and Calvin Coolidge. Indulged in today, it simply alienates wise, good and concerned people who should be inspired by and allied with the Churches.

We do not believe that the right and responsibility of the state to maintain social security on all levels of life, for all of its citizens, is any longer debatable. The efficacy or wisdom of specific provisions, together with adequate safeguards against their potential abuse, are of course open to question, but the democratic philosophy behind overall social security cannot, for Christians, be challenged. When such a challenge takes up much of the discussion of the Church conference on social work, we little wonder that too many Churches have lost the respect of the vital social work profession.

"QUOTES"

WHERE belief in the omnipotence of physical force gets the upper hand in political life, this force takes on a life of its own and proves stronger than the men who think to use force as a tool. The proposed militarization of the nation not only immediately threatens us with war; it will also destroy the democratic spirit and the dignity of the individual in our land. The assertion that events abroad force us to arm is wrong; we must combat it with all our strength. Actually, our own rearmament, through reaction of other nations to it, will bring about that very situation on which its advocates seek to base their proposals. There is only one path to peace and security — the path of supra-national organization. One-sided armament on a national basis only heightens the general uncertainty and confusion without being an effective protection.

—ALBERT EINSTEIN

We are glad to report that no members of the Episcopal Church representation at the conference participated in such fruitless discussion. They were however forced to waste time which could have been spent to more advantage elsewhere.

Fascism Applauded

THE spokesman for the New York delegation at the annual Chamber of Commerce convention, meeting in Washington last week, made some interesting statements at a dinner. One was to the effect that the time has come for regimentation in the United States. And when he said the time has come, he meant now. His reasoning ran like this: in November, Henry Wallace will receive ten million or more votes; the Democratic candidate will receive twenty-five million and the winning Republican nominee will receive between thirty and thirty-five million. This would mean, he said, that the winning candidate would be in the minority as far as popular support was concerned. Stating that this must never happen, he declared that the "forces of righteousness" must act now and regiment all of American life.

Another statement, in line with this program, was to the effect that American culture must now be directed by selective thinking on the part of picked specialists.

We state, unequivocally, that there is no difference between this type of thinking and the historical fascist program. The frightening thing is that this respectable man was applauded by a respectable audience in a Washington hotel in April, 1948.

Intercessory Prayer

THE army and navy chaplains meeting in New York this week will pray "every hour on the hour" for "the unfortunate, misled" people of Russia. Such a procedure brings up the question of intercessory prayer. There are those who insist that most intercessory prayer has value because it makes the one praying more interested in doing something about the one, or object, for which he is praying. Intercessory prayer has the effect of making one broader in his imagination, and in understanding his opportunities, some say. They point to the Litany in the Prayer Book as showing how widespread should be the churchman's concern. In such a view, these prayers of the chaplains only fortify the propaganda that would involve us in war with the Soviet Union. For if our deeds follow our prayers, then a misled people can only be rightly led when we have abolished the bad leadership. Everyone admits that the present government in the Soviet Union could only be unseated by overwhelming force from outside, since a democratic revolution on the inside is impossible.

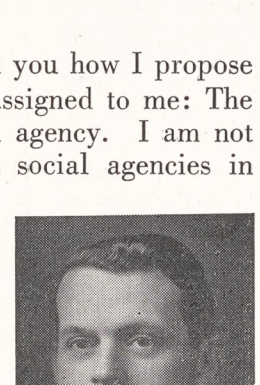
But there is more to intercessory prayer than just its psychological effect on the one praying. Jesus frequently used this type of prayer. He said that he prayed that Peter might be converted. There are innumerable instances. But his intercessory prayers were always within the framework of the gospel. He refused to pray that fire would fall on a wicked city when asked to do so by John and James. His prayer was ever that God's will might be done in and through people. It is typified best in his agonized petition for himself, "not my will, but thine, be done."

The chaplains, and all of us, ought to pray for the Russian people, and other peoples, too. But it is when one precedes his prayer with a judgment that he steps outside the gospel way. In praying for a "misled" people, he is asking God simply to cooperate with a personal opinion. It is the prayer of the Pharisee in the parable,—"God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are." Intercessory prayer should begin with "God, be merciful to me, a sinner," and close with, "nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done." After we have acknowledged our own need for forgiveness, then we are in a position to know the need of all humanity for this, and to pray for forgiveness and God's grace and blessing for all mankind.



Militarists have an interest in forms. We would like to commend the latter form of prayer to the chaplains, rather than the singling out of one group of people in this world as being "unfortunate, misled."

The Church and Social Service

by Arthur Lichtenberger

Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Newark, and a Witness Editor

AT THE outset I want to tell you how I propose to deal with the subject assigned to me: The philosophy of a Church social agency. I am not going to speak about Church social agencies in general, but about one in particular which I know; I am not going to tell you what I think ought to be the philosophy of a Church social agency, but expound the philosophy on which the work of that agency rests. So I shall try to describe a Church social agency at work in terms of its philosophy. That is not to make the claim that there is an exact correspondence between our ideals and our practice. But it is to say this: these convictions about Church social work of which I am going to speak are fundamental. They are the reasons for our existence and the motives for our continuing effort.

By what right can social work under religious auspices claim to be Church social work? Certainly not because of organization, external connections with a diocese or a group of Church people. It is quite possible for a social agency to have on its board of trustees lay members of the Church, priests and bishops, to receive its support from diocesan funds, to employ only confirmed Episcopalians on the staff and yet in actual work to be secular. All these Church affiliations are no guarantee that the agency so related is a Church agency. Just as there is no guarantee that because an ordained minister goes into the pulpit and prefaces his words with an invocation, what follows will be sound Christian teaching. It may and it may not; it all depends on what he says. So with social work. Is it of the Church? It all depends on how it is done.

We believe that there is a profound relationship between the work of a Church social agency and the Church. That relationship is found in Christian convictions. The social worker in a Church social agency is not only skilled in the techniques of the social work profession; the worker is rooted and grounded in the faith by which the Church lives.

We could illustrate and amplify this point in a number of ways but it all comes to focus in this: we are concerned primarily with persons who are made, we believe, in the image of God and who are potential sons of God. Social workers who have this conviction recognize techniques for what they are: tools to be used to help people. Techniques are not important in themselves. They are essential equipment and therefore the Church social worker will be well trained and by continued study will be familiar with new developments in social work. But the worker will understand quite clearly that techniques and tests and the art of counselling were made for man and not man for the social workers' skill.

Note: Paper read to the dinner of the Episcopal Service of Youth, Atlantic City, N. J. on April 20, 1948.

That is not always understood by social workers. There are some who are so engrossed in their methods and so captivated by the jargon in which they describe them that they lose sight of the fact that they are working with persons. Just as there are teachers who are so taken with their devices that they overlook the purpose of their profession, to teach people. And there are doctors who are very expert in the practice of medicine but quite unskilled in the art of medicine. They diagnose the disease and prescribe for it but the whole patient is beyond their care. And of course there are clergymen whose response in any one of several situations can be predicted in advance; they respond with what seems to be the proper thing for the occasion without much regard for the person before them. But this is to mistake a means for an end. Techniques, case work methods are only tools to be used with all possible skill by a person in a personal relationship. Without a great deal of verbal gymnastics we can't avoid speaking of clients and cases but even though we use these impersonal terms we must never forget that a client is a person who has feelings and needs and hopes which are quite as important and real as our own.

Here again there is an underlying religious conviction which is essential for the Church social worker. It is the awareness that the worker is not the source of the healing power of life, but the channel, the agent. Dr. Richard Cabot used to say over and over that a physician never cures a disease, he only helps make way for "the healing power of God." "A great healing power," he said, "fights on our side and wins most of the battles for us. To me that means the goodness of God." A great healing power fights on our side and wins most of the battles for us when we are trying to help an individual resolve a conflict, make a difficult adjustment or release the powers of spiritual growth.

With that understanding, the social worker is in the right relationship to the client and therefore rejects all manipulative and exploitive techniques. There is an ever present and subtle temptation to resort to such manipulation; it is particularly strong in a difficult case where we seem to be getting nowhere. But it must be resisted. The personal relationship between case worker and client, a personal relationship which finds its meaning in God, must be achieved and maintained.

It follows then also that the worker will turn regularly not only to journals and books of the profession but to the Source of healing; the devotional life of the worker must be nurtured. And is it unreasonable to expect that a worker in the Church social agency should be familiar with fundamental Christian theology? Clergy are advised to have some knowledge of social case work and the social resources of the community; to have some understanding of psychiatry, but not too much. Well this works both ways since we are partners in this endeavor. We expect teachers in our Church schools to be familiar with the outlines of Christian doctrine; there is every reason why Church social workers should have this knowledge too.

But to return to the main point of what I have to say, this matter of the personal relationship in social work. Claire Bishop in her book France Alive, which is a thrilling description of the present Christian renewal in France, tells of the indignant comment of a young Christian who had gone to visit a sick person in her street. "Just think," this girl said, "she thought I was a social worker! Isn't that horrible? I told her I was a neighbor, a neighbor."

The two, social worker and neighbor, certainly are not mutually exclusive terms; the social worker who is primarily concerned with persons will be neighbor to him who in our day falls among thieves.

Why? Why this concern of workers in a Church social agency for persons? We might think at first that the answer is found in the second great commandment: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." But that is to stop short of the ultimate reasons. Why are persons of primary importance? Because they are of infinite value to God. It is in his relationship to God that the individual finds himself and his neighbor. This is what we Christians mean when we speak of the sacredness of human personality. There is a story about a Frenchman named Muretus who was a Protestant exile from Toulouse in the 17th century. He was in Lombardy where he became very ill. He was taken to a hospital for paupers and he overheard the physicians talking about him. They did not know he was a scholar so they spoke in Latin thinking he could not understand. One of them said: "Let us try an experiment with this worthless creature." The physicians were startled and confounded to hear him reply in Latin: "Will you call worthless one for whom Christ did not disdain to die?" It was because God so loved the world—of people—that he gave himself in Jesus Christ. So it is because we have this conviction about the nature of God and man's relation to him that we endeavour always to deal with persons as persons. That opens the way for the process of redemption.

AND I mean just that, God's redeeming power comes to us through sacrament and prayer, but surely his grace flows through the channel of human lives. This work, the work of a Church social agency is work of great dignity. I must confess that sometimes some of our clergy look upon it with a somewhat jaundiced eye. In case you have forgotten, the word jaundiced in that sense means "affected with envy." They are jealous of their prerogatives and they say to you in effect: so far and no farther. Well, that works both ways. That's what you say to us. But there is no necessity for this sort of mutual suspicion. I can't speak for social workers, nor can I speak, in fact, for the clergy. But I speak for many I am sure when I say that we welcome and desire the help of a true Church social agency. We welcome the help you bring to us in our pastoral care of individuals. You can supply skills which we lack. But not only that. You can occasionally get to the religious difficulties of a person better than we can. Our approach, by the very fact that we are in the ministry, must be indirect; yours can be direct. In some instances there is a barrier which we can hardly overcome but you can open up an approach, make an open way for us. This does not mean that we relinquish our pastoral care of a person. We work in partnership with another who complements and supplements our efforts. Our pastoral work is augmented by another's skill; it is made more effective by another's help.

I believe then that social work can be a practical application of the pastoral ministry of the Church. It is done by lay people to be sure. There need be no confusion here. The pastor, the ordained man, has one responsibility; the social worker has another. But surely the knowledge and skill of a social worker can be an instrument through which God "restores the torn fabric of our lives."

If this is what a Church social agency strives to do, then it must do its job supremely well. If the Church is to do social work it must be of the best. We cannot make the easy assumption that an institution or an agency works for the good of people simply because that organization is under Church auspices. With the best will in the world on the part of those who manage and direct a Church social agency it may be destructive, disrupting the lives of those to whom it seeks to minister. This is an abomination in the Church. If the Church can do only poor or mediocre social work it should not do social work at all.

The highest standards, then, are our standards. And it is the responsibility of a Church social agency to pioneer, to lead the way here and there in developing techniques and programs. There is a unique opportunity for the agencies affiliated with Episcopal Service for Youth to do this. We can make an important contribution in the field of case work with young people.

A Church social agency here is a real part in the Church's ministry to individuals. Yet remember this is social work we are talking about. It is very interesting isn't it, that counselling, guidance, this intensely personal work, should be called social case work. It must be that of course for we never come upon a completely isolated individual. Man is a personal and social being. We keep that in mind then constantly, that the person with whom we are working is a whole person, though he may be at war with himself. He is a whole person in a social environment.

This puts two requirements before us. First, that all the methods and means we use to understand the individual and to help him are to be brought into one integrated approach. We do not put the person through the rounds of a clinic and then leave the correlation of what has been discovered up to him. Sending a client from one person to another for a battery of tests or interviews without putting the results together for him can be very confusing, as confusing as the reports of the several blind men, you remember, who examined an elephant and then attempted to describe him. The techniques of several different people may be used for one client, but all of this information, all of these insights must be drawn together, interpreted and used by the case worker as an integrated whole in the counselling.

The other point is this. Since it is impossible to deal with a person in the abstract, apart from his social environment, a social worker must understand the nature of social structure. The Rev. Joseph Fletcher in an article on "Social Training for the Ministry" has written: "Problems of delinquency for example bring pastors to grips with family case work and the group work problem of recreational facilities, but always beyond these things lies the question of employment and ultimately therefore of prices, wages and profits. The point here is that the Christian minister is not merely concerned with social adjustments. He must understand clearly and circumstantially what the social structure is and how it determines his peoples' condition of life." That applies with equal force to the Christian social worker.

An understanding of social structure, yes, and a Christian philosophy of history and a Christian view of the nature and destiny of man. It is not possible to say much about that. Arnold J. Toynbee delivered an address on "Christianity and Civilization" at Oxford nearly eight years ago. Toynbee speaks not as a theologian but as an historian, but this is what he says in conclusion: "The historical progress of religion in this world, as represented by the rise of the higher religions and by their culmination in Christianity, may, and almost certainly will, bring with it, incidentally, an immeasurable improvement in the conditions of human social life on earth; but its direct effect and its deliberate aim and its true test is the opportunity which it brings to individual souls for spiritual progress in this world during the passage from birth to death. It is this individual spiritual progress in this world for which we pray when we say 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven'."

The work of a Church social agency is not merely palliative, remedial, patching up a life here and there so that people may somehow keep going. It is to share, with all our inadequacies, in the work of redemption.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

_Episcopalians United_, Edited by Theodore P. Ferris (for the Church Congress). Morehouse Gorham Co. $2.75.

*_Lambeth and Unity_, by Louis A. Haselmayer (for the American Church Union). Morehouse Gorham Co. $2.75.

In these two books we have an interesting contrast, not only in the subjects discussed, but in the basic methods of approaching these subjects. "Episcopalians United" consists of the papers delivered at the Church Congress held at Toledo in April, 1947. The writers' aim is unity within the Episcopal Church and the result is a book that is much less impressive than it is valuable. The desire of the writers of the papers not to give offense has had two results: 1) There is perhaps too much definition of terms; and 2) there is a sheering away from the earnestness and self-importance of fanaticism. The general amiability of the book is liable to disguise to the average reader the fact that there is a great deal of importance in it.

Dr. Haselmayer's book, on the other hand, concerns external unity and was written for the approval of a small group of like-minded people. It breathes a devotional spirit and a sense of scholarship with which no one can quarrel; but it is not nearly as important a book as its spirit and its scholarship would seem to indicate. It reminds one of the bland remark by a Jesuit scholar: "We are allowed complete freedom of research, but not the freedom to draw independent conclusions." "Lambeth and Unity" is quite tendentious all the way through. The result is that author hangs himself on the three following dilemmas:

1) While calling earnestly for the Apostolic succession, he does not trust the Bishops meeting at Lambeth. He refers to their attempts to broaden the Quadrilateral, by making its terms more precise, as a "theological deterioration." Father Haselmayer seems to feel that the Episcopate is necessary to the Church, but that intellectually it is a necessary evil.

2) He documents his remarks with quotations from all the Prayer Books of the Anglican Communion, but he uses a great deal of selection in this documentation which he could not have done so easily if he had been writing for the Church Congress. The Corpus of tradition in our branch of the Catholic Church is so great and rich that almost any man can draw from it proof tests for his own beliefs, but it is wrong to try to fit that Corpus within any one set of beliefs.

3) By a constant appeal to the past he attempts to posit an unchanging theology in the Church. This may or may not be a denial of the work of the Holy Spirit, but it leads him into such naivetés as the following: "From 1908 to 1920 the secular world went through the disturbance of the first World War." This would indicate that the religious world did not go through the same disturbance, or perhaps that the right-minded members of the religious world, like the Bourbons during the French Revolution, forgot nothing and learned nothing.

While not as important as it looks, a book of this depth cannot be ignored. It leaves out too much in its desire to press its point. No attention is paid to the fact, for example, that within the Catholic tradition, Anglican theories of the ministry (theological, historical, and practical) coincide at almost no point with the theories of the Roman Church. It is less of a red herring drawn across the road to Unity than Father Cirlot's articles were, and it does make more of a contribution to our general knowledge on the subject of the various Quadrilaterals; but it is very much in the deliberately selective school of scholarship to which Dom Gregory Dix and certain of the Roman Catholic scholars have accustomed us.

Church Plays Part in Social Workers Conference

Dean Lichtenberger and Dr. Walter Pettit Speakers at Dinner of Service for Youth

Edited by Sara Dill

Atlantic City: — Approximately 8,000 people attended the national conference of social work which met here April 17-23, with the Episcopal Church represented by large numbers. The Episcopal Service for Youth held its annual conference during the sessions, with Social Workers Walter Pettit and Dean Lichtenberger of Newark the speakers at its dinner. The former dealt with the long standing arguments as to whether private or government agencies best serve human needs. He stated that "if a privately managed agency can meet a need as efficiently as a public agency, as a rule the activity should remain under the private group. The quality of work, the adequacy of funds, the democracy of administration, the absence of discriminatory policies, the attitude toward new ideas and toward cooperation with other activities, all are problems that must be considered."

"In a democratic society," he said, "it is well to have as many organizations as possible with as many citizens directly interested in community activities as can be secured."

The address by Dean Lichtenberger of Newark, a WITNESS editor, is published as an article elsewhere in this issue.

The conference was attended by representatives of 14 of the 15 diocesan branches of the society. They elected Mrs. John E. Woodward of South Orange, N. J. as president to succeed the late Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, for whom a memorial service was held at St. James' Church. Vice-presidents are Dr. Walter Pettit, the Rev. John K. Mount Jr. of Baltimore, Miss Helen Olmstead of Buffalo, Mr. Clarence M. Brown of Philadelphia and the Rev. J. G. Sherman of Bellerose, Long Island. Mr. Arthur A. Atha of Brooklyn is the treasurer.

Miss Edith F. Balmford, national executive secretary, stated that more than 8,500 young people between the ages of 14 and 25 sought the help of the federated societies during the past year, and she said that the society, in its approach to young people, unites the highest standards of social work with the spiritual resources of the Church.

Bishop Gardner of New Jersey was the celebrant at a corporate communion at St. James', followed by a breakfast and there were several teas which afforded Episcopalians attending the conference a chance to swap ideas.

Interest was added to the conference this year by the first post-war meeting of the international conference of social work, attended by about 60 men and women from 40 countries. Highlighting this affair was an address by George E. Haynes, a communicant of the Church of England who is the secretary of the British council of social service. He too dealt with private agencies vs. government agencies and said that because the work of private agencies is smaller it can be personalized so that the recipient of aid can feel that he is a human being, meeting and dealing with friends, rather than a case number in a mechanical process.

In round table discussions those attending the international conference compared notes on conditions in their countries and told of their programs for rehabilitation, housing, resettlement of rural areas and other problems.

Episcopalian Henry A. Wallace, a delegate to the joint committee of trade unions in social work, addressed several overflow meetings and was given a noisy ovation at one of them when he was introduced by another Episcopalian, Mary van Kleeck, a vice president of the Episcopal League for Social Action.

The interdenominational Church conference of social workers passed a resolution urging the U.S. government "to seek out and pursue all possible avenues toward an amicable adjustment with Russia."

Praise for Kimber Den

Shanghai:—The Newsletter of the American Church Mission for March has this to say about the work of the Rev. Kimber Den, written by a young teacher of Mahan School, Yangchow, who was assigned to the job of traveling up the Yangtze to inspect the work of the Church: "You will carry away from Nanchang the memory of having been the guest of an unusually great Christian, the Rev. Kimber Den. With more irons in the fire than a school of blacksmiths, he stamps around at a half-gallop from church to leprosarium, to blind asylum, to primate school and a host of other personalized projects. To report that he also finds time to hold a prayer meeting in somebody's house every day sounds incredible, but it is true. While I was in Nanchang Mr. Den suffered from an attack of malaria and celebrated Holy Communion with a temperature of 101. One does not forget such things quickly."

Accompanying the report was the picture, here reproduced, which is of special interest to readers of THE WITNESS, since it was taken at the memorial school at Nanchang which Kimber Den named in memoriam of the daughter of our managing editor, Marcia. The picture shows children being injected against typhus and cholera.

The Episcoal League for Social Action (formerly CLID) has been raising funds for a number of years to aid Kimber Den's work. Any wishing to contribute to Kimber Den's work should send their checks to that organization at 412 West Grand Blvd., Detroit 16, Michigan.

Church Club Elects

New York: — The annual dinner meeting of the Church Club of New York was held May 3 and the following officers elected: President, Douglas M. Moffat; vice-presidents, Allan Davies, J. Ralph Jacoby, George N. Lindsay; secretary, Edwin N. Perkins; treasurer, Edwin Gibbs; trustees for a three year term, George D. Edwards, Bedell H. Harned, Charles M. Richter.

ert McC. Marsh, presided at a dinner when there was a talk by Canon James Green of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on "Precentors, choir schools and music."

Lack of Milkers

Boston (RNS): — The Methodist Church has become so over-urbanized that at general conferences "only a couple of delegates could milk a cow," Prof. C. M. McConnell of Boston University told the general conference meeting here. He warned that neglect of rural parishes "will find members sinking into paganism."

Japanese Bishops

Tokyo (RNS):—Three bishops of the Church in Japan have been granted permits by occupation authorities to attend the Lambeth Conference: Bishop Yashiro of Kobe; Bishop Makita of North Kwanto; Assistant Bishop Yanagihara of Osaka. The last two will also attend the assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam.

College Conference

Ann Arbor:—A conference on college work with the theme "Christian Witness on the Campus" was held here, April 16-18, under the auspices of the midwest province. It was attended by 84 students from 22 colleges located in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan. Leaders were Bishop Emrich of Michigan, the Rev. Robert F. McGregor of Oberlin, Ohio, the Rev. Hugh C. White Jr. of Michigan State Normal College, the Rev. John H. Burt, chaplain to Episcopal students at the University of Michigan. In addition the following acted as advisers: Miss Maxine Westphal of the University of Michigan; the Rev. John Porter, chaplain at Hillsdale College; the Rev. George Culleney, chaplain at Albion College; the Rev. William Clobsch, chaplain at Michigan State; the Rev. John Carlton, chaplain at Northern Michigan and the Rev. Sidney Brown, chaplain at Ohio University.

Wellesley Conference

Boston:—The Wellesley Conference, one of the oldest Church conferences, will hold its forty-first season from June 20 to June 26, at Wellesley College twelve miles from Boston. Canon Theodore O. Wedel of the Washington Cathedral will be the keynote speaker of the conference, and will lecture on "The Gospel, The Church and The World." The Rev. Francis O. Ayres, Jr., rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut will be the conference chaplain.

Courses will be offered in Christian education, personal religion, liturgics, Christian social relations, women's work. In addition there will be the school of Church music which has made Wellesley distinctive for many years.

Those teaching at the conference are Mrs. Harold C. Kelleran, Mrs. Dora P. Chaplin, Miss Avis E. Harvey, and the Rev. Messrs. David R. Hunter, Robert L. Curry, Meredith Wood, Lawrence Rose, William B. Spofford, Jr., Thaddeus Clapp, Clifford L. Stanley, Morton C. Stone, Roy W. Battenhouse.

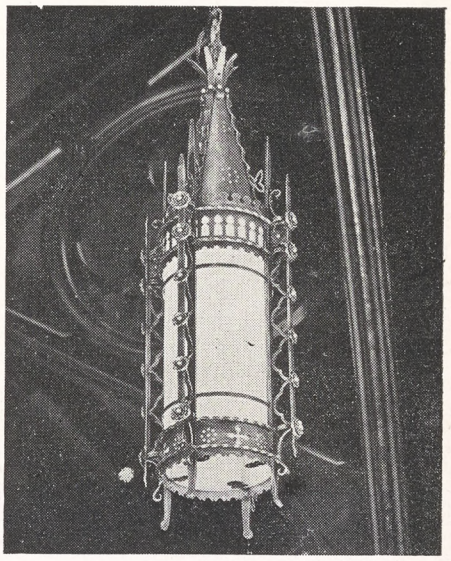
The director of the music school will be Mr. George Faxon. Teaching in the school will be Mr. Faxon, Dr. Healey Willan of the University of Toronto, and Mr. Edward B. Gammons, director of music, Groton School. Special lectures will be given by Dr. Wallace Goodrich, Mr. Richard E. Klausli, Mr. Philip Malpas, Mr. Charles D. Matheson, and Mr. William E. Self.

The cost of the Conference is $38.00 including a $10.00 registration fee. Programs and registration cards may be secured from Miss Ruth Cheyne, 233 Clarendon St., Boston.

Attends First Council

Pelotas, Brazil:—Bishop Louis C. Melcher, newly consecrated coadjutor of Southern Brazil, attended his first council of the Church in Brazil, meeting here for five days in April. He proposed an every member canvass from May 23 to June 6 and presented a preliminary program for it.

Reconciliation Church



Frankfurt-am-Main, Germany: — A wooden barracks church provided by the reconstruction department of the World Council of Churches was consecrated April 25 by the Old Catholic parish here. Pastor Paul Pfister proposed that the church be named "Reconciliation Church" because it was given to replace an edifice destroyed during the war. The money for the building, $4,613, was contributed by the Episcopal Church of the United States.

Minneapolis, Minn.:—St. John's Church, located in the Linden Hills section of this city, was consecrated on May 2 by Bishop Keeler.

Bexley Conference

Gambier, O.:—A conference for men interested in the ministry was held at Bexley Hall from April 30 through May 2. Speakers were Bishop-elect William J. Gordon of Alaska; the Rev. Arthur W. Hargate of Toledo; the Rev. Robert F. McGregor of Oberlin; the Rev. Nelson M. Burroughs of Cincinnati; the Rev. E. H. Buxton of Bellefontaine, Ohio, and members of the Bexley faculty.

Young People Meet

Flint, Mich.:—Bishop Emrich and Dean John J. Weaver were headliners at the annual young people's conference of the diocese of Michigan which was held here at St. Paul's, April 16-17. It was attended by 170 delegates, representing 65 parishes.

Cantata Award

New York:—Louie White, a 27 year-old graduate assistant at Syracuse University, has won the award in the competition for an original cantata suitable for Ascension Day, which was offered by the Church of the Ascension here. The work is being heard for the first time at the festival service being held this evening, May 6, under the direction of Vernon de Tar, organist and choirmaster.

Role in Peace

New York:—A report will be presented at the Amsterdam assembly of the World Council of Churches setting forth the role of the Church in the establishment of world peace and justice. It will be the work of a commission consisting of 24 churchmen from 18 countries, serving as the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs. Representing the United States will be John Foster Dulles, special adviser to Secretary of State, George Marshall; Professor Reinhold Niebuhr of Union Seminary; Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church and Bishop Oldham of Albany. Bishop Bell of Chichester is one of the three representatives of Great Britain.

The report will be presented by Mr. Dulles.

Step Toward Unity

Toronto (RNS):—Archbishop George F. Kingston, primate of the Church of England in Canada, and the Rt. Rev. T. W. Jones, moderator of the United Church of Canada, have sent a joint letter to their constituents exhorting them to study the proposal for "a mutually acceptable ministry."

The proposal has been recommended by a joint commission of the two communions and represents the latest step in their negotiations toward union. In their joint letter the two Church leaders declared that no plan of corporate reunion can be formulated "until certain preliminary problems of importance have been examined."

SENTINELS FOR FREEDOM

A recent letter from a physician whose pastor had given him Spiritual Mobilization tracts spoke of the ministers who constitute this Crusade as "sentinels for freedom."

In a freedom abandoning age it isn't always easy or popular to champion it. But our position is becoming stronger each day as world trends and conditions become more obvious.

When this Crusade started, fourteen years ago, its views were very unpopular. Now, especially in its crusade to get 5,000,000 new voters eligible and voted this year, it has the support of thousands who had been critical.

This Crusade does not seek to do anyone's thinking. It does not tell anyone who to vote for or how to do his pastoral job. It never raises any theological issues. It is just an earnest group of 12,791 pastors of churches, "sentinels for freedom," who take their New Testament seriously and believe that spiritual freedom, the dignity of man, the democratic process, and the sovereignty of the citizen over the state are in peril here and MUST be saved. Do you share our convictions and concerns? Will you make common cause with us? May we send you tracts concerning the 5,000,000 voters campaign and other tracts incident to our Crusade? We need your help! Freedom needs friends and crusaders who, in the areas of their influence, will uphold it and the sense of individual, personal responsibility which alone can preserve it.

munions," they said, "the proposals certainly call for an earnest study on the part of both ministers and people. It is only by such study that it will be possible to find out the true mind of the Churches concerned."

A World "First"

Phoenix, Ariz.: — The Episcopal Church scored a world "First" on April 12th, when a helicopter delivered a quonset hut to the site of St. Andrew's mission chapel in Havasu Canyon, 3000 feet below the surrounding country. The Havasupai Indians have lived in this canyon for some 500 or 600 years, raising their figs, peaches, apples, corn, beans and squash, and irrigating them and their pastures with the cold, clear waters of the Havasu River which runs through their canyon and empties into the Colorado River some 10 miles below the village of Supai. The Episcopal Church has had contact with this tribe for about 25 years, chiefly through the ministrations of the Ven. J. Rockwood Jenkins, retired Archdeacon of Arizona. Few visits could be made during the year because of the isolation and the difficulties of getting down into the canyon on horseback or afoot. But the work was kept up and today there are a good number of baptized and a few confirmed persons.

Early last winter the idea of having a quonset hut for a chapel began to be worked out, and a steel construction company offered to give the hut and deliver it at Hilltop where the horse trail starts down into the canyon. It was then that the helicopter was thought of and the Bishop of Arizona entered into a contract with an airways company to use its helicopter to fly the hut, piece by piece, into the Canyon.

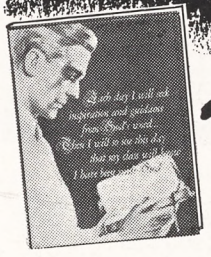
When this plan was made public, and it was realized that it was really an event of national, if not world, interest then everybody wanted to get in on the publicity. The date of the event was set for Monday, April 12th. Bishop Kinsolving and the Rev. Robert P. Frazier, who has been in charge of the work at Supai since last September and makes a monthly visit of several days' duration each month, went down to Supai several days before to be sure that everything was ready in the canyon. Sunday was a day of rain, sleet and high winds. The helicopter which had arrived in that part of the country had to make a forced landing and was out of commission. There was gloom in Supai when this report was phoned down. But soon the gloom was lifted by another call saying that a second helicopter had been obtained and the flight would take place as scheduled.

Monday morning dawned bright and sunny and very little wind. The Mutual Broadcasting System had a team on hand to make a transcription of the first flight of the helicopter and its reception by the Indians, followed by a part of the dedicatory exercises. When the sound of the motor was heard and the machine could be seen approaching just about the whole tribe assembled and when the landing was made a great shout went up. For the rest of the day the helicopter was busy ferrying down some of the steel, but mostly its time was taken up in bringing down and taking out the various publicity men from the newspapers, radio, news reels, television, and photographers. In the middle of the afternoon a cavalcade arrived on horseback after a three hour ride down the trail, and the dedication then took place.

An opening prayer by the Rev. Mr. Frazier was followed by Bishop Kinsolving introducing the Indian Service officials, including Mr. Tom Dodge, superintendent of the Truxton Canyon agency, of which the Havasupai Reservation is a part, who made a short speech. Then the Tribal leaders were introduced and Mr. Lee Marshall spoke for the tribe. Then the bishop read the Dedicatory prayer and requested Archdeacon Jenkins to dedicate the cornerstone. The benediction closed the service.

The quonset hut will sit on a three foot stone wall built by the Indians from the red rock of the canyon walls, and will have a stone front with a mission belfry. All of the work on the chapel is being done by the Indians themselves, and the actual erection of the hut will be under an expert from the steel company.

Professor Is Backed



Evansville, Ind.: — Widespread controversy has been started by the dismissal of George Parker, assistant professor of religion and philosophy at Evansville College, privately-endowed school supported by the Methodist Church following his activities on behalf of Henry A. Wallace. "Deep concern" was expressed by Methodist Bishop Titus Lowe of the Indianapolis area, who declared the Church "always has supported full religious and political freedom of speech, thought and action." Bishop Lowe said Parker's ouster would be considered at the annual state Methodist conference in June.

John C. Soucie, president of the Central Labor Union (AFL) here, endorsed the college action in demanding Parker's resignation, saying the latter's political activities reflected "on the school and other faculty members."

Meanwhile, a resolution reaffirming its adherence to civil liberty and academic freedom was adopted at Greencastle by the Indiana chapter of the American Association of university professors. During a period of political tension, the resolution said, it is necessary "to adhere firmly to the principles of civil liberty and academic freedom and tenure for which the American Association of University Professors stands."

A statement protesting Parker's discharge was also issued by the Indianapolis Committee on Civil Rights.

Petitions were being circulated on the College campus to get student reaction to the demand for Parker's resignation. Students favoring the dismissal of Parker said the final tabulation would show a three-to-one vote in their favor. Parker supporters declared that many who favor their stand won't put themselves on record because they intend to teach or work in Evansville after graduation. However, college trustees indicated they would make no change in their stand, regardless of the outcome of the student vote.

Ralph Madson Injured

Moultrie, Ga.: — The Rev. G. Ralph Madson, rector at Albany, Ga., was critically injured on April 13 when his car crashed into a truck. He was carried to a hospital here where, due to severe head and chest injuries, very little hope is held out for his recovery.

REV. E. H. ECKEL
Rector of Trinity, Tulsa, Okla.

MISS JOAN ARBOUR
Sec'y to Secretary for College Work of the Province of New England

It is indeed disheartening to read of Mrs. Weeks' wish to discontinue her subscription to your fine magazine (WITNESS, April 22) because she finds herself too upset by urges to stir herself to protest against infringement of civil liberties, Negro inequality, etc.

Our Lord stirred a great number, and continues to do so. He gives true peace and quiet only to the hearts of those men who dare to act according to the urges stirred by Him. Our Church recognizes its responsibility to men in all phases of life: economic, political and social, as well as ethical and moral. What true Christian can hope to find peace if he doesn't raise his voice in protest against infringements of civil liberties, and if he doesn't concern himself with seeing that the Christian way is at least pointed out to the men who formulate the economic, social and political policies of the world?

REV. WARWICK AIKEN
Rector of Christ Church, Vicksburg, Miss.

Before making THE WITNESS state so emphatically that Negroes are brutally treated, don't you think it would be well for you to make an investigation yourself? I'm sure you don't know it but we are sincerely trying to get along with our Colored brethren. I've lived nearly all my 59 years in the South, have been raised with them, there being one to four in our house or on our premises, and when in business employed as many as 20 at once and as far as I know have never had a hard word with one and certainly never a quarrel.

ANSWER: THE WITNESS stated nothing, emphatically or otherwise. Mr. Aiken refers to a news despatch (WITNESS, April 8) sent by the Religious News Service which quotes a letter written by the Rev. W. H. Jernagin, head of the Washington bureau of the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, to Attorney General Tom Clark. It was presented as news not as editorial opinion.

MRS. GERTRUDE W. SCOTT
Churchwoman of San Pedro, Cal.

The April 1 issue gave too much space to the arguments of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship. If, as hinted in a note, the editors differ to any extent from the views put forth, there should have been either articles or editorials giving the opposite side. It is irresponsible journalism for editors to "not even see" article (or cover pictures) to be used.

An odd fallacy runs through all pacifist arguments: that we who favor bringing about international peace by diplomacy backed by armed force, are the only ones who believe the "end justifies the means." The pacifists' "end" is, they say, international peace. To bring this about they are willing to shatter the chief defenses we now have against international bandits, the sense of solidarity America found within herself during the late war and the loyalty and conviction of our young men. Without protection of armed might against Russia's determination that we shall not prevent chaos in Europe, no Marshall Plan aid can be put into effect. Russia, that is the Communist dictatorship, not the Russian people, has planned since 1943 anyway to expand her power by treachery, chaos, violence and calculated cruelty. Stalin makes no bones about it, except when by talking "peace" he can gain time to plan war.

As to the assumption that force never yet brought about peace (not so stated but implied by all pacifists) I have seen it do so twice in my half-century of life. The "punitive expedition" of General Pershing into Mexico to rout out Francisco Villa. Many feared that would precipitate war. It didn't. Both Wilson and Pershing intended peace. The Mexican government reconciled itself to the action and no bitterness was left. Two, the much decried atom bombing of two Japanese cities. Despite people who wring their hands over the "fiendishness" of atomic warfare, that particular use of the bomb while it was still a surprise weapon actually brought world war two to an end under Truman's skillful handling. The atom bomb is at best a last resort. But the American people as a whole are against its wholesale use to start, or continue, a war.

I spoke of the solidarity of the American people, new found during world war two. We still have it, I think, to fall back on. But articles like those of the E.P.F. could easily wreck it, causing as much sorrow and suffering (without admitting it) as anything the peace-by-force people can accomplish. In fact the latter are much like a frontier community electing a sheriff and giving him guns and power to select and use a posse against criminals. That really does work. There was a time when the number of pacifists in the population was so small they could safely be allowed to indulge their own pet hate against the soldier who defends them. That time is past.

I am the mother of three sons, all of potential military age.

American Bible Society Needs Added Funds For Work

Official of the Society Presents Figures About the Mass Production of Scriptures

By Gilbert Darlington
Treasurer of the American Bible Society

New York:—The year 1948 can be the greatest year in the production and distribution of printed copies of the word of God in the whole span of Christian history. If the Christian people of America will supply the funds that are needed to answer the tremendous demands for Scriptures that are coming in from all over the world, new records of achievement in the production and sowing of the good seed of the Gospel will be recorded. It all depends upon you.

More requests for Bibles, Testaments and Gospels have come to the American Bible Society in New York in the past few months than have ever been received in a similar period before by any Bible Society. These requests for the Scriptures are caused by (1) the curtailment of, or complete ending of, Bible publication in many parts of the world during the seven long years of the war and the paralysis that followed; (2) the great destruction of Scriptures in churches, Sunday schools, homes and publishing plants by bombing and by the fire that followed; (3) the great numbers of displaced persons that were unable to take their Scriptures with them, or lost them during this trying period; and (4) the great numbers of people that have learned to read during the past nine years (these new literates must have an opportunity to obtain the Scriptures to give them perspective and balance in weighing the political and economical propaganda that is flooding the world); add to all this the fact that (5) the United States is the only place where copies of the Scriptures can now be published without priorities on materials and without bottlenecks in production programs, and you will then see what a supreme opportunity for Christian service is given today to the people of the United States. No other nation can begin to supply these Scriptures, because the war has left other nations with damaged production facilities, with shortages of paper and binding materials and with exchange and other restrictions that it will take a long time to remove. All of these requests can be promptly and efficiently answered by the United States if the funds are donated promptly. It all depends upon you!

This is not the place to present all the complicated statistics of the Society's worldwide publishing program, but I have brought together a few brief items that involve work in only six languages, the books and materials for which must be paid for from the Society's World Recovery program in 1948.

To enable the Christian leaders of Germany to continue their own program of Scripture production, which the Society inaugurated for them last year, totaling 700,000 Bibles and 1,155,000 New Testaments, there was recently sent them 15 tons of endleaf paper, five tons of cotton, 35 tons of waste paper, one ton of potato flour, four and one-half tons of wheat starch, fifteen and a half tons of vegetable glue and 631 bundles of binder's board.

The Society expects to send to Germany 200,000 small pocket Bibles which have just been printed on a high-speed rotary press in New England, and another shipment of 150,000 German New Testaments. There is another 48,000 German Testaments, which have been printed and bound for the American Bible Society in Finland, which will reach Germany as soon as shipping can be arranged.

The shortage of Bibles and Testaments in Germany at the end of the war was recently estimated to be over 10,000,000. There is still a long way to go.

Russian Church leaders are presented Bibles: left to right: Archbishop Adam of the Russian Orthodox Church; Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod; Dr. Daniel Burke, President of the American Bible Society; the Rev. Gilbert Darlington, treasurer of the Society

Orders have been placed for the fourth edition of the Russian New Testament and Psalms. Thousands of other Russian Bibles and Russian Gospels have come from the press. Space has been applied for the shipping of 50,000 Russian Bibles, 25,000 Testaments and 200,000 Gospels, these to follow the shipment which reached Murmansk late in December.

A beautiful little edition of the Sermon on the Mount in large Japanese characters has just come from the press, and the books are on their way across the Pacific. Copies of the first edition of 150,000 Japanese Bibles, each weighing almost three pounds, are beginning to arrive at the Bible House in Tokyo in lots of about 20,000 copies. Mr. Tanaka, the secretary there, is receiving them with great joy. The Japanese Bible Society has requested 150,000 more of the large Japanese Bibles and 500,000 more New Testaments, to be printed in the United States. Besides all this the Society has ordered 34 tons of paper for printing Japanese and English parallel-column Testaments, which are very popular in Japan. The plates for the printing are in Tokyo. It is estimated that the paper ordered will be enough to make about 60,000 of these books. And all this is in addition to the almost a million and a half Japanese Testaments sent to Japan last year. There never was so great a demand for the Scriptures by a major non-Christian people before in the history of our faith. A recent report received from Japan showed that the Bible ranked ninth in the list of best sellers in Japan.

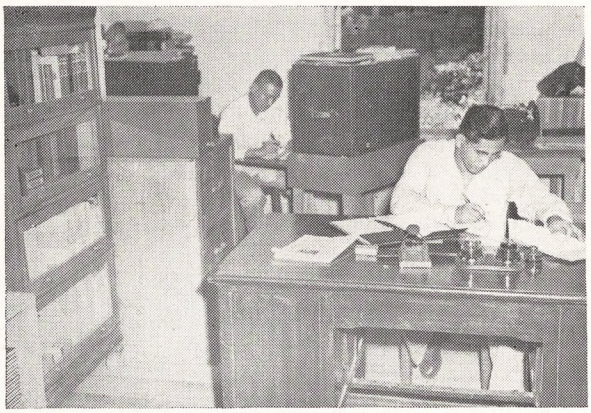
Seventy thousand copies, the third edition of the beautiful Korean New Testament, which is regarded as the handsomest book available in Korea, were forwarded in February from New York to Seoul. Another 50,000 copies will be off the press soon. Besides this, 125,000 each of St. Luke and of St. John in Korean are now ready for shipment.

Sixteen tons of paper have been ordered made in Sweden to be sent to Geneva. This will be used in the publishing of 30,000 French Bibles. The Bible Society is also publishing 30,000 French New Testaments in Switzerland and is ready to ship from New York 100,000 French Gospels when the harbor strikes in France permit.



The number of books involved in the current supplies for these six countries alone totals over 4,118,000. Figuring the average cost of manufacuring a Bible at one dollar, a Testament at 30 cents and a Gospel at two cents, the cost of these books, from all of which the Society expects no return, may be estimated at approximately $1,830,400. Adding the cost of the supplies furnished for printing elsewhere pushes the figure close to $2,000,000.

All this is not something that should be done; it is something that is being done, and the Bible Society is sure the Christian people of America will gladly pay for all of it!

The Protestant Episcopal Church has always been a Bible-loving Church. Most of the Prayer Book is composed of selections from the Holy Scriptures. The new translation and revision work done by the Society in many languages is always available for use when a Prayer Book is printed in that language. The American Bible Society is your Bible Society. Your gifts to it will help to lay a firm foundation for a better and a more Christian world.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION IN CHINA

New York:—More than one million Gospel Portions have been issued in China during the last two months, reports Dr. Ralph Mortensen, secretary for the American Bible Society's work there. Thirty tons of additional paper have been rushed to him by the Society in New York that the printing may go on and the distribution be maintained.

RECORD DAY IN MANILA

Manila:—Bare shelves in the newly opened office of the American Bible Society in Manila are mute evidence of a record-day when the Society disposed of 991 Bibles and New Testaments. Their supply of Ilocano Bibles and Cebuan New Testaments is exhausted. New editions of these books are now being printed in this country and will be forwarded as rapidly as possible.

DISCRIMINATION DENOUNCED

Chicago: — Bishop Wallace E. Conkling of Chicago vigorously denounced racial discrimination in addressing the convention of the diocese, meeting at St. James' Church, May 3-4.

"Why should certain public schools be inferior; certain streets not as clean; certain public accommodations inferior? In every avenue of public life we must fight against these." The Bishop urged the Church to speed the day "when we can freely worship side by side, irrespective of the color of our skins," declaring that these distinctions "are only of human manufacture."

He praised advances made by Negro parishes and missions in the diocese and reported that St. Edmund's would hold its first service on June 6 in the buildings recently purchased for $175,000 from a Greek Orthodox parish. He also stated that the parish would open a school in September.

Bishop Conkling urged church people to enlist in a fight against the city's slums where, he said, "poverty, incredible housing conditions, organized vice, truancy, drinking and crime among juveniles are such as to threaten ominously not only the character of those in the area but the security and well-being of us all." Calling for 100 churchmen who would volunteer to join with him in a definite plan of action, the Bishop declared that "here among us is the cancer that can and will destroy our nation if it is not removed. The poison spreads rapidly and far. We cannot prate about the glories of democracy nor condemn other systems while such things flourish in our midst. Nor can we, as Christian, look and walk away."

The convention was told that the request for a suffragan bishop to succeed Bishop Randall, who retired in January, would be postponed for six months; Bishop Conkling stating that it is his hope that when one is elected that it will be a man especially fitted to direct the social service work of the diocese. He urged the convention to set up a fund to supplement the income of retired clergy whose payments from the Church Pension Fund have lost much of their purchasing power. He also asked vestries to consider salary increases for the clergy.

Christians of Greece Again Call For the Gospel

The Old Cry of "Come Over and Help Us" Is This Time to Church People in America

By Frank R. Wilson

New York:—The Gospel has never ceased to be a living force in Greece since that day when Paul and Silas, having landed in the little port city of Neapolis, made their way to Philippi seven miles inland and, finding no synagogue, declared the Gospel to a little band of women who met by the river-side on the Sabbath to pray.

It has been a long and thorny road that the Church in Greece has followed through the centuries, marked by the Arab conquests of the seventh century; the Crusades through the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth centuries; and the Turkish conquests, completed in the fifteenth century.

After the First World War and the establishment of the Republic of Greece, the Greek Orthodox Church emerged with more promise than for a long time. Meanwhile evangelical movements from the West had become well established in Greece, and the popularity of the Scriptures, both in the ancient Greek and in modern Greek, grew rapidly through the years.

About forty years ago the theological graduates of the University of Athens founded what is called the Zoe Brotherhood, an evangelistic movement which has been greatly blessed. It now maintains at the University its own printing plant, where the members donate their services. This plant has been the source, not only of thousands of Scripture volumes, but of much other Christian literature, including hymnals that have been made available to the churches. The brotherhood's magazine Zoe was the only magazine in Greece that did not cease to appear during the war.

The days of struggle for the Christian Churches, both the Greek Orthodox and the evangelical bodies, are by no means over, but the determined spirit to spread the Gospel is expanding to meet the need. The agent of the Bible Society in Athens, Mr. George Kladis, in his latest report says, "There is every indication that the demand for Scriptures is now greater than it was before the war."

This need and the zeal on the part of Greek Christians was presented directly to the American Bible Society from two independent sources within twenty-four hours recently.

The first appeal came in a letter signed by Major General A. Perivoliotis, Chief of Staff B of the general staff of the Greek army. The letter was courteous, brief and to the point. It began: "The command of the Greek army is wishing to provide each recruit with a copy of the New Testament, which copy is to be kept by them on their release."

The request was for 200,000 Testaments, partly in ancient and partly in modern Greek. Then the General wrote: "In view of the fact that the prevailing financial conditions do not allow the Greek army to purchase and print locally the said copies, it will be greatly appreciated if you would inform this headquarters whether you can provide them gratis as a gift."

The next morning among the visitors to the Bible House on Park Avenue were Mr. Demetrios Papakonstantinou, publishing superintendent of the Zoe Brotherhood and Father Papodeas of the New York Greek Cathedral. They came with a request for paper and other materials with which the Brotherhood might produce an edition of 100,000 Greek Testaments. With their donated services, the Brotherhood had before the war been able to distribute these books below cost at eight cents apiece. Mr. Papakonstantinou thought that even yet they might price them as low as twelve cents, if the Society could furnish the materials.

Since the British and Foreign Bible Society has always, in the cooperative work of the two Societies in Bible lands, cared for the needs of the people of Greece, these two requests were referred to them. Secretary Arthur Wilkinson of the British Society replied that he hoped to have the books for the Greek army printed in Canada, but might call on the American Bible Society for help. In view of the present situation in England it is likely that the help required might be considerable. It may even eventuate that most of the Scripture needs for Greece may have to be met by the Christian people of America. At all events the American Bible Society must be prepared to meet these requests. Is it not a high privilege to stand in the long long line of those that, beginning with the Apostle Paul, have answered Greece's call to come over and help her? And, after all, in the light of America's wealth and opportunity it is little that the Greek army and the Zoe Brotherhood ask for.

Bibles are prominent in a Korean Sunday school

It is estimated that the 200,000 Testaments for the army will cost about $85,000, and the twenty tons of paper, together with the glue, thread, cloth, binder's board and other materials for the production of 100,000 Testaments by the Zoe Brotherhood, would cost $14,000 — a total of $99,000.

Because the great Apostle answered the Macedonian call, the Gospel came to Europe, where it established the base for which it has spread to all the world. How little do we know what God may bring to pass from the aid that we are today asked to give to the people of Greece?

GERMAN BISHOP THE SPEAKER

New York: — Bishop Hanns Lilje of Hannover, Germany, is the guest speaker at the 132nd Annual Meeting of the American Bible Society being held at St. Bartholomew's Church, today. This is his fifth visit to this country. Bishop Lilje, who arrived in America on April 12, in response to an invitation from the U. S. national committee for Lutheran World Federation, was a militant member of the resistance movement in Germany and was imprisoned on several occasions during the war. When pressed to speak of his experiences, Bishop Lilje recalls, "I was in the hands of the Gestapo in their special prison in Berlin. . . . Three times I was nearly killed by them, having my choice of dying from hanging or starvation, or being shot. . . . During the years of the regime that is now past, we were strengthened by the thought that the 'Word of God is not bound'!"

Following the war, Bishop Lilje was the first German churchman permitted to leave the country. This he did in July 1946 to attend the meeting in London where plans were made for the formation the following year of the United Bible Societies. He now serves on the executive committee of the Evangelical Church of Germany and is a member of the faculty of the ecumenical institute of the World Council of Churches.

Immediately preceding Bishop Lilje's address, there is a brief business session when the board of managers of the American Bible Society present their annual report for 1947. During last year the Bible Society circulated 9,310,439 copies of the Scriptures in 167 different languages.

METHODISTS URGE CHURCH UNION

Boston:—The bishops of the Methodist Church, meeting here in the general conference of that denomination, called upon Protestant Churches to take the first steps toward the formation of a Holy Catholic Church. The statement declared that "the reunion of Christendom can never be achieved by one part of the Holy Catholic Church insisting that all other parts shall deny their Christian convictions and shall discard their creative contributions in order to return to part of the Church Universal."

The Methodists suggested the appointment of qualified representatives by all the Protestant Churches to meet and draft a plan for union. They also urged Protestant Churches to continue their cooperation with the Eastern Orthodox Churches, looking towards eventual union of Protestantism and Eastern Orthodoxy.

When union is accomplished and the Christians of the world belong to but two great Churches, "the leadership of that day may be Christian enough and creative enough to kneel before a common altar, beg forgiveness of the Christ for disunity, and, sharing in the bread and wine of Holy Communion, rise in his spirit to form the Holy Catholic Church to which all Christians may belong."

United action in many fields would rapidly follow Protestant union, the bishops predicted, mentioning a greatly strengthened foreign missions program; a common hymnal; a daily Protestant newspaper; strengthening of radio, television and motion picture programs.

"The union of American Christianity," the statement concluded, "would electrify the world and accelerate the trends toward union in every continent."

SOMETHING IS UP IN SPAIN

Paris (RNS):—Plans are under way to inaugurate a Christian Democratic Party in Spain, according to well-informed Spanish sources here. The informants state that during his recent visit to Madrid, Myron C. Taylor sought to obtain Franco's approval for the project. Such a party would establish a "Latin bloc" in Europe by linking Christian democratic parties in Spain, France and Italy as a bastion against Communism. Said to be slated for the leadership of the new party is Bishop Angel Herrea y Oria of Malaga.

SEEK END OF COLD WAR

New York:—An end to the "cold war" is being sought by the United Council of Church Women which is sponsoring a nationwide peace drive that seeks the support of a million American women. Cards bearing a commitment pledge to work for peace have been sent to 20,000 local councils and women are being urged to make telephone and personal calls to get the cards signed. They will then be used to inform the President, the State Department, Congress and the U. S. delegates of the United Nations that Christian women are determined "to prevent this 'cold war' from breaking into a 'hot war'."

The women are also being urged to support the UN and to oppose the continuing production of atom bombs.

LONGED FOR BIBLE SAYS REFUGEE

Geneva:—She was happy to have saved her songbook when she was evicted from East Prussia, she told the American Bible Society's secretary at his office in Geneva. She had been given needed articles of clothing, but she longed for a Bible. The district office had no more Bibles at hand, but they were able to give the woman a New Testament with Psalms. When it was handed to her, her eyes filled with tears and she said she had not expected such a gift. This is not an isolated case. The district office reports they are repeatedly asked for Bibles and Testaments by the refugees themselves.

NEW LANGUAGES FOR BIBLE

New York:—Some part of the Bible has now been published in 1090 languages and dialects, according to a survey made by the American Bible Society. These figures cover publication up to the end of December, 1947. The latest language to appear in book form, in this list, is the Gospel of Mark in Tzeltal, an Indian dialect spoken in Mexico. The Gospel was published by the American Bible Society.

Ten new languages were added to the list in 1947. They are Aztec, Puebla; Chol; Mixteco; Tarahumara; Tzeltal and Tzotzil spoken in Mexico; Naga: Chang; Naga: Mao in Assam; Nantcheri used in French Equatorial Africa and Palau in Micronesia.

Copies of all these books are now in the library of the American Bible Society in New York City. The Society's collection contains more than 16,000 volumes of Scripture in 906 languages and dialects.

EDITORIALS

Whitsunday

ONE of the charms of Whitsunday is the fact that the feast of the Holy Spirit cannot be commercialized. One of the weaknesses of the day is really our weakness—our inability to make the Third Person real and concrete. Accordingly, the day is most often celebrated as the "birthday of the Church," although some scholars feel this does not do full justice to our Lord's opinion on the matter, since they believe it is truer to say that he found a Church rather than that he founded one.

To bring back the Holy Spirit into his feast, without losing the idea of the Church, it is well to remind ourselves that the invisible wind is seen only in the way it works: when one puts up a kite, or sail, or windmill, or weathervane. And on these birthdays of the Church, we are more and more reminded that it is time again for the Church to act its age, in its response to the challenge of Church unity. Here, without all the assistances of the Holy Spirit, the Church is helpless.

It seems especially appropriate, therefore, that two calls for prayer have issued for the day: one from the World Council, for the success of the ecumenical meeting at Amsterdam; and one from the Federal Council, for China and all other nations. We urge that these intentions be in the hearts of all Episcopalians as we pray for the whole state of Christ's Church on Whitsunday.

"QUOTES"

EVERY time I visit the headquarters of the American Bible Society it impresses me as a powerhouse. This impression has been deepened by each world journey. This should be so for the Bible itself is the world's chief source book of vital energy.

—JOHN R. MOTT

American Bible Society

THE Society was founded in 1816 and is probably the oldest inter-denominational agency in the United States. Its first president, Elias Boudinot, was president of the First Continental Congress. Among its founders and early presidents were such men as John Jay, John Quincy Adams, and Richard Varick. Its present board of managers numbers 48 prominent Christian laymen operating through seven standing committees.

The Society is designed to encourage the wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures without note or comment and without purpose of profit. In recent years there has been added an unparalleled stimulation in the use of the Bible.

The Society serves 48 denominations with a membership of more than 40 million in the distribution of the Scriptures both at home and abroad. One of the Society's tasks is to make the Scriptures available to every man in his own tongue. It is continually aiding missionaries who are engaged in translating the Scriptures into new languages and revising translations already made. It has thus shared in the great historical effort resulting in the publication of some portion of the Scriptures in almost 1100 languages, spoken by nine-tenths of the human race, a process that is advancing with vigor among primitive peoples today at the rate of nearly one new language a month.

The major task of the Society is to put the book into the hands of those without it. To do this it operates through 12 offices in the United States and 13 foreign agencies serving more than 45 countries abroad. The principal method of distribution in foreign lands is by colporteurs—native Christians who for a modest salary devote their lives to taking the Bible to their fellow countrymen.

In this country a variety of methods are used, including colportage — an allowance of small commissions to mission-minded pastors and laymen. The Society also works through home mission boards, and makes direct shipments to needy institutions such as jails, orphanages, hospitals and supplies Scriptures for the armed forces.

It is the Society's responsibility to make the Bible the most available book at the lowest possible price. Its time-tested policy is to sell the book wherever possible—never at a profit, and frequently below cost. In the foreign field, prices are designed to meet the prevailing economic situation. In cases of demonstrated need, especially with institutions, full or part grants are made.

Since 1835 the Society has published Scriptures for the blind. They may now be had in 33 languages and systems, including the complete Bible in Talking Book Records. Although costing from $2 to $8 to produce, these volumes are sold to the blind for 25c each.

The American Bible Society has a limited number of trust funds, and for over 100 years has successfully operated an annuity plan. Income from these sources represents about 15% of a year's budget. The Society is principally dependent upon living donors to carry on its work. Churches contribute either denominationally or individually, on a percentage of budget or an annual offering basis. In addition, thousands of Christians contribute directly with gifts of varying amounts, or by making gifts of $5.00 for Active membership, $10.00 for Service, $25.00 for Sustaining, $50.00 for Family, $50.00 for "National Women's Club" membership and $100.00 for the "Ten Thousand Businessmen's Club" membership.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

THERE is little that one should have to say about the Academy Award winning picture, Gentleman's Agreement. It deals of course with the whole issue of anti-Semitism and, being done in an intelligent and mature fashion, is worthy of all sorts of praise. The acting of Gregory Peck, Dorothy McGuire, Celeste Holm, John Garfield and the lesser luminaries is competent and the direction of Elia Kazan (Boomerang) is top-notch.

The laudable angle to the picture is that Hollywood should have produced it at all. We should all be grateful that it was produced before the Great Freeze, started by the Thomas Un-American Committee, settled over the cinema capital. The second noteworthy angle is that the picture was the best money-maker in American theaters for the past year, which shows that the American public doesn't have to be protected from "idea" pictures. Or, from the Thomas Committee's angle, it shows that said public does need protection!

Although good citizens and professing Christians should make every effort to see Gentleman's Agreement, it is far from being the best picture of all time. While commending its message, and granting that it gets it across, I felt that the film was much too verbose and preachy. In this, it suffered from the same fault as Laura Hobson's book which, while dissecting this social problem, indulged in too many platitudes on the subject. In essence, for this reviewer, the film lacked real excitement which should be fundamental for any "idea" picture. Two other fine productions, dealing with vital social themes, offer a good contrast. Both Grapes of Wrath, dealing with migrant workers, and Watch on the Rhine, concerned with the heroism of an anti-Fascist, stimulated an intensity in the observer which was calculated to further study and action. Gentleman's Agreement is so talkative that it will easily be left in the motion picture theater, even as many Sunday worship services are isolated in the church edifice.

However, you and your friends might conceivably be portrayed in the film, as a supporter of restrictive covenants, quotas in colleges or a "patronizer of minorities," and it is a valuable thing to have the mirror held up before you. It would be a valuable project for a Woman's Auxiliary, Men's Club or Y.P.F. to attend this picture as a substitute for a regular meeting. It truly gets down to grass-roots and offers a concrete analysis of the polite, gentleman's agreement type of bigotry which subverts our profession of adherence to the second great commandment.

A Word With You

By
HUGH D. McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

DEFENSIVE AND OFFENSIVE WEAPONS

IT IS amusing to read of masters of vocabulary who covered temporary setbacks by correcting their opponents' use of words. Noah Webster, the American lexicographer, was kissing the parlormaid when his wife entered the room. "Why, Mr. Webster, I am surprised!" she said. "Madam," he replied with pained dignity, "I am surprised: sur and prehendo, latin, caught unprepared; you are astounded!"

Winston Churchill's speeches were gone over by an earnest young secretary who blue penciled ruthlessly all the hanging participles, the split infinitives, and especially the sentences which ended with prepositions. The master of purple press returned one butchered page to the secretary with a notation: "Your finicky corrections are a torment I find it impossible up with which to put!"

It is not so amusing to see words used offensively. Some stick like mud balls, giving no indication of where the man who threw them stood, and hard to remove until they are dried up. Such was the appellation of "witch" in seventeenth century Salem. If the accused denied he was a witch, the accusation was thereby corroborated, for all witches were liars.

If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, this man's religion is vain.

Wanted: 500,000 New Members

by Francis C. Stifler

Secretary for Public Relations, American Bible Society

WHEN the American Bible Society celebrated its 125th anniversary in 1941, its late president, John T. Manson said, "The work of the Society has just begun." On May 8, 1948, the Society observed its 132nd birthday. If one looks at the record in figures alone the Society has circulated in that period 376,825,050 copies of the Scriptures in 40 countries and in more than 200 languages. Certainly a worthwhile achievement. And today the Bible Society is faced with the greatest challenge in its entire history.

In addition to its regular work the Bible Society has received definite appeals totalling 7,856,000 copies of the Scriptures which the Society estimates will cost $2,500,000. To meet these special needs the Society has launched an effort to enroll 500,000 annual members, whose giving over the span of the next several years will insure the meeting of the enormous Scripture needs of the world. It is clear that the Emergency Fund, which started in 1940, cannot be terminated until it is possible to build up continuous giving sufficient to cover both the Society's regular program and its emergency service to areas which it had not hitherto served. In other words, it is clear that the Emergency Fund must become part of the Society's regular operations. This means the necessity of greatly extending the Society's base of support, as well as of maintaining the giving of the Society's present constituency.

Bibles sell like hot cakes on the streets of Tokyo

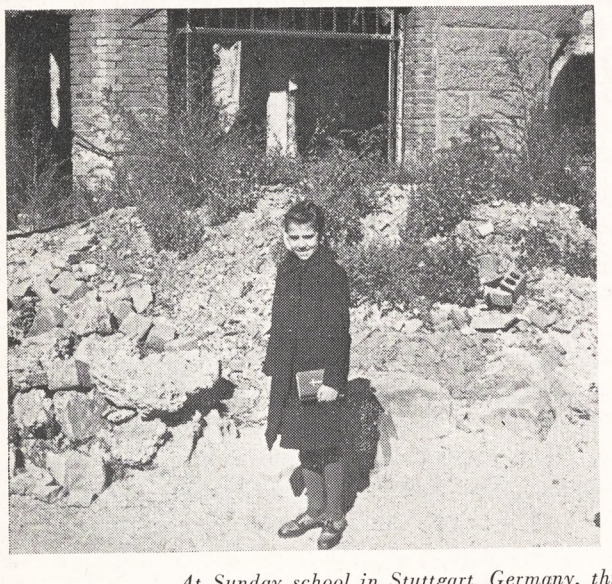
It isn't just that the whole world needs the Bible. It is because so many millions of people in the world are asking for the Bible and cannot get copies unless the American people provide them. And it is because the American Bible Society, as the agent of the Churches of America, is the only organization that can answer this cry.

Let me tell you about Mr. Haruta of Japan. Mr. Haruta is the manager of a branch bank in Tokyo. He has a wife and three children. During the war they shared with most other Japanese the idea that Christianity was only for the unfortunate who must seek solace in religion. When Japan surrendered Mr. Haruta and his family stood in fear of their conquerors. They had been told how cruel and heartless all Americans were. They fully expected to see their nation looted and ruined and themselves enslaved.

Gradually Mr. Haruta, like other business men in Tokyo, began to realize how completely his own thought-police had misled him. It became more and more evident that the occupation was not designed to wreck Japan but to build up a better nation. Mr. Haruta could discover nothing but good will in the things the Americans were doing. Their program actually affected him and his family. They were having new rights, and privileges granted them. When, at one juncture, starvation faced them, they were given food from America. There was no doubt about it, a new day was dawning for Japan.

At this point in the story a retired Christian missionary still living in Japan, Miss Genevieve Topping, came into the picture. She sponsored a Bible class and invited the Harutas to attend. The first night they went to Miss Topping's home they met a group of Christian G. I.'s. They were lively, laughing young men but they neither smoked nor drank. Their language was studded here and there with slang but it was clean and reverent. Their consuming interest appeared to be to help unfortunate Japanese families. Said Mr. Haruta next day in the bank, "I kept wondering what made them so sincere, sympathetic and eager to help the needy, regardless of race or creed." He continued to attend the Bible class, became a regular reader of the New Testament and gradually a faithful church attendant.



For the Harutas there was no unseemly haste in the matter of joining the Church. It was not until after a year of Bible study that the Haruta family were all baptized.

It is quite apparent from overwhelming evidence that pours in from all quarters that Mr. Haruta's is not an isolated case.

Right now the world is in a politically fluid state. Many nations are seeking to find a pattern for living. We believe that liberty under law as we have worked it out in the United States is what every nation needs. We know that our ideas of statehood were derived from the Bible.

There is no way to contribute to the world's present needs more directly than to furnish the Bibles people are asking for, in Germany, in Russia, in Japan, in China, in Korea, in Greece and in nine other important areas.

At Sunday school in Stuttgart, Germany, this young girl was given a German Testament printed by the American Bible Society

Unless at least 500,000 new members join the American Bible Society in 1948 it will be impossible to meet all these urgent appeals. Five hundred thousand people is less than five per cent of the membership of the Protestant Churches of America. If no more than the officers and the Sunday school teachers of our churches that are not now members of the Society should join, the needs could be met. You may join the Society with any form of annual membership you choose at $5, $10, $25, $50 or $100. Membership campaigns may be arranged by the Christian leaders of any community, large or small, without embarrassment to such other local commitments as may be scheduled for the year.

Here in America we are basking in the warm sunlight of the accumulated benefits of the Bible's teachings. Membership in the American Bible Society is the simple and direct way to share these benefits with people who are groping for them. History records the Bible's glorious record as a nation builder. It is America's high privilege, in the present unprecedented call for nation building, to supply the copies of the word of God that shall set nations once more upon the path of righteousness and peace.

THOMAS V. BARRETT
Secretary of College Work of the National Council

I TOOK the Hysteria Limited on my next trip and was met at the station by the Rev. Elijah Fermenting. He had a dour look and some pockets filled with pamphlets. My train was three hours late, and I apologized for keeping my host waiting. "Flash floods," I explained.

Fermenting knitted his brows, starting at the grass-root level and working up to an over-all policy.

"Flash floods. Bah! It's these capitalist railroads. The government oughta take 'em over."

It was a gay, bright morning not made for argument, so I kept quiet. Besides I wanted to learn all I could about community-level operations. Fermenting led me to the subway. He said he didn't own a car; he believed in mixing with the masses. I found a seat but had to hold my suitcase in my lap on account of the masses. Fermenting began to thrust leaflets at me around the corner of the suitcase.

"What are these?" I asked trying to read six papers at once.

"The H.O.H. Bill—number 25a; Housing on Hudson; capitalist inspired. And the C.F.O.C. Bill."

"What does C.F.O.C. stand for?" I hollered.

"Compulsory Feeding of Children," Fermenting shouted back. "It's part of a plot to get men for the army. Come on, here's where we get off."

"I can't," I bellowed, "I'm being oppressed by the masses."

Fermenting helped me out and we went to the street and took a bus.

"Got to get out to the Varnish Plant," he explained. "We're picketing this morning."

When we got to the Plant, Fermenting hired a four-year old boy to carry my suitcase, and gave me a sign to carry that said I WANT THREE DOLLARS AN HOUR AND AN 8 DAY WEEK. It was a pretty sign. We walked up and down for three hours, with Tiny Tim behind us, and then joined a parade. It was a lot of fun, and before the parade was over I had three signs, and a tin horn, and was really reforming things on the local level. After it was over Fermenting gave our small porter ten cents for his wages, and we went home to the rectory.

He signed me up as a charter member of the Friends of Klatvia Association and said we were in a crisis. He said almost anything could happen anytime unless Christian leaders got busy and put the pressure on our politicians and "big-business-men." We sent fourteen telegrams to Congressmen before lunch, and wrote a dandy resolution to send to the President of Capitalist Manufacturers. Then the telephone rang, and while Fermenting was talking I looked over his back yard. There was a squirrel pilfering a crumb from a bird-feeding tray. The last of the snow was thawing in the March sun. It looked fairly permanent—the yard, I mean. There didn't seem to be a crisis anywhere in sight. Not on the cosmic level anyway. Fermenting came back and said some parishioner wanted him to call on a sick aunt. He said the sick aunt would have to wait till we got through some important things.

That seemed to me a little harsh, but after Fermenting gave me a talk on Peace at all Costs, I began to see that when you were solving things at the international level you can't bother with little things at the hospital level, like a sick aunt with a pain.

By dinner time I was converted to Fermenting's position, and decided to try it out in my next total-program planning. It meant I wouldn't have to urge people to think about doctrine anymore, or to bother about pastoral calls; I wouldn't have to explain to college students the importance of regular Communions, and about being kind to little individuals they happened to meet, or any of that old-fashioned stuff. I could begin urging people to think internationally, and write their Congressmen often, and telegraph the White House every Tuesday until the Tariff Laws were changed, and to get ready for the crisis.

I wrote a new sermon that night, throwing away the one I had prepared on the holiness of God. My new one was filled with challenges on the capitalist level, and showed how to solve the whole Mason and Dixon Line problem by supporting the Scowler bill.

When I left town I felt I had really grown. I was a little bothered about the sick aunt, and the wages we had given the little boy, and the whole question of who looked after the little people while we clergy looked after the big groups; but all that would probably work itself out. That and Fermenting's back yard. It looked so sort of uncrucial. But I guess my eyes weren't opened yet in regard to the climactic changes that were happening in the squirrel family and the whole cosmic process, from the grass-roots right up to total atomic energy. The universe was undoubtedly in a pretty revolutionary state, even though I hadn't seen it.

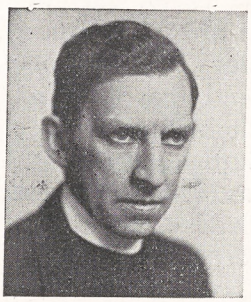
On the train I opened my Bible as usual. Thought I'd read up on eschatology and find out what petitions the disciples sent to Rome and Greece about the labor situation, and the housing needs in East Palestine. The Scripture, I'm sorry to say, never seems to meet my need where I am.

I got that passage where it says,

"Thou shalt not live by bread alone" . . .

Probably all right in Jesus' day, but after all he lived in a quiet, grass-root civilization. I tried another chapter. "Who made me a judge and divider over you . . . beware of covetousness . . ." I just couldn't seem to find a meaningful passage. I tried once more but got to where it says, "Consider the lilies of the field how they grow. . . ." Pretty uncrucial stuff for these days. I went into the diner and sat down across the table from a capitalist. You could tell by his looks he was in favor of oppressing the masses. The waiter came along and spilled some soup on him. Seemed like a good, just-dessert to me. The man didn't get mad; he was very gentle about it. Timid almost. Probably veneer; part of a subtle plot to keep the white race superior.

"It's a beautiful day out, isn't it?" he asked me. He looked innocent enough on the surface but I knew it was just an opening wedge so he could fill me full of capitalist propaganda.



I scowled as violently as I could, lit a cigarette and gave him a leaflet.

"It looks beautiful," I growled back at him, "but come the revolution . . ."

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

A LAWYER living in a town in Pennsylvania told me the other day that within a few miles from his home there is a whole area where people never see newspapers and where they are too poor to own radios. "Just think how blessed they are," was his comment.

This story, forwarded to me by a bishop, will illustrate what he meant. On a day in January newspapers in this country told the story of Mrs. Ema Debeljak of Yugoslavia. She was described as having been born in Farrell, Pa., and was under death sentence for having obtained a passport to return to America. The dispatch said that the whereabouts of her two children, eight and ten, were unknown. The headline in one of the New York papers read: "Truman Asked to Save Woman Doomed by Tito" and the story quoted an American attorney, Mr. James G. Donovan, as saying that "Mrs. Debeljak was condemned to death because she obtained passports from the American Embassy in Belgrade so that she and her two children could return to the United States." This newspaper and many others added heart-throb to the story by printing an AP wirephoto of Mrs. Debeljak and her children. You may recall having seen it.

Here are the facts, now known to all newspapers, though none, with one exception (NY Tribune), printed any correction, according to the Embassy of Yugoslavia in Washington.

Mrs. Debeljak was born in the U. S. She went to Yugoslavia in 1920 at the age of five. In 1936 she married a citizen of that country, Stevan Sremcevic, from whom she was divorced. She considered herself a Yugoslav citizen; she voted in Yugoslav elections; she held a certificate of Yugoslav citizenship, number 23696.

She was arrested December 19, 1947. She was arrested because on that day Djuro Djurkovic, declared by the Yugoslav government to be a criminal, was found hiding in her home, and when the police went there to arrest him, Djurkovic opened fire and seriously wounded one of the policemen. The Ambassador to the United States of Yugoslavia, Sava N. Kosanovic, states: "Mrs. Debeljak is being held pending investigation. When the investigation has been completed either she will be set free or she will be brought to trial under the law, as the circumstances warrant. What I am chiefly at a loss to understand in all this, and the factor that seems to me most appalling, is that responsible newspapers could give space to so utterly preposterous an accusation as that a state—any state—had condemned a person to death for having obtained a passport to go to another country. It is difficult to comprehend how such material can be put into print unless incitement is intended."

The Yugoslav Ambassador had this to add in his communication of March 9: "It is not only the people of the United States who are misinformed by such practices. News agencies carry the story back to Europe, where it frequently has an effect in reverse. In this instance Reuters News Agency on January 26 informed the European press: 'A representative of the State Department stated that Ema Debeljak was sentenced to death on the charge that she obtained a U. S. passport from the U. S. Embassy.' Agence France Press went still further, reporting on January 26 that 'in Washington in the case of Ema Debeljak a meeting of the State Department was to be held with the participation of President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall.' I know that neither would have gone so far had the American press been more scrupulous in its handling of the story. What are the people of Europe, not to speak of the people of Yugoslavia, to think of the leaders of the American government when they find them pictured engaged in such behavior? Who suffers most from such incidents, the people of Yugoslavia or the people of America?"

Blessed are the poor for they buy neither newspapers nor radios and so are deprived of the "advantages" of America's boasted freedoms of the press and air.

The Christian Doctrine of Grace.* By Oscar Hardman. New York: Macmillan. $2.00.

A clear and attractive exposition of the meaning of the great terms and ideas concerned with the Christian doctrine and experience of divine grace, with numerous quotations of classic statements on the subject. Dr. Hardman well defines grace as God's personal influence, neither to be thought of as an impersonal force or simply identified with the Holy Spirit. This book should be useful to all who want to study or discuss the subject. On the other hand it must be noted that the author's Anglican balance leads him to be satisfied with the idea of co-operation between grace and freedom which, as Bishop Kirk has observed, is practically useful but solves none of the important questions. Hardman sees in Calvinism merely an immoral doctrine; yet Scholastics and Reformers both preserved the mystery of the sovereign love which alone can make us free.

The Great Rehearsal* by Carl Van Doren. The Viking Press, New York. $3.00.

A pedantic, but nevertheless interesting, account of our Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia following the Revolution. The problem was how to make one country out of individual states with diverse interests. Mr. Van Doren points out that this was a practice session for our contemporary—and more critical — problem of fashioning one world out of sovereign nations. The parallel is good most of the way but the founding fathers, who seemed to be wise, just and democratic beyond their times, did not have to bring different philosophies of economic life into harmony and, essentially, it is here that our great gulfs are being dug.

Church Leaders Present Peace Statement to Truman

Bishop Angus Dun on Delegation That Urges President to Press for a Positive Program

Edited by Sara Dill

Washington (RNS) : — An immediate change in the "present prevailing mood which makes for war" was urged here in a statement presented to President Truman at the White House by representatives of the Federal Council of Churches. In conferring with the President, the Church leaders said the 25 member denominations of the Federal Council were determined to do everything in their power "to check the forces that have pushed mankind to the brink of international conflict."

Entitled "A Positive Program for Peace" the statement made five recommendations for averting war "without yielding sound democratic principles." These were: (1) Do not tolerate any complacency about war. (2) Combat a mood of hysteria or blind hatred. (3) Reject fatalism about war. (4) Oppose primary reliance on military strategy to meet Communist aggression. (5) Press for positive programs which have immediate possibilities for peace and justice.

Before being presented to the President, the peace statement had been approved by the Federal Council's executive committee at a special session held in New York. It was prepared by the committee on policy of the department of international justice and goodwill.

In their statement, the Church leaders urged the government and people of the United States to move toward goals for peace which "flow directly from our Christian faith and its requirements for relations of mutual helpfulness and good will among men." These goals, they said, were greater economic well-being throughout the world, greater emphasis on increasing social welfare, and the protection of human rights within the framework of the United Nations. The statement also recommended that the avenues of diplomatic conversation between the Soviet Union and the United States be kept open and used.

"The American people," they continued, "in conformity with the principle of democratic government, should not permit policy making to pass predominantly into the hands of those who think primarily in military terms, as seems to be the case today. Our people and government should not feel satisfied with merely military measures but should diligently develop and carry through programs of an economic, social, political and moral character. Thus, the real security by the United States and of the world may be safeguarded, and war may be averted."

The delegation consisted of Bishop Angus Dun of Washington; Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York; Bishop John S. Stamm, senior bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church; President J. R. Cunningham of Davidson College, who is the moderator of the Southern Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Walter W. Van Kirk, secretary of the commission of international peace of the Federal Council.

People Back Minister

Cumberland, Md.:—The Church board of the Methodist Church here sought to discipline their pastor, the Rev. Richard H. Bready, because he is a supporter of Henry A. Wallace for president. The congregations of the two churches he serves however felt otherwise and have overwhelmingly passed a resolution commending him for "his efforts to make God a living reality in everyday life and the Church a potent force in the redemption of society."

He Had Never Heard

New York:—"The young Yugoslav, with whom I shared a seat on the airplane," reports Secretary Betts of the American Bible Society, "asked me politely about my business occupation. I told him I was a representative of the American Bible Society. 'Bible,' he asked, 'what do you mean Bible?' Have you never heard the word before? I said. When he said he hadn't, I tried to explain, in as simple a fashion as I could. The Bible is a book of sacred writings, I told him, and tells the life story of Jesus of Nazareth. Apparently he had never heard the word Jesus. So I spent a few minutes telling him something of Jesus Christ. Then I had an inspiration. I happened to have in my brief case copies of the Gospels of St. Luke and St. John in Serbian. They had just been published by the American Bible Society. Can you read this? I asked and offered him a Gospel. His eyes lighted up when he recognized his own language. 'Yes,' he said eagerly, 'I can. May I keep it?' I assured him it was his and gave him the other Gospel to go with it. God grant that it may prove to be but the beginning of a new and richer chapter in his life."

Birth Control

Boston:—The bill which would permit physicians to give contraceptive advice to married women for the preservation of health and life was defeated by the Massachusetts legislature, 130 to 84. The bill was fought bitterly by the Roman Catholic Church. One of those speaking for the bill was Bishop Norman Nash of the Episcopal diocese.

Bibles for Hospitals

Manila:—One hundred and twenty post-war Bibles and New Testaments in seven different dialects of the Philippines, were sent by the American Bible Society to Chaplain W. H. Bergherm, stationed in Manila, for distribution in the hospital wards. These were the first dialect Bibles to appear since the war and Chaplain Bergherm reports the Filipino patients were eager to have a copy.

More Money

Boston:—Bishops of the Methodist Church are to receive $9,000 a year instead of $7,500 as heretofore and are to have retirement allowances of $3,600 instead of $3,300. The general conference also raised its grant to the Federal Council of Churches from $55,000 to $90,000 and to the World Council from $6,000 to $35,000.

For Young People

Jamaica, N. Y.:—Under the sponsorship of the Long Island chapter of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship an inter-diocesan conference for young people of high-school age and over will be held at Camp Washington, Lakeside, Connecticut, from June 27 to July 2. Emphasis will be laid on facing the realities of the present day from a personal and social standpoint. Included in the faculty are the Rev. Charles Berger, Waterbury, Conn.; Charles Havens, Stamford, Conn.; A. Godfey Lund, Brooklyn; George MacMurray, Brooklyn and William B. Spofford, Jr., Detroit. Information may be obtained from the dean, the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, Grace Church, Jamaica, N. Y.

Dabney Honored

New York:—Virginius Dabney, Churchman of Richmond, Va., was awarded a Pulitzer Prize last week for his editorial writing. As the editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch he was given the award for his "clearness of style, moral purpose, sound reasoning and power to influence public opinion." Mr. Dabney has long opposed the poll tax and segregation on street cars and buses, and is generally known as a liberal editor.

Over a Million

New York:—Actual cash received by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, up to May 3, was $1,102,265. Some dioceses have not yet made remittances and in a number of places pledges were received, so that there is still a considerable sum outstanding.

Church Wrecked

Richmond, Va.:—St. Paul's Church here was entered early on May 2 and the interior virtually wrecked. Stained glass windows were smashed; furniture overturned and broken; portraits defaced and doors knocked out. The church is known as the "Church of the Confederacy" because Jefferson Davis and General Robert E. Lee worshipped here during the Civil War.

The police arrested a young sailor from Chicago, Michael E. Whitting, who was charged with the act.

Jersey Convention

Trenton:—A comprehensive report on the needs of the diocese was submitted to the convention of New Jersey, meeting here May 4-5, the work of a committee appointed by Bishop Gardner last year. It called for a thorough study, over a full year, of the mission work of the diocese; of a "feeling of social distinction" which is preventing some parishes from uniting; the abolition of the system of convocations which fail to encourage "sincere cooperation on the part of both clergy and laity" and a strengthening of the work in the field of religious education.

A report was also presented by three clergymen urging that the salaries of clergymen be raised to meet the high cost of living.

Appointed Dean

Lexington, Ky.:—Bishop Moody of Lexington has appointed the Rev. Paul D. Wilbur the dean of the newly-established Cathedral of St. George the Martyr. He will also continue to serve as the rector of Trinity Church, Covington, a position which he took in 1946 following his chaplaincy in the air forces.

Bishop Moody also announced the appointment of the Rev. Allen Person, rector of St. Andrew's, Ft. Thomas, and the Rev. Edward Baxter, rector of the Ascension, Frankfort, as honorary canons of the cathedral.

Kansas Convention

Topeka, Kan.:—Bishop Elwood L. Haines of Iowa was the speaker at the dinner which opened the convention of the diocese of Kansas, held here April 24-26. He also preached at Grace Cathedral the following morning. One of the features of the convention was conferences for Church school teachers led by the Rev. F. Victor Hoag, associate rector of Trinity Church, Tulsa, Oklahoma.

The convention adopted an increased budget for 1949 of $35,000 which is $13,000 more than this year's budget.

Chaplain Honored

Cambridge, Mass.: — The Rev. Frederic B. Kellogg was honored on April 26 when parishioners of Christ Church and their friends gathered to observe the 10th anniversary of his chaplaincy at Harvard, Radcliffe and M.I.T. Tributes were paid by Rector Gardiner M. Day; the Rev. John Crocker, rector of Groton School; the Rev. George Selleck, the secretary of the United Ministry for Students, and by Bishop Heron, suffragan bishop of the diocese. The address of the evening was by the Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving of St. James', New York, who spoke on the work of the Church in colleges.

Mr. Day paid special tribute to Mr. Kellogg for his personal ministry to students, for his ability of sharing

The Church of South India

By Louis A. Haselmayer, Ph.D.

(To be published in May)

Many Christians today are extremely serious in a determination to find ways and means of achieving unity. At the root of all attempts toward unity is the Anglican insistence upon Faith and Order. The Church of South India is an attempt to combine in one ecclesiastical system the divergent elements of Christian Order found in the Congregational, Presbyterian, and Episcopal Churches.

Dr. Haselmayer has written a study of the origin and development of the South India Scheme of Church Union. This study should prove useful to Bishops, Priests, and laymen of the Episcopal Church as the Church of South India will be on the agenda of the forthcoming Lambeth Conference.

Much has been written on "The Church of South India Scheme." Here we have a concise report on its history and development.

the vision of the necessity and possibility of student work with the community and with parents and alumni and for the cooperation given in the formation and continued work of the United Ministry to Students.

Chaplain Speaks

East Orange, N. J.:—A dinner meeting to interest young men in the ministry was held here April 30 at Christ Church, sponsored by the Alpha Club of the diocese of Newark. The club is composed of clergymen "who value the Protestant nature of our communion equally with its Catholic heritage." The speaker was the Rev. Shunji F. Nishi, acting chaplain of Columbia University. Both Bishop Washburn and Bishop Ludlow were present and spoke briefly. The presiding officer was the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector of St. Paul's, Englewood, who is the president of the club.

Knights Templar

New York:—About 500 uniformed Knights Templar attended the afternoon service May 2 at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. There were an added 2,500 at the service. The Knights, representing 24 commanderies of the city, pledged to defend the Christian religion by holding their drawn swords by the blade to symbolize the Cross. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Theodore C. Speers, Presbyterian.

Bishops Are Guests

Goldsboro, N. C.:—Highlights of the convention of the diocese of East Carolina, meeting here May 11-13, were addresses by Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina and Bishop Darst, retired bishop of East Carolina. There was also an interesting report on the work of the National Council presented by Layman C. McD. Davis, a Council member.

Sheerin Memorial

New York:—As a living memorial to the late Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, the Episcopal Service for Youth is founding a scholarship to be named for him. Mr. Sheerin was the president of the organization from 1944 until his death last month.

Memorial Chapel

Cold Spring, N. Y.:—The south transept of St. Mary's Church here is being transformed into a chapel as a memorial to the late Rev. Elbert Floyd-Jones, who was rector of the parish for 52 years. One of the gifts is the altar and hangings from St. James' Chapel, Manitou, where services have been discontinued. The gift is from St. Philip's, Garrison, of which St. James' is a part. The chapel is to be dedicated on June 20th by Bishop Donegan, suffragan bishop of New York.

Poor Readability

Shawnee, Okla. (RNS): — A study of 70 religious magazines and weekly papers here brought up the conclusion that most of them cannot be understood by the average U. S. adult. According to William F. Tanner, head of the department of journalism at Oklahoma Baptist University, "the average denominational publication is beyond the grasp of the non-college graduate." He blamed big words, long sentences, and an impersonal approach as the reasons for poor readability.

Tanner said the study, made by students of religious journalism, indicated that certain individual stories were so hard to read that not one person in 20 could understand them. A few magazines, like Home Life, a Southern Baptist monthly, were highly rated. Home Life was said to be so well written that 87 per cent of American adults could understand it. Most magazines, however, received ratings from 60 down to 20 per cent.

Bishop Praises Laity

Louisville, Ky.: — Bishop Clingman of Kentucky, speaking at the convention of the diocese of Kentucky, meeting here at Calvary Church on April 13-14, said that he was pleased with increased activities of the laymen of the diocese. He called this work "one of the most hopeful signs on the horizon of the Church in my entire ministry, which now covers 40 years." He called for study of two Church practices: whether it is proper to read the burial office in funeral parlors, and whether flowers should be massed in churches at funerals. Also he raised the question as to whether or not professional wedding directors should be present at rehearsals.

The most important resolution passed by the convention was one asking that representatives of national headquarters make a survey of the diocese, giving an overall picture of needed missionary work in the diocese, integrating into the survey the need for a diocesan conference center.

Discuss Missions

Dertoit:—The emphasis was all on missions at the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese of Michigan, meeting here at the Epiphany, April 26. The addresses were by Deaconess Olive Robinson, who is a worker-at-large in the mission field of the diocese, and Mr. A. Fletcher Plant, industralist, who has been the chairman of the diocesan department of missions for the past ten years.

Festival Service

Detroit:—The offering taken at the annual festival service of the Girls' Friendly Society of the diocese of Michigan, will be used to send Mrs. Violet Phinney, member of the GFS of Massachusetts, to teach in a college in western China. Dean Weaver gave the address at the service which was held at St. Paul's Cathedral and was attended by more than 300.

Million Dollar Bribe

Steubenville, O. (RNS):—Confirmation of a report that a million-dollar bribe had been made to the Steubenville ministerial association "to lay off gamblers" was made here by the Rev. Norman Nygaard, who last year led the local clergymen in a drive against vice. Disclosure of the bribe offer was made in Springfield, O., by Albert E. Payne, an industrialist who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor.

"I was told at a recent meeting with the Steubenville ministerial association that they had been offered $200,000 a year for five years if they would ignore gamblers and gambling in Steubenville," Payne declared. Mr. Nygaard said the bribe offer had been made by racketeers more than a year ago and that Payne had been told of it in confidence. The clergyman said the approach was made by racketeers through a Steubenville businessman known to both groups and was in the form of an "inducement" for the ministers to "lay off rackets."

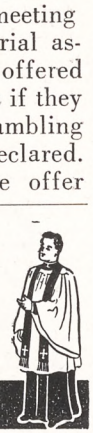
According to Mr. Nygaard, the plan called for placing $200,000 in escrow for five years, at which time the fund could have been used by the clergymen to erect a million-dollar youth recreation center.

Church and State

Budapest: — Democratic unity in Hungary must be based on "sound" Church-State relationships, Aladar Mod, Communist member of parliament declared here. He spoke at a debate sponsored by a local Catholic Action organization in which representatives of left-wing parties were invited to take part.

All participants in the debate said they agreed on the necessity of close Church-State cooperation. However, some raised the question: How can parties with "a materialistic ideology" march hand in hand with the Church in social programs?

Mod argued that even if the churches and the Communists differed ideologically, religious believers could conscientiously support Communist efforts to "procure more bread and a higher standard of living" for the workers. He asserted many "err" in maintaining that Communists do not respect religion and are insincere in upholding freedom of conscience.



Stephen Nernadvolgyi, a student in the Budapest central seminary, declared that "Christ's followers are all democrats and wish to join in building a happier future for all Hungarians."

Another Catholic Action speaker, Anthony Deraja, a wood turner's apprentice, said that Hungarian Catho-

This material is reaching a broad field, having been supplied to approximately one quarter of the Church Schools in the United States; to many Churches in Canada, Newfoundland, Honolulu, Philippine Islands, Panama Canal Zone, the Bahamas and even China. It is based on the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer.

A teacher's manual accompanies each course. The teacher's manuals for the first three lessons are forty cents each, all other books, pupils and teachers are sixty cents each — postpaid in U.S.A.

Checks must accompany orders—no books sent on approval.

All orders will receive prompt attention.

Missions in India

Minneapolis (RNS): — Lifting of British rule from India has worked to the advantage of the Christian missionary effort there, Rev. S. Nazir Talibuddin told a rally of Minneapolis Presbyterian men. "No longer are Christian missionaries suspected of instruments of British imperialism," he said. "Christianity now has a far better chance of being considered on its own merits."

Principal of the United Theological seminary in Saharanpur, North India, Talibuddin is in America at the invitation of the Presbyterian board of foreign missions. He suggested that a union of Moslems and Hindus into a single religious group as a tribute to India's liberator, Mahatma Gandhi, might possibly be an outcome of the spiritual leader's death. "The people of India in their calmer moments have a fond respect and love for each other and might sink their differences in a tribute to a great soul such as Gandhi," he said.

The educator said a political union of India and Pakistan is "very remote" in view of the millions of Moslems who have migrated into Pakistan. While Gandhi's spiritual influence will linger on for many years the people of India will not deify him, in the opinion of Talibuddin.

The educator described Christianity as unique among religions in that it proclaims a regeneration of life through the coming of God into human history.

Seek To Oust Nuns

Santa Fe, N. M.:—A suit demanding that "all members of Catholic teaching orders be declared ineligible and forever barred from teaching in New Mexico public schools and dismissed immediately," was filed here in the State District Court by Harry L. Bigbee, local attorney. He announced that, if necessary, the action would be carried to the U. S. Supreme Court. The suit was filed in behalf of 28 persons; 14 of them from Dixon, N. M., where a free schools committee was formed several months ago. Named in the suit were 235 individuals, 145 of whom are Catholic nuns, brothers, and priests who reportedly are teaching in the public schools of New Mexico.

Also named in the suit are the state board of education and its members, Governor Thomas J. Mabry, State Superintendent of Schools Charles L. Rose, the Rev. William T. Bradley of the Archdiocese of Santa Fe, state school budget auditor R. H. Grissom, budget officer J. D. Hannah, and school boards in 16 counties or municipalities.

The suit charges that Father Bradley, director of education for the archdiocese, was given powers normally vested in a state education board, but adds that the specific nature of such delegation of power is not known.

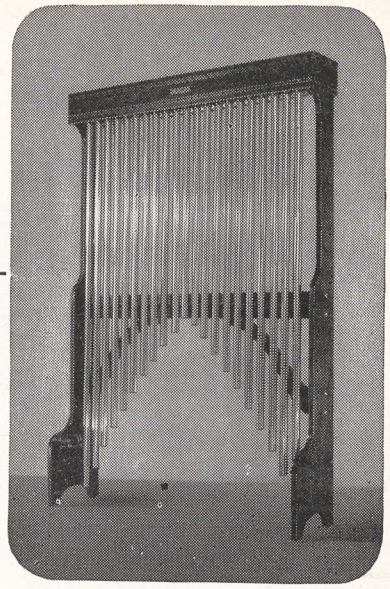
Other demands in the suit request the following:

(1) An injunction barring the budget auditor from making or approving school budgets paying public monies to religious orders.

(2) An injunction against school boards paying or employing members of Catholic teaching orders in tax-supported schools.

(3) No tax-supported schools in the state be operated on church-owned property.

(4) That schools named in the suit be considered parochial institutions and not eligible for public funds.



(5) That money paid teachers of Catholic orders be considered illegal use of public funds.

Protestants Lead

Roanoke, Va. (RNS):—A house-to-house religious census participated in by workers from 65 local churches shows a predominance of Protestants in this southern city. In an all-out effort made possible through cooperation of churches of all denominations, 2,015 volunteer workers visited 21,172 families and obtained data on 49,380 people.

The reports from 52 of the 65 participating churches tabulated show: A total of 38,900 people, or 77 per cent, are members of or attend a Protestant church or Sunday school in Roanoke. A total of 2,225, or 4.5 per cent, are members of or expressed a preference for the Roman Catholic Church. Census takers also found 6,638 people, or 15 per cent, are members of a Protestant church elsewhere or expressed a preference for a Protestant denomination. Another 1,437, or three per cent, have no church affiliation or religious preference.

Pastor Disagrees

Louisville (RNS):—The wisdom of President Truman's civil rights program was "doubted" here by his Washington minister, Rev. Edward Hughes Pruden, pastor of the capital's First Baptist church.

"While most of us approve the ideals contained in the civil rights program, we seriously doubt the wisdom of trying to force such ideals by legislation before the people are morally or spiritually prepared to accept them," Pruden said. He was in Louisville to address the annual pastor's conference. He called the interracial program one of the "most urgent and explosive" issues now facing the Church.

"We are constantly confronted by the alternatives of going too slowly and giving the impression we lack courage, or of going too rapidly and forfeiting our places of leadership among those who need it most," he said.

Merger Is Doomed

New York:—Official voting returns from Congregational - Christian groups on the proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church indicate that the 75% favorable vote necessary will not be reached. Only 63% of 1,800 churches which have reported to date favor merger. Of the 105,000 individuals who have voted, only 62% are in favor. Voting will continue until June 1 but spokesmen at the national headquarters of the Church here believe that the percentage will hold.

Meanwhile a report from the Evangelical and Reformed Church indicates that the synods of that denomination are overwhelmingly for the merger.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. ROBERT C. MARTINS JR.
Layman of Ft. Devens, Mass.

I cannot too strongly commend the forceful and, on the whole, sensible expression of her views by Miss Margaret James in this week's WITNESS (April 22, 1948). She has made no sophistic equivocations, and has struck to the very core of the necessities of Christian racial relations. She is right. We must do all the things which she suggests. We must admit Negroes to our homes, communities, and churches, in hordes; if, by God's grace, we be so fortunate as to have hordes respond to our invitation.

As a modest beginning toward the implementation of such a policy on a national level, I suggest to those officials who are now planning for General Convention next year, that they now approach the hotels and other business establishments in San Francisco and require an answer to this question: Will you all relax whatever racial restrictions upon your clientele which exist either in regulations or in practice, so that this body of Christians may meet and live as Christians during General Convention? If the collective answer be unsatisfactory, let the officials make plans immediately to house and feed all delegates entirely within the parish organizations of San Francisco. And let the host of the convention request that no lodging or meals be sought by delegates from establishments which practice paganism in the form of racially restricted clientele.

REV. ALBERT E. JANKINS
Rector of St. Matthias', Whittier, Cal.

I agree with Vida Scudder and a host of others that the original series of Tom Barrett's Travels of a Gargoyle were very clever, entertaining, and helpful. This is not the kind of writing which can be extended for our further entertainment, and I think that the first article in the new series shows that to be true.

Mr. Barrett, whom I admire very much, could visit any parish in the country and favor us with new travels; and thus the series could be extended indefinitely. Rather than encourage him to do this, I would prefer that he favor us with something as delightfully constructive as the travels have been delightfully destructive. (Or don't you get what I mean.)

RT. REV. JAMES M. STONEY
Bishop of New Mexico and Southwest Texas

Your editorial Our Rural Work, (April 29) deserves highest commendation. It is wonderful to realize that someone reaching the attention of the Church is willing to take up the cause of the rural clergyman, the small parish priest and the retired man struggling to live on a pittance. I would also suggest that consideration be given to the widows and orphans of deceased clergymen. Their position is often tragic. There is a clergyman's widow in my district who receives about $13 a month from the Church Pension Fund.

There are differences in ability between the man in the wealthy city parish and the man in the rural mission field, of course, but that does not mean that the city rector is a finer priest, nor that he is a truer servant of God and his Church. He has attained more success, so far as salary and prominence go, but it is open to question as to whether or not he is more successful in reaching God's children where they are, and bringing them to a better way of life.

The city rector needs more salary, for city life costs more, and in our materialistic way, the city congregation demands that the rector keep up a more prosperous-looking appearance. Nor can the average city rector raise a garden to help with his table. All of this, however, does not make up for the fact that the rector of a small parish, or a vicar in a rural field, has to struggle with expenses, and is in constant dread of an illness or other calamity, which spells debt and more worry.

You might mention, too, that many clergymen in the larger parishes actually look down on the men who are fitted for rural work and love it. There is a feeling which was once expressed about me, "Poor Jim. He isn't getting ahead as we thought he would." You see, I never had a large parish and never wanted one.

On the surface, pensions should be paid on the basis of what the individual has contributed. That is good, commercially, but we should be a brotherhood, sharing and sharing alike. The small salary man needs a good pension even more than the one who has earned a high salary, for the latter, through the years, has been in a more favorable position to build up his own reserve. The man whose every effort has been to meet his daily needs has little opportunity to put anything aside.

Another comment, which you missed. The General Convention guarantees the retiring bishop an allowance of $2500 a year. One naturally asks "Why?" $2500 isn't too much, in the face of present prices, but why should a bishop get a pledge of security that is denied the rest of the clergy?

Certainly I am grateful for the Church Pension Fund. I was a minor child, nine years old, when my father died, and there was no Church Pension Fund in those days. I hope that we will never allow such poverty among the families of the clergy as ours had to endure. But there are some bugs in the system, and they ought to be eliminated.

The Church of South India Is Making Progress

The Tasks Ahead Call For Help from Those Who Want the Union of Churches to Succeed

By Bishop Michael Hollis
Moderator of the Church of South India

Madras, India:—Until September 27th, 1947, people discussed the South India Scheme, a plan on paper. Today they have to do with the Church of South India, an organized body which has already through its corporate activities and corporate consultative assemblies a real life and mind of its own. More and more is it becoming true that under Christ the loyalty of its members is not to that Church body to which they once belonged but to the Church of South India. No one who was present at the first synod of the Church in March could fail to be struck by the fact that we took counsel together not looking back at what we once were but looking forward in our new found fellowship to what God was calling us to become. It is perhaps almost impossible for those who are immersed in the centuries-old denominationalism of the west to understand what this new fellowship means unless they can come and share it with us.

This does not for one moment mean that we have not got our problems and our weaknesses. Before union we all knew that there were dead areas and unspiritual congregations; we all had our unconverted nominal Christians, our self-seekers and our quarrellers. Those problems did not vanish overnight because we became one Church instead of three. They face us and will continue to face us, as they face the Church in U.S.A. or Great Britain.

Here in this article I want briefly to deal with the new problems which union has brought. These differ considerably in different dioceses. We in the Madras diocese have perhaps the most interesting opportunity of all. We have to weld into one, organized bodies of Christians from all the three Churches which have entered into union and within this area all but two of the missionary societies concerned in the building up of those three Churches are at work. To some this may seem an indigestible variety. It certainly means many problems of adjustment and understanding but it also gives us the chance of making a most valuable contribution to the deeper unity for which we strive. It will inevitably take time but the spirit is there, a spirit of real fellowship, trust and understanding. Only a minority of the diocese were Anglicans, yet the desire for the fullest cooperation and consultation and the welcome which I, previously an Anglican Bishop, have received everywhere make it plain that everyone is determined that union shall be a reality.

At the other end of the scale are dioceses like Tinnevelly where, at first sight, union has made hardly any difference at all. Except that the area of the diocese is somewhat reduced, there is little to show the ordinary Church member that a change has taken place. They have the same bishop and the same diocesan constitution. There never were within that area any congregations belonging to the South India United Church or the Methodist Church. The services will continue to be the same as they were before union. There the danger is not too much variety but too little. Personally I have no doubt that the Madras situation is the more desirable. It will make more demands upon us but the enrichment of life will be very hard to attain any other way, for we are aiming not at bringing everyone to adopt our own inherited beliefs and practices but at something better than any of us have known in our separation.

The past six months since the inauguration of union have inevitably seen a great deal of committee work in order that the machinery of the Church may be set going. Yet this has been quite definitely a spiritual experience and a spiritual witness. There has been a real desire to seek God's will and to obey it and a genuine attempt to plan with the evangelistic purpose of the Church kept in the forefront of our minds. Everyone of the fourteen dioceses has held a meeting of its diocesan council. There was a most useful meeting of the bishops held in Bangalore in December. The continuation committee of the joint committee on union, acting as an interim executive for the whole Church met in February. This all found its climax in the first synod of the Church of South India held in Madura from March 6 to 10. Here about 160 representatives, clerical and lay, from the fourteen dioceses met to worship and plan together. Four out of every five representatives were citizens of India. One out of every five lay representatives was a woman.

There was throughout the debates a remarkable absence of the backward looking attitude which one might well have expected so soon after union. On no major issue was opinion divided along the lines of previous denominational affiliation. We were truly united. The determination not to take decisions by weight of numbers but to show consideration for minorities and to reach agreement was most encouraging. That came from the very real spiritual atmosphere not only in the chapel but in the meeting hall. There was the sense that we met in the presence of God, with a task of evangelization entrusted to us.

I have never known a great ecclesiastical assembly which was so emphatically throughout a spiritual experience, an act of witness. That was also the judgment of others there present, some of whom had come hesitatingly and unwillingly.

We worshipped together and we planned together conscious that our coming together as one Church has been marvellously blessed and finding in the synod an even deeper assurance that God was with us in our unity. As one of the Indian leaders said, no one attending this synod would ever have dreamed that the Church of South India did not exist six months before.

It is necessary to say something about the one area in which there is still considerable difficulty, the Telugu districts included in the dioceses of Kurnool-Anantapur and Cuddapah. There both Anglican and South India United Church elements have refused to enter into our union. Motives are mixed and are far from being purely theological. It is not always easy to apply in practice in the villages principles which responsible people agree to round the council table and too often the excitement of local and personal rivalries blinds those on the spot to the scandal which these conflicts cause to the non-Christians. The whole situation needs your prayers that Christ may be manifested.

Apart from this there is within the Church of South India no serious difficulty. Every month of successful working together, every diocesan gathering for worship or counsel, every visit of the bishop to a congregation, brings about a deepening of the understanding of what we did last September and an added confidence that God is with us. It is true that union has not automatically solved our problems. But I am not alone in my conviction that there has been a new realization of the existence of the wider fellowship of the Church and a stirring of spiritual life. It is wholly false to say that Church union has turned men's minds from the task of evangelization and the building up of the spiritual life of the existing Christian community to matters of constitution making and administration. Rather there is more desire for spiritual things and more realization that without spiritual power the Church cannot survive. When men see the wickedness of division among Christian denominations they are driven to see the wickedness of division within Christian congregations and in Christian families. To realize this is to begin to seek its cure.

Perhaps our greatest immediate material need is working capital. The process of reorganization inevitably takes time and to get a new Church with fourteen dioceses into working order calls for hard thinking and well planned organization. In addition there are important adjustments which are being made in the relation of Church and Mission. Nearly fifty English speaking churches in South India previously maintained by the government which also met a very large proportion of the cost of their ministers are since March 31st, 1948 the entire responsibility of the Christian Church at a time when many Europeans have left India and there is widespread unemployment among the Anglo-Indian community. The S.P.G. has declared itself unable to make any grant from its general or medical funds for the continuance of the work which it had carried on in many parts of South India, on the ground that the Church of South India is not in communion with the Church of England. All this makes it plain that an adequate central fund to carry us over a period of initial planning while the dioceses and the Church as a whole discover needs and resources is a primary necessity.

We hope that deepened spiritual life will mean greater generosity, greater sacrifice on the part of every Church member. We are conscious that a sense of responsibility for the support of institutions established and still largely maintained by money from outside India has not been adequately developed, though the faculty is by no means wholly that of the Indian Church. The giving and receiving of money demand on both sides a depth of Christian love that has not always been apparent and there have been and still are tensions and suspicions. Yet we believe that this is one task in which we all share as children of the one God through Jesus Christ.

We desire the full partnership of the rest of the Christian Church in this task which calls for more than all our resources in persons and in money. We determined to go ahead with union knowing that there were those who hesitated but believing that we were faced with a decision which could not be postponed without disloyalty to God. With the inauguration of the Church of South India a step has been taken which cannot be retraced. It is useless now merely to deplore what has been done. It is unprofitable to imagine errors and disasters which may follow upon this event. We accept with gratitude the full fellowship which has been offered to us by many of the Churches by whose work Christianity has come to South India. We ask those who still hesitate to see that the surest way of preventing those developments which they fear is to give us the fullest help so that our deep and genuine desire to be led by the Holy Spirit of God into a deeper understanding of the whole truth of God's will may be fulfilled.

The question whether we were right or wrong to enter into union cannot be answered by arguments drawn from the past about what God can do but only by coming to see what God has done and is now doing here in South India to use us first in our separation and now in our unity for the salvation of the world. South India challenges not only the Anglican Communion but all the Churches to ask again how much unhappiness they feel about their divisions, how deeply they share Christ's desire that the world may believe.

EPISCOPAL RADIO IN THE FALL

New York: — The department of promotion of the National Council has announced that a weekly radio program for the Episcopal Church on a nationwide network will start about October 1. Robert D. Jordon, director, is at present holding conferences with bishops and promotion chairmen, presenting a sample program and discussing plans for building a large listening audience.

COVER PICTURE

The picture on the cover is of the members of the hierarchy. Five are native Indians, seven were formerly Anglicans, two Presbyterians and two Methodists. In the front row, left to right, are Bishop A. M. Hollis of Madras, the Moderator, whose article is featured in this number; Bishop A. B. Elliott of Dornakal; Bishop C. K. Jacob of Travancore; Bishop B. Joseph of Anantapur and Kurnool; Bishop P. Gurushanta of Mysore. Second row: Bishop Y. Mutyalu of Kistna and Godavari; Bishop H. Sumitra of Cuddappah; Bishop G. T. Selwyn of Tinnevelly; Bishop A. H. Legg of South Travancore. Third row: Bishop J. E. L. Newbigin of Madura and Ramnad; Bishop F. Whittaker of Medak; Bishop S. Kulendran of Jaffna and Bishop E. B. Thorpe of Trichy and Tanjore. Another member of the hierarchy is Bishop Pakenham Walsh, standing in doorway, who has not yet been assigned a jurisdiction.

Evangelicals Comment On Faith And Order Statement

Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship Leaders Release Their Opinion to the Whole Church

Kirkwood, Mo.:—An Opinion of the Statement on Faith and Order, prepared for submission to the Lambeth Conference by the joint commission on Approaches to Unity, was released here last week by the Rev. Charles D. Kean, president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. The document was prepared by a special committee and presented to the Church over the signatures of a number of churchmen as an expression of evangelical conviction. Practically all asked to sign did so promptly. Among them:

Bishops: Lane W. Barton, Angus Dun, Charles K. Gilbert, John E. Hines, Henry W. Hobson, Norman B. Nash, William Scarlett, Beverley D. Tucker, Henry St. George Tucker, John Moore Walker.

Presbyters: John W. Day, Robert F. Gibson Jr., Robert M. Hatch, Sidney E. Sweet, Gardiner M. Day, Roscoe T. Foust, E. Ashley Gerhard, Charles D. Kean, William H. Laird, John C. Leffler, Henry Lewis, Randolph C. Miller, William H. Marmion, Charles F. Penniman, J. Francis Sant, Charles F. W. Smith, John R. Stalker, F. Bland Tucker, Matthew M. Warren.

Laymen: Mrs. Randolph H. Dyer, James A. Garfield, Coleman Jennings, Spencer Miller Jr., Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Owen J. Roberts, Ethan A. H. Shepley, Richard B. Tucker, Jerry Voorhis.

The opinion is as follows:

The statement on Faith and Order, prepared by the joint commission on approaches to unity for submission to Lambeth this summer, is squarely in the tradition of the last two Lambeth Conferences. The commission has understood the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral in basically the same way as it was understood in the "Appeal to All Christian People," of Lambeth 1920, and the report of the 1930 Lambeth Conference.

This means that the Quadrilateral is to be understood as being the platform upon which the Protestant Episcopal Church approaches other Christian groups for the purpose of discussing unity. This means also that the Quadrilateral is to be understood as authorizing an approach to other Christian bodies which recognizes their membership in the Holy Catholic Church and which honors the full reality of non-Episcopal ministries.

In the statement on Faith and Order, the commission on approaches to unity relates the viewpoint of this Church to the historic conviction of the whole Anglican Communion that Church unity is an end to be sought for, and that this unity, while it must safeguard several points of proven value in the Anglican heritage, must be achieved by mutuality. The statement quotes with approval the re-statement of the fourth point of the Quadrilateral in the "Appeal to All Christian People": "A ministry acknowledged by every part of the Church as possessing not only the inward call of the spirit, but also the commission of Christ and the authority of the whole Body."

Since the statement defines the faith and order of this Church in the light of the Lambeth reports of 1920 and 1930, it must be borne in mind, in substantiation of our comment on it, that the same report of 1930, which is cited at great length by the commission, was the one which gave the "green light," to the Church of South India.

The statement has the value of combining in one document a number of valuable formulations of Anglican faith — the original action of the General Convention at Chicago in 1886, the re-statement by the Lambeth Conference of 1888, significant sections from the "Appeal to All Christian People" of Lambeth 1920, and statements on the meaning of the Episcopacy from the Lambeth Report of 1930. These various formulations are all of one general tradition, and while they are not of equal merit, they do represent a kind of mainstream of Anglical thinking on the subject of unity.

After all this has been said, we must point out that the statement prepared by the commission does not so much clarify disputed points as it amplifies the statements made about them. If there was doubt as to the meaning of the Quadrilateral — as there has been right along — and doubt as to the interpretation of the "Appeal to All Christian People," this doubt remains in the new statement. It can be read in more than one way.

We understand the very real difficulties under which the commission has to work, but we know it is a difficulty in which we all share. Language is never definitive on the verbal level, but we do expect in this statement clarification on the way to decision. We read the document, therefore, with great appreciation, and we seek to find in it steps in the direction which this Church defined for itself in 1937, when it declared its intention to achieve organic union with a non-Episcopal branch of the Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church. We recognize that this present statement is immediately addressed to less ambitious questions but that they are related to, and are a part of, that declared policy.

Among those signing the Opinion on the Faith and Order Statement were the Rev. Gardiner M. Day of Cambridge, Mass., Mr. Spencer Miller Jr., of the diocese of Newark, Bishop Beverly D. Tucker of Ohio

A commentary explanation of the Lambeth Quadrilateral is one thing. It may serve a useful purpose, but it is background only for concrete negotiations. A non-Episcopal communion needs answers to definite questions which the Lambeth commentary does not mention — such questions as: how much of a doctrinal definition of the historic Episcopate must be part of a basis of union? Will a non-Episcopal ministry receive recognition in a united Church, and, if so, in which form? Until the Episcopal Church (or the Anglican Churches as a group) give definite replies to these questions which emerge at once in any negotiations, any commentary on the Lambeth Quadrilateral will be in an academic vacuum.

The real weakness of the statement is that it leaves entirely unresolved the dilemma arising from the insistence that the Episcopate shall be regarded as essential, sustained, and obligatory from earliest Apostolic times; while, however, disclaiming insistence upon "any one formulation of the doctrine of the ministry." The latter liberty of interpretation would seem reasonable only if Anglican insistence on the acceptance of the Episcopate as a condition of union is based on emergence through history and proven value. It is worthy of note that the Evangelical does thus regard both the development and the significance of Episcopacy. Consequently, we are opposed to any attempt, whether overt or implied, to impose upon the acceptance of the Episcopacy such a doctrine or theory as arises from the view that it is an indispensable condition of effective grace.

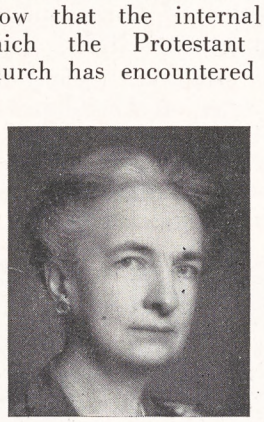
While the statement bases much of its reasoning upon the Lambeth report of 1930, it does not seem to us to safeguard sufficiently, in its remarks about the Episcopacy, the pro-unity spirit of that report. Along with the sections cited in the statement should be the following: "But while we thus stand for the historic Episcopate as a necessary element in any union in which the Anglican Communion can take part, and have given our reasons for so doing, we do not require of others acceptance of those reasons, or of any one particular theory or interpretation of the Episcopate as a condition of union. We recognize as fully the gifts of the one Spirit entrusted to those others, and their equal responsibility to maintain their several trusts; and we are content to believe that the acceptance of the Episcopate itself, in its continuity of succession and consecration, and in the discharge of its historic functions, will bring to the united Church those gifts of grace which, as we believe, the providence of God has associated with it."

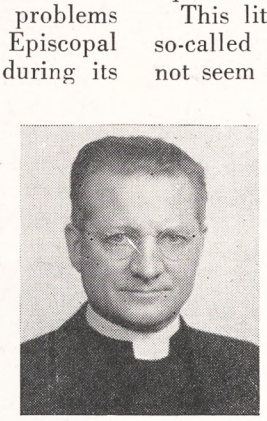
Evangelicals are prepared to say that the South India Church presents a very good example of what we understand this section of the statement to mean. We are aware, however, that those who read the statement from outside our Communion will never be sure that this is the case, since the document can be read also in other ways. Therefore, we regret that the commission has not attempted to say more clearly what it means — but has been content to continue a difficult ambiguity which has plagued our participation in the movement for unity ever since the original Quadrilateral.

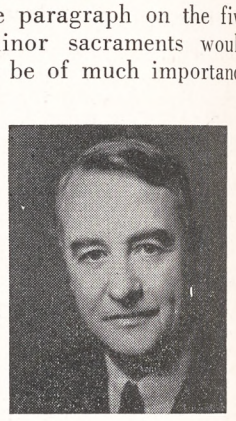
Since Evangelicals understand that negotiations with the Presbyterian Church of the U.S.A. are still the official policy of the Protestant Episcopal Church, we would point out that the "Proposed Basis for Unity," which was never voted on at the last General Convention seems to us to fulfill all the requirements laid down in this statement.

We recognize that there are limits to what any statement of Faith and Order can accomplish, since words are always defined in the context of real decisions and real actions. We know that the internal problems which the Protestant Episcopal Church has encountered during its unity negotiations cannot be resolved by the statement to which everyone agrees. Indeed, we recognize that unanimous agreement under the circumstances is a very good indication of ambiguity.

We have serious hesitation in regard to what appears to be the one innovation in the statement — regarding the sacramental rites not counted to be sacraments of the Gospel. We see no justification for officially recognizing them now to any greater extent than that already allowed in this Church. Such a recognition would, doubtless, complicate the only proposition to which this statement is addressed, namely, "the basis on which the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A. will act" in relation to other Christian bodies, particularly the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. It must be assumed, therefore, that no innovation at this point is intended, and that the verbal changes do not suggest practices other than those rehearsed in Article XXV, and extend to them no recognition beyond what is there described. On any other basis, this part of the statement does not describe the faith of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but only what a small minority would like to have become the faith.







Attention is drawn to the fact that the statement makes reference to "Absolution" and the "Marriage Blessing" in place of the traditional reference to "Penance" and "Matrimony." The second variation would appear insignificant, but it is worthy of note that while the use of Absolution is involved generally in the services of our Church, the so-called sacrament of Penance most certainly is not. It is, therefore, mistaken and misleading to substitute reference to Absolution as an implied equivalent of Penance.

This little paragraph on the five so-called minor sacraments would not seem to be of much importance at first glance. When it is considered, however, in the light of possible relations with other communions, it seems to place an unnecessary obstacle in the way of negotiations with other Protestant Churches, while at the same time it distorts what most Episcopalians believe to be the actual practice of their own Church.

We are aware that the commission has not yet defined what is meant by "intercommunion" and "organic federation." We hope that this task will be attempted shortly. Since the subject has not really been dealt with in the statement, it is unfortunate that the one example cited for "intercommunion" should be that of the Bonn Agreement, since in this country our real concern is with the achievement of inter-communion with other Protestant Churches, rather than comments about the mutual recognition of Catholicity between communions which share certain externals.

When we consider the statement as a whole, we are grateful to the commission for having brought so

EDITORIALS

The E. E. F. View

THE Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, whose views on some contemporary issues are presented in this number, has a positive program which is contemporary, progressive and vital. Its stated purpose is "to unite for common prayer, study, counsel and practical activities members of the Protestant Episcopal Church who, valueing greatly the unbroken heritage of the Anglican Communion as part of the historic Catholic Church, value equally the evangelical character restored to it at the Reformation." There are no narrowly restrictive formularies to which members are required to give assent, and it invites to membership all who value the Protestant nature of our Communion equally with its Catholic heritage and wish to share in adventurous action under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Church of South India

ONE of the great ventures of faith in our time is the recently inaugurated Church of South India. Indeed a distinguished Christian leader declared at the time of its inauguration last September that it "is the most significant event in ecclesiastical history since the Reformation." This judgment is based on the fact that it is the first time that Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian and Anglican Church have become organically one. If it can happen in India and can succeed, surely there is every reason to hope and believe that similar unions can be consummated in other places—indeed on a world scale.

The responsibility resting upon the bishops of the Anglican Communion, meeting at Lambeth this summer for the first time in eighteen years, is therefore great. They face the opportunity of declaring the direction in which the Anglican Communion will move in the years ahead, not only in relation to South India but in relation to the whole ecumenical movement. We are glad therefore that the chief articles in this number are devoted to a consideration of significant aspects of these two events.

EXTRA COPIES

THIS NUMBER, devoted to the program and activities of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, is edited by the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, and formerly the president of the organization. Extra copies have been printed and will be forwarded as long as the supply lasts. Orders should be sent to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. with payment enclosed. Single copies are 10c plus an added 5c for postage and handling; bundles of ten or more, 10c a copy which includes postage.

Our Opportunity

BUT it is not only the bishops meeting at the Lambeth Conference who have an opportunity and a responsibility. If the Union should fail because of the inability of Christians to dwell together in unity owing to recurring differences in the interpretation of the faith, that would be sad indeed. But if it should fail because of lack of funds, that would be unspeakably tragic. Unfortunately, there are those who definitely hope that it will fail and they are prepared to encourage and assist those who oppose it, even to the point of trying to torpedo the experiment by economic pressure. This has created a very serious situation for the Anglicans in the Church of South India, as Bishop Hollis indicates in his illuminating article (page 3). They have entered the Union as "poor relations" for they have taken with them their personnel and their Church buildings, but not the large grants of the SPG and considerable endowment funds which they received prior to the Union and by which a large measure of their work has always been supported.

As the largest portion of funds which have been withheld from the Church of South India have been Anglican funds, the appeal which the Church is making to all Christians who believe in unity should weigh most heavily upon the consciences and bank accounts of those of us who are Anglicans or in the U.S.A., Episcopalians. Therefore, the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship invites not only all its members and friends, but all who believe in Christian unity to give generously toward the Church of South India Thanksgiving Fund. They ask that contributions be sent to the E.E.F. national treasurer, Miss Elsie Hutton, 575 Park Avenue, New York 21, N.Y. and they will be forwarded immediately to Bishop Hollis for the Thanksgiving Fund.

Lambeth and Unity

by Edward L. Parsons

The Retired Bishop of California

THE little book, Lambeth and Unity, which Dr. Haselmayer has written for the American Church Union is admirably done. It never for a moment forgets its thesis which is that the four points of the Quadrilateral as first stated by the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1886 commit this Church to the Catholic position as understood by the American Church Union, that that is the faith of the Anglican Communion and that unity with any non-Episcopal Church can come only through its acceptance of that faith. That I think states fairly the thesis. The argument supporting it is consistent and well documented but totally unconvincing to one who does not share the presuppositions of the author. The book is not an attempt to find out what the Anglican Communion really is, the way it has lived and thought and worked; it is rather an attempt to prove that one interpretation of its life and thought and work is the only legitimate one. Let us see how the argument works out:

One, the first support of the thesis is in the 1886 statement on unity noted above. This is especially important because the purpose of the book is to influence the coming Lambeth Conference. In that utterance the bishops declare that unity can be attained only "by return to the principles of unity exemplified by the undivided Catholic Church." There are "the substantial deposit of Christian faith and order committed by Christ and his apostles to the Church unto the end of the world." "As inherent parts of this sacred deposit are the Scriptures, the Nicene creed, the two sacraments and the historic episcopate."

And there the trouble began because it was obvious from the beginning that many of those who accepted the Quadrilateral in principle differed in their interpretation of what "a deposit of faith and order committed by Christ" meant. Did it e.g. include the historic episcopate as de fide? It did not mean that to the Rev. William R. Huntington who framed the original statement. It certainly could not have meant that to many of the evangelical bishops. Most important of all it did not mean quite that to the bishops of the Lambeth Conference which met in 1888. In their report on unity and in the encyclical began that steady "deterioration" of the Quadrilateral which our author mourns. The report substituted "a basis of approach" for "inherent parts of a sacred deposit." And the encyclical which the author quotes as supporting his view obviously includes the historic episcopate under "discipline," and discipline ecclesiastically means provisions which one accepts as a matter of order but about which no official doctrinal position is required. That is to say a non-Episcopal Church might accept the episcopate as being the historic order of the Church and because of its place in history a vital part of reunion but need attach to it no specific doctrinal interpretation. That is the position held by great numbers of Anglicans, clerical and lay. It can call to its support many great names from Hooker on through the centuries.

But the "deterioration" had begun. It continued and in 1920 the Lambeth Conference in its great "Appeal to all Christian People" asked for a ministry "acknowledged by every part of the Church" and offered the episcopate as the best means of attaining that end. The 1930 Conference not only approved of the South India plan in which it was made definite that no special doctrinal interpretation of the episcopate was required but went on in its committee report to point out that what the Anglican Communion wanted to ensure was the continuance of the historic functions of the order. All this, says the American Church Union is "deterioration."

Now there are two comments which spring to mind at once. The first is the question whether, although bishops like other people may err, the bishops of the Anglican Communion are as competent to interpret the mind of that great Christian body as is the American Church Union. Are they as likely to be as loyal to its inner meaning? The question answers itself. The other comment is a kind of ad hominem argument which I don't like, and yet which I think is relevant. One of the traditional functions of bishops at any rate since Irenaeus formulated it, has been to safeguard the doctrines of the faith. We have moved a good deal away from that in practice. But it seems a somewhat odd situation that those who regard the episcopate as the essential part of the "sacramental life-giving organism of the ministry" should take issue fundamentally with the pronouncements of the whole body of Anglican bishops. To claim that they were speaking as a voluntary group and not as an official "synod" could of course be quibbling.

One other point may be noted about the original 1886 Quadrilateral. The author lays much stress upon its "binding" character but it must be remembered that it is binding only as far as any later General Convention accepts it as such. It is binding in precisely the same way that our invitation to the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. is binding.

Two, the rest of the book is devoted to proving from the official standard of the Church that the bishops were wrong. The Anglican Communion is something quite different from what they and certainly a vast majority of its members think it to be. There is first the continuity of canon law. It is true that according to our canonists from Hoffman on we are still living under the canons of the Church of England in force in 1789 except as repealed or as substitutions have been made. But according to our author those include not only the canons of 1600 but also the entire corpus of medieval canon law which is "the embodiment in positive disciplinary form of the doctrine of the Church regarding salvation." Ignoring the appalling legalism of such a theory it is quite clear that the Church does not as a fact live by it today. Indeed our canonists, like lawyers in general, are prone to forget that all real law is living law. Our relation to the Church of England is not canonical at all. It is a spiritual tie, a common attitude towards religion and life which our Prayer Books in both their resemblances and their differences express. Of course there is a great body of ecclesiastical "common law" (custom) which we share with the mother Church. That only makes clearer the non-legal character of the tie. But before we pass on to the other matters it is well for us again to note how appalling is this conception of the place of law in the Christian Church. It has no relation to life. It certainly has none to the gospel. The freedom of the Christian man becomes a fiction. St. Paul has labored and written in vain.

Three, of the place of the scriptures, the meaning of the creeds, and the doctrine of the sacraments, there is no space in a review of this kind for comment at length. What is said by the author covers old ground. There is nothing new. If one does not realize that the scriptures stand in judgment upon the Church and historically have ever and again broken the traditions of men, there is little use in arguing about the relation of the two, not much use discussing fixity of interpretation of the creeds if they and the decisions of the ecumenical councils stand out of and above history. Some of us have thought that it is only the Lord Jesus Christ, king and savior, who is the same yesterday today and forever.

AND as to the sacraments, diversity of interpretation has always been accepted. But perhaps one other comment may be made. It seems a harmless kind of exercise to try to prove that article xxv in its dealing with "lesser sacraments" and the consistent practice of the Church for several hundred years mean nothing. Nobody disputes the sacramental character of the rites in question and of others. Indeed in passing one might note that on page 320 of the Prayer Book while the title reads Unction of the Sick the rubric and prayers put anointing and laying on of hands on an equality. Apparently we have unwittingly added an eighth sacrament.

As to the ministry it should be remembered that with every new insight into early Christian history and every new emphasis in social and ecclesiastical movements, new theories have appeared. I cannot of course in a paper of this kind deal with the immensely learned and valuable studies of The Apostolic Ministry. But so far as many of us can see we must always end up with that familiar American slang "So what?" It still remains to be proved to a large part of the Christian world that the episcopate has any other divine validation than that which history gives it. It was there that Hooker found it. And if it is true as our author says that "Biblical evidence alone without a reading of 'ancient authors' would never solve the problem of the Christian ministry," it is a fair question to ask how we can expect people (including our own) who believe the Bible to be the ultimate standard of faith to accept a particular doctrine of the ministry as part of that faith. We are forced back to the position of the Lambeth report of 1930.

Four, but all these matters are really of secondary importance to the fundamental question raised by this book and of course by many Anglicans in all branches of the Communion. That question is whether the Anglican Communion is ready to turn from the postion which it has taken since the 16th century, forget that it is a reformed Church, repudiate its comprehensiveness and compel the acceptance of an interpretation of its standards which would make it a small "Catholic" sect, drive from it great numbers of its ablest leaders and most loyal laity and effectually destroy that high mission which God has given it an opportunity to fulfill.

The Church has always enrolled among its great names men of diverse views. It has accepted Hooker and Jewel and Andrewes and Cosin. It has counted men like Ken and Wilson among its saints. Arnold and Kingsley and Maurice have their place with Pusey and Liddon and Church. In America our roll of heroes of the faith certainly includes Meade and McIlvaine, Muhlenberg and Huntington and Phillips Brooks along with Hobart and Dekoven, Hall and Brent. Can we really think that any of these men were, to use Dr. Cirlot's phrase, only "subjectively loyal"? Think of the poverty of the Church without them! No one, to sum it up, has suggested that Archbishop Lang who drafted the "Appeal to all Christian People" and William Temple who phrased the Unity Report of 1930 were ignorant of the standards of their Church or disloyal.

But back of these questions of the Anglican Communion is the larger question concerning the Church of Christ. Is it a vast legal institution bound together by a system of law, exacting obedience and helpless to move as the dead hand of the past is laid upon it? The Anglican Communion (with of course many failures as must occur in any human endeavor to carry out God's will) has pretty consistently witnessed to an altogether different conception. It has conceived of the Church as a fellowship, a family, its children, diverse in view, often stubborn, fractious, even quarrelsome, not always humble, bound together as a family because they possess the same kind of Prayer Book, the same ministry, the same altars, and pledge their loyalty to their Master in the same great Catholic creeds. It is in a common life expressed in a common work and a common worship that the bond is found. With an instinctive and surely a God-given certainty the Church has always in the end resisted the efforts to make it over into something less than the family of God, to tie it to one interpretation of the faith, to make it something other than a living growing organism, reflecting in its own small way its vision of the unity and diversity of the great Catholic Church of the future. That great Church will be in unity because all men are of God's family, but it will rejoice in the rich diversity with which he has endowed his children.

CMS—A Great Evangelical Society

by Thomas W. Isherwood

Director of the Canadian School of Missions

IN A day of world-wide unrest and uncertainty the Church Missionary Society of London, England, is holding its third jubilee year. It is, however, not merely remembering a distinguished past. It is taking stock of the situation in which it is now called to serve the purpose of God and it is looking forward, with sober confidence and with due regard to the importance of sound policy and strategy, to the years ahead. It has always been characteristic of the society that it knew how to look back to the years that are gone, learning from their experience valuable guiding principles; up to God from whom alone comes the enabling to shoulder present commitments; out to the future which is always, for the servant of God, heavy with destiny and great with opportunity. Thus alone can we secure that perspective without which missionary work will be, at best, haphazard and, at worst, frustrated and futile. Those who, like the writer of this article, know CMS at first-hand believe that the society was never more blessed with far-sighted leadership than at the present time. In its general secretary, Canon Max Warren, it has a chief officer who is without superior on the other side of the Atlantic. In him are combined the competent historian, the sound theologian and the able administrator. And to all this should be added a genius for personal friendship and a rare capacity for inspiring and leading a team.

It is written in Scripture "Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee," and in the one hundred and fiftieth year of CMS history it is interesting, and certainly profitable, to look back to the day when it was founded. It came into being on April 12th, 1799, and its birthplace was the Castle and Falcon Inn, Aldersgate Street, London. It is interesting also to recall that there, too, four years earlier the London Missionary Society had had its origin. A common missionary enthusiasm accounted for the origin of both of these societies, but the founders of CMS felt the need to establish a commitedly Anglican society, which LMS was not. You may ask were not SPCK and SPG already in existence? They were, and the founders of the Church Missionary Society recognized the valuable work in which they were engaged. But each of them was restricted by specialized aims and responsibilities, chiefly in connection with "the British plantations" in America and the West Indies. The spirit that led to the establishment of CMS cannot better be illustrated than by quoting two of the four resolutions adopted by its founders on its very birthday. The first stated "that it is a duty highly incumbent upon every Christian to endeavour to propogate the knowledge of the gospel among the heathen": the second, holding the existing missionary situation in view, concluded that "there seems to be still wanting in the established Church a society for sending missionaries to the continent of Africa, or the other parts of the heathen world."

It was, by human calculations, a "day of small beginnings" and it was certainly a day of political unrest. The shadow of the aggressive designs of a dictator was hanging heavily over Europe. Faint hearts would never have recognized it as the appropriate moment for the start of a daring enterprise in the name of Christ. But the little group, composed predominantly of consecrated laymen, had no faint heart among them. They inherited, from the vital springs of the evangelical revival, a sure grasp of the Gospel of redeeming love and a sufficient understanding of the world-wide purpose of God. And they were not discouraged by the only moderate approval which they received in the highest ecclesiastical quarters. From the very beginning they sought official sanction for the existence of the new society but the best that William Wilberforce could report as the result of his interview with the Archbishop of Canterbury was that "His Grace regretted that he could not with propriety at once express his full concurrence, and approbation in behalf of an object which he had deeply at heart." It should however, be added that he promised to look on "the proceedings with candour, and said that it would give him pleasure to find them such as he could approve." It will be recognized that the caution, the dignity and the reserve of these pronouncements are in the very best Anglican tradition!

The founders of CMS set to work with a good will and triumphantly survived not only these initial soberings but also the more serious difficulties and problems presented by the first years of the new society's history. Chief of these, undoubtedly, was the failure to find even one English candidate between 1799 and 1804. A missionary society exists, in the first place, to send out missionaries! What was to be done? The committee decided, in the end, to follow the example and policy of SPCK under similar circumstances, and so it came about that the first CMS missionaries were recruited from Germany. A missionary college in Berlin had candidates but no society to send them out. CMS had the organization for sending missionaries but, as yet, no candidates for overseas service. Two German candidates were accepted by CMS and brought to England both for training in a new language and that they might learn something of the outlook of the society under which they were to sail and of its supporting constituency. It is not without its amusing side thus to note that English was the first "foreign language" in which CMS instructed its missionaries! The business of getting these candidates overseas was the next problem that had to be faced. For a long time no ship could be found that would give them berths. Shipping was under the control of slave-trade influences. Every inch of space was required for this unholy traffic and missionaries would, in any case, have been an embarrassment not to be encouraged. But in the end this difficulty, too, was surmounted, and in 1804, the first CMS missionaries set sail for Africa. One of the Germans having found an English wife, they were three in number. We remark, again in passing, that the first English person to undertake missionary life under CMS auspices was a woman.

INTO all the further history of the early years of the society we cannot now go in detail, except for mention of the steps that soon had to be taken in order to secure for the work overseas the organized support of a growing home constituency. No army, not even an army of the Lord, can go far or do much independently of the base of its supplies. Just about the time that Napoleon was marching to his final defeat CMS instituted a system of local English "Associations" of which the first was formed in Bristol, speedily followed by others in Yorkshire, Cambridge and elsewhere. Gradually, and more by spontaneous development than by the fulfilment of a deliberate plan, "cells" of dedicated support for the society's work were to be found in many parts of England, some in urban centers, others in rural outposts. From the beginning lay interest in them was one of their predominant features. In more recent times the grouping of these "cells" into major associations has followed a pattern partly determined by the volume of interest thus aroused, partly by the existing diocesan system. More than can be estimated the society is indebted to this network for the organized support of the home base. During recent years, and with special concern for the most effective commemoration of the third jubilee, an effort has been made to deepen and extend the vital activity of the associations. There are evidences that it has met with an encouraging measure of real success.

Africa was, logically enough, the scene of the first activities of a movement of which the full official title was "The Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East." It was to Rio Pongas that the first missionaries were sent and one reason for beginning in Africa is to be found in words addressed by the CMS committee to their first recruits. "We desire . . . to make Western Africa the best remuneration in our power for its manifold wrongs." In 1816 the mission was transferred to Sierra Leone, and in 1845 work was undertaken in Nigeria. Thereafter the society's African commitments spread and developed, but meanwhile work had already begun in Australia, New Zealand, the West Indies, North America and the Near East. Bridgeheads for the gospel were early established in India and Ceylon. CMS missionary work was started in China in 1844, first in Shanghai, with Ningpo as a second base. Nearly a quarter of a century was to pass before the society could begin work in Japan but the first opportunity to do so was eagerly seized by its authorities. All this is but a partial, as well as a sketchy, indication of the manner of the growth of a movement which has made CMS the greatest of all Anglican missionary agencies, in point alike of overseas commitments and of the volume of home support which stands behind those commitments. Today the society is responsible for the work of nearly a thousand missionary agents, to say nothing of the many thousands of their national colleagues. And to give only one further indication of the range of its work, it supervises one tenth of all the medical work done by missionary agencies other than those of the Roman Church.

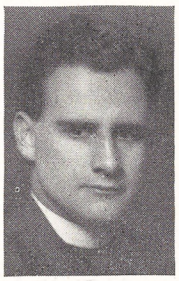
From the beginning the work of CMS was, and is today, evangelical in tone and emphasis. But it has never been "a party society" and, wherever practicable, it works in happy fellowship and cooperation with other societies of different tradition and outlook, both within, and beyond the Anglican communion. Evangelism has always been a priority in its interpretation of its entrusted task. Only by the continual intake of men and women redeemed and renewed in every part of their being can the Church of the living God be edified. But the building of that Church has ever been also its deep concern. For only so can evangelized men and women find the environment in which the new life in Christ can be developed and expressed: and only so can the creative purpose of God for the world be furthered. To this end CMS has always been alive to the necessity of making new experiments and of extending the range of its activities. And believing in its call to follow the leading of the spirit of God, it has been ready to take the risks which are required of those who would be adventurers and pioneers for the sake of the eternal kingdom. A recent evidence of this outlook is to be seen in its decision to continue its fullest support of work in connection with the newly inaugurated Church of South India.

It is a far cry from the day in which CMS was born to the tasks which confront her in the year of her third jubilee. But here we are, and this brief article may well conclude by drawing attention to two indications that the society is a healthy organism, animated today by the spirit and the vision of her forefathers and anxious to be, in our shattered world, the effective instrument of the will of God. First, and so far as all her responsibilities both overseas and at home are concerned, she has recently subjected herself to a searching examination of all aspects of her function, policy and administration. Her officers well understand that this is no day for laissez-faire acceptance of an existing condition. The times in which we live call for the highest possible degree of strategy and mobility. But the re-alignment contemplated is with no view to retreat. Its aim is the regrouping of all available forces in order that an effective advance of this battalion in the king's army may be possible. Secondly, the society has completed, as recently as March 31st, 1948, a year encouraging beyond anything that might, humanly speaking, have been expected in the matter of financial support. Its total cash receipts were, with the exception of only one other year, the largest in its history. Contributions at home went up by no less a sum than £46,000 and there was a credit balance on the year's work of over £5,000. This is no argument for complacency. It has been accomplished only because workers in the field have been as deeply concerned for conservative spending as friends at home have been concerned for liberal giving. There remains vastly more land yet to be possessed. But it is an unmistakable sign that God's blessing is upon CMS and that he has a great work for it still to do.



The Church overseas needs CMS and not less the Church at home. Overseas, the society exists to press forward with evangelism, to promote the rapid growth of indigenous Churches toward maturity, to take its full part in the contemporary ecumenical movement. At home, it stands as a witness to the importance of the voluntary principle in the maintenance of missionary work and as a means of inspiring and directing the highest form of initiative, the initiative of men and women who have heard the call of God to service overseas and are prepared to go all out in obedience to it. May this year of its third jubliee call a great host of friends both to gratitude for a past which is rich in evidences of the goodness of God, and to courageous acceptance of whatever he has in store for CMS in the years that are yet to be.

Evangelicals and Lambeth

By
CHARLES D. KEAN
President of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship

TRADITIONALLY the Anglican Communion has nearly always appeared in the best light in its Lambeth Conference pronouncements. It was the 1887 Conference which placed our whole world-wide fellowship on record as taking a positive approach to the problem of the divided Church. It was the 1920 Lambeth Conference which issued "The Appeal to All Christian People." The 1930 Conference gave the green light to the United Church of South India.

While the actual pronouncements may look a little cautious from the hindsight of years, nevertheless it must be admitted that the statements listed above, and others, are prophetic compared to what Anglican Churchmen are yet ready to accept in practice. In other words, through the years Lambeth has borne witness to our faith in Christian unity more adequately than the actual implementation by the several Anglican Churches of its pronouncements has done.

Evangelicals in the United States and elsewhere look forward to the 1948 Lambeth Conference for another great outpouring of the prophetic spirit in our Communion. We look for a strong re-affirmation of support for the United Church of South India, which we regard as the greatest achievement of Christendom since the Reformation. We hope for a solid, realistic and understanding statement on the subject of marriage, which will have some practical relevance to the pastoral problems we encounter. We hope for an approach to intercommunion with other Protestant Churches which will be immediate and mutual.

The 1930 Lambeth Conference added the weight and influence of our world communion to those who believe that in a Christian family children should be planned for and provided for. We hope the 1948 Lambeth Conference will be even more forthright in its endorsement of what is a practical application of Christian respect for human personality.

In this era of world uncertainty, the Lambeth Conference can provide a badly needed note of moral stability, demonstrating to the world the conditions which must underlie any true peace. We look forward to a re-affirmation in terms relevant to our generation of the great social principles for which Lambeth has been famous which may point the way, in Christian fellowship, from the morass of the present to a brighter future.

The evangelical movement has always claimed to be the central tradition of Anglicanism. Any reading of the record of the past Lambeth conferences will bear this out. What the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship stands for in the United States is no irresponsible disavowal of the traditions of our Church, but their preservation and application to the needs of our day.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States feels itself part of a wider movement of common tradition, and it understands that tradition—as far as it can be articulate on controversial matters—as that of a liberal spirit seeking to relate the love of God to the needs of men. The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship seeks to express that spirit concretely and specifically in programs and policies called for by our contemporary situation.

Evangelicals throughout the Anglican Communion have looked to Lambeth as generally expressing their faith on an international level. Evangelicals in America hope for the same results from the forthcoming Lambeth Conference and we hope also that the bishops who attend it will understand and appreciate our great tradition of prophetic, creative, evangelical leadership.

_Witness to the Light_: F. D. Maurice's Message for Today, by Alice R. Vidler. Scribners, $3.00.

Dr. Vidler's Hale Lectures provide something very much needed—an intelligent guide to that often praised and rarely read author, Frederick Denison Maurice. His ideas of Christian faith and life are deservedly receiving renewed attention at the present time, and Vidler's excellent summaries and well-chosen quotations are an admirable introduction to what he really taught. This serious Victorian who was too much of a Churchman to be a tractarian and too loyal to the gospel to be an evangelical, too liberal to be a broad Churchman and too orthodox to be conservative, a socialist because he was a Christian and a Protestant because he was a Catholic has much to teach our time—though neither now nor then could admiration of Maurice fall so low as to lead to the foundation of a Maurician party. Vidler hints at various modern applications of his ideas, though more perhaps to suggest what can be done than to work out what should be. The Maurician inspiration still has a great deal to give to the Church. —E. R. HARDY, JR.

The Church of South India Appeals for Help

The First Synod Issues Strong Statement Asking for Gifts to a Stabilization Fund

Edited by Sara Dill

Madras, India:—The following is the text of the appeal of the Church of South India which was adopted at the first meeting of the synod of the Church in March:

"At the inauguration of the Church of South India in September 1947 a Thanksgiving Fund was opened. Gifts to this fund are welcomed from individuals and organizations, whether in India or in other parts of the world, wishing in such a way to express their gratitude to Almighty God for this culmination of so many years' prayer and effort directed towards the union of his Church.

"The chief use to which the Thanksgiving Fund will be put is the creation of a central stabilization fund for the Church of South India. Each diocese will be largely responsible for maintaining and developing the work within its own borders; but especially during the initial stages of the Church's corporate life it is clear that there must be a strong central fund, to guard against any failure through local weakness to maintain essential services. Among the essential services that need to be guaranteed are the expenses connected with the bishops and their offices; the salaries and other provision for presbyters; and the maintenance of evangelistic work.

"There are also certain dioceses which are essentially missionary dioceses, where the Christian community is drawn from the poorest classes and cannot be expected for a number of years to be able to bear the full responsibility of carrying on the many-sided work of the Christian enterprise; the whole Church must help such dioceses to take the opportunities that are offered. Each diocese is straining to bear the burden within its own area; the Church as a whole needs resources to enable it to do the tasks that fall upon the Church as a whole; and to build up such resources is the main object of the Thanksgiving Fund.

"We dare not allow the unique call of the present day in India to be neglected by the Church through any failure to provide necessary funds. We, therefore, appeal to all our friends to support us to the best of their ability, by their gifts and by their prayers, that we may do the work to which God is calling us."

Have You Read —

Postlude To Skepticism

By Ralph Sadler Meadowcroft

This, the latest VITAL BOOK, by its stimulation is real food for thought. It challenges the reader to realistically face the modern world and the rapidly unfolding future, and make the church a relevant answer to the need for a Christian ideology and faith, the solution of our social-economic problem, our domestic dilemma, and war. It presents a strong affirmation of the necessity and possibility of faith in place of the prevailing doubt of today, where that faith is to be found, and what it should be.

Formerly rector of All Angels' Church, New York, and now at Grace Church, Charleston, S. C., the English-born author is known as one of the finest radio preachers among the nation-wide networks. An engineering student before coming to the U. S. in 1924, he studied at Rutgers, Drew and Union Theological Seminaries, receiving the Master of Sacred Theology degree from the latter.

English Evangelical Congress

London, England:—On April 23-4 at Kingsway Hall a Congress of English evangelicals was held for the purpose of making articulate the contributions which evangelical thought can make to the problems to be debated at Lambeth. The congress was representative of all types of evangelicals, with fundamentalists and Liberals and many varieties in between.

Among those who addressed the congress were Mr. Kenneth Grubb, president of the CMS; F. D. Coggan, principal of the London College of Divinity; the Rev. J. Hickinbotham, vice-principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford; Canon Max Warren, secretary of the CMS, the Rev. C. S. Milford, India secretary of the CMS and many others.

The theme of the Congress was "expectant evangelism." A statement consisting of nine affirmations was passed by the Congress and is to be placed before the bishops at the Lambeth Conference. The main addresses are being published in a book which will be presented to each of the bishops attending the Lambeth Conference.

The preamble to the nine affirmations proclaims the necessity of directing "the whole energy of the Church towards a program of expectant evangelism which shall call into play the initiative and devotion not only of the rank and file of the clergy, but the faithful laity as well."

The last of the nine affirmations reads in part: "We affirm our desire to work in fellowship together with all those who agree with these affirmations and to seek organic unity with them in one Church. As a signal step to this end we welcome the inauguration of the United Church of South India as being at once the fruit of a spirit-inspired evangelism, a direct response to the needs of those as yet unevangelized, and the earnest of a still greater unity amongst Christians throughout the world. We would pray our fathers in God to lead us at the earliest possible moment into full communion with this Church."

Provincial Conference

Sweet Briar, Va.:—The conference of the province of Washington will be held at Sweet Briar College here, June 14-25. Dean Robert Hatch of Wilmington, Del., is the chaplain and the Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke of Richmond, Va., the dean. Among those on the faculty will be the Rev. Robert C. Batchelder of Lancaster, Pa., the Rev. Charles D. Kean of Kirkwood, Mo., the Rev. Robert A. Magill of Lynchburg, Va., the Rev. C. R. Mengers of Washington, Dean Webb of Bethlehem, Pa., the Rev. Frank L. Titus of the overseas department of the National Council.

Newark Convention

Newark, N. J.:—Reaffirmation of its stand favoring separation of Church and state was voted at the convention of the diocese of Newark, meeting May 11th. The convention also approved state and federal aid for low-cost housing.

Bishop Washburn warned that the "seeds of Communism will fall on very fertile ground" unless we take steps to correct "the ills of our own society" and he stated that "problems of housing, civil rights and race relations have their religious significance."

Sufiragan Bishop Ludlow told the delegates that fear of Russia is the "great danger confronting our country at the present." He blamed this "panicky" state of mind for interference with the freedom of speech of "minority representatives," and for dragging "red herrings across domestic problems that should be faced frankly."

War Condemned

Boston:—Establishment of better relationships between the US and the USSR was urged in a report which was adopted practically unanimously by the general conference of the Methodist Church. The report also condemned war as "sinful" and stated that war "as we now know it may destroy all civilized human life upon this planet."

Work of the United Nations was upheld in the report and a federated form of world government for permanent peace was advocated. The

Assails Reaction

Atlantic City, N. J.:—Under the guise of fighting Communism, reactionary forces in American life appear to be willing to ally themselves with fascism, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York told a labor convention meeting here.

"We can no more block the advances of Communism by allying ourselves with decadent reaction," he told several hundred delegates, "whether it be the fascism of Franco in Spain, the junkers in Germany, or the selfishness of the passing monarchies elsewhere, than we can by adopting a policy of appeasement and reliance upon the pledged word of men whose philosophy uses both the truth and the lie as a means to an end."

He said further that anti-labor forces in America were seeking to impose their views on Europe by making a condition of American help the accepting of our economic practices.

Urge Federation

Griffin, Ga.:—The council of the diocese of Atlanta, meeting here at St. George's, passed a resolution unanimously urging Congress to pass a bill now before the House which calls upon the United States "to assume leadership in transforming the United Nations into a world federal government adequate to enact, interpret and enforce world law to prevent war." It followed a stirring address by Bishop John Moore Walker in which he urged the application of

Urges Action

New York:—Exchange of diplomatic correspondence between the United States and Russia envisioning a discussion aimed at settling differences between the two nations was hailed by the Federal Council of Churches. In a telegram to President Truman the Council declared that such action "would meet with the approval of the overwhelming majority of the people of the churches."

Social Relations

Charleston, S. C.:—The Rev. Leland B. Henry, director of social relations of the diocese of New York, conducted two institutes in the diocese of South Carolina this spring, one at Summerville and the other at Cheraw. He dealt with the theological basis for Christian action; the role of the Church and techniques.

many significant documents into articulate relationship for the education of the Church. We are glad that the best elements in the Lambeth tradition have been continued, and that a significant editorial job has been done which can be put to much good use. We wish, however, that the commission had understood more clearly that whatever it wrote could not help but be addressed to the whole Christian world and read with interest by members of other bodies.

While recognizing the practical and verbal difficulties involved in composing a statement on Faith and Order, we must regard this document as being meaningful — in any full sense — only to Anglicans, whose glory is a heritage of freedom of interpretation when it comes to defining its own formularies.

REV. BAYARD S. CLARK
Rector of Christ Church, Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The proposition made by Messrs. Oakes and Hall (April 29th) interested me. I'm sure some of us would tear off another stamped postal from Parish Helps if we thought we could get a faith barometer of our parish.

Probably THE WITNESS proved a fruitful sounding-board for their idea. If so, they should now have sufficient enthusiasm to begin work at once. No two people are as well qualified to follow through on this "idea" as Oakes and Hall who suggested it. May Bishop Sherrill add his blessing to them in their future work!

My present picture of hell is a church in which ideas are floating around in a vacuum with no one doing anything about them. Ideas need legs to put them on the march. I hope these two men who had the audacity to suggest something from the banks of the Charles will find courage to persevere beyond thought to production of their "faith barometer."

A COUNTRY PARSON
In an Eastern Diocese

In your editorial, Our Rural Work (April 29), you ask: 'Why do we have so many clergy changing jobs in the country with short average tenure in a parish or mission while the normal turnover in city parishes is so much less with a correspondingly lower average tenure?"

Certainly in most cases where rural clergy go from parish to parish it is for reasons of a better salary and a better rectory. It is interesting to learn that "the average salary offered to rural clergymen in one of the larger dioceses is $2328 with a house." Here in this southern New England area I have served two rural parishes which are ten miles apart, for the last seventeen years for $1936 a year. Out of this amount I have paid all automobile expenses, telephone, fuel, electricity and income taxes and other taxes, leaving around $1200 to live on. There are many miles of rough country roads to cover in parish visiting. The rectory is one of the "fresh air" kind, with a wet cellar and antiquated heating system. Over the years it has taken close figuring to keep free from debt, especially in these times with living costs increased 300%. And while not married, yet I have had obligations to certain members of my family over the years.

In regard to the pension: I have a letter from the Church Pension Fund in which I am informed that I was "not ordained at normal age," and so, after twenty years as an active clergyman I would not be eligible for even the minimum allowance of $600 but, if I continued at my present salary until that time I might receive $516.40 a year. I know many old people who receive that amount as "old age pension," and no doubt could receive it myself, as I have always paid the "old age tax." My health has broken down as a result of my continuing to live in this climate, and I have resigned my parishes to go to a drier place. Sometimes a man will endure hardships and the lack of city advantages at a small salary if he is given the hope of security in old age. I leave my parishes in better shape than they have been before. That the baptisms, confirmations and marriages have doubled over the previous seventeen year period, and all financial obligations for general Church and diocese have been paid up would indicate this to be so. I make this statement to show that I'm not "deserting a sinking ship."

My answer to the question is,— a saving wage for the rural clergy and a minimum of $1200 in old age. It is unfair, unwise, unethical and un-Christian for a wealthy Church to expect the less fortunate of her clergy to struggle along year after year on an extremely low wage, and later, an inadequate pension. You are very right in calling this system unjust. I understand there are many who have given their best years to the Church who are finding it hard in these times to get on with the minimum age allowance. This fact has little encouragement for the young man who desires to give his life to the work of the Church in the rural field. The prospect of a life of privation for himself and family, and insecurity in old age, would give pause to any intelligent young man. Thank you for your editorial,— it is right to the point in more ways than one.

Ed. Note:—Our policy is to print only signed letters in Backfire. Since the writer of the above stated that "My only reason for wishing the name and location withheld is that it might cause embarrassment to the people of my parishes" we set aside the rule.

Enroll in Support of These Principles

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship provides a means by which progressive laymen and clergy can take positive steps in bringing more vigorous life to the Church. The Fellowship invites to membership all who value the Protestant nature of our communion equally with its Catholic heritage and desire to share in adventurous action under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Some E.E.F. Objectives

To witness to the Gospel by interpreting it in contemporary terms and applying Christian ethical principles to every sphere of personal and social life.

To preserve permanently for our Church the positive principles of the Reformation and to provide encouragement, counsel and help to all seeking to forward the cause of Evangelical Christianity in faith, ethics and practice.

To uphold the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church as set forth in its Book of Common Prayer, the Articles of Religion, and the Constitution and Canons.

To further understanding and cooperation with other Christian Churches and to promote the cause of organic union, whenever possible, but particularly at this time with our sister reformed Churches.

Chinese Christians Send Letter To American Christians

Declare Old Patterns No Longer Workable And Can Greatly Harm the Missionary Cause

Shanghai, China:—Fifteen Chinese Christians have addressed an open letter "to all fellow-Christians in North America." The group includes clergymen of three denominations, professors, welfare workers, business men. The letter was brought to the United States by another Chinese Christian who vouches for the authenticity of the document but who withholds the names of the signers, with the statement that to reveal them would get them and their families into trouble with the authorities of the Kuomingtang government.

The letter follows:

"Time is running short and the decisive moment for the Chinese Church is imminent. We, a group of leading Christians in China, being clergymen and laymen of five denominations, feel impelled to speak to you, not as representatives of official bodies but as individual Christians, concerning our unspeakable anxiety as regards the future of our Church in China and as regards the part you can play to make things easier for us. After five long sessions of prayer and frank exchange of views we have come to be acutely aware that the Christian movement here needs very urgently the prayers and the discernment of our Fellow-Christians in America.

"We marvel at God's wonderful power every time we think of the establishment and the growth of his Church in China and of how you have allowed your resources to be used by him for the evangelization of China. During the last century millions of China's sons and daughters have been led to come nearer to the life which God in his fatherly love means to give to all mankind.

"While we have complete confidence in the unchanging goodwill of the millions of you kind-hearted American Christians, the changes in the Chinese people's sympathies and aspirations have been so drastic that old patterns of thinking are no longer workable and can indeed do great harm to the cause of spreading the gospel among our people. We loathe to think of the consequences of our inertia in attaching our hope and enterprises to the powers that are already decadent. Are we not to be held responsible if we allow our generosity and goodwill to be exploited and turned into nothing but an investment of hatred? Should we not now so beware that the message of God's salvation is presented in such a way that we do not unnecessarily give the non-Christian world a reason to label the Church once again as a weapon of power-politics? In the minds of many thinking Chinese Christians there is a growing fear that we may be so misunderstood today that the dreadful experience of the 1920's may again come upon us and this time more or less at our own invitation.

"We feel sorry to say that more and more we have been led by hard facts to the conviction that there are in the American Church certain leaders with definite political ambitions whose activities in the name of the Church on behalf of interests other than religious are not only detrimental to the traditional good friendship the Chinese have for America, but also take away from our preaching its convincing power and make the gospel a laughing stock to our youth. The entire future of our Church in China is too sacred to be made into a gamble. Thus, we can hardly afford not to plead to you and, through you, to your mission boards and Church authorities for cooperation and understanding. We sincerely hope you will be sympathetic with us in our present difficulties and embarrassment, as we are the ones who have to go into direct contact with the common people of China at the outposts of the Christian frontiers. The common people of China today are not slumbering and should not be treated as such. They have a right to ask whether we preach the gospel out of the eternal love of God for men which transcends national and partisan interests, and not out of some lower and negative political calculation, or whether there is some political design mixed up in our evangelistic mission.

"First, we assert that there is no Church issue at stake or in anyway involved in the present conflict itself, unless we ourselves choose to gear the fate of the Church to that of a particular politico-military group. American Christians can help relieve our embarrassment if your mission boards can be urged to declare that they disassociate themselves from the China policy of their government. This will strengthen us greatly in China in our witnessing for the gospel.

"Second, we ask for a more vigorous application of Christian restraint in making judgments when facts are not sufficiently reliable. While we must not for one moment neglect the prophetic mission of the Church in the world let us remind ourselves that we have to be fair, precise, detached and motivated by goodwill. It is meaningless to indulge in irresponsible scandalization and unilateral praising of the two sides respectively. Many of the so-called atrocity stories of the Chinese communists have been much too easily grasped upon and given unwarranted publicity because since then, they have been found to be either exaggerated or unfounded. This only serves the purpose of creating unnecessary hard feeling.

"Third, we request you to pray for us daily so that the Chinese Church may possess the courage of its conviction and may witness for Christ against unrighteousness anywhere. May God give it perseverence in face of new, difficult situations and destroy any tendency towards complacency and servility to powers which try to patronize it. We are going through a most trying period of our history and your prayers are much needed.

"Fourth, if there is any group in China today for which Christian prayers have been the most denied, it is the Chinese communists, our 'enemy,' our fellow-countrymen and our fellow-children of God in spite of the fact that they have refused to believe in him as we do.

"We have much to repent before God for what we have done and for what we have left undone which have contributed to make the situation as it is. Aside from other matters may God open our eyes to see much of their constructive work for our people in North China which should humble us. While we pray for God's forgiveness of our lack of goodwill and prejudice, let us also beg him to pour down his spirit to complete what is amiss, and to correct all that is not of God but of men's own self-righteousness. May God guide their leaders so that they may prove themselves worthy of the trust a large part of our people have found it desirable to put in them.

"We wish there can be a mighty tide of prayers across America for the mentioned purposes. It is obviously unwise for us to sign this open letter. But, please do not let this be made into a reason not to take our requests seriously. It is most unfortunate that freedom of expression has been curtailed to such an extent that even we, in Christian love, cannot but withhold our identity. We assure you that we in this letter do represent the aspirations and opinions of very many alert Christians in China today and hope that, before very long, there will be a way to make known who are the writers."

SYNOD OF THE PACIFIC

Santa Barbara, Cal.:—The synod of the Pacific met here, May 11-14, at Trinity Church, with large numbers present. Bishop Lewis of Nevada was the chairman of a conference throughout the first day on religious education. The following day Bishop Bayne of Olympia was the preacher at the opening service, with business sessions held throughout the day. The synod dinner, presided over by Bishop Gooden of Los Angeles, was held that evening with Bishop Block of California, Miss Rebekah Hibbard of Pasadena and President Jacobsen of Los Angeles City College, the speakers.

During the business sessions many topics of Church concern were discussed by various leaders, including youth, rural work, affairs of the national Church. Representing the National Council at the synod were the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, west coast representative, and Mr. Robert Jordan who conducted meeting on radio and publicity plans.

CHURCHMEN CONDEMN MOVIE

New York:—A large number of Episcopalians are among the 297 civic leaders to condemn the motion picture The Iron Curtain by asserting that the film increases "the atmosphere of hysteria leading us down the road to war." They also declare that the movie is a "violation of the United Nations' declaration against war propaganda and a grave threat to our own security through its incitement to war."

Episcopalians whose names appear on the release are Bishop Lane Barton of Eastern Oregon; Bishop Haines of Iowa; Bishop Walker of Atlanta; Bishop Moulton, retired bishop of Utah and Bishop Parsons, retired bishop of California. Others of our Church on the long list are the Rev. Charles A. Ackley, rector of St. Mary's, New York; Dean John W. Day of Topeka, Kansas; Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley; the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action and Miss Mary van Kleeck of New York.

MELISHES ARE HONORED

Brooklyn, N. Y.:—An informal committee of more than 250 members of Holy Trinity Church sponsored a reception for the Rev. William Howard Melish and his son, the Rev. William H. Melish on May 22. The occasion marked the 50th anniversary of the ordination of Dr. Melish. The letter of invitation stated that "we are proud of the tradition of a free pulpit and a vital Christian faith which has marked the ministry of Dr. Melish and is now being carried on by our associate rector, the Rev. William Howard Melish."

In addition to parishioners, the reception was attended by a large number of clergy of the metropolitan area.

Wilmington, Del.:—The 250th anniversary of the building of Old Swedes Church was celebrated here on May 25th with a commemoration service. Following the service there was a reception in the parish house in honor of the Bishop of Upsala, Primate of Sweden, the Most Rev. Erling Eidem and Mrs. Eidem and the Bishop of Karlstad, the Rt. Rev. Arvid Runestam. The rector of the parish is the Rev. H. E. Hammond.

Spiritual Capital

WE HAVE just read a brochure describing the purpose and function of Seabury house, five and one half miles, or one dollar seventy-five cents taxi fare, from Greenwich, Connecticut. Seabury House is part of a project to establish a "national conference and hospitality center for the Episcopal Church." Considering the creaking facilities of Church Missions House in New York City, this is certainly a decent and respectable place. It will undoubtedly impress the national and interdenominational conferences held there. Missionaries on furlough are assured of a "comfortable home." The comfort is without question. The "home" may not be entirely consistent with the missionary idea. "Honored Guests" will no longer have to face the rigors of the housing shortage in Manhattan. Instead they will be able to repine in simple manor life "surrounded by the atmosphere of the Church."

This is not a small project. It has required the faith and risk of a number of people to bring their hopes to fruition. It is not a part of the National Council budget, but is protected by a separate corporation formed for that purpose. It is a property large enough to contain a sizable orchard, a lake for fishing and boating, a woods, sunken gardens (somewhat neglected), a swimming pool, a complete set of farm buildings for horses, cattle, and chickens, and a green house which keeps the main house filled with the homey touch of special yellow roses. The whole deal was a bargain. It is done. It is going to serve a worthy purpose, and many people who like to dabble in this sort of enterprise will find the financial welcome mat out for maintainance and repairs. The corporation provides the facilities—delicious food, J. P. Morgan's brother-in-law's library, and a double spring mattress and private shower at cost or less ($4.00 a day per person). We hope your turn will come. There seems to be no doubt the project will succeed.

It is a bit early to compare this adventure of the Church leaders with other efforts of national policy —namely in the field of education and social action, but unless some similar zeal soon becomes apparent in as concrete a form elsewhere it will hardly be fitting to claim Seabury House, as they do, as "the spiritual capital of the Church." If the influence of the "atmosphere" of a country estate is going to gain a reputation for the Church of non-commitment on national and international political and economic issues, then we had better keep Seabury House in the "quiet rolling hills of Connecticut" as a hideaway from the battlelines for sleeping and resting. A "spiritual capital" is not well associated with a "certain amount of property owned by a corporation at a specified time" (Funk and Wagnalls). It is better identified as the seat of the government of the Holy Spirit. The peace of the Seabury House setting will make this difficult, but the "peace" of Pentecost must reign there.

Moreover the brochure claims that as rich traditions and memorials to bishops gather there "Seabury House will become to the American Church, something, at least, what Lambeth is to the Church of England." We are told that Lambeth Palace with all its rich tradition is only partly occupied because it is impossible to maintain it. We do not need any more dead weight on the Christian community. It needs to travel light and fast today. The only sentiment worthy of Christian tradition is that which emanates from the forthright decisions of its councils when Christ's principles of love and justice are being flaunted. This spot for Seabury House in a continuing history of world pride and prejudice might earn the prominence of Lambeth's good name and even surpass it as a memorial to bishops and all the Communion of Saints. We earnestly pray that this opportunity will not be overwhelmed by the Tory descendants and surroundings of Connecticut's Samuel Seabury.

"QUOTES"

A GOOD DEAL that we read would seem to indicate that the Church of the past was in some way inadequate for people of the present. I cannot help feeling that the people of the present are somewhat inadequate for the treasure they have inherited. An organization which has produced such children of God as the Church has produced in every generation can still produce their like, if it can find the material out of which saints are developed. The difficulty today is that the age is not interested in producing saints but is concerned in solving problems, whereas Jesus Christ was not disposed to solve problematical mysteries, but to make saints out of all sorts of queer materials.

Open Letter from China

IT IS only too apparent where the American Churches stand in the present conflict in China. Through conferences, books and periodicals, speeches by many missionaries, mission board secretaries and politicians, a large part of American Christianity has been committed to support of the present American policy of helping Chiang Kai-shek. As Christians we shudder to think of the consequences of that policy. It means obstruction of the coalition government and the upholding of an admittedly corrupt and ruthless one. It means continuation of a civil war aimed at suppressing the peasants who need the long overdue land reforms which have been instituted in the liberated areas of China. It means economic deterioration and sub-human standard of living for almost all Chinese who are not high Kuomintang officials.

But what concerns us most is the growing suspicion and enmity toward the Church on the part of the Chinese people, especially youth, as a result of the political line on China that Church leaders have taken, both in America and in China. To many Chinese, Christianity is today an "American religion" and an agent of "American imperialism."

We print this week (page three) a letter from a group of Chinese Church leaders who plead with us for discernment and cooperation. It is not a call for food and clothing. It is a call for genuine Christian goodwill and considerateness in order that we may not cause them still greater embarassment.

We will do well prayerfully to consider their plea. And having so considered it, THE WITNESS would welcome expressions from readers on this important but neglected issue.

Do you agree that the mixing-up of our "missionary frontiers" with the "American frontiers" is creating an embarrassing situation for our fellow Christians in China?

What do you think should be the policy of missionary boards regarding work in China?

Should missions in China be limited to areas under Kuomintang control?

Do you think that the open letter of the fifteen Chinese Christians is justified?

We hope that there will be a sufficient number of replies from our readers to enable us to digest the contributions and publish them as an article, thus further stimulating thinking on a most vital topic.

Travels of a Gargoyle

by Thomas V. Barrett

Director of College Work of the National Council

WHEN I left Fermenting I went westward to Pompton where I was to address the Loganberry Club at the local college. I was greeted by the Rev. Dr. Chrysostom Greatvoice. The Rev. Dr. was a small man, sleek as an otter only more handsome. He looked like a vest-pocket edition of Stettinius.

"Awfully glad to see you, old fellow" he boomed in a voice that flowed all around the station and then wandered off into the baggage room. "Have you had lunch?"

Four innocent bystanders said "Yes," and I said "No." My voice squeaked.

"We'll run over to the club," Greatvoice said. "The food here is abominable."

He continued talking as he led me to an immaculate Oldsmobile.

"Awfully nice of you to come, old fellow. Gerald, who has charge of our student work, will meet us after lunch. Sorry I can't be with you this afternoon, but I always spend Saturday afternoon putting the final touches on my sermon."

"It's good of you to meet me," I said feeling guilty about keeping Greatvoice from his sermon.

"Not at all, not at all," he purred, throwing his chest-tones into the back of the car where they died slowly on the seat cushions. "Glad to have this chance to chat. I'm afraid I won't see you much later on. Gerald has planned a dinner. Wish I could come but I always retire soon after supper on Saturday. Like to relax before the Sunday labors. And on Sunday afternoons I'm so exhausted I usually go to my room for a rest." He paused and added. "Then I begin on next Sunday's sermon."

"When do you find time to make calls?" I asked.

"I only call on the sick," Greatvoice said. "I told my people if they wanted good sermons on Sunday they mustn't expect to see me at afternoon tea. Preaching takes a great deal out of me. It's very enervating, don't you think?"

He continued speaking without waiting to find out what I thought.

"Of course I always refuse to see anyone before the service. I need at least an hour of quiet before taking the pulpit. I've had my study soundproofed; the choir boys make so much noise."

I thought I'd better take his mind off enervating thoughts.

"This is a fine car," I said.

"Yes," crooned Greatvoice, "but I really shouldn't drive; it's hard on my nerves."

"Same here," I stuttered as we toyed with a pedestrian.

"Have you tried sauerkraut juice? Absolutely wonderful for nerves. I take a glass every morning; with wheat germ. Well, here's the Club."

We had a good lunch except that Greatvoice insisted on selecting my food. He bought me milk instead of coffee, for my nerves, and made me eat a salad so full of vitamins I couldn't taste anything else. I never realized before how enervated you can get on the grass-root level. Operating on the national level you kind of forget the vitamin needs of the clergy in their over-all work.

"It's this continual pressure," Greatvoice trumpeted, listening for the echo to bounce off the chandelier in the billiard room; "I tell you, I enter the pulpit with great humility in these days; in fear and trembling. What have I to say in these days of stress, I ask myself; what can any of us say?" He ate two vitamin pills and found sufficient energy to say something.

"Don't you find yourself empty? Spiritually empty in these trying days? I confess, after my preaching I am worn out; nervously I mean. I always take a shower after the service. We had one installed next to the sacristy."

I apologized for not taking more showers after services. "Usually have to catch a train," I mumbled through my assorted vitamins.

"My psychiatrist says it's one of the best ways to release nervous tension. But then, in your work, you probably do not feel that constant strain."

I slumped in my chair till my chin rested on the table, and tried hard to get some tension in my stomach. Made me feel inferior, not having any. I couldn't even tense myself enough for a hot shower.

Greatvoice gave me some advice on how to prepare a sermon. He said it's an art to know what people want to hear, and a science to deliver a sermon so they'll hear it. The best way is to cut out clippings and quotations for years and years, and file them away with cross-references and indexes so you'll always know how to find the stuff you want; and then when you get your three points, why there's your index and your cross-references and it's no trouble at all to find just what you're after. The illustrations are windows in the sermon, he told me. People can look right through and know just what you're talking about.

THE Rev. Dr. left me at the hotel while he went to put some final windows in his sermon. I bought a comic book and a magazine on Model Railroads and started a file of quotations and clippings. Made a fancy index too, but it was enervating work, so I took two showers and had Room Service send up some warm milk and Melba toast. Then I practiced up my voice in front of a mirror. It got more and more resonant and I threw it all over the place until some of it wandered into the next room, and the occupant told me to shut up. Didn't realize the tension I was under.

Next morning I learned how to get exhausted on the local level. Greatvoice looked elegant in the pulpit. Before he began to preach he turned his face sideways, and somebody turned a pretty violet light on it; right on his face. Then he closed his eyes. I guess he was wondering what he would say in times like these. You could tell he was taut as a drumhead.

The sermon was good. It was practically all windows, with very little wall, and at first I didn't see how it could stand up at all. But after a while I just sat and watched the chest-tones float up into the rafters, and never thought another thing about the wall space. At the end of the sermon Greatvoice knelt down while the lighting changed from violet to amber.

I didn't see him again. He went from his shower to his bedroom through an underground passageway, Gerald told me, so he wouldn't catch cold when his post-sermon resistance was low. I went back to the hotel and put more windows in my Loganberry Club speech. After I had it pretty transparent I rested, and opened my Bible to relieve the nervous tension piling up inside me. Struck the wrong passage again.

"Enter into the rock and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the Lord and for the glory of His majesty. The lofty looks of man shall be humbled and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. . . ."

That kind of preaching would never fill our churches. Too flaccid. Probably not enough windows; or else Isaiah hadn't learned to use his voice.

I looked sideways into the mirror and practiced reciting the Athanasian creed. I wasn't quite as handsome as Dr. Greatvoice but I was pretty impressive—on the mirror level, so to speak. Then I called Room Service and sent my rich baritone vibrating over, and over the wire,

"I'm feeling terribly tense. Would you kindly send up a double order of sauerkraut juice?"

Lead or Rule

By
PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

TWO farmers had hired hands. Both farmers went to the meeting of the state Grange leaving their farms in charge of their hired men. One farmer left everything as if he was there and trusted his hired man to work faithfully. The other did not trust his hired man at all. He left a list of just what to do and he locked up his house to prevent anything being stolen.

When they returned home after two days both farms were in excellent order because one hired man wouldn't fail to do his work and the other couldn't.

Which farmer was treating his help most nearly the way God treats us? Which was a leader and which a ruler?

Now of course there are risks in both methods. A person trusted sometimes betrays the trust. But only as there is trust can real goodness be shown. A person who is not trusted may be stunted in spirit and is tempted to try to thwart the rules imposed on him.

Clearly the reign of God is that of a leader, like the first farmer, seeking to draw us out in response to his love for us. His every act is to stir our affection rather than our conformity.

When will we realize what joy there is in his service and pledge him our full allegiance?

CATHOLICITY AND ORTHODOXY

HERE are two words that have traded meanings in some accepted uses. The first originally meant "universal" but is now generally applied to the western idea of Christianity. The western mind is rather legal; and laws, like lies, seem to have to multiply to survive. The extraordinary mass of legislation about belief and surmise now in force in many parts of western Christian thought makes the word "orthodox" more fitting.

Orthodox means "right teaching." In view of the autonomy of the Eastern churches, perhaps Catholic is a term more deserved by them than by some of us. (Of course I am referring here to restricted usages, such as official names of the eastern and western Churches. I am not discussing the quite as common use of referring to all Churches with apostolic doctrine and succession as Catholic.)

Sometimes our catholicity overcomes our orthodoxy, and I honestly feel this is cause for joy and hope. I am surprised therefore that no more interest was taken in our Church press over the acquisition of two million more members of the Anglican Communion on April 5. The members of the independent church in the Philippines had received friendship and some influence from the Unitarians. Yet, with due precaution and without undue inquisitions three missionary bishops of our church gave them our orders—a treasure they felt too valuable to preserve for our Church only. (The members of the Agilpayan Church are not now Protestant Episcopalians—numerically they would swamp us.)

Rome's early greatness was generated by her free spirit of Catholicity: her hospitality even to suspected heretics, and, later, her missionary zeal. Orthodoxy came later. And those who fear the orthodoxy of these new Anglicans need not fear for long; orthodoxy will come. It always has in sufficiency to apostolic Churches.

Religion and Health

By

HAL M. WELLS

Chaplain at State Hospital, Philadelphia

I RECENTLY heard a man say: "Once a person is put in a mental institution he stays there." I paused to wonder if this could possibly represent a Christian attitude toward mental illness. I then wondered if his statement were true or false. Upon questioning many people of my acquaintance I made the discovery that most of them felt his words to be true; yet it seemed in direct contradiction to many passages in the Bible where Jesus cured and the disciples, thru the grace of God, healed. It would seem this man had a singular lack of faith in the grace of God and the ability of modern medicine. Let us examine the facts and see about this man's statement.

We are well aware that the picture of mental illness in our country is not a good one but we must question any statement of futility in regard to it if we are to live in Christian hope. We know, for example, that there were over 482 private and public hospitals for the care of mentally ill people in the year 1940 and that for the same year 3.6 persons per 1000 population were living within the confines of these hospitals. It also startles us to know that there were more psychiatric patients than all those in other types of hospitals combined. If we were to take these facts alone they would indeed be pessimistic. We must, however, look further and ask what happens to the person who enters the mental hospital—does he remain there, if he leaves does he always return?

We can examine the figures from a typical mental institution, The Warren State Hospital, Warren, Pa. Let us consider all the patients who were admitted to that hospital during the years 1930-32. In the following three years 58 per cent of these people were discharged from the hospital back to their regular community living. Of all the patients admitted during the years 1940-42 we find that in the following three years 70 per cent were discharged from the hospital to resume their normal living. These are typical statistics for mental institutions.

These figures tell us several things. First of all they tell us that the greater percentage of people paced in mental institutions return to their homes within a three year period. It also points out that the treatment for the mentally ill is steadily improving through the years. This should lead us to give up any pessimistic ideas we may have toward these people's recovery.

In view of this the Christian has a certain obligation to his fellowman. We must banish the idea that our friend who is in a mental hospital is cast into the outer darkness and place in its stead something else. We should try to be the bridge between his life in the hospital and what he knew formerly. This we can do by letting the person know we haven't forgotten him—by writing him, visiting him. We too can play a part in the role of healing.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE "Bill to protect the United States against Un-American and subversive activities," now before Congress, conceivably could be used to restrict the activities of others besides Communists and so-called "fellow-travellers." It would not be the first time that restrictive legislation has boomeranged.

Definitions of "subversive activities" set forth in section 3 of this Mundt-Nixon Bill (H.R. 5852) include:

> "the extent to which its views and policies are the same as those of such foreign government or foreign organization."
> "the extent to which it reports to such foreign government or foreign organization or to its representatives."
> "the extent to which its members or leaders are subject to or recognize the disciplinary power of such foreign government or foreign organization or its representatives."
> "the extent to which its members consider the allegiance they owe to the United States as subordinate to their obligations to such foreign government or foreign organization."

Under the heading of "Certain Prohibited Acts," Section 4 of the Mundt-Nixon Bill states that:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person—
> "(1) To attempt in any manner to establish in the United States a totalitarian dictatorship the direction and control of which is vested in, or exercised by or under the domination or control of, any foreign government, foreign organization, or foreign individual;
> "(2) To perform or attempt to perform any act with intent to facilitate or aid in bringing about the establishment in the United States of such a totalitarian dictatorship;
> "(3) Actively to participate in the management, direction, or supervision of any movement to establish in the United States such a totalitarian dictatorship."

THE Vatican is a sovereign state. It is governed by laws of its own making. It has its own flag, prints its own postage stamps, mints its own coins, maintains its own police force. The Lateran Agreement of March 26, 1947, which is an integral part of the constitution of Italy, declares that "The State and the Catholic Church are each in its own order independent and sovereign."

There are Protestants in the United States who are firmly convinced that the Roman Catholic Church, directed by the sovereign Vatican State, would establish a totalitarian dictatorship here if it could. Suppose one of these Protestants was elected President of the United States—a good Baptist, let us say, since they are known to feel particularly strongly on this subject. Then imagine this President appointing a man who shares his view, perhaps a Southern Baptist who is also a member of the Ku Klux Klan to the office of Attorney General. Under the broad language of the proposed Bill, this one man will determine whether any person or organization is or is not "Loyal."

So maybe he'd call in, say, Cardinal Spellman, and ask him if he held "views and policies" of a foreign government; ask him if he and others of his organization "report to a foreign government" and "recognize the disciplinary power of such foreign government" and "the extent to which its members consider allegiance they owe to the United States as subordinate to their obligations to such foreign government or foreign organization."

Could be! After all the Nazis passed laws in 1933 aimed at outlawing all organizations "destined for the advancement of Communist endeavors." It wasn't long before these laws were used to outlaw "other endeavors found by the Reich Minister of the Interior to be hostile to the people and the State." (Reichsgesetzblatt, 1, 479, July 14, 1933.)

And "other endeavors" soon meant any and all critical of Hitler, including Protestant ministers, Roman Catholic priests—any considered enemies of the fascists.

The Nazi laws of 1933 to 1941 are remarkably similar to this Mundt-Nixon Bill which may become the law of the United States. Does it mean that we are going to legally install fascism in the United States?

Could be!

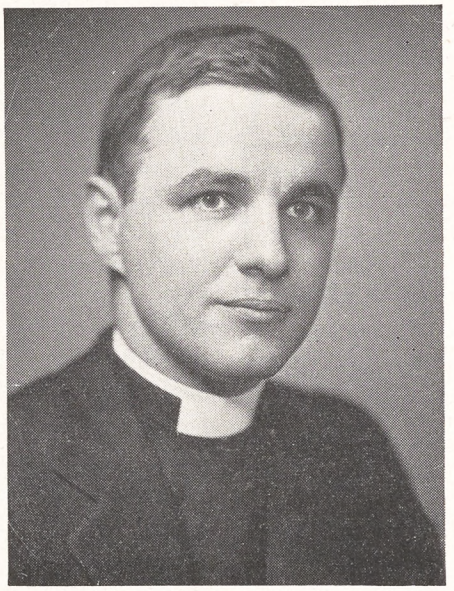
Foreign Policy Is Determined By Military Leaders

So Declare Delegates Who Made Pilgrimage To Washington and to the United Nations

Portland, Ore.:—War is not imminent, but a serious incident could start hostilities, according to Peace Train delegates who returned here from Washington, D. C., and Lake Success, N. Y. The Peace Train comprised a group of churchmen from the Pacific coast.

Other findings of the group are that the United States has a militaristic foreign policy; governmental confusion is general; and means to achieve a peaceful world have not yet been exhausted.



The churchmen's statement said: "Apparently the foreign policy of our government is largely determined by the military, because the policy is based on the premise that the only language Russia really understands is the language of military power; therefore, the only answer the government sees to the present world situation is added military force. There is general confusion, in that basic solutions are difficult to find because the crisis is in the nature of a world-wide upheaval, with deep social and economic changes, and there is a growing lack of cooperation between the state department and Congress."

Reasons for this lack of cooperation, according to the churchmen: are: "The political rift between a Democratic administration and a Republican Congress; secrecy on the part of the administration and a Republican Congress; secrecy on the part of the administration as to the real nature and extent of the emergency; the appointment of more and more military men for positions that should be held by creative civilians; conflicting proposals by the military which reveal confusion in their departments and cause confusion in Congress and in the public mind."

The group said that "a sense of helplessness grips many Congressmen who want peace but may vote for the draft, not because of their own convictions or that of their constituents, but because of heavy pressure through the undue and one-sided propaganda from the departments of state and defense."

Mr. Krause Ordained

New York:—The following men were ordained to the diaconate at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine by Bishop Gilbert on May 23rd: W. I. Densmore of St. Peter's School, Peekskill; W. A. Hendricks of Christ Church, Poughkeepsie; T. J. Jones of St. Philip's, Anacostia, Md.; C. E. Karsten Jr. of St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; R. E. Moore of the Chapel of the Incarnation, New York City; H. J. Nargesian, student at the General Seminary; R. E. Sommers of All Saints', Beverly Hills, Cal.

Robert Hatch, dean of the Cathedral Church of St. John, Wilmington, becomes the rector of St. John's, Waterbury, on September first Interest was added to the service by the ordination also of Mr. William Krause, who for many years was in charge of the Bible and Prayer Book division of the Oxford University Press. Here is the story of a man who has the good sense not to quit. He is seventy years of age. He went to public schools until the age of thirteen when he went to work. However he continued his education by going to night school and later night classes at a university. In 1899 he went to work for the Oxford Press as a shipping clerk. He became the head of one of its most important departments and also the secretary of the company, a position he has continued to hold though he retired from active business two years ago.

He has served the Church as a layreader for fifty years, thirty-five of them at St. James' Church, Fordham, New York City. He has prepared himself for ordination since his retirement, under the direction of the Rev. Arthur Litchfield, the rector. The Rev. William Krause will continue on the staff of St. James'. During the following year he will continue his studies in anticipation of being ordained priest a year hence.

Music Conference

Los Angeles, Cal.:—A conference on the new Hymnal was held at St. James' Church here, May 18th, sponsored by the diocesan music commission. The leader was the Rev. Arthur W. G. Farlander, rector at Santa Rosa, and a member of the national commission on the Hymnal. One of the features was a service of congregational hymn-singing, led by Mr. Farlander.

Guest Speakers

Hastings, Neb.:—The newly consecrated bishop of Wyoming, J. Wilson Hunter, and the Rev. John S. Higgins of Gethsemane, Minneapolis, were the headliners at the dinner held in connection with the convention of the diocese of Nebraska, meeting here. Bishop Brinker in his convention address declared that there have been extensive improvement in the financial condition of the parishes and missions. He also urged a vigorous follow-through in the campaign of evangelism.

Joins Orthodox

Moscow (RNS): — A tentative agreement under which the Syrian Church of Malabar, India, will become a member of the Eastern Orthodox Church and the first Orthodox Church in India, has been announced here. The news has added interest due to the fact that the Indian Church became a member of the World Council of Churches last year.

Goes to Court

Manila (RNS):—The minority faction of the Philippine Independent (Aglipayan) Church has appealed to the Philippine Supreme Court to set aside a decision holding that the majority faction, headed by Supreme Bishop Isabelo de los Reyes, Jr., is the true Church. The minority charges that by accepting consecration from the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S., Bishop de los Reyes and his followers lost the right to claim they constitute a Philippine Church.

Mrs. Miller Dies

Berkeley, Cal.:—Mrs. Muriel Hallett Miller, wife of Prof. Randolph Crump Miller of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, died of polio on May 13. In addition to her husband she leaves four daughters, ages, eight, six, four and one and a half.

Youth Meeting

Florence, S. C.:—The Rev. Charles E. Fish of the division of youth of the National Council was the headliner at a convention of the young people of the diocese of South Carolina, meeting here at St. John's. Following his keynote address the 165 delegates divided into eight groups led by clergy of the diocese, to discuss evangelism, the world situation, relationship of Church and state, belief and conduct, false Messiahs, the Church's influence in the world.

At a banquet, Bishop Thomas Carruthers made awards to various parish societies for outstanding achievements.

Founder's Day

Lawrenceville, Va.: — St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute recently had a three-day celebration honoring the founder, the Rev. James Solomon Russell. It marked the 60th anniversary of this noted school which is dedicated to the advancement of learning and the search for truth. Speakers included President Horace Mann Bond of Lincoln University; Bishop William A. Brown of Southern Virginia, the president of the board of trustees; the Rev. J. Alvin Russell, who succeeded his father as president of the Institute; Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee.

Members of the alumni association presented $25,000 to be added to the library fund to be used to erect a library in honor of the founder.

Conversion Needed

Lexington, Ky.:—Bishop William R. Moody told the convention of the diocese of Lexington that the great need of our day is for a "converted Church." He stated that the "Church is not converted and the world is not chastened" and said that he hopes that out of the Lambeth Conference and the assembly of the World Council of Churches "will come the unmistakable assertion that there are human rights which transcend national boundaries, and that our present system of warlike, competing and mutually suspicious nationalism is un-Christian and therefore wrong."

He called upon the Churches to lead the way in the control of atomic energy, declaring that "if the Churches do not take the leadership in this, God will find others to take it. World control of atomic power is going to be had. The only choice we have, really, is whether we shall have it now through the free association of enlightened men, or have it forced upon us in the ashes of our present world."

Madson Improves

Albany, Ga.:—The condition of the Rev. G. Ralph Madson, critically injured in an auto accident, continues to show slow but steady improvement. His doctors have now said that he is out of danger and an ultimate complete recovery is practically assured.

Student Center

Charlestown, W. Va.:—A plan to strengthen the work of the Church at the state university at Morgantown, involving the erection of a new church and student center in connection with Trinity Church, was announced at the council of the diocese, meeting here at Zion Church. It will cost about $200,000.
