STORY OF THE WEEK

The Epiphany, Washington, Has Full Parish Program

Located in Downtown Area It Is Scene For Many Notable Events

★ On a recent Sunday over eleven hundred members and friends came together at the 11 o'clock hour in the Church of the Epiphany in downtown Washington for a service of rededication and thanksgiving, which marked the completion of a $150,000 project of redecoration and rehabilitation. Also at this service the new nave lanterns, the work of the Studios of George L. Payne, were dedicated in loving memory of the late Dr. Charles W. Sheerin, rector until his death in 1948.

Last year work on the church offices, the exterior of the church and parish house, and gymnasium had been completed. This year has seen the redecoration of the various rooms of the parish house, the remodeling of the kitchen with new equipment and a modern cafeteria line, the purchase of other equipment throughout the parish house, the installation of many fire safeguards, the rewiring of both church and parish house and other improvements.

Particularly outstanding in the new decor of the church is the decoration of the chancel ceiling and sanctuary wall done by Robert M. Berg of St. James Kiln, St. Paul, Minnesota. Mr. Berg, who is one of the most talented stained glass artists in the middle west, forsook his chief medium to undertake the decoration of the church interior. The decor of the chancel ceiling was inspired by the words of the canticle "Benedicite, Omnia Opera Domini,"—"O all ye works of the Lord, bless ye the Lord". In each of the thirty-two panels of the ceiling, a main figure suggested by the Benedicite is set against a background of small stars, flames, flowers, butterflies, and crosses; altogether, from the tiny figures to the large figures in the centers of the panels, there are over two thousand objects in the ceiling, but far from giving a crowded or cluttered appearance, they present a magnificent portrayal of "O all ye works of the Lord, bless ye the Lord!"

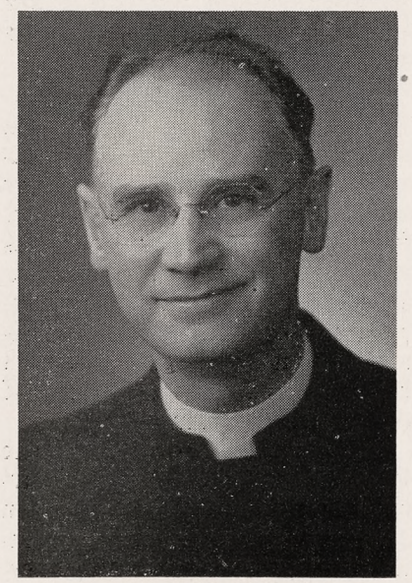
In the sanctuary on either side of the altar, reredos, and the great window on the Incarnation, the decoration is in the form of a vine whose branches circle outward as the vine winds itself up the wall, and symbols and emblems, eight on either side, are unobtrusively integrated into the pattern of the vine in the circular areas formed by the branches. On the right side are Old Testament symbols foretelling the coming of Christ, and on the other side, symbols showing the work of Christ. The artist has avoided any stereotyped approach to the subject of symbols, and the entire wall, treated with great imagination, is of exquisite beauty.

A Busy Parish

It was not age and obsolescense alone that dictated the necessity of thorough-going rehabilitation and redecoration; an even greater factor was the "wear-and-tear" of constant use, for Epiphany is one of the busiest parishes in the country.

The church is located "where cross the crowded ways of life" in the heart of downtown Washington at 1317 G Street, N. W. Far from being set in the midst of the homes of its people, it is surrounded on all sides by vast government buildings, department stores, banks, office buildings, shops and hotels. All but a very few of the churches which were in what is now the downtown area have long since moved to residential sections, but Epiphany has been "doing business at the same stand" since 1844. This location in the heart of the government and business district governs to a great extent the character of its ministry, and over the years it has become a kind of spiritual center for downtown Washington. Open every day, it has been estimated from "spot checks" that the doors of this church are opened no less than 90,000 times a year to admit people coming in for their private devotions, and it is a rare moment indeed when no one is in the church for that purpose.

Many Meetings



Then too, its large parish house facilities offer a convenient meeting place, and last year no less than 654 meetings apart from its own parish activities were held there. It is not unusual of an evening to have half dozen activites being carried on simultaneously, ranging from a basketball game to a meeting of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Working closely with the Washington Federation of Churches,Epiphany is the downtown center for almost all interdenominational services, and in connection with the recent city-wide preaching mission, Epiphany was the scene of the daily conferences for ministers, for Bible lectures, and for noonday services, at which Dr. Robert McCracken of Riverside Church, New York, was preacher and to which an average of 1300 people came each day for the week.

Noted Preachers

One of the most gratefully received contributions to the downtown community, and indeed to the whole city, is the traditional series of noonday Lenten services. Some of the nation's greatest preachers come to Epiphany's pulpit for these services, among them Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, Dr. Joseph Sizoo, Bishop Angus Dun, Bishop Emrich, Dr. Elmer Homrighausen, Dr. Samuel Shoemaker, and Dr. John S. Higgins, and next Lent, Bishop Michael Coleman of Canada and Dr. George Buttrick are coming. In a church that seats 1325 people, the average attendance last Lent was 914, and not a few services have had standees and overflows into the parish house rooms. Various women's groups of the parish serve a cafeteria lunch following the service. On Good Friday the Lenten services reach their climax in a great Three-Hour service with the rector and associate alternating in the addresses. As careful a count as possible was kept of the attendance last Lent, the total reaching a little over 7500. For most of the three hours a queue was lined up along G Street waiting to come in.

THE REV. LELAND STARK
The Rector of The Epiphany

Distinct Parish Life

Then too, Epiphany has also its own distinct parish life. Its communicant membership of 1100 is a cross-section of the Christian family, including people on every economic level. Since only a half-dozen of its members live within normal geographic bounds, virtually all of its people must travel a considerable distance to church; yet so tenacious is the loyalty of its members that Epiphany is among the best attended Episcopal churches in America. Statistics reveal that while most churches cannot count on more than 30% of their communicant strength as an average attendance on Sunday, on more than half the Sundays of the year the total attendance at Epiphany's three morning and evening services actually exceeds 100% of its communicant strength, the average attendance at the 11 o'clock hour being over nine hundred. Its excellent choir under the direction of Mr. Adolf Torovsky, choirmaster and organist for thirty years, is regarded as one of the country's best and plays no small part in keeping the attendance figures high. As it has also been in the past, the emphasis of its worship, preaching, and teaching is evangelical in character.

Many Organizations

While its downtown location is in most ways a distinct advantage, making it a strategic center for the Church's work in the heart of the nation's capital, it is a handicap in the matter of Sunday School enrollment. But its Sunday School, while not large, is an important part of its program. Fifteen organizations for men, women, and youth make possible a well-rounded program of activity. Its people are missionary minded and the parish has regularly contributed at least 10% of the diocesan budget. The rector, associate rector, a part-time assistant, three secretaries, a parish caller, and three on the janitorial corps make up the staff. Two homes for the aged are also maintained by the parish.

Noted Rectors

Some of its rectors have been among the great presbyters of the Episcopal Church. Dr. Randolph Harrison McKim at the turn of the century was a noted author and preacher and was a kind of "Bishop Oxnam" of his day. Dr. James Freeman, who succeeded him in 1920, was rector but for two years when he resigned to become Bishop of Washington. Then came Dr. Ze-Barney Phillips, who was one of the best-known and best-loved presbyters of his day, being elected President of the House of Deputies in General Convention for five successive terms; he was the rector until 1942 and was also chaplain of the United States Senate. He was succeeded by the late Dr. Charles W. Sheerin, who resigned from the vice presidency of the National Council in 1942 to become Epiphany's rector; his untimely death in 1948 took one of the great leaders from the ranks of the Church militant. The present rector, coming in 1948 from the deanship of Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, is the Rev. Leland Stark. The associate rector is the Rev. Warren E. Mace.

The character and constituency of Epiphany have changed no little over the course of its 106-year-old history, but its people believe that, under God, its greatest years of service to Christ and his cause still lie ahead.

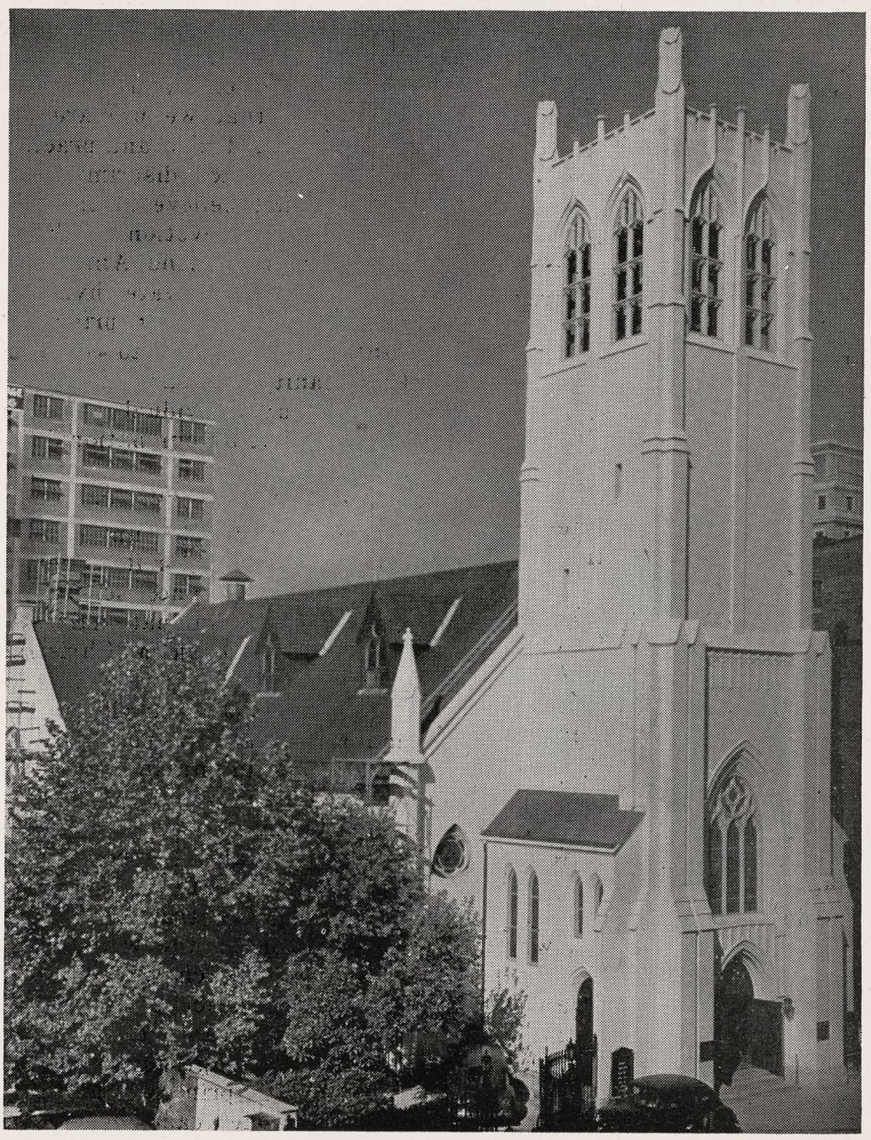
Post Christmas Thoughts— It's Me, Oh Lord

BY
HELEN MEARS
Author of "Mirror for Americans: Japan"



★ Americans, this Christmas, were in a particularly devout mood. The constant threat of rapidly approaching war, the incessant propaganda appeals to fear and suspicion, have rasped on our nerves to such a degree that there was a general and wide-spread longing for reassurance and hope. The Christian Church—by definition, and by the teachings of Christ—symbolizes the universal desire for peace and good will. This year perhaps more than ever before in modern times, Americans flocked to their churches during the Christmas season, to seek reassurance and guidance.

Many, perhaps most of these millions of communicants, were concerned chiefly with personal problems, anxieties, guilts and longings for personal improvement. The Church's chief concern is the individual, his spiritual growth and fulfillment. Nonetheless the Church today takes a public position on many social problems, and many problems of international relations. Since today the threat of war is the major preoccupation of everybody is seems certain that many of those who attended Christmas services hoped to hear some word of guidance as to how they, as professing Christians, in a nation which calls itself Christian, could actively work for peace. How did the Church answer this appeal?

On Christmas Eve, I went to a midnight service in an Episcopal Church in Connecticut. It was a large church and it was over-flowing with people who came long before the service began and who participated throughout with an emotional fervor which made an atmosphere of deeply felt dedication. The service was beautiful, the ritual impressive, the choir melodious, and the congregation were invited to participate in the singing of many of the lovliest carols, and did so with full voice and emotional fervor. It was an occasion of genuinely felt spiritual unity—the people, I believe, were ready for active participation in a concerted program of the Christian Churches for peace and against war.

Did the Church offer this guidance? On the contrary, it seemed to direct this dedicated emotion not toward peace, but toward war; not toward universality but toward nationalism; not toward national self-criticism but toward national justification.

In the procession, among the choir and acolytes and priests, marched several young men in the uniform of the U S army and navy, carrying the U S flag among the church banners. Regardless of the intention the presence of these military uniforms and this flag sanctified our armed forces, and our national government's foreign policies. In a prayer devoted to the prevailing international tension the rector prayed that God would "change the minds and hearts of our enemies." Not our own minds and hearts—the minds and hearts of those we call our "enemies." Again, regardless of the intention, the implication was that we were right, and the "enemy" was wrong, and our government was justified in opposing him by military force, and the Church sanctified this policy.

Christ said: " . . . Love your enemies."

Christ said: " . . . turn the other cheek."

Christ said: " . . . let him have thy cloak also."

Americans today are concerned, and rightly concerned, about the preservation of Western and Christian values. How strange that we fail to see that no one but a professing Christian can possibly injure the cause of Christianity. Why can't we see that it is those who profess Christianity while defying its principles in practice—and on a national level—who are really the enemies of Christianity.

First Christians

The first Christians were revolutionaries, rebels who were ready to die for their faith. Can't we see that there is considerable difference between dieing as an individual opposing the evil of one's own society, and dieing as a conscript soldier in a national army designed to impose our ideas on others by military might?

Western civilization today seems to have its back against the wall. The reason for this is not that the world outside our borders is full of Godless, ruthless, aggressive peoples who hate us and wish us harm. The reason is that the Christian Church —which represents the collective conscience of a Christian nation—has almost wholly forgotten what its precepts and principles are. It has forgotten that the "enemy" is violence, and greed, and hate—wherever they are—and has identified itself with a national government and a national policy which declares that these evils exist only among our "enemies." This means that today the Christian Church working in foreign lands appears to be as much a representative of a foreign power as does the Communist party. This idea seems strange and shocking to most Americans. But this is because we refuse to listen to the point of view of other peoples. As professing Christians we have such faith in the nobility of the principles expressed by Christ we forget that we have not ourselves learned to put these noble principles into practice in our international relations. Peoples abroad who hear us express admiration for peace, self-abnegation, and brotherhood note that we prepare for war, talk boastfully, and practice hatred and race discrimination and can not believe in the sincerity of our devotion to Christian principles. And Americans who in their private lives do practice the Christian principles (and many do) fail to see that Christianity abroad is tested not by our individual behavior at home, but by our national behavior abroad.

Universal Church

Christianity is universal—above all nations, or it is merely a tool (even if unconscious) of nationalism. No national flag has any place in a Christian church.

The Christian Church can not endorse a national policy based on military might and not deny its Christian principles.

Americans, whether professing Christians or not, want peace. It is safe to say that this is equally true of all the other people of the world. The Christian Church proclaims a doctrine of peace and brotherhood. Why can't the Church have the courage to live up to its Christian principles and give some genuine leadership in a concrete program against war and for peace? The Church could take an unequivocal stand against war preparations. It could insist that our vast appropriations for war could be spent for peaceful projects all over the world to improve living conditions, establish schools, exchange national culture. It could encourage a program of non-cooperation with our current policies which are obviously militaristic.

The Christian Church should not forget its revolutionary background. Imagine the effect all over the world if the Christian Church began publicly, conspicuously and concretely to practice its principles. Doesn't it seem obvious that the force of the millions of Americans who profess Christianity could really work miracles IF they had the courage to do what we desire and what Christ taught.

THREE BISHOPS ELECTED THIS WEEK

★ Three bishops will be elected by the House of Bishops, meeting this week in El Paso. A successor to the late Bishop

BISHOP STONEY of New Mexico and Southwest Texas is host to the Bishops now meeting at El Paso

Stephen Clark will be elected for the district of Utah; another will be elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Bishop Atwill of North Dakota, who retired January 1st; the third will succeed Bishop Boynton, now suffragan of New York, as Bishop of Puerto Rico.

NATIONAL CANTERBURY ASSOCIATION

★ Seventy colleges in 36 states were represented by the 120 students who met at Cranbrook, Michigan, December 27-January 1, to organize the National Canterbury Association. The Rev. Roger Blanshard, director of college work of the National Council, gave inspiration and advice, but it was a student affair throughout. After setting up the organization by adopting a constitution, a statement was issued stating that the purpose of the association is "to provide an opportunity for students to receive the teachings and life of Christ through the faith and practice of the Episcopal Church and to witness in our colleges and universities to the lordship of Christ over the whole life of mankind."

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF STUDENTS

★ Opposition to loyalty oaths "and any other measures curtailing academic freedom" was voiced in a resolution adopted by delegates to the national assembly of the Student Christian Association Movement, meeting over the new year weekend at Oxford, Ohio. Chaplain James A. Pike of Columbia, a headliner, assured the 1,300 delegates from all parts of the country that "the Christian Church has survived many other crises in its history and will survive the present world strife."

Prof. Kirtley F. Mather of Harvard also struck a hopeful note by saying that the problems of the world can be solved by "men of intelligence and good will."

The Rev. Alexander Miller, a New Zealander, said that "America's great function could be to prove to the world that both bread and freedom can be provided together. He added that "the people of eastern Europe, China and Korea always take bread when it is a choice between freedom and bread. When people do not have their share they begin to believe they can live by bread alone."

Another Episcopalian to address the meeting was Jerry Voorhis, former Congressman and now a leader in the cooperative movement, who deplored the "monopolistic control" tendency in business and said that people "can begin at the neighborhood level by helping solve their own local economic problems, by vitalizing their local communities and by being informed and tolerant."

STOWE'S CLERICAL DIRECTORY

★ The new edition of Stowe's Clerical Directory has been distributed to subscribers, according to the announcement of the publisher, The Church Pension Fund. The Directory contains brief but comprehensive biographies of the 6,600 clergy and 142 deaconesses of the Episcopal Church. No other directory contains individual biographical material on the entire clergy group.

The directory is a triennial publication. The new edition, superseding the 1947 edition, is the 17th volume of clergy biographies since the first appeared in 1898 as Lloyd's Clerical Directory.

Biographical data have been obtained from the individual in each case and these include addresses, churches served and other offices, all principal dates, family data and important writings. In the relatively few cases where questionnaires have not been returned by the individual clergymen, the information as last reported is used, complemented from the up-to-date records of The Church Pension Fund. The new edition contains an unusually large number of "new names" reflecting the greater than average number of new ordinations and receptions in the three years since the 1947 edition went to press.

The book, which is $5, may be obtained from the Church Pension Fund, 20 Exchange Place, New York 5, N. Y.

CLASSIFICATION CHANGE IS URGED BY ACU

★ The House of Bishops, now meeting in El Paso, has received a proposal that it request the newly formed National Council of Churches not to list the Episcopal Church as "Protestant." The Rev. Albert J. DuBois, executive director of the American Church Union, revealed this in an address in Los Angeles on December 26. In press releases the Council states that it is composed of "29 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations." Father DuBose stated that the description should be "29 Protestant, Episcopal and Eastern Orthodox denominations."

BISHOP GRAY of Connecticut will report to the House of Bishops, now in session at El Paso, on plans for the Anglican Congress to be held in 1953 in Minneapolis

SEMINARIES ASK FOR SUPPORT

★ Presiding Bishop Henry Sherrill has appointed January 28th as theological education Sunday when offering will be taken in most churches for support of the seminaries. An increasing number of parishes, instead of an offering, include an item in their budgets for this purpose. In his message to the clergy Bishop Sherrill writes: "Our theological seminaries are of supreme importance to the Church, for they, in large measure, determine the calibre of our clergy. This is of practical significance to every layman. What of the conduct of the services in your parish? How was the sermon? What of the church school and the Christian education of your children? Strong seminaries make possible favorable answers. I trust that there will be a generous response."

PRAY FOR PEACE IN NEW YORK

★ Churches in the diocese of New York offered prayers for peace on December 31, with Bishop Donegan authorizing the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art the Father of all men upon earth, most heartily we pray that thou wilt deliver thy children from the cruelties of war and lead all nations into the way of peace. Teach us to put away all bitterness and misunderstanding, both in Church and state; that we, with all the brethren of the Son of Man, may draw together as one comity of peoples and dwell evermore in the fellowship of the Prince of Peace; who liveth and reigneth with thee, in the unity of the Holy Spirit, now and ever. Amen.

LICHTENBERGER TO SPEAK

★ Bishop-coadjutor-elect Arthur Lichtenberger of Missouri is to be a headliner at the convention of Texas, meeting in Galveston, January 19-22. The speaker at the annual dinner, to be held on the 22nd is to be the Rev. Louis F. Martin, rector of St. Andrew's, Fort Worth.

MELISH CASE GOES TO HIGH COURT

★ The congregation of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, and its rector, the Rev. John Howard Melish, have sent a petition to the Supreme Court asking that a writ of certiorari be granted to permit a review of the judgment of the New York state courts which imposed an injunction to enforce an ecclesiastical decision of Bishop James P. DeWolfe of Long Island, dissolving the pastoral relationship between Dr. Melish and the parish.

Their contention is that the imposition of a civil court injunction violated the principle of the separation of Church and state embodied in the first amendment of the federal constitution. The lower court ignored a specific provision in the canon law of the diocese of Long Island establishing as the punishment for failure to obey such an episcopal judgment loss of representation for a congregation in the diocesan convention. In the words of the petition for the writ of certiorari, "In these circumstances, the civil court had no power to grant an injunction compelling compliance with the bishop's judgment on pain of fine and imprisonment for contempt. For the constitution forbids state action by a civil court to use the coercive power of government to participate in the affairs of any religious organizations or groups. By the injunction herein granted, the court has effected a breach in the wall between Church and state erected by the constitution."

The petition quotes the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, former secretary of Yale University and former canon of Washington Cathedral, as declaring in his recently published three volume study "Church and State in the United States" (Harper, 1950) that the Melish Case "will be one of the most important cases in recent years involving Church-State relations."

The petition also quotes The Churchman as stating: "The canon law of the Protestant Episcopal Church sets a specific and comparatively mild penalty for a congregation that refuses to obey an episcopal judgment dissolving a pastoral relationship, namely, deprivation of representation in the diocesan convention. The reason for the mildness of this penalty lies in the respect which the Episcopal Church traditionally pays to the rights and relative importance of the congregation. In the 'Melish Case,' a lower court judge, oblivious to the long struggle for democracy in Church affairs that underlies our canon law, substituted for this mild penalty a drastic civil court injunction enforcing the congregation's compliance with the bishop's judgment upon pain of fine or imprisonment for contempt of court. The judge brushed aside the provisions of our canon law and substituted a penalty of his own choosing. Was not this a clear intrusion of the civil court into the realm of canon law in violation of the state and federal constitutions, both of which establish absolute separation of Church and state?"

The petition points out that since the beginning of the litigation in the lower courts a fundamental change in the relationship of the parties to the case has taken place. During the two years involved in the legal action, two annual meetings of the parish have occurred. Seven of the nine vestrymen who began the action in the lower courts have come to the end of their term of office and have been replaced by vestrymen elected by the majority of the parishioners who have steadily supported the rector and his son. The official corporation of the Church of the Holy Trinity which began the action, has now changed sides and is favoring the rector.

Can We Do Better?

WE have just entered the second half of the 20th Century and from this vantage point it may be profitable to look both backward and forward, to get our bearings in the fog and storm of the present era in which we are living.

The beginning of the 20th Century, we realize now, was in reality the near end of an epoch. Queen Victoria—symbol of the great Victorian Age—died just as the new century opened. Before the year ended, President McKinley—American symbol of the conservative era that saw the closing of the last domestic frontier—was assassinated. A great epoch died with them.

Three years later the new historical period came to birth with the outbreak of the Japanese-Russian War. Its significance was little recognized at the time. Throughout this first decade the American public seemed to feel that the world had outgrown war and the notion of automatic progress became the accepted philosophy. But as everyone now realizes, with the infallibility of hind-sight, the German Empire was building its strength for the first World War. In 1914 the holocaust broke out and our present era of militarism in the service of national industrial rivalries was launched. The Christian Church in this critical period showed little awareness of what was at stake. Pacifists were hounded from their pulpits and "Preachers present arms" became the motto. Not a pleasant recollection for us Christians today.

In the period between the two World Wars, however, religious leadership became more discerning and more courageous. Our own House of Bishops issued brave and penetrating statements on the abomination of war and the necessity of radical reformation of industry and trade.

The second World War is, perhaps, too near us in time to justify any attempt to evaluate the part that Christian leadership played. The depths of degradation into which the insane leadership of Nazi Germany plunged much of the world seemed to justify counter measures such as no earlier war had dreamed of. There was, however, a distinct moral advance in the way both Church and state recognized the rights of religious and philosophical pacifists. Some of the outstanding Christian leaders of America maintained openly their pacifist position and retained both their pulpits and their influence with their people and with the general public.

What of the Morrow?

WHAT shall the final half of this century be like? If we are to judge by the happenings of the past five years, the prospect is disheartening. The picture of the world at large is a savage one. Little Korea in ruins; bloody war spreading more widely every day; America arming to the teeth and getting rich in the process, with eyes shut to the question of how bills shall be paid; half the world living in a new culture created by revolutions; Russia calling for organized peace, but determined that a socialized half-world shall not return to the old ways; America standing pat with "business as usual," so far as principles and results are concerned; and the Christian Church, for the most part, acquiescing in all this and offering no prophetic leadership.

It is, of course, true that spiritual leadership of any sort—Christian or other—has its origin in the individual souls of leaders and followers. "Personal religion" is the creative heart of individual vision and of social justice. And we are being told today from many quarters that there is a great revival of popular interest in religion. After every great war something like this is said and, in a very limited sense, it is doubtless true; but how important such an interest may be and what sort of religion it is in which interest is shown are the vital facts that should be made clear. It is our belief that the kind of religion that seems to be reviving is of a pathetic and not essentially Christian brand. It is the sort of religion that seems

"QUOTES"

AN ANCIENT BLESSING

GOD be gracious unto you and remember His covenant that He made with His faithful servants;
And give you an heart to serve Him and to do His will with a good courage and a willing mind;
And open your hearts in His law, and send you peace;
And hear your prayers, and be at one with you;
And never forsake you in time of trouble . . .
And now we be here praying for you.

to furnish its enthusiasts with an escape from reality. "Peace of Mind" and "Peace of Soul" are not qualities that are given, but achievements that are earned by clear thinking about the world we live in and by hard struggle with the facts of life which a righteous God wills to have changed.

Hope of Minorities

IT is our conviction that the chief hope for a revival of a Christian religion that shall redeem this new half-century lies in the minority groups of all Christian bodies that are facing up bravely to the hard facts of a mad, force-worshipping generation and centering their prayers, their sacramental life, their united influence and their social action on the fact of God's will for the transformation of the world he made and loves. The Quakers and other Christian pacifists are such a group, heroic fighters for civil liberties are another, stubborn workers for international fellowship are yet another. Banded together they make a not inconsiderable force for redemption. And insofar as they remain faithful to the heart of the Christian faith, that "power belongeth unto God" and that the spiritual force of united prayer and fellowship is mightier than hatred, fear and atom-bombs—they may well prove to be the shock-troops of the army of the Lord that shall lead the more timorous of the rank-and-file of would-be Christians to a hard-won victory before the century ends. That is our hope, our present belief and our continuing prayer.

An Appeal to Bishops

CONGREGATIONS of our Church will soon be listening to the Pastoral Letter which will be forthcoming from the House of Bishops now in session in El Paso. We are an Episcopal Church, and we look for leadership from our bishops. And never before in the history of this nation has there been a greater need of leadership and the Christian message stated in forthright, prophetic terms.

Bishop Sherrill's recent election as President of the National Council of the Churches points up not only the esteem in which he is held, but also the fact that our Church is looked to for leadership by millions of other Christians. We beg of you to fulfill that trust and expectancy at this time of universal concern. In the past you have issued Pastorals in the tradition of Holy Scripture, even as God speaking to men through his Church. Other times we have looked in vain for a decisive word in the midst of pious generalities and ecclesiastical jargon. Today we ask for something more than prayers for peace, important as they are. We ask you to be as definite and outspoken as you have ever been about the vital issues which press daily on toward total war. Let judgment begin at home. Let the Church be the Church. Let not the trumpet sound uncertainly.

Our Protestant Heritage

Controversy Deplored

I HESITATE to say it—for I am convinced that religious controversy (if there can be such a thing! I mean controversy over religious differences) is one of the worst things with which one can waste his time, and that it is not only futile, and never converts anyone, but is disgraceful among Christians. Furthermore, we are concerned with "our Protestant heritage," and have more important things to consider: our heritage does contain a large amount of controversy—but it also contains many more precious and weighty things than that. Nevertheless, it is necessary to make one or two points clear, and they can be stated without acrimony. The Roman Catholic Church teaches its children that Protestant Churches are not true Churches; there can be only one true Church, and that is the Roman. It teaches its children that Protestant sacraments—for example baptism and marriage—are not true sacraments. It teaches its children that Protestant ministers are not truly ordained, not truly ministers of Christ; this is to assume a false view of history and of the origins of the Christian ministry, and also to spread discord and mistrust. The Roman Catholic Church works toward the reunion of Christendom; but its policy is one of totalitarianism—other Churches must submit to Rome; there can be no reunion otherwise. The Roman Catholic Church benefits by the separation of Church and state in this country; but it states in unequivocal terms that under other conditions, with the Roman Church in a majority, they would not hesitate to suppress Protestantism—and they have the effrontery to ask us to admire the "logic" of their position.

This concludes the article by Dr. Grant which began in the December 14th number. It was originally delivered at a United Protestant service held in the baseball stadium in Mobile, Alabama.

We admire the concern our Roman fellow-Christians display for the religious nurture of their children; we admire their zeal for missions; we acknowledge that their faithful attendance at church services is exemplary; we gladly acknowledge their enthusiasm for learning, for education, for scholarship; but we regret that the Roman Catholic Church takes so exclusive and domineering an attitude toward non-Roman Catholics; we regret its affiliations with political parties and groups, here and in other lands, and especially its frequent affiliation with the most reactionary political groups.

An occasion like the present one, when we celebrate our Protestant Heritage, is not a time for casting aspersions upon any other religion or religious group. If in former days there were some who thought that to be a good Protestant required that he call the Pope bad names and make a mockery of Catholic beliefs and sacraments, those unhappy days are now fortunately past. Protestantism is not mere negation—the denial of Catholicism. For we are Catholics too. We say in the creed, "I believe in the holy Catholic Church, the communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting." The ancient, undivided, Catholic Church of the days of the apostles and the fathers, of the martyrs and saints, is our Church too. We are not of yesterday! People would have you believe that Protestant Christianity began in the sixteenth century; but there are traces of it long before then—for many saints and godly Christians in the Middle Ages wanted to see the Church reformed and cleansed of its abuses, economic, doctrinal, moral, and ceremonial. (For the evidence, see the great book by the late Prof. Coulton, Five Centuries of Religion, now completed by the recent publication of the fourth big volume.) When the Reformation began it was intended to reform the Church, not destroy it, and certainly not to create another Church in its place. After the explosion had taken place and the smoke had drifted away, it was apparent that the Church had been rent in two; but the Roman Church, still obedient to the Pope, was no more the same Church as the old Catholic Church of the West in the Middle Ages than the Protestant Churches were identical with it. After the Counter-Reformation, after the Council of Trent, the change was even more apparent. The ancient undivided Catholic Church of the days of the fathers was now represented by three or four main bodies: The Holy Orthodox Church in the East, the Roman Catholic Church in the West, the Reformed and the Evangelical Churches in the North, the Anglican Church in the British Isles, and so on. For any of these Churches to claim to be the one and only Church of Christ, or to be the only valid successor to the original Catholic Church of the early centuries, is simply preposterous. They are all descended from it; they are all parts of the once united holy Catholic Church of Christ; and they are all potential members of the someday-to-be-reunited Catholic Church, the Body of Christ, the Tree of Life planted upon earth for the healing of the nations. We do not deride or depreciate our Catholic brethren's faith or practice or loyalty, but in all kindness and clarity—as well as charity—we want to state our own convictions and beliefs in the matter.

WE wish to protest, in a friendly but very firm manner, against the continual propaganda of one Church against others, insisting that there is and can be only one true Church—which is of course the Church conducting the propaganda. If it is annoying — and dangerous — in the international political world, where Russia continually harps on the wickedness of capitalism, and predicts its downfall, it is no less true of ecclesiastical relations. The cheap and vulgar advertising which resorts to propaganda, which spends its space and the reader's time decrying the religious beliefs of other groups of Christians, whether by open attack or by innuendo—this is simply deplorable; it is more than bad taste, it is a sin against brotherhood. There is a text which some of our brethren ought to take more seriously—and all of us should take it seriously, in the measure that it applies to us: "Peter turned and saw following them the disciple whom Jesus loved . . . (and said), 'Lord, what shall this man do?' Jesus said to him . . . 'What is that to you? Follow me!'" (John 21:20-22). We are not responsible for the religious life of our brethren, which is lived between them and Christ; we have no right to sit in judgment, and pry into their devotion to the Lord, and decide whether it is true or false. The very assumption of the right to charge Protestantism with falsehood, humbuggery, invalid sacraments, a mountebank ministry—all the old lies and fables that have been repeated for centuries—the very assumption of the right to bring such charges, against the plain evidence of the vitality and reality of the religious life in Protestantism, is the most colossal example of pride and arrogance that twenty centuries of Christian history afford. It is simply totalitarianism in religion, and it is just as vicious and just as dangerous as totalitarianism in politics. It would almost seem that some of our brethren have taken the text in the Gospel and turned it around: Our Lord said to Peter, "I have prayed for you that your faith may not fail; and when you have turned again (or been converted), strengthen your brethren" (Luke 22:32)—but they seem to take it to mean, "When you are strengthened, convert your brethren!"

Divisive Action

WITH the best will in the world, and with utmost kindness of heart and charity of disposition, we must protest against this constant, aggressive, bad-mannered, un-Christian propaganda designed to undermine Protestantism and exalt the Roman Church. It is a most divisive and dangerous kind of religious advertising. It is really on a level with the old-fashioned commercial advertising, now repudiated and frowned upon by all respectable newspapers and magazines, which consisted in cut-throat attacks upon competitors in trade. One suspects the product cannot be very good when all that the salesman can do is run down the products of other firms! We cannot believe that the best representatives of the Roman Church, say the Pope himself, who is a Christian, a scholar, and a gentleman, can approve these attacks.

We must also protest against the undignified and unworthy methods of supporting the Church by games of chance. There are church lawns all over the country which are disfigured by signs advertising a game called bingo, in letters so large one cannot make out the church notice board with the hours of services. There are raffles of automobiles and other commodities—all this is cheapening religion in the eyes of the unchurched. And moreover it encourages the spirit of taking chances, and eventually of gambling. It is notable that churches which support themselves by such methods are silent when protest is made against lotteries and gambling in other realms; that tacit approval is given to "numbers" games, and that members of these Churches are sometimes in the limelight when cities "clean up" the numbers racket; that the funerals of notorious gamblers and racketeers have been held from their churches, with as much pomp and ceremony—even more—than in the case of pious and godly Christians. All this is a travesty and a disgrace to our common religion, and we earnestly protest —not with rancour, and not with any feeling that we have no faults ourselves, but in the interest of a better presentation of the Christian faith to the world about us, here in America today. What would the great saints and martyrs of the Roman church make of this? What would S. Leo, S. Gregory, S. Boniface, S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, S. Peter himself—what would they say of it? They would rebuke and reproach the Church of today in no uncertain terms. We do not attack the Roman Church as such; we appeal from the Church in error to the Church valiant for truth; from the Church corrupt and sick to the Church well and strong, to the mother of saints and the mighty protagonist of the Gospel of Christ in an evil world; and we pray that God will revive and transform this great Church, and bring it back to its first calling, and give it the grace to take up its task once more, "for the healing of the nations."

I REGRET to sound divisive, for I have many dear friends who are Roman Catholics—devout, earnest, deeply Christian men and women, whom I would not injure for anything. More than that, I believe that within the Roman Church the grace of God is still effective, the Holy Spirit still moves and works, the supernatural gifts of grace are present, and the truth of the Gospel is proclaimed. And I say this in spite of the discouraging recent addition of a purely mythical new dogma to the Christian faith, in the Roman Church—the dogma of the bodily assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary to heaven. When such mythological embroidery is added to the faith, those outside the Christian Church will only infer that all the rest of it is equally mythological. One may ask, why are Protestants concerned with it? This is a purely internal concern of the Roman Catholic Church! But the answer is that it concerns us all, because the outside world will not draw a sharp distinction between Roman dogma and Protestant. We are told that the new dogma rests upon ancient tradition. But "tradition" means unwritten history, handed down by word of mouth. Where is this "tradition" found? Not in the New Testament, not in the writings of the Apostles, but long after in late apocryphal writings—in what a Scottish scholar has called "the Sunday afternoon literature of the ancient Church." The earliest writings in which it is found are recognized everywhere as pure fiction. The "tradition" bears all the marks, not of genuine tradition but of mere legend. Our quarrel with the Roman Church, as Protestants, is not with its Catholicism, nor with its piety; not with its devotion to Christ, its missionary zeal, the self-sacrifice and courage of its saints and martyrs; it is not even with its theology or dogma, in toto—much of which we share, in varying degrees, while the differences between our Protestant groups are often as great as those between any Protestant group and Rome; our quarrel is with the strategy and pretensions of the Roman hierarchy: with their claim to be the sole voice of Christ to a troubled world; with their claim to authority over the whole Church of Christ, the Pope being Christ's vicar; with their presumptuous claim of the sole right to define doctrine, upon the acceptance of which depends the salvation of all Christians; with their political machinations, and their alliance with secular power—e.g. with Hitler and Mussolini before the late war, and even during it, until the Nazi-Fascist defeat became certain—all this, we say, has no place in the religion of Christ, and the twisting of the gospel to support such claims we utterly repudiate.

Not Anti-Roman

BUT Protestantism is something more than Anti-Romanism. It means the recovery, the restoration, the restatement of the essential and genuine religion of the Gospel, in its New Testament form. Hence the freedom of the Scriptures, freedom to interpret them historically, is the great, cardinal point of all Protestant teaching.

The task of Protestantism is still far from finished. What the Protestant movement set out to accomplish four centuries ago has been delayed and hindered, partly by opposition from Rome, partly by the unfortunate divisions within the movement itself, partly by other and more external causes. Among these external causes is the whole tendency of the modern world away from religion, in the direction of secularism and materialism. But the aim of Protestantism is still the same as it was: the cleansing, rationalizing, democratizing, and unifying of the Church. That aim will not be achieved until the whole church, Rome, the East, and Protestantism, are reunited once more, and united upon a level of pure and single-minded devotion to the cause of Christ, which is not only the salvation of individual souls but also the realization, as far as it is possible, of the Kingdom of God, the reign of God, here in this present world.

Let us therefore dedicate ourselves once more to the freedom of the Gospel, to the "glorious liberty of the sons of God," "the freedom wherewith Christ has set us free," and let us vow never again to be enslaved to a yoke of bondage; let us consecrate ourselves once more to follow in the steps of saints, scholars, and martyrs, who counted not their lives precious in their sight, but freely gave their all that the Gospel might be unfettered to run its course through all the world; let us also give ourselves to the blessed cause of Christian reunion, so that Christ's broken body, the Church, may be knit up once more, and serve his gracious purposes in the healing of the nations; let us this day renew our devotion to Christ's one holy catholic, universal Church, and pray that all Christians everywhere may love one another as brethren, and seek not their own but each the other's good; that the knowledge of the Lord may fill the earth as the waters cover the sea; that God's grace may fulfill and sustain all goodness, all virtue, all peace and mercy everywhere among men; and that loving kindness may transform the earth and make it a light and a blessing forever.

Further Adventures Of Mr. Entwhistle

BY

THOMAS BARRETT

THE NEW CURRICULUM

SAID the Rev. Samuel Entwhistle, to his Sunday School teachers: "The new curriculum will soon be with us. In the meantime, Mr. Doolus has selected courses from various publishing houses, and I am sure they will be quite adequate until our Church publishes our own new curriculum, which I'm told will be very fine indeed."

The Rev. Mr. Entwhistle considered he had said enough about the new curriculum and turned his mind toward an imaginary Church School, filled with bright and eager children whose spotless hearts and minds awaited the opening day of Sunday school with excitement. "We must remember," he went on, lifting his eyes in remembrance of the happy days of childhood, "that whatever course we are using the main thing is to care for these little children in our classes, and to be to them a fine example of Christian patience and charity. Remember . . . there are no delinquent children; only delinquent parents. I ask of you faithfulness in your task as teacher that these small members of the Church militant may learn whatsoever things are pure and true and lovely and of good report."

Samuel was so carried away in his imagination by his own words that he scarcely heard the querulous voice of Miss Kablosky, the fourth grade teacher.

"Mr. Entwhistle," she pleaded in her pure and lovely voice, "I suppose this course is good for a trained teacher but when am I going to get time to read all these books it says the teacher ought to read. The teacher's manual doesn't give very much instructions without you read all these books for homework."

Mr. Entwhistle winced almost visibly, but recovered in time to reflect on the plain fact that Miss Kablosky was a person of good report as well as being fair of face. She was a Doolus "find," and no doubt had commendable qualities of spirit which were in no way dependent on her grammar.

"The important thing," said Mr. Entwhistle raising his finger for emphasis, "is that our children should learn something of prayer and worship, and a few, at least a few of the basic teachings of our Church. I'm quite sure it won't be necessary to read all the books listed. Perhaps Mr. Doolus can . . . well . . . supplement the manual with some kind of . . . er . . . handwork."

After all, thought Samuel, that's what a curate is for: to supplement things around a parish. He wondered why teacher's manuals always contained a bibliography as long as a thesis for an advanced degree in philosophy.

After a lengthy discussion on the new materials which Dee-Dee had selected and which were voluminous if not self-evident the meeting came to an end. It was finally decided by a majority vote that the series of pictures which arrived with course 5 entitled "God's Little Bluebirds," were just extra stock the publisher had on hand, since they seemed to have no relation to "God's Little Bluebirds" or any other course material in hand. Miss Kablosky said she could use the pictures for scrapbooks if Mr. Doolus could get her some more pictures more closely related to her course which was entitled "I Love the Book of Job."

On the following Sunday the parish house was overflowing with eager children. When at last they were forced to retreat from the hallways and cellar into the chapel, it was twenty minutes past opening time, but Mr. Entwhistle had high hopes for the year.

"We're always a bit disorganized at the first session," he told the school in his opening remarks. "It takes a couple of weeks to get settled. After this I want you all to come to the chapel quietly, and on time . . . I trust you come back from your summer vacation refreshed, and are prepared to spend an interesting year . . . Sammy, please leave the little girl alone . . . an interesting year studying the life and work of our Church. Our new assistant, Mr. Delancey Doolus, will be your superintendent . . . stand up Mr. Doolus so the children can see you . . . if any of you need a little talking to . . . ha-ha . . . you'll have to see Mr. Doolus . . . ha-ha . . . Mrs. Talcott will you please sit next to Sammy. Sammy if you don't behave we shall have to ask you to leave . . . Now while we are waiting for the new curriculum that our Church is preparing we have selected some very interesting courses which I'm sure you will all find most . . . instructive . . . Now we shall begin our opening service! SAMMY! . . . Let us pray."

After the service it was discovered that Mrs. Schuler was ill.

"I realize you don't like a Sunday School class just before Church," said Dee-Dee with a scornful leer . . . "but would you mind taking Mrs. Schuler's class just this once?"

"No, no, of course not. Glad to," said Mr. Entwhistle, feeling in his cassock pocket for his eyeglasses. "What's the lesson?"

"We're just beginning a new Puritan press publication," said Dee-Dee. "It's called 'Oh What a Joy to Worship in God's Temple.' Unfortunately the teacher's text hasn't arrived yet."

"Oh well," Samuel smiled bravely, "I'll make out all right, I expect. After all I did go to seminary. I don't know why it is Church Publishing Houses never can send all the material you need at once, and at the same time. Perhaps they like to be coaxed."

"Terribly inefficient," Dee-Dee said raising a patronizing eyebrow.

"But then," Samuel went on cheerfully, "they usually have only two or three elderly widows around the place. We must not expect the impossible must we?"

"Some of the material comes from 381," Dee Dee protested. "Why should it be so late. I ordered it months ago . . . and when it came I only found half of course nine B and a thousand pamphlets on the mission hospital in Tunkhannock, Peru. It doesn't make sense."

"My boy," Samuel said reassuring Dee-Dee with a fatherly pat on the shoulder, while he searched for a telling phrase, "we mustn't expect to attain perfect knowledge on this earth. Remember what happened to Adam when he wanted to know too much. But I must meet my class."

The seventh grade consisted of eleven relatively wholesome children none of whom, Samuel discovered, had ever heard of King David, St. Paul, a reredos, or a bishop, to say nothing of the Prodigal Son. He decided it would be best to forget about the Puritan course and read some of the Bible to the bright and eager children. "Poor things," he mused to himself, "they are exquisitely illiterate. Oh for the new curriculum."

During the reading of the story of the Good Samaritan, Sammy Jones kept trying to crawl under the table far enough so that he could kick Edwin Penniman on the shins. Mr. Entwhistle reprimanded him three times, after which Sammy sat quietly brooding for two minutes. Then with the deception and speed of a skilled magician, Sammy produced a mechanical mouse which he placed strategically on the lap of Suzanne Griffin. There was a squeal, a giggle, and a threat of group dynamics merging into chaos. Mr. Entwhistle restored a crude likeness of order by a combined use of eyebrows, knuckles and what Isabel liked to call his "once to every man and nation" look. When the bell rang to signify that Sunday School was over, Mr. Entwhistle was still trying to get the Good Samaritan and his bruised burden toward the inn. He was forced to complete the story amid the swelling tumult which came from every direction like a summer thunderstorm. He felt slightly ineffective, but remarked to himself that "things are always somewhat disorganized the first couple of weeks."

Mrs. Schuler returned to duty the following week and so far as Samuel could see the Church School was schooling along through early autumn on all eight cylinders.

Early in November he received notice of the diocesan teachers convention. He went immediately to Dee-Dee.

"We ought to try to get a good delegation to go," he said. "They are having some of the experts from headquarters . . . on the new curriculum. It will probably help the teachers a great deal." Dee-Dee fell to work and lugged two carloads of teachers to the convention. But the result Samuel was grieved to see was negligible.

"What happened?" he asked Dee-Dee when he obtained only vague reports from Mrs. Schuler, and Miss Kablosky.

"Nothing of much significance," Dee-Dee shrugged. "We had a good dinner . . . that is for a church dinner."

"But the experts?" Samuel questioned.

"Oh," Dee-Dee frowned in recollection. "The first one we couldn't understand. Very poorly organized speech. The second one was clear enough. He said the new curriculum was on the way. In the meantime it was important that we all know something about the processes of learning. We learn through experience. We also learn through reading, but not so much, since the memory only retains 10% of what is heard. We also learn by . . . let's see . . . I guess I've forgotten his other point."

"By seeing?" Samuel suggested.

"Yes, perhaps that was it. Anyhow it didn't seem particularly imaginative. Were you aware that the memory retains so little of what is heard?"

"Quite," said Samuel. "But it would retain three times as much if we trained our memories. Let's put the school back on the diet of the catechism. Perhaps we could confound the experts."

"Well, anyway, it wasn't very helpful but the new curriculum will soon be here, one of the men said. Perhaps we could have a Christmas pageant. That would be in line with the new policy of learning through experience."

"We always have had one," Samuel said, "Since 1886." In November rehearsals began, and went along fairly smoothly until a week before the performance when it was discovered that Suzy Flowers who had been miscast in the part of an archangel, was among those absent from the line of duty.

"She's changed to the Methodist Sunday School," said Sammy the informer, "on account of Ruthie Jenkins, her best friend goes there, and she says she don't want to be in no pageant anyway and wear them wings."

Samuel drew down his brows and bit his lip in self-pity, but courageously pressed on with Nancy Dubb as the archangel. This late change almost threw the whole cast into lasting confusion since Nancy displaced more space laterally than Suzy, and kept pushing Pinky Perkins off the chancel steps.

"Pinky," shrieked Mr. Entwhistle, beginning to lose his accustomed patience. "You must keep your balance. You're in a tableaux. We practiced those positions, there's plenty of room."

"Not with Nancy," Pinky objected, "she's too fat." A mutiny was averted by moving Nancy into a choir stall where her angelic form was almost obscured by golden oak.

At last the pageant was ready for production and Samuel if not Dee-Dee, was confident of success. But alas, as Isabel remarked afterwards, Samuel had not counted on original sin. Two of the three Kings were smitten with an unroyal shyness and refused to bear gifts. Sammy Jones, strikingly miscast as a wondering shepherd got loose five minutes before the opening hymn and raced the length of the parish house auditorium through the entire team, followed by Edwin Penniman filled with righteous indignation. It was, Mr. Entwhistle conceded weeks later, an excellent bit of broken field running. But by the time Sammy was tackled two feet from the basement stairs, Joseph's beard had come off, three cherubs had crumpled wings, and the prophet Isaiah had been put out of the play for the evening.

Dee-Dee whose duty it was to act as reader, grinned with diabolical mirth at the whole project, and Samuel almost fired him on the spot. Isabel however arrived at the front line just in time.

"It's time to begin dear," she said with her most winsome smile, "all the bright eager children are waiting. Never mind the cherub's wings. I'm sure no one will notice. And I can be Isaiah perfectly well, as soon as I take off this hat."

Samuel did not quite recover until after New Year's.

"Never again . . ." he kept muttering at breakfast, "never again . . ."

"Never again what, my dear," Isabel asked pouring herself another cup of coffee.

"This Sunday School business" Samuel moaned. "Year after year. I sometimes wonder if it's all worthwhile."

"But darling," Isabel murmured, "things will get straightened out after we get the new curriculum, I'm sure."

The Rev. Entwhistle drew himself up sterly put on what Isabel called his "while life's dark maze I tread" look. "I am persuaded", he said firmly, "that neither junior vestry, nor Puritan press, nor old curriculum nor new curriculum, nor Christmas pageant, nor Easter play shall ever separate us from this annual torment. From here in it's up to Dee-Dee. As for me, Sunday School is over."

Clang, Clang Went the Trolley

By CORWIN ROACH
Dean of Bexley Hall

I am a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal—I Cor. 13:1

ST. PAUL is evidently thinking of the pagan processions to the heathen shrines in ancient Corinth. They would be accompanied by the sound of tambourines and cymbals, the ancient equivalent of an American brass band. If St. Paul were living today he might prefer to use the analogy of the clanging trolley car which is suggested by our present translation. The popular song which glorifies the noise of the street car is more sentimental than it is descriptive. A noisy trolley, especially after midnight, is not particularly soothing. St. Paul would say that Christianity without love is just as unpleasant. It is a noise which amounts to nothing. It never gets anywhere. A street car rides around on a closed circuit and so do most Christians, hemmed in and confined by the iron rails of their own selfishness. We need to get out of ourselves through the power of divine love, if we are to achieve our real destiny. A trolley is made to go clanging around on a track. Christians were made for better things.

EXTENDED COVERAGE

What does it cover?

The Extended Coverage endorsement to a fire insurance policy includes protection against damage by windstorm, cyclone, tornado, hail, explosion, riot, riot attending a strike, civil commotion, aircraft, smoke, and motor vehicles; and insurance must be for the same amount as the fire insurance, as the term "Extended Coverage" implies.

Over a three-week period THE CHURCH FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION received from policyholders over 200 reports of damage to Church property resulting from the great Northeast Storm of November 25th and 26th. Immediate steps were taken to speed adjustments of claims and make possible early restoration of damaged properties.

Often Extended Coverage is requested by property owners who think only of windstorm insurance, and the other hazards this insurance covers are overlooked. Smudge by faulty oil burning heating equipment, heavy damage by explosion of accumulated gas—these are examples of losses not covered by a fire insurance policy. They are covered, however, by Extended Coverage. The rate for this added protection is very low in most localities.

If you wish a quotation on the cost of Extended Coverage — or windstorm or fire — insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with your Church, just clip this advertisement, fill in the information listed below, and mail to us, so that we can send to you an application form:

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Purim and Hanukkah. By Theodore H. Gaster. Henry Schuman. $2.50.

This is an excellent little book. It is one of a series of ten volumes, some of which are already published, some of which are in preparation, that are designed to promote fuller understanding and appreciation for the religious festivals of all faiths. This particular volume will be of genuine help to all who seek understanding of the background and meaning of the two important festivals in Judaism that celebrate the spring and autumn seasons. The author of this book is one who combines a gift for scholarly investigation with the power to set forth his findings with simplicity and clarity. A competent scholar in the field of comparative religion and folklore, Dr. Gaster traces the historical evolution of each phase of the observance of the two festivals, and as he recounts the story of his researches, he makes clear to the reader their significance both as history and as vital religious experience. Such a book as this makes a real contribution to interfaith understanding, a contribution which will have fruit in the growth of true community in the modern world.—Mary Ely Lyman

Fifty Years With the Golden Rule. By J. C. Penney. Harper. $2.75.

This book calls to mind the remark of a prominent businessman: "Put Christ in your accounts and you will come out on the credit side everytime." It is a sincere book; the product of a man who has worked hard, had high personal standards and believed in honest "services"—to the best of his lights. But those lights, common as they are in the industrial world, fall pathetically short of genuine Christianity. It is a book that belongs to the last century; one searches in vain for the wide social and really ethical implications of modern business. It is the perfect example of tragic, uncomprehending, moral man in an immoral society.—Joseph H. Titus

The Kingdom Without End. By Robert Elliot Fitch. Scribner. $2.50.

This "prophetic interpretation of history and civilization" is based on Jeremiah 9:23-24; and it is a study of the blessings or the curses which result from the good use or the abuse of power, wealth, knowledge, and the spiritual. Following Plato's famous sequence of "surfeit," "outrageous behavior," and "disaster," Doctor Fitch shows the fatal consequences of pride, greed, and selfishness. Here we have a prolongation and development of a thesis familiar to students of Toynbee, with well chosen illustrations and with a forceful application to individuals, groups, societies, nations, and religious bodies. The book is scholarly and well written, and it may be read and discussed with profit.—Edgar L. Pennington

St. Mark's Gospel. By E. Basil Redlich. Macmillan. $1.25.

This little commentary in the Colet Library is very good indeed. It has a 57 page introduction plus 115 pages of text and commentary, all of it worthwhile reading for both the educated layman and the parish minister. It might be very profitably used as the basis for an adult Bible study group.

Morelite IN YOUR CHURCH
THAT'S LIGHT ON YOUR BUDGET

This church, which took the Christian Herald Prize in 1928, was equipped with very handsome wrought-iron chandeliers which undoubtedly gave enough light to satisfy the congregation of that day. Recently, however, a study was undertaken to find inexpensive means of providing more light on the pews—without spoiling the general effect. The choice was Rambusch MORELITE (illustrated below). Behind each truss there are four of these units installed. They are adjusted to throw their light in a slightly forward direction down over the pews, providing ample yet inconspicuous reading light. This is typical of many churches throughout the country where a marked improvement in lighting can be attained by simple and economical means. Why not let Rambusch solve your lighting problem? Send today for our Church Information Folder.

One would question a few of Mr. Redlich's statements:

Does the Fourth Evangelist say that faith in Jesus because of his works is "a poor kind of faith?" The two passages cited hardly appear to say that at all (p.55).

Did not the Zealots exist before 66 A.D.? Was not Judas the Galilean, son of Hezekiah, a Zealot, active in the first decade of the Christian era? Indeed, there may have been Zealots under Herod the Great (cf. Josephus).

"Moved with anger" is decidedly an inferior text for Mark 1:41; "moved with compassion" has far better support (pp.77-78).

A tetrarch is not necessarily a "ruler of one-fourth of a kingdom." He is often just a provincial ruler. Herod Antipas did not rule one-fourth of his father's kingdom, but one-third of it (p.105).

Why refer to Joseph of Arimathaea as Joseph of Ramathaim, especially with no explanation? (p.179). Not one layman out of a thousand would know how to account for it and the commentary was not written for the expert who is familiar with the Septuagint.

There is a typographical error on page 47: of occurs in place of on.
—Burton S. Throckmorton

Ethical Theories. Edited by A. I. Melden, Ph.D. Prentice-Hall. $5.35.

This is a well-edited book of selections, all the way from Plato to John Dewey and Moritz Schlick. The increasing number of our contemporaries who are reading the Great Books will be interested in finding this compact anthology of long selections from the classic moralists down the centuries.

Basic Christian Ethics. By Paul Ramsey. Scribner. $3.75.

A general book on Christian ethics which takes into consideration recent critical work on the teaching of Jesus and other ethical teaching in the New Testament as well as the problems which recent developments in the fields of politics and economics have posed for ethics. A comprehensive treatment of the subject which will be valuable to the general reader and to the student and teacher in the classroom.—John Knox.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS ATTEND CHURCH

Four out of five juniors and seniors in Indianapolis high schools say that they belong to churches or synagogues. Superintendent of schools, Herman L. Shibler, reported that a slightly greater number attend services or classes than actually belong to churches. He found that half attend three weeks out of four, with the others going at least once a month.

In the same questionnaire he asked why those who do not attend stay away, with the largest number, 471, being unable to think of any reason, while the next largest number wrote "sleep." Sixty-seven said they worked; 31 live too far away from the churches of their denomination; 24 found the services uninteresting; 17 had other meetings they prefer to attend, and nine had parents who are indifferent to church attendance. Only six said that they did not believe in the Church or in God.

On what they thought could be done to make church and Sunday school more attractive, 467 called for special youth activities; another 210 wanted more interesting services and sermons; 87 asked for youth participation in the affairs of the church; 67 wanted athletic programs; 44 desired better-trained and more interesting ministers; 40 asked for more religion in public schools; 39 suggested better music; 22 asked for better youth-adult relationships.

BIGOTRY HELD GREATER MENACE THAN BOMB

Bigotry, racial discrimination and religious prejudices are a greater threat to America than the atom bomb. Three religious leaders, speaking in Chicago, were united in that opinion: R. C. Bishop Bernard J. Sheil of Chicago; Rabbi F. M. Isserman of St. Louis; Methodist pastor, Harold A. Bosley of Evanston.

DISCUSS RELIGION IN COLLEGES

Can religion be taught objectively at state colleges? Some 40 educators and religious leaders, meeting at Minneapolis in a three day conference over the holidays, agreed that it can if it involves the giving of information about religion rather than indoctrinating in religious belief. President Homer P. Rainey of Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., formerly president of the University of Texas, said that religion has a definite part in the educational process. But a new reformation is needed, he said, to find ways of presenting the religious message in terms of modern situations that will attract not only students but others.

PRESBYTERIANS LAUNCH PRAYER MOVEMENT

A step-by-step prayer program for God's help "in solving the grievous problems of the world" has been launched by the laymen of the Southern Presbyterian Church. They are asking three steps: (1) asking for forgiveness for our sins of commission and omission, (2) asking God to stamp out materialism and replace it with the spirit of Christ in our lives, (3) asking God's help in solving the problems of the world.

RABBI SILVER ASKS NEW FOREIGN POLICY

Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver of Cleveland has called for a reexamination of America's foreign policy. He told his congregation that "America's foreign policy has been going from bad to worse since the President announced the so-called Truman doctrine and pledged our country to resist Communism all over the world." He declared that it is a commitment which "we are simply not able to make good and which our allies are unwilling to back up."

He urged President Truman to get UN approval before rather than after taking military action; urged that our help should be channelled through UN; work with other nations to build defenses but make sure how much others are prepared to do before making commitments; be strong but "let us not bankrupt ourselves by trying to arm one-half the world against the other half"; control inflation through higher taxes and price and wage controls. Finally he said the President should "remember that negotiation is not appeasement" and urged renewed efforts to reach agreements around the table.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY RECALLED

The Rev. Dryden L. Phelps, Baptist missionary in China since 1921, has been recalled by his mission society because he wrote a letter which appeared in "Soviet Russia Today," monthly published in New York. His letter paid high tribute to the present Chinese Peoples government, calling the regime "the most comprehensive renaissance the human spirit has ever experienced" and "the most dynamic change in human history." The letter also characterized the "reorganization of Chinese society the most profoundly religious experience I have ever been through" and asserted that "God is working alongside of these Communists."

Discussing the situation in Korea, the missionary declared that the South Korean government "first attacked" North Korea and that "95% of press reports appearing in the U. S. on the Far Eastern crisis are absolutely false."

Whether Phelps will return from China to explain his letter to his missionary board is not known at this writing.

TEACHING MISSIONS IN TWIN CITIES

The names of more than 50,000 unchurched persons have gone on "responsibility lists" of Minneapolis and St. Paul Protestant churches as a result of teaching missions. The names were uncovered in religious censuses which were a part of the program. Churches are charged with the responsibility of following-up these persons with calls.

TWO MILLION CHICAGOANS WITHOUT RELIGION

There are 2,000,000 persons in the Chicago area who have no religious affiliations, according to Neil Hanser, director of the city's Congregational Union. Out of a total of 974,000 children under 14, at least 415,000 are untouched by any church. Out of 391,000 teen-agers between 14 and 19, 166,000 are unaffiliated with any religious organization.

HOWARD R. BRINKER
Bishop of Nebraska

In reading the report on Brownell Hall in The Witness—December 14th, the importance of the action taken by the trustees of Brownell Hall and the chapter, which is the holding corporation of the diocese, was the fact that the board of trustees of Brownell Hall turned over to the chapter their entire property and endowments, amounting to a total of approximately $360,000. It was this action on the part of the board of trustees of Brownell that has secured the future of this institution as a Church School. The thing that caused the organic relationship was the conveying of the property and endowments over to the holding corporation of the diocese to be held in trust.

HUGH THOMPSON
Layman of Lakeview, N. Y.

Mr. A. Gilman adds to the gaity but not to the accuracy of your issue of Nov. 16. "We are Protestant because we have been excommunicated by the Church of Rome," he says. Perhaps he will now explain why, although the Eastern Orthodox Churches have been so excommunicated by Rome, they are still called "Catholic," as in the tract of the (Roman) Catholic Truth Society, and are never known as "Protestant."

Plainly Mr. Gilman is unaware that Rome considers any Church not in union with the Pope a schismatic, but they are not called "Protestant" unless they have also been heretical in doctrine. Incidentally when and by what Bull was our Church (as distinct from that of England) formally excommunicated? How in fact could this be since the American Episcopal Church never was in union with Rome. Come again, Mr. Gilman.

Layman of Brighton, Mass.

Alexander Gilman's letter about an imaginary "holy Catholic Church" gives one pause. Does he mean by it that there never yet has been, and is not now, any such thing as the holy Catholic Church? Apparently he does mean just that, for he asserts that "the holy Catholic Church is an ideal to which all Christians hope one day to attain."

If he is right, what became of the Church which our Lord set up to carry on his work in the world? There are some people who think the Church is invisible. Mr. Gilman goes them one step more; his Church is not only invisible—it doesn't even exist. Of course, deacons, priests, and bishops are ministers "in the Church of God," and according to the Prayer Book, "there have always been these orders of ministers in Christ's Church," but Mr. Gilman's non-existent "Church" seems to be something different (in imagination, anyway) from Christ's Church. Since we should be satisfied and happy to be in Christ's Church now, why should we hope "one day to attain" to any other kind of Church?

Mr. Gilman also gives Rome quite a bit of power. Regardless of our own historians' claims and the official declarations of our documents and of Lambeth (that we "exist to promulgate the Catholic faith"), he thinks Rome made us Protestant just by excommunicating us. True, as he notes, Rome is "commonly called Catholic," but if he is a Churchman, he goes to church and Sunday after Sunday confesses belief in a "commonly called" Catholic Church which is not exactly Roman.

PREPARE FOR LENT!

"History," said Bishop Mandell Creighton of London, great English historian, "is a cordial for drooping spirits." Our ecclesiastical forefathers went through some tough times, too. Lent comes early this year—February 7th. Plan now to do some serious Lenten reading. Fortify your mind with knowledge of the past, and your soul will be strengthened.

"I want to tell you how very much I like the two brochures of Dr. Salomon and Dr. Dawley. At long last I have something on Church History which I can conscientiously put into a layman's hands. So much of this sort of thing has been apologetic and biased, without letting the facts—all of them—speak for themselves. Also they look attractive and readable. I am spreading the news about them to all my friends in the parochial ministry." — Dr. MASSEY H. STORY OF THE WEEK

The American Church Union Triples Membership

New Regional Branches are Also Developed In All Parts of Country

BY
ALBERT J. duBOIS
Executive Director of the A. C. U.

★ Response throughout the Church to the new and expanded program of the American Church Union has resulted, in the period from May to December 1950, in a growth in membership which has tripled the strength of the Union during that time. Coupled with the growth of individual memberships has been the development of new regional branches across the country. Regional branches now exist, or are in process of final organization in the following areas: diocese of Maine; diocese of New Hampshire; New England (diocese of Massachusetts and Vermont); Rhode Island; Connecticut; New York metropolitan area (diocese of New York, Long Island and the Eastern sections of the dioceses of New Jersey and Newark); Philadelphia; diocese of Bethlehem; diocese of Harrisburg; Washington, D. C. and Virginia branch; diocese of South Florida; Southeastern branch (comprising the dioceses in North and South Carolina, in Georgia and the dioceses of Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi), Ohio and Western Pennsylvania branch, for the two dioceses in Ohio and the dioceses of Pittsburgh and Erie; Michigan branch, for the two dioceses of Michigan and Western Michigan; diocese of Springfield branch; diocese of Northern Indiana branch; mid-West branch, for the dioceses of Chicago, Milwaukee, Fond du lac, Eau Claire, Northern Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and Quincy; Dallas (Texas) branch; Northwest branch for the dioceses of Olympia, Spokane and Oregon; California branch for the diocese of California and the Los Angeles Diocesan branch. In addition to this, tentative arrangements have been made for the development of further branches in other areas. In every case laymen of the Church are giving real leadership to the program.

College Groups

A new development, in response to requests from college and university centers, is under way in the formation of faculty-student "Campus ACU Groups" in a number of places. The program was initiated at Yale University on Advent Sunday and during the first months of 1951 the Executive Director will visit nine colleges and universities to install campus groups.

The various committees of the A. C. U. are also expanding their programs. The publications committee is seeking to bring out a number of tracts and booklets setting forth clearly the Church's faith on matters under attack from some quarters at the present.

The Christian social action committee sponsored two conferences for the study of this important field of the life of the Church last summer. The one at Kent School, Kent, Conn., was for the clergy, the one at DeKoven Foundation, Racine, Wisconsin, was for clergy and laity. A summer school of Catholic sociology will be held again next summer at Racine under the leadership of the Rev. Father Lewis of Stevens Point, Wisconsin.

Devotional Tracts

Supplies of devotional tracts and other literature for those in the armed forces have been so much in demand that reprints of all items have been ordered by the armed forces committee.

A keen interest in the program of the A. C. U. is to be seen in the general response to its membership appeal and in the work of its committees in every avenue of the life of the Church. To undergird it all with prayer and devotion the cycle of prayer committee is arranging for "Station Days" throughout the year when in some parish or school prayer and intercession will be offered daily for the conversion of America and of the Church to the Catholic faith and for the peace of the world. The committee in charge of the "Week of Prayer For Christian Unity" is again sponsoring a nation-wide prayer effort for unity.

The National Office of the A. C. U., 347 Madison Avenue, New York City, will gladly send further information about these activities upon request.

HOW THE A. C. U. IS ORGANIZED

★ Let us begin by quoting in full Article 1, Section 1, of the by-laws of the American Church Union. "Any baptized person is eligible for membership who states his or her belief that the Episcopal Church is a part of the Catholic and historic Church of Christ and that the orders of its ministry are valid Catholic orders; recognizes Baptism, Confirmation, Holy Eucharist, Penance, Holy Orders, Matrimony, and Unction as Catholic Sacraments, and expresses a desire to promote the objects of the Union."

While the by-laws provide for possible meetings of the membership, such meetings are, because of travel difficulties, for the most part impracticable. Opportunity is therefore given for the membership to express itself by conducting the elections to the council by ballots sent by mail. The names appearing on these ballots are selected by a nominating committee and any member, of course, is welcome to send in suggestions to this committee.

The Council is really a board of directors and consists of three classes of members; elective, representative, and ex-officio. There are 20 elective members of the Council, 10 clerical and 10 lay. Each regional branch of the A. C. U. is entitled to send one representative to the Council, such representatives forming the second class of members. Ex-officio members are the officers of the Union and the chairmen of standing committees.

The Council meets annually and considers the broad matters of policy as well as electing officers, committee chairmen, and members of the executive committee. These three groups meet together about once a month and conduct the Union business.

The by-laws provide for the setting up of regional organizations, with their own officers and committees. Where such units exist, the dues of the members are divided between them and the central body. Organizations which are engaged in activities similar to those of the A. C. U. but wishing to remain independent, may become "affiliated organizations" and will then be entitled to a representative on the Council.

ALBERT J. duBois
Executive Director of the A. C. U.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA

★ On January 7, 1951, the parishes of Western Massachusetts and their adopted German parishes in Berlin had a common service of worship. This Sunday, appropriate both from the point of view that it was the Sunday after the Epiphany, a season of emphasis upon the missionary spirit, and also a time of particular tension for the people in Germany, was a Communion Sunday for both. The suggested message was taken from the epistle for the day (Romans 12:1-5). The same hymns were sung in all churches, and the text was "Behold."

The relationship was established in December, 1947, by Bishop Lawrence, and plans were carried out under the direction of Mrs. Henry Walter of Longmeadow. Each Episcopal minister was given the name of a German pastor. He then packed a food box and sent him an air mail letter introducing himself and telling of his work and his parish. Since then letters have been coming back and going forth, and special prayers have been said in each church regularly.

NEW CATHEDRAL IN HANKOW

★ After five years of worshipping in the upstairs chapel of St. Lois School, the congregation of St. Paul's Cathedral, Hankow, China, thankfully consecrated its new building on December 23. The old St. Paul's weathered six years of the latest war, only to be shattered by American bombers returning in 1945. In 1949 services in St. Lois School became impossible, owing to the new government's rule that worship may not be conducted in schools but only in separate church buildings. The altar, rail, and pulpit from St. Lois Chapel, designed by the mission architect, John Van Wie Bergamini, have been moved to the new cathedral. The work has been supervised by a Chinese engineer, member of the congregation.

Work was started in Hankow in 1868, when the city was largely in ruins after the Taiping rebellion. The church which was destroyed in 1945 was built in 1891 and has been listed as the Cathedral since 1910. In 1911 it was used as a hospital during the revolution of that time when some 250,000 Hankow people were made homeless.

PARIS CATHEDRAL ISSUES BROCHURE

★ The American Cathedral of the Holy Trinity in Paris, France, has just issued a full-color brochure, marking the more than one hundred years of its existence. There are full color photographs of the present cathedral and also a reproduction of a painting by Jean Beraud entitled "After service at Holy Trinity, Christmas, 1890," with members of many well-known families of that day shown in the painting. There is a resume of the history of the parish which began in 1847.

CONFERENCE CENTER FOR MARYLAND

★ The diocese of Maryland has received the gift of a property of 290 acres on the Monocacy River, south of Frederick, for a conference center. It is a fully equipped dairy farm which was formerly the Buckingham School, a farm school for less fortunate boys. The school operated for forty-six years, closing in 1944. The main building has dormitories, class rooms, recreation rooms, a chapel, dining room, kitchen and infirmary. It will need renovation and repair after six years of disuse and the trustees of the Buckingham School Foundation have made a cash gift of $30,000 to the diocese for this purpose. The center, to be known as the Claggett Diocesan Center to memorialize the first bishop of the diocese and the first to be consecrated in America, is so equipped that it can be used the year around.

ANGLICAN SOCIETY TO MEET

★ The annual meeting of the Anglican Society will be held January 25th in Seabury Hall at the General Seminary, New York. There will be a meeting at four o'clock, followed by an address by the Rev. William H. Dunphy of Philadelphia. Friends of the Society, as well as members, are invited.

BISHOP RETURNS TO PARISH

★ Bishop Atwill, who retired as bishop of North Dakota this month, has returned to the diocese of Missouri to become the rector of Trinity, Kirksville. The son of the first bishop of West Missouri, he began his ministry in Sedalia of that diocese. In 1917 he took charge of St. Augustine's, St. Louis, where he served for six years.

CHURCHES RELINQUISH AID OF DIOCESE

★ The Church's growing work in southeast Missouri became self-supporting as of January 1 when new clergymen became rectors of the two key parishes, both of which voted to relinquish diocesan aid. The Rev. John C. Tierney is rector of Christ Church, Cape Girardeau, and the Rev. William C. Johnson is rector of Holy Cross, Poplar Bluff. Two missions, started last year under the direction of the Poplar Bluff parish, one at Sikeston and the other at Charleston, expect to support their own full-time minister and to erect new churches by summer.

NEW MISSION IN OHIO

★ Six months ago Mr. Ralph Noblett, layman of the diocese of Ohio, began a neighborhood visitation in Parma, a rapidly developing suburb of Cleveland. Within a short period of time a nucleus of families was formed and informal services held at the Parma community center. On December 10 the new Calvary Mission held its first official service with the Archdeacon, Donald Wonders, celebrating and preaching. Bishop Beverley D. Tucker has appointed Archdeacon Wonders in charge of the mission until the congregation is able to secure a suitable location for its church building and a clergyman appointed to take charge of the work.

Already the facilities of the community center are overtaxed and negotiations are being conducted for larger quarters. The diocese is providing a clergyman each Sunday with the Archdeacon in attendance once a month.

CONSECRATION OF R. H. BAKER

★ The Rev. Richard H. Baker will be consecrated coadjutor of North Carolina on January 25th at the Good Shepherd, Raleigh. The Presiding Bishop will be consecrator and Bishop Powell of Maryland and Bishop Penick of North Carolina the co-consecrators. The presentors will be Bishop Wright of East Carolina and Bishop Gravatt of Upper South Carolina. Bishop Tucker of Ohio will be the preacher. The litany will be read by Bishop Henry of Western North Carolina and the attending presbyters will be Owings Stone of Barrington, R. I., and Philip Jensen of Owings Mills, Md.

HOUSE OF BISHOPS HAS MEETING

★ The 119 bishops attending the meeting of the House of Bishops in El Paso, January 9-12, received a communication from the American Church Union about previously reported differences of opinion regarding administration of Holy Communion by Bishop Dun of Washington and Bishop Hall of New Hampshire. Without debate the House passed the following resolution presented by Bishop Conkling of Chicago:

"Whereas the petition brings before us matters of deep concern to many of the faithful, we move that it be received and assurance given that these matters are also of serious concern to us and we trust that by patience and understanding consideration of these and other divergencies of thought and practice amongst us, we may come to a mutually happy agreement and the deepening of the fellowship."

Bishop Bentley, vice president of the National Council in charge of overseas work asked that Okinawa be placed under the jurisdiction of Honolulu. It was referred to the foreign missions committee which unquestionably will report favorably.

Bishop Goodwin of Virginia reported on a study of clergy salaries and urged the bishops to work for improved salaries, especially for missionary clergy.

Bishop Washburn and Bishop Nash reported a meeting of deans of theological seminaries and the joint commission on theological education on the matter of deferment of pre-seminarians from military service. He asked that the House approve a statement, and that it be forwarded to the proper agencies of the government. The statement, interpreted by some of the bishops as an attempt to "make tougher" the securing of exemption for such students, asks that it be required that the applicant for exemption be a postulant; that the seminary receive a letter from the applicant's bishop containing a positive request for pre-enrollment; that the seminary receive a transcript of the applicant's college work covering at least two academic years; that the applicant should undertake to pursue in college under the direction of the seminary faculty the course of studies recommended by the American Association of Theological Schools. A letter is then to be sent certifying that the applicant has applied for admission to the seminary named, that he has been enrolled as a pre-student and that he will be admitted upon satisfactory completion of the seminary's entrance requirements. The seminary will state also that it does not feel bound to admit the applicant at a future date unless he then satisfies the faculty of his general fitness to undertake preparation for the ministry.

The House approved the statement.

Further reports of the meeting will appear next week.

MINISTERS PETITION SUPREME COURT

★ On January 12th, 2,576 Protestant clergymen, of all denominations and of every state, filed a motion in the Supreme Court for leave to submit a brief as "Friends of the Court" in the Melish case. The document states that the petitioners "seek an opportunity to defend all religious beliefs from the invasion of civil authority, and, specifically, to establish the principle that in matters affecting the affairs of a religious organization the state may not either directly or indirectly provide rules or penalties where the religious organization has provided its own rules for the management of its affairs and the solution of controversies within its organization, and its own penalties for a breach thereof."

The following bishops of the Episcopal Church are among the petitioners: Bishops Aldrich, Barton, Craighill, Ludlow, McElwain, Walter Mitchell, Moulton, Parsons, Walker, White.

TO DISCUSS OUR SOCIAL ORDER

★ The commission on Christian social relations of New York is sponsoring a workshop on the Church and the social order, for clergy and laity of the diocese, to be held at the Synod House, January 29 and 30. At the Monday afternoon session, the Rev. Cameron Hall, executive secretary of the department of the Church and economic life of the National Council of the Churches, will speak on the direction of social and economic change. The Rev. Leland B. Henry, executive director of the commission on Christian social relations of the diocese, will speak on the preservation of peace. The Rev. Moran Weston, assistant minister, St. Philip's Church, New York, will speak on the preservation of freedom.

The theology of social action will be the subject that evening, with the Rev. Thomas Bigham, instructor in Christian ethics at the General Theological Seminary, as the speaker. On Tuesday morning the Rev. John A. Bell, rector of the Incarnation, New York, will speak on the techniques of the Church for social education and social action. The final session will be an address by Bishop Horace W. B. Donegan on the Church and the social order.

At each session, except the last, there will be two discussants, who will comment from their particular point of view, and then a half hour panel discussion, with questions and brief comments from the floor.

PRAYER BOOK CHANGES DISCUSSED

★ The Rev. Bayard Jones, vice chairman of the Liturgical Commission, will conduct a series of five all-day meetings January 22-26 with the clergy of the Diocese of Chicago at which proposed changes in the Book of Common Prayer will be studied and discussed.

The clergy, in groups of 25 to 30, will meet at five centers.

A. C. U. SPEAKERS' BUREAU ARRANGES SCHEDULES

★ The newly formed speakers' bureau at the New York office of the A. C. U. is a clearing center for the arrangement of schedules for distinguished visitors to the Church. The aim is to provide speakers and leaders for the continuing programs of teaching and witness in regional branches.

The Rt. Rev. Cecil Douglas Horsley, Bishop of Gibraltar, is being scheduled for a number of meetings and services in Eastertide of 1951. A former missionary bishop of the Anglican diocese of Colombo, the Bishop of Gibralter now administers a diocese extending from Gibralter to Turkey and including all of southern Europe. His contacts with the Orthodox Churches of the East are varied and rich and as one of the few Churchmen allowed "behind the iron curtain" it is anticipated that he will have an interesting story to tell on his American tour.

Key women of the Church are being trained as speakers and leaders for the women's section of the speakers' bureau and will be available for talks to women's groups. This section is under the direction and leadership of Mrs. H. Karl Lutge of New York.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR PEACE

★ Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, had more than 2,000 worshippers at a 12-hour vigil for peace, sponsored by the Church Federation and the Rabbinical Association. Twenty-four pastors and rabbis alternately presided over the long service.

DEFENSE CHAPLAINS IN PHILADELPHIA

★ The civil defense council of Philadelphia has a chaplain corps to administer to the spiritual needs of people in the event of a bomb attack. At present the corps has a nucleus in the Rev. George A. Trowbridge, rector of St. Paul's, Chestnut Hill, who was appointed chief chaplain and given three deputies, a Baptist minister, a Roman priest and a Jewish rabbi.

PORTLAND HOSPITAL EXPANDS

★ Work is under way on the new $2,500,000 wing for Good Shepherd Hospital, Portland, Oregon. One-third of the cost will be supplied by the federal government, with another large share coming from the estate of the late Mrs. Rosalie Willman, Episcopalian of Milwaukie, Ore.

NEW CHURCH IN OMAHA

NEW MISSIONARIES IN LIBERIA

★ The recent arrival of the Rev. Max M. Pearse in Liberia completes the number of nine new missionaries appointed for that field during the past year. Counting two wives, the nine include two priests, one physician, one nurse, two college science teachers and, for the secondary schools, one teacher, one principal, one superintendent. As this brings the appointed staff to nineteen, plus several most useful wives doing full-time professional teaching, the mission is better staffed than it has been for many years though not well enough even yet, Bishop Harris realizes, to provide fully for essential furloughs or to meet opportunities for advance.

ST. BARNABAS HOUSE TO HAVE BENEFIT

★ The annual opera benefit to aid St. Barnabas House, New York, will be held January 23rd when "Il Trovatore" will be given with a notable cast, including Zinka Milanov, Fedora Barbieri, Kurt Baum and Francesco Valentino. St. Barnabas House is a modern, temporary shelter for homeless women and children operated by the City Mission Society of the diocese.

A. C. U. ELECTS NEW OFFICERS

★ The Rev. Albert J. duBois, executive director of the A. C. U., announces significant additions to the executive board in the election to office of two women and two representatives of Negro parishes. The newly elected members are: Mrs. Frederick Dent Sharp of New York, well known as a Church leader and as one of the speakers for Women's Auxiliary groups sent out by the National Council; Mrs. Richard T. Loring, Duxbury, Mass., widow of the late Bishop of Springfield; the Rev. Arthur J. Moore, rector of St. Luke's Church, New York, and Dr. Lemuel T. Sewell, M. D., of Philadelphia.

In connection with women's work, Mrs. H. Karl Lutge has been active in addressing women's groups in the diocese of Los Angeles during the current month and plans are under way for the establishment of a special A. C. U. committee for "women's work" which, among other activities, will train and provide speakers for women's groups throughout the Church.

MORE CHAPLAINS ARE NEEDED

★ President Truman's committee on religion and welfare in the armed forces has issued a statement calling upon religious groups to continue and increase their support for members of the armed forces. It states that "We have asked more than a million and a half of our men and women to serve in that force—a large portion of which are young men under 21 years of age. If the men and women of this armed force are truly to defend our heritage and transmit it to the generations that follow, their spiritual welfare and their well-being must continue to be a constant concern to all of us while they are in the armed forces and away from the influence of their home, church and family."

The statement specifically calls for more chaplains. "The present needs continue to demand our best men for the chaplaincy in the armed forces, and chaplains of high quality must be forthcoming in the future as they have been forthcoming in the past. We emphasize that the ministry in the chaplaincy is on an equal footing with the ministry in the parish and congregation or in missionary work."

ST. PHILIP'S SOCIETY NEW PRESIDENT

★ The Rev. William P. Barnds, rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebr., is the new president of St. Philip's Society, succeeding the Rev. Charles Hull of Chicago. The society was organized twenty-five years ago with the object of publishing inexpensive tracts and religious pictures. The Rev. Frederic S. Eastman has been the executive secretary from the beginning.

FRANK SIBILIA HONORED

★ Bishop Karl Morgan Block joined with Bishop Henry H. Shires in speaking at the dinner in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sibilia at St. Alban's Church, Albany, Calif. Bishop Block spoke of the real insight that Sibilia has in dealing with people, and of the assistance that he has given the diocese in helping to find locations for advance work, such as the discovery of the property which is now Rancho del Obispo. Bishop Shires spoke of Sibilia's work as a member of St. Alban's, and of how he had personally raised over $15,000 through vocational giving and had inspired others to take part in the project. The Rev. Randolph C. Miller was toastmaster, introduced the charter members of the congregation, spoke of the work of Mrs. Sibilia as the woman behind the man and of their family, and added his interpretation of vocational giving. On behalf of the congregation, Sibilia was presented with a briefcase and Mrs. Sibilia a wallet.

STUDY OF DETROIT CHURCHES

★ A dozen rectors of Detroit's downtown churches met recently with Prof. Joseph G. Moore of Seabury-Western Seminary and Bishop Emrich to launch a study of these parishes. Out of the project it is hoped that a unified policy of study and planning may be developed.

And There Shall Be Signs

A LAYMAN of our acquaintance has stopped reading his daily newspapers, because what he reads is too terrible. We do not agree with his ostrich-like action but we do agree that the signs of the times are terrible. They are more than that —they are bewildering, frightening, full of fear and evil. Almost literally there are signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars. Literally upon earth there is distress among nations with perplexity, men's hearts are failing them for fear, and they are looking after the things that are coming on the earth. The little apocalypse in St. Luke is more than a theological nicety. It is stark reality. The Lord God has spoken—again.

The judgments of God are collective as well as individual. Nations also stand before the righteous judge. The nations of the earth now stand before the judgment seat. The righteous judge is Jesus Christ. As revealer of the divine mind in all things he shall judge the nations according to their knowledge of him and the opportunities they had to serve him.

The righteous judge has judged nations in the past. Israel, Babylon, Greece, Rome, and the empires of the modern world—these nations have stood and are standing before this judge, and they have been found guilty. They paid the penalty. This nation has stood before the righteous judge before and a great leader told the nation so. Abraham Lincoln prayed for peace, hoped that the mighty scourge of civil war might pass away, but he realized that American slavery was an offense against God. He told the people that if God willed it the war might continue until every drop of blood drawn by the lash was paid for by another drawn by the sword. He told the people that the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.

The signs are clear today. We need some great political leader, with a deep spiritual insight, to tell us in plain words what the signs we see really mean. The righteous judge is still passing sentence on the nations of the world. Nevertheless, there is a note of hope, but that hope is not the hope of temporal or worldly power. It is the hope that our Redeemer draws near. Even though earth and sky pass away his words will not pass away. It is most unfortunate that the familiar words of the Gospel ends as it does. It does not tell us what to do as the day arrives. We quote the plain words of the Goodspeed translation and suggest a solemn searching of heart.

"But take care that your hearts are not loaded down with self-indulgence and drunkenness and worldly cares, and that day takes you by surprise, like a trap. For it will come on all who are living anywhere on the face of the earth. But you must be vigilant and always pray that you may succeed in escaping all this that is going to happen, and in standing in the presence of the Son of Man."

"QUOTES"

PRAYER FOR UNITY

ALMIGHTY GOD, whose blessed Son was manifested that he might bring together in one flock all the elect people of God, mercifully grant the guidance of thy Holy Spirit to all who pray and labour for the visible unity of those who have been baptized in the Name of the Trinity in Unity; and at the intercession of the blessed Mother of God and all the Saints who have been the light of the world both in the East and in the West, bring near the time when, with one spirit and one mouth, thy Church may serve thee in peace and love, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE BEATITUDES, of course, are familiar to all Church people. It is often true however that familiar things are not well understood for that very reason. Members of The Witness editorial board are therefore to present for our series of articles this Lent the meaning of the Beatitudes for the world today. The authors will be the Rev. W. B. Hampshire, rector at Farmingdale, Long Island; the Rev. Benjamin Minifie, rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J.; the Rev. Kenneth R. Forbes of Philadelphia; the Rev. Joseph H. Titus of Jamaica, Long Island; the Rev. George MacMurray, rector of St. Philip's, Brooklyn; the Rev. Gordon C. Graham, rector of St. Paul's, Eastchester, N. Y.; the Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector of the Ascension, New York; the Rev. Andrew M. Van Dyke, rector of Christ Church, Middletown, N. J.

The series will be prepared with discussion groups in mind. However it is our hope that rectors throughout the country will make The Witness available to their people during Lent, whether or not they plan a group. Bundle orders should be sent to The Witness at Tunkhannock, Pa., and we suggest that they be placed at once since Ash Wednesday comes very early this year. Order forms are now in the mail for all the clergy, which we ask them to return at once.

The Whole Faith For the Whole World

BY SPENCER ERVIN
President of the A. C. U.

THE AMERICAN CHURCH UNION is as one with its counterparts throughout the Anglican Communion in seeking to maintain and extend the faith, and to deepen the spiritual life of the Church. It is an association of clergy and lay people in the Episcopal Church. Its purpose is to bear witness to the faith "as this Church hath received the same," to maintain and extend that faith as enshrined in the Book of Common Prayer and in the tradition of the Church, and to promote ways of deepening the spiritual life of the Church.

In the long history of the Church in England there have been two major efforts to wrest it from its loyalty to the Church of the Apostles and of the New Testament. The first, extending over nearly five centuries, sought to change the Church, as it had existed there from the earliest times, into a papal Church; to secure in England the fruits of the victory of the papacy over the reforming councils of Constance and Basel. Hardly was this danger past when a different one arose. This time the effort was to make over the Church after one or more of the patterns of the Continental Reformation. It came near success in the brief reign of Edward VI and was renewed under Elizabeth, to whose steadfastness and wisdom, and that of Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, its defeat in that difficult period is chiefly owing. The effort however continued, as is well known, and is with us today both in England and America. It has joined forces with a newer Liberal Unitarianism, and is attacking foundations, obscuring the faith, confusing the faithful, and weakening the mission of the Church and the enthusiasm and support of its people.

Full Heritage

THE AMERICAN CHURCH UNION, like its counterparts throughout the Anglican Communion, owes its origin to the need for meeting the danger just described by an assertion of the full ancient heritage transmitted to us by the Church in England. Its membership consists of those who desire to join in this assertion through a carefully planned program of witness and teaching. The strength of the Church Union movement is derived from the association of those who accept the ancient faith and wish to have the Episcopal Church and the Anglican Communion as a whole continue their witness to it. The motto of the A. C. U., The Whole Faith for the Whole World, and its program, are founded on "the faith once given" and revealed by our blessed Lord in its fulness, and on the maintenance of Apostolic truth as the only sure basis for Christian unity.

The A. C. U. is concerned with the responsibility imposed upon all Christians to "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered." We therefore do not hesitate to speak out in defense where there are forces seeking to alter or water down God's gift to us. We protest only where divisive attacks are made on the historic faith. That in doing so we have been with a large majority of the Church has been apparent on more than one occasion.

The A. C. U. is concerned of course with the pressing problem of Church unity. But it stands for a leadership in approaching it which is faithful to the heritage and vocation of the Church. James DeKoven, that saint and leader of earlier days in the American Church, wrote: "I do not know what reason our Church has to exist except that she is the American branch of the Holy Catholic Church and that, as such, she can do what no other body can accomplish. Otherwise it is sinful for her to seek to do Christ's work in competition with larger Christian groups, thus promoting the weakness of disunion and of separate and opposing organization."

We believe it is only against the background of this principle that our Church can give any enduring leadership toward ultimate unity. We stand for the preservation of the Apostolic truth, sacraments and ministry presented in our Prayer

Book and in our Anglican tradition. These have little in common with the relatively new policies and ministries existing around us. There is no middle way between adherence to our Apostolic tradition and abandonment of it. This fact needs proclamation with complete charity but also with complete clarity. We look for a reunion of Christendom faithful to the foundations laid by our Lord for his Church, and loyal to the guidance of the Holy Spirit in nearly two thousand years of Christian history; not a unity of expedience obtainable only by the sacrifice of essentials.

Expanded Program

BECAUSE of the serious threats of today to the unity of our Church and in response to the desire of Churchmen throughout the nation for leadership, we have in recent months expanded our program. Our work of teaching and bearing witness to the faith is perhaps best known through the Congresses we sponsor from time to time, but in addition to these a continuing program of teaching and witness is carried on through our regional and local associations, daily increasing in number.

The A. C. U. is not preoccupied with ceremonial, but with witnessing to and teaching the faith. It knows however that traditional ceremonial is a means of setting forth truth visually in a form long antedating the present valuable emphasis upon visual education. But decision as to the character of services is always left to local groups.

Our monthly publication, the A. C. U. News, is sent to all our members to assist in developing an informed laity to work with the clergy to win souls and to strengthen them with the means of grace God intends us to use. Elsewhere in this issue appears a list of our committees at work to deepen the spiritual life of the Church and increase her apprehension of God's will and purpose.

The American Church Union is the extension of the strength and voice of each of its members in the sphere beyond the personal and parochial: the voice of individual and parochial conviction for spreading the faith in its fulness and for its defense throughout the Church and nation. We invite all who share our ideals and who stand firm for the faith once delivered to join us in our effort by means of membership in The American Church Union.

Week of Prayer For Christian Unity

BY

CHARLES E. GREENE

Rector, Trinity Church, Ambler, Pa., and chairman of The ACU committee for the Week of Prayer

THE desire for visible unity among the separated sections of Christendom is the outstanding characteristic of Christian thought in the first half of the 20th century. This desire has been made visible in the formation of national and world councils, and in organic union activities within Catholic and Protestant churches and denominations. No one would deny that there has been some progress and there is much in which all Christians can rejoice, but it is likewise true that all has not furthered unity but has, in some cases, made for additional separation. The Church of South India is an example. All that has been accomplished does not meet with the approval of both Catholic and Protestant traditions.

Further, while there is value in seeking spheres of mutual understanding and cooperation, these must always be recognized as temporary substitutes. They are the best that can be obtained at present but are far from the true unity of Christ and nothing less than that unity is worthy of the name. The ultimate can only be gained through unity based on a common faith and order. This and this alone is Christian unity. To seek such we must pray as one the prayer of Christ: "That they may be one, even as we are one . . . that the world may believe." That this prayer has not been answered is due entirely to man's sin—which we must recognize as the sin of all.

Unity must be wanted because it is the will of our Lord. In these dark days of history, we know a united Christendom is necessary to defeat the forces of atheism but this should not be confused with the basic reason for seeking unity. Disunity is a scandal to the Christian and the world but, again, this is not the basic reason. It perhaps is unnecessary to state that economic or administrative problems are absolutely outside the scope of unity or any phase of it. The only reason for unity is because Christ wills it.

January 18th Through 25th

TO the end that difficulties may be resolved, that motives and methods be emptied of self-interest, The American Church Union is again sponsoring the observance of the Week of Prayer for Christian unity beginning January 18th and ending January 25th. Prayers for unity should be constant, universal and corporate. The "they" of our Lord's High Priestly prayer is not to be limited to the Christian family but must include all those united with and separated from Christ. Christian unity is the unity of all humanity in the Son of God. That is the purpose and scope of the Week of Prayer.

The history of this observance, in part at least, goes back to 1908, when a group of Anglicans in England, set apart the week of January 18th to 25th as a time to pray for the healing of the breach between the Roman and Anglican Communions. Since this was based on a complete acceptance of Roman claims, the movement did not meet with the approval of many within the Anglican Communion and it was limited in its acceptance. After the first world war the English Church Union set aside the period between the feasts of the Ascension and Pentecost as a time for corporate prayer for unity. The scope of this included all Christians and therefore met with more support throughout the Anglican Communion. The original movement, called the Church unity octave, had in the meantime, received cooperation from certain Calvinist, Lutheran and Orthodox groups on the continent of Europe. This made for some confusion for there were two groups of Christians with the same intention praying at different times. When we consider that the intention was unity the lack of it was clearly shown in the light of corporate efforts to eliminate it.

Movement Spreads

UNDER the leadership of Belgium Roman Catholics, particularly the Trappist Monks of Unity at Chevetogne and the Abbe Couturier, the movement received support from that Communion without reference to papal claims. This gave greater impetus to the observance and since there were no special intentions involving matters of principle, it received an even greater degree of support and spread through France, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Greece and portions of Europe now under Soviet domination. As a result, in 1939 the Anglican observance was moved up to the January period. Further, the superiors of the English religious communities for men made this statement: "We believe that as the prayer of all Christians becomes unanimous with that of Christ, in whom alone is unity, God will hear the voice of his son resounding throughout the broken ranks of Christendom, and by ways beyond our present power to discern, will restore its visible unity." This moving appeal is being heeded by many for the movement is now universal as to time and scope.

When it is considered that this movement includes Roman Catholics, Orthodox, Anglicans and Protestant Communions and concerns the unification of all peoples, even those outside the Christian family and makes no recommendations as to method or manner, it is difficult to imagine any loyal member of the Church not giving it his or her wholehearted support. To provide some degree of uniformity and some guidance in observing the Week of Prayer a leaflet has been prepared which can be secured from The American Church Union, 347 Madison Avenue, New York 17, N. Y., at 10c per dozen.

A special appeal is directed to all members of the clergy. Details for the observance can be worked out against the background of local conditions and traditions. In some parishes it may be possible to place these intercession leaflets in the hands of every member of the parish for personal use. It is hoped that in many cases there will be a daily celebration of the Holy Communion for the intention of the day with the special prayers used after the service.

LENTEN TRAINING

LENT means Spring, and spring suggests work. But it suggests work that is profitable and for which there is a harvest in which we will reap that which we sow. Lent is a season in which we are to break up the hard soil by penitence, and so let the word of God be sown in our hearts that our lives may be fruitful. And the fruits of the spirit are love, joy and peace.

—the late Bishop Johnson

A Rosy Picture With Clouds In the Offing

BY
WALTER H. STOWE
Editor of the Historical Magazine

THE state of the Episcopal Church as revealed by the Living Church Annual, 1951,[1] the authoritative yearbook, was, as of December 31, 1949, or January 1, 1950, an encouraging one. Not only had the Church recovered substantially from the effects of world war II, but in most categories all previous records had been broken.

Church members (baptized persons) numbered 2,540,548 at the end of 1949, an increase of 3.09% over 1948; of these, 1,688,611 were communicants.

The geographical distribution of Church members in order of largest number is as follows:

Province	Baptized Members	Communicants
1. New York and New Jersey (II)	582,355	387,291
2. Washington (III)	401,492	289,822
3. New England (I)	350,021	225,035
4. Mid-West (V)	308,276	210,606
5. Pacific (VIII)	256,974	156,915[2]
6. Sewanee (IV)	241,240	178,085[2]
7. Southwest (VII)	153,763	113,581
8. Northwest (VI)	132,721	90,091

2 The province of the Pacific (VIII) has more baptized members but fewer communicants than the Province of Sewanee (IV).

The standing of the provinces in order of highest percentage increase in communicants was:

Province	Increase or Decrease Number	Percentage Increase or Decrease
1. Southwest (VII)	5,728	5.31%
2. Washington (III)	9,233	3.29[3]
3. Sewanee (IV)	4,210	2.42
4. Pacific (VIII)	3,123	2.03
5. Mid-West (V)	3,050	1.47
6. Northwest (VI)	870	.98
7 New York and New Jersey (II)	846	.22
8. New England (I)	-1,842	-.81

3 This increase was principally due to a gain of 9,237 communicants in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, which made up losses in four other dioceses of that province.

For two decades the Pacific and the Southwest have led all the provinces in percentage of increase in communicants, but this past year the Pacific has dropped from first place to fourth. However, we shall have to wait until the returns for 1950 are in before we can have a well rounded picture of the last decade. There is no doubt but that the Church on the Pacific Coast has profited greatly from the war and post-war migration to that area; likewise, the Southwest, and to a less degree, the South, east of the Mississippi River.

Confirmations totalled 85,989, an increase of 8.6% over 1948. This latter year was the first that this Church has ever had 80,000 or more confirmations.

Church Schools had made quite a comeback. Teachers: 60,151, an increase of 6.73% over 1948; scholars: 514,754, an increase of 6.3% over 1948. The highest enrollment hitherto was in 1933, when 510,309 scholars were reported. The low point in the intervening period was ten years later, in 1943 (a war year), when total enrollment sank to 387,981.

Total receipts amounted to $73,844,880, an increase of $4,500,000, or 6.5% over 1948.

The clergy numbered 6,654, an increase of 186 or 2.88% over 1948; but this is not as cheering as it sounds. We shall discuss this more fully below.

Ordinations: 255 deacons, an increase of 75 or 41.6% over 1948; 240 priests, an increase of 73 or 43.7% over 1948.

The first time the Church ever had 1,000 postulants for the ministry at any year's end was in 1948; but in 1949 it had 1,106, an increase of 32 or 2.98% over 1948. This is in some measure due to the fact that the period of postulancy has been lengthened. One is not now admitted as a candidate for holy orders until he has spent one full year in a theological seminary. Even so, the candidates for orders numbered 486, an increase of 102 or 26.5% over 1948.

In fifty years the number of lay readers has tripled. In 1900 the Church had less than 2,000; in 1950, 6,016, and this latter figure was an increase of 490 or 8.8% over the preceding year. This has both an encouraging and a discouraging aspect. The former is that we have so many laymen godly enough to supply services and assist the clergy in their ministrations; the discouraging aspect is that we do not have enough clergy to man the Church's posts, and a layman, however godly, cannot do the work of a priest; i.e. he cannot administer the sacraments.

Some Declines

FOR only three years in its history has the Church exceeded 100,000 baptisms per year: 1947 — 110,618; 1948 — 103,452; 1949 — 104,037. While the number in 1949 was slightly higher than in 1948, it was 6,500 less than the high mark of 1947. Some recession in the birth rate is indicated. It is interesting to note that of the 104,037 baptisms in 1949, some 16,550 or 15.9% were adults. This has been a fairly constant proportion of adults in the total number of baptisms for some years.

Marriages showed the heaviest decline of any item in the whole list of statistics. There were only 28,695 solemnized by the Church in 1949 as compared with 33,502 in 1948—a decrease of 4,807 or 14.3%. The year 1942 had the largest number in the records—41,970; 1946 was a close second—40,694. The low birth rate of the 1930's is having, and probably will continue to have for some time, its effect upon the rate of marriages.

Burials have been fairly uniform in number during the past decade, totalling around 55,000 per year: in 1949, 55,354, as against 56,577 in 1948, a decrease of 1,223 or 2.16%. The highest number was in 1928: 57,517; the second highest in 1941: 57,486; the third highest in 1948: 56,577. It should be understood that many burials at which every clergyman officiates are not those of communicants or even baptized members of his parish, but of those whose families for one reason or another want the services of this Church.

Parishes and missions as reported dropped from 7,834 in 1948 to 7,784 in 1949, a loss of 50. This may not mean much, since the cost of operating separate congregations, the widespread use of the automobile, and the better program which larger congregations can offer, often dictates the merger of two or more congregations. On the other hand, if it means that no new parishes or missions are being established among the many new housing developments, it is a serious matter.

Clouds in the Offing

THIS fairly rosy picture was clouded at the end of 1950 by the increasing number of college students who wished to study for the ministry and who were being drafted into the armed forces of the United States. Although the Church's theological seminaries were full to overflowing (and were financially strained to the breaking point in trying to train properly the largest numbers they ever had enrolled), the threatening international situation appeared likely to curtail the current recruiting for the ministry. What has been a bright promise of soon having enough clergy not only to man the Church's posts but to undertake a program of expansion, is in serious danger of being blighted and of putting the Church back where it was in the days of world war II.

It should be clearly understood by all, and especially by the laity, what an increased load has been put upon the clergy of today. In 1900, fifty years ago, the Episcopal Church had 5,011 clergymen to shepherd 719,540 communicants, which was on the average, 143 communicants per clergyman.

At the beginning of 1950, this Church had only 6,654 clergymen to take care of 1,688,611 communicants, which was an average of 253 communicants per clergyman.

Today, then, each clergyman has on an average 110 more communicants to minister to than his predecessor in 1900.

But the clergy have to give pastoral care to many who are not communicants—to all Church members, which includes all baptized members. In 1927,[4] we had 6,207 clergy to shepherd 1,789,042 baptized persons, an average of 288 persons per clergyman.

In 1950, the Church had only 6,654 clergy to look after 2,540,548 baptized persons—an average of 383 members per clergyman.

Thus, today, each clergyman has almost 100 more members on the average under his pastoral care than was the case as recently as twenty-three years ago. Moreover, the demands upon his time and energies for all kinds of community service have greatly increased during the past half-century.

This means that the Church, if it is to live up to its responsibilities, if it is to take advantage of its opportunities, if it is to expand, if it is to preach the gospel and administer the sacraments in accordance with the divine imperative, must have more clergy.

4 Unfortunately, we do not have any reliable statistics of the Church's baptized members before 1927. This should demonstrate the importance of full and accurate statistics.

Through Jesus Christ Our Lord

BY

MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR

THE familiar principle that the rule of prayer is the rule of belief (lex orandi lex credendi) has its best illustration in the phrase most common to all our prayers—through Jesus Christ our Lord. These words make all the difference, for they distinguish and define the true reference and relevance of all our worship. It is strange to hear some parsons read them at public prayers as though they were a mere formula, a verbal punctuation separating more important statements in the liturgy about

God and ourselves. Yet, in truth, everytime a person says these words he is repeating the basic commitment of his life, the very faith he professed at his baptism, when he was born again in order to be made an heir of everlasting salvation. He is uttering a name in place of which "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

On a bookshelf near my desk rests a Jewish Prayer Book containing the liturgy of the synagogue, a liturgy in which Jesus Himself was nurtured and blessed. A Christian can use to his soul's health every word in this prayer book, written as it is in the language of the law, the prophets and the psalms. Yet it could never satisfy his thirst for communion with God our Father, for it lacks four essential words: Jesus Christ our Lord. Not far away on the same shelf is another book, the Meditations of the philosopher-emperor Marcus Aurelius. No pagan ever wrote a nobler diary of devotion. An eminent modern philosopher said of its effect upon the reader: "the heart is touched, the soul is enriched, the spirit is elevated." It is one of the ironies of history that this humble, unselfish and conscientious ruler was a persecutor of Christianity. He was not lacking in a measure of faith, and his disposition was one of charity. But he had no hope—no hope like that of the Christians he martyred, hope of eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord.

We should ever be on our guard lest the bow of our head at the name of Jesus or the responsive Amen to the title Christ our Lord become a conditioned reflex. And what we take for granted and think to be obvious may well be the most important thing of all. For if we stop to think of it the repeated naming of Jesus Christ our Lord opens to us an inexhaustible resource of meditation. Above all, it reminds us that our Christian religion is not a complex of religious sentiments, or a way of life, or a system of doctrine, but rather a relationship to a Person. Modern higher critics try valiantly to separate what they call the religion of Jesus from the religion about Jesus; but the New Testament is unaware of this distinction. It is little use trying to follow the example of our Lord's holy life unless we have not only faith about Him, but faith in Him as the Anointed of God and the sovereign Lord of all that is in the heaven and upon the earth.

Jesus is a personal name, one common among the Jews, but in the case of Jesus a name specially chosen of God, for it means "Jehovah is salvation." By this name we confess Him to have been a man among men, a sharer of our common humanity, with His own appointed vocation fulfilled within the limits of time and place. Each one of us, too, has a name, a Christian name given us at our baptism; and each of us also has a vocation which God appoints for us in our several times and places. It is the mark of our individuality, of our true human fulfillment, of our manhood when it is patterned after the perfect Manhood of Jesus. But Jesus has not only the name of an historical person, but the title of an historical destiny. He is the Christ, the Messiah, the Annointed One. In Him alone history finds its meaning, all that came before Him and all that comes after. For He is the hope of all the earth. "All that ever came before me," said Jesus, "are thieves and robbers." And again, "if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs . . . believe it not."

Finally, Jesus is divine Lord. By Him were we all created, and through Him are we all recreated as sons of God. And God has made subject to Him all powers and lordships. The acknowledgment of His Lordship in our prayer is the same affirmation of our Creeds, of the Te Deum, and the Gloria in excelsis. It is the profession of our baptismal and confirmation promises—to follow Him as Lord and Saviour. It is, above all, the ringing acclamation which sounds throughout the lesson of our final Office of the Dead: "For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death . . . The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven . . . But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

CHAIN is made of metal links. The addition of more links increases its length but not its strength. A break in one link breaks the chain.

Rope is made of tiny strands. The addition of more strands increases its strength but not its length. A break in one strand weakens but does not break the rope.

Chain and rope represent different types of togetherness. In chain each link surrenders nothing of itself though it is linked to others. In rope each strand depends upon the pressure of the ones next to it and allows itself to be lost in the twistings of the rope. In chain each link gets the full load. In rope the strain is shared.

I believe God intends our groups to be more like rope than chain. But he is often blocked by our reluctance to be lost in the group. We keep our eyes on what we are getting out of it and forget where we belong in it. We try to put the blame for trouble on some other link instead of taking up the extra strain. We'd rather be shiny links than sturdy strands.

Where we really follow the guidance of the spirit, there is a blending of individuals in common prayer and work, in love and worship in which it is a joy to share. God offers us ever greater measures of that joy as we let ourselves be twisted and lost in the cause of Christ. Will you let him twist you tightly with the other strands which have put themselves in his hands?

Some New Saints

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

THE Church has properly chosen to recognize certain eminent Christians by keeping days in their honor, and on these days drawing inspiration from their examples. Thus we honor St. Paul on Jan. 25; St. Luke on Oct. 18, and St. Thomas on Dec. 21. And there are other saints and saints days, as any person conversant with the Prayer Book and the Church year knows. The Episcopal Church in recent years has not officially added to the saints days set forth in the Prayer Book.

In fact, however, unofficially and in a very individualistic manner, support has been given by many people to a new galaxy of saints. These saints who have come so much to the fore have many devotees, some of whom give them more attention than they accord some of the Prayer Book saints. These new saints are affable, and interesting and they make pleasant contributions to human pleasure. We would really not want to be without them. Numbered among these present day, unofficial saints are St. Pheasant whose observance extends even beyond an octave; St. Duck, in whose honor long pilgrimages are made often at considerable expense and discomfort; St. Pigskin, whose cult numbers multitudes, and whose offerings mount into vast sums of money. St. Fish is not without followers, but then there is considerable apostolic precedent for such devotion! St. Comic holds lively court on Sunday mornings and even some Church people prefer his altar to the one in the parish church. St. Work is a noble saint, and although there is Divine Command against giving him unnecessary homage on the Sabbath, nevertheless many do honor him greatly on that day—an honor which he must not welcome overmuch.

All of these saints are good (in themselves they wouldn't be called saints if they were not, would they?) but they really cannot hold a candle to the Prayer Book saints, who are so much better. And because they are better they merit greater devotion. We can render to St. Pheasant and the others the things which belong to them, but we must not forget to render to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and all the Prayer Book saints the honor due them, for upon them we must depend when St. Pheasant, St. Duck and all the rest have faded away!

Ideals For Christian Parents

WE desire to build our home on love, self-forgetful and God-centered.

We desire to grow in fellowship with God, and to share that fellowship with our children.

We desire to take our part, and to encourage our children to take theirs, in the life of the Church, that the message of Christ may come to our generation with sincerity and strength.

We desire to be honest in our dealings with each other, our children, and all people.

We desire to face fearlessly all intellectual problems, and to answer our children's questions truthfully and constructively.

We desire to cultivate for ourselves and our children, friendships with all sorts and conditions of men, knowing that only in this way can God's Family come true.

We desire to think and act courageously in all moral situations, and to help our children make habitual for themselves Christian ways of living.

We desire to play our full part in the bringing in of God's Kingdom and the doing of His will in the world, and to help our children to share in this work as their rightful heritage.

We desire to encourage in our children the fullest development of their personalities, that each may be the best he can be, unlimited by our preconceived ambitions. — Chimes, St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Clue to Christian Education. By Randolph Crump Miller. Scribner. $2.75.

This book attempts the task of relating theology and Christian Education more closely. "The clue to Christian Education," Miller proposes, "is the rediscovery of a relevant theology which will bridge the gap between content and method." The "focal point" is faith in Jesus Christ. Two chapters develop these theses, then a series of chapters takes up some cardinal Christian doctrine, develops it briefly, and indicates ways in which the author proposes that this doctrine may be used in teaching various age groups from primary to college age. The doctrines thus treated are such as: the source (God—the Father, Son, and Spirit); the creature (human nature); the fellowship (the church); grace; faith; prayer; behavior; etc.

The details of any one of these attempts either to state the doctrine or develop a way of using it in teaching various age groups need to be examined minutely, and obviously are open to correction and criticism; but the attempt as a whole deserves wide reading and study, as a forthright effort to give Christian Education a rootage in the historic thought-stream of the Christian church.—L. J. Sherrill

Asking Them Questions. Edited by Ronald Selby Wright. Oxford. $2.

This is an excellent volume in an up to date kind of apologetics. Here are about 30 questions with sound and understanding answers, by such writers as C. S. Lewis, Leslie Weatherhead, A. E. Taylor, John Baillie, Msgr. Knox, Father Hebert, Alex Miller, and the Archbishop of Canterbury—quite a galaxy of intellect and inspiration! This is a very useful book to place in the hands of young people faced with these questions, and would make an excellent text for a study group.

The Praises of Israel: Studies Literary and Religious in the Psalms. By John Paterson. Scribner. $2.75.

The contents are well described in the subtitle, for the author first gives a literary introduction to the Psalter, showing its natural growth and later compilation and then classifying the Psalms according to their forms. These "types" are interpreted against the background out of which they developed—the Israelite cult and its ritual.

The second section consists of ten well-chosen Psalms, one to illustrate each "type." In a clear, engaging fashion often absent from such studies they are explained according to origin, development, and application.

In the third part—the Religious Teaching of the Psalter—the author lucidly and skillfully presents such topics as the Names of God, the Approach to God, Divine Revelation, Religion in Life, and the Life Hereafter. This section alone is worth double the book's modest price.—Lansing Hicks

The Art of the Rhythmic Choir. By Margaret Palmer Fisk. Harper. $2.50.

It would surprise some persons to know that for centuries there has been a kind of religious dance—or at least rhythmic processions, in the Christian Church. What this book undertakes to do is to interpret the art from a modern point of view, and suggest a devout but up to date choreography. It need not necessarily take place in church, but the artistic interpretation of Biblical stories, and even of Christian worship, means a great deal to many persons.

The book contains useful suggestions to those who believe the art should be encouraged.

Neuroses and Sacraments. By Alan Keenan, O. F. M. Sheed and Ward. $2.50.

There is a good deal of discussion in the Roman Church as to whether psychotherapy is a science or not, and also whether psychotherapy has any place in Christian pastoral theology. This book undertakes to combine the ministry of the sacraments with a psychotherapeutic understanding of human nature.

From This Day Forward. By Kenneth J. Foreman. Outlook. $1.25.

A beautiful little book on Christian marriage, useful not only to those who are looking forward to marriage, but also those who are already married, and who are eager to keep their marriage on the high level of the Christian way of life.

Poems by Father Andrew. Ed. by Hugh Collet. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.50.

The best of Father Andrew's verse—he died in March 1946. He was a profoundly religious man, and he once confessed that "writing in rhythm or rhyme has been a form of prayer with me ever since I can remember." He was not a theologian or a philosopher, but a great lover of human beings of all sorts and conditions, and of their Maker; and he left a shining trail in the slums of East London. Some of the poems are superb; but on the whole one loves them more for the heart of the saint which they reveal than for their literary excellence.

Haggerston Jubilee. By H. A. Wilson. Morehouse. $1.35.

A rambling book which seems to have something to do with the parish of Haggerston in England. For those unacquainted with the ways of Haggerston, however, its disjointed sections are most bewildering. Father Wilson has imagination and a good deal of spiritual insight and common sense. American readers will find him esoterically Haggerstonian.—C.C.R.

Christianity on the Frontier. By John A. Mackay. Macmillan. $2.50.

This is a collection of essays written by the president of Princeton Theological Seminary during the last six years. About one-quarter of the book is in an essay on Protestantism. The unifying theme is found in the title of the book: the Church is to live on the frontier; the political, cultural and missionary frontier.—A.C.L.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

FOREIGN CHURCHMEN VISIT INDIA

Prof. John C. Bennett of Union Seminary, New York, is one of three churchmen currently visiting India. Others are the Rev. Oliver S. Tomkins, British secretary of the World Council of Churches, and the Rev. Bengt Sundkler, professor of missions at Uppsala University, Sweden. Bennett is speaking at conferences on Christianity and Communism, the subject he dealt with in the Witness series last Lent.

DIBELIUS PLEDGES PEACE EFFORT

Bishop Otto Dibelius of Berlin has said that the Evangelical Church in Germany "will make all efforts toward peace while rejecting the idea of a preventive war with all its might." Also the weekly magazine of the Church has proposed that a meeting between top-ranking East and West German leaders be held on neutral Church ground. It suggests that Bishop Dibelius, as chairman of the council of the Church in Germany, invite Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of Western Germany and Otto Grotewohl, premier of East Germany, to meet together at the bishop's residence. The bishop expressed surprise at the suggestion but added that he would "place himself at the disposal of all endeavors which might contribute toward restoring German unity which all of us so urgently desire."

PRO-COMMUNIST PASTOR IS SUSPENDED

The Evangelical Church board of Bremen, Germany, has suspended Pastor Johannes Oberhof of St. Martin parish for having attended the World Peace Conference, recently held in Warsaw after being unwelcomed in England. Following the conference he spoke several times in the Soviet Zone when he denounced the "reactionary Church leadership in Western Germany" and said he would "fight this reactionary Church until my last breath."

PLANNING TRIAL OF ABBOT

Plans are being made by the government of Hungary for a public trial of Abbot Engredi of the R.C. Cistercian Order, on charges of espionage and illegal dealings in money. It is said that among witnesses who will testify against him are former employees of the U.S. embassy in Budapest.

ARCHBISHOP OPPOSES USE OF BOMB

Use of the atomic bomb in the Far East would result in an irreparable breach between the east and the west and "outrage the conscience" of the British nation, said the Archbishop of York at the close of 1950. He also stressed "the necessity of a good understanding with China" and urged that "at the earliest possible moment and at the highest level another attempt should be made to reach an agreement with Russia. Without this there can be no peace for the world."

CHINESE CHURCH LEADERS VISITED MOSCOW

Two leaders of the Russian Orthodox Church in China visited Moscow last summer, it was disclosed in the latest issue of the journal of the Moscow patriarchate. They were Archbishop Victor of Peking, head of the Church in China, and Bishop Simeon of Tientsin, a Chinese, who was consecrated by Patriarch Alexei during the visit.

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION SUNDAY

At the request of the Joint Commission on Theological Education I have designated Sexagesima, January 28, 1951, as Theological Education Sunday.

On that day I hope that there will be addresses in every church upon the importance of the work of our Theological Seminaries, and furthermore that in every parish there will be an opportunity for the people of the Church to give financial support to the Seminaries.

Our Theological Seminaries are of supreme importance to the Church for they, in large measure, determine the calibre of our clergy. This is of practical significance to every layman. What of the conduct of the services in your parish? How was the sermon? What of the Church School and the Christian education of your children? Strong seminaries make possible favorable answers.

I trust that there will be a generous response.

THE PRESS

Edited by
GEORGE MacMURRAY

THE EASY MONEY BOYS:—Gambling is one of the pressing problems facing society today. It is a sad commentary on American life that horse racing, dog racing, the numbers racket, slot machines, punch boards, bingo, beano and give-away programs are giving the American people the idea of getting something for nothing. This easy money attitude has obviously made an inroad in the Church.

The Bishop of Michigan, Richard S. Emrich, has some ponderable words to utter which ought to stir the consciences of those rectors who permit "devious practices" in their parishes to raise easy money.

Writes the Bishop: When, therefore, charitable and religious groups use bingo or "chances" on cars and the like to bring money to their treasuries, it is a cheap thing which fits in with a corrupting tendency in American life. When a church runs bingo parties, it falls below the best moral thought of even the nonchurch community. If the University of Michigan, Yale and Harvard are above beano and bingo, are too dignified to employ such methods, it is shameful when the Christian church is not. I find it impossible even in my weakest moments, when the financial needs of the church are most pressing, to imagine St. John, St. Paul or St. Peter running a bingo party or our Lord sending out his disciples to sell chances. And I shudder at the thought that some young person might say, "It's all right to gamble. We do it at church."

GOOSE DOWN AND SLANDER:—For the tired parson we have a little sermon illustration about gossip and slander and its effect. It came from the North Carolina Churchman.

Goose Down

A peasant with a troubled conscience went to a monk for advice. He said he had circulated a vile story about a friend, only to find that the story was not true.

"If you would make peace with your conscience," said the monk, "you must fill a bag with goose down, go to every dooryard in the village and drop in each one of them one fluffy down."

The peasant did as he was told. Then he came back to the monk and said he had done penance for his folly.

"Not yet," replied the monk. "Take the bag, go the rounds again, and gather up every down that you have dropped."

"But the wind must have blown them all away!" exclaimed the peasant.

"Yes, my son," said the monk; "and so it is with your vile words. Words and goose down are quickly dropped, but try as hard as you will, you can never get them back again."

THE KING'S BUSINESS:—"The Anglican Outlook" is following a little of the "New Yorker" technique. In a series of cartoons on the cover they show the parson making parish visits. The reasons for non-attendance are classic but the illustrations are most effective. You've heard these all before:

"I'd love to go to church, but who'd cook Sunday dinner?"

"Frankly, parde, I had so much church-going as a boy, I hardly go at all now."

"We got so involved in activities at our last church, we thought we'd stay away from this one."

JOHN B. McLANE
Layman of Austin, Texas

Re: Mr. Spofford's article on Television in your December 7th issue, let me agree with his overall viewpoint, but, as an avid "whodunit" fan disagree with him on his appraisal of the smell of almonds. That smell is generally associated with poisoning by cyanide, not strychnine.

But, may I agree with his main points and add one more criticism to his: the constant eye-strain inflicted on children poses a very dangerous problem of the future. This eye-strain can conceivably do permanent danger to the optic nerves with a resultant lessening of a person to do any work requiring close scrutiny, such as studying, reading the Bible, or accounting.

Thanks again, for an article pointing ahead rather than back.

MRS. J. H. MOORE
Churchwoman of San Antonio, Texas

Mirabile dictu! A rubric by vanishing has been fulfilled in the vanishing of the "amens" from our services. Because I was concerned at the dead silence at the close of our prayers, I was moved to look up a remembered rubric: "The people shall answer here and at the end of every Prayer, Amen." I find it was omitted in the last revision. Perhaps, without knowing it, the congregation has recognized this. The difference in type for minister and congregation has remained, however, but some ministers refrain from using the "amen" in the hope that this may encourage the congregation to say it. It doesn't. I had thought that the custom of dropping the "amen" was local; I find it is not. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, a Methodist, heard by thousands on Sunday mornings, used to close his prayer with amen or to have the choir do so. Now there is only silence. But the omission has come close to all of us Episcopalians in our own books of devotion. In the new "Forward Day by Day" prayers on pages 78, 79 and 80 omit the amen. This is the first time I have observed this. Perhaps the Prayer Book commission now working on revision may tell us if the custom has come to stay.

A. F. GILMAN
Layman of Chicago

The humorous side of the recent promulgation of the dogma of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary is that the Christian Scientists beat the Pope to it some years ago when they introduced into their story the idea of a "Mother" God. The sad side is that it gives the skeptics and the militant atheists additional ground for their belief that the whole Catholic dogma is founded on wishful thinking of ignorant and superstitious men and women, and not on divine revelation.

Cardinal Newman said during the argument in Rome in regard to the dogma of infallibility of the Pope that great danger to the Church lay in the fact that the Pope, being human, might some day make a mistaken pronouncement. It looks as if he had done just that. The next step is a miraculous birth for the Virgin Mary.

L. MAXWELL BROWN
President, Rural Workers Fellowship

It is with deep appreciation that I write this letter for myself, and for all the members of the Rural Workers' Fellowship, thanking you for the excellent issue of the Witness December 21. I have always appreciated the efforts of your magazine in giving publicity about the various organizations within the Episcopal Church; and when the group in which I am deeply interested is thus honored, it is both thrilling and gratifying.

Thank you for drawing the attention of the Church to the town and country endeavors of its missionary work, and to the part the Rural Workers' Fellowship is playing in building up a strong Church in rural America.

May God bless you and your good work in this New Year.

STORY OF THE WEEK

The House of Bishops Elects Missionary Bishops

Does Not Act Favorably on the Proposal For Bishop for Armed Forces

★ The House of Bishops, at its final session in El Paso on January 12th, elected the following missionary bishops: the Rev. Richard R. Emery, rector of St. Paul's, Minneapolis, for North Dakota; Dean Richard S. Watson of St. Mark's Cathedral, Seattle, for Utah; the Rev. A. Ervine Swift of Manila, the Philippines, for Puerto Rico.

Others nominated: for North Dakota: Dean James Carman of Phoenix, Arizona; the Rev. Meredith Wood of Hoosick, N. Y.; the Rev. John B. Lyte of Providence, R. I.; Dean Chilton Powell of Omaha. For Utah: the Rev. G. Gersham Marmion of Dallas; the Rev. Paul D. Wilbur of Covington, Ky.; Dean Lloyd W. Clarke of Albuquerque, N. M. For Puerto Rico: the Rev. Fenimore E. Cooper of Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; Dean Raymond T. Ferris of Ancon, Panama Canal Zone; the Rev. William G. Wright of St. Clement's, El Paso, the host parish, who withdrew his name before the balloting.

They declined to elect a suffragan bishop for the armed forces, following the reading of a commission report opposing such action. Instead the report recommended that both the clergy and the laity assume individual responsibility for the spiritual welfare of the men and women of the Church in the armed forces. It also proposed that every parish conduct "constant prayer by name" for those in services and that every congregation pray regularly for a just peace.

URBAN WORK

Quick action by the Church in ministering to people "of the lowest economic means" in urban areas was urged. Bishop Nash of Mass. said that the Church must realize the meaning of the industrial revolution and its effect on society. "Population has shifted," he said, "leaving a city wilderness that grows with each year. In this wilderness are the most discouraged and defeated groups, some of whom are pathetically glad to find a Church that understands them and gives them the sense of belonging. Talk has increased among trade union groups and unskilled workers that the Church is above them and is controlled by people of means. Some already feel that trade unionism will accomplish what the Church cannot."

Bishop Conkling of Chicago stressed the need of preserving downtown parishes. "I don't think you should sell a downtown parish because I think you are going to need it. If we have to start all over again it will be at needless great expense." He urged churches in slum areas "not to encourage constituents living at a great distance." This type of support, he said, handicaps missionary development. "Further," he continued, "we must overcome the idea of class. It should not be a church for 'nice' people. In Chicago, we will not have a single parish in 25 years in the metropolitan area unless the churches are turned over to neighborhood work. Also there must be more congregational work. More must be spent for staff and less for high paid rectors. Ministers should use a block pattern of visiting people and should keep their churches open all the time. Finally, special allowances must be made in the way of money for those working in slum areas."

The Rev. Kilmer Myers, rector of Grace Church, Jersey City, who is also on the faculty of General Seminary, told the bishops of what had been accomplished in a parish once strong and rich, but now in a depressed area. To succeed in this type of work requires, one, willingness to give the best to the task and lots of money; two, use teams of priests; three, the rectory must be open to people all the time; four, the minister should live with the poor before taking social action; five, the church must depart from traditional paths; six, it should be a neighborhood one.

(Note: Before the meeting of bishops, Mr. Myers and his associate, Mr. Moore, had been selected for The Witness Honor Roll for 1950 (see page nine). A particular citation went to Mrs. Moore for following out point three above. Warren McKenna and Robert Muir, priests of Boston, are also on the Honor Roll for their work in a depressed area, and particularly for not only living with the poor but for taking social action. Finally, in this same field, Prof. Joseph Moore of Seabury-Western is on the Roll for his surveys of urban areas.)

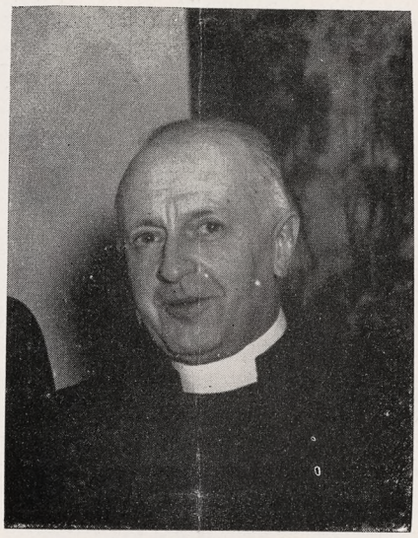
also spoke on urban work, telling of extraordinary population changes on the west coast, with some areas having from 40% to 50% increases in ten years. He stressed the need for evangelistic work and the need for new functional churches which can be built at moderate cost. He said that if the Church does not reach the migrant in the first two years of his residence, he will be lost permanently.

ANGLICAN CONGRESS

The House heard a report on progress of plans for the Anglican Congress which will meet in Minneapolis, August 9-16, 1953. There will be internationally known speakers, mass meetings, a pageant and other features. Bishop Donegan of New York urged that young people be given a part in the program, with Bishop Gray of Connecticut assuring the House that this would be given every consideration, as well as the participation of women.

PROVINCES

There was a lengthy discussion of the usefulness of provinces, and what could be done to make them more useful. This was led by Bishop Penick of North Carolina, who pointed out that provinces could be helpful to chaplains in the armed forces by offering them fellowship, seats in synods and diocesan conventions, and welcoming them to clergy conferences and other gatherings. It was pointed out that present activities of provinces include promotion of radio programs; conduct of teaching missions; conferences for recruiting for the ministry; college work; cooperation in educational programs.



NATIONAL COUNCIL

The position of the Episcopal Church in the new National Council of Churches was defined by Bishop Sturtevant of Fond du Lac, who is a member of the Council's executive committee. He stressed that there is no new principle involved in membership since, like the Federal Council of Churches before it, it is merely a cooperative agency "with nothing to do with the doctrine or policies of member Churches. We are associated with the finest men in assemblies and are in a position to receive a great deal and give a great deal." He added that the Episcopal Church cannot afford to look upon itself as an "holier-than-thou group shut up in a compartment of Christian activity."

Presiding Bishop Sherrill, who is also president of the new Council, said he considered Bishop Sturtevant's talk "a very significant one."

REFUGEES

Bishop Blair Larned, in charge of Episcopal Churches in Europe, told of the desperate plight of refugees now in Europe, and pleaded that aid be given them. He also discussed the position of minority groups in Italy, Portugal and Spain. In the latter country, he said, clergy "can't even hang a sign on their homes to indicate that a worship service is being held inside. Some of us are worried about loaning Spain $100,000,000 unless we have assurances that Protestant persecution will cease." (Note: Two women missionaries representing a Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, were ordered by the Franco government to leave Spain on Jan. 10th. Working with Protestant churches in Madrid, they had earlier been subjected to nuisances and had their residences stoned).

PRESIDING BISHOP HENRY K. SHERRILL tells Bishops of his concern for the 1951 budget

FINANCES

The Presiding Bishop told his associates that the dioceses failed to meet its budget last year by $600,000. It meant that $400,000 was provided for world relief instead of the $500,000 voted; increases in missionary salaries had to be postponed from January to June, and new officers were not elected in the department of Christian education. In regard to this year, he said that "we can only guess that there is a slight improvement but probably not sufficient to make up the $600,000. I don't want you to feel complacent. The earlier we receive reports from the dioceses, the easier it will be to place the budgetary needs of the National Council. So kindly let us know what we can expect from your diocese. I hope that you are not so conservative in your estimates that we will have to cut the budget in February and not be able to replace the work that the cuts represent."

OTHER ACTION

The House authorized the reference of the matter of artificial insemination to the Council's department of Christian social relations, directing that it secure the cooperation of the clergy trained in moral theology, legal and medical men, to make a study of the subject and report later to the House.

The House went on record as opposing all forms of gambling for the support of the work of the Church.

The House of Bishops Issues Pastoral

Galatians 5:1 Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

★ Brethren, the minds of many are filled today with dread and gloom, for the future seems to hold for them little of hope, certitude, or peace. Since the attitude with which men face the future is itself a great factor in determining the future, we want in this letter to hold before all people teachings and insights of the Christian faith which can enable us to stand firm and wise in a difficult day.

First, remember that the great periods of history to which we look with pride in Church and nation have been those when God-fearing men stood fast in the face of adversity. We are not proud of the prodigal and cheap years in our history, and we are ashamed of the comfortable and half-hearted eras of the Church's life. We cherish in memory the men and women, who, with patience and wisdom, tolerance and courage, and an unfaltering adherence to principle worked and fought to achieve our liberties, and by their resolution turned the direction of history.

Since we all share this heritage of patriots, martyrs, and prophets, what we should dread is not difficulty, but rather the continuation of so much that is cheap and irresponsible in our way of life. God in his providence has called us, as he called our forefathers, to greatness; to play in our day for the sake of all mankind a leading role in the struggle for freedom. It will require of us the same dependence upon God and self-denial, wisdom and patience, tolerance and courage which others have shown before us. We are called to accept this role and to join hands with the mighty fellowship of free men across the ages. If we want a comfortable material future, no encouraging word can be spoken: if we want strength of soul in the company of brave and faithful men, we can make this a great age.

Second, remember that if the future is uncertain, that is no new thing. Washington, Lincoln, and Lee were not able to foresee in their time of testing what lay ahead. Their greatness consisted in their willingness to place the future in God's hands while they in obedience performed the immediate duties before them. Consider Washington's words, "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest may repair. The event is in the hands of God;" or Lincoln's words, "with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right;" or the words of the hymn, "Keep thou my feet. I do not ask to see the distant scene; one step enough for me." These men placed themselves in the hands of God, fulfilled day by day—sometimes in darkness—their duties and responsibilities, and left the success or failure of their efforts to providence.

The greatness of these men reveals an enervating gloom for what it is—faithlessness to God and our present responsibility. There is no man who cannot see his present duty, and to do it at this significant moment in history is a rare privilege given to us by God. Nothing can take the place in our life together of integrity and character, and we must remember in the fear of God that we are threatened not only by outward forces, but by any lack of responsibility from within. Every man who lives irresponsibly today, who seeks his own security or gain without counting the cost to others; every politician who plays recklessly on the present crisis for partisan advantage or his own advancement; every injustice in our common life, every hypocrisy in our democratic profession, weakens us and makes us less able to fulfill the role laid upon us. Even though we cannot see the pattern of the future, we can see the duties that lie at hand and the value of hard and self-denying work in the present. We too in our day by what we do can help to shape the course of history.

In addition to the tasks directly before us in our daily lives God requires of us vital concern, in spite of all discouragements, for peace and a world order rising above the anarchy of nationalism; an outgoing compassion for any of God's children who are suffering and in need; imaginative efforts in the strengthening of our common defense; and personal and community service to the men and women in the armed services.

Away with gloom doubt and faithless fear!
No arm so weak but may do service here.

Finally, we urge upon all men fervent prayer and a deeper understanding of the riches and gifts of the Christian faith. Since ages of adversity reveal to men their deepest needs, it is becoming clear to an increasing number of people that no one can be inwardly secure unless he walk with God. In a day when other foundations are shaking he alone is our strong fortress and friend. It is also becoming clear to an increasing number as they are shaken from comfortable assumptions that faith in God is the great source of the freedoms and values which are now threatened. Never in its history has the Church faced a greater task or opportunity.

The immediate and obvious enemy of western civilization is Russian Communism, but the deepest enemy is the godless materialism which bred the illusions and cynicism of Communism and weakens us now from within. Beneath much of our own life there are assumptions which must be fought by every member of the Church, for they are part of the total enemy we face. With the Communists there are members of all nations who share the following false and evil convictions—(1) This life is all there is; therefore, let's make the most of it, forgetful of any higher law. (2) Man's economic activity is his most important activity. (3) The more material things we possess the happier we will be as a people. Since there is an inner struggle for the soul of our world which crosses all frontiers, we must realize that no final victory can take place on the field of battle. Since ideas are not destroyed by guns, the only way to overcome a false view of life is by the militant preaching and living of a true view of life.

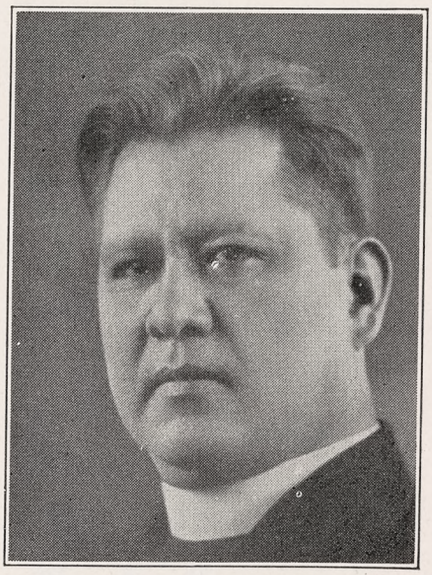
We write this not only with the hope that non-Church people will read and be led to a concern with the inner life of America and the world, but chiefly to impress Church people with the great significance of their responsibility. While the Communists sent their missionaries to the ends of the earth, there have been comfortable people who have said it made no difference what a man believed. The great freedom for which our ancestors fought has been for others a petty and negative thing—freedom from great convictions and discipline, freedom from zeal and sacrifice.

We are entering a new age in which we are called by our sovereign Lord to write a great chapter in his Church's militant history. We can become by his grace and power finer, deeper, and more obedient people. There is in our life with Christ in his Church comfort and strength in this world and comforting assurance to those who love him of a world to come. There is in the midst of an uncertain world the comfort of Christ's presence with us and the divine assurance that the gates of hell shall not prevail against his Church. But we would remind all members of the Church that there is no assurance whatever that the Church will increase or be largely effective without the devotion, discipline, and zeal of its members. Only by apostolic missionary endeavor will Christianity again become the soul of this world. Our responsibility is to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and to bear with power our witness in a sick world to God's saving and healing truth.

FUND IS RAISED FOR NURSES

★ The diocese of Delaware is raising a fund to aid the training of qualified young Negro women as nurses. It is designed to overcome the economic barrier which has prevented many high school graduates from entering the field. It came into being following a survey of health services available to Negroes made by the state welfare council, at the request of a diocesan committee on health.

EXPRESSES OPTIMISM ABOUT MEXICO



★ Bishop Efrain Salinas y Velsaco of Mexico told the House of Bishops of the work of the Church there, and expressed optimism for the growth of the work. He stressed particularly the devotion and sacrificial efforts of Church people.

FRANCIS WEI HAS ANNIVERSARY

★ In Wuchang, central China, friends of Francis Cho Min Wei, are celebrating his fortieth anniversary as head of Huachung University and its predecessor, Boone College. Huachung was organized in 1924 from several cooperating institutions.

Enrollment for 1950-51 is 488 students, 301 women, 187 men. This includes ten research students, a hopeful sign as Dr. Wei has long desired to enroll more of them, partly with a view to providing more qualified Chinese faculty members. More than half the 488 are freshmen. Smaller numbers in the other three classes reflect the disturbed conditions of recent years during the change of government.

Of the 488, 176 are Christian, a low percentage for Huachung. Of the 176, fifty belong to the Chinese Episcopal Church. The low proportion of Christians is chiefly due to the unusually large proportion of new students. In earlier years most new students came from Christian secondary schools, where most of them were Christians. The present emphasis on education has led to the admission of many students from other schools.

They are not so well prepared, either, which has made it difficult to keep up academic standards, but Dr. Wei is unrelenting in his efforts to develop a university which should be small in numbers but of the first quality.

"As far as religious activities in Huachung are concerned," Dr. Wei writes, "we are very much encouraged by the wonderful spirit manifested by both faculty and students this present term. Everything is going on as usual, except with greater vigor. It is gratifying to find that many of the younger Chinese Christian members of the faculty and staff are taking more interest in religious activities."

E. E. F. MEETINGS IN BOSTON

★ Prof. F. W. Dillistone of Episcopal Theological School is the speaker at the first of three supper meetings of the Massachusetts branch of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. The meeting is to be at St. Paul's Cathedral on January 30th. Bishop Nash will be the speaker on February 27th and the Rev. Charles D. Kean, president of the national E. E. F., rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, Missouri, on April 3rd.

A NEW CHURCH IN DETROIT

★ A new church, first permanent home of the congregation, was dedicated for St. Augustine's, Detroit, by Bishop Emrich on November 30th. It became an organized mission in 1936 and occupied a store for a number of years. Many parishes and diocesan organizations contributed to the erection of the new building. The Rev. Richard T. Brown is in charge.

CANDIDATES MEET WITH BISHOP

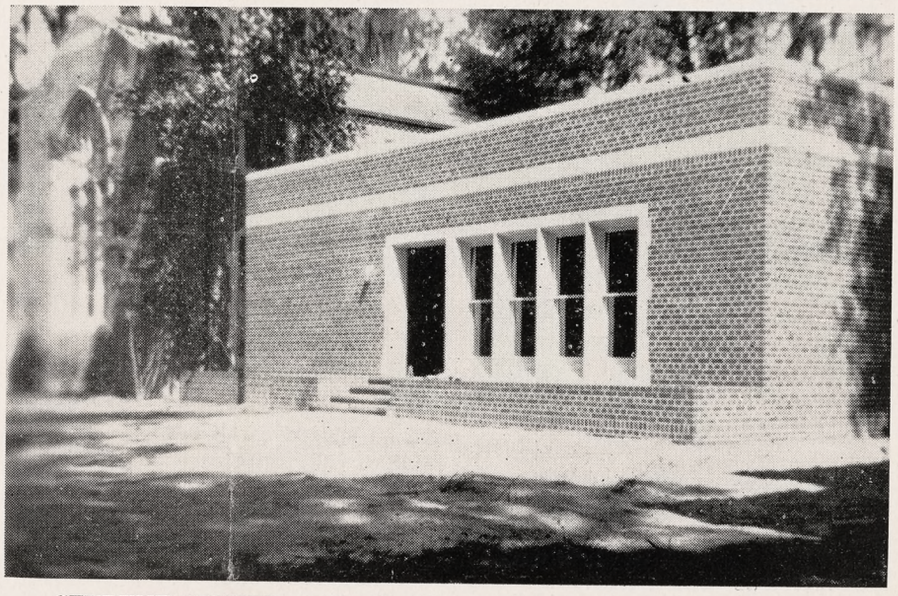
★ Bishop Gray of Connecticut held an informal conference with Postulants and candidates for the ministry at his home in Hartford on December 21st.

CANTERBURY COLLEGE WILL CLOSE

★ Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis has announced that Canterbury College, located at Danville, Indiana, will not carry on beyond the present semester. He said that there is a possibility of extending the period to June 1 in order that the present seniors may be graduated.

SCHOLARSHIP FUND FOR BEXLEY

★ President Chalmers of Kenyon College announces a gift from the Firestone Foundation of $6,000 for the establishment of two full three-year scholarships at Bexley Hall, the divinity school of Kenyon College. The recipients of the scholarships are to be designated by the Bishop of Ohio, in whose diocese Bexley Hall is located. While the procedures for the awards have not yet been settled, it is probable that selection will be made on the basis of ability from a nation-wide field of candidates.



In presenting the gift, the president of the Firestone Foundation, Harvey S. Firestone Jr., said that the board had reviewed the splendid work that Bexley Hall is doing and had decided upon the scholarships as a means of being helpful in strengthening the Christian ministry. The scholarships make possible the training of two candidates for the ministry in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

PARIS SEMINARY CELEBRATES

★ A celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of St. Sergius Orthodox Theological Institute, Paris, was held December 15th, in the American Pro-Cathedral Church of the Holy Trinity. Dean Sturgis Lee Riddle welcomed Bishop Cassian, head of the institute, Pastor Marc Boegner, president of the Reformed Church of France and a president of the World Council of Churches, and Paul Anderson of the Orthodox Commission of the Episcopal Church, as well as many other Church dignitaries. The Dean spoke of the close association and friendship between the Anglican and Orthodox Churches. Letters of congratulations from Church leaders all over the world, including Presiding Bishop Henry Sherrill, were read. Orthodox Church music was sung by the choirs of the seminary and the Russian Cathedral.

NEW DIOCESAN FOR SOUTH FLORIDA

★ Starting January 1, Bishop Henry I. Louttit, former coadjutor of the diocese of South Florida, became diocesan bishop.

CHURCHES CONSIDER OLDER PERSONS

★ The Rev. G. Paul Musselman, director of social relations of the diocese of Michigan, was the keynote speaker when 200 Church leaders met in Chicago to consider "the older person." He declared that "an intelligent approach to the problem of the aged will form an increasingly large part of our jobs in the Church."

One of the important jobs of religion, he said, is to make the aged "partners in the fight for freedom. The stimulation to more creative activity among the aged may tip the scales in the present conflict between the free nations and the slave nations. Training our older people for the ideological battle is the most important thing the Church can give the aged."

Another speaker was Estelle Gabriel, psychiatrist, who said that, contrary to popular belief, most people don't find growing old "graceful or beautiful." The most damaging aspects of old age, she said, was the feeling of uselessness, with the problem of loneliness the next most pressing. She urged the Church to find creative activities for its older people.

A workshop on housing brought out that 62% of old age social security recipients live in rented rooms which are 35% unfurnished. The workshop stressed the need for federal housing suitable for older people. This housing should not be in great institutional buildings, but in more intimate, cottage-type structures.

A workshop on the family and the older person called for a new attitude toward elders in the family. It said that a rich contribution can be made by a properly appreciated older person in the family group.

BISHOP DUN PREACHES IN HOUSTON

★ Bishop Angus Dun of Washington was the guest preacher at Christ Church Cathedral, Houston, Texas, January 7th as he and Mrs. Dun passed through the city on their way to the meeting of the House of Bishops in El Paso. They had previously visited Roanridge, center of the Town-Country Institute of the National Council, at Parkville, Missouri.

BOYNTON INSTITUTED AT CATHEDRAL

★ Bishop Charles F. Boynton is to be instituted suffragan bishop of New York on February 3rd at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York.

DOM GREGORY DIX IN CHICAGO

★ Dom Gregory Dix, prior of Nashdom Abbey, England, is to conduct a dramatization of the primitive Eucharist at the annual meeting of the Catholic Club of Chicago. The service will be held on February 8th at St. Thomas' Church. A cast of 15 laymen, four women and one priest will take part.

ARCHITECTURAL AWARD TO TEXAS CHURCH

★ Among the twelve churches to receive awards for architectural design, announced at the annual meeting of the Church Architectural Guild, meeting January 15-16 in Philadelphia, was St. Christopher's, Mandera, Texas. It received the second prize for churches seating less than 300.

Those attending the meeting also visited five churches of unusual architectural interest, including the chapel of the Philadelphia Divinity School, which is regarded as one of the best examples of academic Gothic.

SCHOOL OF RELIGION AT TAMPA

★ Bishop Wing, retired bishop of South Florida, was the speaker at the opening session of the school of religion at St. Andrew's, Tampa. He spoke on January 18th on the historic position of the Episcopal Church. On the 25th the Rev. Warren Densmore of St. Mary's, Tampa, speaks on what the Anglican communion has in common with the Roman Church, while on February 1st the Rev. Mark Carpenter of All Saints, Fort Lauderdale, lectures on where the Anglican Church differs from the Roman.

CONNECTICUT HAS REDEDICATION

★ Bishop Gray of Connecticut has asked the clergy and laity of his diocese to join in a service of rededication on January 30th. This will be the first service with representatives of the diocese since he became diocesan on January 15th.

LOS ANGELES HAS NEW SCHOOL

★ Epiphany Hall, new guidance school for boys sponsored by Epiphany parish, Los Angeles, opens today, January 25. It is designed for boys in need of special help and guidance in social adjustment. Candidates for admission are referred by the courts and juvenile authorities. The Rev. Frederic E. Dittmar, rector of the parish, is director.

MEMORIAL PULPIT TO BISHOP CLARK

★ A pulpit has been installed in St. Mark's, Altadena, Cal., in memory of Bishop Stephen Clark, late bishop of Utah, who was rector of the parish for 20 years before being elected to Utah. Other memorials dedicated at the same service were choir rails, chancel rail, lectern, prayer desks. The rector of the parish, which recently burned its mortgage, is the Rev. Edward H. Hailwood.

MINISTRY OF GROUNDS FOR PARISH

★ Christ Church, Eddington, Pa., has a "ministry of grounds," which is a dignified name for a lot of hard work in the maintenance and care of the grounds and buildings. Each week men and women, boys and girls, do their bit under the direction of Rector Stanley A. Powell.

EDITORIALS

Honor Roll 1950

THE WITNESS Honor Roll for 1950 is presented with a brief word of explanation. Each person listed has been nominated by one or more readers, with the final selection made by The Witness editors. At this meeting we had fun trying to name the Churchman of the Year, though we discussed this with no idea of publishing the selection. Our Presiding Bishop, Henry Knox Sherrill, at once came to mind, particularly after his election as president of the National Council of Churches. Perhaps the man who comes nearest to being a saint, in this mid-century, is one who was on our Honor Roll last year—the Rev. Michael Scott of South Africa for his untiring, and persecuted efforts for the native peoples of Africa. A third is the Rev. Francis Wei who has just completed forty years of educational work in China and who is not being deterred from his appointed task by the change in governments.

In presenting names for the 1950 Honor Roll we again remind readers that it is our policy not to list any who have been on previous rolls, several of whom were again nominated.

CHARLES L. BEHM, a member of the Church of Our Saviour, Fayetteville, N. Y., for seventy-seven years; vestryman for sixty years, and warden for twenty-six. During this time he has been Sunday school superintendent, a member of the choir, organ pumper before an electrically controlled organ was installed. He has represented the diocese of Central New York at nine General Conventions.

MRS. GEORGE BILLER, widow of the late Bishop of South Dakota, who befriended Orientals while she was director of Brent House, Chicago, and who has continued to do so since her retirement to Fort Smith, Arkansas.

MISS ESTELLE C. CARVER, a public school teacher in New Haven, Conn., who gives unsparingly to advance the work of our Church and is nationally known for her lectures and addresses at conferences and churches of other denominations.

MRS. CHARLES C. GRAY of St. John's, Ashfield, Mass., former teacher at Boone, China, who, representative of many throughout the land, is faithful in her work for the Church, without recognition or praise, while presiding over a genuinely Christian home.

CHARLES W. KAPPES of Christ Church, Ridgewood, N. J., a Christian lawyer who not only serves effectively in his own parish but is a leader in the diocese of Newark: chairman of the board of education, president of the board of directors of the Youth Consultation Service, member of the field department and of the finance and advisory board.

JOSEPH MOORE, professor at Seabury-Western Seminary, who has developed a technique for the appraisal of dioceses and parishes and has presented reports on several areas which have advanced the work of the Church.

WARREN McKENNA and ROBERT MUIR, co-directors of the Workers of the Common Life, centered at St. John's, Roxbury, who have made a new departure in evangelism by taking the Gospel to workers and the poor through identification and demonstration rather than by discussion, conference and verbal proclamation. They are in the forefront of the progressive movement and are paying a price for their courage.

C. KILMER MYERS and PAUL MOORE for their work at Grace Church, Jersey City, located in a depressed, multi-racial area where they minister to all sorts and conditions without regard to race, creed or national origin. A bow particularly to MRS. MOORE whose home is Grand Central Station but who always comes up with a smile.

GEORGE OSSMAN, rector of Richmond, Va., who in mid-life left home to learn techniques for ministering to the mentally ill, and returned to help the frightened, the discouraged, the lonely, the unloved and unlovable, in the state hospital and medical college located near his parish. Those who know what happens day by day at this medical center never hear his name otherwise than with gratitude and thanksgiving.

MRS. ELEANORE SCHWARZ for her work as the director of the committee for Displaced Persons of the diocese of Michigan and her equally competent work as director of radio and television of the Detroit Council of Churches. Particularly noteworthy is a weekly radio program, which she writes and directs, dealing with social questions.

CHARLES SHREINER, rector of Church Farm School, Philadelphia, where he has done a magnificent work for under-privileged boys. He is also the head of the field department of the diocese of Pennsylvania and instrumental in placing it at the top in missionary giving.

WALTER H. STOWE, rector of Christ Church, New Brunswick, New Jersey, who has made the Church Historical Magazine one of the foremost journals of scholarship in Christendom, and for the fine leadership he is giving as president of the Church Historical Society.

HELEN TURNBULL, director of Windham House, hostel for students in New York, for her wholesome influence over the many young women who reside there for a time and then go forth into professional Church work where her interest and influence continues.

HEALEY WILLAN, organist at the University of Toronto, one of the great composers of religious music of this generation.

FRANCIS WEI, outstanding educator of the Church in China for forty years, who is expanding the program of Huachung University, that it may serve the new China even better than it did the old. We commend him particularly for his statesmanlike letter to Bishop Nash (Witness, Dec. 7) setting forth the reasons he believes the U. S. should recognize the People's Government of China, and why the new government should be admitted to the UN. (Bishop Ronald Hall of Hong Kong we commend for the same reason but do not place him on the Roll since he was cited in a previous year).

EDITOR'S NOTE: We report that several nominated the Rev. Frederick C. Grant for his great scholarly contributions. However since he was our editor-in-chief for several years and is at present our Book Editor, we forego honoring ourselves by citing him.

The Lesson of Korea

BY

HOWARD K. SMITH
London Commentator of the Columbia Broadcasting Co.

IF ever there were ten days that shook the world, they have been the week-and-a-half since the Chinese breakthrough in Korea became fully apparent. What has happened in those ten days is not pleasant to dwell on. But if there is to be any hope of recovering the mastery of events, now so totally lost on all fronts, the full cruel proportions of the Korean calamity will have to be recognized and faced.

As seen from here, perhaps the chief thing that has happened is that our five year old conception of power relationships in the cold war has been shattered. The tendency has been to regard the world as divided in power symetrically between two giants of roughly similar weight—the United States and Russia. Around each of those two clustered secondary nations, satellites of varying degrees.

China has figured in this scheme as purely a secondary nation, one more backwards, peasant satellite of Russia, a little bigger than the others. The Chinese army has been considered a clever improvisation for purposes of primitive civil conflict in a backwards country, but, illiterate, ill-armed and unskilled as it is, never a factor of consequence in the global cold war. At the end of world war II, we granted China a place on the so-called "Big Five," among the great powers . . . but it was purely a courtesy title, similar to that granted also to France.

Well, it is that vision of a kind of balance between two great powers that has been shattered. There are not, it now turns out, two great powers on earth, but three. In the only conditions in which the Chinese army shall ever have to fight—in Asiatic conditions of terrain, without complex road networks down which modern armored spearheads can charge with effect, without sensitive key industrial concentrations that modern air power can bomb with effect—the Chinese army has become a force on a level with the Russian army or that of the United States. And like a third great power, China—by aiding Communist forces in Korea, in Indo-China, in Burma—is rapidly building up her own set of satellites directly dependent on her.

The rise of a third great power-group, allied with Russia against the American bloc, throws the power balance violently out of kilter. Hitherto, throughout modern history, Atlantic nations have always possessed a great advantage against continental conquerors. Our side has been able, in the case of Napoleon, of Kaiser Wilhelm and of Hitler, to make him fight on two fronts. The rise of China reverses the situation to our disadvantage. It is now we who have to face both ways. China takes care of us in the east. And the continental conqueror we have thus far concentrated on—Soviet Russia—is left to concentrate wholly on one front—the west.

Korea has been the first example of what this means, but probably not the last. There, the whole of the Atlantic bloc's combat forces have been committed and exhausted . . . while Russia, the enemy our eyes have been on, has not committed a single man and is totally intact for moves elsewhere.

The military advantage of this new situation to the Communists is obvious. But we are not yet in a state of war; so the diplomatic advantages are for the moment more important. By co-ordinated moves in east and west, the Communists may now play upon the differing interests of the Atlantic nations, and dangerously strain the whole alliance. That, in fact, is what they did in Korea. Chinese forces dealt the predominantly American armies of the UN a cruel defeat. America's first natural impulse was to concentrate her whole power on that scene and hit back. Frightened stiff by the prospect of Europe being thus left bare of defenses, our European partners protested clamorously. The ties of the Atlantic bloc were severely strained, and Prime Minister Attlee had to rush to Washington to re-establish them in man to man talks with President Truman.

What To Do?

THE point I am anxious to make is that that strained week was not an accident of a kind not likely to happen again. The rise of China makes division of interests within the Atlantic bloc a permanent feature. By co-ordinated moves, China and Russia may now repeat that tactic of dividing us again and again.

For example, if China chooses to advance south of the 38th parallel, or if next month she instigates a push in French Indo-China, or in Burma . . . our dilemma arises again in full hideous flower. What are we to do? Is America to accept the challenge and go all out to win in one of those isolated areas? If we do get engaged by China, we shall have no resources to meet a thrust by Russia into more vital areas, like the Near East, or Europe itself. If we do, our European partners may have to desert us.

Or, shall we refuse the challenge, and see our prestige fall? Already our first single defeat in Korea has affected Asiatics, caused them to make their peace with local Communists. In French Indo-China, the French have ordered the evacuation of civilians from Hanoi, their chief northern strong point. And France's first soldier, General de Lattre de Tassigny, has been moved from Europe to Asia and given total military and civil powers—both of these acts look like acts of desperation, and are measures of how Korea has affected the Indo-Chinese.

There is the cruel dilemma. The Truman-Attlee conference has papered over the crack; but not removed it. For the dilemma remains inherent in the fact of the rise of China as a third great power on earth.

Forgive us for being mercilessly frank, but this recitation of calamity is not over. The past days have not only put us in a perilous position; they have also called into serious doubt the whole foreign policy by which we plan to meet the situation.

There have been two basic tenets to American policy for fighting the cold war. The first is—military containment; we must hem the Communist world in by force at all key points. And second, with the Reds thus bound in, we must bargain from strength, negotiate general settlement with the Soviets by having the implied threat of great power to back us up.

I don't know how widely it has been noticed, but both those principles, on which our hopes to win the cold war are based, have been badly cracked. Korea has been the first violent test of the policy of containment. It has sucked nearly all our containing forces into that small, unimportant bump of the great Communist periphery, and has routed them. At this moment, there are no containing forces of any consequence anywhere round the Communist world, except for a very feeble force in Germany. Here in Europe, military men and statesmen are frankly questioning where the policy of containment is not far beyond any power we can muster.

As to the second tenet, bargaining from strength, Korea has forced us flatly to abandon it, both in Asia and in Europe. So far as Asia is concerned, the Truman-Attlee communique amounted to an offer of negotiation to the Chinese. With our troops in defeat, it amounts to an offer to bargain from direct weakness. In regard to Europe, in Paris, representatives of America, Britain and France agreed on proposals to be sent to Russia for a conference on Germany and other Western problems. With our forces in Europe outnumbered five to one, with a French cabinet minister expressing open fear that rearming the Germans would produce a Russian ultimatum to the West, with the Germans refusing our permission to rearm for fear it would provoke Russia . . . with all these factors, this, too, amounts to an offer to bargain from weakness.

In the House of Commons the other day, Winston Churchill expressed doubt that the policy of bargaining from strength could ever be fulfilled. The time when we shall have superior forces to the Russians in the West he said would be a very long time coming, if ever. The economic news in Europe has been a kind of annotation of his doubts. Though Europe has barely begun to re-arm, the strain on these convalescent economies is already hurting. Italy has said a six-months search for funds wherewith to rearm has had scant success; the Italian people are already overtaxed and can bear no more. The first beginnings of rearmament have overstrained Europe's coal resources. Britain is having to pay out hard-earned dollars to import coal, and Treasury Minister Gaitskell said in a public speech, Britain will have a hard time paying her way. All European nations sent a delegation to America to say the present western rush for raw materials for rearmament is sending their prices sky high, and critically affecting European economies. If the first tiny installment of rearmament can produce these effects, one wonders what full, all-out building of strength from which to negotiate will do. The New Statesman magazine expresses the fear that rearmament in the west may create more Communists among hard-pressed French and Italian workers than it will contain in the east.

LET me assure you once more there is no morbid pleasure in thus raking the ashes of defeat. But it must somehow be hammered in that the situation has suddenly dramatically altered against us; that we are left bereft of policy to meet a dangerous future. The shock of that recognition may arouse us to thinking in entirely new, almost revolutionary terms that can save us. A reporter, probing minds over here can only suggest what those terms should be.

Of America, Europe is entitled to demand more responsible leadership. An American president in crisis is entitled to the same unified support that a British prime minister gets. Constructive criticism is good and necessary, but irresponsible sniping is criminal. It is universally felt over here that if President Truman could have acted without fear of being charged with harboring Communists, and threats of impeachment, he could have kept closer rein on his political general and avoided the mess we are in.

Of Europe, America can demand an end to the absurd anachronism of jealous national sovereignties. Divided into sixteen ineffective units, Europe is feeble. Welded into one unit, Europe, with its resources and its unequalled quantity of 200 million skilled citizens, could be a mountain of strength, superior to both Russia and America. Its prosperity could be such that Communism would disappear; its strength such that Russia would not dare to probe. A time of crisis like the present is the time to insist on this all-important action.

Outside Europe, we must recognize the key truth that this century is the century of revolution. In Asia, the Near East, Africa, peoples are awakening. We cannot beat this revolution; we must join it. We of the west have the resources to make the revolutions prosperous and successful; Russia has not. The advantage is on our side, if we can learn to think in these entirely new terms.

We have been thinking too long in sterile terms of tactics—containment . . . bargaining from strength . . . matching quantities of armed men with other quantities of armed men. We have—a friend of mine summed it up the other day—not been out-fought . . . We have been outthought.

Further Adventures of Mr. Entwhistle

BY

THOMAS V. BARRETT

HERE COMES THE BISHOP

"ISABEL," Mr. Entwhistle called from his station by the living room window. "He just drove into the yard. Remember, now—don't say anything controversial."

"Don't forget to tell him your idea about the clergy conference," Mrs. Entwhistle retorted as she scurried upstairs to find her lipstick.

"I won't," Samuel promised. "If I can get an opening." He moved to the front door.

"Good afternoon, Bishop."

"How are you, my dear fellow," boomed the Bishop in his most resonant baritone. "Good to see you again, good to see you."

"Come right in," said Samuel grinning as joyfully as possible. "It's awfully good of you to visit us again. I know how busy you are."

"Nonsense, Samuel my boy; it's a great privilege to be with you, and your people," said the Bishop sinking into the easy chair with a sigh that plainly said, "no one could possibly know how busy I am."

"Ah, what a blessed change to relax in your lovely home," the Bishop went on, his eyes wandering cautiously around the room to see if he had overstated the matter.

"Thank you," said Samuel, not knowing what else to say. "We think it is . . . er . . . comfortable . . . in a modest way."

"Yes, indeed. It's so homey . . . in good taste," said the Bishop in a tone of pure covetousness. "Bishopcastle is so large. Jane and I often say, 'Oh for the rectory at Webster Junction. That WAS cozy.' "

"Yes," Samuel agreed. "Bishopcastle is huge isn't it? Too bad the diocese didn't buy a more economical place." The Bishop fondled his pectoral cross speculatively.

"Of course it's a fine property to have . . . and with all our entertaining, you know . . . but the servant problem . . . Ah, Isabel my dear girl, you look more charming than ever." Samuel held his breath while he waited for Mrs. Entwhistle, who believed in fighting fire with fire, to serve up a slow curve with gravy on it. But Isabel was, Samuel realized gratefully, on best behavior.

"Oh, thank you, Bishop," she murmured, fluttering her eyelashes at the worn carpet. "You're very flattering."

"Not in the slightest, my dear," purred the Bishop. "I'm sure you're the primary reason for Samuel's success. And how is your dear mother?"

"Mother"?, Isabel asked, puckering her eyebrows. "My mother?"

"Isabel's mother is . . . that is . . . deceased," Samuel put in, trying to ease the situation, and inadvertently sounding as though Isabel's mother had been a little inconsiderate.

"Oh, of course . . . I'm terribly sorry . . . stupid of me . . . For a moment I confused you . . . that is . . . I was thinking of Father Weary's wife's mother . . . I think her mother . . . "

"Would you like a highball before dinner?" asked Isabel easing the situation without any effort.

"Sounds like a jolly suggestion," said the Bishop. "Bourbon and plain water if you have it." He laughed gayly and returned to the easy chair.

"We're having difficulty at St. Timothy's-By-the-Field," the Bishop confided over his bourbon. "Do you know of a good man we might send there? We need someone with tact, energy and the strain of a true phophet. Old Dunks was a sweet man, but dull."

Samuel visualized a man with the strain of a true prophet starving at St. Timothy's. He wasn't sure about the salary, but he remembered Old Dunks had sometimes sold the Book Of Wisdom For Adolescents during the summer.

"St. Timothy's, as you know," the Bishop went on confidentially, "offers a definite opportunity for growth . . . for the right young man."

"What is the . . . salary?" Samuel asked shifting in his chair.

"Of course," said the Bishop with a sympathetic eye on the floor lamp, "the people at St. Timothy's are few, and there is no great wealth, but they are eager and willing to work . . . if we could find the right man who would catch a vision of the future, and consider the work as a great opportunity for growth . . . at present they can pay $1800 with $100 for car expense, and . . . "

"Merciful heavens," said Isabel with consummate tact. "In these days?"

"It's just a mission and we are trying to increase the diocesan appropriation," the Bishop soothed, squirming after the bourbon and water.

"I'll try to think of someone," Samuel promised, thinking of Old Dunks.

"We know an awfully nice man from Stockton," said Isabel. "He's got three lovely children . . . and a wife too, of course. He told Samuel he feels ready for a change . . . I mean for the good of his parish. But I don't think St. Timothy's would quite do for him. His name's Jack Hopewell."

"Well, well," said the Bishop, closing his eyes to look at his list of vacancies. "There's the Holy Epistle at Bridgewater. Not large but definitely a challenge . . . for the right man."

Isabel shot a glance at Samuel who flicked an eyelash and reached for the cigarette box.

"Of course, Bridgewater's not a prosperous town, relatively, since Acorn Furniture moved to Georgia. But it's a great challenge. I think they can pay $2400; and there's a fine colonial rectory with a sun porch."

"I think," said Samuel, "that Jack gets $4000 now. But he'd be a good man for the diocese. Fine pastor."

"Mmmm . . . " mused the Bishop. "How about St. Olga's at Dimtown. I consider that one of our most strategic posts . . . for a man who is a good pastor and a community leader . . . ecumenical. Great chance for development. They have 300 in the Church School. They pay $4000 at least. What's his name?" . . .

"Wasn't that a splendid clergy conference last month?" the Bishop exclaimed veering from future challenges to past triumphs.

"Yes," said Samuel slowly, twitching an eyebrow at Isabel.

"I must look at the chicken," said Mrs. Entwhistle diplomatically. "Excuse me Bishop, please."

"That speech by Porringer was superb—superb. A bit theoretical perhaps, but Groundling brought us right down to earth. Practical."

"Yes," Samuel edged forward. "I had an idea about next year's conference, Bishop. I've been talking to . . . "

"Next year we plan to have Diggerbuck on the campaign-end of things and Bishop Stickney. Great fellow Stickney. He and I were classmates at Yale. I remember . . . "

"Yes," Samuel said, raising his voice. "I was talking about the campaign with Jones, and Black . . . "

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"Stickney once said to me when we were seniors at Yale," went on the Bishop, overpowering Samuel easily by throwing his baritone into overdrive. "Bert, the Church offers a great challenge to a man in these days. 'I think I'll go to seminary, and that . . . "

"Well, it seems to me," shouted Samuel, "that we get enough about the campaign on other occasions and that . . . "

"By the way," hollered the Bishop, tinkling the ice in his glass to bring Samuel to attention, "Our man Grubber had a wonderful campaign this fall. Raised $50,000; upped the quota 30%. He's an able fellow, Grubber; great idea man. That's my old parish, as you know Samuel . . . that reminds me of the year we had to raise a $30,000 budget during the depression . . . "

"Dinner is all ready now," said Isabel from the doorway.

" . . . and after that," said the Bishop, finishing his mashed potatoes, "we had to have an unlisted phone number."

"What happened to Jenkins, Bishop?" asked Samuel over the dessert, and under the chrysanthemums which Isabel had playfully called "a little center piece."

"Jenkins went to the Church of the Insurrection," the Bishop said, shaking his head sadly. "Too bad. He had a glorious opportunity at the Heavenly Comfort. He just can't seem to stay away from controversial issues. Rubs people the wrong way. He'd be a good man if he wasn't so radical . . . My, Isabel, what a delicious dinner . . . and now if you don't mind I think I'll run up to your study Samuel, and throw a few notes together for my sermon tomorrow. I want to say a word or two about the new diocesan program, and the challenge it presents to our people . . . "

"Just the thing," Samuel said weakly. "Sometime before you have to leave, I have a couple of matters I'd like to talk . . . "

"I'm delighted things are going so well, Samuel," the Bishop answered, edging toward the door. "Hear the most glowing reports from friends around town here. Wish I had more men like you."

"The clergy conference matter," Samuel tried once more.

"Yes, yes—it was a grand conference; glad you enjoyed it. It was a good program if I do say it. Well, see you later. You don't mind if I take over your study, Samuel?"

"You must admit," Isabel said in a hoarse whisper as she and Samuel sat down for a game of rummy, "the conversation didn't lag. What did Bishops do with their fingers before they got to be Bishops and could wear pectoral crosses?"

"Shhsh . . . " frowned Samuel. Isabel giggled merrily.

"The Bishop picked his pectoral cross," she repeated giggling in a mild hysteria. "That sounds funny."

"Shhsh, my dear," Samuel warned. "After all."

"You didn't tell him your idea about the clergy conference," Isabel chided, suppressing the mirth.

"How could I?" Samuel whispered. "I got drowned out." He pointed to the cards. "It's your draw my dear."

"Samuel," Isabel whispered. "Do you know what three thousand dollars a year is?"

"Chicken feed," Samuel whistled through his teeth.

"No sir. It's a strategic post. And," she went on with starry eyes, "$2400 is a Challenge. What's $4000?"

"A call to a wider field of service," Samuel grinned, entering into the spirit of the play.

"What do you suppose a glorious opportunity would be?" Isabel gleamed. "He mentioned a place like that."

Samuel dropped four queens on the table. "$6000—and traditionally, a membership in Rotary." Mr. Entwhistle began to giggle and put a large hand over his mouth. "In the old days . . . just think . . . they used to call it a call from God."

"THAT," said Isabel, putting down a pretty sequence in diamonds, "must mean $10,000 . . . with an unlisted phone number."*

"There are times," Samuel sighed, "when I could almost wish I were a Presbyterian. Your draw, my dear."

* AUTHOR'S NOTE:

The following list grew out of an informal conference of T. Barrett, R. Fay, R. Blanchard, C. Welsh, and is submitted here for the edification of the brethren to whom on some occasion it may be useful.

a. Real opportunity for growth	$1800
b. Challenge	2400
c. Strategic Post	3000
d. Wider Field of Service	4000
e. Glorious Opportunity	5000
f. Call from God (unlisted phone)	6000 and up
Total	$22,200

The total sum has no significance. It just seemed improper to have a list of numbers without adding them up.

Act One: Preparation

BY

GORDON C. GRAHAM

PREPARATION is practically meaningless unless we have some idea what it is we are preparing for. If in the Lord's Supper it is just to come and take communion, or simply to plead the holy sacrifice, then our getting ready will be very immediate and personal. But if it is our purpose first to make an offering to God then our preparation will be geared to making that offering worthy. In trying to do this we shall find our interest extending back long before the actual beginning of the service.

The preparation really starts when we begin to get ready the bread and the wine and this takes us a long way back and involves us with many people. Bread is the first thing to prepare because the simple fact of the divine arrangement is that we have first to give some of it to him before he can give us himself sacramentally. This puts the emphasis on human effort in preparing for the Eucharist. Bread is, also, the first thing to prepare because it is first in the scale of created values. It comes from the earth where it has grown as wheat, later to be harvested, processed and transported by human hands. Bread is an economic commodist and is socially produced. No one can make it, or anything else, exclusively by himself. Each person, however, who has anything to do with its production, either directly or indirectly, leaves his mark upon it. Creation involves the creator in the thing created, or putting it another way, each object expresses the workers who made it. The bread which is prepared for the Eucharist offering is a sample of ourselves.

The great question raised by the preparation, therefore, is what kind of a society does our bread come from? It has been produced by men who are both good and bad, but it is more than that. It involves economic questions of ownership and profits and social arrangements either of cooperation or conflict. Actually, this means not only the personal lives of the producers but the working conditions, the class struggle, the social injustices and inequalities, the monopolistic power, the international rivalry, and the curse of war. The same point can be made in terms of our money—it is stained with blood by the fact that some of it has been made by killing people. The bad side of our society is not the only side, of course, but it is the side that most of us do not want to face. We do not care where the bread comes from.

The bread that we buy in preparation for the Lord's Supper is a sample of our society before it is a direct expression of ourselves personally. We are part of the general pattern that produced the bread so that we have some responsibility but not all because society is bigger than we are and exists before us as a system or structure of life. It contains both order and disorder. The bread, therefore, states not only the economic problem but the social problem as well, that is, that there is such a reality as society, which is produced not only by individuals but which in turn produces the individuals in its own pattern. Our preparation involves, therefore, not only the economics of the production of bread but our whole society.

The act of preparation is primarily economic and social rather than liturgical. What have we been doing to make our world worthy to be offered to God? Where has been our social action? When the service begins, its note is properly prophetic. The lessons, prayers and sermons are to teach us to "prepare the way of the Lord and to make straight his paths." This corresponds with the first part of our Lord's ministry when, following upon the Baptist, he "Proclaimed the good news that the kingdom was at hand; repent and believe."

Christianity

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

THE religion which became alive through Jesus of Nazareth and which is known as Christianity has a distinctive creed and pattern of conduct. It is both a body of doctrine and a way of life.

The first and fundamental feature of religion as distinct from philosophy is belief in God. Religions differ in what they hold to be the nature of God, but that man is a creature and God the creator is the first act of faith we make when we move from ignorance to religion.

Christianity teaches that God is like a loving Father. This belief about God carries with it the necessity for behavior toward God in thought and deed which is an expression of loving devotion.

Our chief means of expressing our belief in and love toward God is by acts of worship, formal and informal, corporate and private, verbal and actual. How and what we do depends on us. What is for one person sincere devotion may be empty formality for another. But each must find adequate means of worship and use them.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Retrospect of an Unimportant Life. Vol. III. By H. H. Henson. Oxford. $4.50.

Rather a pathetic picture of the Bishop of Durham's "emptying world" as in retirement in a Suffolk village he steadily grows blinder and his wife deafer, and the German bombs fall about them. He finds amusement in the small London evacuees who attend a church filled with incense, and hurriedly put on their gas masks, in the fact that another than he is to be the modern bishop enshrined in stained glass at Durham, in the minor crises of kitchen "scullery" garden. But there is nothing pathetic about his "Letter to Gervase," an open letter to a young padre with which the book closes. It is a triumphant Credo. "There is no other Church now standing in Christendom to which I could transfer my allegiance."

The English Reformation to 1558. By T. M. Parker. Oxford. $2.00.

The librarian of Pusey House, Oxford, has written a most readable account of the English Reformation up to the accession of Elizabeth—when the "Anglican Settlement" began. This later phase will be dealt with in another volume in the series (Home University Library). The account of Church and state in mediaeval Engglland, and the chapter on religion in England in the early sixteenth century, are immensely well done. From these as premises, the Reformation seems inevitable; and the excesses are not all due to importations from abroad—Teutonic fury and violence. There was too much chicanery and double-dealing, from the King down, for the movement to be one of pure reformation; but the thing had to come, and it came in the only way, humanly speaking, it could come, given the situation as it was. For one thing, sixteenth century Englishmen seem to have been rather formal and non-intellectual, able to endure much, but given even then to "muddling through."

Paul and Rabbinic Judaism. By W. D. Davies. Macmillan. $4.50.

For fifty years and more, the tug-of-war in Pauline exegesis has seesawed back and forth: in one generation Paul has been explained wholly from the Hellenistic standpoint, in another from the Jewish. For Pfleiderer, Paul was a student of Stoicism in the "university" at Tarsus, and only incidentally—or accidentally—a Jew. For Deissmann, he was an Anatolian, a world-traveler, a "new man" of the type described by Tacitus and familiar under the early empire. For Strack and Billerbeck he was a thorough Jew. For plenty of others, he was a rabbi, trained at the feet of Gamaliel, and thoroughly representative of the typical Judaism of Palestine in the first century — only, many of these good people substituted fifth century Judaism for first century, and almost turned the unconverted Saul into a Talmudist.

The truth probably lies somewhere between these extremes. The conclusions arrived at are much the same as those of Father Bonsirven, S.J., in his great study of "Rabbinic Exegesis and Pauline Exegesis" (Paris, 1939). The English-speaking reader without German or French will find in this book by Mr. Davies a mine of information. It is one of the most important books on the subject since the late H. St. John Thackeray's "Relation of St. Paul to Contemporary Jewish Thought."

Ancient Near Eastern Texts relating to the Old Testament. Ed. by James B. Pritchard. Princeton Univ. Press. $15.

This huge, five hundred page, double column book is a simply priceless collection of the old Oriental literatures (in selection) which belong to the background of the Old Testament. The editor has assembled a group of experts who have translated the myths, legends, lyrics, proverbs, tales, legal records and codes, historical writings, rituals, incantations, hymns, prayers, didactic and wisdom literature and letters surviving from the ancient Sumerians, Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Akkadians, Hittites, Hurrians, Canaanites, and other peoples of the Near East. Even the Ras Shamra tablets are here (in what seems to us a somewhat too modern English style). Heretofore, students have had to search for these writings, in translation, in various books and periodicals, or in the great German collection by Gressman. Advanced students will of course continue to use other translations and editions as well as this one; but for the purposes of the beginner, and of the ordinary Bible reader, this scholarly work is simply invaluable, and is worth every cent it costs. We suggested recently that it might be worth while placing certain standard books in every public library, so that church people, Bible students, Sunday School teachers and pupils and others might have access to them. Here is a book that certainly should be in every public library in the land—even in small ones. Every patron of a library who is interested in any way in the Old Testament—Jew, Catholic, Protestant, Anglican, or whatever — should welcome and use this book.

The Dignity of Man. By Lynn Harold Hough. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $1.75.

There is no more gallant champion of true religious liberalism (which is essentially loyal to the traditional faith) and of "evangelical humanism" (which combines the best in the western world's intellectual heritage with the central tradition of Christianity) than the sometime Dean of Drew Seminary. In this his latest book, he is still defending, expounding, and persuading us to a more enlightened faith and a more exuberant hope than either Fundamentalism or Neo-orthodoxy (meaning revived Calvinism) has to offer. His pages are full of references to and quotations from the world's best literature and philosophy. Many preachers quote; but Dean Hough has made his own, has thought through and assimilated what he quotes; hence the great stimulus and urgency of his writing. It makes you read to the end, and sit up and think. It is time the rest of us began to do something to preserve the genuinely Christian appraisal of human nature, and not let it go by default into the descriptions and formulae of the psychopathic theology so popular—or, rather, so rampant—today.

The Hebrew Impact on Western Civilization. Edited by Dagobert D. Runes. Philosophical Library. $10.

This is an immense work (922 pages), a great apologia for Judaism, showing the contribution of the Jews to science, art, literature, journalism, law, philosophy, and even military strategy. It is meant to show the important part which Jews have taken in Western Civilization, including the foundations of American democracy. There are good bibliographies, and the book deserves to be widely read. It will do a great service in helping to break down the ignorant prejudice and bigotry which still survive in many American communities. I would like to see a copy in every public library in America!

The Physical Basis of Mind: a Symposium by Scientists and Philosophers. Compiled by Peter Laslett. Macmillan. $1.00.

Seven renowned scientists and three philosophers (Visc. Samuel, A. T. Ayer, and Gilbert Ryle) discuss the problem concerning the relation between the mind and the body. The scientific contributions are more satisfying than the philosophic ones, perhaps because the problem today is better treated by empirical and experimental investigation than by abstract thought. The great metaphysical solutions are a matter of the past. No Aristotelian or Cartesian can say anything today that was not made obsolete by Kant. Viscount Samuel nevertheless puts the question in the fashion of pre-Kantianism, but says it cannot be answered. Ayer denies the position of the Cartesians, but does not replace it by any new one. And Ryle's philosophy is outright anti-philosophical, in that he simply states the distinction between body and mind is controdicted by experience which does not draw a boundary line between them, but knows only the unity of the person.—Richard Kroner

Morals Since 1900. By Gerald Heard. Harper. $3.00.

An excellent analysis of the changes in mores and ethics brought about by political processes and pure research, the author feels that the latter has opened up new and encouraging relations to cosmology. Sometimes turgid, at times its conclusions questionable, the book is nevertheless unique and interesting.—Jos. H. Titus

The Book of Psalms and the Canticles of the Roman Breviary. St. Anthony Guild Press, Paterson, N. J. $2.00.

This is part of the new translation of the Bible being made by the Catholic Biblical Association of America, under the sponsorship of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine. It is, like their excellent translation of the New Testament, the work of capable scholars, and presupposes the vast labors of the past two or three generations in the field of textual and philological criticism. But to an Anglican it somehow lacks the sweet cadences of Coverdale and the Authorized Version, and the Prayer Book Psalter: its style is more rugged, more direct, perhaps more American. For one thing, it uses "you" instead of "thou." Whatever we Episcopalians and others may think, there is little question which way the American language is moving: "you" will win out, without question, by another twenty-five years!

The Man Jesus Was. By Max Schoen. Knopf. $3.00.

Among the many books that have been written by Jews upon the subject of our Lord, his life, ministry, or character, this book is unique. Dr. Schoen is convinced that "in his spirit and teachings lies the only remedy for the numerous afflictions of the present social order." He is also convinced that our Lord was a very different kind of person than either orthodox Christianity or the pale liberalism of forty years ago made out. He really fits the first century, not the fifth or the twentieth. He was interested in a deeping of the religion of his people—not in founding a new faith; the latter was left to St. Paul to do, and he did it by combining the teaching of our Lord with the principles and practices of a Hellenistic mystery religion. An old thesis—but worked out afresh, with many new insights, and in a simple and straightforward style. There are passages where the English is odd, but the sense is usually clear.

The Art of Teaching. By Gilbert Highet. Knopf. $3.50.

One wonders if it is possible to say anything new and fresh upon the subject of education or on the art of teaching. Its importance is obvious—the art is not practiced overmuch in the present generation. For evidence see the recent number of Life magazine devoted to American education. The present book is by a teacher who knows and practices the art. For evidence of that, ask any of his students at Columbia University. The book is full of uncommon common sense, of the kind that one assents to at once: "This is the right way to do it." The illustrations, drawn from many years of teaching, will interest not only pedagogues but all persons who take seriously the problems of conveying knowledge, skills, and attitudes to the new generation. In fact it will interest almost everyone.

Little Book of Contemplation. Edited and Revised into Modern English by Joseph Wittkofski. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.25.

A beautiful little book of devotion out of the 12th century. First translated into English in 1574, there are 33 chapters, beginning with "The Excellent Being of God," and ending with "Into Eternal Life." It is a beautiful little book, full of the realism and objectivity of the Middle Ages. It is good to get away now and then from the dreadful subjectivity of modern religion!

Building Up Your Congregation. By Willard A. Pleuthner. Wilcox & Follett. $2.50.

A stimulating book by a concerned layman anxious to see the church use tested business methods in the development of its program. The author is a vice-president of one of America's largest advertising agencies. Although sketchy in spots, the short pungent chapters will prod the thinking of any minister. Good chapters on "Increasing Attendance at Services," "Increasing Financial Support," and "Publicizing Your Church." A unique feature is the series of detachable plan sheets at the back of the book which the reader can use at once to sharpen the dull points in his present program. —R. T. M.

The Bible and Polygamy. By G. Parrinder. Macmillan. 50 cents.

A careful study of the historical development of monogamy as reflected in the Old Testament, Judaism, and the New Testament. The question arose on the mission field. The answer is scholarly but "popular" in style, and contains much more than just the discussion of polygamy and monogamy: excellent material on the whole subject of Christian Marriage.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

BISHOP ASKS ANGLICANS TO PROMOTE UNION

Bishop George E. Ingle, suffragan of Fulham, said in London on Jan. 15th that the Church of England should take the lead in promoting the reunion of Christendom. He made the statement in a letter to the London Times reviewing his recent visits to Moscow, Warsaw, Prague and other cities as head of Anglican chaplaincies in north and central Europe. He said "there is a manifest impatience among the laity and some of the clergy with the divisions of Christendom."

"It is a sound instinct," he wrote, "which, in the face of blatant atheism and materialism, sees these divisions as nothing less than tragic. We must remind ourselves that today Christians are drawing together more than at any time since the third century, and inter-Church relations are under discussion. Is it surprising that at a time when nations are constantly being told of the need to work, plan and defend themselves together, ordinary folk should be well-nigh exasperated that the churches do not more clearly show the way, and sometimes seen to be more concerned with controversy in the theological stratosphere than with a world which has lost its way?"

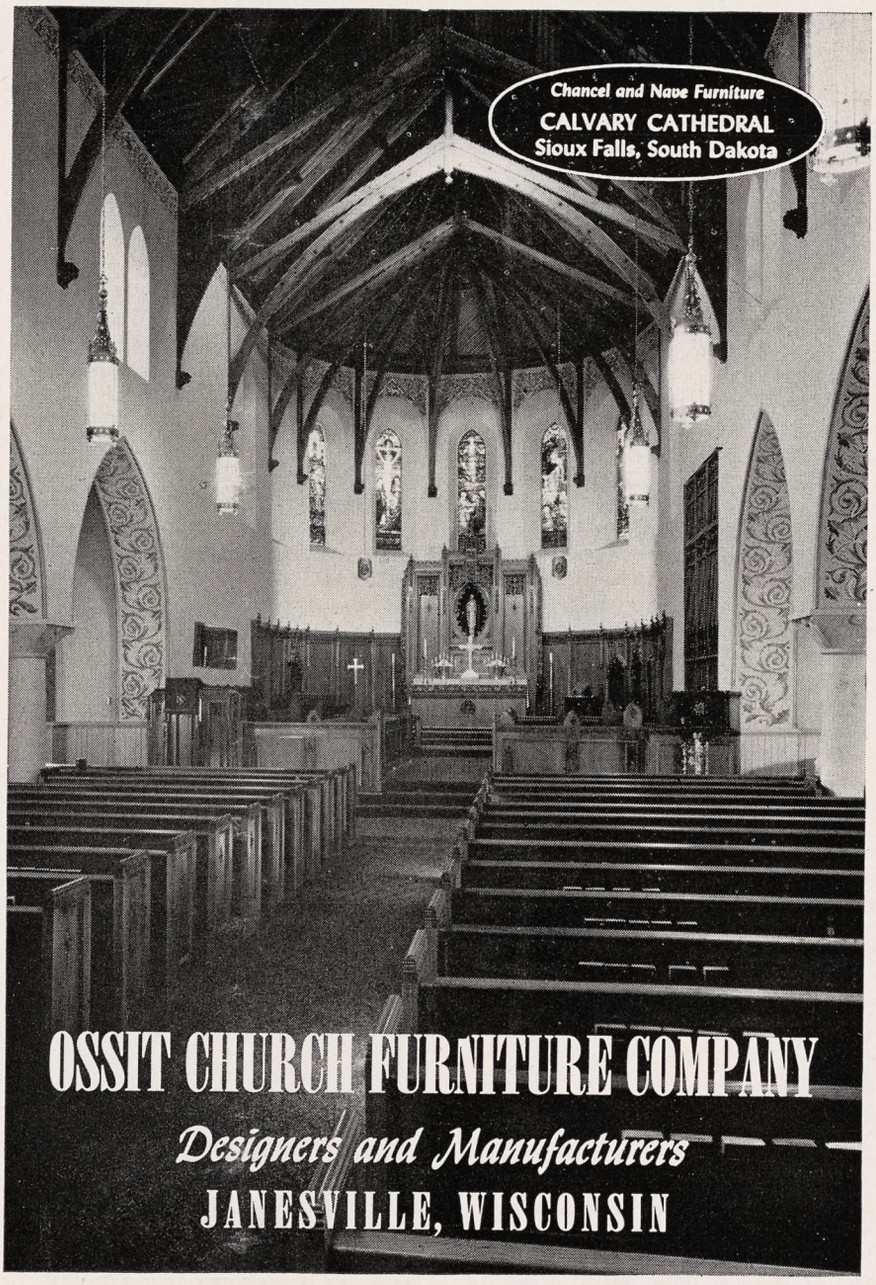
"Western democracy," he concluded, "is failing to handle with vision and vigor the perilous situation of today. The overruling cause of failure is the lack of sense of corporate and personal responsibility. There is only one road to sanity—personal personality leading to righteousness. We must repent or perish."

ANGLICAN & SCOTTISH LEADERS MEET

Representatives of the Church of England and the Church of Scotland recently resumed conversations regarding relations between the two Churches. Present also as observers were representatives of the Scottish Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church in England. They met last June when the announcement was made that the discussions were conducted in "an atmosphere of deepening friendship, understanding and cordiality."

ORDINATIONS INCREASE IN ENGLAND

Ordinations increased during the '49-'50 ecclesiastical year, it is revealed by the official year book of the Church of England. There were 419 ordained as deacons, compared with 362 the previous year, whereas in the three years before that the number has been 297, 208, 158. More than 6,000 candidates for the ministry were registered at the end of last year, with 3,000 already in training.



NIEMOELLER ADDRESSES MEETING IN POTSDAM

Martin Niemoeller, president of the Evangelical Church of Hessen and Nassau, urged Germans in the Soviet Zone not to feel bitterly against West Germans because the latter are "better off materially." Addressing a mass audience in Potsdam on Jan. 15th, he called for a Christian equalization of burdens between the East and the West. He said he was "no pacifist" but always spoke against German rearmament because "weapons are evil on both sides of the iron curtain and would lead to Germans shooting Germans. The iron curtain can be overcome by peace only, therefore on both sides men should become each other's Christian brethren."

The following day, on returning to his home in Wiesbaden by plane, he was taken ill with a severe case of flu and confined to bed.

CZECH PRINTERS ARRESTED

ing of Katolicke Noviny (Catholic News) which featured a joint pastoral written by diocesan vicars general. The pastoral called upon Christians to give full support to the government, and it is assumed that the workers delayed the printing because they are followers of the Vatican.

PHILIPPINE PROTESTANTS PROTEST ENVOY

A memorial protesting the sending of a special envoy to the Vatican has been sent to the president of the Philippines by the federation of Christian Churches. They were acting on reports that plans for such a mission are under way.

KOREAN PROTESTANTS HOLD PRAYER MEETINGS

Daily prayer meetings for peace were held by Protestant churches in South Korea from Jan. 14th through the 21st. Announcement was made that the meetings will as God "to restore peace to our poor country and save it from total destruction."

CHINESE CHRISTIANS ANTI-AMERICAN

More than 400 representatives of Christian organizations were reported in Shanghai on Jan. 16 to have formed a group called "Shanghai Christian Associations committee for resisting American aggression and aiding Korea." They were said to have sent a telegram to Mao Tze-tung, head of the Chinese Communist regime, pledging him their support in the Korean campaign.

"We Chinese Christians," they said, "have joined enthusiastically in the great movement to resist American imperialist aggression and to aid Korea now spreading among the entire Chinese people. We assure you that we will follow your leadership and contribute whatever we have to defeat these imperialist provocations, safeguard world peace and the security of our country. We will also complete the reformation of the Chinese Churches in the direction of self-government, self-propagation and self-support within the shortest possible time, so as to get rid of the American imperialists' misuse of Christianity as a means of carrying on their aggressive conspiracy in China."

EXTENDED COVERAGE
What does it cover?

The Extended Coverage endorsement to a fire insurance policy includes protection against damage by windstorm, cyclone, tornado, hail, explosion, riot, riot attending a strike, civil commotion, aircraft, smoke, and motor vehicles; and insurance must be for the same amount as the fire insurance, as the term "Extended Coverage" implies.

Over a three-week period THE CHURCH FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION received from policyholders over 200 reports of damage to Church property resulting from the great Northeast Storm of November 25th and 26th. Immediate steps were taken to speed adjustments of claims and make possible early restoration of damaged properties.

Often Extended Coverage is requested by property owners who think only of windstorm insurance, and the other hazards this insurance covers are overlooked. Smudge by faulty oil burning heating equipment, heavy damage by explosion of accumulated gas—these are examples of losses not covered by a fire insurance policy. They are covered, however, by Extended Coverage. The rate for this added protection is very low in most localities.

If you wish a quotation on the cost of Extended Coverage — or windstorm or fire — insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with your Church, just clip this advertisement, fill in the information listed below, and mail to us, so that we can send to you an application form:

THE STORY OF ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI

By Elizabeth Grierson

The "Church Times" describes this book as "admirably suited for children;" but all young people will appreciate and enjoy this delightfully written short biography of the gentle founder of the Greyfriars, who " . . . more than any other man, moulded his life on the pattern of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Illustrated Price, $1.50

CURIOSITY SHOP

Some Church Customs Explained

By S. G. Thicknesse

An extremely interesting little book containing twenty-six chapters and eight full-page photographic plates, which answers in an engaging manner all sorts of questions having to do with religious customs and usages—from 'What is a perpetual curate?' to 'Why is the lectern an eagle?' Price, $1.05

CHILDREN OF GALILEE

By Lydia S. Eliott

A tale of the Holy Land in our Lord's lifetime. The children concerned mingle with the crowds gathered to hear Christ teaching or witness His healing work, and soon come to trust and love Him and to realize His love for them. Especially recommended for children from eight to twelve years of age.

Illustrated Price, $1.50

THE CHRISTIAN MYSTERIES

By Bede Frost

This book is a guide to the Christian religion in terms of its supernatural character. The subjects treated are the creation of the world, the nature of man, the existence of evil, the Incarnation, the Redemption, the Church, the Christian Life, the Mass, the Sacraments, the Future Life and the Holy Trinity. Price, $2.55

DOCTRINE, DUTY and DEVOTION

A Three-Year Course of Teaching Sermons

By G. H. Midgley

Providing a body of regular, consistent and balanced teaching of the Faith that preachers will find of the greatest help in sermon preparation. "The book will help those priests who wish to instruct and edify as well as exhort, and so serve their people by the strengthening of Christian fundamentals."

CAMPS PLANNED FOR COs

Selective service headquarters is getting set to propose a plan of alternative service for religious objectors to the draft. The plan is to reestablish Civilian Public Service camps. Religious groups, with headquarters in Washington, are preparing to fight against the plan, with the Quaker committee on national legislation taking the lead in mobilizing and coordinating the opposition.

STUDENTS ACT ON WORLD ISSUES

U. S. recognition of the People's government of China "in view of its de facto control of the entire mainland" was advocated by the national assembly of the Student Christian Movement, meeting at Oxford, O. They also urged a settlement of the future status of Formosa by the UN. The 1,306 delegates pledged support to the UN and proposed that no member nation use atomic, bacteriological or hydrogen weapons except with the consent of that body. They set as the movement's major emphasis for the next four years a striving for a just and durable peace.

STANLEY JONES ON CHINA

Missionary E. Stanley Jones, speaking in Washington, said that the only thing the U. S. can do in the present East situation is to agree to admit the Peoples Government of China to the UN. "If China comes into the UN," he said, "she assumes the responsibility of membership and is then under obligation herself to submit her dispute to the UN for arbitration. Otherwise war will go on and fighting continue."

PENN CHURCH READERS WANT FEPC LAW

A group of Church leaders of Pennsylvania conferred with Governor John S. Fine, Episcopalian, on the adoption of a fair employment practices law for the state. Clarence E. Pickett, Quaker, as spokesman for the group expressed appreciation to the new governor "for his forthright stand" in favor of anti-discrimination laws.

COOLING OFF PERIOD BEFORE DIVORCE

Governor Luther Youngdahl of Minnesota, addressing the legislature at the opening of his third term, urged laws that would provide a cooling off period before divorce action. "The home is the foundation of the social order," he said, "but there are signs that this foundation is cracking and crumbling. The divorce rate has increased sharply. Broken homes mean

AN UNUSUAL BOOK OF RELIGIOUS SIGNIFICANCE

A PIONEER IN NORTHWEST AMERICA

THE MEMOIRS OF GUSTAF UNONIUS

Vol. I. 419 pages, illustrated $6

IN THIS, the first English translation of the volume, the memoirs of Gustaf Unonius, founder of the Scandinavian Episcopal church in Chicago, are presented. Unonius was the leader of one of the earliest groups of Swedish immigrants to America. His story provides a vivid picture of the religious customs in the wilderness of mid-America, where he settled in what was then Wisconsin Territory. In this volume he recounts his first meeting with the Rev. J. Lloyd Breck, the Episcopal missionary, who profoundly influenced Unonius' decision to enter the Episcopal clergy.

Church services for the pioneer settlers of 100 years ago are described in detail, along with a searching analysis of the religious beliefs and customs of the new country in contrast with those the writer left behind in Sweden.

Translated by J. Oscar Backlund, editor, Svenska Amerikanaren Tribunen, Chicago. Edited and annotated by Nils W. Olsson, public affairs officer, American legation, Iceland, on leave from the University of Chicago. Introduction by George M. Stephenson, professor of history, University of Minnesota.

children who are innocent victims. Out of these broken homes come a tragic amount of youth delinquency and the loss of precious human resources."

He urged the passage of a state fair employment practices act; medical treatment for alcoholism; expanded services in the area of health; research into the causes and treatment of mental sickness.

ONLY ONE CALM AREA IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

Only one territory in Southeast Asia was found by Bishop D. H. Tippett, Methodist of California, during his recent visit to be free of disturbance and unrest. The calm area was the one occupied by the head-hunters of Borneo. He said that peoples throughout the East are looking toward China rather than Russia as their Communist example. "The Chinese," he reports following a four month trip, "wherever they have taken over, have been very adept at establishing many of the principles we've claimed for democracy." He expressed doubt regarding force as the method for meeting Communism in Asia. Instead, he said, Communism must be countered by more positive and more persuasive ideas and actions, prominent among them being Church good will activities.

CHURCHES INCREASE USE OF TELEVISION

The Protestant radio commission produced and arranged for 2,128 radio and television programs last year, an average of 41 a week. It also produced 36 transcriptions and four television films now being used by local stations. A spokesman deplored the lack of prime listening time for religious broadcasts, stating that "during 1951 only one sustaining Protestant radio or television series was scheduled by a network in class A time."

TEN COMMANDMENTS OF CONDUCT

Ten commandments of conduct for these times of tension have been adopted by the Jewish community of Hull, Mass. Written by Rabbi Bert A. Klein, they are: don't spread scare stories; obey all laws; practice democracy toward all races and sects; cherish friendships; be forgiving and charitable; whatever you do, do the best job you can; carry out your civic tasks, however dull and unimportant; maintain your morale; use religion as a fountain of strength; guard the welfare of families of men in the armed services.

WARNS AGAINST PARTISAN USE OF PRAYER

Prayer, even in a world crisis, should not sink to the level of being merely a morale builder for partisan politics said Charles F. Boss Jr., head of the Methodist's commission on world peace. "There is always a danger that our prayers be given a national or political bias which prostitutes the true purpose of prayer as a universal spiritual experience." On the cold war, he proposed a conference of top-level ministers of foreign affairs to consider negotiation of the issues involved.

FIGHT COMMUNISM WITH IDEAS

The Rev. J. C. Murray, S.J., professor at Woodstock College, Md., told the delegates attending the Association of American Colleges that the U. S. should use the concepts of justice and freedom to fight Communism in place of American practical materialism and American sentimental moral idealism.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

KENNETH E. CLARKE
Rector, St. Anne's, Middletown, Del.

Quite frankly your editorial entitled "Ministers and Work" (Dec. 28) irritated me. There is much about the ministry as well as the Church that lends itself to satire. Flip comments seem especially easy to make on sacred things. From this, you might think I totally disagreed with your editorial. The homesteading idea discussed in the Dec. 21st issue is, I think, a very practical solution to some of our rural problems. Certainly, however, I don't go on to generalize and say that because in a specialized field new techniques are needed that the ministry is not a full time job. For my part, I happen to have two jobs. One-quarter of my salary is earned by teaching in one of our Episcopal boarding schools. I like both my jobs, but you may be sure that when I move I will settle for either a parish or a teacher's position—both are full time jobs.

When a man is ordained to the priesthood, he is asked to lay aside the study of the world and the flesh. The language is archaic, but the meaning is clear. In effect, it says: "Fellahs, you've got a job on your hands, and you're going to need all your time to do it"; If you don't believe this try meditating on the meaning of each of the following clerical "handles": preacher; (some have thought this important) priest; minister; rector; Father (no, I don't like it either, but it says something); and Reverend Mister.

As for old Paul, God knows I love him, he never condemned a man for giving his full time to the ministry and expecting a livelihood from it. He just didn't choose this way for himself. My opinion is that Paul, being a recent convert, was over sensitive on this subject. To the end he retained his Jewish outlook, and he wasn't going to leave the door open for anyone to accuse him of profiteering on his Christianity. This is one sphere in which he lacked humility, because he couldn't swallow his pride enough to take these accusations even though he knew them to be false.

In conclusion, let me ask what's wrong with the parish bulletin or pastoral calling? The real trouble is that we don't do either well enough. There is such a thing as the ministry of the printed word. In a small parish, while the rector may have help, he is the logical one to plan and carry through this work.

I have heard many a medical man say that much of his work is composed of dull routine, yet I have never heard of one of them looking for another job. Just before Christmas I made an apparently routine call on one of my parishioners. Although I have never farmed, we talked about agriculture for about forty minutes. In psychological jargon there is a word called empathy. This means establishing such a relationship with another person that they readily share their interests with you. Since manifestly clergymen cannot be farmers, mechanics, butchers, barbers, etc., I suggest the cultivation of this technique as a surrogate for dabbling in secular work which probably should also take most of one's time to be done well.

Returning to my parishioner, following the farming discussion, the conversation turned to her late husband and the Christian attitude toward death. The next day she mentioned to another parishioner how much she appreciated my call, for she had been feeling quite lonely, and desirous of talking about her husband to someone. This was one call which took two hours in the afternoon. There were other calls to be made in the evening.

Let us not be too hasty. At this time of stress and strain when the Church is just beginning to realize its educational responsibility I think our people, by and large, require a full ministry. The routine things may seem irrelevant, but they are not as inane as your editorial would paint them. What our Lord wants is for us to apply his principles. As long as this is done, I am sure we needn't worry too much about spending a few hours on the bulletin, the parish register, thank you notes for contributions, the church cemetery, the insurance coverage, or any of the other myriad details.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Clergy Salaries Are Studied By Official Commission

Concerned About Widely Varying Conditions That Exist Throughout Church

By FREDERICK D. GOODWIN
The Bishop of Virginia

★ The second meeting of the commission on pensions and salaries, General Convention, was held in El Paso on the two days preceding the meeting of the House of Bishops. Various matters relating to the Church Pension Fund system engaged a good deal of the committee's time, and a report on them will be made to the General Convention in 1952.

In addition to matters related to the Church Pension Fund, the commission was charged with the duty of "studying the question of clerical salaries." In making this study, matters of so much moment were discovered by the commission that permission was given to the commission to make an immediate report to the House of Bishops. This interim report was based on information sent to the commission by the bishops in answer to a questionnaire, as well as on data supplied by the Church Pension Fund as of November, 1950. What did the commission discover regarding the salaries of the clergy of the Episcopal Church within the borders of the United States?

The average cash salary (rectories or provision therefore are provided in addition to this figure) today is $3,592 for the dioceses and $3,097 for the missionary districts. But the term "average salary" is misleading. A few large salaries, including the bishop's, can bring up an average figure. The median salary figure is much more revealing. The median figure, the figure half way between the highest and lowest salary, is $3,215 for the dioceses, and $2,562, for missionary districts. In other words, one-half of the clergy of the Episcopal Church receive cash salaries below these figures, and one-half above. It is for those whose salaries are below the median line that the commission is deeply concerned.

Thus in a study, diocese by diocese and district by district, further important facts are revealed. Unfortunately, lack of time between the meeting of the commission on Monday and the presentation of its report to the House of Bishops on Tuesday, prevented a full analysis in terms of the median salary. The following figures, therefore, are in terms of the average salary since these figures were available.

In the 75 dioceses, the highest average for any diocese was $4,796, the lowest average, $2,761, a spread of more than $2,000 or 70%. Four dioceses averaged under $3,000, sixty-one dioceses averaged between $3,000-$4,000, ten dioceses averaged over $4,000.

In the missionary districts the range was $3,633 for the highest and $2,898 for the lowest, a spread of $735 or 25%. But again, let us not be misled by the term "average salary." An analysis of the salaries in the four lowest dioceses reveals 40% below $2,500. In the four highest dioceses, averaging well over $4,000, 45% are below $3,600. The commission's concern is primarily with the large group of salaries in the lower half of the scale.

The commission had two suggestions to make. The first was that it must be a primary concern of the bishop of each diocese and missionary district to study the situation in his own area, and take the initiative with vestries and with those responsible for administering diocesan aid to see that a living stipend is supplied. For this reason the commission reported directly to the House of Bishops, to the pastores pastorum.

But how is a reasonable living stipend to be determined? Certainly no general figure can be set to meet the varied situations throughout the Church; but a general principle is suggested, namely, that each diocese or district shall arrive at such a figure for itself, not based however upon guesses, but upon information arrived at through consultation with the clergy themselves, or representatives of them, who are in the lower salaried group.

One diocese carried through this plan by calling in four representative rural clergymen and an equal number of rural vestrymen. The clergymen represented a salary average of $3,500, out of which car maintenance, upkeep, insurance and depreciation or purchase payments had to come. Their present budgets, pared down to the minimum, allowing for a family of four, showed $100 per month for car expenses, $90 for food, $36 for utilities, $15 to $20 for benevolences, bare sums for education, doctors and dentists, insurance, little or nothing for clothes, recreation, books, etc. The average was practically the full amount of their stipend.

The group then undertook to set up a monthly budget to allow something more for the items above that were cut below any right or reasonable minimum. Some little for savings, a few more for clothes beyond those given by friends, etc. Car expense could not be cut, since this group averaged 21,000 miles a year in their parish work. The result was an evident need for a $4,200 a year, $3,000 to live on and $1,200 a year for car expense. This figure was not a guess of a bishop or an executive council imposed from above, but a figure worked out by faithful clergymen from their own sacrificing experience.

The commission feels that if the bishops will take the lead, consult with their clergy and then present the facts, the laity will respond in those terms which the widely varying conditions throughout the Church may demand.

RELIGIOUS ART EXHIBIT

★ An exhibit of religious art was the feature at the annual open house and reception at Seabury-Western Seminary on January 28th. Paintings, illuminated manuscripts, wood and metal work, limestone carving, and enamel cloissonne were among the exhibits.

CONFERENCE DATES ANNOUNCED

★ The conference of the province of Washington will be held at Hood College, Frederick, Md., June 17th through the 23rd. Dean Brooke Mosley of Wilmington, Delaware, is to be the dean but no announcement of other teachers has yet been made. The theme is to be the Christian family.

DEAN R. S. WATSON MAY DECLINE

★ Dean Richard S. Watson, elected bishop of Utah at the recent meeting of the House of Bishops, wrote in the bulletin of St. Mark's, Seattle, of January 21st: "Just a few minutes ago the notification was phoned to me from El Paso of my election as the bishop of the missionary district of Utah. Needless to say I am confused and bewildered. It is a distinct honor to have been elected a bishop in the Church of God. This election, of course, must be confirmed by a majority of the standing committees of the dioceses throughout the Church before any decision can really be made. I will say to you quite frankly that it will be most difficult to make a decision to leave this parish at this time. I have no desire nor have I any intention of leaving. Right now I want to ask all of you to keep me in your prayers that a decision may be made which is in accordance with God's will. If we all pray for that then we need have no worry as to what the decision may be."

BISHOP GILBERT MADE CANON

★ Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, retiring Bishop of New York, is now an honorary canon of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The appointment was made by Bishop Donegan, and approved by the cathedral trustees. The Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving, rector of St. James, New York, was elected a trustee to fill the vacancy created by Bishop Donegan becoming president ex-officio.

MRS. PAUL MOORE A DIRECTOR

★ The Episcopal Church Foundation has elected its first woman director. She is Mrs. Paul Moore of New York, Convent, N. J., and Palm Beach, Fla. She is a governor of the council for clinical training, New York, and a member of the Bellevue Hospital chaplaincy committee. She is active in many civic and cultural fields, including the American Red Cross, community chest, the Morristown memorial hospital. In addition, Mrs. Moore is a member of the national and New York boards of the English-speaking union; member of the board of the national Audubon society of Greenwich, Conn., chairman of the decorating committee of the Morristown national historical park; co-chairman of the art committee and trustee of the associates in fine arts, Yale University.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA RAISES BUDGET

★ The budget for the national work of the Church and for mission work in the diocese of Southwestern Virginia, totalling $61,733, has been practically assured. In addition it is confidently expected that an additional $6,500 for the newest congregation in the diocese, St. James, Roanoke, will be subscribed in full.

As a result of a discussion on the subject at the December meeting of the executive committee of the diocese, Bishop Phillips appointed the following committee to make a study of how to increase the number of men entering the ministry: The Rev. R. R. Beasley, the Rev. W. E. Roach, the Rev. G. William Beale.

Ecumenical Relations Commission Issues Report

By JAMES W. KENNEDY

★ The joint commission on ecumenical relations of General Convention, which is the organ of the Episcopal Church's functioning relationship with such bodies as the newly organized National Council of Churches, and the World Council of Churches, met for its second annual meeting in Sycamore, Ill., on January 16-18 at the Bishop McLaren Foundation.

The following members were present: Bishop Angus Dun, chairman, the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, secretary, Bishop Richard S. M. Emrich, Dean William H. Nes, the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, the Rev. James W. Kennedy, the Rev. John C. Leffler, the Rev. Samuel E. West, Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel, Mr. Clifford P. Morehouse, and Mr. Stewart A. Cushman.

Following the mandate of General Convention, the commission heard reports from the World Council and the National Council of Churches, and in general on the participation of our delegates in the work of these two bodies. Since the latter had received such recent detailed coverage in both the secular and religious press, very little time was given to the report of its activities. The main points made in the report concerned the very large measure of leadership from our Church and the continuing of the important work already underway in all the eight cooperative agencies which went together to form the National Council of Churches, especially the Federal Council. The chairman was instructed to ask the bishops to inform their dioceses in some way of what is happening in this new set-up and to encourage cooperation at the local level. Further suggestions were made concerning the distribution of available literature through parishes and the incorporation of an item in the parish budget for membership in the National Council of Churches.

The various meetings under the World Council were reported on, especially the executive committee and the central committee of the World Council and the plans for both the third world conference on faith and order to be held in Lund, Sweden, in 1952, and the second assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held in 1953. A number of different items were discussed under this general heading.

One, the presentation of the new study booklet, prepared by a member of the joint commission for the committee on the promotion of faith and order studies, for use by all the member Churches of the World Council in preparation for the Lund conference, especially at the grass roots level. The study booklet, available from the book store at Church Missions House, deals with the three themes now being studied by faith and order: 1) The nature of the Church; 2) traditions of worship; and 3) inter-communion. This course is recommended for use as widely as possible by our Church.

Two, nominations were made of a list of names from which our delegates to Lund will be chosen just as soon as the exact number is known. The names were selected carefully from among the leading theologians of our Church. The actual delegates will be announced later.

Three, a committee was appointed to sift out from the reports from the first assembly of the World Council of Churches, the matters which should be referred to the next General Convention for possible action.

Four, it was decided to get reports from all meetings of commissions and committees through our official members or delegates for informing the entire Church through the religious press as quickly as possible after each meeting. This was done in part in 1950. From these reports the joint commission will make its report to General Convention in 1952.

Five, the theme for the second assembly was approved and practical suggestions made for the arrangements of the sections and the presentation of the theme and sub-themes. "Jesus Christ as Lord is the only hope of the world," with sub-themes on "Our unity in Christ" (or whatever seems best following Lund); "evangelism," "the responsible society," "the responsibility for international justice and peace," "race and other group relations," "the vocation of the laity."

Six, the recommendation of the study booklets prepared by the study department of the World Council now available as guides for group use, and furnishing some preparations for the 1953 assembly. 1) The Bible and the Church's message to the world, 2) The evangelization of man in modern mass society, 3) Christian action in society.

Seven, the statement on what the World Council is and what it is not, adopted by the central committee meeting at Toronto last summer, was approved as follows: "We have considered this document and found it to be an adequate statement of the nature and purpose of the World Council and of our confident sharing in its membership."

Eight, urged the inclusion of certain phases of the subject of "ecumenical relations" in synod meetings, diocesan council meetings, summer conferences, and parish and community gatherings. An excellent movie is available and the commission recommends it highly. Four synod meetings had a speaker on the subject last year. Speakers and leaders are available.

A long discussion was held

The Greatest Battle

LET no man underestimate the grave crisis which faces us. We are challenged on every front—political, economic, military, and spiritual. On the first three, we may only pray that the governments of the world, especially our own, will make wise decisions and take such action as will lead all men to peace and freedom and not the devastation of global war.

It is on the fourth front that we may go into action, now—and with no feeling of "at least I can pray." It is everywhere recognized by men of integrity and vision that victory on every front will mean nothing unless there is a resurgence of spiritual power to breathe renewed life and vitality into the tired kingdoms of this world. Secularist materialism, of which Communion is only the most conspicuous and virulent example, has infected the lives of us all. That is why we have not thus far successfully resisted its rapid growth. The battle is for the soul of man and it cannot be won by outbidding our competitors in the world's market-place. There are some things that cannot be bought, and he who puts a price on that which is priceless will only be spurned and despised. We cannot buy off the discontent of the rest of the world, nor can we beat it into subjection.

Ours is a spiritual crisis, in which political decisions are not enough. Economic adjustments are important, but do not go to the root of the matter. Military strategy, however brilliant, cannot win the heart of man, within which lies the power of good or evil.

The greatest battle must be fought on the spiritual front, and in that battle we are already engaged. We need not wait to be told what to do. We have already been told, and in some degree we have already begun to fight. But this is no longer a cold or lukewarm war in which we are engaged. It is a hot war in which fervent prayer is demanded. The time to begin is now.

"QUOTES"

WE can approach the holiness of God without arrogance only as we are conscious of the sins that keep us from knowing him as he is revealed in the person of Jesus Christ. The self-seeking person who thinks to cultivate the majesty of God by assuming his own importance will find himself guilty only of colossal impertinence. God is a person who is tenderly compassionate toward penitent sinners, but who declines to be the subject of patronage on the part of his creatures, no matter how important these creatures may fancy themselves to be. The best educated men are those who are more conscious of the limited character of their education and the saintliest of men have ever been those who were most profoundly conscious of their own shortcomings. We may approach God only as we acknowledge our weakness in the presence of his glory.

—IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder of the Witness

Suggestions for Lent

IT might be well for all of us this Lent to remember that Christ is more concerned with the little virtues of life than with the heroics. He who talked of the woman sweeping her home for the lost coin, and the man seeking the one sheep that was lost, indicated that he was more concerned with our faithfulness in every day acts than in the dramatics of life.

This world needs people who pray. It needs people who are quick to forgive and are loathe to hurt others. It needs people who are kindly interested in others, neither talking cant nor cultivating a stony stare.

The founder and first editor of this journal, the late Bishop Irving P. Johnson, once set to paper a few suggestions for people to follow who strive to follow Christ. We can hardly do better as Ash Wednesday approaches than to present them to you with the suggestion that you give them attention this Lent.

You are followers of Christ and not your local minister.

You should judge others by your own shortcomings rather than theirs.

You should not be discouraged because your spiritual development is slow.

You should realize that confessing your neighbor's faults is not your business. Your conscience was given you to audit your own account.

You may fail Christ but he will not fail you if you are sincere in your discipleship.

It is better to try and fail than it is to refuse to make the effort because the task is difficult.

Repent comes first in spiritual gardening. Lent is a season in which we are to break up the hard soil by penitence and so let the word of God be sown in our hearts that our lives may be fruitful. The fruits of the spirit are joy and peace. But we cannot have these gifts unless we are willing to undergo the discipline of the Christian life. For there is no harder or more stubborn soil than these hearts of ours.

The Church and World Peace

BY

GARDINER M. DAY
Rector of Christ Church, Cambridge

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

IT has been aptly stated that there never was a time when it was possible for so few to damn so many. I think it is also true to say that there never was a time when it was more difficult for the Church to give specific guidance to Christians in regard to what they can do to help establish world peace. While the desire for peace has never been stronger than it is today, international relations have become so complex that it is quite evident that no single action which Christians can take will surely prevent war.

What service then can the Church, or we as Christians, render? I believe that our greatest duty, privilege and opportunity is that of holding aloft the Christian ideal of peace on earth and good will among men and to keep strong our faith that man, by the help of God, can eventually attain that ideal. We know the path will be long and arduous. We know it will require unwavering patience and perseverance, backbreaking effort and willingness to sacrifice. For we know that no great humanitarian goal has ever been achieved without patience, perseverance, effort and sacrifice. We also know that faith in the power of God to work through human beings is essential if peace is to be established and maintained.

Our Christian faith should help us to have patience and save us from easy cynicism. It should save us from being taken in by those who say that the ideal of world peace is a sentimental illusion. Man is a fighting animal and you can't change human nature. True, we can't change human nature, but we can and have changed human attitudes and relationships. About a hundred years ago, a large proportion of people in our country believed that slavery was an essential condition of human society. Human nature did not change, but human attitudes did change and human slavery has been abolished.

Cast Off Fear

SECONDLY, faith can afford us perspective in the face of the current epidemic of fear of Communism, which has become an obsession with some people. Fear can affect society in much the same way that it may affect an individual. Perhaps we ourselves have had the experience of being so paralyzed by fear that we couldn't do anything or so knocked "off the beam" by fear that we acted ridiculously. We have all seen parents who are so obsessed with fear and anxiety lest some injury should come to their children that they handicapped their children's lives by all kinds of restrictive rules and regulations. Similarly, when a society becomes obsessed by fear, it is frequently driven to incredible extremes. The immediate reaction is usually that of restricting and denying ordinary forms of freedom of conscience, speech and assembly which the society enjoys, lest these very freedoms be used by those whom the society fears. During these last months we have seen bills introduced in legislatures that would virtually try to effect "thought control," and we have seen attempts to prove people guilty of being Communist by the most tenuous associations. As a result the suspicions and fears of men concerning their associates are greatly increased. Injury is done to many loyal individuals. People lose their perspective and their faith in their fellowmen.

The most unfortunate and serious result, however, is that it turns the attention of men from the most essential method of combatting Communism, namely, that of seeing that our democratic ideals are made effective in our society. If we do everything we can to improve the living standards of the underprivileged people in our country, to reduce unemployment, to eliminate racial and other forms of discrimination and in every other way strive to better human relations, we shall create such a healthy democratic society that it will be impossible for Communist ideology to find root in it. Communism only flourishes where there is such poverty and unemployment that it is easy for people to believe the utopian picture painted by the Communist is an answer to their need.

As our Christian faith alone can save us from cynicism and fear, so it will also save us from believing that our security lies in armament and alliances. Our security lies not in material things, but in establishing of mutual understanding between men and nations. Many people today virtually say, "I believe that all men are children of God except the Russians." Yet it was not many years ago that one heard people saying, "We believe all men are children of God except the Japanese." As Christians we believe that God made man in his own image, that is, that he gave to man a spirit akin to his own. Furthermore, this means not some men but all men. Therefore we who are Christian must dedicate ourselves to the strengthening of our faith that the spirit of God working in the hearts and minds of men may create peace on earth and good will among men.

C. R.--The Church's Answer To A Scientific Age

BY
DAVID R. COCHRAN
Student Pastor at University of Washington

"GOOD morning. I am a newcomer to the city, and I should like some information about Episcopal churches."

"Certainly, madam. I shall be glad to help you."

"I am wondering which is the nearest church to our new home. We live in the Tanglewood Heights district."

"Oh. That would be St. Paul's. It's just down the hill from there."

"St. Paul's . . . what kind of a church is it?"

"What kind of a church? Well, it's a very attractive little church . . . stone, English gothic."

"No, I mean, what kind of . . . well, what are the services like? I mean, is it high or low?"

"Oh . . . well, that's hard to say. Perhaps I could answer you better if I knew where you are."

"Where I am? Why, I'm here at home, in Tanglewood Heights, and I don't see . . . "

"Yes, I know. I meant, where you are in terms of highness or lowness. What sort of churchmanship are you accustomed to?"

"Oh . . . well, I . . . "

"Perhaps if you tell me what your past parish was?"

"Oh. We're from St. Martin's, in Wisteria, California."

"Oh dear. I'm afraid I'm not acquainted with that parish. Hmm, let me see . . . did you call your rector Mister or Father?"

"Doctor. Doctor Lambkins."

"Oh . . . well, does Dr. Lambkins use eucharistic vestments when he celebrates?"

"Euch . . . ? Celebrate . . . ? I'm afraid I never noticed."

"Well, does he have communion every Sunday at eleven, or just on the first Sunday of the month?"

"I . . . well, I'm afraid we didn't go very often, so I don't quite know. You see, my husband . . . "

"Well, madam, I suggest you just go to St. Paul's sometime, and find out for yourself if it's the kind of church you like. And if it isn't, there are a dozen other Episcopal churches in the city, within quite easy distance from your home, and I am sure you will find one that suits you. Good day!"

I suppose every priest of the Church in a large city has experienced telephone conversations similar to this. Such conversations haunt me, not only because of the personal frustrations involved, but because they sum up the whole tragic situation in which our Church finds itself. Here was a stray lamb looking for a congenial sheep-fold, and I could not tell her where to go! And the chances are, if the local parish did not suit her, she would never find one. The whole thing would present obstacles too complex and imposing for one of her tenuous convictions to overcome, and she would probably end up by espousing Christian Science or Unity, where the problem of churchmanship never raises its ugly head.

Problem of Semantics

SO I began to ask myself, as I suppose every priest has, what is wrong with this Church of ours? If she is everything we claim her to be—if she has all the virtues of both Catholicism and Protestantism, a ministry both of word and of sacrament, a rich historical heritage and a modern outlook, an elasticity of doctrine, discipline, and worship that can meet the needs of the most varied temperaments—if she has all this, why isn't she doing a better job of it? Indeed, why isn't the world clamoring at her doors for admittance?

The more I thought about this, the more clearly the answer emerged. There is nothing wrong with the Episcopal Church as such—she does have everything! Nor is there anything essentially wrong with our clergy, with our methods of organization, promotion, and evangelism, or even with our sense of commitment to the task.

It is surely a problem of semantics! For what is the essential quality of a person's participation in the life of the Episcopal Church? It is that complex of factors that are involved in what we call "churchmanship," and our problem is simply that we do not have an adequate terminology to express it. The only terms we have are the ambiguous and distasteful triad of "high," "broad," and "low"—terms so inexact and relative as to render them virtually useless. In addition, we employ a number of other terms, such as "Evangelical" and "Anglo-Catholic," and we talk about "Prayer Book Churchmen," "Virginia Churchmen," and "Nashotah Churchmen," but these are only slightly less ambiguous than the basic three, and are so emotionally colored that they are often no more than red herrings. All of which results in complete obfuscation and confusion, not only on the part of those outside of the Church—her potential members— but also within the Church itself, causing a general paralysis of effort and constructive thought. It is as if the medical profession were still trying to describe and treat a disease like tuberculosis in terms of the four humors of medieval medicine. The plain fact is that our terminology is obsolete, and completely useless for describing anything so intricate and variable as churchmanship, which is the essential character of Episcopalianism as we find it embodied in any given parish or individual.

What is remarkable is that we have not recognized and done something about this sooner. We live in a scientific age, an age which has banished inaccuracy and worships precision. We no longer recommend a person on the basis of certain intangible qualities we can indicate only vaguely by verbal terminology;—we cite a psycho-metric index. We do not prove our points by syllogisms, but by statistics. Whereas the medieval mind was tenanted by goblins, ghosts, and spirits, good and bad, the modern mind is tenanted by numbers: telephone numbers, license numbers, social security numbers—all of them objective, unequivocal, exact. Whether we like them or not, we can't get along without them. It's high time the Church woke up to this fact, and relegated the ghosts and goblins of "high" and "low church" to the medieval junk heap.

All of which adds up to the fact that we need a new terminology for expressing churchmanship —precise, non-relative, and simple enough to be mastered and remembered by everyone. And that can only mean a numerical terminology. As soon as this point became clear to me, the solution to our problems followed swiftly and logically, and I hasten to pass my conclusions on to the Church as a whole.

Churchmanship must be expressed by a numerical scale. A simple scale of one to ten should be adequate to express the various degrees of lowness and highness, but it soon becomes evident that all of the complex factors involved in churchmanship cannot be conveyed by a single scale. So, after much study and experimentation, I have come to the conclusion that three parallel scales from one to ten, representing the three categories of doctrine, discipline, and worship, are the minimum by which churchmanship can be symbolized with any degree of accuracy, and still meet the requirement of simplicity. Thus, every churchmanship rating (hereafter referred to as C. R.) will have three digits, with 1-1-1 representing the lowest possible degree of churchmanship, and 10-10-10 the highest. In brief, the meaning assigned to the digits in the three categories will be somewhat as follows:

Churchmanship Rating

UNDER doctrine, the lower end of the scale will represent a vigorous evangelical theology; the upper end rigid Anglo-Catholic orthodoxy; and the middle numbers those hazy regions of liberal theology in its tendencies toward one extreme or the other. In the discipline category, the lower numbers represent the somewhat old-fashioned brand of evangelical morality, tinged with Puritanism; the upper end of the scale represents the traditional Catholic emphasis in Church discipline, in such matters as fasting, penance, attendance at Mass, etc.; while the middle digits again represent the vaguer areas of liberalism, with 5 standing for the absolute in easy-goingness in Church discipline and at-homeness with the world. The worship scale follows the same pattern: the bottom numbers indicating an uncompromising liturgical asceticism; the upper number a use of Catholice ceremonial tapering up into frank Romanism; and the middle part of the scale standing for that kind of eclectic "Prayer Book Churchmanship" that strives for the ideal of decency and in order, with aesthetic taste and parish tradition setting the tone.

That in general, is how the C. R. scale will be set up. I shall leave it to those of broader experience than mine to fill it in in detail, giving an exact definition of what each digit under each category shall stand for. And I do not think it will be too difficult to arrive at precise definitions when the question is approached in the scientific spirit. I suggest that the Presiding Bishop immediately appoint a commission, representing all of the varying emphases and traditions in our Church, and assign them this task.

Even on the basis of this sketchy outline, the advantages of the numerical Churchmanship Rating becomes immediately apparent. Take the example we started with—the telephone conversation with the newcomer. Under the new system this conversation would run as follows:

"Good morning. I should like some information about Episcopal churches in the city."

"Certainly, Madam."

"I come from a 3-5-4 parish in California. Are there any churches like that here?"

"Just a moment; let me see . . . well, St. Timothy's is listed as 4-5-7. That's fairly close."

"4-5-7. Well, I don't know if we'd like that final 7 too much."

"Yes, that 7 is a bit of a jump from a 4 in worship . . . well, here's St. George's, with a C. R. of 4-5-2. I understand they're planning on raising that 2 to 3 or even 4 in the near future."

"Oh, that sounds just about right. St. George's, you say. Could you give me the address?"

Just as simple as that! A congenial sheep fold found for a wandering lamb! No agonizing groping with relative and misunderstood terminology; no need for the kind of exhaustive questioning that is now necessary if we are to find out what a person's churchmanship actually is. Everything simple, precise, business-like, the way the Church should operate in a scientific age!

Before I go on to enumerate some of the major benefits the C. R. will bring us, let me answer one question that has undoubtedly arisen in the minds of my readers. Who is to make the C. R. for any given parish? The rector, or the vestry, or a diocesan committee? None of these. The National Council will have to develop a corps of specially trained churchmanship raters, who will make an annual investigation of every parish and mission in the country, and also of all the clergy. The official C. R.'s for all churches and clergy will be published annually, and provisions will of course be made for protesting the ratings and making tentative changes between official visitations. This is the only way in which C. R.'s will have the objectivity and accuracy on which their usefulness depends. One incidental value of having a corps of official raters is that it will provide a whole new field of Church vocations for young men and women who would like to serve their Church in some other capacity than as clergy or as women workers in the present limited sense. I suppose some may quibble at the expense involved in such a sizeable new corps of workers, but I am sure that once the system is adopted and the Church begins to move ahead, the added expense will more than be offset by the influx of new members and revenue.

Real Advantages

LET me now conclude by suggesting what are some of the major foreseeable advantages that will follow upon the adoption of the C. R. system.

One, the true catholicity of the Church, her broadness and elasticity, can be utilized as a tremendous missionary instrument, instead of being a quality which now only hampers our effectiveness by creating confusion and bewilderment. C. R. means the application of the scientific method to the life of the Church, and gone will be our hap-hazard methods of evangelism. Not only will it prevent the tragic misfitting of rector to parish, that often occurs, but the equally tragic blunders frequently involved in transferring communicants. More than that, it will enable us to predict, with great accuracy, what type of churchmanship will best meet the needs of any potential churchman. Psychometric tests can be devised, which, on the basis of a person's previous religious training (or lack of it), his environmental and educational background, and general personality factors, will tell us exactly what type of churchmanship he will most readily respond to. Any priest will be able to administer these tests, and he will either be able to send the inquirer to the priest with the closest C. R., or, if he should be in a one-church community, he can slant his own approach and teaching to meet the needs of this particular individual. For, while it may take a generation or so, it stands to reason that churchmanship will eventually lose its emotional and "party" connotations, and be accepted as an objective reality, as a part of one's personality make-up. Just as no one now thinks of using blood types for name-calling ("Oh, he's an old RH plus!"), so will no one get emotional about C. R.'s ("Oh, they're just a bunch of triple-teners down at St. Barnabas'!"). Thus, each priest, while he will have his own personal C. R., can truly be all things to all men.

Two. With the C. R., the scientific method can be extended into the Church's policy making and administration. Every bishop will be able to tell at a glance exactly where his diocese stands. He may find, for example, that the over-all C. R. for the parishes and missions in his diocese is 7-5-8, whereas tests have shown that the people in that area need at least a 7, if not an 8, approach in the category of discipline. He can then proceed to jack up his clergy in this middle category, or, if necessary, bring in some specialists in strong Catholic discipline. Or, as a result of the investigations of 281's churchmanship raters, he can get an excellent picture of how well his clergy are doing in meeting the needs of the people. If he should find that there is a growing disparity between the C. R. of a particular priest and that of his parish, he can see the danger signal in time and make the necessary change in personnel. The possibilities along this administrative line are almost endless, and I shall simply let the reader's imagination wander.

Three. Last, but not least, the introduction of the C. R. will be a tremendous boon to publishers and church supply manufacturers. Obviously, the C. R., with the official definitions for each digit in the scales and instructions for use, will replace the Golden Numbers in all future Prayer Books. This is not only good news to book publishers, but to those countless faithful churchmen who have drained the last drop of juice out of the Golden Numbers during sermons. The C. R. tables, in addition to providing new reading matter, will bring intellectual stimulation to every sermon period. A pleasant game can be made by rating the preacher, in the several categories, as his sermon unfolds. Furthermore, I have devised a very clever little gadget which will give C. R. readings by the simple twisting of three superimposed dials. These can be manufactured in materials ranging from inexpensive plastic to sterling silver and gold, and will provide a refreshing change in confirmation gifts from the usual line of crosses and medals.*

I trust that this brief exposition will enable the reader to see the immense possibilities and advantages involved in the C. R.—indeed, that they will see it as an absolute imperative for the Church. For only by the adoption of this system can our Church hope to challenge an age of demoscopes, psychometric indices, and statistics! Churchmen, whether you be 1-1-1 or 10-10-10, let us unite under the twin banners of religion and the scientific method, and move on to achieve the glorious destiny that awaits us!

* I shall be happy to enter into correspondence with any church supply manufacturer regarding the patent and financial arrangements necessary for manufacturing these devices.

The Spirit of Lent

BY

WILLIAM PAUL BARNDS
St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

ASH WEDNESDAY falls this year on February 7 and Easter comes on March 25th. This is quite early, since the earliest date Easter can possibly come is March 22nd. The season of Lent furnishes us with a wonderful opportunity for genuine religious growth. Certainly in these days of international uncertainty, spiritual strength is needed more and more. The harder life becomes in outward ways, and the greater the demands made upon us, just so much the more do we need spiritual resources with which to meet life. Many of us are very busy these days with multitudinous activities. A common saying is "Everyone is so busy." Lent comes, offering us a chance for quieter lives and the opportunity for a more careful attention to the basic realities of our religion.

Surely we will all need to use the time-tested techniques for Lenten observances, such as giving up something of which we are especially fond; taking on some extra positive religious observance; and saving for the Easter offering. Yet it is possible to conform to these fine customs, and at the same time miss the very spirit of the Lenten season. We cannot really keep Lent well simply by adding Lenten obligations to lives that are already over-crowded. We will have to give up some of our activities and simplify our lives for the forty days if we are to get the most from the season. Such abstinence will be hard for many of us, but just such negation will open the way for a deeper spiritual development.

The spirit of Lent involves both an introspective attitude, and an outward point of view. Both are integral to the proper observance of the season. We need to look within our own lives, and take stock of ourselves. This ought not to be a morbid exercise, but a frank facing up to our sins, shortcomings, and weaknesses. It should also include a recognition of our good qualities, and our possibilities. In the light of our self-examination, we should frame our personal Lenten rules. Then it is vastly important that we look at our Lord Jesus Christ. We do this by thinking of him, by reading about him in the Bible, and by worshipping him in church, especially in the holy communion. The more we see him with religious insight, the better we will catch the spirit of Lent. We are to grow spiritually in Lent, not just for the purpose of self-improvement, but rather that we may better serve Jesus Christ, as workers for him, and as exponents of the Christian faith, we need spiritual strength in order to fulfill our Christian calling. Lent provides a fine opportunity for this strength to be increased. Welcome the opportunity!

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

ST. THOMAS CHURCH GETS MILLIONS

★ St. Thomas Church, New York, is to receive $2,816,424 from the estate of the late Mrs. Henrietta P. Lippincott who died in 1948. She also left $10,000 each to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the New York City Mission Society, and $5,000 each to St. Paul's, Eastchester and the Seaman's Church Institute. St. Paul's, Stockbridge, Mass., received $2,000 and St. Peter's, Narragansett, R. I., got $1,000.

NORMAN THOMAS SPEAKS AT ST. GEORGE'S

★ Norman Thomas, head of the Socialist Party, was the guest speaker at an open meeting of the men's club of St. George's Church, New York, on January 16. He was introduced by Charles C. Burlingham, senior warden of the parish. Thomas noted the growth of tolerance in the period since world war one and reminded the audience that the Friends Seminary, across the street from the church, was a refuge in those bitter days following 1914. In troubled times, he said, there is stability in associating oneself with institutions like St. George's.

BISHOP BENTLEY IN ALABAMA

LOS ANGELES HOLDS CONVENTION

★ The convention of the diocese of Los Angeles was held in the auditorium of the Bishop Johnson College of Nursing, January 23-26, with 175 clergy present and 350 lay delegates. The Auxiliary held its meeting at the cathedral on January 23rd, when Miss Edna Beardsley of the national office was a speaker.

One of the highlights of the convention was an address by the Rev. Forrest C. Weir, recently installed as head of the Church Federation of Los Angeles, who spoke on the work that Protestant Churches could carry on together.

YOUTH CONVENTION IN ALABAMA

★ The Rev. Frank Dearring, rector of St. Mary's, Jacksonville, Florida, was the headliner at the convention of the young people of Alabama, held at All Saints', Mobile, January 19-21.

FRANCIS SAYRE NAMED WASHINGTON DEAN

★ The Rev. France B. Sayre Jr., rector of St. Paul's, East Cleveland, Ohio, has been elected dean of Washington Cathedral, succeeding the Rev. John W. Suter who recently resigned. Mr. Sayre is the son of the former assistant secretary of state who is now a representative of the U. S. at the UN, and is the grandson of the late Woodrow Wilson.

YOUNG PEOPLE VISIT MEXICO

★ A delegation of young people from the seventh province made a study of youth work in the missionary district of Mexico, January 2-8, headed by the chairman of the youth department, the Rev. G. C. Stutzer of Okmulgee, Oklahoma. The team worked and studied with native groups, exchanged ideas and thoughts, and developed fellowship through a number of parties. The group was the first from the States to make an official call upon their southern neighbors. It is expected that another group will visit Mexico, under Strutzer's direction, this August. Several young Mexicans are also expected to attend the training conference to be held at Chickasha, Oklahoma, in June.

Those who recently visited Mexico were Harriett Anderson, Claremore, Okla.; Terry Moore, Kansas City, Mo.; Jim Paget, El Paso, Texas, all national youth commissioners; Joyce Anderson, Tulsa, chairman of the provincial youth commission, and two members of that commission, Vincent Reese of Okmulgee and John Cassady of Oklahoma City.

MICHIGAN HOLDS CONVENTION

★ The convention of the diocese of Michigan opened yesterday, January 31, at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, with the convention of women meeting at the same time at St. Joseph's church. The speaker at the dinner was Presiding Bishop Sherrill who described some of the progress made towards Protestant unity. He also commented on the achievements of the diocese of Michigan during the past year; new churches built, expanding congregations, renewed spirit of faith.

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL ELECTS WOMEN

★ The board of managers of St. Luke's Hospital, New York, has broken a tradition of a hundred years by electing women members. They are Mrs. F. Huntington Babcock and Mrs. William G. Brady Jr. Also elected was Mr. Eben W. Pyne whose great grandfather, the late Percy R. Pyne, was a member of the board from 1860 to 1895.

NEBRASKA HAS QUIET DAY

★ A quiet day for the clergy of Nebraska was held at Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, January 17, led by Bishop Charles A. Clough of Springfield. He also spoke on evangelism in the evening, sharing the program with Layman Hal Perrin, chairman of laymen's work in the diocese.

CHURCH COUNCIL SET FOR RHODE ISLAND

★ The Rhode Island Council of Churches will formally come into being in April, organized on a denominational basis. The present council is organized on the basis of individual churches. The Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, and Universalist Churches will be full members. The Episcopal Church, a spokesman reports, has asked "to become affiliated" with the new body. Objections raised by some Episcopalians opposed to membership are that the constitution is not Trinitarian in doctrine, and that the diocese will not have a voice in the assembly commensurate with its strength and the financial commitment involved.

concerning our participation in the whole field of cooperative Christianity and the purpose for which we are working. The substance of this will be published as an article in the near future.

The valuable right arm of the joint commission, the Committee on Ecumenical Relations of the National Council, was commended and will continue to be used as the liasion between the commission and the council.

Eleven members out of twenty-one attended, and the next meeting was scheduled for January 15-17, 1952, for the chief purpose of formulating a report to General Convention and to make certain recommendations for our appropriate action on matters referred from the bodies of which we are members.

"BARABBAS THE ROBBER"
16mm sound film

This magnificent and moving J. Arthur Rank religious film opens with scenes of Barabbas and his followers hiding in a cave outside Jerusalem. It shows the enthusiastic reception of Jesus in the city, and the capture of Barabbas. We see the Chief Priests and Elders take council to seize Jesus, Pilate questioning Jesus, and the crowd calling for Christ to be crucified and Barabbas released. Pilate, in his weakness, grants their request, and Barabbas, the man of action, realizes that his life has been saved by Jesus, the man of peace. (Running time 38 min. Rental $12. During Lent $17.50. Sale $200.)

"THE RESURRECTION— FIRST EASTER"
(16mm sound)

Widely acclaimed for its vivid message of Life everlasting, and its inspiring study of the Resurrection. Jesus' face does not appear, but His voice is heard. (30 min. Rental $9. During Lent $15. Sale $150.)

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Best of Dick Sheppard. Edited by Halford E. Luccock. Harper. $2.50.

This book proves that Dick Sheppard's best is still very good indeed. He dealt with timeless issues in his writing and preaching. The common people heard him gladly, recognizing that here was a man who could speak to them and for them. He came from God and he went to God, carrying with him "the burden of the world's divine regret," and leaving the world a warmer place because he had lived and laboured there. Those who will read these messages of his today will be the better able to come to grips with things as they are to make them with God's help what they ought to be.—R. T. F.

The Yoga of the Bhagavat Gita. By Sri Krishna Prem. Harper. 1949. $3.00.

"Christians who are not too fettered by superstition" are invited to see that, "the blood of Christ is the Wisdom Light which is shed through the sacrifices of self for the sake of all." With the aid of Plotinus and Hermes Trismegistus, Bertrand Russell and Madame Blavatsky, this half-westernized commentary on the Gita states some good teaching in laborious abstractions and puzzling symbols. Krishna's call to the believer approaches Christian language (p. 186): "Fix thy mind on Me, give thy heart's love to Me, consecrate all thy actions to My service, hold thine own self as nothing before Me . . . Fear not, I will liberate thee from all sins."—M. Searle Bates

A Primer of Christianity.

I. The Beginning of the Gospel. By T. W. Manson.
II. The Furtherance of the Gospel. By R. W. Moore.
III. The Truth of the Gospel. By G. B. Caird.

Oxford University Press. $3.75.

An attempt has been made here to beat the high cost of books. By binding together three separate volumes, each distinct in pagination, index, etc., the price of each has been brought down to a little over a dollar. The resultant volume is one that should be very useful as a textbook in religion at the secondary school level.

The dust cover, which was added in America, presents the book as one for all "casual Christians"; as a matter of fact these three volumes, written by the Professor of Biblical Criticism at the Univ. of Manchester, the Headmaster of Harrow School, and the Professor of New Testament at McGill University, Montreal, were evidently produced in England for use in Religious Instruction in the secondary schools. Since the passage of the Education Acts in 1944 and 1946, requiring religious instruction in all English schools, the English publishers have been working on the problem of producing volumes to cover the need for textbooks in the Bible and Christian doctrine. This trilogy is perhaps the best that has been produced in this field and as such should find a wide use in Independent Schools in America where courses in Religion are taught.—Sydney Temple Stories from Holy Writ. By Helen Waddell. Macmillan. $2.75.

An edition of Bible stories that the originals merit. It picks up the imagination of all ages and actively incorporates the reader in the background and experience of the old familiar narratives. As in her other writing, the author here, too, handles her sources with the sureness, the deftness, and the intimate perceptiveness of an artist. The result—not only delight, but spiritual conviction.—Jean H. Johnson

Karl Marx and His Doctrines. By A. C. Bouquet. Macmillan. 35 cents.

A sympathetic account of Marx and Marxism by an author who sees clearly the defects and limitations of the creed. A useful pamphlet on a subject which usually generates far more heat than light.

EXTENDED COVERAGE

What does it cover?

The Extended Coverage endorsement to a fire insurance policy includes protection against damage by windstorm, cyclone, tornado, hail, explosion, riot, riot attending a strike, civil commotion, aircraft, smoke, and motor vehicles; and insurance must be for the same amount as the fire insurance, as the term "Extended Coverage" implies.

Over a three-week period THE CHURCH FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION received from policyholders over 200 reports of damage to Church property resulting from the great Northeast Storm of November 25th and 26th. Immediate steps were taken to speed adjustments of claims and make possible early restoration of damaged properties.

Often Extended Coverage is requested by property owners who think only of windstorm insurance, and the other hazards this insurance covers are overlooked. Smudge by faulty oil burning heating equipment, heavy damage by explosion of accumulated gas—these are examples of losses not covered by a fire insurance policy. They are covered, however, by Extended Coverage. The rate for this added protection is very low in most localities.

If you wish a quotation on the cost of Extended Coverage — or windstorm or fire — insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with your Church, just clip this advertisement, fill in the information listed below, and mail to us, so that we can send to you an application form:

STORY OF THE WEEK

Plans For a United Church Discussed By Leaders

Bishop Keeler As Observer Tells Delegates Views of Episcopal Church

★ A plan to unite several Protestant Churches into a "United Church of Christ" was presented at a convocation held in Cincinnati, January 24-25, with sixty representatives present from ten denominations. The plan grew out of a conference on union held at Seabury House in December, 1949, at which the Episcopal Church was represented by observers. Bishop Keeler of Minnesota, chairman of the commission on approaches to unity, was present as an observer at this second meeting.

The plan, as now presented, was divided into three parts. The first stresses the "divine imperative" of organic union. The second contains a statement of "the ecumenical evangelical faith" to which such a united Church should bear witness. The third outlines the organization: the local church, the ministry, the presbytery, the conference and general council. Represented by official delegates were the following Churches: Congregational-Christian; Disciples; Evangelical and Reformed; Methodist; African Methodist; Colored Methodist; Presbyterian, North; Presbyterian South; Community; Association for a United Church, founded recently by E. Stanley Jones.

ORGANIZATION

The type of organization proposed is summarized briefly. Each local church would retain its freedom and determine its mode of worship and of administering baptism and communion. They would retain title to property they now own. Ministers would be ordained "to the ministry of the Church of Jesus Christ" and not to a single denomination. Ordinations would be performed by the presbytery on recommendation of the local church and a presbytery examining committee. The bishop would preside at the ordination, "thus signifying that the one ordained is a minister of the whole Church."

Presbyteries, constituted by ten or more "contiguously located churches," each represented by a minister and a lay person, would meet annually. They would recruit, prepare and ordain ministers, have oversight of ministers and churches, elect delegates to the conference and general council.

The conference would embrace at least three presbyteries and would be comparable to a diocese with an annual convention. It would elect a moderator and a bishop, the latter "a spiritual counselor and guide of its churches and ministers and its administrative superintendent." The function of the conference, as outlined, would be very similar to that of a convention of a diocese of the Episcopal Church.

The general council would correspond generally with the General Convention: "To do and promote the work of the whole Church in its national, international and ecumenical relations." It would be composed of about 1,200 delegates, with ministers and laymen in equal numbers. Newly elected bishops would be consecrated by the general council. Bishops would be ex officio members with the right to speak but not to vote. Meeting would be every other year, with an elected moderator presiding. Among work which the council would coordinate and administer would be evangelism, mission, ecumenical activity, education, stewardship, publishing, pensions, social action, with power to appoint boards and commissions for the purpose.

EVANGELICAL FAITH

The section of the report on "the ecumenical evangelical faith" to which the united Church should bear witness, cites a common belief by the participating Churches in God, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Holy Catholic Church, the Scriptures and life everlasting. It also recognizes "diversity of gifts, concerns and administrations, for whose exercise the freedom of the Christian man must always be assured in forms of worship, modes of operation and ways of life."

OBSTACLES CITED

The discussion which followed the presentation revealed at least three difficult hurdles that will have to be overcome if Protestant Churches are ever to merge. One, on the organization level, the difficulty of satisfying the loosely organized Churches, like the Congregationalists and Disciples, with the more highly organized like the Methodists and Presbyterians.

Two, the question as to whether the proposed United Church could accomplish more than the new National Council of Churches can do through cooperation. Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam bore down particularly hard on this point.

Three, the possible legal barriers, particularly in view of court action that has, temporarily at least, prevented the merger of a number of denominations.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Bishop Keeler, asked to state his views, deplored the fact that the merger plan "dismissed the whole matter of sacraments in a line and a half. I think that's dismissing a great deal" and went on to say that it was "not a plan in which the Episcopal Church could have a great share." He declared that Episcopalians "have much to learn, too," and that "probably no body would have to give up as much in any ultimate scheme of union as the Episcopal Church."

At the final session of the conference the plan went back to a drafting committee for further revisions before the participating Churches receive it for study, comment and suggestions. The official representatives expressed the hope that the revised plan will be transmitted to the Churches "by a reasonable time next fall." However it was emphasized that Churches as such will not be asked to express their approval or disapproval of the plan at that time, but that commissions of the denominations will study the document before submitting it to their denominations as a whole. It was clear, following this two days of discussion, that it will be a considerable time before rank and file Church members are asked to express their opinions of the plan.

Both the urgency and the difficulty was well expressed by Bishop Keeler when he told the representatives: "We must move fast, but we must also take into consideration the great historic traditions."

ELSA ANNOUNCES PROGRAM

★ The annual meeting of the Episcopal League for Social Action will be held at St. John's Cathedral, Wilmington, Delaware, on Washington's Birthday. Following a meeting of the executive committee at eleven, there will be a plenary session at one to discuss the present situation in China. The address will be by Prof. Dirk Bodde of the University of Pennsylvania, author of "Peking Diary" who was last in China in 1948-49. During world war two he was a specialist on China with the office of strategic information and the office of war information. Chairman of the meeting will be Mary van Kleeck, vice president of the League.

ROSCOE T. FOUST, rector of the Ascension, New York, and Witness Editor will chair the meeting on the Civil Liberties situation at the annual meeting of the Episcopal League for Social Action

A paper on the Church's function in civil liberties by Bishop Parsons will be read at 2:45 at which the Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector of the Ascension, New York, and Witness editor will preside. At the same time another group will discuss migratory labor with Philip Robb, student at Princeton, as leader and with the Rev. Dillard H. Brown of Washington presiding. Still another group will discuss personal practices of the Church, with a paper by Mrs. Benson Harvey, social relations secretary of Western Massachusetts, and with the Rev. William M. Weber of Littleton, N. H. the chairman. Following these meetings the three groups will meet in joint session for study and adoption of reports. The annual business meeting will then meet, with the Rev. W. Russell Bowie of the Virginia Seminary, a vice president of the League, presiding. The conference will close with a meeting in the evening when the Rev. A. T. Mollegen of the Virginia Seminary faculty will speak on the faith for a world in social change.

The Rev. Andrew M. Van Dyke, executive secretary, announces that anyone interested, whether a member of the League or not, will be welcomed.

★ Harvey S. Firestone Jr., Episcopalian of Akron, Ohio, and Maj. Gen. William J. Donovan, who headed the office of strategic services during world war two, are co-chairmen, along with Rear Admiral Lewis L. Strauss, formerly of the atomic energy commission, of the religious organizations committee for Brotherhood Week. They are busy enlisting the cooperation of church leaders in the observance, February 18-25, when there will be sermons, radio addresses, articles in the religious press, panel discussions, joint meetings on intergroup problems. The sponsoring organization is the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

CONFERENCE ON URBAN WORK

★ Problems of the urban church were discussed at a conference at Seabury-Western Seminary on January 23rd, with the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell the chairman, and with Bishop Street of Chicago and the Rev. William B. Sperry of Detroit the speakers. A feature was a panel discussion with the Rev. Almon Pepper of the national social service department, the Rev. T. Malcolm Jones of Grand Rapids, the Rev. Francis B. Sayre, newly elected dean of Washington Cathedral, and the Rev. G. E. Brant of Eau Claire, Wisconsin taking part. A summary was given by the Rev. Joseph G. Moore of the seminary faculty who specializes in urban church work.

GOVERNOR BYRNES HITS THE KLAN

★ Governor James F. Byrnes spoke out vigorously against the Ku Klux Klan and for equal educational advantages for all when he was inaugurated as governor of South Carolina. He stated to reporters later however that he stood for segregation in the schools. There were over 100,000 persons in the capitol grounds and lining the streets for the occasion, the largest crowd ever assembled in the state. Bishop Gravatt of Upper South Carolina opened the ceremonies, and accompanying the new governor from his home in Spartansburg was his rector, the Rev. Capers Satterlee of the Church of the Advent.

BI-RACIAL COMMITTEE HAS MEETING

★ The bi-racial committee of the home department of the National Council held a two-day meeting last month at Seabury House, with a number of reports presented. The Rev. Tollie L. Caution said that $43,000 in property for work among Negroes had been recently erected, with grants from the Council of but $6,400. He also stated that twenty-two Negro theological students were now enrolled in seminaries. Plans were also developed for conferences for Negro workers to be held this summer at St. Augustine's College, Okolona College and Voorhees College.

Ellen Gammack, personnel secretary of the Auxiliary, told of the work of Negro women religious workers and urged greater emphasis upon recruiting to fill growing needs.

Miss Ursula Osterman of Berlin, Germany, who is in the U.S. in the interest of civil liberties, told the delegates of the tense situation existing in her country.

BISHOP ATWILL HONORED

★ Bishop and Mrs. Atwill were honored at a dinner held at Fargo, N. D. on January 18, when a sizable purse was presented to help toward buying a home upon their complete retirement. The bishop, who retired January 1, is to remain in charge of the district until his successor is consecrated.

Previously the clergy of the district and their wives gave Bishop and Mrs. Atwill a dinner, held at the cathedral in Fargo.

LAYMEN'S WORK COMMITTEE

★ The part laymen can have in ministering to men and women of the armed forces was one of chief matters considered at the meeting of the Presiding Bishop's committee on laymen's work, held January 19-21 at Seabury House. Dean Rose of General Seminary spoke on theological education, stressed the necessity for increasing the income of the seminaries, and approved the plan for a tie-in of theological education with the laymen's training program for the fall of 1952.

SCHOLARSHIP OFFERED BY SEWANEE

★ A $4,000 scholarship to cover a full college education at the University of the South is available for each of four high school seniors. The offers are made from a $50,000 gift from the George F. Baker fund of New York. Selection will be made on a basis of intellectual capacity, maturity and leadership potential. The offer is not limited to Episcopalians says Bishop Mitchell of Arkansas who is chancellor of the university.

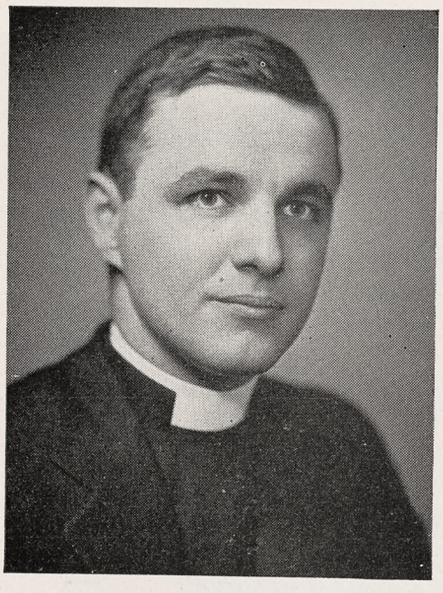
NEWARK Y. C. S. HAS ANNUAL MEETING



★ The annual meeting of the Newark Youth Consultation Service was held at Trinity Cathedral with about 300 present. Miss Daphne Hughes, executive secretary, presented a report on the local work; Miss Edith Balmford, national secretary, told of the work elsewhere; Mrs. Marion Steel, consulting psychologist of the agency, spoke on the general theme: "It is a big job today to help young people deal with their increasing anxieties, for our present situation presents many problems."

Col. Charles Kappes of Montclair was elected president, succeeding the Rev. C. P. Trowbridge of Morristown.

FREDERICK C. GRANT IN LEXINGTON

★ The Rev. Frederick C. Grant, professor at Union and Witness book editor, was the speaker at the institute on Anglicanism recently held at Christ Church, Lexington, Ky. It was sponsored by the Auxiliary of the parish as a follow-up of an institute on Judaism held last year at Adath Israel Temple. One on Presbyterianism will be held at their local church next year.

All churches of the city were invited to send representatives, with most denominations, including the Roman Catholic, being represented among the more than 200 present. Dr. Grant gave two addresses, each followed by questions; one on the Protestant nature of the Episcopal Church and the other on the fact that it is also Catholic.

ROBERT M. HATCH, rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn., was elected Suffragan Bishop of Connecticut, January 30th, at the diocesan convention meeting in Hartford

INTERRACIAL PARISHES FOR LOS ANGELES

★ Clergy and laity of Los Angeles were urged not to favor any one racial or cultural group in their parishes. The action was taken by a resolution which was overwhelmingly approved at the convention of the diocese, meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral on January 29-30. It was an answer to a growing realization on the part of the 650 delegates present that pressure is being exerted, in some parishes, to exclude certain groups from congregations.

BISHOP DONEGAN IS HONORED

★ The annual dinner of the Church Club of New York was held February 5, with Bishop Donegan the guest of honor. In addition to the address by the bishop, one was given by Judge Harold R. Medina.

OKLAHOMA SEEKS COADJUTOR

★ The processes for electing a coadjutor was initiated at the convention of Oklahoma, held January 22-23 at St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City. A committee headed by the Hon. A. D. Cochran of Okmulgee was elected to assemble information about persons suggested for the office. It was directed not to include the names of any clergymen canonically resident in the diocese. As soon as the necessary steps are taken a special convention will be held for election.

NEW CENTER AT UPI

★ Bishop Norman S. Binsted of the Philippine Islands has announced that the Sisters of St. Anne of Wuchang, China, will establish a house of the order at the Mission of St. Francis, Upi. "We regret," Bishop Binsted said, "that the sisters were forced to close their house in China due to the political situation but rejoice that we are to again have their assistance in this field. Many remember with gratitude the splendid service they rendered at Easter School until it was forced to close because of the war."

MORE CHAPLAINS ARE NEEDED

★ The armed forces division of the National Council has received an appeal for 35 additional Episcopal chaplains. Information about requirements may be had from Church headquarters in New York.

ALABAMA CHURCH BUYS SITE

★ St. Luke's, Mountain Brook, Alabama, has bought five acres adjoining the country club, and a campaign is soon to be launched for church buildings. The parish has been in existence but two years, with the first service held in an old house on Easter Sunday in 1949. The Rev. George C. Anderson became rector in March, 1950. Communicant membership is now 240, with over 200 in the Sunday school. The new tract is on a hill towering above the golf course.

UNIQUE CONFIRMATION IN MONTANA

★ Bishop Daniels of Montana recently confirmed a class of six young adults who had travelled a combined total of 600 miles to get to St. James, Dillon, and return home again. All of them are engaged in cattle ranching in the Big Hole section of Beaverhill County. They were presented by the Rev. Arthur B. Ward, rector at Dillon.

HARRISON WALKER, choirmaster and organist at St. Andrew's, Wilmington, Delaware, is one of the leading musicians of the Church

CLINICAL TRAINING FOR CLERGY

★The diocese of Los Angeles is to have a clinical training program for clergymen interested in serving institutions as chaplains. The program, designed to provide hospital training, was announced by Canon Richard Lief, director of the city mission society, following his trip to the east where he made a survey of similar programs. The training will be provided in general hospitals, mental hospitals and penal institutions.

NEW PARISH HOUSE DEDICATED

★ Several years ago Bishop Phillips of Southwestern Virginia had a happy thought—that it would be an excellent scheme for the diocese to select each year one special advance work objective, to be financed chiefly by the Woman's Auxiliary, the Laymen's League, the youth commission and, corporately, by the men in such churches as do not have chapters of the Laymen's League; though the congregation could chip in too. Everybody liked the idea and the bishop's plan was organized in 1945 with a parish house for St. Mark's Church at Clifford as the first objective. The product of the plan that first year was about $3,500.00.

For various reasons actual construction had to be postponed until 1950. Now the building has been completed. Interest had brought the amount to $3,939.02 and the remainder of the cost was borne by the congregation.

On a recent Sunday the parish house was dedicated in an impressive service conducted by the Rev. Richard Henry Lee, rector. There has been great need for this parish house for community as well as church activities and Sunday School and the new building will prove most helpful in very many ways.

St. Mark's is an interesting and historic old church in Amherst County, about four miles from the town of Amherst and some twenty miles north of Lynchburg.

SEWANEE FACES A PROBLEM

★ A reduced enrollment may become necessary next year at the School of Theology of the University of the South, Dean F. Craighill Brown has reported. Because the proportion of single to married applicants is rising rapidly and dormitory space for single students is insufficient, it appears now that the school may have to cut down the number of men to be admitted for the 1951-52 session.

"Such a prospect," commented Dean Brown, "is most distressing, especially now when the school has reached a new peak of usefulness to the Church and when so many men are eager to study for the ministry here."

This possible reduction in the number of men who can be admitted is a matter of grave concern to the Church people of the Episcopal dioceses in the South, he added. "It points up sharply the need for an additional building for their seminary."

The fund for the erection of a building to contain dormitories, an assembly hall and classrooms now amounts to a little under $11,000. Cost of the required building is estimated at around $300,000.

A CALF CLUB AT GREELEY

★ Trinity Church, Greeley, Colorado, has a Calf Club. It all started when Layman John Lett set aside one of his herd for the church. He also announced that he would pasture four more if any others would buy them and put them in his care. Calves set aside for the parish are branded with the Trinity brand, and when marketed the money goes into the building fund of the church.

WELLESLEY CONFERENCE ANNOUNCES PLANS

★ The keynote speaker at the Wellesley Conference, June 24-30, will be the Rev. John Oliver Nelson of Yale Divinity School. The director is the Rev. Vincent Bennett of Fitchburg, Mass., and the chaplain is the Rev. Benjamin Minifie, rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J., and a Witness editor. Courses are to be given by the Rev. T. P. Ferris of Trinity, Boston; Prof. Massey H. Shepherd Jr. of Episcopal Theological School and Witness columnist; the Rev. Robert M. Hatch, rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.; the Rev. Robert L. Curry, rector of Lenox School; the Rev. Shelton H. Bishop, rector of St. Philip's, New York; the Rev. Charles W. F. Smith, rector of St. Andrew's, Wellesley, Mass.; the Rev. Alfred B. Starrett, former missionary in China, now rector of St. Paul's, Stockbridge, Mass.; the Rev. Richard Williams, chairman of social service in Washington; Marion Kelleran, head of religious education in Washington; the Rev. Victor Hoag, head of education in the diocese of New Jersey. The music school will be directed by Lowell Beveridge of the music school of Columbia University.

PARISH PRE-PAYS ON MISSIONS

★ "Pre-paying Missions" is a term coined by the Rev. Andrew E. F. Anderson, rector of St. Andrew's, Louisville, Ky. He explains the plan, with the idea that is might spring other parishes into similar action:

"I proposed and purposed to raise sufficient funds within the parish to pay the 1951 missionary pledge on or about the first of January, 1951, in cash. Thus St. Andrew's would make immediately available its 1951 pledge and it would begin working to collect the funds for its 1952 pledge."

Mr. Anderson's letter to the National Council continues: "I am delighted to tell you that the parish, through its vestry, is paying at this very moment, its missionary pledge for 1951 in full. Actually it is overpaying its missionary pledge by approximately 12%. The movement that has begun in St. Andrew's, with this forward-looking step, has caught fire in the diocese. As you know, the diocese of Kentucky is enthusiastic to implement its 1951 pledge almost immediately. I can visualize the time when the diocese will pay its missionary pledge in full on or about the first day of January, in the year in which the pledge is made."

ARKANSAS LAYMEN HEAR KUEBLER

★ President Clark G. Kuebler of Ripon College was the speaker at the annual meeting of the churchman's association of the diocese of Arkansas, held January 23rd at Christ Church, Little Rock.

COLLEGE WORKERS HAVE MEETING

★ A conference for women college workers was held at Parishfield, Brighton, Michigan, January 15-19, with the Rev. Roger W. Blanchard, head of college work of the National Council, and the two directors of Parishfield, the Rev. Francis O. Ayres and the Rev. Gibson Winter, serving as chaplain and Bible study leader respectively. Sixteen out of a possible twenty-one workers were present to discuss the job of a woman college worker; how to balance devotional life, study, work and recreation; training schools and a prospective plan for apprenticeship training; the newly formed national Canterbury Association; the national association of faculty Episcopalians.

BISHOP HUSTON AT ST. MARK'S

★ Bishop Huston, the retired bishop of Olympia, was the preacher at St. Mark's Cathedral, Seattle, on January 28th. Dean Watson was at Oxford, Ohio, attending a meeting of the national youth commission.

PRAY FOR UNITY IN PARIS

★ The American Pro-Cathedral Church of Holy Trinity, Paris, France, was filled to capacity the afternoon of January 21 for an ecumenical observance of the day of prayer for the unity of the Churches. The principal address was given by Pastor Marc Boegner, president of the Reformed Church of France and one of the presidents of the World Council of Churches. Bishop Chambers of the British Embassy Church and Bishop Cassian of the Orthodox Institute took part in the service and Dean Sturgis Lee Riddle welcomed the many Protestant and Orthodox clergy who were a part of the large congregation.

BISHOP SHERRILL HONORED

★ Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill is to receive the "bowl award" offered annually by the Yale club at Montclair, N. J. to an outstanding alumnus who has become a leader in his particular business or profession. It is the first time in the eighteen years of the award that the honor has gone to a clergyman.

PRAYERS FOR PEACE IN COLUMBIA

★ Prayers for peace are said in brief services each Wednesday at Trinity, Columbia, S. C. at noon and five, with ministers of various churches sharing in them.

CONVENTION IN ARKANSAS

★ Bishop John B. Bentley, head of overseas work of the National Council, was the headliner at the convention of Arkansas, held at Christ Church, Little Rock, January 24-25. Others to speak were Catharine C. Barnaby, former missionary in China and the Philippines, and the Rev. Sheldon Davis who reported on the conference on children and youth which was held recently in Washington at the invitation of President Truman.

The Central Reality

"REMEMBER, O MAN, that dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." This ancient refrain in the Church's observance of Ash Wednesday is like an Introit for the whole Lenten season. Its meaning is plain and Christians today are in grievous need of pondering it. Our physical bodies, like the animals, will shortly return to dust, along with the physical world which is our common environment. (And if the pompous, futile policies of our militarist world leaders persist, it may be a very sudden return indeed, thanks to our deadly toy, the atom bomb). The Ash Wednesday refrain summons us to face these facts and order our lives accordingly. Things that are of so great concern to the world at large — heaping up little or great riches, struggling over trade and industrial dominance, agonizing over rival economic and social systems— are of minor consequence to the spiritually-minded man, Christian or other who regards this world in the perspective of eternity. The fact of overwhelming importance to him is that he is a spiritual being, made in the image and likeness of God (a microscopic and distorted image, to be sure), but, nevertheless, a possible heir of eternal life. That is the great central reality in all Christian thinking and living. If we forget it, we forget our birthright, just as tragically as Esau forgot his, long, long ago.

All this is not, of course, to say that the duty of Christians is to get themselves to their prayers and let the world go hang. That would be the very reverse of what our Lord taught and a denial of the beauty and significance of his earthly life. "God so loved the world" that he came to live in it, dust though it is. No, this Ash Wednesday emphasis on the transitory nature of physical human life is the startling reminder that we are in this world to grow souls, slowly and painfully, souls that can, by God's grace, develop into "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." And because we are souls enshrined in physical bodies, everything in our worldly environment either helps or hinders such spiritual growth.

So we shall not, if we are intelligent Christians, be content to let the world alone. Every physical or social condition that threatens the growth of any human soul into the likeness of Christ is something to be fought relentlessly. It's the Church Militant we are living in, not the Church Complacent. So, where cruelty lifts its head, we shall crack lustily at that head. Where greed or blindness or fear deprive God's children anywhere of the means to live a more abundant life, we shall combine our energies to defend the oppressed. Where worship of military force threatens to wipe out countless physical lives before they have a chance to grow themselves souls, we shall set our faces like a flint against such blasphemous policies, in the name of the Prince of Peace.

Persecutions we will get, of course, as our Master did. But our own souls will inevitably grow on just such strong meat. And in it all we shall "remember, O man, that dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," but our dust, we're also confident, shall have enshrined a growing, immortal soul getting fitted, little by little, for life in that place that God has prepared for them that love him.

"QUOTES"

WHEN we set up to judge our allies and friends in the UN, we must remember that they have never agreed with us on the crucial question of Chiang, that our actions and attitudes about Formosa have never been submitted to, much less approved by, the United Nations. In relation to China we have played a lone hand, and, as things are going now, we appear bent on playing a still lonelier one. If that is what we must do, let us at least do it with dignity. Let us not go shouting around that everybody is out of step but father.

Totalitarian Church

THE papal blast against Rotary International temporarily stole the headlines from the war news. Americans, in general, were shocked to read that Roman clergy must give up membership in the organization. Even a few bishops and priests of that Church were taken back by the announcement and were quoted in defense of service clubs. The only explanation given for this unfortunate ban was the charge that Masons had taken over some Latin-American clubs.

Rotary is a typically American institution, reflecting the conservative slant of successful business and professional men, but actually quite innocuous on matters political and religious. Controversial subjects are generally taboo, and the weekly luncheon is a light occasion of genial discourse. It brings together Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, in a bond of community fellowship. It lays stress on individual and public service among its members. One can not help but ask if Rome really knew what it was doing in condemning Rotary, and if it has not made a strategic mistake.

This latest action only goes to point up the dictatorial character of an institution which can never be at home in a democratic climate. The top level hierarchy speak, and there is no possible redress from their pronouncements. We regret such a divisive step at this time, but perhaps it does some good in throwing further light, if any is necessary, on the true nature of the Roman Church. It also suggests that while American Catholics pay the bill, they have less to say at court than Cardinal Spellman might like. There may be some restive stirring eventually on this score within the Church here at home. At least the reaction of certain Roman Catholic clergy and laity to the Rotary interdict points to such a possibility, but we shall not expect too much.

The Beatitudes—

Blessed Are The Poor In Spirit

BY
W. ROBERT HAMPSHIRE
Rector of St. Thomas', Farmingdale, N. Y.
and a Witness editor

THE amount of glib lip-service paid to the Sermon on the Mount, and particularly to the Beatitudes, has served to camouflage the essentially radical nature of these words of Jesus. To let sufficient fresh air in to remove the smoke-screen of poetic appreciation but practical neglect of the character study known as "The Beatitudes" is the intention of The Witness staff in publishing this Lenten series. It is our hope that these eight readings will do something to reveal the figure who became the outlaw of Galilee, and to demonstrate what he looks for in us, called to be sons of the Kingdom.

The Sermon on the Mount

THE Sermon on the Mount is without doubt a good sample of the Messianic preaching of Jesus. Doubtless much of what he said in this masterpiece, this Everest of preaching, was repeated as he traveled as an itinerant preacher. Apparently this particular sermon, masterfully given, well received, stood out in memory and, to the core of what was said, Matthew took the liberty of adding other authentic sayings which seemed to him to fit in. We find it recorded in his Gospel in chapters 5, 6, and 7.

Jesus began his preaching where the forerunner, St. John Baptist, left off. He began with the herald's themes—repentance; and the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Beginning at the growing-edge of the preparation of his hearers, our Lord expanded and developed these themes in countless directions. He drew on all that was pertinent in the history, law, prophets, and wisdom of Israel. True, he frequently pointed out to the legalistic that they had managed to obscure the real intent of the ancient and eternal words. But he did not chuck out laws and ceremonies, as many have wrongly been led to suppose. He breathed new life into the heart of the disregarded code. He turned their water into wine. He placed a cap-stone upon the incomplete arch of that which was prior.

His development of "eye for an eye" ethics into the pure and high law of love is a case in point. The earlier law, all too often broken today, was not an invitation to vengeance, but a remedy for vindictiveness. It sought to prevent the wronged person from launching upon a campaign of the total destruction of the wealth and the very being of his adversary. It sought to put a limit to his righteous wrath. It was intended to see that the punishment was in scale with the crime. Our Lord's injunction to love this person instead of seeking the legal revenge was a radical change, so it seemed, in the very character of God. Justice was being not tempered but transformed into mercy. Jesus was seeking to lead the righteous remnant to the higher step of total forgiveness based upon total love. It was not the destruction of the older law which made for equal justice. It was the fulfillment of the law in bringing it into full agreement with the will of God.

The desire to "get even" must be replaced with the desire to redeem.

This teaching would have been meaningless without the self-oblation of Christ on the cross. His pure and complete offering of himself to take away the sin of the world was the complete demonstration that he believed and practiced what he taught. His prayer of forgiveness for all, whose sin was made vivid in the cruelty of nails through his hands and his feet, this above all made clear his total forgiveness and total love. Had these things not happened, probably his teaching, if ever written down, would have become a worthless fragment in a Near East ash heap. Had God not raised him up on the third day he would have been thought a visionary and courageous teacher, but very, very wrong. The Christian Church is the testimony that these things are true. But is the Christian Church true to the testimony?

God in the Flesh

WE are led to wonder and praise for the great Sermon because it came from a life consonant with the words. Moses had sinned and, though he was permitted to view the promised land of plenty from Mount Pisgah—he could not enter in. Instead, he besought his followers, notably Joshua, to go in and possess the land. It was as far as Moses could go. But now Jesus, the second Moses, the true Joshua, draws about him multitudes of the oppressed and fearful peoples of the promised land and leads them up into a mountain. Whether consciously or not, Jesus found a scene capable of reinforcing the spiritual heights of his teaching. There in the mountain he preached the law and the prophets with the blessings and the curses as the prologue and epilogue. As he talked of a different promised land, a kingdom, it was very plain that he was no Moses pointing to something and somewhere he had never been. It was clear that he talked not as the Scribes and Pharisees, he talked not as Greek philosophers dreaming of a utopia, but he talked as the king of the kingdom he described.

The people believed him; believed in him; heard him gladly; and followed him. Why? Because he backed up his teaching with healing miracles and exorcisms? Partly. But taking all things together; what he did and how he did it; what he said and how he said it; what he seemed to be even when silent—all contributed to make a believable picture to the people. Surely if ever and if in anyone God was going to send his ambassador into the world, this must be the time, and this must be the man. He threw in his lot with the common people. He understood and loved and forgave. He was one of them. He was one of them; and one for them; and yet, clearly, he was also one far above them. He was tapping resources they knew not of. Here was the wisdom and power of God in the flesh. When Jesus of Nazareth talked about the Kingdom of Heaven it was evident to those who had eyes to see and ears to hear that he knew whereof he spoke. And his invitation was gracious and winning—associate yourself with him, and you were in the kingdom.

In St. Matthew's Gospel the Sermon on the Mount comprising chapters 5, 6, and 7 has 111 verses in all. St. Luke's Gospel has a much briefer version in chapter 6, verses 17 through 49. It is possible that this Sermon on the Plain, as it is called, may have been a different occasion altogether, with Jesus repeating some of the same things as we find recorded in Matthew. However, it is tempting to think of them as being different recollections of the same sermon, with Matthew adding other genuine "sayings," and omitting the "curses"; and Luke trimming off some things that seemed superfluous, but leaving in the words calculated to give the rich a hard time.

Some Bible students think that in Matthew verses 13 through 37 in chapter 5, all of chapter 6, and verses 6 through 14 in chapter 7 are interruptions of the sermon. Look these up and see for yourself. Those who prefer to think of the Sermon on the Mount and the Sermon on the Plain as essentially the same, and merely differing accounts of the same event, point out that the so-called "plain" in St. Luke's Gospel could easily be a level place up on the side of the mountain. We are familiar with such places ourselves—a sort of lookout, often a favorite picnic area. This shelf or level place, part way up the mountain, would be a natural theatre for the multitude. In any event it seems to me that when Jesus was giving the kingdom sermon the idea must have got across to some at least of his hearers: "This is a demanding king, and a kingdom that demands much. You have to climb a mountain just to hear the entrance requirements taught."

The Beatitudes

THE late Dr. S. S. Drury, great rector of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., told a story once of questioning a Sunday school class as to what the Beatitudes are. After a period of sustained silence a young girl's hand shot up and she said, "The Beatitudes are the attitudes that we ought to be at." For centuries the Church has read for the Gospel on All Saints Day, St. Matthew 5:1-12a, the Beatitudes. Back in the days of St. Ignatius and St. Polycarp they referred to greatsouled Christians, especially the martyrs, as "blessed." They are the ones who, in every age and every land, have known the happiness of taking "the attitudes that we ought to be at" consistently.

We have in the Beatitudes a full octave of the various notes—all essential to the character of the sons of the kingdom. Our Lord did not intend to list eight different types of people, specialists in a peculiar field of goodness, who would reap eight different rewards. There is conscious poetic structure here. The second clauses are all synonyms for "theirs is the kingdom of heaven," with which the series begins and closes. The first section of each Beatitude is a different aspect of the one type the Lord desires for his kingdom.

In the Beatitudes Jesus gathered all the colored rays of the spectrum of Old Testament piety and Messianic hope into the white light of their fulfillment in the new Israel. The kingdom of heaven was at hand because Jesus was there. He was in and of the kingdom. Yet it had still to be realized on earth, and increased as others joined themselves to him and thus came into the kingdom. It is worth recalling that the petition for the realization of the kingdom on earth as it is in the heavens is number one in the Lord's Prayer.

It was clear that this was not a kingdom with particular geographical boundaries like the old promised land. It was and is the realm of God's sovereignty. It is not static, not local, not coterminous with old Israel. From the old Church Jesus drew the oppressed and truly pious to form the nucleus of the new Israel, the Church Catholic. The Beatitudes were, at least in a sense, to be the keys of that kingdom of righteousness. The sons of the kingdom were not bound together with the blood of Abraham their father. They were and are red with the blood of the Lamb.

Jesus wanted adherents, members of the body, to propagandize for his kingdom. But he let it be known immediately that the cost was great. This was a kingdom of character. If it were to be won only by those who achieved perfection in character themselves it would be a lonely kingdom for the Christ. But generously he extends his character, his person, to all who seek his rule of love. It is he in us; we in him. Obviously our Lord did not have prepared a handbook for the kingdom of heaven but by the time the gospel was circulated in the form in which we have it there was in practice a system of indoctrination, initiation, a kingdom meal in which the King was sacramentally present, secret symbols, and the feeling of one for all, and all for the King. The kingdom-workers had become a persecuted, hated, pursued underground and the Beatitudes were embodied in the heroic people whose blood became the seed of the Church.

IN our day to be termed "poor in spirit" or "poor spirited" is far from praise. It would seem to describe people who have become vegetables, who don't respond to stimuli, who cower in fear where there is nothing to fear. The words on our Lord's lips had a far different connotation. He was speaking of, and at the same time speaking to, a class of people who, since the time of Second Isaiah had been a very definite stratum in Israel's society.

The term "the poor" (as St. Luke has it) or "the poor in spirit" was a technical term in Judaism to describe a special class of Jews who were in a state of passive rebellion to the status quo. They were poor in earthly goods but not all the poor were "poor in spirit." It was possible for a wealthy person to be "poor in spirit" but it was as likely as for a camel to get through the eye of a needle.

In Isaiah 66:2 we read ". . . to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." Here the Lord was speaking as one surfeited with semi-heathen sacrifices. In God's name the prophet thundered against those who had substituted these sacrifices for godly living. He cried out against those who had killed his hopes of a great universal religion of righteousness and peace. Better it was for the temple to lie in ruins than that it should be raised to house a divisive, nationalistic, selfish sect.

But still the Lord had hope for the future. He would look upon with favor and take unto his own the little poor man with his reverence and integrity and his heart broken by the betrayal of God's will. In Israel a little group was found in each generation—truly devoted to God, sensitive to his will, preparing for the kingdom, looking for the Messiah, "the quiet in the land," the poor in spirit.

Centuries later when Messiah came, the child Jesus was born of Mary and was guarded by Joseph. The holy family was representative of the poor in spirit. They were truly pious and very poor. When Mary sang "Magnificat" she showed where she stood.

"He hath showed strength with his arm;
He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.
He hath put down the mighty from their seat,
And hath exalted the humble and meek.
He hath filled the hungry with good things;
And the rich he hath sent empty away."

In a sense there was fulfillment of this prophetic battle-song when God chose one of "the poor in spirit" to give flesh and blood to the Son of God. But until all was fulfilled, until the rich and mighty and proud were only a memory, this song of Mary must serve as the hymn of the kingdom for those who love her Son.

The Poor Despised

THE official classes disdained and despised all of these poor. They were called "the people of the land," as though somehow they were beneath contempt. The hate of the rabbis toward this ostracized and outcast class of people was venomous and bitter. ". . . this people who knoweth not the law are cursed." So did the chief priests and Pharisees explain the fact that "the poor in spirit" heard the outlaw prophet of Galilee gladly. He, Jesus, was the worst of a bad lot because he gave leadership to them. He made articulate their protesting prayers. And he was the answer to their prayers. They had made the offertory of their lives, not content with the formal, measured, purchased piety of the Church of their day. Their lives were a constant rebuke to the officials of state and Church. But as Mary offered, as the contemporary "poor in spirit" offered, the Real Presence was not withheld from them. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." That was, the official, formal, respectable Church that rejected him. "But as many as received him, to them he gave the power to become the Sons of God." And it was the poor in spirit (his very own because he was tabernacled with them) who made him welcome.

What of Today?

WHO are the poor in spirit today? It is difficult to know because they are not advertized, least of all self-advertized. But could not the late Mahatma Gandhi be numbered among them? Did not Father Huntington in his days in Holy Cross Mission in New York's lower east side strive to be just that? And today, Father Michael Scott by flaunting the discriminatory law and living among the wretched Negroes of South Africa identified himself with the poor of the modern world. One a non-Christian, others Christians, choosing to live with and as the poor, but all hard workers by peaceful means to better the lot of the neediest. What of the many social workers, slum priests and sisters, physicians and nurses, school teachers, and others who have deliberately thrown in their lot with the poor and lived with them, striving in every way not only to make the individuals better people but to make the general conditions more agreeable to the kingdom of heaven. Saints may come out of the slums, rarely or frequently is no matter, but we cannot thereby say that the slums are a breeding ground for sanctity. Poverty, crime, filth, disease, twisted minds, distorted values—these things we know are part of depressed areas, whether rural or urban. All praise to those who make common cause with those so situated. We think immediately of the "France Alive" movement, of our own "priest workers" of Jersey City, and Roxbury Crossing. But this is a hard saying, that the servant should be as his Lord.

The poor in spirit were once the bad conscience of the Church? Does the Church today ever treat courageous leaders as expendable? Perhaps that is to be expected since we are no longer primarily a society of the dispossessed. But do the others of us share the shame, pray for God to cleanse his Church and work for relief or restitution for the injured? Are we silent for safety's sake?

The poor in spirit were once an embarrassment to the state as its legislation or practice directly contravened the revealed will of God. Are we alert to learn the facts about doubtful bills? Do we do all we can to relieve injustice through our elected representatives? Do we let them know that certain conditions—no room for Jews—no Negroes hired here—are intolerable for Christians? Do we try to right the wrongs done in our "reformatories" which teach criminal procedures, sex crimes, and hate for society through medieval treatment? Are prisoners and all who are discriminated against our concern? Or do we pass by on the other side?

Once Christians refused military service. Were they wrong? The reason was a "poor in spirit" reason; they would not render allegiance to a state which claimed rights in areas where only God could tell them what to do. Do we sometimes aid in wars which are only to "save face," which are against the common people, which make the rich richer and the poor poorer? Does the Church sometimes play along with the state on such things without protest and without even a call to corporate penitence? Do we value too highly our tax-free churches?

The poor in spirit were and are those in whom pride is dead. If that is being "poor spirited" then they are that too. The pride of position, of influential friends, of large income, of special privilege, of possessions, of self-esteem, of recognition by others, of pleasing oneself: all of these are gone. The poor in spirit learn to value people and things without clutching at them and destroying them by possessiveness. They learn to care in an eternal way—but when the demands of the kingdom are heard, the loss of goods or even good friends (who cannot 'go along') is not difficult to bear.

It is a large order, to try to be poor in spirit in our age and our society. It is bound to be looked upon as subversive in some ways and of course it is. There are bound to be times when one wonders whether this isn't being futile when all the rest are going the other way. This is the devil's word, don't listen. Remember that the way has been blazed by the outcast Nazarene. Its his work, his kingdom, his glory, and he gives his power to see it through. If it is only for a remnant, he may yet save our world in our time.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Why did people follow Jesus?
2. Compare the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew) with the Sermon on the Plain. Discuss the differences.
3. What was the meaning of "the poor in spirit" in Jesus' day?
4. Name a few persons today that you think can be said to be "poor in spirit." Give reasons.
5. What do you think people should do today to be "poor in spirit"?
6. Discuss the author's statements on the above.

Lenten Training

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder and First Editor of The Witness

THE word means "spring," and spring suggests work.

But it suggests work that is profitable and for which there is a harvest in which we will reap that which we sow.

Lent is a season in which we are to break up the hard soil by penitence, and so let the word of God be sown in our hearts that our lives may be fruitful.

And the fruits of the spirit are love, joy and peace.

Just now the world is reaping its harvest of selfishness, hate and recklessness, and if experience is worth anything, men should have learned that we cannot have love, joy and peace unless we are willing to undergo the discipline of the Christian life. For there is no harder or more stubborn soil than these hearts of ours, and they will never bring forth good fruit unless we are willing to till the ground.

Let us then tend to our spring planting and ask ourselves what we must do.

And first we must break up the soil. "Repent" comes first in spiritual gardening. What is repentance? What is conversion? What is it to be poor in spirit?

The Greek word for repentance means to change your mind.

Not once, but frequently. St. Peter had to repent several times. He repented whenever his assurance made him feel that he was self-sufficient. So many people have one spasm of repentance, after which they settle down to a life of inflexible prejudices. There is just one springtime in their religion and after that hardness of heart and lack of sympathy.

Repentance is a daily need, but especially in the springtime of our Church year, when we need to discover our hardness and do violence to it.

Jesus Christ loved publicans and sinners in spite of their faults; but a religion which repents but once is so hard toward sinners that, having been themselves forgiven, they forgive none who differ from them. We need to break up the heart and mind by penitence whenever it begins to harden.

A purely emotional religion lacks the sympathetic note after it has become assured that its own soul has been saved.

Conversion is to turn around. Every time we find that we have our back toward God's will, we are to be converted and turn to God.

To be poor in spirit is to realize the poverty of our own resources and the inexhaustible resources of the true riches which Christ bestows only on the humble and the meek.

Those who fancy that they are rich, he sends empty away.

Sow the Seed

NEXT we must sow the seed. And the word seed means something that men cannot manufacture. All the wisdom of this world cannot fashion one grain of wheat.

Mr. Burbank may take the potato and make it larger, more edible, more profitable, but Mr. Burbank cannot make a potato out of the elements of the earth. "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord, and the giver of life" and I believe that "the seed is the word of God."

Now it is the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that he sows the seed of eternal life in our souls.

What is the word of God?

It is not only that the New Testament contains the word of God, but the ambassadors of Christ were entrusted with that word.

When a minister of Christ baptizes a child, he uses the word of Jesus Christ, and that word is the same by which all things were made.

Christ gave his Church not merely the written word, but he gave the spoken word to his ministers. Whoever uses the word of Christ to baptize a child acts as the agent of Christ and therefore conveys to the child the power of his word.

So when a priest of the Church celebrates the Lord's Supper, he does not use his own language, but the very words that Christ used in the institution of that sacrament.

This also is the word of God.

So also when one sent by the Master pronounces the words of absolution over a penitent sinner he is merely carrying out the word of Christ, who both forgave sin himself and distinctly commanded his representatives that they should bind and loose the sins of men.

"Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained."

So when men are ordained, they are sent forth with the very words of Christ.

Lastly, we must cultivate the life that he gives us.

Weeds grow without man's effort, but grain brings forth fruit only as man labors.

Soil that is neglected is far worse than virgin soil.

When men neglected the soil once broken, then came weeds which were of value to neither man nor beast.

The sins of civilization are the sins of neglected opportunities. They are far worse than the sins of the savage.

Now the work of the husbandman is not exciting, but it is most important. So the means of grace which Christ has provided for the cultivation of spiritual fruits are not attained by hectic efforts, but rather by steady industry.

I wish that Christian people would learn that Christ is more concerned with the little virtues of life than with its heroics.

He who talked of the woman sweeping out her home and the man tending his sheep was more concerned with the faithfulness of everyday acts than he was of the unusual dramatics of life.

It isn't so much that we need always to be rescuing the perishing from horrible damnation as it is that we are to let our light shine steadily, brightly, persistently.

Cultivate the Soil

IF the Church could only produce men and women who were constant in prayer; who were quick to forgive; who were loathe to wound others; who were kindly interested in others, neither talking cant nor cultivating a stony stare; who felt that every one in God's house was a member of God's family entitled to decent courtesy; who gave their share to support the Church; who did some one thing for Christ and did it faithfully; who confessed their own sins regularly, not the sins of others; who refused to manifest bitterness toward personal injury or neglect; who were instant in season and out of season, not with excuses but service; then indeed would the Church be doing the will of her divine Master, and the lives of Christians would preach louder and better than the most eloquent preachers; and the cause of Christ would not need apology, but would command respect.

Worldly people are dull enough, but worldly Christians are not only dull, but vicious.

Then let us use Lent as a period of training in which we strive to sow the seed which Christ gives us, and carefully to cultivate the soil for which we are responsible. We know that we will never regret it; we are merely too inert to secure the blessing.

Let us not foolishly think that we are some extraordinary soil that produces crops without travail.

There is no alibi for service. You either do it or you don't.

You are either a faithful husbandman or a lazy, shiftless farmer.

Why delude yourself with the idea that you are a special exception to God's universal law?

EDITOR'S NOTE: The quotations from Bishop Johnson's writing that appeared in the editorial of February 1 resulted in several letters suggesting that we reprint some of his essay this Lent. We are happy to comply.

Talking It Over

BY

W. B. SPOFFORD SR.

SADAKO MORIYAMA of Nagasaki, Japan, had but recently graduated from high school in 1945 when our atom bomb fell. She writes this paragraph of an experience in an air raid shelter: "A little light was coming in the entrance. As I watched, two things that looked like great big hideous lizards crawled in slowly, making croaking, groaning sounds. Others followed. I was paralyzed with horror for minutes. Then the light got a little stronger and I could see that they were human beings—skinned alive by fire or heat."

Fujie Urata was at Koba when our bomb fell —three and a half miles from the center of the explosion: "The pumpkin field was blown clean. Nothing was left of the whole thick crop, except that in place of the pumpkin there was a woman's head. I looked at the face to see if I knew her. It was a woman of about forty. She must have been from another part of town—I had never seen her around here. A gold tooth gleamed in the wide-open mouth. A handful of singed hair hung down from the left temple over her cheek, dangling in her mouth. Her eyelids were drawn up, showing black holes where the eyes had been burned out."

Most of us have read John Hersey's "Hiroshima." These are but two brief quotes by survivors of our bomb to be found in "We of Nagasaki," a book of but 189 pages written by Dr.

Takashi Nagai (Duell, Sloan & Pearce, $2.75). It is a story of the survival-guilt on the part of those who lived because they "ignored their friends crying out or shook off wounded neighbors who clung to them, pleading to be saved." But it is much more than that. Many good people are quite casual about the bomb. I heard a number of business men discuss it at breakfast the other day at a club in New York. One said that he thought he should move his family out of the city—say thirty or forty miles. Another thought that was silly—"after all we have our subways to duck into."

Well this book tells the story of the horrors of our 1945 atom bomb. Now we have a bomb ten to twenty times more powerful. And it is in the hand of a very tired man who can be angered to white heat because a music critic says that he does not think his daughter sings too well.

We the people of the USA are supposed to have something to say about our destiny. Read this book and I think you will agree that, if such weapons are to be made at all, their use should not be determined by one man or even by a considerable group of military-minded men. Whether the present Congress would be an improvement I am not prepared to say, but it would at least afford time for debate which would, I hope, result in the greatest public protest this country has ever seen.

Sunday Calm

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

ON a warm Sunday afternoon the university campus was calm and there were plenty of places to park. The situation was so different from the usual swarms of students and the cars parked in all available stalls. The open spaces and the Sunday calm of the place gave a charming effect and the fever of life was lessened by the relative stillness.

Sunday should be a time of restfulness and peace for us. Our weekdays become so full and sometimes hectic. We need refreshment for body, mind, and spirit. Some people crowd their weekends full of arduous work and many engagements. Some refuse to rest or to change the pattern of their customary work even for the Lord's Day. No wonder they feel increasingly the tensions of life. A well kept Sunday can send us back to our work renewed and strengthened for the week ahead.

Sunday is a day to rest our tired bodies and nerves. Through worship in church our souls are refreshed. The busier we are during the week and the more tired we are at its end, the more we need the worship of God in church on Sunday morning. Some religious reading on Sunday afternoon can give us a clearer perspective on life and help us all the more to distinguish the unimportant things for those that really count.

Multitudinous interests of life work against the Christian use of Sunday and this holy day is becoming increasingly secularized. Business and pleasure encroach upon it. It is the part both of practical wisdom, however, and of religious obedience to keep the day holy, and by the right use of it find that it was made for our good. Thus it can help us to have rested bodies, quiet minds, and hearts more peaceful even than the campus that Fall afternoon.

Justification by Faith

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

YOU claim to be a "good Christian" or "as good as those who go to church" or "doing your best to lead a good life." I have yet to meet anyone who does not make some such claim. There may be people who are trying to be vicious and wicked, but I am not talking to them. If you are such a one, stop reading here.

What I want to know is how you justify or prove your claim.

Most of us think first of some of the things we have done—kind, thoughtful unselfish acts. In other words, we claim to be justified by our works. We do not agree with Paul and Luther but with the Epistle of James.

But some of us answer by saying that our claim rests on the promise and gift of God which we have accepted through we in no way deserve it. We are justified by faith.

Those of us who make such an answer had better be sure we really do trust the promises of God and accept the job he gives to each soul he forgives and recognizes as belonging to him. For with the status of Christian goes the commission of showing, passing along the love of God by every possible means. When we are in fact justified by faith, we are moved by love to many good works.

That is part of the message we receive from our ancestors and protest or proclaim as "protestants" since the Reformation, as it was proclaimed by the Christians of the first century.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Abyss of Despair. By Rabbi Nathan Hanover. Translated by Rabbi Abraham J. Mesch. Bloch. $2.25.

The first English translation of a famous 17th century chronicle, depicting Jewish life in Russia and Poland, and the massacres that took place there. It is part of the tragedy of modern Judaism that it has never been able to forget these awful things that have happened in Jewish history. Modern Judaism, in many ways, is still anchored about where some old-fashioned Protestants were tied up—Protestants for whom Foxe's Book of Martyrs was almost on a level with the Bible, or those for whom the Battle of the Boyne was a more important religious festival than Christmas or Easter. For their own sake, as well as for the health and well-being of religious life generally today, we could wish our Jewish friends would lay less emphasis upon the tragedies in the past, and more upon the great Hope of Israel which shines like the rising sun in all their sacred literature.

The Church's Year. By Charles Alexander. Oxford University Press.

A charmingly written, beautifully printed, quaintly illustrated little book on the church's festivals, high days and low days. Many persons will find it an attractive book to give to children.

Today is Mine. Compiled by Thomas Curtis Clark. Harper. $1.50.

This is a handbook of devotions for everyday in the year, with quotations from various Christian writers, ancient and modern—and even from Marcus Aurelius, with appropriate scripture passages, poems, and prayers.

Gospel Gleanings. By Thomas Nicklin. Longmans. $4.50.

This is a book by a good, earnest, pious and godly man who is troubled by the unbelief that has centered upon the scriptures in recent years, and who is determined to do something about it. He would like to maintain the complete accuracy of the gospel records, and find explanations of difficulties which will make it possible to maintain the old-fashioned attitude of simple acceptance of every statement in the Gospels. But he has not read widely enough to grasp the positive contributions of the new approach; and he cannot, apparently, see that other men can view the Gospels differently, but none the less devoutly, religiously, even spiritually. It is a book that was out of date before it was written! Perhaps it may appeal to a certain level of students in England, who never read American books—or Continental books, either—but it will not have much to say to students of the Gospels on this side of the water.

Divorce and Domestic Relations. Virginia Law Weekly. $1.00.

A compilation of original Dicta, published in the Virginia Law Weekly, and dealing with many different aspects of marriage and divorce legislation.

Bible History Digest. By Elmer W. K. Mould. Exposition Press (251 4th Avenue, New York). $3.00.

This is a very brief and simple abridgement of Professor Mould's important book, Essentials of Bible History. It is simplified down to the point where it could be practically transferred to the blackboard; an excellent book for beginners.

Gandhi's Letters to a Disciple. Harper. $2.50.

This book will be welcomed by multitudes of admirers of the late Mr. Gandhi, but the general impression it leaves is one of dissatisfaction. There are some good things in it, but it should have been cut down, and pages and pages of trivia omitted.

How Love Grows in Marriage. By Leland Foster Wood. Macmillan. $2.50.

An interesting book on a vital subject, but too often stopping short with a romantic solution of problems. Some of the difficulties in married life require a profounder understanding and solution—for example, those involving the art of medicine and/or moral theology.

Everyday Religion. By Joseph Fort Newton. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $1.25.

A beautiful little book by the late Rector of St. Luke and the Epiphany in Philadelphia. It is compiled from his "Saturday Sermons," published during a number of years in the Philadelphia Bulletin.

Meditations. By Toyohiko Kagawa. Harper. $1.25.

One hundred and ten meditations by the world-famous Christian leader and saint in Japan.

CHURCH and DRAMATIC ARTS

By WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

TWO years ago, a new film company was established to produce documentary pictures of significance. Their first venture, The Quiet One, rapidly proved that the company was meeting a need well.

The picture won the following awards and citations: it was voted the best picture of the year by the New York Newspaper Guild and was listed among the ten best films by Time Magazine, the New York Times and the National Film Board of Review. It was nominated for the Academy Award. It won the Critics Award and the First International Award at the Grand International Film Festival at Venice. It won recognition as the outstanding film at the Edinburgh Film Festival and won the first annual prize of the City College of New York Film Institute. Finally, it was given a special award by the Protestant Motion Picture Council and the Christian Herald.

We usually leave the listing of pedigrees to devoted members of the D. A. R. but, in this particular case, the citations are significant. They relate to a movie made by amateurs using amateur actors. And, in competition with professional Hollywood, the amateurs emerged victoriously. Why?

The Quiet One is an important film which, to sound like Hollywood, is colossal. It is both horrible and sensitive. It deals with ten-year-old Donald Peters, an only child, who is victimized by a broken home and a violent, impersonal environment. Donald needs love—certainly, we would say Christian love—but above all love. When he doesn't get it, he becomes enraged, desperate, fearful, lonely and quiet. His eyes shine with the glare of a jungle beast peering through a thicket.

Then, taken to the Wiltwyck School (which was founded, praise be to God, by the Protestant Episcopal Church), Donald is met with understanding, comfort and love and is started on a process which, theologically, we would call redemption.

It's a simple story told in psychiatric terms. It's, likewise, a simple story told in real religious terms.

Once, in the past, the national Church made available an excellent movie to dioceses and parishes to help with the Presiding Bishop's Reconstruction and Relief Fund. It could do worse than do the same with The Quiet One which deals with human need with which the Church must be concerned.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

NATIONAL COUNCIL APPEALS FOR NEGOTIATED PEACE

An appeal that the U. S. conduct negotiations "both within and without the United Nations" in an effort to secure peace was voiced by the general board of the National Council of Churches, holding its first meeting in New York. The statement stressed however that "a just and durable peace cannot be fully achieved except as people everywhere become responsive to those moral and spiritual imperatives which are of the essence of our faith in Christ." A warning was also given that negotiations should not result in appeasement "nor sacrifice justice solely in the interests of peace."

Steps were taken to mobilize churches to meet the spiritual needs of the American people arising from the war emergency, with a committee of 30 appointed to recommend a special ministry to armed forces and defense workers. It was reported that by June there would be 3,500,000 men in uniform and that some areas already are feeling the impact of expanded industrial activity.

A resolution was also passed setting forth the need of guaranteeing the right of conscientious objectors.

WILMINGTON SURVEY NOTES CHURCH WEAKNESSES

About half of Wilmington's metropolitan area population of 204,000 are not connected with any church, it was reported to the council of Churches following a survey that covered a year. The Episcopal and Lutheran Churches were singled out for having failed particularly to expand to the suburban perimeter of the city.

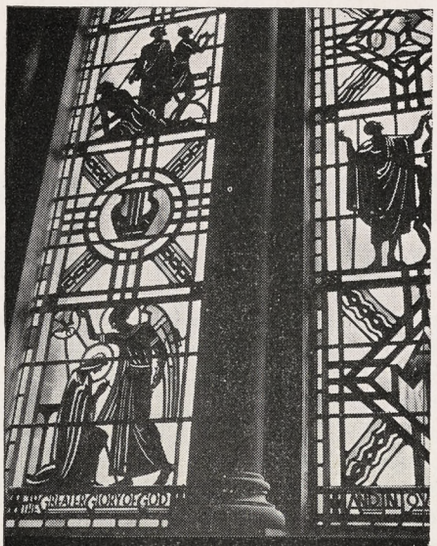
RACE RELATIONS SUNDAY

Race relations Sunday has been announced for Feb. 11 by the National Council of Churches. Services, often with a pulpit exchange, will be held in churches throughout the country and individuals are urged to "create a group which will seek God's leading through Bible study, prayer and fellowship for maintaining the standard of Christian brotherhood about race in the Church and the community." They are also asked to help break down racial, creedal and national barriers in employment, housing, education, health, recreation, hotel accommodations, community services, legislation, courts, churches.

MARRIAGE IS TOPIC FOR STUDENTS

High school students in Peoria, Ill., chose inter-faith dating and marriage as the topic they were most interested in discussing at a religious conference to be held this week. Of the 6,000 votes, the overwhelming number went to that topic. Next four were: Can Christianity prevent war? How about this thing, prejudice? What can we do to make America more conscious of Christianity? Is the Bible true?

MORE THAN BILLION TO CHURCHES



For the second successive year members of 53 Protestant denominations in the U. S. and Canada contributed more than a billion dollars for local church expenses and benevolence causes. The total was $1,137,554,266 in 1950, an increase of $133,979,895, or 13.5%, over the 1949 total.

DISCUSS EDUCATION IN FLORIDA

★ The first of a series of conference on education, sponsored and led by a team from the National Council, was held at the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Florida, January 25-29. There were conferences with parents, teachers, clergy. There were also classes, each closing with question and answer periods. Those on the staff from headquarters were Eleanor Snyder, Mary Villaret and the Rev. Walter Williams.

BISHOP ROBERTS SPEAKS ON CHINA

★ Bishop William P. Roberts, retired bishop of Shanghai, was the leader at a conference for both clergy and laymen held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, January 24th, and sponsored by the Church Service League of the diocese of Massachusetts. The Auxiliary met the same day when there were addresses by Mrs. Douglas Horton on the newly formed National Council of Churches; Bishop Heron who reported on the recent mission conducted by Byran Green of England; Gardiner M. Day, who reported on plans so far developed for the General Convention to be held in 1952 in Boston. The young people of the diocese held a supper meeting the same day with the Rev. Charles Long Jr., former missionary in China and now assistant in the overseas division of the National Council, the speaker.

FLORIDA NOW HAS CATHEDRAL

★ St. John's, Jacksonville, was made the cathedral of the diocese at the convention held there January 23-25. Highlights of the convention were addresses by Bishop Louis C. Melcher of Brazil and the Rev. E. Rolling Robertson, missionary in Liberia. Speakers at the convention of the Auxiliary were Mrs. Alfred M. Chapman, who spoke on the outlook for women's work in the Church, and Marguerite Henry of Fort Defiance, Arizona, who told of the work among the Navajo Indians.

MISSIONARY HOSPITAL IN AFRICA

★ On the Uganda shore of Lake Victoria, in east central Africa, the English Church missionary society's hospital at Kampala has on its staff Charles J. S. Sergel, M.D., whose father, now retired, was for 40 years a missionary of the Brazilian Church. The 200-bed hospital where the son is working is 50 years old and is the parent institution of many other medical centers in east Africa. Dr. Sergel writes, "East Africa is making great strides in every direction but spiritually is in desperate need, for materialism is a potent competitor for the soul of the people. A revival is going

EXTENDED COVERAGE

What does it cover?

The Extended Coverage endorsement to a fire insurance policy includes protection against damage by windstorm, cyclone, tornado, hail, explosion, riot, riot attending a strike, civil commotion, aircraft, smoke, and motor vehicles; and insurance must be for the same amount as the fire insurance, as the term "Extended Coverage" implies.

Over a three-week period THE CHURCH FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION received from policyholders over 200 reports of damage to Church property resulting from the great Northeast Storm of November 25th and 26th. Immediate steps were taken to speed adjustments of claims and make possible early restoration of damaged properties.

Often Extended Coverage is requested by property owners who think only of windstorm insurance, and the other hazards this insurance covers are overlooked. Smudge by faulty oil burning heating equipment, heavy damage by explosion of accumulated gas—these are examples of losses not covered by a fire insurance policy. They are covered, however, by Extended Coverage. The rate for this added protection is very low in most localities.

If you wish a quotation on the cost of Extended Coverage — or windstorm or fire — insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with your Church, just clip this advertisement, fill in the information listed below, and mail to us, so that we can send to you an application form:

on, however, slowly but surely." Dr. Sergel's father was a young Londoner working in New Zealand when he married a Swiss girl who was born in Italy. They went to Brazil where the Rev. Dr. Sergel built many churches and Mrs. Sergel was volunteer head mistress in the early years of St. Margaret's School, Pelotas. Their three sons became respectively a priest, a teacher, and a medical missionary.

CLERGY VISIT PLANTS

★ Clergymen of Wilmington, Delaware, combine their monthly luncheon meetings with visits to industrial plants and welfare institutions. Rector Henry N. Herndon of Calvary Church, president of the ministerial association, said that the purpose of the tours is to enable pastors to serve more positively in their communities through a first-hand knowledge of institutional and industrial conditions.

AMERICAN LITURGY IN SCOTLAND

★ According to a letter from Bishop Herbert William Hall of Aberdeen and Orkney of the Episcopal Church in Scotland, addressed to Presiding Bishop Sherrill, the American liturgy will be used at the cathedral in Aberdeen at certain times.

Said the Bishop's letter: "The American liturgy will be used in the Cathedral of St. Andrew, Aberdeen, at 8 a.m. every Wednesday from May 15 to mid-October, and I am sure that every American visitor will be heartily welcome. My provost, a charming, scholarly man, although like many Englishmen, a little reserved at first, is the Very Rev. G. T. Kennell. He will always be glad to meet any member from the U. S. A. who gets in touch and will gladly show them the Seabury Memorial chancel and chapel, the States' coats of arms on the roof, the memorial communion vessels, the silk battle flag presented by General Eisenhower and dedicated by the Bishop of Albany.

"We are gradually thawing out from a three weeks' hard frost and some inches of snow; and my 60-year-old bones do not like it. I hope you have fully recovered from your illness. Judging by the record of your days in the Church papers, I think you must have made an excellent recovery."

NEW JERSEY SEEKS ADVANCE FUND

★ The diocese of New Jersey is seeking $120,000 for a revolving fund for mission work in the diocese. The first churches to benefit will be St. Alban's, New Brunswick; St. James, Paulsboro; St. Luke's, Union; St. Andrew's, Camden, and a new work to be established at Sunnyfield, located near Linden.

BACKFIRE

BENJAMIN M. WASHBURN
The Bishop of Newark

It is with great interest that I note on the honor roll for 1950 the names of the Rev. C. Kilmer Myers, the Rev. Paul Moore and Mrs. Moore. Their work at Grace Church (Van Vorst), Jersey City, has been of a very high order and well deserves commendation.

In addition to the two whose names are on your honor roll, the Rev. Robert Pegram is equally deserving of commendation. The three clergymen work as a team, and each of them would feel that their efforts could not have succeeded without the other two. Very likely those who nominated the two whom you include in the honor roll were not aware that there is a third member of the team.

ANSWER: That Mr. Pegram was not cited is solely the fault of the managing editor, who offers his apology. The entire team was nominated and approved by the editors, so we herewith give our belated salute to the fourth member.

FRANCIS J. MOORE
Editor of Forward Movement

The daily readings in the Lenten issue of "Forward — day-by-day" are based on the First Book of Samuel, and I shall be grateful if you will kindly allow me to draw the attention of our readers to the fact that the First Book of Samuel can be obtained for five cents from the American Bible Society, 450 Park Avenue, New York 22. It is a paper booklet No. 551. These small separate editions of the books of the Bible put out by the American Bible Society are not so well known as they might be, and I think most people would probably like to have them.

WILLIAM GILMAN
Committeeman of Jewish War Vets

I read with interest your honor roll of 1950, and was unusually pleased to see among the names of the recipients, those of Revs. Warren McKenna and Robert Muir. Your editorial award has been the first to substitute bouquets rather than brickbats for the above mentioned courageous ministers, and has thereby strengthened my conviction that The Witness is one of the most liberal and truly democratic publications of these turbulent and confusing times.

I shall always be grateful to Rev. Morris Arnold, of Christ Church, Cincinnati, Ohio (formerly of Grace Episcopal Church, Medford, Mass.) for introducing me to The Witness. I have read it carefully for several years and

OWEN C. THOMAS
Clergyman of New York

The ministry of the church to Episcopal students at Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y., is making a new beginning. Since the college cannot supply the names of Episcopal students, I wish all clergy who have parishioners there or anyone else who knows of Episcopal students there would send me their names, giving their status in the Church, their parish connections, etc. This would be of great help in this important work. Thank you very much. My address is 600 West 122nd St., New York 27, N. Y.

STEPHEN C. WALKE
Rector of Trinity, Portsmouth, Va.

As this point there are a great many wounded and frost-bitten armed forces personnel in the U. S. naval hospital here in Portsmouth. We should like to be able to care for them pastorally. Our problem is that it is impossible to get a definitive list of Episcopalians from the chaplains. They just do not have such a list and feel unable to acquire it. We are working on this and hope we may be able to accomplish something. Until such time as lists will be available we have found that much the best way to find the Episcopalians is for their clergy to inform us.

Our hope is that you will publish this letter in your columns, urging that the clergy send the correct names to us who are near these military installations. All the other pertinent information we will be able to obtain after we have the proper names. This will aid us immeasurably in our pastoral work among the hospital patients.

R. W. COOK
Layman of Roseville, Calif.

Thanks to Helen Mears for the courageous article, "Post Christmas Thoughts—It's Me, Oh Lord" in the Witness of Jan. 11. The failure of the Church to satisfy "that general and wide-spread longing for reassurance and hope—the universal desire for peace and good will" is a fact which many of us, her fellow laymen, are deeply conscious.

There is something disappointing and disheartening, leaving one with a sense of frustration rather than reassurance, to go to church on Sunday, after a week of sights and reports of "man's inhumanity to man," and with sinking hearts and jaded spirits, seeking solace and surcease, to sing the confident strains of "O God our help in ages past," the joyful canticles, hear in the lesson the tender and gracious words of the Prince of Peace, "But I say unto you, love your enemies, do good to them—pray for them—," to wait, expectantly, to a sermon of platitudinous generalities, and as a climax to the offertory, to see the national flag whisked from its standard by a starry-eyed acolyte, who strides with it in strict military fashion before the altar, standing there in strict military pose, while the congregation lustily sings in the best patriotic manner (two-thirds of them can't sing the Doxology through by heart) as the organ booms forth with all stops open, "O say can you see—the rockets red glare, the bombs bursting in air—," then finally, to kneel while the priest intones "O Lord God of Hosts (armies), stretch forth thine almighty hand to strengthen and protect the soldiers of OUR country—and grant in all things they may serve without reproach"—a far cry from him who said, "the Son of Man came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." "From hardness of heart, and contempt of thy word and commandments, good Lord, deliver us."

LOGAN MOSS
Layman of Topeka, Kansas

To me The Witness is more valuable now than it has ever been. Since I am the editor of a weekly bulletin for our church I derive from The Witness much rich material for inclusion in our bulletin. Since I am the only one in our church who takes The Witness I make it possible that the other members read it through the bulletin. I hope that your contributing editors, such as W. P. Barnds, Philip Steinmetz, Corwin Roach and others will stay on the job for a long, long time.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Missionaries to Leave China Before End of Year

Chinese Christians Advise That to Remain May Lead to Bad Consequences

★ Many of the estimated 800 to 900 American Christian missionaries remaining in China are expected to withdraw this year, but their departure is not expected to end Christian work there, according to the National Council of Churches.

Dr. Rowland Cross, far eastern secretary of the Council's division of foreign missions, said the Christian Church in China shows "remarkable signs of vigor and in some places its membership is on the increase."

The Council's survey revealed that only about 500 Protestant missionaries now are in China, though there were 2,000 there two years ago. The Catholic foreign mission society said that 140 of its members remain in China, and the Jesuit mission society reported twenty-five. Some other American Catholics are in predominately European orders there.

American Protestant mission property was valued at $27,355,720 in 1930. Catholic mission property at $1,022,422 and educational and philanthropic installations at $13,526,747, and the values remain approximately the same(according to the survey). The government has taken custody of American property, the report said. Many American Catholic holdings are in the names of European societies.

Chinese Christians have advised missionaries, particularly Americans, that their continued presence "might lead to undesirable consequences," the report states, though they earlier had warmly approved missionary work and expressed hope that their "joint partnership" might continue.

Methodist Bishop Z. T. Kaung of Peking, recently "regretfully" advised American missionaries in his conference that their continued presence "might lead to unpleasant incidents," according to the report. These urgings are based on "fear of anti-foreign feeling getting out of hand, and not because they consider missionaries as detrimental to the Church," Dr. Cross said.

American Protestants sent approximately $8,000,000 to China in 1948, and the rate was nearly the same in 1949, but, according to the survey, mission officials said that contributions began to drop off in 1950.

The survey report indicated "few cases of outright persecution" of missionaries, but quotes board officials as saying that missionaries have been severely restricted in their movements, while some cases of house arrest have been reported and one or two jailings.

Dr. Jessie M. Wilson, home secretary of the American Baptist foreign missions society in China, said Communist methods are "a kind of oblique violation of freedom of worship . . . while they (the Communists) don't forbid the Christians to attend church, they usually find something for them to do during normal worship hours."

A number of Protestant officials, the report said, contend that Communist promises to guarantee religious freedom have not been carried out.

An Associated Press dispatch of Dec. 24, 1950, said Peking, seat of the Communist government of China, had announced a campaign "to eliminate any vestiges of the Christian Church in China." The dispatch said, in part: "Christians in China are going through one of their darkest periods. According to clerical reports . . . Catholic and Protestant missionaries 'without distinction,' are being singled out as 'cultural spies of imperialism'."

Most mission establishments reported that they have decided to leave the matter of withdrawal to the discretion of the missionaries themselves, though some have issued recalls. Representatives of the groups expressed confidence that the work started by the missionaries will be carried on by the Chinese leaders.

MAIL EMBARGO

Whether or not a lawyer would call the walkout of railroad workers, and the resulting embargo of mail, an "act of God" we do not know. We do know that The Witness for February 8th was delivered to the Post Office on the usual schedule. We know too that the local post office in Tunkhannock, Pa., did everything possible to get them out. However orders from Washington made it impossible for them to ship to certain sections of the country. All of which is to explain that, if you have not yet received the February 8th number, you will in time.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

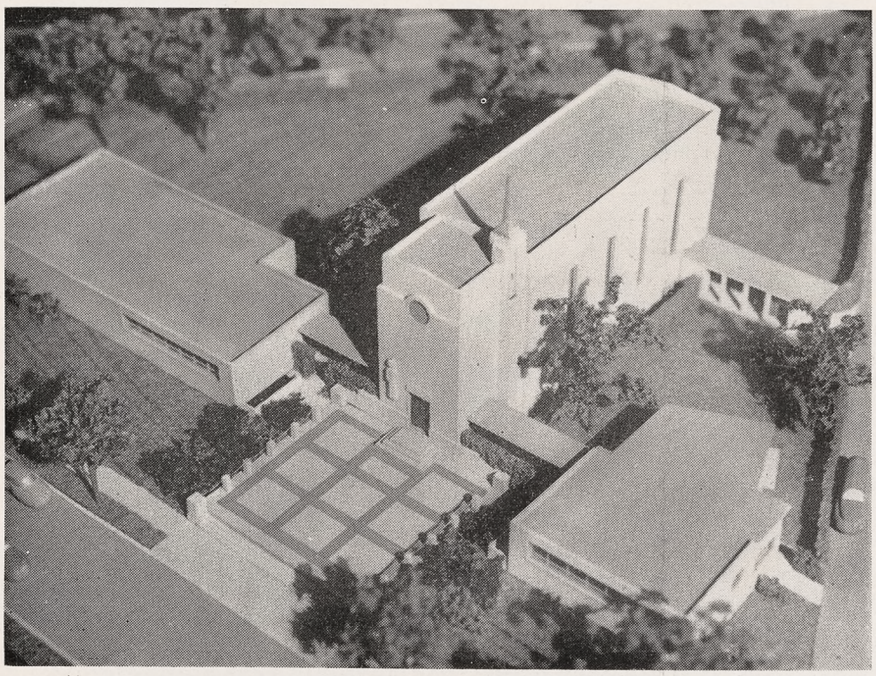
MARYLAND CONVENTION MAKES CHANGES

★ The convention of Maryland, meeting in Baltimore, completely revolutionized its administrative methods by providing for an administrative committee, named by Bishop Powell, consisting of sixteen laymen and three clergymen. The action grew out of a request by the bishop last year that he be authorized to name a committee to study the whole fiscal situation in the diocese. The new canon sets up a department of administration with a full time executive secretary. It provides also for the appointment of regents to further strengthen the organization, with ultimate authority vested in the executive council.

The convention brought to what seemed a successful conclusion the revision of the original vestry act of 1798 relating to the organization of vestries of parishes throughout Maryland. This involved the dioceses of Easton and Washington, presenting technicalities of difficulty concerning titles to property all of which were solved by a special committee headed by the Hon. Calvin Chesnut. Chief criticism among the clergy was aimed at language which seemed to give vestries the right "to hire and fire" and dealt with the clergy generally on a basis of secular employment without regard to the dignity of vocation or call. The amended bill must now go to the General Assembly and it is hoped, be accepted by them as a substitute for the original vestry act.

The convention by an overwhelming majority defeated a proposal that women be granted full rights to participate in the activities of the diocese on a parity with men, including right to seat and vote in convention.

PRESIDENT NAMES BISHOP BLOCK



★ Bishop Karl M. Block of California and Harvey Firestone Jr., Episcopalian of Akron, Ohio, have been appointed by President Truman to the nine-person commission on internal security and individual rights. Their job, in the words of the President, is to "consider in all its aspects the question of how this nation can best deal with the problems of protecting its internal security, and, at the same time, maintain the freedom of its citizens. It will consider the harm that comes from the wrong kind of action, as well as the good that comes from the right kind of action. The commission will make a thorough investigation of the laws, practices and procedures concerning the protection of our nation against treason, espionage, sabotage and other subversive activities." The chairman is Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, retired, who was commander of the Pacific fleet.

CHURCH'S WORK IN JAPAN

★ Bishop Conkling of Chicago and Col. Paul Rusch spoke on the present opportunities for the Church in Japan at a meeting of the American committee of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for work in that country. The meeting was held at St. James, Chicago.

The Bishop, a recent visitor to Japan, said: "I don't think it requires any great amount of prophecy to say that in the world of tomorrow Japan is a focal point of the Orient, and the Orient is the focal point of tomorrow. The tide is moving in the East. The Japanese as a people are today mindful of spiritual values; they are especially conscious of the lack of spiritual values where there is a vacuum."

Col. Rusch told of the success of the public health clinic in the rural village of Kiyosato where a monthly average of 250 patients are cared for by the two doctors and a nurse. The committee, headed by James L. Houghteling of Washington as president and Courtenay Barber of Chicago as treasurer, approved a budget of $29,000 for the work there and elsewhere in Japan.

SOUTH CAROLINA HITS KLAN

★ The convention of the diocese of Upper South Carolina, meeting at Rock Hill, unanimously passed a resolution condemning the Ku Klux Klan. It also commended Governor Byrnes for his opposition to the hooded order "and his determination to enforce the laws equally for all citizens regardless of race, color or creed."

TRINITY, COLUMBUS OFFERS PROGRAM

★ Noonday services are being held Monday through Friday during Lent at Trinity Church, Columbus, Ohio, which led off with the rector, the Rev. Robert W. Fay, the preacher on Ash Wednesday. Others to preach are the Rev. Harris J. Mowry Jr. of Worthington, Ohio; the Rev. Roy A. Burkhart, pastor of the Community Church in Columbus; Bishop Jones of West Texas; the Rev. Harold C. Metzner, Methodist of Providence, R. I.; Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis; the Rev. Richard R. Beasley of Roanoke, Va.; the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York; the Rev. Robert B. Whythe of Cleveland and Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio.

ROBERT M. HATCH ACCEPTS

★ The Rev. Robert M. Hatch, rector of St. John's, Waterbury, accepted his election as suffragan bishop of Connecticut on February 4th. The runner-up in the balloting was the Rev. John H. Esquirol, rector of Trinity, Southport, who received 30 clergy and 55 lay votes on the first ballot to 33 and 65 to Mr. Hatch. On the third ballot Hatch had 57 and 133 to 33 and 64 for Mr. Esquirol. A total of thirteen clergymen received votes.

BISHOP SALINAS VISITS TEXAS

★ Bishop Elfain Salinas y Velasco of Mexico was the guest speaker at the convention of West Texas, meeting January 28-30 at Christ Church, San Antonio. Special consideration was given to the work among Latin-Americans at the Church of the Good Samaritan in San Antonio. It is in charge of the Rev. A. G. Camberoa, a priest of Mexico.

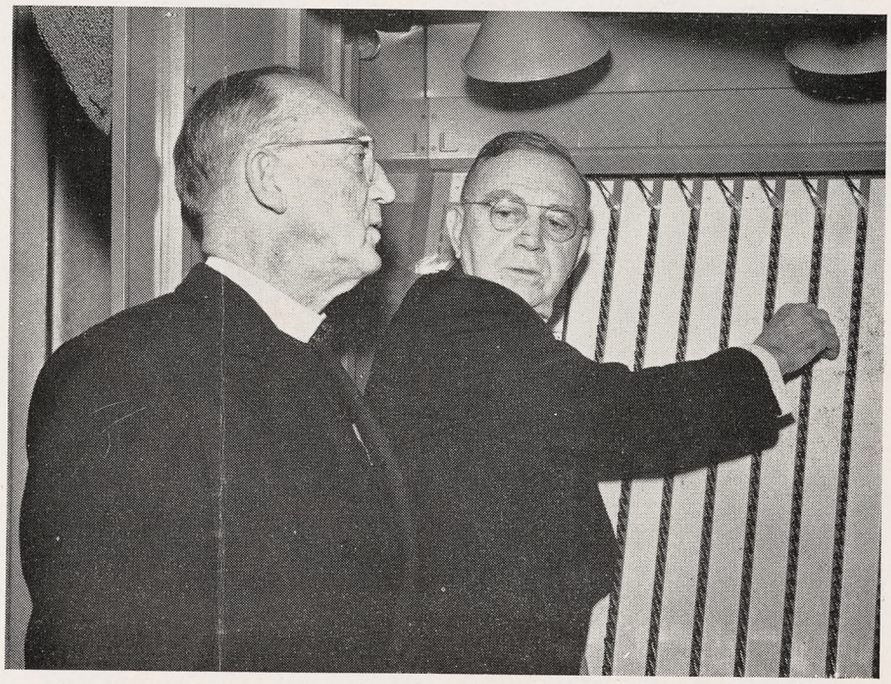
Bishop Everett Jones reported that the 959 confirmations last year was a record. He also stated that three new missions have been established, while three others have applied for parish status.

The Auxiliary, meeting at the same time, heard Mrs. Salinas on the work in Mexico; Mrs. David West of Minneapolis, Minn., National Council member, on missions; Bishop Jones who spoke on observing Lent.

SEABURY-WESTERN HAS SPECIAL LECTURES

★ The Rev. John D. Lee, vicar of St. Andrew's, Ben Lomond, Calif., delivered the biennial M. Dwight Johnson lectures in Church history at Seabury-Western Seminary, February 12-13. He discussed the tension between Calvinism and Arminianism in the evangelical movement. The lecturer was formerly professor of Church history at Emory University and was a Methodist minister before being ordained an Episcopalian in 1949.

ANSWERS TO BIBLE QUESTIONS



★ The Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector of St. Paul's, Englewood, N. J. teaches a class on the Bible at a local country day school. He recently gave an examination in which he asked the pupils to identify and explain Bible quotations. He received interesting answers:

"And Nathan said to David, 'Thou art the man'."

Answer: "That quotation was made when David was being picked as a harp player by Saul."

"And it came to pass, before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out . . . with her pitcher on her shoulder."

Answer: "This passage is from the story of Ivanhoe and Rebekah when Ivanhoe was sent to find a certain woman by the King."

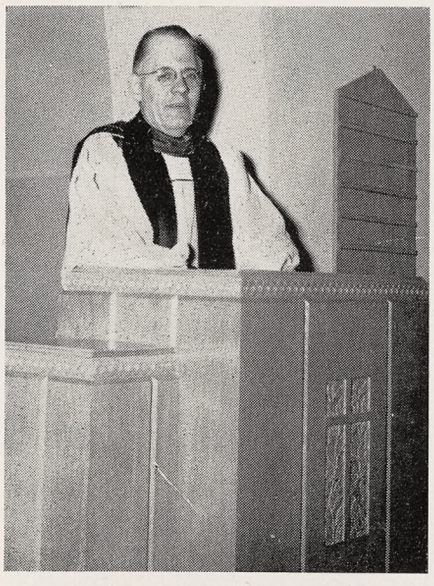
Another answer: "A miracle of the Bible. Christ brings a girl to life."

"If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found my riddle."

Answer: "Samson was always riddling and this is how he answered one riddle by plowing with the heifer."



OK—laugh at the youngsters, but first come up with the correct answers yourself.

G. M. DAY PLEADS FOR INDIA

★ The Rev. Gardiner M. Day in his sermon at Christ Church, Cambridge, February 4th, made a strong plea for a no-strings-attached release of some of the 8,000,000 tons of grain in storage in the U. S. to feed the famine stricken people of India.

EVERARD C. STOKES KILLED IN WRECK

★ Everard C. Stokes, the head of the Church Fire Insurance Corp., subsidiary of the Church Pension Fund, was killed in the wreck of the Pennsylvania R.R. at Woodbridge, N. J. on February 6th. His home was at Sea Girt where he was a vestryman of St. Uriel Church.

CONVENTION OF EAU CLAIRE

★ Convening in Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire, in 30 to 40 below zero weather, the council of the diocese of Eau Claire at the annual meeting January 28th and 29th, approved a plan to observe the silver anniversary of the diocese in 1953 by raising $50,000 during the next two years.

Bishop Horstick announced that a bequest was left for missionary work in the diocese under the will of the late Dr. Boyd T. Williams of Hudson.

He reported that at St. Mary's Church in Tomah and St. John's in Sparta, hospitality centers for soldiers at Camp McCoy have been opened, under the supervision of Rev. Alan McDaniel, diocesan chaplain at the camp.

Speaker at the dinner was Mr. Stewart A. Cushman, prominent layman of Chicago, who, with Mrs. Cushman, celebrated their 29th wedding anniversary on this occasion.

The council accepted its full quota from the National Council.

SHATTUCK RECTOR IN WILLIAMSTOWN

★ The Rev. Sidney W. Goldsmith Jr., rector and headmaster of Shattuck School, returned to St. John's, Williamstown, Mass., February 11th, where he was assistant rector and chaplain to Episcopal students at Williams College for three years. On the 12th and 13th he was discussion leader for the student-sponsored religious emphasis week, and on the 15th was the speaker at the college's Christian association dinner.

NEW YORK CLERGYMAN RECEIVES HONORS

★ The Rev. Marcus James has been appointed overseas secretary of the Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland, and associate chaplain in the University of London. James, who recently received the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Oxford, is the first Negro to be awarded a doctorate in Oxford's faculty of theology.

He has also been elected Montgomery lecturer for the year 1951. This lectureship, established on the Montgomery Foundation, provides annually a series of public lectures in London, on the philosophy of the Christian religion; and the committee which nominates the lecturer consists of the deans of Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, and King's College, University of London. Dr. James, a graduate of Harvard and Union Theological Seminary, is a priest of the diocese of New York, and was on the staff of All Souls Church, Manhattan, before proceeding to Oxford in 1948. He is the first American to be appointed to the Montgomery lectureship.

MISSISSIPPI VOTES BISHOP'S HOUSE

★ The convention of Mississippi voted to build a home for the bishop, to cost not more than $50,000. The present property is to be leased for commercial purposes if possible and the income used toward the new house.

President Milan Davis of Okolona College was elected a delegate to the provincial synod.

ARCHBISHOP FETED IN PANAMA

★ The Archbishop of Canterbury, Geoffrey F. Fisher, made a brief visit to Panama on his way to England from New Zealand. There was a reception, hurriedly arranged since the visit was unexpected, given on the cathedral grounds by Bishop and Mrs. Heber Gooden. He was also entertained by the governor and at the British legation.

The picture on the cover shows the Archbishop tapping a reporter's leg for emphasis as he told a group of newsmen that no sane man would ever wish the atom bomb to be used, and that its use never should be allowed without the decision of the UN.

YOUTH COMMISSION PLANS FOR 1951

★ "Continue in that holy fellowship" is the theme chosen for the United Movement of the Church's Youth for 1951-1952, by the national youth commission. At its sessions held at Western College, Oxford, Ohio, the commission made plans for special emphasis and study for the youth of the Church as they endeavor to take their place in the life of the Church in all of their efforts "to know the Christ and to make him known."

"My Bounden Duty, a Rule of Life" was defined as the basis of the U. M. C. Y. and therefore to be treated as more than a major which receives dated or occasional attention. This special emphasis is to be made through more publicity and more stress on the rule in all the material and program of the movement.

The four majors chosen for inclusion in the year's program will be youth Sunday and the united youth offering, on October 21, 1951, feasts of lights on the Epiphany, January 6, 1952, corporate communion for the U. M. C. Y. May 4, 1952 and study and action in the fields of missions at various times during the year with particular stress on participation in the parish program of missions.

The work of the Holy Cross Mission at Bolahun, Liberia, was chosen as the object of the united youth offering to be received on youth Sunday.

The commission, of which Lindley Hartwell, Burlington, Vt., is chairman, and Nancy Miller, Dover, N. H., secretary, includes three young people and one adult from each province, and four members at large who were elected at the triennial youth convention in 1949. The commission, with members of the National Council's division of youth spent much of its meeting time discussing the importance of youth work to the Church and the needs of young people in the Church.

Daily Christian Living was emphasis which was felt to be most important in all planning for the young people of the Church, and one which should be the basis for the majors and for all suggestions for study for the year to come.

The commission recommended to Bishop Gray of Connecticut, and chairman of the committee that is planning arrangements for the Anglican Congress to be held in 1953, that "Young people participate in the planning for, and in, the Anglican Congress." This matter was discussed at the recent meeting of the House of Bishops at El Paso, and Bishop Gray assured the bishops at that time that it would be given careful consideration by the committee.

Roderick French, La Grande, Ore., was elected chairman and Harriet Anderson of Claremore, Okla., was elected secretary to serve through the next annual meeting of the commission.

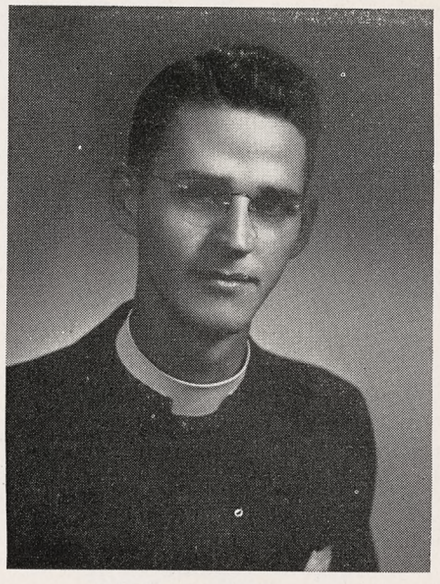
CONVENTION URGES UNIFORM LAWS

★ The convention of the district of San Joaquin, meeting February 5 at Visalia, Cal., passed a resolution urging uniform marriage and divorce laws throughout the United States. There were about 250 delegates and visitors attending.

EMRICH URGES LAY ACTIVITY

★ Bishop Emrich of Michigan made a plea for increased lay activity in education and pastoral fields at the convention of the diocese, meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. He asked the clergy to see that laymen be assigned to participate in services, act as lay readers, teach adult classes, give baptismal instruction to parents and sponsors, assist in visiting the sick, newcomers and inactive members.

Final action was taken whereby the constitution is amended to provide for the rotation of members of the standing committee.



BISHOP JUHAN TALKS ON VESTMENTS

★ Bishop Juhan of Florida doesn't talk much about his vestments; Mrs. Juhan does, for she has to take care of them. But recently, in answer to many questions from the children, he has been telling them of the church schools about the robes he wears. He has been getting amusing results. One little boy told his teacher that the bishop "wore a white shimmy and a black rocket." Another said "the bishop stole the thing he wore around his neck." Another child said "the thing that hangs down his back is a red pedigree."

OPPORTUNITIES FOR LAYMEN

★ Liberia is looking for a treasurer for the district—a business man who is an expert in keeping accounts. The Philippines likewise is seeking a treasurer who is an experienced accountant who will help in administering the postwar rebuilding program now going on. Any interested should write the overseas department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

YOUTH CONSIDERS RULE OF LIFE

★ Original skits portraying rule of life activities and work in missions were features of a conference of youth of the diocese of South Western Virginia, meeting February 3-4 at St. John's, Roanoke, attended by over 200 delegates.

CALIFORNIA ELECTS MRS. VICKERY

★ The convention of the diocese of California, after first ruling that one of the lay delegates to the synod of the Pacific should be a woman, elected Mrs. Robert Vickery of St. Mark's, Berkeley. It is the first time a woman has been elected by the diocese as a delegate.

THE BISHOP'S PARISH REACHES MANY

★ In the wide open areas of the west, where population is scattered and distances are great, there are many Episcopalians living on ranches and in small villages who are too far away from a church to attend services with any regularity. There are also many children who cannot get to church school.

In New Mexico and Southwest Texas, there has been organized "The Bishop's Parish" which undertakes to make up in some degree for this. Due to a rather wide-spread use of the radio by local congregations, there is not a ranch, hamlet or village in the whole 153,000 square miles which make up the district, where a church service is not available at least once a month. In addition to this the stations along the Mexican border report that they have heard from English speaking ranchers, who live far south of the line. As fast as these isolated people can be located, they are given a list of radio services in which they can join. At the moment, the bishop has some 160 addresses of isolated families.

There is also a Church school by mail, conducted by Mr. Harvey Buck, a candidate for holy orders. The regular procedure for the Bishop's parish is a monthly letter sent out by Bishop Stoney enclosing pamphlets of devotional and instructive nature and copies of the Southwest Churchman, the district publication. "Forward day-by-day" is mailed to those who request it. The people are urged to take their children to the nearest church, sometimes a hundred miles away, for baptism, and to make their own communion there, when it is possible.

So far, the plan is working well, but the chief difficulty lies in getting the names of the church people in the out-of-the-way places.

BISHOP PARDUE ON TOWN HALL

★ Bishop Austin Pardue of Pittsburgh was on the town hall program of ABC on February 6th, heard over 274 stations. The topic was whether or not people today can find faith. Sharing the program were Fulton Oursler, Roman Catholic layman, and Prof. Irwin Edman of Columbia.

UNIVERSITY OFFERS UNIQUE COURSE

★ Vanderbilt University, Nashville, has a course providing graduate training for work in the Episcopal Church. It is a two-year course leading to a master's degree. The diocese of Tennessee is cooperating.

BISHOP BOYNTON INSTITUTED

★ Bishop Charles F. Boynton was instituted suffragan bishop of New York on February 3rd at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

KUEBLER ADDRESSES LAYMEN

★ President Clark Kuebler of Ripon College was the speaker at the annual meeting of laymen of the diocese of East Carolina, held February 11 at St. Mary's, Kinston. Also addressing the group was J. N. Smith of Goldsboro, president of the laymen's league of the province.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE CELEBRATES

★ The missionary district of the Panama Canal Zone does things up brown when they have a convention. It opened this year on January 27 and ran for an entire week, with one day devoted to youth meetings; another to the Auxiliary; workshops on the care of the altar; religious education, a rule of life. There was a reception given by Bishop and Mrs. Heber Gooden. There was also time out for a barbecue.

Bishop Gooden reported that more laymen are doing more work and suporting it with more money, everywhere from Nicaragua, down through Costa Rica to Western Panama, the Canal Zone on to Colombia, which alone is about twice the size of Texas. The district is a thousand miles from one end to the other and has twelve million people living in it. The work is expanding at such a rate that the bishop had to appoint more archdeacons to keep up with it; the Rev. Louis Biadie for Port Limon, Costa Rica; the Rev. Robert W. Turner for Western Panama; the Rev. G. C. Montgomery for Northern Colombia; the Rev. Jack Townsend for Southern Colombia.

A missionary rally was held in the cathedral garden on the evening of February 3rd when it was announced that Bishop Bentley, head of the overseas division of the National Council would arrive in Nicaragua on February 22 for an extended visit which will end at Barranquilla, Colombia, April 8th.

SHERMAN E. JOHNSON AT VIRGINIA

★ Prof. Sherman E. Johnson of the Episcopal Theological School and dean-elect of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, gave the Reinecker lectures at the Virginia Seminary, February 1-2. There were three lectures on Jesus and the early Christian movement. Students of the Howard University school of religion were guests.

EDITORIALS

Worthy Successor

WHEN Gilbert Symons retired as editor of the Forward Movement, many were concerned about the future of this enterprise which has long supplied so many excellent tracts to the whole Church. The original editor had won the trust and gratitude of churchmen everywhere. Booklets and pamphlets put out under his direction covered a multitude of subjects, and there was a great demand for them. The Forward Movement had met a need in the Church for brief, simple, devotional literature which busy people might be encouraged to read for their souls' health. So the editor's retirement was the cause of regret and some question about the next chapter of the Movement.

But it is now clear that we need have no further doubts. Forward is still in good hands, and its new editor, Francis J. Moore, is carrying on in the fine tradition of his predecessor. Those who have seen the latest issues of Forward-Day-By-Day as well as the helpful booklets, Prayers For All Occasions and Be of Good Cheer, will agree that they are well done and very useful. The same high standard prevails, and the same imagination in offering first-rate tracts on all sorts of themes about which people are asking questions and seeking guidance. The Forward Movement has ministered to tens of thousands, and been of untold benefit as an aid to prayer and a source of Christian knowledge. May it long continue, and to its new editor we offer congratulations and appreciation.

"QUOTES"

THE law of the cross must be the inner strength of a society that would realize brotherhood. Vicarious atonement! It has been the most scorned of all Christian doctrines. Yet it is superbly democratic, and the slow education of the race is bringing us to the point where it must come to its own, the culminating expression of the intuitions fostered by the New Order. Through Christian history the doctrine has been a germ of growth, training the selfish peoples to a dim and confused perception that no man liveth or dieth to himself, and that there are no depths, spiritual or physical, at which he lies powerless to help his brother.

—VIDA D. SCUDDER

Brotherhood in the Church

STUDENTS at Virginia Seminary have come forth with a plan to eliminate the "inequalities of opportunity and earning power" among themselves. They are endeavoring to "equate actual need with adequate income." With becoming humility they admit that such an idea is not new. They apparently have read the Book of Acts where goods were distributed from each according to his ability, "according as any man had need" in the Church, and are acting on it. They adopted a method of sharing the remuneration that is received by some of the students for such duties as supplying churches, teaching, running clubs. Each month an unmarried student pays into a common treasury 50% of this kind of income, after deducting travel expenses, with married students paying 10%. Out of the funds collected all students who are in need of help receive it. The whole thing is administered by a committee of the student body.

Inequities existing between income and need among the active and retired clergy of the Church could be lessened, perhaps abolished, in a spirit of brotherhood if some of the leads given by the students at Virginia were followed. There is of course also the wider application of society meeting the needs of people, but that we will leave to the reader to ponder.

The Human Race

STRINGFELLOW BARR, former president of St. John's College, Annapolis, and a good Episcopalian, has written a pamphlet, "Let's Join the Human Race," which you would do well to read, (University of Chicago Press 25c). It presents a challenge to the missionary endeavor of the Churches, but this is not, by any means, the main point of the tract.

Dr. Barr demolishes what he calls the false assumptions of America today and gives his answers to the problems of our world. He is not too hopeful that Point Four, as presently conceived, even though adequately financed, and administered by the UN and not merely the USA, would do the trick. He suggests instead a World Development Authority, a kind of worldwide TVA.

He wonders if the Churches might take the lead in its establishment since "if asked whether they were helping Russia or hurting her, they could answer—I trust without embarrassment—that they were acting under orders from Jesus Christ and were prepared to take whatever consequences might follow."

In the developing literature on international affairs, this pamphlet has the virtue of being lucid, intelligent, hopeful. We hope it will be widely read, as it already promises to be since we have learned that it is now being used in a number of colleges. Also we know of at least one bishop who has purchased copies for his clergy.

The Beatitudes—

Blessed Are They That Mourn

BY

BENJAMIN MINIFIE

Rector of Grace Church, Orange, and a Witness Editor

IN every congregation there are always some people to whom these words of Christ speak with special meaning and promise. And usually they are the very people who come with the most urgent sense of need. In the time of prosperity, when so far as we are concerned God's in his heaven and all's right with the world—we are often tempted to feel quite self-sufficient. We can manage very nicely on our own.

On the other hand, the tragic circumstances of life frequently bring a man to a full stop when they strike home. He comes to realize then that the life of even the greatest and wisest is a very frail thing, even as a vapor which tomorrow's wind may blow away forever. In the valley of the shadow of death we come back to the awareness that all of us without exception are very dependent creatures whose life is not our own. It is given and taken away as the Bible says.

Sometime ago a woman in the midst of an ordeal of sorrow and separation said to me, "I don't know what people do without the Church in times like this." I know what she meant, and so do you. A thorough-going skeptical point of view leaves one finally with nothing save a bleak and desolate void. If man is utterly alone in a vast, impersonal universe, if there is no God—then the ultimate prospect is exceedingly grim. Then extinction is probably the outcome of history, and the grave is the burial place of every love and every hope we cherish. Death mocks and frustrates all the dreams and prayers of mankind. If the sceptic is right, Macbeth's familiar words are all too true, and "life's but a walking shadow, a poor player that struts and frets his hour upon the stage, and then is heard no more: It is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."

Those were the words of a mad man, and anyone who comes to that philosophy of despair and defeat is either mad or sick. But is it not the logical conclusion of all thinking which rules Providence out of heaven and earth, and sets man alone over against the soulless immensities of time and space to which his little life matters not in the least?

Christian Position

WE of the Christian Church take our stand on the promise of one long since believed in and worshipped as the Christ. Some will say, "Promises are not enough. We want the truth." To which Christianity replies: "He is the truth." His was a life of such moral grandeur and absolute perfection that for 2000 years men, women and children have been saying: "This is the true life." This is the life which has inspired and nurtured the finest quality of manhood in all history. Those who have learned of Christ and given him their allegiance have always come to the place where they would say with conviction: "He is altogether true." He never fails. We can trust him. This is God confronting us in human life.

And so we come back to the beatitude which he spoke, blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. They shall be comforted because back of life there is a love so great that though the tide of death carry our dear ones out into the deep, neither they nor we can ever pass beyond his reach. In Eversley, England, there stands a small parish church hallowed by the memory of Charles Kingsley. He was a naturalist of some note. He was a poet of considerable fame. And he was a preacher of the gospel of hope. After long years in this very church he died. They buried him in a grave opposite the door of the church. Above the grave they placed a white cross of stone upon which his wife had three Latin words inscribed: Amamus. Amavamus. Amabimus. We love. We have loved. We shall love. That is the eternal assurance of true religion.

Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. Empty and seriously lacking is a religion which does not offer consolation and strength of soul amid the grief and tragedy of this world's lot. And yet, this should also be said, true religion is something more than balm for the brokenhearted. It is sometimes charged that Christianity is for those who can not take it. It is for the weak, for those who have been overwhelmed by misfortune and failure. But, lest we forget, the Christian faith began with a person who chose to die rather than run away and hide, who laid down his life rather than betray his friends and renounce the cause he came preaching.

The Whole Meaning

TOO much that passes today for Christianity seems to propose that we constantly use God to meet all our private demands on life. True, he is our hope and strength, a very present help in trouble. But the religion of the cross also proposes that we let God use us, that we become his faithful servants and seek to do his will in all the conditions and circumstances of this world. In other words, to borrow an old illustration, true religion is not meant to be a spare tire for emergencies only. It is the steering wheel to guide and direct our course throughout the long journey.

This brings us back again to our beatitude: Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted: It means just what it says, and yet it means more. The late Burton Scott Easton, a great scholar in the American Church, used to suggest that we might interpret Jesus' words in this manner: Blessed are they that mourn over things as they are, who feel deeply concerned and compassionate as they look at the world with all its tragic contradictions.

There are two occasions in the gospels where it says that Jesus was moved to tears. He wept with Mary and Martha after the death of Lazarus. We have been thinking here of such sorrow as that and remembering the consolation of Christ's words. He also wept one day over Jerusalem, saying, "If thou hadst known the things which belong to thy peace . . ." He was overcome with pity and sorrow as he looked down upon the city so blind and deaf to its true salvation. He yearned to make this God's city. He was to go all the way to save this city from the doom that must come if it refused . . . This is the other meaning of those words, blessed are they that mourn. The Quakers have a favorite expression for it, blessed are they that feel "concerned," concern about the community, concern over the injustice and intolerance which mar our common life. Blessed are they who are sensitive to the sufferings of others, who realize their own responsibility.

Somewhere I read about a Christian who went into a museum one day with an Oriental friend. They came to an impressive statue of Buddha. He was seated. His eyes were shut. His arms were folded. There was about him the calm of death. When the Oriental called the Christian's attention to this attitude of resignation, the latter spoke out, "But this is not my God. My God does not sit, but stands. His eyes are not closed, but open to the needs of the world. His arms are not folded, but outstretched in everlasting mercy. He is not calm in death, but living with a passionate love for his children . . ." Blessed are they that mourn, who like their Lord care mightily for righteousness upon the earth, for the least and the lost.

The words of this beatitude speak to us with special meaning today. We hear people saying they are tired of being asked for money. We see signs a-plenty of reaction. Even isolationism is being revived in our national life. We get the impression that the average man feels that he can buy off his responsibility with a few dollars here and there. Five dollars to the community chest releases him from all concern about the sore spots in the city. A token pledge to the Church takes care of that for another year. He sends his children off to Sunday school for an hour a week, and that takes care of their Christian education. He pays his taxes and that relieves him of all responsibility for the government of his community. Meanwhile he devotes all of his time to the pursuit of happiness and of money, getting and spending larger and larger sums, but actually investing but a pittance of himself and his substance in the things which make for the good society. We cannot go on and on like that without paying the price. Our churches become weak. Our children are lost to the Christian faith. Our homes lose their moral and spiritual foundations. Our schools become inferior. Our politics are taken over by men with a price. Our nation comes to lack greatness of character and leadership.

Make Yourself Count

THE good community, be it local or national, must needs have people who care in the widest sense, people who feel deep concern and act upon it, people who because they heed the moral demands of God go out into the world keenly aware of their responsibility. At this point someone always says, What can I do? What can one person do, or even a few of us, over against the vastly complex problems of this critical decade? I suppose the best answer it this:. No one else can ever do what you can do. Whoever you are, you can make your time, your money and your influence count for the kingdom of God. At the very least, you can refrain from ever speaking of or treating another person differently because he happens to belong to another race. You can, by the grace of God, really try to love your neighbor as yourself.

At the very least, you can be a peacemaker in word and deed, in your area of immediate influence and as a citizen of a modern state where there are millions of peace-wishers but all too few peace-makers. You can support and strengthen the Christian cause by standing by the Church and standing up to be counted every Sunday. You can raise your children with such a knowledge of the Bible and of the importance of Christ as will make them Christian men and women in the world of tomorrow.

I don't know where each of us should begin exactly but I do know that one mark of the Christian is to be found in these words from the Sermon on the Mount, Blessed are they that mourn. The Christian is not indifferent to the need of the world—interested only in his own salvation. He feels concern. He is compassionate and merciful. He realizes his responsibility. And I am very sure there is something that every soul can do, a contribution which no other person can make.

Christian Hope

JESUS' words are very hopeful. The bereaved shall be comforted. In truth, there is no other hope save this. In the end we must come back to God because there is no other place to go in our day of supreme need. But Jesus' words, blessed are they that mourn, also mean that the heart of God is sometimes broken by the sin of the world. Anyone who has spent any time on his knees and in the pages of the New Testament will understand something of the agony of soul of Christ weeping over a city which knew not the things which belonged to its peace. Blessed are they that mourn: Christ's faithful people who see plainly the tragedy of man's long refusal, who are outgoing in mercy and justice towards all of God's children, who labor night and day for the coming of the Kingdom of God.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION:

1. In the hour of grief what is the alternative to the Christian answer?
2. Is it not true that if a man is able to say the first article of the Creed, I believe in God, the Father Almighty—then surely and inevitably he will be able to say the final article, I believe in the Life Everlasting?
3. Is the religion of the cross primarily a matter of comfort and consolation, of "confident living" in an age of crisis, as so many are writing today?
4. What about this other thought of "mourning" as related to the idea of feeling concern and acting upon it?
5. In what areas do I or my parish church demonstrate real "concern" about matters of social injustice, segregation, national pride and self-righteousness, etc.?

The Mean and Generous in Religion

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON

Founder & First Editor of The Witness

THERE is nothing more tragic in life than to have a mean little man in a place of big opportunities. It is much better for all concerned to have a big wicked man in such a place.

The spiritual interests of this country have suffered more from the meanness of Christians than from the wickedness of sinners.

For a mean Christian not only fails to let his own light shine, but he so misrepresents Christ to those without that he alienates the sinner with a big heart from the household of faith. If Christians are like that he will have none of it. This tendency to meanness is, I am afraid, one of the temptations of religious people.

They become attached to Christ because they want to save their own souls and this seems to beget in them a saving disposition.

They want to save everything else besides their souls.

Economical Christians

These economical Christians remind me of the man who was so saving that he declined to give anything to the Church at all. He based his abstinence from giving on the ground that it did not cost the thief on the cross anything and he was assured of Paradise.

"The difference between you and the thief on the cross," said the indignant solicitor, "is that he was a dying thief and you are a living one."

The thief on the cross had nothing to give and the Lord accepted nothing.

The poor widow who gave her mite gave little in the aggregate but the Lord gave her unlimited credit in heaven. The rich man clothed in purple and fine linen had much but he did with it as he chose and he woke up in absolute destitution.

Judas tried to use our Lord for business purposes and he finally went out and hanged himself, and there wasn't much to hang when he did it.

As I was writing this on the train, I overheard a Mexican in overalls delivering his philosophy to the newsboy.

He said in his broken accent, which I will not attempt to repeat:

"In my life I have sometimes been bad and I have sometimes been good, but the only way to live is to keep on trying to be good—it is the only way in which you can win out.

"If a man wants to live to make money, he can make money, but he was born without any clothes and when he dies he takes no more with him than he had when he was born. He cannot win out unless he tries to do right."

Unexpected Wisdom

TRULY one hears wisdom from unexpected sources. It was only the other day on another train, that a young man who is a country school teacher said to me: "The mistake in our educational system in America is that a boy has a head, a hand and a heart, and the boy's heart gets too little attention."

I wish some of the professors in our great universities could sit at this country boy's feet; they would learn something that they hitherto have missed.

To train a man's head and hand without training his heart is to train a mean man, in most instances.

What is meanness? It would seem to have been derived etymologically from the word "me," and to describe the spiritual conviction of those who gave a selfish interpretation to the first commandment which might be paraphrased to read: "I will not have any other god but me," and in this sense they worship the lord their god with all their heart and soul and mind, and because their god is a very little god, they come out of the game of life with a very little heart and a very little mind and a very little soul.

For no man who worships himself can ever grow to be any bigger than himself.

Now many a man who thinks he is a Christian is really ignoring Christ in this world with a vague sort of hope that Christ will reward him in the next. I am sure that Christ will reward him just as he deserves.

Mean Religion

BUT all meanness is not money-meanness. That is perhaps the most evident and also the most sordid. A stingy Christian is such an evident hoax.

If we are a petty person, then we will have mean opinions about God and our god will be as meanly opinionated as we are.

It is a strange contradiction of terms but it is not infrequent to find mean persons who will be prodigal in financing a mean religion.

The difficulty in the average community is to find enough generous people to support a generous religion.

Some narrow partisan will give money profusely to propagate a religion which justifies his own pettiness and helps to belittle the big generous vision of the Lord Jesus.

That is one of the greatest troubles in America. Mean people have appropriated the gospel of Christ and are using it for the purpose of propagating a religion that might have been put forth by the Pharisees themselves.

And these evangelists of religious meanness are as bitter and intolerant of anyone who dares to differ with their petty principles as ever were the Pharisees when Christ broke their Sabbath day by rubbing wheat in his hands as he passed through a field of grain.

There are those who feel that unless the Church is achieving numerical results we are wasting money in helping to finance it. In this particular religion is like art. The success of the Church in any community is directly in proportion to the proportion of people who abhor meanness, especially in themselves. This reduces the available material in some very prosperous communities to a very small ratio.

There are plenty of petty religions in the field to satisfy the people of little vision. And if they can satisfy their own meanness why seek further?

Difficult Task

THE Church has a difficult task, especially in the smaller towns and villages to compete with those religions which are content to send men of small caliber to be prophets to little souls. These petty prophets frequently have great success where a true prophet having a real message would receive a prophet's reward.

Christ ever sought out generous souls and when he found them, he rejoiced greatly even if they were Samaritans or sinners.

There must be generous natures for Christ to find satisfactory disciples.

It is the epidemic of petty selfishness which is to be found today in high places which makes it so hard to secure a decent world.

As one studies the leading figures in English and American politics and compares them with the statesmen of the past, one is forced to admit that their personal morals are much better but their political visions are much smaller than their predecessors. One despairs of men who trim down every issue to its political assets. In my judgment, it is petty politicians who produce war.

When we put a pious two by four in a position of responsibility he is sure to break under the strain.

The little man in a big place is always sure to have two reactions. He is tremendously impressed with his own importance and he is very uncomfortable if his assistants know more than he does.

Men Too Little

THE MASTER had a great vision and there have been eras in which men have caught something of it, but as a rule men have been too little rather than too wicked to accept it.

"That ye may be able to comprehend," was the prayer of St. Paul, for if men are not able to comprehend the dimensions of Christ, they will never strive to attain the measure of his stature. We live in a society which is obsessed with the value of petty morals but is oblivious to the fact that Christ was a prophet of big dimensions.

I am more than satisfied that the message of this Church is good enough for us—I am not sure that we are big enough for it.

We prefer some little society in which the village barber can become an imperial potentate and the undertaker can be an exalted ruler. And we fancy that we are a democratic country and a Christian one.

Not that anyone objects to these or any other respectable citizen amusing themselves with these titles of the past, but the horror is that they should seriously regard it as a worthy substitute for the religion of Jesus Christ.

NOTE: We are presenting through Lent articles written in early numbers of THE WITNESS at the request of readers.

The Invitation of Lent

BY

STEPHEN F. BAYNE JR.

The Bishop of Olympia

THE next time anybody says to me, "I don't see much point to Lent," I will tell him what I really think—that nobody but a spiritual moron can fail to read the signs of the times. We are perishing from fatty degeneration of our principles because we have grown soft in our failure to discipline ourselves and to realize that the cult of violence is the cult of the weak, who are not free nor strong enough to be their own masters.

It is vigilant discipline alone which keeps man moving forward—the discipline of men and women who have sense enough to know that church is more important than golf and duty is more commanding than appetite and freedom is better than the pleasant and perpetual tyranny of bad habits and a lazy mind.

This painless rehearsing of conventional prejudices once or twice a year, which passes for religion . . . it is not that tepid stuff which will answer the dynamic violence in our world. It will be men and women of principle. God-fearing, disciplined, sober, masters of themselves, who know and have tested the temptations of the human spirit, who have gone through the wilderness with Christ and have come out with him free and strong enough to be gentle . . . it will be those people only who will be able to bear the tasks of the new world.

They will be the people who have discovered that to be a man is a strong and bitter drink, and that only disciplined spirits can take the cup of it in their hands.

They will be the people who, year by year, go into the wilderness of their own selves and their society with Christ, and find the first things again, and see the true values, and what they cost, and dedicate themselves anew to the imitation of Christ.

To them, and to them only, does the invitation of Lent come.

Funeral Floral Etiquette

BY

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

RECENTLY, a full-paid advertisement from a trade journal, "The Florists' Review," informed "Mr. Florist" that he could stop a tendency towards "Please omit flowers" in his funeral trade. As written, it was obvious that anyone who suggested that money, saved by omitting flowers, should be used for some more perpetual memorial—say a scholarship, or a chalice, or a new kneeling cushion—should be suitable quarry for Senator McCarthy and whatever publicity-wise congressman is now heading the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Since we ministers seem to be the chief adherents of the "please omit" campaign, we had best understand the strategy of the opposition. As the huckster who wrote the ad expresses it, this is a fight to the finish. Giving an old-line, between-half pep-talk to his team, he says this:

"Our associations, state, regional and national, as well as our trade papers, are fighting the 'please omit' menace, and more power to them." (Ed. note: In this day and age, of course, the word "menace" immediately conjures up visions of high walls, secretive meetings and home-made bombs stored in a corner of the rector's study.) "But they are many times removed from the buying public—only YOU have the actual personal contacts! YOU are the person who can mold public opinion, YOU can impress and influence your customers, YOU can back up the advertising and publicity put out by our floral associations, YOU can establish the rules of Floral Etiquette of Funerals."

What is the ad-man's counsel to Mr. Florist?

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

He is simply to establish the rules of floral funeral etiquette a la Emily Post. He says: "Your customers have never heard of such a thing as floral etiquette for funerals, but they will hear about it and be influenced by it—when you roll up your sleeves and get into the fight. Let your townsfolk know that the rules of etiquette must be followed in order that the funeral may be conducted with proper respect and reverence for the departed and with sympathy and understanding for those left behind. Nobody wants to commit an unpardonable social error."

To aid in the fight, a booklet has been issued which explains what is "right" and "wrong" under given circumstances. It reveals, says the ad-man, the symbolism of the various funeral pieces, and tells who should send them and who should not. "It clearly explains all floral funeral etiquette in unmistakable and AUTHORITATIVE terms."

And, then, to show that all is above-board, Mr. Florist is asked to order the booklet on his business stationery, or to give other evidence that he is connected with the floral trade, since "we do not want the confidential information in Parts 1 and 2 to get into the hands of the general public."

The whole business, of course, leaves us in a quandary. We do not want to commit an UNPARDONABLE social error, nor do we want to be looked on as a Boris Karloff-type menace when we suggest that our parishioners might put their money to better use than to bank our chancel with blooms when we try to bury a friend and neighbor with dignity. I suggest that, since Mr. Florist now has Valentine's Day and Mother's Day nestled securely in his cash-register, he leave my funerals alone. Some fine flowers on the altar are adequate and if my friends choose to commit the florists' grievous social error, I'll not only pardon them fast enough but sing a Te Deum also.

World-Wide

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

HOW wide is a globe? Of course there is no answer. There is no beginning and no ending to its surface. In that it is like the holy communion.

Every celebration of holy communion is world-wide. It is also limitless in time, extending back into the past and forward into the future without end.

Suppose you reach out this week both in time and space as you prepare for and take part in the service next Sunday.

Take a map and, looking at each country, bring to mind all you know of the coming and spread of the Christian faith there and of the people you know now living there. Remember that you and they are bound up as one in Christ.

Think back to the means by which you came to a knowledge of God in Christ. Remember the people of the past who have said the words "Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hosts" or "This is my body" or "Our Father, Who art in Heaven." And think too of the future and of your coming entrance into some new relation to God in heaven, realizing that all through all time we are bound up as one in Christ.

There is no beginning and no ending to this exercise of mind and spirit and no one can do it for you. I can tell you that wherever I go in mind or body I have yet to find a place or condition where he is not to be found. But each of us must continue to prove that truth for ourselves and learn how fully and faithfully and freely he is coming to us in every contact we make in holy communion.

Using Your Church

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS

DO you get the most out of your Church? So often people miss many opportunities and advantages right at hand. That is very true about the many advantages which the church offers its parishioners. Some people are lonely and wish they had more friends. They would readily make more friends if they would become active in some church group. One of the best ways to feel at home in a church or a community is to do some real work in it. Helping wash dishes at a church dinner is a fine way for a woman to get acquainted.

Someone says, "I wish I knew more about the Church!" Well, there are inquirer's classes from time to time in most parishes and the opportunity to learn is there, if one will just take it. The parish library has many helpful and interesting volumes waiting to be read.

Many people these days are carrying heavy burdens and they need the inner strength with which to carry them. The church provides the holy communion, and other services. There is immeasureable help to be had from church attendance, but often the people who need help the most are there so seldom. Occasionally a church member does not realize what his parish offers in the way of worship, study, fellowship, and service. He may even say "Why doesn't the church do thus and so?" when the church is already doing just that, but the parishioner hasn't found it out.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Wall. By John Hersey. Knopf. $4.

"Ages ago, somewhere on this earth, a Jew died. Is there anything unusual about a Jew dying? Surely, nobody can live forever."

Noach Levinson, author, historian, patriot and busy-body, quotes the words of the East European Jewish poet, Peretz, on the evening of April 24, 1943. He speaks to bolster the courage—or at least, the will—of the pitiful remnant left in the Warsaw ghetto to fight the Nazi, the Pole, the Ukrainian and the Lithuanian.

He speaks to people shut up behind a wall which they made with their own hands under the watchful guns of German and Polish sentries. His listeners are dead. Oh, they breathe, they smoke, they eat, they chuckle—but they are dead. Some 250,000 of their relatives and neighbors have already been taken to the square, piled row on row in box-cars and carted to the incise, efficient flame of the crematoria. His hearers know that to lose is to die and to win is to die. So they have chosen to fight.

Ugly and sensitive Noach Levinson tries to buck them up. He speaks about Peretz and closes with these words:

" . . . Now, I am not advocating that we shut ourselves up in a spiritual ghetto. On the contrary, we should get out of such a ghetto. But we should get out as Jews, with our own spiritual treasures. We should interchange, give and take, but not beg.

"Ghetto is impotence. Cultural cross-fertilization is the only possibility for human development. Humanity must be the synthesis, the sum, the quintessence of all national cultural forms and philosophies."

Later, following the battle, as forty-three—yes, just 43—crouch in a sewer waiting to escape, Levinson converses with one of the younger members of the Jewish Fighter Organization. This tired, worn and stinking human says:

" . . . There are two ways of looking at the wall between Jews and Gentiles: from the inside and from the outside: there is much to be said on both sides. On the one hand, it can be said that the actual masonry is done by the Jews: the Jews mix the mortar and lay the bricks and complain about the wall, but are sometimes glad to have it. On the other hand, it is the goyim who oblige the Jews to build the wall and who supply most of the materials for it; and they are very smug about its existence: without ever going inside it, they assume it is better to be outside and to keep the Jews inside . . .

"Do you remember the time when you and Berson and I exchanged mementos? I remember I was talking that day about tearing down sections of the wall, and I told you I was surprised how easy it was to take down. That was true. It was amazing. And yet this, too, must be said: it is harder to take the wall down than to put it up. When you are building a wall, the mortar is soft. When you come to demolish it, the mortar has become dry and rigid and adhesive. You have to work with cold steel. Nevertheless, the work can be done. One can even be surprised how easy it is. Of course, as I said at the time, the Germans may have given us rotten lime . . . "

In my own mind there is little doubt that John Hersey, in writing The Wall (Alfred A. Knopf, New York, 1950), has written one of the most horrible and most pungent novels of this half-century. In the light of our history, he has certainly picked a theme that, to our shame, does justice to our enlightened era. You, as well as the world's statesmen, can read it with benefit.—W. B. S. Jr.

Martyrdom and Miracle. By Harry Joshua Stern. Bloch. $3.00.

A volume of sermons and addresses by Rabbi Stern of Montreal, in which the constant overtone is the tragic martyrdom of millions of European Jews. The "miracle" is the rebirth of Israel as a state.

Sagebrush Circuit. By Kendrick Strong. Macmillan. $2.50.

An interesting account of ten months work in a Western missionary parish, accomplished by two young men who set out to evangelize 3000 miles of sheep and cattle country. It is an interesting book all right, but one wishes that they had put in a longer time.

A Bishop of the Great Plains. By George Allen Beecher. Church Historical Society. $3.00.

This is a fine autobiographical sketch by the former Bishop of Western Nebraska, concerning the time from his ordination in 1892 to his retirement in 1943. His first mission church was in a parish which covered approximately 5,000 square miles—and life here was lived in the traditional frontier style. Bishop Beecher and his wife had many interesting, and often even thrilling, experiences. A very fine record of the development of the church on the Great Plains.—J. M.

The Moral Life and the Ethical Life. By Eliseo Vivas. University of Chicago Press. $6.00.

After a searching criticism of current naturalistic moral philosophies, the author develops the twin themes of his title in chapters dealing with the resolution of a moral perplexity, the source of moral authority, the justification of a moral decision, the discovery of the ethical and the primacy of the person. Here is a book for the tough-minded, designed to stimulate profound reflection. However, Professor Vivas insists, the ethical life is not a matter of philosophy but of the way we treat our fellows. "The ethical man will suffer evil rather than inflict it; he will uproot desire rather than risk wronging others by satisfying it." The worst evil one can inflict on another is to destroy his humanity, his status as a person, but this involves previously destroying one's own. Nor can the Christian ethic be followed by any but the actively religious Christian, whose behavior toward his fellows is determined by his attitude toward God.—O. J. F. Seitz Faith Can Master Fear. By G. Ernest Thomas. Revell. $2.00.

A study of the various fears that overwhelm people, and sometimes almost paralyze them. The author shows how faith can be effective in overcoming these fears.

The Bible and the Christian Faith.
IV. Poets, Wise Men, and Seers.
By L. C. Latham.
Reference Book, by C. B. Firth.
VI. From Bible to Creed.
By J. K. Mozley.
Reference Book, by C. B. Firth.
Ginn & Co., London.

The fourth and sixth volumes of a six volume series have been published to meet the need for books on religious instruction for the English schools. The reference volumes or teacher's guides have been written by the general editor, Catherine B. Firth. These small volumes are designed for younger classes than the "Primer of Christianity" published by Oxford and are most useful.—Sydney Temple

The Way to Power and Poise. By E. Stanley Jones. Abingdon - Cokesbury. $1.25.

A devotional book with a page of meditation and prayer for every day in the year. As for its high quality, one needs only to mention the author's name.

Twenty Answers. By D. S. Wallace-Madrill. Macmillan. 35 cents.

A capital little "pocket armoury for the layman"—answers to religious questions which usually get stated in such a way as to browbeat the unwary. Conversational in style.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

BISHOP TUCKER PLANS TO RETIRE

★ Bishop Beverley D. Tucker told the convention of the diocese of Ohio, meeting January 31 in Cleveland, that he plans to retire on February 4, 1952.

He stated that his chief motive for announcing his resignation at this early date was his "complete and whole-hearted confidence in our bishop coadjutor as well qualified and prepared to take over the leadership of the diocese." The convention reluctantly approved his action after the bishop turned down appeals by Bishop Burroughs and the delegates that he reconsider and withhold his resignation until the canonical age of 72. In preparation for his retirement, Bishop Tucker announced that he was assigning additional duties to Bishop Burroughs; viz., the administration of the department of missions and the canonical duty of appointing clergymen in charge of missions and aided parishes. Bishop Burroughs since his consecration in November 1949 has been administering the departments of Christian education, Christian social relations and field and publicity.

The annual addresses of both bishops showed that the diocese has reached new heights in membership, number of clergy and income. It was noted with interest that 1950 confirmations took place in the year 1950, of whom 160 were from the Roman Church. Bishop Burroughs speaking of the successful fall canvass cited the fact that 6 parishes had accepted more than their assigned quotas for 1951, 26 met their quotas, 27 missed the mark by slight amounts and 58 maintained their 1950 level. On the basis of this encouraging sign, the convention adopted a Diocesan Budget for 1951 of $45,567 and a $210,000 Missionary Budget, of which $110,000 will go to the National Church.

The convention also approved several changes in the canons and referred a resolution of the Woman's Auxiliary for representation on vestries to the committee on canons for study and report at the next convention. Dr. Gordon K. Chalmers gave a report on the work of Kenyon College and Bexley Hall which was received with enthusiasm. The Convention adjourned after the presentation of the Missionary program by Archdeacon Wonders.

E. E. F. MEETING IN OHIO

★ Some fifty clergy, laymen and lay women gathered at Cleveland's central Y. M. C. A. for a pre-diocesan convention meeting of Ohio's chapter of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. Following dinner, the Rev. John R. Pattie, rector of St. Christopher's Church, Gates Mills, presided as toastmaster. He introduced the congenial and venerable Donald Wonders, archdeacon of the diocese, who related the early history of the Evangelical Fellowship in Ohio. The chairman then presented Mr. Frederic Sterbenz, foreign affairs editor of The Cleveland Press and vestryman of St. Paul's Church, Cleveland Heights, who spoke on the evangelical movement from the layman's point of view. Following his talk the same subject was treated from the clergyman's point of view by the Rev. Oscar J. F. Seitz, professor at Bexley Hall. The new officers elected for the coming year are: president — The Rev. Oscar J. F. Seitz, Bexley Hall, Gambier; vice-president, the Rev. James F. McElroy, St. Mark's Church, Toledo; and secretary-treasurer, the Rev. William S. Brown, St. Barnabas' Church, Bay Village.

GOLDEN ALM BASIN GOES ON TOUR

★ When the national executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary met in December 1949 it decided on what was considered by some a startling innovation: The famous golden alms basin, a gift to our Church from Oxford University, traditionally used for the triennial presentation of the United Thank Offering, may be loaned to dioceses and missionary districts for use at diocesan and provincial meetings. Careful rules were drawn up to protect the alms basin and assure its safety in travel and its return to Church headquarters without possibility of injury.

During 1950 the basin visited Montana and Arkansas, and at time of writing it is in Tennessee. The effect of its visit from an inspirational standpoint is indicated by a letter from Mrs. R. Bland Mitchell, whose husband is Bishop of Arkansas.

Mrs. Mitchell said in part, "It was really wonderful to have the golden alms basin for our convention and annual meeting and I can assure you we made full use of it. The bishop used it, of course, at the opening service. After the two regular offerings we had the diocesan presentation with four young girls in white with blue veils preceding the branch UTO treasurers with the certificates. Then the basin was on view in the narthrex of the church immediately after the service and during the luncheon which followed, always under the care of two people. At other times it was in the vault at the parish house. It greatly enhanced our presentation service and many came up to view it at close range. It was photographed with the girls and with me and these were used for publicity."

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

WORLD COUNCIL ISSUES A WARNING

A warning against excessive rearmament was sounded by the executive committee of the World Council of Churches, meeting in Paris, and is embodied in a letter sent to 158 member Churches in 43 countries. Declaring that rearmament has "become the main and general emphasis everywhere" the letter says that "its declared purpose is peace, but it can in reality endanger both peace, security and social justice." The letter states that "it is the duty of all Churches to champion peace with justice" and it appeals to Christians to "use every influence we can to press for the objective of bringing all national armaments under international control."

NEW ZEALAND DEAN WORKS FOR PEACE

Dean Charles W. Chandler of Hamilton, New Zealand, is to be a member of the World Peace Committee, fully aware that the charge is made that it is a "Communist-inspired" set-up. "I am not a Communist, but I have been identified with many peace movements over half a lifetime, and I would feel more than a traitor if I failed to identify myself with anybody traveling the same road. My only approach to the problem of world peace is the Christian approach."

He plans to attend a meeting of the committee in Europe this month and promised that on his return he would give "a completely frank estimate of the committee's worth."

POLISH PRIESTS HIT THE HIERARCHY

A conference of pro-government priests held in Warsaw passed a resolution denouncing the hierarchy for opposing the government and asked them to condemn priests who "act unpatriotically."

WEIGH CHRISTIAN STRATEGY ON COMMUNISM

Prof. John C. Bennett of Union Seminary was a leader at a conference of 44 Church leaders from Burma, Thailand and Malaya to consider how to deal with Communism. Conclusions: that Christian leaders in all countries need to understand Communist principles in order to give "intelligent leadership"; Christian strategy toward Communism is a matter of "desperate urgency" in countries which are threatened with Communist inroads.

PILGRIMS PLEDGE FIGHT AGAINST COMMUNISM

Close to 2,000 persons made a pilgrimage to Canterbury Cathedral where they dedicated themselves to fight against "the evil and godless forces of Communism and materialism." The leaders were Lord Craigavon and Lieut. Gen. Sir Gifford Martel.

POLISH REGIME MAY TRY BISHOP

Polish police authorities have begun an official inquiry which may lead to a public trial of R.C. Bishop Kaczmarek of Kielce on charges of anti-state activities. Radio commentators indicate that such a trial would aim to prove that the hierarchy has not abided by the terms of the Church-state agreement made last April.

URGES EXPLANATION OF REARMAMENT

Archdeacon O. H. Gibbs-Smith of London, preaching at St. Paul's, urged the British government to issue a statement "pledging the British people before the world never to use arms aggressively but to hold them in trust to preserve peace." He added that the statement should pledge that if war is forced upon Britain, it would not "seek or accept territorial acquisitions or economic advantage."

NIEMOELLER APPROVES PEACE STATEMENT

Martin Niemoeller expressed full approval of the recent "proclamation against a German rearmament and for a general conclusion of peace," issued by a group of Germans who are opposed to the policy of the West German government. "It is a great satisfaction to me," he added, "that opposition against any armament adventure grows despite the muzzling of the press."

ETHIOPIAN PRIMATE CONSECRATED

Representatives of the Ethiopian and Egyptian governments attended the consecration in Cairo of Archbishop Basilios, first native to be primate of the Ethiopian Coptic Church. All previous primates have been Egyptians named by the Patriarchate of Alexandria.

CHURCH PEACE UNION HOLDS SEMINAR

Ralph Barton Perry, eminent philosopher, gave the first lecture on February 6 in the series of seminars on world affairs sponsored by the Church Peace Union. He said that "the safety and prosperity of each depends on the safety and prosperity of all since we are living in a world that is not only various in its phases of social development and interconnected part with part but is permeated with conflicting forces."

He urged a positive approach to the present situation by learning "to speak of civil and cultural freedom in Western Europe, and of national and social freedom in Eastern Europe and Asia. Our faith must be a capacity to face facts without flinching and to continue to persevere for international peace, even though that goal apparently becomes remote or even unattainable."

CHURCH NOT HIT BY CONTROLS

Churches and other religious, educational, and non-profit institutions are not being seriously affected thus far by construction controls imposed by the national production administration. No permission is required to construct a church intended solely for worship. When there are other facilities, such as a dining room, auditorium, recreation halls, parish houses, permits are required. Rectories may be built without a permit.

OHIO PASTORS WARN AGAINST GROWING MILITARIZATION

A "growing and patriotic concern over the growing militarization of our country" was voiced by the annual Ohio pastors' convention, meeting in Columbus. The clergymen called on the government to "stem and to curtail the authority and the control of the military establishment over the civilian affairs of our life." The convention also went on record as opposing universal military training, the lowering of the draft age to 18, and extension of the time of service beyond that not set by law. Support of the UN was urged, with the recommendation made that China be dropped as a permanent member of the Security Council, with Communist China admitted to the Assembly.

R. C. BISHOP HITS AT SOUTH'S UNAPPLIED-DEMOCRACY

William T. Mullor, R. C. bishop of Covington, Ky., declared at a meeting at Columbia, S. C. that the "Unapplied democracy" of the South is an obstacle to international good will. He urged "full citizenship for all, regardless of creed, color, or race" and added that " too long, inadequate provision for education and racial injustices, have bred poverty, prejudice, violence and backwardness." He said that other nations that are sincerely inquiring about the American way of life were not being impressed and would not be unless we made our democracy more meaningful.

'HOLY CORNERS' CHURCHES HAVE A GET-TOGETHER

For the 21st year the "Holy Corners" congregations of St. Louis held their annual get-together. This time they included women and young people in the round of dinner and conferences. The three churches, located on opposite corners, are Temple Israel, Second Baptist, St. John's Methodist. The get-together idea was launched originally by Rabbi F. M. Isserman who recalled that the intersection was given the name "Holy Corners" by drivers of rubber-neck buses some 35 years ago.

New Carols and Songs for Children

By William Grime

This book will be welcomed by clergy, teachers and parents. It meets a long-felt need of primary and junior children.—Churchways.

My family and I have played and sung our way through "New Carols and Songs." We had a delightful time. All children and the young in heart will enjoy them. The book answers a very real need and I hope it will catch the attention of parents and teachers everywhere.—Bishop Nelson M. Burroughs—Coad., Ohio.

I shall recommend this book to G. F. S. leaders who work with juniors. These songs are delightful and so needed in our Church. — Mrs. Elwood Haines, Exec. Sec.—Girls Friendly Society.

THE PRESS

Edited by
GEORGE MacMURRAY

DON'T BLAME IT ON THE GIRLS: There is a shortage of pastors in most denominations, and there are many guesses as to what keeps men out of the ministry. Some say it is low salaries. Others blame it on the girls. But a study of 1978 ministerial students conducted by the rural church department of Drew University at Madison, N.J., shows some interesting facts. The girls encourage rather than discourage men from entering the ministry. Low salary is a retarding factor in only one case out of twenty-five.

The real reason men do not enter the ministry is because no one has ever shown them how or why. No one has counselled or guided them.

The Drew report covers forty-eight states and twenty denominations. The report shows that 83.5 per cent of the factors which keep men out of the ministry is simply that no person, no organization, no pastor, and no parent is seeking to enlist them.

The Southern Churchman which brought this report to our attention in an editorial quotes what it calls a representative statement from one of the students. We pass it on to parsons who are perplexed over the clergy shortage.

"My decision to enter the ministry would never have been made had not the pastor suggested it to me. He planted the idea. I think that most men must have it suggested to them, especially young men."

SPIRITUAL HITCHHIKERS: Many of the states have outlawed 'hitchhiking'. We know about those individuals who thumb their way along the road seeking to bum a ride and to be transported at someone else's expense. They have no sense of obligation or responsibility.

The Church in Georgia carries this idea of hitchhiking over into the Church.

Every church has individuals with a similar point of view whom we might call spiritual hitchhikers. They want the church maintained so it will be available for their use when they happen to need it. They expect to be carried along on the membership lists without sharing in the upkeep of the church through their regular pledge.

With all of which we agree. Every parish has its share, or more than its share, of spiritual hitchhikers. There ought to be a law.

HILARITY: The Church of England Newspaper makes a good point in reminding its readers of the real meaning of hilarity.

Hilarity is a word that has suffered somewhat in the usage, for it has tended to become associated with the idea of riotous behaviour. Etymologically it is expressive of abundant cheerfulness, a quality of which the world can never have too much. Moreover, it is a New Testament word. Writing to the Christians at Corinth, St. Paul exhorted them to be hilarious givers, "not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver."

The suggestion implicit in that exhortation is that the hilarious giver is he who gives lavishly; it is explicit in the preceding verse, wherein the Apostle declares that "he which soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully." Giving, whether it be of love, service or in kind, is the one sphere in which prodigality is a virtue, and it is both rewarding and enriching.

EXTENDED COVERAGE

What does it cover?

The Extended Coverage endorsement to a fire insurance policy includes protection against damage by windstorm, cyclone, tornado, hail, explosion, riot, riot attending a strike, civil commotion, aircraft, smoke, and motor vehicles; and insurance must be for the same amount as the fire insurance, as the term "Extended Coverage" implies.

Over a three-week period THE CHURCH FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION received from policyholders over 200 reports of damage to Church property resulting from the great Northeast Storm of November 25th and 26th. Immediate steps were taken to speed adjustments of claims and make possible early restoration of damaged properties.

Often Extended Coverage is requested by property owners who think only of windstorm insurance, and the other hazards this insurance covers are overlooked. Smudge by faulty oil burning heating equipment, heavy damage by explosion of accumulated gas—these are examples of losses not covered by a fire insurance policy. They are covered, however, by Extended Coverage. The rate for this added protection is very low in most localities.

If you wish a quotation on the cost of Extended Coverage — or windstorm or fire — insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with your Church, just clip this advertisement, fill in the information listed below, and mail to us, so that we can send to you an application form:

RICHARD P. McCLINTOCK
Rector of the Messiah, Auburndale, Mass.

I am not a letter-to-the-editor writer by habit. I am but a mere life time Episcopalian who desires our Church to be listed as Protestant no matter whence the title was first derived. As long as it has breath I want my Church to protest against autocratic power placed in the hands of men, a priest ridden people, an acceptance of magic and superstition in religion, and unnecessary ritual which obscures the basic demand that God makes upon all his creatures to renounce evil, to trust God, and to live according to his will and commandments. I, for one, feel that the protest of the A.C.U. to the newly formed National Council of Churches asking for separate listing in a class by ourselves suggests to the world that we think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think. (Witness Jan. 11).

In The Witness for January 18 you show your customary sense of fair play by giving full coverage to the A.C.U. After reading your quotation from the by-laws of that organization it sounds to me like a "Fifthcolumn" which is being organized to overthrow our beloved Church. The way I read my Prayer Book, the catechism (and office of instruction) and the articles of religion limit the sacraments (both Protestant and Catholic) to two—baptism and the holy communion commonly called "The Supper of the Lord." By the way "Eucharist" and "Mass" may be popularly understood nicknames for the Lord's Supper but I do not find them used as such in the P.B. The Reformers bled and died to exclude these other important states of life from the Sacrament status. If they were mistaken and hasty in their revisions let us face up to it honestly and revise our Prayer Book rather than to make it of none effect by tacitly admitting medieval practices to our ritual and our language and justifying the same by an appeal to "catholic tradition."

CLARKE S. GORDON
Layman of Manchester, Conn.

In times like these the efforts of all men of goodwill are needed to preserve the peace and thwart the warmakers. For this reason it is interesting to note the formation of a new group, dedicated to the peace movement. It is headed by Dr. Jerome Davis, of West Haven, Conn., formerly of the Yale Divinity School, and Dr. Willard E. Uphaus, director of the Religion and Labor Foundation, of New Haven, Conn., and is named, "Promoting Enduring Peace."

Let us hope that this new organization will be successful in preserving the peace and thus preventing the destruction of our civilization. Its utmost efforts will be necessary to achieve this end.

MRS. PETER I. LAWTON
Laywoman of Newburyport, Mass.

I am not renewing my subscription. In a quite recent article (Jan. 18) all who were not of the "fundamental" faith were invited to leave the Episcopal Church. The editors did not in any way dissent. Don't you even want our money? And what is the stand on thought control? Moreover, increasingly, we get articles lauding so-and-so, "Episcopalians"—laudable people and efforts, no doubt. but just whose is the Power and the Glory? To my mind we need a redistribution of the Way and the Trust, in new wine bottles, with the emphasis on the teaching of Jesus, instead of theorizing about him.

MABEL M. REESE
Churchwoman of Baltimore

After reading The Witness for Jan. 18 I am writing to ask if you will give us some assurance of the fact that the Protestant Episcopal Church is still functioning?

THE STORY OF ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI

By Elizabeth Grierson

The "Church Times" describes this book as "admirably suited for children;" but all young people will appreciate and enjoy this delightfully written short biography of the gentle founder of the Greyfriars, who " . . . more than any other man, moulded his life on the pattern of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Illustrated Price, $1.50

CURIOSITY SHOP

Some Church Customs Explained

By S. G. Thicknesse

An extremely interesting little book containing twenty-six chapters and eight full-page photographic plates, which answers in an engaging manner all sorts of questions having to do with religious customs and usages—from 'What is a perpetual curate?' to 'Why is the lectern an eagle?' Price, $1.05

By Lydia S. Eliott

A tale of the Holy Land in our Lord's lifetime. The children concerned mingle with the crowds gathered to hear Christ teaching or witness His healing work, and soon come to trust and love Him and to realize His love for them. Especially recommended for children from eight to twelve years of age.

Illustrated Price, $1.50

THE CHRISTIAN MYSTERIES

By Bede Frost

This book is a guide to the Christian religion in terms of its supernatural character. The subjects treated are the creation of the world, the nature of man, the existence of evil, the Incarnation, the Redemption, the Church, the Christian Life, the Mass, the Sacraments, the Future Life and the Holy Trinity. Price, $2.55

DOCTRINE, DUTY and DEVOTION

A Three-Year Course of Teaching Sermons

By G. H. Midgley

Providing a body of regular, consistent and balanced teaching of the Faith that preachers will find of the greatest help in sermon preparation. "The book will help those priests who wish to instruct and edify as well as exhort, and so serve their people by the strengthening of Christian fundamentals."

There is only ONE Oxford India Paper

NEARLY a century ago Oxford University Press introduced a book paper of such extraordinary qualities that it has ever since been the criterion of quality.

KNOWN to generations of book-lovers as Oxford India Paper, it is famous throughout the world for its unique strength, thinness and opacity. Prayer Books printed on this super-fine paper are just one-third as thick as those on standard book paper—yet Oxford India Paper is actually stronger than regular book paper.

IMITATIONS occasionally are produced, accompanied by claims that they are as good as Oxford India Paper. These claims only confirm the unrivaled excellence of the Oxford product. Recent scientific tests, as a matter of fact, reveal that the strength of Oxford India Paper is many times that of imitations.

THE secret of Oxford India Paper is as secure today as when it was first discovered. No one person, even at Oxford, knows the complete formula.

THERE is now, as ever, only one paper of Oxford India quality —the beautiful superthin paper in de luxe Oxford Prayer Books.

Work Planned In Far East Is Postponed Because of Unsettled Conditions

By ANDREW M. VAN DYKE

★ At the meeting of the National Council at Seabury House, February 13th-15th, the major concern was the budget for the year. Expectations from the dioceses and missionary district totaled $4,252,062 as against a quota of $4,934,199. The expectations are $13,000 less than the amount received in 1950, so that it was necessary to adopt a budget that was over $600,000 less than that proposed by the General Convention, but the same as for 1950. Bishop Hobson said that he thought "holding our own is very encouraging" because we could reasonably expect less from the fall campaign in 1950 than from the one in 1949 and the special appeal in March of 1950. He was able to speak with authority on the subject of stewardship, for as bishop of Southern Ohio he is the leader of a diocese that has pledged in 1951 to give $115,750 on a quota of $82,458, a record not even closely challenged anywhere else in the Church.

Trust Funds

Treasurer Robert Dill is still recuperating from illness and the assistant, James Whitney, reported for him. In the 626 trust funds held by the Council there is a book value totaling $15,310,000, an increase of about $464,000 during 1950. The market value of the securities exceeds $16,400,000, and the interest earned in 1950 was 4.63% as against 4.06% in 1949.

Bishop Nash, in speaking for the department of Christian education, received the support of the Council in changing certain nomenclature within the department, particularly in the shift from the "editorial board" to "division of curriculum development."

Bishop Hart and Mrs. Chapman spoke glowingly of the work of the team in Florida sent out by the leadership training division, which is interpreting the work of the whole Council at the grass roots.

Time at future Council meetings was requested by a number of groups. The committees to consider diocesan quotas, under Bishop Dandridge, is to be given the opportunity at the April meeting for report. Christian education requested two hours at the October meeting for a full presentation. The college work division is to have an hour at the April meeting. Bishop Sherrill was able to say that he becomes somewhat confused by all the words like Council, and department and division. In the National Council of Churches he stated that the divisions are the top group, and departments are part of them, while in the National Council, the opposite is true. It is almost, he remarked "like patting your head and rubbing your stomach."

Utah & North Dakota

The Rev. George Weiland presented a statistical summary of the church in the missionary districts of Utah and North Dakota. A full survey of the former will be ready by the time Bishop-elect Watson is consecrated, but in the latter will take a much longer time. It was interesting to note that in the ten year period from 1939 - 1949 there was no increase in the number of parishes in either district and while North Dakota gained one mission station, Utah lost one. Confirmations in the same period totaled 1,515 in North Dakota, but the number of communicants increased only by 9 to 2,985. In Utah there were 1,402 confirmed, and communicant strength showed a gain of 514 to the number of 2,779. Appropriations by National Council to North Dakota were in excess of $200,000 during the ten years, and in Utah slightly less.

Weiland also told of the allocations made from the emergency loan fund. Requests of over two and a half million dollars were received from various dioceses for the million and a half dollars available. After disposition had been made of the funds, further requests came from other dioceses to the amount of $330,000. Some of the allocations made were to the dioceses of Los Angeles, $175,000; California, $126,000; Texas, $100,000; Virginia, $100,000; Olympia, $90,000; South Florida, $90,000; Long Island, $75,000; Arizona, $75,000.

Roanridge

The Rev. Gresham Marmion of the town and country division introduced Mr. William Cochel, layman of West Missouri, who with his wife made possible the rural training center at Roanridge. Mr. Cochel spoke with a most moving simplicity. He said that his life has had two inter-

Only Male Member of the Women's Auxiliary

★ The only male member of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Church in the United States, J. Virgil Pugh, 77, pictured on the cover, will celebrate his 13th year as chairman of the altar guild of Epiphany church, Los Angeles, this year.

As chairman of the altar guild, a high and responsible parish office, usually held by some outstanding woman of the congregation, Mr. Pugh is responsible for selecting, protecting and replacing altar cloths, vestments and equipment of the altar, as well as seeing that flowers and candles are always fresh, available and in place for every service.

The unusual honor was accorded to Mr. Pugh by the women of his parish in recognition of his devotion to his wife and, through her to the work of the church. Shortly after his wife became totally blind, Mr. Pugh sold the grocery store he had built up and dedicated himself to being his wife's "eyes," thus enabling her to carry on the active church work she loved.

He guided her to and from the many church meetings and diligently helped her continue her work as chairman of the altar guild, patiently waiting for her to finish her meetings and advising her on colors and arrangements on the altar. On the death of his wife in 1938, in honor of his devotion to her and his dedication to his wife's work in the church, the women voted to accept him into full membership in their exclusively feminine organization, an honor never before accorded any other male, clergyman or layman, and to honor him by electing him to the office of chairman of the altar guild which his wife had filled until her death.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF PHI SIGMA

★ The Phi Sigma fraternity, a national Church order for high school boys, held its annual convention at St. Andrew's, Longmeadow, Mass., where a new chapter was initiated, organized by the rector, the Rev. Charles Havens Jr. Presiding over the meetings was the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, national director, who is the rector of Grace Church, Jamaica, N. Y., and a member of the Witness editorial board. Bjorn Rossing of Jamaica was elected president of the fraternity for the coming year.

SALINA ORGANIZED FOR ACTION

★ Eight avenues of activity are being forwarded by the social relations department of the district of Salina, under the chairmanship of the Rev. Robert H. Mize Jr. The following sub-committees have been set up: Displaced persons, the Rev. Henry Choquette of Norton, chairman; Clothing for Europe, Mrs. Nell McCabe, Norton, chairman; Peace, W. H. Dawley, Salina, chairman; Mental health and educational needs of children, Wilbur Mueller, Salina, chairman; work with St. Faith's house, Deaconess Avelyn Seymour, Salina, chairman; work with St. John's School, Brother Dunstan Raphael, Salina, chairman; work with St. Francis homes, Mrs. Mary Fravel, Kingsley, chairman.

LAY WORKER HONORED

★ The 500 delegates attending the convention of the diocese of Los Angeles gave a rising vote of thanks and appreciation to Mrs. Catheryn E. Davis, who resigned as secretary of the diocese after 42 years of service, under three bishops. She has a genius for finances and for many years assisted with and directed all of the important financial affairs of the diocese, so that Bishop Bloy, in announcing her resignation, was able to say, "she has saved the diocese thousands and thousands of dollars."

CUBA ANNOUNCES REAL NEEDS

★ Ten more priests, fifteen church buildings and eleven rectories are needed now by the Church in Cuba, according to Bishop Blankingship in reviewing the work of the past year. Only two candidates, both Cuban, are in sight for ordination this year. Other pressing needs are in connection with two of the schools which play so large a part in the Church there; a dormitory for St. Paul's, Camaguey, and an addition to Trinity School, Maron.

At five of the places where churches are needed, some funds are in hand toward new buildings, but not nearly enough at present costs. Land has been bought for the school at Moron. Part of the land is property which the mission needed some years ago and was unable to buy at that time. As the land would have been lost to the Church if not bought then, the priest in charge bought it and has held it for the Church. The land has since doubled in value but he has accepted only the amount he paid for it.

Since many British West Indians are leaving Cuba, returning to their native islands, and many others go over completely into the Spanish-speaking community in Cuba, the Church's work among British West Indians makes no great gain. The Church still has, however, and probably will continue to have, twenty-five active British West Indian congregations. All the Spanish-speaking West Indian missionary dioceses, of the Episcopal Church, for many years have had to face this responsibility, i.e., pastoral care of people from the British islands. They have been mostly Anglicans. The British bishops have wanted to provide it, but have rarely ever had enough staff to do so adequately.

Many Americans have left Cuba in recent years but the Church continues to have work among those remaining. The Cathedral congregation in Havana has more than 300 families. Smaller congregations are in Santiago and La Gloria.

Cuban congregations, Spanish-speaking, of course, make up the greater part of the Church. The national Cuban Woman's Auxiliary has thirty-seven active branches. All the officers are Cuban. Activities of the Cuban Young People's Service League during the year have included one national meeting and several regional. In Havana a considerable number of university students attend the Spanish services at the cathedral.

UNION SERVICES IN NEW YORK

★ Episcopal Churches in lower Manhattan are sponsoring union service on Wednesday evenings in Lent. The Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector of the Ascension, was the preacher last evening at a service at Calvary; the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, preaches at the Ascension on the 28th; the Rev. Worcester Perkins of the Holy Communion is at St. Mark's on March 7th, and the services end on March 14th with a service at Grace Church when the Rev. Richard E. McEvoy will preach.

1950 GIVING BROKE ALL RECORDS

★ Last year the Church gave more for the support of the general Church program than in any other year in its history, reports Treasurer Russell E. Dill. The total received was $4,265,774, which was about $100,000 more than the total pledged. The diocese of New York paid the largest amount, $378,977; Pennsylvania was second with $293,474, and Massachusetts third with $262,249. There were ten dioceses making payments of over $100,000: Connecticut, Long Island, Maryland, Chicago, Michigan, Ohio, Southern Ohio, Newark, Los Angeles, Washington.

ALL ACCEPT ELECTION

★ The three clergymen elected bishops of missionary districts at the recent meeting of the House of Bishops have accepted: the Rev. Richard R. Emery of St. Paul's, Minneapolis, for North Dakota; Dean Richard A. Watson of St. Mark's, Seattle, for Utah; the Rev. A. Ervine Swift of the Philippines, for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

ests—rural people, and the Church. These two he has combined at Roanridge. He felt that a clergy trained in agriculture was needed, if for no other reason than that they could talk to farm people and know the "difference between a Plymouth Rock and a Holstein." In the past five years over 300 seminarians and women workers have received training for periods of from three to six weeks at the center. There are eight trustees appointed for five year terms by the Presiding Bishop, the bishops of West Missouri and Missouri, the head of the agricultural department at Park College and the president of the cattle growers' association. There is an investment of $250,000 which has come from many persons, including help from the birthday thank offering and the Woman's Auxiliary. Mr. Cochel spoke of the needs including staff houses, and a fifty bed hospital in a county where there is none, and a church. With deep faith he asserted that all will come in time, but that he hoped that the work would never be considered completed, for then it would die. He was most complimentary of the staff, including the director, the Rev. Norman Foote; the research and field work director, the Rev. William Spofford Jr., who also teaches rural sociology at Park College, and the Rev. Mr. Philbrick who is developing a homestead project. The center is being visited by many groups, among them farmers who come to see the complete water and soil conservation venture. The county agent also utilizes it for various crop tests. In concluding Mr. Cochel stressed that most of all, though, it is designed to develop rural church workers.

The Rev. Roger Blanshard of the college work division introduced John Morris of Brunswick, Georgia, student at Columbia University, who is the chairman of the executive commission of the national Canterbury association. He addressed the Council on the formation of the association at Cranbrook, Michigan, in December, telling of the desire of college students to have a national group which could coordinate their work in the Church. Bishop Louttit also spoke to the Council as the chairman of the armed forces division. He endeavored to clear up some of the confusions that he sensed existed among Church people concerning the recruitment and placement of chaplains.

Overseas Work

Bishop Mitchell reported for the overseas department, and asked the approval of the Council to delay remittance of $167,000 voted from the war damage funds at a previous meeting for the rebuilding of Brent Hospital in Zambuango, Philippines. The department thinks that the critical and uncertain conditions in the Far East make it unwise to begin any construction at this moment. Bishop Binsted of the Philippines had informed the department that he did not think that the conditions are as serious as was thought here and desired to go ahead with the hospital. Bishop Whittemore asked if withholding this for the time being would not mean discouragement to Bishop Binsted, for after all we are wondering too in this country whether building may not be destroyed, yet we go ahead. Bishop Sherrill answered this by saying that he had to agree with the department in its cautious attitude. Dean Carman raised the point that the people in the area might need a hospital. Bishop Bentley then described the temporary building that has been serving a small number since the hospital was destroyed by bombing, and gave as his opinion that it would be possible to use it for some time to come. The department's wishes were accepted, but not unanimously. Complete concurrence was given to a change in the length of service for missionaries in Liberia from four to two years.

Social Relations

The department of Christian social relations through its chairman, Bishop Keeler, was successful in having passed by the Council a proceedure for dealing with matters of social action. The department has realized that it can never speak in its own name only, for since it is a part of National Council, it involves it in its activities. It has acted in the past on issues about which General Convention, the House of Bishops, or National Council has given a clear mandate. When resolutions proposed by individuals or groups, or the department itself, has initiated items of political or legislative action, the course has not been clear. Now, National Council shall discuss, act upon, and direct the manner, if any, in which the department's activity in specific matters shall be implemented. If possible, such issues shall have a place on the agenda of the Council, with adequate information sent to the members beforehand, and if commissions of General Convention are concerned, they shall be asked to participate in the discussion, as well as any departments concerned.

An immediate problem in social action then was proposed by the department. By unanimous agreement a resolution was adopted which urged the Congress and the President to make available to India the wheat that we have and is needed in the famine conditions in that land. This move was in harmony with that of the National Council of Churches, and the opinion is to be sent to the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture and the appropriate Congressional committees. In addition, the resolution urged that all our Church people make known to their Congressmen and the President their thoughts on the matter.

The Rev. Arnold Purdie who has served as director of the division of health and welfare services is leaving to become head of the City Mission in Pennsylvania. He reviewed for the Council the work of his division, citing the studies of social services that had been done in six urban dioceses. In addition, he told of how in cooperation with the child welfare league there had been an evaluation of St. Francis' Boys Home in Salina and Ellsworth, Kansas. Fact-finding work on hospitals and convalescent homes of the Church, and the study of conditions of the retired and disabled clergy are also other things in its field of interest. Constantly they have been confronted with disturbing situations in the agencies and institutions of the Church dealing with children, and have endeavored to bring them up to contemporary standards and practices.

Laymen's Work

Mr. Robert Jordan extolled the job that had been done by the laymen in the last every member canvass. He said that plans for next fall are underway, and mistakes of the past caused the Promotion Department to do some revising. They are conscious that the 1950 presentation was too long and that they had mechanical devices that did not work too well, but by and large the laymen were well prepared.

China & Relief

The Rev. Almon Pepper's presentation of our part in Church World Service, which has been about $650,000 in the past year, provoked a short discussion. Bishop Mitchell mentioned that he understood that Bishop Hall of Hong Kong needed help desperately. Bishop Sherrill noted that we have been able to aid in the past and will continue, and then added that he was disturbed about a communication from Bishop Hall that said the embargo by our country had made a terrible situation in China in the matter of medicines. The cost of penicillin and other drugs is exorbitant because of our government action, but the Presiding Bishop saw no way of dealing with the matter.

Woman's Auxiliary

The national executive board of the Auxiliary, meeting February 9-12, helped forward the work of the Church in many ways, through appropriations, conferences and otherwise, partly for immediate results, partly for plans for the future.

One of the appropriations was for a church and guild hall at Rapid City, S. D., to provide for the large number of Indians leaving reservations to come to that city. About 800 of them are Episcopalians who should be ministered to, particularly during the time of readjustment to a new life.

A resolution, similar to the one passed by the Council, urged the giving of surplus food to India. Another called for no change in the federal law which provides a minimum age of sixteen years for work on commercial farms during the school hours.

Addresses were given by Ada Clarke, Church Army sister, and Bernice Jansen, both missionaries in the Philippines; Daphne Hughes of the Newark youth consultation service; Leila Anderson, who spoke on the work so far done by the joint commission on the matter of giving women a voice in General Convention.

There were also reports by provincial representatives on various national gatherings, and the usual reports on the activities of the National Council's departments and divisions.

BISHOP ERNEST M. STIRES DIES IN FLORIDA

★ Bishop Ernest M. Stires, retired bishop of Long Island, died at Palm Beach, Florida, where he was spending the winter. He was eighty-four. The funeral was on Saturday the 17th at St. Thomas Church, New York, where he was rector for many years. Service was conducted by the present rector, the Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, assisted by Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, Bishops Donegan and Boynton of New York and Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island.

Bishop Stires was a member of the Witness Advisory Board since the founding of the magazine. He was president of the House of Deputies at the 1925 General Convention and was a member of the National Council from 1919 through 1937.

OREGON HOLDS CONVENTION

★ The convention of Oregon was held at Eugene, February 11-12, when consideration was given to needed expansion to care for the population growth in the diocese. The dinner was held the evening of the 12th when Bishop Dagwell spoke on experiences during the fifteen years of his episcopate. He made a previous announcement that his address would be given in fifteen minutes but we suppressed the temptation to spend the price for a telegram to find out if he kept within the limit of one minute for each of the years he has headed the diocese.

Bishop Dagwell entertained the clergy and their wives at breakfast, following an ordination on February 13th, after which there was a conference on plans for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the establishment of the Church in Oregon.

COMMUNITY DAY OF PRAYER

★ Clergymen of a large number of New York churches are joining in an all day community day of prayer for the peace of the world, held today, Washington's Birthday, at the Ascension, New York. It opens with a celebration of the holy communion, with Rector Roscoe T. Foust the celebrant. Prayer meetings are being held at half hour intervals through the day, with a different clergyman leading at each one. It closes with an evening service at eight when Bishop Blair Larned, in charge of the American Churches in Europe, is to preach.

CHURCH PEACE MISSION IN BOSTON

★ A Church peace mission was held in Boston February 11-12, opening with an evening service at Trinity Church when Prof. John Oliver Nelson of Yale Divinity School was the preacher. The following day three meetings were held at Christ Church, Cambridge, one for the clergy in the morning; one for women in the afternoon and a general meeting in the evening. The purpose of the mission was to explore the area covered by the Church in relation to war and peace.

RACE RELATIONS SERVICE AT CATHEDRAL

★ An interdenominational service of interracial fellowship was held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, on February 11th, sponsored by the Interracial Fellowship of Greater New York and the Protestant Council. The preacher was Bishop Aldrich, retired of Michigan, who is now dean of the chapel at Princeton University.

ACOLYTES FESTIVAL IN NEW YORK

★ The annual acolytes festival of the diocese of New York was held at St. Mary the Virgin on February 12th, with Bishop Donegan presiding at the service. Guests included clergy and acolytes from Long Island, New Jersey and Connecticut. A luncheon followed the service.

ENGLISH BISHOP AT PACIFIC

★ Bishop Robert C. Mortimer of Exeter, England, an authority on canon law, will give five lectures at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, April 16-25. They are open to the public.

THREE YEARS LATE SAYS DOCTOR

★ Physician Karl Menninger at Topeka, Kansas, was giving a talk to young mothers on helping the child form creative attitudes toward life. After the address a mother came to ask him when she should begin to teach these attitudes to the child.

"How old is your child?" asked the doctor.

"Three years," replied the mother.

"Well," said Dr. Manninger, "Hurry home as fast as you can. You already are three years late."

TEXAS VESTRYMEN GET RESULTS

★ After considering the merits of various plans for promoting the Church, vestrymen of a Texas parish decided to place Prayer Books on their desks and counters, agreeing to meet in six weeks to compare results. Their experiences were much alike. First, they found that they themselves read the Prayer Book more often, some regularly. Second, visitors who mentioned the book opened the way for discussion about the Church. Third, many recalled previous contacts with the Church, confessed to lapsed interest, made feeble excuses for their negligence. Fourth, some expressed such interest that they were counted as likely candidates for confirmation.

The vestrymen agreed to continue the experiment and suggest it to others because of the results they have so far obtained.

KENYON COLLEGE OFFERS SCHOLARSHIPS

★ Kenyon College is among the twelve colleges in the country whose students may be recipients of scholarships from the George F. Baker fund of New York. The University of the South is the other college related to the Episcopal Church on the list. The Kenyon scholarship is a maximum of $5,000 for four years, awarded on the basis of academic aptitude, evidences of ability to lead, accomplishment to date. Kenyon also has three other scholarship foundations, one for $4,000 for four years; one of $3,000 and another of $2,400.

BROTHERHOOD SERVICE IN CHICAGO

★ The annual corporate communion of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held this Saturday, February 24th, at St. James, Chicago. The service at eight will be followed by a breakfast when the speaker will be Lt. Col. Paul Rusch of Japan.

Lions, Bears and Scorpions

THERE are two striking, pastoral scenes in the Old Testament which—though widely separated in time—belong together, because of the bearing they have on human motives and problems. The first is the picture of young David standing before King Saul and making good his claim to fight the giant, Goliath, by boasting: "Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear and took a lamb out of the flock; and I went after him and smote him and delivered it out of his mouth, and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard and smote him and slew him. Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear." The second scene is in the form of a parable spoken by the shepherd-prophet, Amos, and is irresistibly funny, if one doesn't inhibit his sense of humor when he reads Holy Scripture. Says Amos: "A man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house and leaned his hand on the wall and a scorpion bit him!"

Amos' parable was aimed at his degenerate nation which was going from bad to worse because it had let the results of opposing God's will pile up, instead of repenting at the first call of the prophet and turning back then into the way of righteousness. It dodged the lion only to meet the bear; it fled from the bear and took refuge in self-satisfaction, only to get bitten by the scorpion. But the courageous young shepherd, David, —if we are to believe his boastings—did exactly what Israel failed to do. He stood up to his lion and disposed of him, and so got himself ready for the greater test and the resounding triumph over Goliath.

Obvious Significance

THE significance of these two scenes for the lives and problems of us Christians today ought to be fairly obvious. Every one of us has a lion in his way, in the shape of a besetting-sin. Perhaps some of us are morally so insensitive that we don't recognize his shape, although our companions would be very ready to point it out. But most of us, it may be hoped, are aware of one or more really black spots on our characters, although we dislike looking at them. We say to ourselves: "Oh well, we all have our weaknesses; I guess I'm as good as the average fellow." So we turn our back on the lion and are surprised to meet a bear, in the shape of another sin that gets us into trouble. But the habit of evading moral responsibility is now so strong that we seek shelter, perhaps in feverish activity—a very dangerous wall to lean against—and to our great astonishment, a scorpion bites us and we chant the old cry of the weak, disillusioned man: "Oh dear, oh dear; life is just one damned thing after another."

And now Lent is upon us again and mother Church challenges us to do something about these lions and bears, to catch them by their beards, as doughty David did, instead of running away from them. The collect for this week reminds us that although we "have no power of ourselves to help ourselves," the infinite resources of God can "defend us from all adversities" of body and soul. We shall be very foolish indeed if we do not, here and now, before Easter is a day nearer, take a good long look at the besetting-sin and devote the rest of Lent to making ourselves a clear channel for the cleansing, renewing power of God in deliberate, unhurried daily prayer that begins with a recognition of his loving and omnipotent presence; that goes on to put before him the unpleasant picture of that lion-sin that we've been fleeing from; that then realizes his willingness to empower us to get free from it, and a hearty upsurge of thanksgiving for this freedom.

Just this simple, daily program may well be our most fruitful rule of life for Lent. There is no such animal as a disillusioned Christian; that's a contradiction in terms. For the real Christian soul is one who is continuously certain that "power belongeth unto God" and who keeps himself

AS a moralist, a teacher of virtuous living, Jesus was the most cavalier and the least puritanical who ever lived. It is remarkable how little troubled he was by the fun-loving propensities of common folk. In fact he scandalized his critics with his own happy and shameless indulgence in pleasures of this life. And we are glad and grateful for this, as his followers, for he has blest and sanctified our play. But he makes it very clear to us: the pleasures of this life are to be enjoyed, but not to be our obsession. In the great parable of the sower he reminds us that pleasures, like cares and riches, can choke our souls. They will, unless we control and master them rather than being mastered by them.

persistently in living contact with that power which makes all things new—even the shoddy, worn-thin characters that so many of us possess. For such a one, life need never seem to be "one damned thing after another," but may well become, by God's grace, a blessed experience.

Let him who will apply this parable of the lion, bear and scorpion to our policy-makers and legislators in this year of our Lord, 1951. It is peculiarly easy to do, because the parable was aimed by its author at the corresponding class of public men of his day.

The Beatitudes—

Blessed Are The Meek

BY

KENNETH R. FORBES

Member of Witness Editorial Board

OF all the Beatitudes of Christ, this one is probably the most commonly misunderstood. In fact, with the English translation it seems a contradiction in terms; and the various modern versions fail to make the sense less dubious. "Meek," "gentle," "kindly"—all these words indicate for most of us someone with a disposition all sweetness and light, a submissive and spineless soul. And we know, from long experience with the world, that such as these are more likely to get kicked around than they are to "inherit the earth" or anything else materially valuable. And yet this connection between "meekness" and "inheriting the earth," as cause and effect, appears again and again in the Master's teaching and was one of the principles of life recognized by the more discerning of pre-Christian Hebrew writers. In fact, the Beatitude attributed to Jesus was practically a literal quotation from Psalm 37:11: "The meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." So it would seem necessary for us to revise drastically our instinctive notion of what the meek really are like. What is their attitude toward God and what is their relation to the world?

I believe that we shall be right in assuming that the attitude of the meek toward God is one of constant awareness of his power and love and of their own unworthiness and inability to determine effectively the course of their lives in this world. Where the changes and chances of this mortal life bear cruelly on them personally, they will accept the fact without rebellion and look to God for a revealing of his will for their next steps. This has certainly been the attitude of all the Christian saints and heroes whose impress on the world has been creative and notable.

Clue to Puzzle

WHEN we come to consider the relation of the meek to their fellow-men as individuals, and to the world at large, it is not so simple, for it is here that the puzzling promise of our Lord applies —that the meek shall inherit the earth. I think that the clue to this puzzle is found in the mind and life of Jesus himself. His attitude toward God the Father was obviously one of submission and complete trust and also of simple acceptance of all that the forces of sin could do to him personally. The perfect poise and serenity resulting from this gave him control and dominance in all his relations with the world. The miracles he wrought in his earthly life are evidence enough of this. Sickness and death in others he overcame; and that he might literally have inherited the earth as a world conqueror was clearly possible had he not deliberately renounced it for the sake of his future revolutionary impact on the thinking and conscience of the world.

There would seem, then, to be the most intimate connection between the attitude of self-dedication of an individual to God, asking nothing for himself and trusting utterly to the wisdom and love of the Father, and the power of that same man over his environment and over the lives of his fellows. Peter's naive question: "We have left all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" brought this most revealing answer from the Master: "He shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses and brethren and sisters and mothers and children and lands, with persecution." He answered Peter on his own level of understanding instead of rebuking him for his worldly standards. That is, the completely dedicated citizen of God's Kingdom will be possessed of such patience and clear-sightedness that even worldly goods will come to him, alone with persecution which will also be his lot, and with the heavenly inheritance in future time. This was the perfectly plain statement of Christ and it agreed with his declaration in another connection: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." He that is in close relation with God will inevitably have power over men. This is the "meek" person; not a weak and flabby creature, nor an arrogant and grasping character, but a man or woman of conscious strength, aware of God as the source of all power, and intent to endure hardness for his sake. Such material things as do come to him, he acquires because of his poise and clear-headedness in contrast to the feverish, short-sighted graspings of the average man.

Meaning for Today

WHAT might this conception of meekness mean to us, practically, in this age of violence and confusion? Its first meaning is, of course, that there is no dependable source of power but God; that our only hope for an effective life in this world is maintaining a live contact with the Father of all men. And such a vital relationship to God by prayer and meditation ensures both our humility and our confidence; humility because we become aware of our insignificance and poverty in comparison with his beauty and glory; confidence because we are learning that "with God all things are possible." And as a direct result of this quality of character created by prayer, we shall find ourselves able to cope successfully with all the pressures and threats of a world deluded by the notion that hatred of sinners and belief in violence as a sovereign method of converting them can ever succeed in bringing peace, fellowship or righteousness to mankind. The genuine Christian today—as in all ages—is the man or woman who has put on the armor of God by prayer and, having learned his will, can set his face like a flint against violence and man-made-vengeance in the affairs of men and nations; can speak ringing words against "spiritual wickedness in high places"—which is an all-too-accurate description of the quality of today's rulers—even as our Lord did in his terrific enunciation of the "Woes" that immediately followed his "Beatitudes" in the Gospel narrative.

Conviction and Courage

SUCH, then, are the meek, as our Lord understood them. They are persons of serenity, conviction and courage, never seeking trouble, never irritable or peevish or disheartened by the sins and stupidities of friends or enemies, never intent to grab the good things of life for themselves, but ever ready to fight tenaciously for the under-dog, for the victim of brutality or ignorance and brave to denounce sin in high places or low. And they will always appear to the sinful and deluded of the world—even as our Lord himself appeared—as the "Terrible Meek" who convicts of sin because he is quite content to suffer himself from sin. It should be a solemn ambition for everyone of us who has been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus to qualify for the noble and costly title of the "meek," for it will involve us, as Jesus made plain to Peter, in persecution as well as endowing us with power and light and love. Whatever of the material things of life the meek may acquire will be by virtue of simple psychological laws which the Master so clearly understood. The man who "blows his top," who is irritable, contentious, unforgiving is, by that very token, the man who misses even material success, which seldom comes to one who cannot think objectively, plan coherently or act decisively, because passion has blinded his eyes and weakened his will. How very true, on every level of human life, these penetrating words of Jesus: "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."

The Master's Promise

PERHAPS no one of us Christians today, however devoutly we seek to cultivate the quality of meekness, will ever be given the inheritance of the earth on the high plane where our character, our words and our actions shall dominate the thoughts and consciences of future generations. Only a very small company indeed, after the Lord Christ himself, has attained that sort of inheritance of the earth—St. Paul, St. Francis and, in our own generation, Mohandas Gandhi and Albert Schweitzer. But it is not too much to hope that many of us in this distracted and fear-ridden world of today may learn to live so close to the Master of life in the intimate fellowship of his family, that the power and splendor and beauty of God will dissolve our fears, transform our weakness into strength and so make us genuinely to be of the company of the meek and lowly in heart who can face life's problems with clear heads and brave hearts, poised and serene as only the meek can be.

Our reward in this world and in this time will then be, as our Lord assured Peter, "houses and brethren and sisters and mothers and children and lands, with persecution"—which is to say that some of the good things of this material world cannot escape us meek folk even while we endure persecution by the blind and bitter and vengeful who are inevitably spawned by the sort of world that man's sin and ignorance has created. Such a reward and such an inheritance should not be beyond the reach of any of us who have learned to do business with God and to carry the rare fruits of that business into the markets of our rough and tumble world, claiming the inheritance the Master has promised us.

Figs or Thistles

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON

Founder and First Editor of The Witness

OUR Lord had the saving grace of humor. "Do men gather grapes of thorns and figs of thistles?" is a very whimsical question. It is a shame that so many stupid leaders have insisted that dullness is a sign of piety and that humor is an instrument of Satan. Satan may by cynical and even witty but Satan has no real humor. The words that we have quoted have a context that it may be well for us to observe.

They follow the warning that we are to beware of false prophets, and the intimation that we shall know these false religious leaders by their fruits.

The two kinds of fruits which false teachers seem to produce are those which have the spikey qualities of the thorn and the rasping quality of the thistle.

He unquestionably had the Pharisees and Sadducees in mind when he spoke of false leaders, for they were the popular leaders of his time, so popular that they finally succeeded in crucifying the man who exposed their falsity.

In the sermon on the Mount the Lord tells us of two kinds of righteousness;—the wrong kind and the right kind;—the wrong kind brings the fruit of falsehood, the right kind brings the fruit that he was so laboriously endeavoring to produce.

(1) "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of Heaven."

(2) "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you."

Popular Religion

IT is perfectly legitimate to apply this test, which he asked us to apply, to the popular relegious movements of today and to ask ourselves how much of our religious leadership is destined to produce thorns and thistles and is rather dubious about the value of grapes and figs.

The first characteristic of these false prophets, then and now, lies in their tremendous popularity.

They were backed by an innumerable company of little thorns and little thistles, which were never quite so happy as when they were pressing their ugly crown upon the Saviour's brow, or thrusting their spikey lances into his side.

Neither God nor righteousness can be determined by a referendum and mere numbers do not justify a cause.

The number of the names who follow the Master through it all were one hundred and twenty grapes and figs. The thorns and thistles were beyond count which same is characteristic of any badly cultivated field.

Neither does the rasping assurance of thorns and thistles overweigh in God's sight those who practice his righteousness in secret as they were bidden.

If you keep the outside of the platter clean by a certain abstinence from non-respectable sins you can fool the people into thinking that there is no uncleanness inside. Popularity is no sign of virtue.

The motive of Pharisaic righteousness is to justify oneself and its concomitant quality is to despise others.

The Pharisees and Sadducees could not endure contradiction, any more than the extreme partisans in the Church or out of it today can endure contradiction or rebuke.

Is it characteristic of both the high Pharisee and the broad Sadducee that they despise those who differ from them and bitterly resent those in authority who would curb their dogmatic utterances either for or against the tradition of their fathers.

Whenever you find petulance or cynical anathemas you may be certain of that mind which St. Luke describes in the following language, "And as he said these things unto them the Scribes and Pharisees began to urge him vehemently, and to provoke him to speak of many things; laying wait for him and seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him."

Righteousness By Law

THESE ancient Pharisees believed in making men righteous by legislative enactments; and the Sadducees sought the same end by daring speculative assertions.

They were utterly oblivious to the graciousness of Christ and loudly invoked that righteousness which was by the law, or else tried to break down men's faith by airing their own doubts and speculations.

Both Pharisee and Sadducee were adept in substituting the laws or opinions of men for the law of God.

They were like many of our sectarian ministers today who loudly proclaim against the use of wine, while they deliberately remarry people against the expressed law of Christ. If this isn't straining at gnats and swallowing camels, it is a piece of glaring inconsistency.

It seems to have no weight with them that Christ said that he who marrieth her that is divorced committeth adultery.

Modern Pharisaism is like the ancient thorn in that it scolds those sinners who sin against the flesh, toward whom Christ was conspicuously kind and tender, and are indifferent to those who commit meanness under the protection of the law.

Pharisees invoked prejudice against the sweet reasonableness of Christ, and today large religious bodies sanction a secret order which commits acts of intolerable meanness and cowardly cruelty in order, they say, that God may be justified.

Whatever may be the marks of Christ, they are not the marks of the Pharisee or the Sadducee. He did not appeal to prejudice nor philosophy. He was kind toward those who differed from him in their religious views.

He frankly told the Samaritans that "they worshipped they knew not what," and then complimented them on their individual acts of mercy and gratitude.

He could see good in the inveterate enemies of his religion.

He was compassionate toward those who were the victims of fleshly sins and rebuked the elder brother who was a glaring instance of harsh intolerance. He was extremely severe to those of his own company who failed him in their loyalty and comprehension, but he could forgive those who crucified him for they knew not what they did.

American Christianity

AMERICAN CHRISTIANITY needs sorely to cultivate its grapes and figs and to get rid of its spikey qualities.

Its greatest lack today is not theological comprehension but wholesome fellowship which will attract the common people, even if it loses the wise and mighty.

The Church was never advanced merely by its "wisdom after the flesh," nor by its "itching after the dollar," but solely by its ability to preach the whole gospel of Christ as it has received the same, with the compassion of Christ toward sinners and his accessibility to the fellowship of the ordinary man.

Somehow the Church lacks flexibility in its invitation to those without.

Some attribute this to the fact that common men cannot accept this or that doctrine, but would come into the Church if the bars were let down in doctrinal requirements.

Others think that the Church should come out more openly for law enforcement and civic interests.

I do not think so. What is needed is to acquire more graciousness and less stiffness of manners; more fellowship and less of the exclusive caste; more human touch and less ecclesiastical manners; more kindliness and less consciousness.

The most far reaching and permanent results are attained when men can combine a definiteness of religious conviction with an attitude of cordial kindliness toward all men.

It was characteristic of the Christ that he could tell the Samaritan: "You worship you know not what," and yet win the Samaritan to his person.

Christ did not water down his assertions to please the intellectuals of his day. Rather he allowed the intellectuals to pass him by while he sought for those who needed him.

Because you say "I know" therefore your sin remaineth but to those who said, "I sin," he forgave the sinner and inspired him with a new purpose.

The Church could afford to ignore the whole group of intellectuals, if it only could learn how to be so attractive to sinners that the common people would hear her gladly.

An After-Thought On The Assumption

BY

EDGAR L. TIFFANY
General Preacher of Diocese of Western New York

I DOUBT whether any generation was ever shocked out of its wits like unto ours. For no sooner had we partially recovered from the atomic bomb and the moral as well as spiritual problems which it has raised, than the Roman Church, not to be outdone by science, drops the dogma of the Assumption directly upon our already dizzy heads. That we were taken completely by surprise is due entirely to our self-complacency and stupidity. We had ample warning. This was a Holy Year. Some of us had an uneasy suspicion that Rome would never let it pass without giving the faithful something to remember it by; something colossal, stupendous, out of this world, in a word —atomic. Due to veiled but persistent hints earlier in the year, some of us were prepared to hear the proclamation that the veritable bones of St. Peter were finally discovered after these many years complete and intact—and woe be unto him who should question it! Then without warning, like a cleverly executed screen pass in football, the Dogma of the Assumption was dropped upon us, and we were left stunned, bewildered and indignant. We protested that it was not fair, it was literally not according to the book, something had to be done about it. Well, what can we do about it, if anything, to help us understand the Roman point of view, and at the same time re-examine our own.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Poetry of Religion

ONE thing is sure as the outcome of all this, George Santayana, that blithe spirit and scintillating mind, will now end his declining years in perfect peace. Always interested in the things of religion he maintained that poetry and religion were one in essence. That to look for scientific or even historical accuracy in religion was to lose its true meaning and insight. Spiritual truths were to be spiritually discerned, to be symbolically, poetically, interpreted. To do otherwise would ultimately lead to intellectual misery and spiritual apathy. So would Santayana interpret the dogma of the Assumption to his satisfaction. Not so the Church which formulated it. The dogma must be accepted literally and historically by all the faithful. If you read the encyclical of the Pope last August you would have been prepared for this. It was stressed that no longer would mystical or symbolic interpretations of doctrines be tolerated. There were to be accepted as literal, factual, final. Any attempt to correlate them with the findings of modern science, historical criticism or modern thinking were ruled out. The Church turned back to the Council of Trent—blinds were drawn and the doors locked.

Authority Not Needed

NOW the one thing that Protestantism has fallen back upon in rebuttal to the dogma of the Assumption is the fact that it cannot be found recorded in Scriptures or even mentioned to the early Church fathers. That is true, but in justice to Rome no such claim has been made. Biblical authority from the Roman standpoint is not necessary to establish any truth. What is necessary is that the Church proclaims it and you accept it. If the Church decided that the Cat and the Fiddle episode, with the little Dog laughing uproariously, the Dish and the Spoon eloping, and the Cow jumping over the moon, had spiritual value it could pronounce the same as a dogma and the faithful could be told to accept it literally. No figurative nonsense about the Cow symbolizing the rising cost of meat or increasing inflation would be tolerated. This statement is hard to believe but it is true. The Roman Church has now taken the position boldly, defiantly and apparently finally that oral tradition, what someone has said or says, is on an equal footing with Scripture, nay, is in the last analysis superior to it. Frankly, Protestantism is wasting its time trying to force Rome to admit a standard or canon it has practically given up or abandoned. The one crass test that Rome is willing to take into consideration is purely pragmatic—does it work, pay dividends, give the faithful what they want to believe. It is a pity that William James was not more familiar with the Roman Church. He would have dedicated all his works on pragmatism to it. Frankly, on the Roman theory of oral tradition, any time, anywhere, I cannot see what would hinder a complete repudiation of all Scripture if the Church so decided.

Theory of Development

IT is one of the ironies of ecclesiastical history that an Anglican was mainly responsible for getting us all in the dilemma we are now in. His name was John Henry Newman. You remember when he decided to enter the Church of Rome, raised as he was on the supremacy of Scripture and the authority of the early Church councils, the acceptance of the Papacy was not easy to that brilliant intellect. He knew history not only wisely but too well. It was his emphasis on the idea of development that made his transition possible. No one has ever stated it more clearly or cleverly. True, the Papacy and the Church could not be found, as they later developed, in Scripture or the early Church. But the seed was there capable of infinite growth, change if needs be and expansion. By comparison the Anglican Church bound to Scripture and the councils was static, paralyzed, dead — the Roman Church dynamic, fruitful, ever living. Anything the Roman Church has ever done, is doing, or will do, can be justified by this theory of development. In other words, to challenge and scold Rome for being what it is, is like berating a zebra because it has stripes. We have finally reached the stage where Kipling's East is East could be paraphrased to Romanism is Romanism, and Protestantism is Protestantism and never the twain shall meet. No, I will not say never for as long as there is oral tradition a voice may still speak out and proclaim let by-gones be by-gones to the unscriptural tune of "For it's always fair weather!"

I would like to confess in closing an unhappy thought that has come into my mind relative to the insistence that the whole difficulty relative to the dogma of the Assumption is that it is not found in the Scripture. Well, suppose it was—say in St. Luke's Gospel or one of Paul's Epistles. What would you do about it? Obviously, if you are a fundamentalist you would naturally accept it word for word even as the Roman dogma requires and your troubles would be over. But if you are not a fundamentalist and yet tried to accept the incident in the face of modern science, physics and biology—without recourse to symbolism, poetry or spiritual interpretation—yes, that is it exactly. Maybe in God's wisdom things are better just as they are!

Our Present Task And Responsibility

BY

HENRY D. PHILLIPS

Bishop of Southwestern Virginia

THERE are few people who are not conscious of the critical conditions under which we are living. Throughout the world there are misgivings, conflicts and rumors of war. Millions of people beyond the limits of the United States are in distress and physical want. The war through which we have passed left in its wake pain, suffering, destitution, maladjustments and destruction of every kind. Without some kind of faith one cannot fail to lapse into hopelessness and despair, or else people will be appealed to by the wild promises and schemes and plans which give room for a ruthless dictatorial power.

This is a critical period in the life of the world. Without proper guidance and wise choices the world can be embroiled in a horrible experience growing out of what we may call, because of scientific discoveries and inventions, a sophisticated war, characterized by a hideousness never before known.

Since the birth of Christ the world has passed through great crises. In each instance the power of the gospel through the faith and conviction of men has been able to make a definite contribution towards a better life. With all of its shortcomings and failures, the Christian Church has within it the power to be of immeasurable service in our present situation.

Underneath the rumble of confusion and uncertainty there are the undertones of a struggle for a richer and fuller expression of man's nature, in which individuals can have more and more the fruits of a fuller and better life. This struggle and expression may take a definite form and become a crystallized movement.

Already we are in the midst of revolutions and conflicts. While not characterized by the fire of bombs and other explosives, it is no less war in the realm of economics, political structure and social adjustments. Unless there is a definite guiding force born of a deep conviction, resting upon a faith in the sovereignty and fatherhood of God and a belief in the dignity and sacredness of man as a child of God, events may turn to the destruction of all that we hold dear and precious in what we have known as a Christian civilization.

Our immediate danger is that attempts shall be made to shape the events of the world by reactionaries on the one hand and extreme radicals on the other, neither of which are dominated by the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Need for Unity

THE difficulties are not all abroad. In our own country there is great need for unity of thought and action. For America to render her best service to the well-being of the world of men it is necessary to have a strong America. To be strong we must not only have adequate defense so that there is no invitation for an aggressor to attack us, but we must be unified and firm in our conviction that this is not only God's world but that as Americans our lives shall be dominated by a firm belief and faith in him who is the author of our being and who by his spirit shall enable us to be willing followers of his son, living, working —and dying if need be—in attempting to do his will.

With such conviction and such a determination, many of our great problems which tend to disrupt our life would be nearer a solution. They may be labor problems, industrial problems, international problems or the problems of minorities. All of them can be dissolved or greatly relieved by the application of Christian principles.

Many times attempts have been made to solve these problems either through a benevolent secularism or a humanistic approach, whereas as a matter of fact our faith and belief in God and the reality of it in our own lives determine our views and theory of economies, political structure and social relationships. One might paraphrase the Proverb and say: As is one's faith and conviction so is he in his relationships in life.

We may hope that some day, instead of bitter wrangling and strife between laborers and capitalists at a bargain table, in which the general consumer pays for the damage done by the disputants, we may have a settlement and understanding of any grievances and injustices through labor-management or the representation of labor on the board of directors. I am convinced that working men are primarily more concerned about a security growing out of continuous employment than they are in securing additional remuneration at the expense of the well-being of the enterprise in which they are engaged.

When workers are taken into the confidence of the directorate through their representation I am convinced there will be no desire to wreck a company or an industry by unwarranted demands. In their loyalty there would be no difference from that of any other member of the directorate. By this method would come knowledge and understanding, which is always the basis of sympathetic cooperation and team-work.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

This would put an end to the crippling of all life through unnecessary and unwarranted strikes and the enslavement of labor by dictators who are jockeying for power among themselves. This is no far-fetched hope. Already there are firms which are operating upon this basis. This is an illustration of what I mean by applying the gospel to working conditions.

I do not believe the solution of our labor problems lies along the abandonment of the profit motive; when tried it has failed. The theory goes contrary to human nature. A nearer solution lies along the efforts to curb greed and supplant injustice with just and fair dealings.

Individual Submerged

AS the world progresses in industrial techniques, new social problems naturally will arise which affect living and produce economic difficulties. Christian men and women must put their minds to work upon these new problems as they arise. At the present time one of the great problems is the status of the individual. Our democratic way of life is being confronted with it, and up to now it has not been solved.

Because of the great masses involved, whether in labor or in great enterprises, the individual is being submerged. As a laboring man he cannot speak his mind without reprisals. As a small business man he has difficulty in maintaining his integrity and independence. Along with this there is the growing tendency for individuals to have their thinking done for them by the syndicated columnists and the radio commentators.

As Christian citizens we are called upon not only to think our way through in matters pertaining to Christian affiliation, federation or union, but to give the Christian concept in all of our relationships; whether economic, educational, political or social.

Each individual has a definite contribution to make; for as we think, believe and act, our convictions and positions gather momentum with other individuals. Our congregations, moving in Christian thought and life with other congregations, eventually bring about state and national convictions, and it will be in this process that we shall gather a great spiritual force which will make its impact upon the life of the nation and of the world.

May God give us grace and strength to know that we are children of God and are able by his help to render a definite and specific service in our day and time. Such a consciousness will dispel fear and uncertainty and enable us to move forward with Christian men and women everywhere with courage and hope for the peace and happiness of the world.

They Forgot Things

IN 1923 a group of the world's most successful financiers met at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago. Present were:

The president of the largest independent steel company.

The president of the largest utility company.

The greatest wheat speculator.

The president of the New York Stock Exchange.

A member of the President's cabinet.

The greatest "bear" in Wall Street.

The president of the Bank of International Settlements.

The head of the world's greatest monopoly.

Collectively these tycoons controlled more wealth than there was in the United States Treasury, and for years newspapers and magazines had been printing their success stories and urging the youth of the nation to follow their examples.

Let us see what had happened to these eight men 25 years later.

The president of the largest steel company—Charles Schwab lived on borrowed money the last five years of his life and died "broke."

The utility operator—Samuel Insull, died virtually in exile.

The greatest wheat speculator—Arthur Patton, died abroad, insolvent.

The president of the New York Stock Exchange, Richard Whitney, had served a term in Sing Sing Prison.

The member of the President's Cabinet—Albert Fall, was pardoned from prison so he could die at home.

The greatest "bear" in Wall Street—Jesse Livermore, committed suicide.

The president of the Bank of International Settlements—Leon Frazier, committed suicide.

The head of the world's greatest monopoly—Ivan Kreuger, committed suicide.

All these men had learned how to make money but not one of them had learned how to live.

—St. John's, Sharon, Pa.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Was Jesus the first to announce this Beatitude?
2. What is the best way to discover just what our Lord meant by the word "meek"?
3. Mention two ways in which a person can actually "inherit the earth."
4. How can you, personally, "inherit the earth"?
5. Comment on Peter's question and Jesus' answer.

ligious thought of the modern world, he will have to take full account of those brief forty years which did more to change religious thinking in the English-speaking world than any other similar period since the Reformation.

Restoring Worship. By Clarice Bowman. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press. $2.50.

Of special value to those interested in religious education, the book expresses the importance of worship. We are beginning to see how important it is, not only for the sake of later adult worship, but in the total life of the church.

In Journeyings Often. By John S. Moyes. Oxford. $1.75.

An interesting and well-illustrated account of Bishop Moyes's journeys to England, Europe, and America, in connection with Lambeth and the Amsterdam Conference. He was an interesting and understanding guest!

Church Lobbying in the Nation's Capital. By Luke Ebersole. Macmillan. $2.75.

A factual survey of immense importance for those who would like to understand why "Washington" holds some of its views and attitudes. It is quite a mistake to assume that there is no church lobby! Under the circumstances, there probably must be one, and it ought to be a better one.

Aristeas to Philocrates. Edited and Translated by Moses Hadas. Harper. $4.00.

The second volume to appear in the great new series of Jewish Apocryphal Literature, being published under the auspices of Dropsie College. The Greek text is printed on the left-hand page, and English translation on the right. The distinctive feature of this edition is not only its scholarship, but also the fact that it is from the Jewish point of view.

The Christian Mysteries. By Bede Frost. Morehouse-Gorham. $2.55.

Taking "mystery" in a modern and quasi-scientific sense, the author insists that the Christian doctrines are beyond our full comprehension. Nevertheless, much can be known about them—and the church teaches us both to believe and to understand. But of course the word "mystery" meant something very different in the New Testament and in the early church from what it does in modern science and psychology.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Secret of God. By Robert D. Hershey. Muhlenberg Press. $1.75.

Fourteen vigorous sermons by one of the younger preachers of the United Lutheran Church.

The Dazzling Darkness. "An Essay on the Experience of Prayer." By Guy Bowden. Longmans, Green. $2.00.

The author is not only familiar with the method of prayer, but has ability to make it real to other persons.

Children of Galilee. By Lydia S. Elliott. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.50.

An imaginative story book for children, describing the people who lived in Galilee in the days of our Lord.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

NORTH INDIA CHURCHES DISCUSS MERGER

Representatives of four Churches in North India have reached a "basis of negotiation" in merger talks held at Trivandrim, aimed at a United Church of North India. Further talks will be held in March between representatives of the Anglican, Methodist of Southern Asia, British Methodist and United Church of Northern India. Hope is also expressed that the Baptists, who have two observers at the conference, will join officially in the March discussions.

GERMAN CHURCH SERVES PEACE

The Berlin and Brandenburg Evangelical synod unanimously rejected a demand by East Berlin authorities that its headquarters be moved to the Soviet sector, though it did so in conciliatory terms. It stated that the Church intends to hold sessions alternately in the western and eastern areas, as does the council of the Church. The reply stated that "the Church is aware of the special obligation to help achieve mutual understanding between men in both areas and to overcome hate and mistrust, doing everything possible to serve peace."

DISCONTENT REPORTED IN SOUTH INDIA CHURCH

Whether or not there is discontent in the Church of South India will be revealed shortly since 14 diocesan synods are meeting this spring. Those who say "all is not well" with the Church, the result of a union of Anglicans, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Reformed, say the discontent is based on (1) reluctance of the Church of England to recognize the validity of its orders and to establish full communion; (2) slowness of the old component denominations to submerge their different practices and forms of worship; (3) the office of bishop fails to satisfy the proponents of either the episcopal or the free Church system.

RUMORS OF CURIA REFORMS ARE AGAIN RIFE

The Pope is said to be planning a widespread reform of the Curia, governing body of the R. C. Church, which will greatly reduce the number of cardinals living permanently in Rome. One of the changes most likely to be made would be to increase the number of cardinals from 70 to 100 on the ground there is an increasing need for cardinals outside Europe. It was also reported in the newspapers last week that the man the Pope hopes will succeed him is not yet a cardinal.

WARSAW ARCHBISHOP MEETS WITH BIERUT

Archbishop Stefan Wyszunski of Warsaw, primate of the R. C. Church in Poland, recently had a meeting with President Bierut to discuss "all matters relating to the state and the Roman Catholic Church in Poland." Newspapers have revealed no details of what transpired.

REFORM MOVEMENT IN CHINA

Leaders of the Peoples government of China are urging religious leaders, both Protestant and Catholic, to join the Christian reform movement. The Peiping radio recently claimed that 100,000 Christians in China have so far signed a manifesto demanding "severing relations with foreign imperialists"

THE TEMPLE OF GOD'S WOUNDS

By WILL QUINLAN

NASH K. BURGER, New York Times Book Review, says: "The Temple of God's Wounds is an unusual devotional book that may well take its place among the enduring religious books of our time. In it the basic principles of Christian mysticism and meditation are presented in the form of a remarkable spiritual adventure recounted by the individual who experienced it." Price, $1.75

DUTIES OF A CHURCHMAN (DACRE PRESS LENT BOOK)

By R. C. MORTIMER, Bishop of Exeter

Regular Communion, Attendance at Public Worship, Fasting, Dues and Alms, Marriage Laws, A Quiet Conscience are the titles of the chapters in the Dacre Press Book for Lent. The book is addressed to laymen of the Church of England everywhere. The clergy will want to read it themselves and to recommend it to the laity. Price, $1.35

"MOTHER SAID SO" (CANADIAN LENT BOOK)

By R. F. PALMER

This book is called "Mother Said So" because the tradition about God is handed on to most of us by our mothers, who taught us to pray. There is a Mother of us all, in whom the true tradition about God has been preserved through Old and New Testament times down to the present. This Mother is the Holy Church of God which began as Israel, and in Christ became the One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church. Price, $1.25 and urging the development of national, autonomous Churches in China. The radio stresses the alleged participation of Catholics in the movement. Shih Ming-Liang, acting bishop of Chungking, is reported to have called on the 3,000 Catholics in his diocese to join the movement, and 1,025 in the city are reported to have signed the manifesto.

JOHANNES SMEMO HEADS CHURCH IN NORWAY

Bishop Johannes Smemo of Agder has been named by the government to head the state Lutheran Church. He becomes the Bishop of Oslo, succeeding Bishop Euvind Berggrav, one of the presidents of the World Council of Churches, who recently resigned for reasons of health. The son of a railroad worker, he was sent to a concentration camp during the German occupation where he became noted for devotion to the spiritual needs of his fellow inmates.

YUGOSLAV PAPER ASSAILS VATICAN OFFICIAL

Charges are made by Belgrade newspapers that Monsignor Silvio Oddi, charge d'affaires of the papal nunciature, has been deliberately trying to "worsen" relations between the R. C. Church and the government of Yugoslavia. His reports are said to have resulted in Vatican "sanctions" against priests who collaborate with the government, and have resulted in "false propaganda concerning religious persecutions in Yugoslavia."

OVERSEAS SPEAKERS FOR CHURCH PEACE UNION

Amiya Chakravarty, adviser to the Indian delegation to the UN, and Martin C. D'Arcy, S.J., lecturer at Oxford University, are featured speakers at a seminar on "Religious Faith and a Just World Order" which opened February 6th in New York under the auspices of the Church Peace Union. Other speakers at the seminars which will be held on successive Tuesday afternoons, are Prof. Ralph Barton Perry, prof. emeritus in philosophy at Harvard; Hans Simons, head of the New School; Samuel Guy Inman, author and lecturer in inter-American affairs. A. William Loos, educational director of the Union, said that the seminars would aim to discuss "as realistically as possible the world situation that confronts us, with special reference to making moral ideals relevant to global problems."

PHILIPPINE PROTESTANTS OUTLINE PROGRAM

Preparation of materials to expose Communism and to provide preachers with material for anti-communist sermons were planned at a conference of 100 Protestant leaders of the Philippines, meeting at Manila. It was also urged that a worker be placed in the field to cultivate ties with labor organizations, and that information be gathered on poverty, landlordism and dissident movements so as to development a program of activities embodying "a constructive alternative to Communism."

Leading the conference was Prof. John C. Bennett of Union Seminary, New York, now on a tour of Asiatic countries. He told the delegates that they should seek to provide the people with a better acquaintance with western capitalism than is afforded by Communist propaganda. "Little is known," he said, "concerning the advances made under capitalism in the United States during the past two decades," and he stressed particularly the advances made by labor, achievements under social security, the responsibility taken by government in preventing unemployment, the rise in the standard of living.

The Bible from Within

By A. G. HEBERT, D.D., House of the Sacred Mission, Kelham, England. The Scriptures take on deeper meaning when read in the light of the times in which their writers addressed the Word to men of their own day. Dividing Biblical history into periods, Dr. Hebert shows how clear even the most difficult passages in the Bible become when viewed from within, in the spirit of their historical contemporaries. $2.25

Enthusiasm

By THE RT. REV. MSGR. R. A. KNOX, Ph.D., Honorary Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford. This important new work traces the history of "enthusiasm" from its early manifestations down to the 19th century, with special emphasis on the hitherto obscure history of the 17th and 18th centuries. "His are shrewd, penetrating appraisals."—America. $6.00

The Words of Life

By THE REV. P. M. DAWLEY, Ph.D. These seven meditations on the Words of Christ on the Cross provide laymen and clergy with invaluable worship material for Holy Week. "Filled with spiritual depth, beautifully phrased, each chapter followed by noble prayers."

BACKFIRE

DON FRANK FENN
Rector, St. Michael & All Angels, Baltimore

I hate controversies in the Church and so I have tried through the years of my ministry to bring to bear whatever influence I may have quietly and without fanfare. The result has been, by and large, that no attention has been paid by those with whom I have corresponded, for they seem to think I am alone in my convictions.

I now write about two of a number of matters that greatly disturb thousands of our communicants and hundreds of our clergy; all of which ought to be grouped under the head of our distress because our leaders in the House of Bishops do not seem to have the courage to take a stand. At the last meeting of the House, they passed a very high sounding resolution about gambling in parishes, in an area where they have no power, save moral suasion, for they cannot reach into the parishes thus, but they adopt an unanimous and meaningless resolution in response to a petition asking that they take a stand on the action of a few of their brethren who have violated the Constitution, Canons and the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer of the Church, in the name of the cause of "unity" with utter disregard for the inevitable disunity that such unchecked action will bring within the Church. I refer to the two cases known to us when bishops invited ministers not in our orders to participate in the laying on of hands, at the ordination of priests, and the other when ministers, not in our orders were invited to take part in a celebration of the holy communion. I am aware of all the arguments that have been advanced, to show that the laws of the Church and the rubrics may be so interpreted as to justify these actions, but the members of the House of Bishops know well what the all but universal acceptance of their meaning is, and it is not that ministers who have not "had Episcopal consecration or ordination" shall perform the functions of bishops, priests and deacons in this Church, included among which are participation in the service of the holy communion and in the laying on of hands in the ordination to the priesthood.

It seems to me that the House of Bishops should have had the courage to say either "we wish to wink at these questionable practices because of our overwhelming sense of charity" or they should have said for the sake of the Church "such practices are in violation of the laws of the Church and indeed of love, and we advise all of our brethren, most lovingly that they should cease among us."

The second thing about which I write is the unconstitutional action initiated in the House of Bishops and concurred in by the House of Deputies at the last General Convention in authorizing the use of intinction in the Church, by plain resolution. I pointed out this error in the House of Deputies, but I am sure that the majority of the Deputies who were attending their first Convention, and an unusually large number were present for the first time, did not understand the point. I am sure that the Church wants intinction authorized, but my point is that there is a constitutional procedure provided for authorizing it which was ignored by General Convention. The method of the administration of the holy communion is carefully spelled out in the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer. Any alteration of that method is an alteration of this rubric, and that is an alteration of the Book of Common Prayer. The constitution of the Church provides that such alteration can only be done by the action of one General Convention which action is certified to the several dioceses, and, after three years, the matter must be voted upon again and passed by the House of Bishops by a constitutional majority, and by the House of Deputies voting by orders. The action of the last Convention was unlawful and dangerous because, if we do not correct this unlawful act other people in the Church will try to legalize their particular desires by the same "short cut" of altering the Book of Common Prayer, and the Church will find itself doing things it will regret.

Any change in the constitution of the Church or the Prayer Book should be made with great deliberation and this the Church insures by her own constitution. Now, all of this I wrote many months ago to the Presiding Bishop and he courteously wrote and said he must take canonical and legal advice. He then became ill to our great regret and so in deference to him, I did nothing further until he had recovered. Upon his recovery I renewed my protest and he rightly pointed out that he alone had no power to pass judgment, but he did believe that there was a point and suggested that I address my protest to the House of Bishops. This I did through the secretary of that House.

The Presiding Bishop has written me most courteously expressing his regret that this matter was not presented at the last meeting and has assured me that he will understand my appeal to the Church, in order to reopen this matter, so that we may follow the provisions so carefully spelled out in our constitution.

I am sure that we are travelling a very dangerous path and I believe that people who care for the peace and order of the Church, should let their bishops know that they desire their leaders to obey the constitution, canons, and the discipline of the Book of Common Prayer and also that they wish the House of Bishops, where the unconstitutional action regarding intinction originated, to correct that error at the two following Conventions, by complying with the constitutional provisions for the alteration of the Book of Common Prayer.

I am sure that unless we have courageous leadership all along the line from our bishops, the mission of the Church in this small portion of the Church, will fail because people will not wish to give for the propagation of a form of Christianity which cannot discipline itself by observing its own regulations, set forth plainly for all to read.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Minister on Lumber Mill Job Also Runs Missions

Replies to Witness Editorial of Success He Has in Working at Both Jobs

★ THE WITNESS for December 28 had an editorial, "Ministers and Work," which stated that many parishes and missions would be better off if their ministers earned his living, or most of it, on a secular job. A number of letters have since appeared in Backfire objecting to the point of view of our editorial. We herewith present the story of a clergyman who writes on the subject from experience, the Rev. Robert R. Read, in charge of two missions in the diocese of Sacramento (see letter in Backfire by Bishop Porter). From here on it is Mr. Read:

I was interested in your editorial on Ministers and Work because I have been doing outside work. First, a little of my background. After four years at Eureka, Calif., I thought that I had given as much as I could; the parish was in excellent shape, financially and otherwise. I resigned because I like mission work. It was rather unusual that after my resignation the vestry let me sit in and help select a new rector. The church at Eureka has grown tremendously under his leadership.

Mission at Vallejo

After I left Eureka, I took over at Vallejo until they secured a new rector. I was offered that position, but declined because the Vallejo and Eureka churches were then about the same size, and, I still liked mission work.

I came to the mission at Dunsmuir and McCloud in May 1948. Dunsmuir was in bad shape, and some $1,000 was owed to the bank—the average congregation was 6. McCloud paid $50 and the diocese of Sacramento paid $50. This was not enough to live on. With Bishop Porter's permission I secured work as a night clerk at one of the hotels in Dunsmuir; seven nights a week and $7.00 per night. It seemed to work out pretty well. I met numbers of people whom I would have never known otherwise. I was taken into the Lions Club. I stayed at that work until the spring of 1949.

Lumber Mill

Then I moved to McCloud, and for some 18 months was a night watchman for the McCloud Lumber Co. That was 5 nights a week. McCloud is a company-owned town. Last fall the church at Dunsmuir had grown to such an extent that I needed more evenings—so I asked for—and was given a day job at the mill. I am now a member of the union (CIO).

During 1949 and 1950 my salary at Dunsmuir has been $37.50 per month; McCloud has stayed at $50 and the diocese at $50 (travel expense). I could have had more from Dunsmuir, but chose to let the congregation pay on the mortgage, which now is around $500. Also for the first time in almost 15 years, the diocesan assessment has been paid in full for 1950. Nothing was paid before this. The congregation has grown to an average 40 on Sunday mornings and the Church school has some 50 pupils and it is growing steadily. Last Sunday there were five new youngsters.

My withholding statement from the company shows that before deductions I received $3,130 for the year 1950.

Conclusions

To sum up—

1. My outside work has not hurt my church work with the exception of less visiting.

2. Both missions have been able to have services almost every Sunday since I arrived. But perhaps most important of all, these missions have been able to have the ministrations of a clergyman. Had I not worked, I doubt that a priest could have been found to come here, unless he had a private income.

3. The reason for the growth at Dunsmuir has been not so much from my efforts, but through the work of a fine staff of Church school teachers and the faithfulness of the members of the congregation.

4. My work at the mill has been interesting as far as my association with the other workers is concerned. At first I was not accepted—one reason being because I wore a collar and tie. But now, all are friendly. I hardly ever take the initiative in talking religion, but the subject is brought up often enough to suit me.

I am now 52 years old and single—was ordained a priest in 1928 in Western Mass. I came to Calif. in 1936. If you would like further information, let me know.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

FIRE OF STARS BROUGHT TO EARTH

★ "The fire of the stars has literally been brought down to earth. The power, if controlled, can bring us the abundant life everywhere; uncontrolled it will bring us to an utterly destroyed world." This statement was made by Prof. Donald H. Andrews, director of the laboratory at Johns Hopkins University and one of the world's leading atomic chemists, in a sermon preached at St. George's, New York.

"We know now that we cannot control material power by material power—from this year on it must be controlled by spiritual power." An atomic vision, he said, is ours as well as atomic energy: there is a universe we may hope for of music as well as of matter. If this power is misused, it has been suggested that it may be necessary, he said, to "shoot all scientists" as the only answer! Of this the speaker was not in favor!

The speaker declared that there is sufficient power in one human body to run the whole U. S. A. for several months. Until a hundred years ago science thought in terms of mechanism, e.g. that the whole was always equal to the sum of its parts. Now we know that "in the music of the spheres we at last find reality—which is not matter, but music."

Our personality, our identity remains, despite the complete atomic change of our bodies every five years. Our bodies, with the hydrogen removed and pressed in an atomic press, would result in something microscopic materially; this was advanced as interesting scientific evidence as to the ultimate non-materialism of man. "The music of inter-relation is the truth physics knows."

MISSIONARY SPEAKS ON CHINA

★ The Rev. Alfred B. Starratt, former missionary to China and now the rector at Stockbridge, Mass., spoke on "Christianity and Communism, a missionary's view of the revolution" on February 19 at Emmanuel, Boston. The meeting was sponsored by the women of the Advent, Trinity and Emmanuel.

BISHOP CONKLING CELEBRATES

★ Bishop Wallace E. Conkling of Chicago, observed the 10th anniversary of his consecration February 24. In keeping with the Lenten season and world conditions the diocesan celebration was confined to a choral evensong of Thanksgiving at 4:30 p m. Sunday, February 25, in St. James' Church at which a combined choir group of more than 400 voices from nine parishes and Seabury-Western Seminary sang.

During the 10 years of Bishop Conkling's episcopate the diocese has freed itself from an indebtedness of one million dollars and the parishes have removed a similar amount of local indebtedness and have spent more than a million dollars on parish buildings and improvements. Nineteen churches have been consecrated, 17 missions have become self-supporting parishes and 12 new mission stations have been started.

The over-all missionary giving of the diocese has increased 75 per cent and diocesan support of college work has increased by more than 200 per cent.

There have been 16,856 confirmations and Bishop Conkling has ordained 52 men to the priesthood. The diocese has restored and rehabilitated the buildings of the Bishop McLaren Foundation, Sycamore, for a conference and retreat center and has established Church centers at the Chicago Medical Center and at Illinois Institute of Technology.

WOMEN'S QUIET DAY IN CHICAGO

cago, the Rev. Harold Courtney; St. Paul's, North Side, the Rev. Ralph J. Deppen; St. Matthias', the Rev. Howard Kennedy; Holy Comforter, the Rev. Joseph B. Williams; Grace, Lenox, Bishop Street.

TRAINING CONFERENCE FOR LAYMEN

★ A conference on lay evangelism was held at Hastings, Nebraska, February 10-11, with Layman Hal G. Perrin, chairman of the committee on laymen's work of the diocese, presiding, and with addresses by Bishop Brinker, Dean Winfield Post of St. Mark's Pro-cathedral, and the Rev. Francis Havill, chairman of the field department of the diocese. Featured were filmstrips and recordings of various phases of Church work. Those present are now to be sent into parishes and missions as a part of a diocesan campaign of evangelism.

LENTEN SERVICES IN CHARLESTON

★ The five Episcopal churches in Charleston, S. C. are jointly sponsoring services on Wednesday evening in Lent, rotating the place of meeting. Preachers are Bishop Campbell of West Virginia, Bishop Gray of Connecticut, Prof. Clifford Stanley of Virginia Seminary, the Rev. John S. Higgins of Providence, the Rev. James Lichliter of Webster Groves, Mo., Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina.

URGE NO STATE TAX ON CHARITIES

★ Representatives of the diocese of New Hampshire appeared before the state legislature to urge the end of an existing tax on legacies to charities. They stated that it is the only state with such a tax and maintained that it was unfair to continue a levy on private charities to provide the state with funds to help support its own welfare agencies. Representatives of the Roman Catholic Church took a similar position.

DAY OF PRAYER IN PARIS

★ The world day of prayer, sponsored by the United Council of Church Women, was observed in the American Pro-Cathedral of Holy Trinity, Paris, France, on February 9th. Delegations from twenty-one churches attended. The service was conducted in both French and English.

PECOS VALLEY DEANERY

★ The problem of distances in the southwest was aptly illustrated at the meeting in Roswell, New Mexico, of the Pecos Valley Deanery of New Mexico and Southwest Texas on February 13. The deanery includes the southeastern section of New Mexico and all of the Big Bend area of Texas. It covers roughly 70,000 square miles, and is manned by seven clergymen. An eighth will be added in June. The towns in this area are few and far between.

In spite of the fact that a blizzard was predicted, there were about eighty registrations representing almost all of the parishes and missions. The longest journey was made by the Rev. Robert Parlour and his delegation from Marfa, Texas, three hundred miles to the south. His field is as big as the state of Maine.

The business meeting was presided over by Mrs. Charles Burns of Roswell, deanery chairman of the Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. J. S. Porcher of El Paso, who is district president, presented the program of the Auxiliary and its organization in the district. The "achievement reports" showed encouraging progress in all branches.

There was scheduled a meeting of the laymen of the deanery, but this had to be cancelled, as only one layman weathered the storm to be present. Besides Bishop Stoney, only four clergymen arrived. Two were held back by threat of snow in the mountain passes and one was absent from the district.

The Rev. Ross R. Calvin, St. James' Church, Clovis, is rural dean of the deanery.

THE PRAYER ON PAGE NINE

★ The Prayer for Peace which is boxed on the editorial page is used at all services at St. George's, New York City, and all members of the clergy staff contributed to its composition.

BISHOP STANG REPORTS FROM CHINA

★ Bishop Stephen H. S. Stang of the O-Hsiang diocese, China, reports in his newsletter of Church-state relations under the new regime in China. He says that there has been a gradual change in the government's attitude toward the Church "from open hostility to relative friendliness." He reports that "the churches have found many ways to cooperate with the government, raising money for government relief funds, offering school rooms for night schools, quartering passing soldiers." He relates how soldiers staying at one church for a period were heard singing Christmas hymns and it was discovered that they had learned them by standing outside windows while services were being held. The soldiers had even undertaken to organize a Bible class of their own, and Bishop Stang says that he knows of several similar Christian groups in government schools.

The Church of the Holy Nativity at Wuchang has raised a large sum for the government project of buying warm clothing for the poor. At St. Andrew's the compound swarms with wharf coolies who are learning their three "Rs" in the government program of mass education. The bishop also reports that at the middle schools, Boone, St. Hilda's, St. Lois' and Hsin Mien "the work goes on well, somewhat altered from former days, with emphasis laid on folk dancing, singing and political courses, and with some time given to work on the new airfield, under the labor program, and other patriotic efforts. The students work hard and continue to pass on from class to class with the hope of college ahead. In most of our country stations, primary schools have been reorganized into popular education classes, much encouraged and appreciated by the local authorities, where faithful teachers prepare the children to meet life conditions and give them the inspiration of our Church. The cathedral kindergarten is flourishing as never before. Education for life in the New China is desired and encouraged."

The bishop's diary has such items as "call on municipal officials"; "called on the governor in Wuchang"; "called on the mayor with diocesan contributions for the relief of the poor"; "circularized all Church leaders, asking them to buy government bonds." The diary also has a number of references to meetings with religious and government officials that resulted in the famous Wu Manifesto, wherein Christians in China are urged to give full cooperation to the Peoples government. The entry for October 25 is "Wu Manifesto translated and sent to Bishop Bentley and to missionaries."

PRAY FOR PEACE IN POTTSTOWN

★ The sound of church bells every noon brings virtually the entire 25,000 residents of Pottstown, Pa., to a halt to pray for peace. For two minutes, shopkeepers, customers, people on the street, children returning from school, pause for silent prayer for peace. The practice has spread to neighboring villages. The idea originated with the Rev. G. A. Lineker of Christ Church, and was fostered by the local ministerial association, which asked that all the 23 churches stay open daily for prayer; that the bells be rung at noon; that every church member spread the "call to prayer" invitation throughout the community. The Jewish congregation is also participating. When asked how long the daily prayers would continue, Mr. Lineker said: "So long as our world situation remains critical."

BASEBALL IS THEME OF BROADCASTS

★ It is likely that baseball fans have been attracted to broadcasts delivered over a station in Aberdeen, Miss., each Sunday afternoon in Lent. His subjects are: "You can't steal first base"; "You can't earn a base on balls"; "How you play shows what you are"; "Don't die on third"; "A sacrifice can win"; "The influence of death upon life"; "Easter is every day."

They are being given by the Rev. Charles G. Hamilton, a regular broadcaster over the station, who has built up an audience of several hundred thousand.

DEPARTMENT OF SPORTS

★ An eight-team basketball tournament of teams representing Episcopal Churches in the district of Salina will be held at St. John's School, March 10th. The following churches will be represented: Grace Church, Hutchinson; Christ Cathedral, Salina; St. John's, Wichita; St. James, Wichita; the Bavaria unit of St. Francis Boys Homes; Holy Apostles, Ellsworth; two teams of St. John's School.

PARISH BUYS NEW SITE

★ St. Paul's, Salem, Oregon, has just purchased an entire city block for $50,000 as a site for a new plant. There is ample room for church, parish house, rectory, with space for off-street parking. It is in a residential section facing the large city park. Early construction is contemplated unless delayed by war conditions.

LOS ANGELES ELECTS MRS. COOMBS

★ Los Angeles has elected Mrs. St. Elmo L. Coombs of Pasadena to the executive council of the diocese, the first woman to so serve. Canons were amended to provide that the president of the Auxiliary, an office she now holds, shall be an ex-officio member of the council.

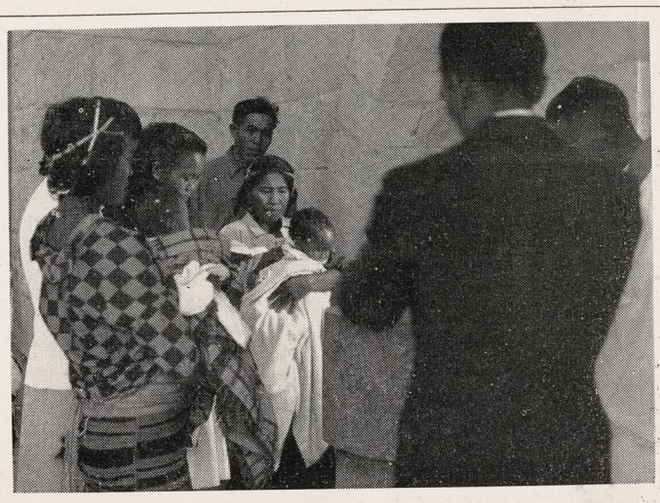
COUNCIL ASSEMBLY PLANS ANNOUNCED

★ Tentative plans for the second assembly of the World Council of Churches, to be held in Evanston, Illinois, in 1953 have been announced by the general secretary, W. A. Visser 't Hooft. The major theme will be "Jesus Christ as Lord is the only hope of both the Church and the world." A commission headed by President Henry P. Van Dusen of Union Seminary has been appointed to prepare the basic document which will be sent to the 600 delegates to serve as the starting point for discussions. The document will "seek to state clearly and simply what the essential message of the Churches is, and in what ways we can have that message presented." It is expected to "deal concretely with the specific challenges to the Church which come from the vast bodies and movements of men which are against or outside the Christian Church."

The assembly will also deal with the Church and society, education, faith and order, race relations, evangelism, the function of the laity, international relations.

SEWANEE RECEIVES LARGE FUND

★ The Episcopal-owned University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., has become the joint beneficiary of an educational trust established by Mrs. Alfred I. duPont of Jacksonville, Fla., and Wilmington, Del. Sewanee is to receive a 35% share in stocks currently valued at $1,850,000, with Washington & Lee University and Hollins College receiving 35% and 30%, respectively, when certain life interests terminate.



Present income from the trust is being distributed among 33 persons ranging in age from 54 to 86 years. As each annuity terminates, the income will be prorated among the three schools and final division of the trust will take place when all annuities have been settled.

The trust is in addition to over $250,000 already given by Mrs. duPont and marks her as the largest benefactor in the history of the university, according to Bishop Frank A. Juhan of Florida, recent chancellor of the university and present chairman of its campaign for $5,000,000. At the end of 1950, the fund total stood at slightly over $2,000,000, the bishop said. Final goal of the drive is to secure $2,000,000 for buildings and $3,000,000 for permanent endowment.

In making the gift, Mrs. duPont expressed feeling that privately endowed institutions of learning have important contributions to make to our freedom and democracy.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HAS SPECIAL PREACHERS

★ The Rev. Theodore C. Speers, noted Presbyterian of New York, is the noonday preacher this week at St. Bartholomew's, New York. The Rev. Thorne Sparkman, rector of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr, Pa., is the preacher next week, with Dean John J. Weaver of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, preaching the week of March 5th. The parish is also featuring forums each Tuesday evening in Lent.

FACULTY EPISCOPALIANS HAVE MEETING

* Episcopalians who are on college faculties met at Vassar College, February 9-11, with forty-two present, all teaching in the second province. Virginia D. Harrington of Barnard was chairman. Dean Lawrence Rose of General gave two lectures on theology. He cautioned the academicians: "Theology is one discipline among many. It requires consistency, rigor, and honesty. The danger is that one can be a master of theology and still be no servant of God. Theology is a total discipline transcending other fields of endeavor; to attempt to force other fields to come to terms with theology would be another form of idolatry. If we are to relate our theology to our work without danger, we as people must relate ourselves to God—we must know redemption by Jesus Christ and must be transformed." In conclusion, Dean Rose said: "We want people to believe that their belief in the gospel is tolerable without the theological superstructure, but to believe in the superstructure alone is to put one's faith in an ideology."

The Rev. Otis R. Rice, chaplain of Saint Luke's Hospital, gave two lectures on "Psychological insights in religious counselling." He emphasized the need for counsellors to have an abiding reverence for the integrity of the client, pointing out the danger of making decisions for the person, of giving advice, and of making judgments. A second principle for counselling, said Chaplain Rice, is an attitude of faith that the forces of life are to be trusted. An attitude of understanding is also required to create a permissive relationship between counsellor and counselee. The counsellor must be aware how the client really feels, and be honest enough to know when the situation requires the assistance of an expert to whom the client should be referred. Lastly, the counsellor must be honest with himself and know how he is getting along with the client. When they reach an impasse, he must be willing to ask what is wrong with himself, not with the client. With these principles—as a basis, Chaplain Rice went on to discuss actual counselling experiences which had been submitted anonymously by delegates.

In his second session, Chaplain Rice considered short contact counselling. Using the old railroad caution sign "Stop, Look and Listen," he drew a parallel for each word in terms of counselling: Stop messing and learn the facts about the person and the situation; observe his behavior, including facial expressions, posture, and muscle tensions; and listen intelligently to what he says. In cases of short contact Chaplain Rice advised the faculty members first of all to establish a firm enough basis for a relationship so that the student feels the door is open for him to return if he so chooses.

A celebration of the Holy Communion was held Sunday morning for the conference at Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, by the Rev. Robert E. Terwilliger, rector, and a breakfast was served following the service. A general business meeting with discussion of student work and projects in the province, and plans for future faculty conferences concluded the conference Sunday noon.

DIOCESE CONDEMNS FEDERAL COUNCIL

★ The convention of Upper South Carolina, meeting at Rock Hill January 23-24, approved the report of a committee previously set up to study the Federal Council of Churches which is now a part of the National Council of Churches. "Our concern about the Federal Council," the report states, "and also our fear for its successor, the N. C. C. C. A., is two-fold. First, many times the Federal Council has passed resolutions, or its members have made public utterances with the stated or implied conclusion that theirs was the Christian view, and tnat any other view was un-Christian, upon controversial questions on which sincere Christians differ. Second, the Federal Council has followed a definite policy of promoting and advocating political action on matters involving economic questions, social relations, labor relations, race relations, and similar matters upon which there exists widespread differences of opinion. Your committee does not believe that these activities further the cause of Christian unity, and we therefore present the following resolutions:

'Be it resolved that the diocese of Upper South Carolina views with great concern the actions and utterances of the Federal Council and its representatives with reference to controversial economic and social litigation and legislation:

'That it is the sincere conviction of this diocese that such activity, utterances and course of conduct is doing far more harm than good by giving rise to dissention and division of opinion among the Churches composing the Council and that the primary and basic objectives of the Council are being thereby impaired.

'That a copy of this report be forwarded to the Presiding Bishop who is now president of the N. C. C. C. A which embraces the Federal Council, with the earnest request that he use his great influence to put an immediate and permanent stop to such activities on the part of the N. C. C. C. A.'"

The chairman of the committee submitting the report and the resolution was the Rev. Capers Satterlee, rector of the Advent, Spartanburg, and the secretary was the Rev. A. G. Branwell Bennett, rector of St. Timothy's, Columbia.

EDITORIALS

Voices for Peace

IT is vastly encouraging to find a non-Christian, Nehru of India, now joined by the World Council of Churches, representative agency of 158 Christian denominations, in lifting a not uncertain voice for peace. Insisting that "the least chance of negotiations" must be seized lest the present crisis lead to a war psychosis and an armament race and precipitate a general conflict, its executive committee recently stated, "Every possible effort must be made to meet the challenge of totalitarian Communism by means other than war." We prayerfully hope that it is not too late for the President of the United States, his generals and the Senate to give heed. The message sets forth what should be obvious to anyone, Christian or pagan; force alone cannot overcome Communism but rearmament may very well produce the conditions in which Communism thrives. The document also calls upon the Churches to use "all possible influence" to place all national armaments under international control. For this bold and Christlike utterance we give thanks in a day of increasing madness and congratulate the World Council on its witness to sanity.

A PRAYER FOR PEACE

O GOD, Father of us all, we pray for power to bring thy peace on earth. Amid the confusions and cruelties of today, help us to draw close to thee in quietness so that we may understand the failings within us that create bitterness and war. Deliver us from being satisfied with ourselves, and keep us from suspicion, prejudice, and hate. Inspire the leaders of all nations, especially our President and his advisers, with a vision of thy kingdom of brotherhood. Be with the men and women serving in the armed forces. Comfort those who are frightened, homesick or wounded. Strengthen the doctors, nurses, and chaplains who seek to help them. We pray for our enemies in their griefs and hardships. Fill them and us with thy spirit of tenderness and love. Unite us all in looking forward to that day when we shall be changed from foes to friends, working together to serve thee and to build thy peace in all the world. We ask it in the name of him who came to bring men peace, thy Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Voice Validictory

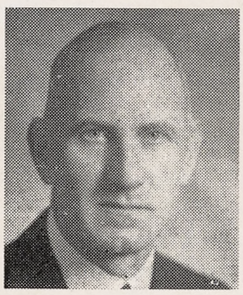
CHRISTENDOM, a journal of Christian sociology, is no more. This slim English quarterly was born during the great depression and has expired in what may come to be known as the age of suppression. The little band of Anglican thinkers known as "the Christendom group," who are still investigating the social implications of the Oxford movement, have not been able to call forth adequate social response from the Church of England.

The best salute to Christendom's passing is an estimate of its position. "Let us repeat," says the final editorial, "for the thousandth (and it is to be hoped, the last) time that if we go back to the Middle Ages it is precisely because, in our view, it is from there that we can hope to go forward."

Christendom is more than a catchy title for these men. Their whole thought is based on this medieval ideal of a society completely pervaded by Christianity.

May we suggest that it may be necessary to go back even farther in Christian history if we ever hope to go forward? Bishop Gore seems to have thought so, back in 1924: "'Established Christianity,' whether in the civilized Roman Empire or in half-barbarous tribes or in modern nations—the sort of Christianity which claims to embrace the whole society, which it costs men nothing to profess, and into which children are practically baptized as a matter of course —appears to be as audacious a departure from the method of Christ as can well be conceived . . . What price was paid for the assistance of the strong arm of emperors and kings we know . . . The average moral level had become what it is today."

Bishop Sherrill echoed this at San Francisco in 1949: "When the Church was formally recognized by the Roman state something of the heroic, the daring, the distinctive was lost from the Christian witness and in general, with notable exceptions, of groups and especially of individuals, this loss has never been repaired."



Christendom (both the group and the idea) ignores the tension between the Church and the world. Christianity retained that tension for only three centuries; the recovery of it is long overdue. In his good time the Spirit will move us to "the fundamental ethical reform," in relation to property and politics, for which Bishop Gore called. In the meantime we can do worse than study the ages when it was extremely uncomfortable to bear the name Christian. Certainly it is becoming increasingly evident that to bear the name today, and act on conviction, does not make for smug and comfortable living, here or elsewhere. However our certain hope is that we shall see the Son of Man coming with power and great glory.

Those Who Hunger After Righteousness

BY
JOSEPH H. TITUS
Rector of Grace Church, Jamaica, N. Y.
and a Witness Editor

IN the first article of this series we read that the Beatitudes are those things which we, as Christians, should be at. True. But the emphasis of the fourth Beatitude is not on action or achievement. It is quite different from the others (with the possible exception of the sixth — Blessed are the pure in heart) in being a commendation of an attitude rather than an action. Yes, an attitude; "Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?" Sincere aim is worthy in itself if it is directed to a proper goal. But it is even more than that here; "passionate desire" could almost be a paraphrase, for the hunger and thirst that Jesus' hearers knew was something cruelly real that most of us, in well-fed America, have little comprehension of.

The Divine Imperative

IT was Jesus' purpose to make men; his teachings are laced through with the divine imperative that men should be men. The late Alfred J. Nock once wrote an article titled, "Are all Men Human?" His conclusion was a profound doubt; he felt few had attained the level of humanity. That doubt creeps into our minds as we survey this earthly scene. Amiel, too, wrote, "We are not born human beings; we are candidates for humanity." The greatest marks of a human being, that which sets him off from the animals, are his dreams, his aims, his consciousness of values beyond him. Thus Eucken, the German philosopher: "If a man enters into and conforms to the spiritual life, he becomes what he was meant to be, a son of God; but if he refuses the life of the Spirit he cuts himself off from it, he sinks into what he was not meant to be. He loses the characteristics of humanity; he sinks, as it were, to the level of the lower species."

In other words the goal is to achieve humanity. Today's goals are not that nor realistic. We live in a world of perverted values; an Alice standing-on-her-head world. President Conant of Harvard, with apparent passivity, recognizes this when he states that we must gird ourselves "for an indefinite period of hate." A field commander in Korea confided to the press, "My men are good for fighting now. They have learned to hate." Such a forthright statement finds its parallel in the army's successful efforts to "educate" combat dogs in the last war. Domesticated pets were put through a course of discipline which made then ferocious and dangerous. The only consoling element is that, after the war, it took less time to de-condition these former friends of man and restore them to their natural state. Perhaps this was because, as Menninger, in "Love Against Hate," offers strong evidence from the purely psychological viewpoint; hate is a perversion of man's (and his best friend's) deepest self. So the means are false. Hate is always an imbecilic and fraudulent motivation. Our leaders today both in this country and others, seem, alas, to have enthusiastically adopted sheer physical force and its concomitant hate as the sole answer to our needs. No wonder that we are in a neurotic state! Deep in our hearts we feel this is false and self-defeating—and the conflict in ourselves which ensues shows itself in our fear neurosis. We simply cannot be content or happy or "blessed" in being less than that which God has planned for us.

A Sad Fact

IT is sad commentary on the so-called "Christian" nations that those who are desperately seeking a way out of our present self-inflicted crisis without using physical (military) force are the non-Christian nations: India and the Arab states! It should also give us pause to hear an avowed agnostic, Bertrand Russell, remind us of the answer we are constantly professing but as constantly denying in our actions. Said he, "The root of the matter (if we want a stable world) is a very simple and old-fashioned thing, a thing so simple that I am almost ashamed to mention it, for fear of the derisive smile with which the cynics will greet my words. The thing I mean is love, Christian love, or compassion. If you feel this you have a motive for existence, a guide for action, a reason for courage, an imperative necessity for intellectual honesty."

As Christians we cannot permit ourselves to be swept off our feet by the current and prevalent deviation from, if not complete contradiction of, the fourth Beatitude. We are told on all sides that we must hunger and thirst for sufficient force, at any cost in life or treasure, to be in a position to negotiate with our enemies. What do our enemies do meanwhile? Whatever our leaders say, we cannot temporize with their amnesia in regard to the Master's words, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness." Can the leaders of world policy today begin their pronouncements with, "In the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit?" If they cannot, they should be called to account now. They will be inevitably, for they violate God's will.

Function of Church

WE can believe through faith and evidence that man's innate desires and urges are not ipso facto basically wrong—or the Christian gospel is all wrong. They have gone destructively astray because the goal and the means of attaining it have been mistaken to the point of absurdity. The function of the Church is to provide true goals and means insistently and incessantly. Too often the Church (where else shall we find guidance?) has failed in this. It has imagined that the will to be good is enough, and offered no strong working stimulus for us to be infinitely better. Conscious of this, it has encouraged its devotees to find a comfortable way out—a too easy sublimation—in urging them to confess that they are miserable sinners in a large and vague sense. Thus it has provided for them a deceptive sense of security—but a vastly troubled one.

To be sure we are miserable sinners; but to admit that is only the first step. Then what to do? Confession must lead to action or it is worse than worthless. It is sinfully incomplete. It is not that we have no precedent. All the spiritually great have suggested and acted upon the sequence. Freed of their guilt, they have come down into the market-places and attacked the false goals of the world with unrelenting vigor. They have faced clear-eyed the enemy; Godless materialism—the exaggerated and calamitous concern of men with the things of this world. It was heartening to have our Bishops recognize the real foe when, in the El Paso Pastoral, they stated, "The immediate and obvious enemy of western civilization is Russian Communism, but the deepest enemy is Godless materialism which bred the illusions and cynicism of Communism and weakens us from within . . . With Communists there are members of all nations who share false and evil convictions." These illusions are that "Man's economic activity is his most important activity (and) the more material things we possess the happier we will be as people." Shades of the American Century! That hits us where we live.

In his arresting book, "Psychoanalysis and Religion," Erich Fromm says the same thing: "As a collective and potent form of idolatry we find the worship of power, of success and of the authority of the market." And elsewhere, "Devotion to an aim, or an idea, or a power transcending man, such as God, is an expression of this need for completeness in the process of living." For completeness substitute blessedness and you have it.

Our Apathy

THE wide-spread apathy, the result of a fatalistic acceptance of things as they are ("What can one do? Disaster is inevitable.") is a resultant of a lack of strong, realistic goals today. It is not wishful thinking to say that the great majority of decent men are not fooled by the hysterical out-bursts of the super-patriots who have erected the image of Communism as mankind's only enemy—and the FBI will get you if you don't agree. Men feel, generally, even when they do not reason, that this is a stupid deception on the part of stupid men who mistake the symptom for the disease. The disease, increasingly malignant, is Godless materialism. It does lie far deeper and is universal. With its failure to do aught but incite economic and seething unrest (vide the East and Africa) it provides the swamp in which the fetid plant Communism can flourish. Witlessly, it is Communism's best friend.

If the apathetic, the fatalistic, the aimless, the deceived, the fearful are to be roused and set on the right path they must be confronted with a clear and compelling goal. "If we are going to increase our courage and decrease our fears, we must take each of the fear-toned stimuli and attach it to some other emotion." The only practical emotion, meaning that which works for the benefit of mankind, is the stern quality of love which Jesus taught and lived as law: the righteousness, the justice of God. For love without these is a negligible thing.

This love has naught to do with sentimentalism. Gentleness, kindness—yes, even compassion—are not of its essence. They are inevitable by-products. His love has a tough quality if rightly presented as the relentless law which governs the spiritual and social universe. It is the compulsive and inviolable principle of equity and humanity. It is the only possible stimulus that can move men to achieve well-being. Hard and exacting, it can and must become the motivation that will fire men to action. It can never consent to be quiescent or tolerant any more than the law of gravity can. It seizes on man's aggressive instinct and bids him fight without quarter. It disclaims and abhors the weapons, the futile armaments, which doltish men have reverted to, for it knows that they are both ineffectual and a two-edged sword. They end only by destroying the destroyer; such is the lesson of history. It cannot forget, however men may try to, the weapons against which naught can prevail; truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the gospel of peace, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, the sword of the Spirit. Not all of these are defensive armament. It recognizes the necessity for an offensive against the universal enemy of all mankind—Mammon; Godless materialism. For the all-out assault on this it utters a clarion call to the battle; a warfare for which men, tragically unaware of this cancer in their social body, have not yet been sufficiently excited. "Ye that are men now serve him, against unnumbered foes. Let courage rise with danger, and strength to strength oppose," has been set to "a tune we love to sing," emasculated; ignoring the grim and resolute words.

Righteousness is conformity to the divine will —the divine imperative from which there is no escape. Justice, exacting, is inseparable from it. "The Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment and God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness." Amen; there is none else.

Not a Lullaby

THE BEATITUDES are not a lullaby or sweet and comforting promises to be framed in a garland of forget-me-nots—and forgotten. They are a manifesto flung in the face of our crafty and ancient foe armed with cruel hate by a God who is a mighty fortress. That foe is Godless materialism. When men are stirred to realize this they will throw themselves into the conflict, realizing that their present man-made struggles are hideous deceptions in which they go down to inglorious defeat, tragedy and death. They will join the captain of salvation for a fight to the finish, battling for the God of righteousness—for on earth is not his equal. They will hunger and thirst with enthusiasm—for the attainable end is at last clear; they shall be filled.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What are the great marks of a human being?
2. Do you think that the so-called Christian nations have acted better than the non-Christian in the present world crisis?
3. What is the function of the Church?
4. What do you consider the greatest weakness of Christians today?
5. What does hungering after righteousness require of us today, at home and overseas?

The Joyousness of Living

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder and First Editor of The Witness

DISCIPLESHIP of our Lord is more an attitude of heart and mind than it is either a state of respectability or a record of achievement.

We must take God's own method of revealing himself to us if we would thoroughly test this.

It is as though a man of great position and wealth wished to test the loyalty of his friends, and so, clothing himself in poverty and throwing around himself the cloak of seeming failure, he goes to his onetime friends for their help and comfort.

In reality he is as prosperous as ever, but he seems to be insolvent that he may test all those professions of friendship which he has received in the high estate which he has attained.

He even allows himself to become an object of ridicule and contempt and does many things which are not the way in which they are done in the best circles.

He puts on the livery of poverty and walks in ways that seem eccentric and permits diverse humiliations to be heaped upon him.

Surely he separates those who love him from those who use him, and those who will suffer with him from those who merely would prosper with him.

Christ Tests Humanity

SO Christ tested humanity down to the last man —he tried out the twelve who had been with him when he was loved and admired of men because of his mighty works, and he permitted them to deny him and to desert him when he reached the bottom of his humiliation.

He scaled his friends down to St. John and the Marys and then received back St. Peter with the words that must have revived sad memories—"Simon, lovest thou me?"

I think it is fair to say that our Christian fellowship is more an attitude of the heart and mind than a matter of respectability and achievement.

Neither the beggar at the rich man's gate, nor the fallen woman in Simon's doorway, nor she who gave the two farthings, nor he who was crucified beside him could boast much of either respectability or achievement, but they were all forgiven much, because they loved much.

And the measure of their love was that none of these were ashamed of that love when others derided it.

Love is something which will not bear statistical investigation and cannot be recorded in a parochial year book.

It is not necessarily associated with culture, morals or orthodoxy.

It is the attitude of heart and mind which causes a human soul to count all else but loss.

It is a force that can constrain the outcast and the criminal to climb mountains of transfiguration reckless of privations.

It is a force that is true to Christ when all others fall away and hangs on to the cross even when the power of God seemingly has failed.

It has been the most persistent, aggressive motive that has ever stimulated men to spread the gospel of human kindness.

It is the one thing needful in our personal contact to make the religion of Christ an irresistible influence in society.

The Love of Christ

HIS power wanes and waxes strong just in proportion as he can command that kind of love which is faithful in all things; which is more concerned that Christ may be glorified than it is that the individual himself may be praised of men.

This quality which St. Paul calls the love of Christ may be possessed by any one who will persistently seek it and, when once acquired, will admit the possessor into the very best society that graces the courts of heaven; will endow him with the only riches which are imperishable and will enthuse him with a joy that no man can deprive him of.

It is a rare quality because few there be that seek it, and yet one has to glance at any one who has attained it to realize that he has found a treasure from which he would not and cannot be separated.

It is apparent to all men who look at the faces of those who have attended material success that they do not know joy, for who would look for joy in the directors of a large corporation or in the frequenters of social conventions.

Their faces betray the fact that they have not found what they sought; nay, rather that they have lost what as children they once possessed.

Where Joy is Found

JOY is not found as a rule in the homes of those who have amassed wealth even though they are surrounded with every conceivable material comfort, but joy can be found by any pastor in the homes where Christ is much beloved, and it is a joy that no man taketh from them.

Many people tell me that they get no joy in their religion when it is apparent that they have missed the source of joy.

If you will question them further you will find that Christ is not a living reality, a real person who can hear their prayers.

But surely if the human voice can carry from New York to Chicago by radio, the Son of God has no difficulty in hearing our prayers.

And if we are really seeking the love of Christ we will not confuse prayer with teasing God for something.

Permit me to suggest that at least three times a day you will use some such prayer as this:

O Christ! I believe in thee because thou art so true!

O Christ! I hope in thee because thou art so good!

O Christ! I love thee, because thou art so kind!

O Christ! I am sorry that I have been unworthy of thy love for me!

Inject into your religion, that which Christ brought into the world—the possibility of personal converse between God and man.

Make Christ's presence in your life such a reality that when you are thinking a wrong thought or harboring a mean sentiment, you are at once conscious that he sees you.

The Presence of Christ

MAKE his presence so real that when you fall into sin and do that which grieves him, you are as conscious of our Lord's pained look as was St. Peter beside the fire.

Practice the presence of Christ at each eucharist so that his promise to dwell in you may be the most real thing in your life that day.

We all must be profoundly conscious of our unworthiness the moment that the beauty of his holiness becomes the greatest reality in our lives.

Then we find our joy in serving him—in feeling that perhaps he may approve.

Then we find our help in feeling that he is near to care, to understand, to help.

Then we find the world, not a dreary thing ending in a cemetery but a wondrously beautiful thing ending in the fellowship of Jesus Christ.

No morals, no orthodoxy, no culture, can take the place of our personal sense of the presence of Jesus Christ in our lives.

Brothers of the Faith

(with apologies to C. S. Lewis)

BY
RANDOLPH CRUMP MILLER
Professor at Church Divinity School of the Pacific

DURING the past week, a series of significant letters was received. They are the correspondence between two well-known people: one is a great power in the underworld, and it is his responsibility to see that men be kept away from the right relationship with God. His name, Screwtape, was made known to all the world by C. S. Lewis. The other is a junior assistant working in the churches and in the state to bring about loyalty to Screwtape, and his name is Wormwood. In the first letter, Wormwood is asking Screwtape for advice:

I

Dear Screwtape:

I am concerned about newspaper advertising. The great dailies are refusing to include such words as "Catholic," "Gentile," "restricted," and other qualifying phrases in their advertisements of houses for rent. This seems to me an advance of the Enemy toward brotherhood. We still control the bowling association, but you know what Jackie Robinson has done to us in baseball. I understand there will be about 20 colored men playing in the major leagues next season.

Our greatest victory a year ago, upon which I have already reported, was when two Church colleges called off their football game because there were Negroes on one team. This led to bitter feelings and editorial comments in the Church press, but we did not get as big a play in the daily papers as we had hoped for.

We have not been able to obtain Jim Crow sections on airplanes, but we have maintained separate toilet facilities at southern airports. The Jim Crow cars on trains are about the same as ever, for there is lots of old equipment. To refresh your Satanic mind on these conditions, I quote from a leading Negro:

"Usually there is no heat in winter and no air in summer: with undisturbed loafers and train hands, and broken, disreputable settees . . . The car is up next to the baggage car and engine. Usually there is no step to help you climb on, and often the car is a smoker cut in two, and you must pass through the white smoker or else they pass through your part, with swagger and noise and stares . . . It is difficult to get lunch or clean water. Lunch rooms either 'don't serve niggers' or serve them through some dirty, ill-attended hole in the wall. As for toilet rooms—don't."

We are having trouble with restrictive covenants. But while the courts will throw them out, most white people sign them surreptitiously, and are gentlemen enough not to break the agreement. Once in a while someone breaks through, but we can rely on the neighbors to make things uncomfortable for them, and of course the real estate agents are on the alert for dummy purchasers.

Our old techniques are working well, but the Enemy has been able to raise up strong leaders among the inferior races. My chief worry is the south. Jackie Robinson has become a great drawing card when the Dodgers play in southern cities. Marian Anderson sang before a mixed group in Houston. And even the churches, where we thought we were safest, have had unsegregated congregations at special services and convocations in southern areas.

Perhaps you, in your exalted wisdom, can give me some Hellish information that I may use to our advantage against the Enemy.

Ever, your obedient slave,

Wormwood.

II

Dear Wormwood:

I note with some dismay the advances of the Enemy, especially in the field of sports. We can thank our Self that the Enemy has not been nearly so successful in his own Body, the Church.

I think we shall have to use more subtle means, for thus the people are off guard and we can regain our losses more easily. One technique that never fails is the motto: "Be kind to Negroes." It sounds like "Be kind to animals," and the churches always fall for it, especially on their nefarious "Race Relations Sunday." We have used this system many times, especially among more "enlightened" congregations, and it usually destroys the perspective of the group. There was a nice old lady named Miss Lucy who did everything right. She was sweet and kind and so was her family. All the Negroes who lived with her believed that all white people were nice, and they knew all of their own race were not nice. I remember one isolated Negro who had grown up with white people, and the first time he went to a church for Negroes, he wrote:

"I expected to hear regular church music, such as would be sung by white people, and written, I supposed, by white people. These other were Negro songs, and we had come to Hampton to learn something better."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

So he soon became spoiled for our cause, as he discovered that there were things created by Negroes which deserved outstanding attention. This was a set-back for us.

So let us "be kind to animals," I mean "to Negroes," and then we can keep them in their place. We can let people get sentimental about the color problem, for that gets their emotions out of their systems without doing anything constructive about them. The best place to work on this sentimentalism is in the Church, where they can pray about it, as long as they keep them in their place.

When a Negro comes to a "be kind to Negroes" church, we can usually count on these sentimental people to be so kind that they will scare them away.

But, Wormwood, the Enemy is making advances against our Hellish plans for baseball. This man Robinson has upset my calculations, for he is a fine athlete and a practicing Christian, which makes him a No. 1 enemy of the Legions of Hell. All we can do is hope that some of our agents will manipulate a situation which will undo the harm he has done to us.

However, we can still continue our emphasis on the menial work of Negroes. Let us retreat gracefully before the athletic prowess of Robinson, Joe Louis, and Jesse Owens, and let us admit that the accident of physical vocal cords can produce a Marian Anderson, Carol Brice, Dorothy Maynor, or Roland Hayes, and let us admit that African rhythm can give a Duke Ellington or Count Basie. Then we can counter-attack by soft-pedalling the intellectual and spiritual attainments of the race. Even people fully in the Enemy's camp will swallow the idea that Negroes have low "I. Q's." I suggest you follow this lead for the present.

Ever, your Satanic Lord and Master,

Screwtape.

III

Dear Screwtape:

I'm in a heaven of a mess. I followed your suggestion of discounting the Negro I. Q. through a speaker at a Christian American meeting, and the rebuttal made by some chance member of the crowd was remarkable. He happened to be a powerful and convincing speaker. He got the floor because he appeared to be white, and he said:

"Have you ever heard of Dr. DuBois, a graduate of Fiske and Harvard Universities? He did research on conditioning among Negroes, showed there were no more criminals among them than among whites, except due to conditions forced on them by ignorance and poverty; he established the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; he wrote many stories, showing the problems and the genius of his own people.

"Did you know that one of the charter members of the American College of Surgery was a Negro, Dr. Daniel Hale Williams, along with the Mayo brothers? He founded a hospital in Chicago, trained many white and colored surgeons, and performed the first successful surgical closure of a stab wound of the heart and pericardium."

And, my Master Screwtape, this interloper went on to list great men like Dr. Robert Russa Moten, head of Tuskegee; Samuel Taylor-Coleridge, the famous composer; Bishop Richard Allen, the great church leader; and Frederick Douglass, the greatest orator of them all. He had the people in the hollow of his hand as he exploded our myth about Negro inability to achieve great heights. And he won them to himself. And then he concluded by telling them that although he looked white, he also was a Negro. What can I do against this kind of attack?

Our work among the churches is progressing. We still have a separate Negro convocation among the Methodists, and most churches maintain Negro congregations even in the north. We are doing well in keeping Negroes out of hospitals, but are having some trouble with restaurants. The covenants are holding up well in spite of the courts. But lynchings are falling off, and the Enemy is making real advances in the South, where some white people have worked with the colored people to provide intelligent leadership.

I was shocked today when I read a letter sent to John Oxenham, who writes hymns for the Enemy:

"This is being written somewhere in the Pacific. I feel you may like to hear about a rather unique service on board today. It was led by a Swede, a Brigadier in the Salvation Army, who spoke of his work in famine relief in China, among lepers in the East Indies, and head-hunters and cannibals in the Celebes. His audience consisted of British, Americans, Chinese, two Germans, and one Italian. We began and ended the meeting by singing, 'In Christ there is no East or West.' A meeting like this fills me with hope for the future."

We received quite a set-back when Oxenham's hymn was set to music to a Negro tune, arranged by a Negro composer and singer in a mixed choir, a man named Harry Burleigh. What effect will this have on our campaign? Please tell me my next step.

Your submissive but fire-eating slave,

Wormwood.

IV

Dear Wormwood:

Do not worry too much about the speech made by the representative of the Enemy. We can battle facts, because we rely on emotions to smother truth. It is prejudice (which means prejudging) which gives strength to our cause, and when it is backed by hatred (which is emotional and akin to fear) the facts will not be considered.

You must do something to undercut this Oxenham hymn, though, for if people sing those words to a moving tune, they will change their attitudes in time. And I hear that it is being sung by children as well as adults throughout the world. That stanza bothers me:

"Join hands, then, brothers of the faith,
whate'er your race or ism,
Who loves the Enemy as a son,
Is surely kin to him."

That's what we have to battle, Wormwood. You are doing a good job for Hell, but you must watch the churches. The Enemy gives power to those who really serve him, and he guides them to overcome their prejudices and shortcomings. He has people believing that Jesus was a Jew, and this has hurt our anti-Semitism. He has people believing all people were created equal. So watch this hymn, my boy, for it is full of dynamite. Otherwise, continue as you are, and you can be sure that we will make the Enemy uncomfortable.

Your Satanic uncle,

Screwtape.

Threat of Bureaucracy

BY

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

EVERY month or so, I receive a nicely-printed magazine from Spiritual Mobilization, Inc., informing me that the Goliath of big government is ready to sweep me over the brink of economic chaos. Now I am getting another newspaper, called Christian Economics, which has adopted the same theme.

Faith and Freedom, which is the title of the Mobilizer's trade journal, apparently has two major targets. The first is taxes, individual and corporate. I have, as yet, never been bothered on this score since five sons serve to give me exemptions.

The second target is bureaucracy in government. Up to now, I have thought that the Mobilizer's editors have been flaying a dead horse. Now I'm not so sure.

Recently, President Truman appointed Bishop Karl Block of California and Episcopal layman Harvey Firestone to a new Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights, which is chaired by Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz. This commission, in the President's views, is to examine present laws, practices and procedures, both public and private, for the bearing they have not only on the nation's security, but also on the protection of individuals from "unwarranted attacks and from unwarranted infringement of their rights and liberties in the name of security."

As one who, in the past, has affiliated, and probably, in the future, will affiliate with unpopular causes, I am now listening to the Mobilizer's warnings against bureaucracy with interest. The menace of big government is definitely a threat.

Everybody, and his brother, seems to be in the business of investigation for the government. Up to the beginning of February, the roll-call was something like this: The Subversive Activities Control Board (created under the McCarran act); the Federal Loyalty Review Board which has subordinate Loyalty Boards for all governmental executive departments; the House Committee on Un-American Activities; the Civil Service Commission; the Federal Bureau of Investigation; many state committees and agencies, including sundry boards of regents of land-grant colleges; and a new Senate sub-committee to be headed, of all things, by Senator Pat McCarran himself.

The new President's commission very definitely is ordered to respect the rights of the individual citizen (a small matter which, from past history, is outside the field of concern of the others) but it is entering into a crowded field. Investigators are bound to get mixed-up, confused and lost.

Maybe the ideal solution would be for every person, who thinks he is being investigated, to sponsor a tea party, inviting representatives of each exploratory agency, and give them all the information at one time. I reason that such a procedure would save the government many thousands of dollars in travel expenses, undercover work and duplicated reports. This money saved could then be added to the atomic research budget and constructively used to discover how to blow the Spiritual Mobilizers, the various investigators, me and my five sons out of this world.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

SOUTH CAROLINA LAYMEN MEET

★ The annual meeting of the laymen's association of South Carolina was held at St. Philip's, Charleston, February 11th, with 300 present. It opened with a supper, followed by a service conducted entirely by laymen, and then by address by Morton O. Nace, head of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Others to speak were Bishop Carruthers and Harold S. Reeves, new president of the association.

ELLIOTT'S PLAY AT EPIPHANY

★ "Murder in the Cathedral," based on T. S. Elliott's novel, was presented at the Epiphany, Washington, February 16 and 17 by the Columbia Players. As readers know, it is a dramatization of the death of Thomas a Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was murdered in Canterbury Cathedral in 1170 by knights of the court of Henry 2nd.

EVANGELICAL APPEAL IN PROTESTANTISM

★ Dean Walter G. Muelder of Bishop University was the speaker at the breakfast of Massachusetts laymen, following the corporate communion at St. Paul's Cathedral on Washington's Birthday. He spoke on the evangelical appeal of Protestantism.

NEW MANAGER OF CORPORATION

★ James H. Comley has been elected vice-president and manager of the Church Fire Insurance Corporation, succeeding the late Everard C. Stokes, killed in the railroad accident of February 6th. Mr. Comley has been assistant manager of the company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Church Pension Fund, for many years. It carries fire and related insurance on the property of the Episcopal Church.

FAITH AND ORDER CONFERENCE

★ The Episcopal Church will be asked to send five delegates to the third world conference on Faith and Order at Lund, Sweden, in August 1952. That decision was made by the Faith and Order executive committee which met February 3 to 5 at the attractive conference center of the French student movement in the little town of Bievres near Paris. Each Church in proportion to its size will have from one to five delegates. The total attendance will not exceed 250, the figure that had previously been decided upon as the most effective size for the conference. Since Church leaders now meet every five years in the Assembly of the World Council of Churches, the purpose is to make Lund a smaller and more intimate gathering of theologians especially qualified to consider the questions which will constitute the Lund program—the nature of the Church, ways of worship, intercommunion, and the non-theological factors that hinder unity. One hundred and sixty churches from all continents are expected to send delegates, including twenty-nine in the U. S. A. The invitation is open to "all Churches which confess Jesus Christ as God and Saviour."

Consideration was also given to the daily program for the Lund conference, which will meet from August 15 to 28, 1952. The tentative program proposes to devote the first week to the discussion of the topics in sectional meetings, after which the report of each section will be considered by the full conference before it is finally received for transmission to the Churches. Certain days will be devoted to discussing future plans for Faith and Order within the World Council after the Lund conference. The program for services during the conference was referred to a special committee. Final action on these matters will be taken by the Faith and Order commission at its meetings this coming summer, from August 14 to 18, in Switzerland.

Of particular interest was the proposal for a post-Lund conference of delegates from Churches in different parts of the world, but especially in Ceylon, India, Pakistan, and Iran, that are engaged in negotiations for Church union in their respective areas. The secretary of the Faith and Order commission, the Rev. Oliver S. Tomkins, recently returned from a visit to most of these places, reported that they are eager to discuss their problems with each other and with theologians from the home churches, in the wider context of the Lund conference. Full approval was given to this plan, and special effort will be made to secure the attendance of representatives from these Churches at Lund.

The new American booklet, "Exploring Paths of Church Unity," aroused much interest. Just off the press, copies were flown to the meeting by air mail. The author is the Rev. James W. Kennedy of Christ Church, Lexington, Kentucky. It is a guide for discussion groups of those who have had no previous acquaintance with Faith and Order studies, and it presents the subjects of the Lund program in terms that a layman can understand.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Religion as Experience, Belief, Action. By Frederic Bartlett. Oxford Univ. Press. 75c.

These three lectures, delivered at the University of Durham, form one of the most brilliant and penetrating psychological studies of religion that I have read in many years. I would like to see some of the clergy take this booklet and show the apologetic and doctrinal implications of this approach to religion. For example, faith is no leap in the dark, but a rounding out of an interpretation of the normal data of experience—so that you need not kick the ladder from beneath your feet after you have reached the top!

Beyond Humanism. By John Julian Ryan. Sheed and Ward. $3.00.

This is another volume by the author of "The Idea of a Catholic College," and continues the discussion of education from the standpoint of a devout and intelligent and highly trained member of the Roman Catholic church. The author uses the word humanism in the rather unhistoric sense of the position which sees man meeting all his problems with his own resources. So any philosophy which acknowledges and accepts the divine grace is beyond humanism. To the author true religion is religion as it is taught and exemplified by the Roman Catholic Church. He seems to classify all other thought about and practice of religion as pagan. The book is a stout plea for an education conceived and carried out in the terms of catholic dogma. Often it is brilliant. Always it is provocative. And one does not have to be a member of the communion to which the author belongs in order to find in it many stimulating and useful suggestions. —Lynn Harold Hough.

Prayers for All Occasions. Forward Movement.

Not only does The Forward Movement provide us with the useful book of daily devotions, "Forward Day by Day," but it has also issued "Helps to Prayer," "Meditations on Prayer," and other booklets which enable us to enrich our devotional life. This beautifully printed, 80 page booklet, contains a wide range of prayers, arranged in such a way that prayers for special purposes can readily be found.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

EXPERTS ADVISE CHURCHES TO SELL RELIGION

Churches must learn to sell religion if they are to regain the millions who have drifted away. So a number of public relations experts told a group of Illinois Methodist ministers who attended a seminar in Washington, D. C. An ad executive told them: "Religion is the greatest product anyone ever tried to sell; all it needs is proper advertising and attractive merchandising." A psychologist said: "Stop being apologetic. Modern ministers are far from being as forthright as they should." A lobbyist for the movies asked: "If private business can cultivate good public relations, why can't churches? Let's study how business does it and apply the same means."

WEEKDAY EDUCATION HAS COMEBACK

Weekday religious education has fully recovered from the setback dealt it two years ago by the McCollum decision of the Supreme Court. Erwin L. Shaver, head of the education division of the National Council of Churches, addressing the division in Columbus, said that more than 2,500,000 children in 40 states are now sharing in such programs. He estimated that 1,250,000 are Protestant and the remainder Roman Catholic. He warned against false optimism. "It is costly—in planning, in effort and in money. It means that the churches and the Christian citizens who contemplate such a project must lift their sights far above their habitual expenditures for Christian education."

CHURCH BUILDING CONTEST FOR SEMINARIANS

A church building program competition for students in Protestant seminaries has been announced by the bureau of church building and architecture of the National Council of Churches. Contestants must submit a building program they consider necessary for a church of their own choice if the congregation were to erect a complete new building. First prize is $200; second, $100; there are two of $50 each and four of $25 each.

SOUTHERN BAPTIST MEMBERS PASS SEVEN MILLION

Membership in the Southern Baptist Convention passed the seven million mark last year, according to the secretary of the department of statistics of the denomination's Sunday school board. There were 376,085 baptisms last year—an all time high. Sunday school enrollment hit a new peak of 5,024,553.

MODERATORS ADDRESS PRESBYTERIANS

The moderators of the three denominations of the Presbyterian Church addressed a joint meeting of Presbyterians in Atlanta, Ga., February 18, to discuss beliefs they hold in common.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE RECEIVES GRANT

The National Conference of Christians and Jews has received a grant of a million dollars from the Ford Fund with which to build new headquarters near the U. N. in New York. The building will also house Religious News Service, created by the conference.

EDUCATION DEFENDS PUBLIC SCHOOLS ON RELIGION

Prof. L. C. Little of the University of Pittsburgh challenged statements of religious leaders, meeting in Columbus, who had said that public school education is secularistic and indifferent to religion. He declared that teachers have a growing concern for the religious development of their pupils. He suggested that "Protestantism might concern itself much more than it has with the problem of improving its own education program." Dr. Little is director of religious education courses at the university.

CHURCH COUNCIL OPPOSES CONTROL BILL

The Nebraska Council of Churches has opposed Communist control legislation, thus at least delaying passage. The bill, calling for registration of Communists and their sympathizers, and loyalty oaths, according to Church leaders, would lead to "irresponsible accusations," threaten civil liberties and make it dangerous to disagree with "popular thought."

YALE DIVINITY ADOPTS NEW CURRICULUM

Yale Divinity School has adopted a new curriculum, aimed at preparing men for specialized fields as well as ministers to churches. Included are courses aimed at preparing men for religious education, service in the community, leadership in colleges, teaching and research, religious journalism.

THE PRESS

Edited by
GEORGE MacMURRAY

POTENT WORDS:—Layman John Cort, a convert to Rome from the Episcopal Church, has some potent words to say in The Commonweal (R. C.). Mr. Cort is arguing for the Mass in the language of the people. Mr. Cort quotes the oft quoted words of Pious XI—"the great scandal of the 19th Century was that the Church lost the working class."

Then comes some potent words. Although addressed to Roman Catholics they apply to Episcopalians as well:

Today one of the most frightening things about the Church is the absence of an appeal to men. The art is feminine; the hymns are not only feminine but girlish; the communion rail is so crowded with women that a man feels de-sexed if he is seen there; in the average Mass as it is said in our churches there is no intellectual content to hold the male mind. Why do workers still go to Mass? There is nothing there but God. They still see him, but through a glass darkly. If you sit behind them on Sunday you can see their attention wandering. If there is a pretty girl they will sooner look at her than at the altar. If there is a window open their eyes will wander off and away to the distracting world.

It does not seem possible to hold them much longer unless a change comes. For America it will only have to be rewritten slightly: "The great scandal of the 20th century was that the Church lost the working class." And then, like the French we will have to send our priests to work in the factories so that they can see what a workingman looks like and how he talks and how he feels, so that once again they can show the trade-mark that Christ put upon his mission: "the poor have the Gospel preached to them."

MARCHING AS TO WAR:—The hymn, Onward Christian Soldiers, has come in for condemnation from time to time. The Friend Intelligencer (Quaker) gives a wholesome exegesis:

Many of us like to sing that we are Christian soldiers "marching as to war." But we should sing of ourselves as warriors only if we have very clear concepts of what we mean by Christian soldiership, only if we attach sufficient importance to one word—as to "war." We are not to march with the hatred of armed men, with the discipline of courts martial and firing squads, or with the self-righteousness of a narrow patriotism. Rather we are to show in peace, as others do in war, intelligent courage, discipline achieved voluntarily by self over self, and a willingness to sacrifice, to sacrifice even oneself, for peace.

Hell's foundations might very well quiver when Christians mean what they sing. Certainly, most certainly not before.

FATHER X

LENT IS A SEASON OF GRACE—not a season of gloom: there is plenty of that about already. In fact the only genuine gaiety left is the sort that comes in the same package as holiness. The young priest who wrote EVERYBODY CALLS ME FATHER ($2.25) is full of it. This is a blissful book, about the author's first five years in the priesthood: the pastor who put up with him, the children who taught him how not to teach religion, the parishioners he got to know—you will love him, and them, but you will quite see why it's better the author should not identify them by giving his own name—that's why he is "Father X." This is a wonderful book for mid-Lent, and you might follow it up with Msgr. Ronald Knox's ST. PAUL'S GOSPEL ($1.75). Msgr. Knox is always at his best on Scripture, and as he particularly loves St. Paul, he is especially so here. He approaches the Epistles by way of the fascinating question: what should we know of Our Lord if these were all we had about Him—if the Gospels had never been written? We've just published another wonderful book for Lenten reading: FOR GOODNESS' SAKE by William Lawson, S.J. ($2.25). The author once asked a class of students if they had noticed how attractive goodness is. They said, kindly but firmly, "no." Father Lawson was amused, but a little alarmed: he wrote this book to show why the answer ought to have been "yes."

NOEL PORTER
Bishop of Sacramento

The Rev. Robert R. Read is writing to you regarding a recent editorial in The Witness. This is by way of further explanation. Mr. Read held one of the larger parishes in this diocese where he had a beautiful church, fine parish house, and a modern rectory. He was greatly beloved by his parishioners. One day he came to me and said: "The parish, as you know, is in excellent shape, so I feel I should tackle something else. Give me the hardest place—the weakest mission—in the diocese. They may not be able to offer a living stipend, but with your permission I will supplement same by doing some secular work on the side." So he went to a weak struggling mission in a little railroad town, with supervision of another small mission in a lumber town about twenty miles away.

Shortly thereafter he asked whether it would be permissible for him to take the job of watchman at the lumber mill, five nights a week. Smilingly I said: "That's all right Bob, for when you were ordained part of the charge was that you were to be a messenger, a steward, and a watchman! So go ahead!"

He did so, and by his manliness, consecration, and devotion not only won the admiration and affection of the men of both communities, but has built up the church in both places. Being a bachelor priest and a man of fine constitution, he could of course undertake such work better than a man with domestic ties. His fine spirit has been a real inspiration and we are grateful to God for what he has accomplished.

It is interesting to note that from the financial end he is now making more than what he would get in many a parish—but beyond his own simple needs all his surplus income he gives away in helping needy cases and in giving underprivileged youngsters a chance at a summer's vacation. Like his Master he is broad in his sympathies. Needless to say we are proud of him.

MRS. W. R. HOFFMAN
Churchwoman of Millville, N. J.

I heartily agree with the article (Witness, Jan. 25) "Churches consider older persons." The housing situation is especially serious. Most of my family have passed on. After my husband died I built a little cottage which was started by a welfare worker who realized the problems of old age. With a great deal of difficulty she got her project started and built 12 small cottages and rented them for $6 and $8 a month so many couples who live on old age pensions or social security could enjoy their independence in the twilight years of their lives. The last five years the project has been expanded so that a person over 65 can build his own cottage, which I have done. At the person's death the cottage goes to the colony for someone else to enjoy. I find it very pleasant down here among the oak and pine trees and have been kept quite busy with the work at the church in Millville. A new house is going up across the road from me which is to be occupied by a nurse from Chicago, an Episcopalian, so we hope to have a nice neighbor this spring. I do think the small cottage helps solve one of the problems of old age.

LEO A. GARDNER
Layman of Hartford, Conn.

It would seem to me that the greatest work of the Christian Church today is to restore peace in the world. For we realize that if the present armed conflict continues in Korea it will spread in time to all Asia and to Europe.

Should not our Churches seek to influence the attitude of the Truman administration so that it will earnestly try to reconcile our differences with China and Russia through the United Nations? It is undoubtedly true that Russia has been uncooperative, but have we not also been at fault in this direction? No matter who has been at fault in the past, there is no time to be lost in seeking a settlement of differences before a devastating atomic war breaks upon us.

No. 32. BRITISH HUMANITARIANISM: ESSAYS HONORING FRANK J. KLINGBERG, edited by Samuel C. McCulloch.

"Ministers who seek new sermon materials, laymen who wish to enlarge their perspective, and historians who want a fuller understanding of Britain and her empire will gain by perusing British Humanitarianism. Once again we are reminded that religious-ethical forces are of superlative importance in human history. The doctoral students of Dr. Klingberg have paid tribute to him not by fawning, but by writing substantial history which honors both the subject and the honoree." —Garland Downum in "The Christian Century."

No. 28. THE PROVINCE OF THE PACIFIC, by Louis Childs Sanford.

"This is an accurate account of the development of the Episcopal Church in the West by the one best qualified to write in terms of the province, of which he was president for many years. Following a brilliant essay ["Provinces: Ancient and Modern"] by Bishop Parsons, there is the story of the way in which the Church in the West was organized . . . The Province of the Pacific has had a significant influence . . . and has attempted to increase the prestige of the provincial system . . ."—Dr. Randolph Crump Miller in "The Churchman."

No. 22. QUARTER OF A MILLENNIUM, TRINITY CHURCH IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK: 1697-1947, edited by E. Clowes Chorley.

"This is the history, covering a period of two hundred and fifty years, of a parish which the Bishop of London described in the anniversary sermon as being 'unique throughout the whole of Christendom.' In a very real sense this statement would seem to be borne out by the account given of its life and accomplishments during its quarter millennium." Dr. G. MacLaren Brydon, "William & Mary Quarterly."

No. 13. ANGLICAN EVANGELICALISM, edited by A. C. Zabriskie.

"The Church Historical Society has once again given us a really valuable volume. Let it be said right off that it is such. Conducted throughout on a high plane, with adequate scholarship, sweet reasonableness, and here and there rising to genuine heights of fervor in presenting evangelical truths, this book should be widely read and pondered."—"Holy Cross Magazine."

No. 12. THE CATHOLIC MOVEMENT IN THE AMERICAN EPISCOPAL CHURCH, by George E. DeMille.

A new revised, and enlarged edition of the standard work on the subject.

"A more fair-minded and judicious history of this very controversial question could not be written . . . He gives lively—and by no means hagiographic—pictures of such leaders as Seabury, Hobart, Doane, Whittingham and John Henry Hopkins. Taking the whole record into account . . . it does not appear to the author, or to this reviewer, that the 'Catholic movement' is a Romeward movement or likely to become one."—"The Christian Century," the leading Protestant journal.

STORY OF THE WEEK

John Howard Melish Delivers His Farewell Address

Following Supreme Court Decision He States Basis For His Unique Ministry

By JOHN HOWARD MELISH

The Supreme Court of the United States last week denied an application for a writ of certiorari that had been made by the Rev. John Howard Melish, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, N. Y. This action brings to an end the Brooklyn rector's attempt to have reversed a decision of the New York State Supreme Court enforcing his removal by Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island. Upon learning of the Court's decision, Dr. Melish issued the following statement:

★ I have just been informed by my lawyers that the Supreme Court of the United States has denied my application for a writ of certiorari that would have permitted a review of my case by the highest court of the land.

From a purely personal point of view, the termination of my rectorship, which this decision of the court makes effective, is scarcely important. I am an old man of 76, my health is impaired, and my work is done. What concerns me is not my personal vindication but what this outcome of my case represents for religious freedom in the Protestant Episcopal Church and the United States of America.

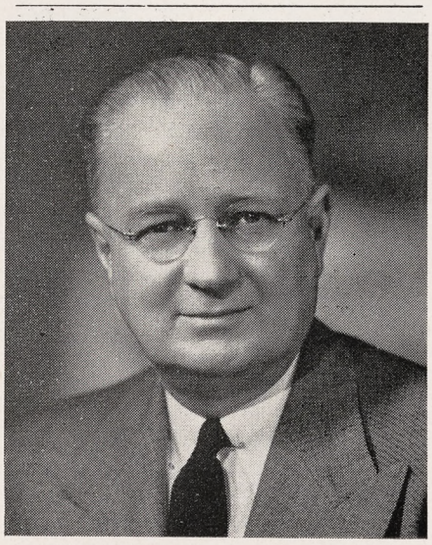
No one can deny that I have been removed from a parish that I have faithfully served for nearly half a century and where I enjoyed the overwhelming support of my parishioners, because I took certain public stands in the light of Christian conscience, well within the recognized dictates of the Christian faith and the long-established traditions of my own communion. It was these stands that evoked the disapproval of a small group of powerful but unrepresentative laymen who had the support of the bishop of the diocese and were urged by his chancellor to take their case into the civil courts when they found our congregation in opposition to their application for my removal.

State Interference

What these men have done in securing the injunctive power of the state to enforce an ecclesiastical decision, in direct contravention of the specific provisions of the canon law of our Church, establishes a precedent of state interference in Church affairs that endangers the freedom of every minister and congregation in the land and breaches the concept of separation of Church and state at the heart of the American Constitution.

I have no doubt that the constitutional issue on which my application for a review by the Supreme Court was based, will come before the Court in some one of the related cases now headed for Washington. Though I have been denied relief, I am certain that public insistence will require the Court ultimately to face the constitutional issue involved, and to maintain the traditional principle of the separation of Church and state on which our government is founded.

It was my hope, of course, that the Supreme Court would review and reverse the decision of the New York State Court imposing an injunction enforcing the bishop's dissolution of the pastoral relation between myself and the Church of the Holy Trinity. It was my desire that the real issue—the freedom of the Christian conscience—might then be tried within the judicial procedures of the Church. From the beginning, I have consistently held that this issue was ecclesiastical in character and should never have been referred to the civil courts for adjudication. In that opinion I am now more than ever convinced.



Basis of Ministry

Were I granted the right to live my life over again, I believe I should do precisely what I have done. My task as a preacher has been not to tell men what to think but to help them to think as Christians. My work as a minister of Christ has been to have the Church serve the community. The Church exists for men, women and children, without regard for color, race, national origin or material consideration. The Church is not a private club, it is not a social set, it is not a system of political and economic opinions. It is a life of faith and service, implanted by God in this world of men to reconcile and redeem needy humanity. This has been the creed of my ministry for a lifetime. I cannot now acknowledge any other.

The people of Holy Trinity have been superb in their loyalty to the principles that I have sought to teach and exemplify. For two long years they have patiently explored every possible means of reversing this removal proceeding. Faced with legal defeat in their courageous endeavor, they tell me that they are nonetheless still determined to maintain the Christian principles that have been the substance of our life as a parish. I am proud of them as a congregation. They have run a straight race. They have fought a good fight. They believe in a free pulpit and a liberal, comprehensive Church. Whoever now is my successor will be free to speak the truth as he sees it, and to have the loyal support of people who desire to be led by the spirit of truth. I lay down my arms in the assurance that the future of Holy Trinity is secure in their hands.

I have always believed that a man could enter the ministry of the Christian Church in confidence that if he speaks what he believes and adheres to what his conscience tells him is right, he will find people ready to uphold his Christian principles. My experience throughout these difficult days has strengthened this conviction. The letters that have come from every corner of the earth and from every state of the Union, have proven this trust. More than a thousand clergy of my own Church and two thousand of other denominations have sought to support the principles involved in this case. For acting as "Friends of the Court," these brothers-in-faith have my deep and abiding gratitude. Their action will not be lost. It is not half so important that one man should be vindicated as that a flame should be lighted that will rekindle the torch of intellectual, moral and religious freedom that our beloved country has let drop so low in these evil and hysterical days. If my removal contributes one iota to the resurrection of America's traditional faith, I shall be more than rewarded.

EINAR W. JACOBSON, superintendent of schools in Santa Barbara, is one of the leading laymen in the diocese of Los Angeles

Where Case Belongs

From the outset, I have believed that this case was taken into the civil courts by the former vestrymen of the parish on the advice of the chancellor and bishop of Long Island, because they knew that there existed no ground for removal that would stand up in an ecclesiastical trial. Today I am more convinced than ever of the correctness of this belief. The chancellor has fought tooth and nail to prevent any further legal review that might return this case to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction where it rightly belongs, and where the present verdict would almost certainly be overturned. On shrewd, worldly, legalistic grounds the chancellor has won the day. I have no further legal recourse in this life. My next appeal must be to the court of heaven where some day I hope that the chancellor and the bishop will stand with me before the bar. I doubt if procedural consideration will count in that court of final justice as they seem to have weighed the balances in Albany and Washington.

I bear no malice towards any man in Church or state. I seek to acknowledge only one who knew how to forgive. But, in acquiescing in the judgment of the bishop of Long Island enforced by the injunctive power of the state, as I must now do as a law-abiding citizen, I am bound to say that it seems to me that legalism and ecclesiasticism have triumphed.

As a Christian, I still resolutely affirm my duty to speak out for peace and goodwill among men. From the faith expressed by Lowell in his memorable lines I shall draw my personal consolation:

"Though the cause of evil prosper,
Yet 'tis truth alone is strong;
Though her portion be the scaffold,
And upon the throne be wrong,
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
And, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT BY SENIOR WARDEN

★ Mr. Lewis Reynolds, senior warden of the Church of the Holy Trinity, made the following statement:

"The congregation of Holy Trinity has been aware that in the present atmosphere of the country it was scarcely to be expected that this case would be granted its full due. The refusal of the Court to review the constitutional issue is a disappointment but scarcely a surprise. As Dr. Melish knows, our love for him has never wavered. Since this action finalizes his removal, and no possibility of further appeal remains for him or for us, the parish appears to have no alternative but to accept the dissolution of the pastoral relation. However, we have been consulting the ablest lawyers available and have been ascertaining just what are our rights as a parish under the canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church. When a vacancy exists, it is the responsibility and the authority of the vestry, in consultation with the bishop, to elect a rector. This we shall proceed to do in accordance with the canons of the Church."

It was stated on February 27 that the vestry would meet on March 19th to discuss a successor, but the Rev. William H. Melish, assistant, said that it would doubtless be sometime before one was named. He would not comment on speculation that the vestry, now 9 to 2 pro-Melish, might elect him as his father's successor.

Guest preachers are continuing to take the services, with Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher there on March 4th and the Rev. Andrew M. Van Dyke on the 11th.

The picture on the cover shows Dr. Melish sitting for William Zorach, noted sculptor. It is now in bronze in the Church of the Holy Trinity, the gift of the sculptor.

ELSA Has Annual Meeting In Wilmington

By ANDREW M. VAN DYKE

★ The annual meeting of the Episcopal League for Social Action was held on February 22nd, in St. John's Cathedral, Wilmington, Delaware. The sessions centered about the work of the commissions which were established in the fields of the concern of the League. Mary van Kleeck, chairman of the commission on social change, reinforced the report which the commission had drawn up by presenting to the members and friends assembled, Dr. Derk Bodde, professor of Chinese at the University of Pennsylvania. His paper on "The present situation in China" dealt with the ten similarities and the ten dissimilarities between traditional Chinese thought and that of today's Chinese Communists. The commission on democracy was temporarily chaired by Arthur H. Fawcett of Annapolis, Md., and heard read a paper prepared by Bishop Edward L. Parsons, president of the League on "The Church and civil liberties." Under the chairmanship of the Rev. Dillard Brown of Washington the commission on livelihood listened to Philip Robb, a senior at Princeton, tell of his work among migrant laborers. Mrs. Benson Harvey of Easthampton, Mass., spoke to the commission on the Episcopal Church on "Personnel practices of the Church."

Presiding at the business sessions was the Rev. William Marmion, a member of the national committee. After discussion, the meeting gave to the various commissions specific tasks for the coming year. The program will have four main emphases: a study of social change in China that will promote an understanding of that country in order that cooperation between it and the United States may be achieved and war averted; stimulation in the Church of interest in and action for migratory workers; a recognition that democracy can most effectively be extended by concentrating on better race relations; promoting an educational program on establishing Christian standards of employment for clergy and lay workers in the Church.

Dean J. Brooks Mosley led the worship in the afternoon. The evening session, presided over by Bishop Arthur R. McKinstry of Delaware, was addressed by Prof. Albert T. Mollegen of the Virginia Seminary. He spoke on "The faith for a world in social change." He demonstrated how Marxism and Christianity parallel each other in the best of their social concern. He then declared that the naturalistic philosophy of Marxism has within it the seeds of its own destruction.

FIGHT NEGRO BAN IN HOSPITALS

★ The department of Christian social relations of the diocese of Kentucky is playing a major part in a statewide movement to break down racial discrimination and segregation in Kentucky hospitals. The department is one of more than 30 organizations which have formed the interracial hospital movement to correct the situation. The organizations include the leading Church and labor groups of the state. The Rev. J. Albert Dalton, pastor of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Louisville, and head of the department, is chairman of the steering committee.

The movement grew out of an automobile accident last August about 70 miles from Louisville. The all-white Breckinridge County Hospital, the only hospital in the area, refused treatment to the three Negro men injured in the accident. One of the men died. Investigation following this accident disclosed that other hospitals over the state do not admit Negroes.

The interracial hospital movement circulated a petition calling on the governor and all state officials to take steps immediately to see that hospital facilities are provided for all Kentucky citizens, regardless of race. These petitions bearing 10,000 signatures gathered in 56 Kentucky cities were presented to Governor Lawrence Wetherby in January. Mr. Dalton and Allen L. Coones, Louisville labor leader, were leaders of a delegation of 150 which presented them to the governor.

The governor immediately ordered the state health commissioner to investigate the situation and recommend action. He promised to report back to the interracial group.

Kentucky citizens jam the office of Governor Lawrence Wetherby (left) to demand hospital facilities without discrimination and segregation. The delegation was led by the Rev. J. Albert Dalton (back to camera, right foreground), chairman of the department of Christian social relations, diocese of Kentucky, and Allen L. Coones, (back to camera, left), Louisville labor leader.

HOSPITAL EXECUTIVES HAVE MEETING

★ Executives of Episcopal Church hospitals met in Chicago March 1-2, to discuss problems. Public relations, promotion and publicity were presented by the Rev. Mark D. McCallum, rector of All Saints', Omaha. The Rev. Otis R. Rice of St. Luke's, New York, spoke on the opportunities for chaplains and problems of religious education in schools of nursing. The relation of Church hospitals to others was outlined by the Rev. Almon R. Pepper, head of social service of the National Council, which was followed by the presentation of results of a questionnaire, designed to assess the resources of Church hospitals, presented by Charlotte Gluck, assistant in the same department.

The first afternoon there was a panel to discuss hospital design, equipment, financing, rates, nurses, internes, with Hal G. Perrin, administrator of our Church hospital in Omaha, and the chairman of the Episcopal group, one of the leaders. Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam gave the address at a dinner that evening which was attended by representatives of the American Hospital Association.

The next day the Episcopal group joined with other members of the Association when various phases of hospital administration were presented by outstanding experts.

FLETCHER SPEAKS FOR PEACE

★ Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School was one of the speakers at a conference held in New York on March 3 on "How to avoid war and make peace." Others on the program were Mrs. Paul Robeson, Hugh Deane, Cedric Belfrage, George Marion, author of "Bases and Empire," Prof. Henry Pratt Fairchild of New York University, Prof. Harry F. Ward, former professor of Christ ethics and Union Theological Seminary. The meeting was sponsored by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

DENVER CATHEDRAL HAS SEMINARS

★ Seminars on the social needs of the community are being held Wednesday evenings in Lent at St. John's Cathedral, Denver. There is a guest speaker at each meeting, with discussion following. Subjects include health programs; youth; the migrant; the aged.

LITURGICAL COMMISSION HOLDS MEETING

★ The liturgical commission of General Convention met recently at the College of Preachers, Washington. The commission is divided into small committees, with each assigned to study and report on possible improvements in various services in the Prayer Book. Bishop Fenner reported on the ordinal; the Rev. Bayard Jones on the litany; Prof. Massey Shepherd Jr. on morning and evening prayer.

It was stressed by the commission that it is not their function to promote revision of the Prayer Book, but rather to insure that when and if it comes, it will be done intelligently, so that, in the words of Bishop Oldham, president of the commission, "it will be of such a character as to enlist the whole hearted support of clergy and laity and so spare us the individual vagaries from which we suffer today."

URGE GOVERNMENTS BE RECOGNIZED

★ A group of 14 San Francisco Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis have advocated the "recognition of de facto governments" by the United Nations and "questioned" the wisdom of rearming Japan and Germany. The Rev. John C. Leffler, rector of St. Luke's, a member of the group, said the statement had been released after seven weeks of meetings.

The proposals were contained in a joint statement on "Religion and the World Crisis," read to congregations. The statement also was telegraphed to President Truman. The group emphasized that they were not speaking for their religious bodies, but as individuals deeply concerned with the role of the Church in today's world situation.

"Our policy must be based on the conviction that the coexistence of radically different economic systems and cultures is possible," the clergymen stated. "The alternatives to coexistence is mutual annihilation. Therefore, we believe that the recognition of de facto governments is a sound principle of operation for the United Nations. Once co-existence is accepted as a basic condition of policy-making, it will be possible to consider realistically the control of weapons of mass destruction and of all armaments. We must control the will to power which our position in the world has thrust upon us, especially must we respect the surging spirit and will to freedom, security and national dignity of China, India, Africa and colonial and oppressed peoples everywhere."

The clergymen said that the rearming of Germany and Japan "is an abandonment of the avowed aims for which World War II was fought, contrary to the wishes of a large proportion of the people of these nations, and a step in the direction of war."

"In the long run, a policy of peace must be peaceful in method as well as in purpose," they said. "To this end we urge that a large part of the vast material and human resources now being spent on weapons and destruction be dedicated to the assistance of underdeveloped areas of the world, to the relief of suffering and to the elimination of ignorance and poverty through the welfare agencies of the United Nations."

McCALLUM PREACHES MISSION

★ The Rev. A. A. McCallum, rector-emeritus of St. Paul's, Washington, D. C., conducted a preaching-teaching mission February 13-18, at the Holy Communion, Charleston, S. C.

BISHOP PEABODY OPPOSES RACE TRACK

★ Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York appeared before a commission of the state last week to oppose the building of a race trace outside Syracuse. He was one of a large group to appear for the opposition. The plan had previously been approved by the commission, and grading was being done on large tracts of land purchased for the track but the work was stopped by a court order.

SCHOOL OF PRAYER IN LONG ISLAND

★ A diocesan school of prayer was held for churchwomen of Long Island on March 5th at the cathedral house, Garden City. There were addresses by Mrs. G. Paull T. Sargent, wife of the retired rector of St. Bartholomew's, New York; Mrs. John Curry, New York City; Mrs. Griesmeyer of Richmond, N. Y.; Mrs. Peter Oliver, author of "A study of Collects"; Mrs. Lawrence Rose, wife of the dean of the General Seminary.

DENVER CATHEDRAL STARTS SCHOOL

★ St. John's Cathedral, Denver, has opened an auxiliary Church school in the Cherry Hills section of the city to provide for parents and children who live at such a distance from their parishes that they find it difficult to come into the city regularly. A regular family service and a school are meeting in the building of Kent School. The area has grown rapidly in recent years and there is no Episcopal church there.

LINDSAY PATTON GOES TO OXFORD

★The Rev. J. Lindsay Patton, rector of Grace Church, Colorado Springs, has been given a three month leave of absence by the vestry so that he may attend Oxford University, England, for a period of study. While he is away the parish will be in charge of the Rev. Gilbert Symonds, formerly editor of "Forward."

CLARKSON HOSPITAL RECEIVES GIFT

★ The service league of Clarkson Hospital, diocesan hospital at Omaha, Nebraska, has made a gift to the hospital of $17,000 for remodeling the obstretrical department.

WOMEN CONTINUE SUPPLY WORK

★ The extent and value of the supply work carried on by the women of the Church through the national supply office of the Women's Auxiliary at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, are indicated by a summary and report now going out to diocesan supply secretaries from the national secretary, Miss Dorothy Stabler.

The sending of personal supplies was begun more than sixty years ago to supplement the insufficient salaries of missionaries, before the days when parcel post and mail orders or local shops were available even if the missionaries could have afforded to use them. This part of the work has almost ceased, especially since 1943 when the triennial meeting of Churchwomen voted a gradual elimination of the "personal boxes" of clothing, the reason being "a strong conviction that such supplementary gifts were an unworthy way of recognizing the devotion of our missionary clergy, and that the time had come to press for better salaries for them." For three years, gifts of money replaced the former gifts of clothing.

In 1946 such gifts ceased for active clergy. Two small groups continued in need of some help: retired missionary clergy or their widows, not affected by increase in salaries, and a number of lay workers, mainly in the South Dakota Indian field, working part time on small salaries. These are helped through the supply secretary's gift fund. General Convention in 1949 increased the smallest pensions, and this lessened the amount of help needed from this gift fund, and a decrease in this giving was planned for 1950.

Supplies to institutions continue to be needed and provided, either in actual material supplies or in money for local purchases. A discretionary fund has been extremely useful in caring for certain needs not covered by assignments taken by the diocesan branches of the Auxiliary.

Miss Stabler's report, therefore, is in terms of these three categories: Supplies or money given on assignments. Supply secretary's gift fund. Supply secretary's discretionary fund.

Miss Stabler reports to the diocesan secretaries: "The total value in 1950 of the supply work and gifts based on the national assignments amount to $165,771. Omitting the supply secretary's gift fund, the small amount of the discretionary fund, and over $8,500 in shipping and postal costs, the mission supplies alone were valued at $151,870, which is more than the grand total a year ago. Since an increase of about $2,200 in shipping costs was more than offset by a planned decrease of $4,200 in the supply secretary's gift fund, there is a net gain of about $18,700 in the value of your gifts to the missions.

"A large part of the increase is due to the fact that assignments were larger and more costly, especially for some of the overseas mission fields. Also, the cost of materials and ready-made articles has increased very considerably, even since I sent you your assignments last summer.

"All of this adds up to one important fact, that the women of the Church are willing to give and to work to make it possible for our missions and institutions to continue their ministry among the needy and underprivileged. In a period of increasing costs of practically everything that the missions need in the way of material goods, with budgets not increasing to catch up with the costs, the supply work plays an even more important role than during a period of relatively low prices."

Expenditures from the discretionary fund including $270 to Brent Hospital, Zamboanga, Philippines, for local purchase of mosquito nets, and over $400 to meet the cost of getting shipments to Manila, through the customs, and to the distant mission posts. In Hawaii $500 provided bedding and towels for two new centers, the Hawaii Episcopal Academy, a new school in a district which had no other high school, and the youth conference center. In Nevada $200 provided bedding at the conference center.

Smaller items were baby blankets at Hudson Stuck Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska, special surgical dressings for St. Luke's Hospital (for tuberculosis), Phoenix, Arizona; and at Ponce, Puerto Rico, clinic supplies for Holy Trinity Mission, bedding for the nurses' training school, and a minimum of clothing to boys released from jail. The Sisters of the Transfiguration, doing social service among these boys, were the only source of friendly interest the boys had encountered, and they naturally turned to it in their need. After the fire which destroyed much of St. Christopher's Navajo Mission at Bluff, Utah, a check was sent to help the mission continue its help to needy Indians.

The source of this discretionary fund is the initiative of diocesan secretaries sending gifts to the national secretary.

Passion of Christ, Strengthen Me

PASSION SUNDAY begins a period when the mood of Lent deepens. In much of western Christendom the crosses and crucifixes are veiled in purple from this Sunday until the unveiling on Good Friday. The intention is that the perception of the meaning of the cross should sharpen. We should not in Passiontide depend upon symbols but should see for ourselves with the eyes of faith the events and the instruments through which our Lord wrought out our redemption. The true cross (not "works of art" made of ivory or precious metals), should shine forth for what it is. We must see for ourselves the horror of the wayside gallows. We must see for ourselves the tree of shame burst forth with leaves for the healing of the nations.

When we speak of the Passion of Christ we ought to mean all of his sufferings. In this extended sense all of his human life comes under this title. All was the working of love to set right a world gone wrong. Wherever love, brought to bear upon the poverty and cruelty of the world, was rejected—Jesus suffered. By many he was despised. This was all finally, once and for all, graphically demonstrated on Calvary when love was nailed to the cross. This was the inevitable conclusion for the kind of life he lived in the kind of world this was (and is). Those who wrongly think of his life as a happy sunny existence suddenly and unexpectedly marred by the grim details of death have not read the gospels aright.

The great Christian paradox is that Christ's glory is his crucifixion. His six hours of most complete weakness and humiliation were his greatest strength. Because of that we suggest that you turn to the spiritual treasure of the "Anima Christi" and think on the heading of this column.

"Passion of Christ, strengthen me." How is it possible for his passion to strengthen me?

First, when we turn our eyes upon the whole picture of Jesus' self-offering, his stedfast following of God's line without deviation, we see the world's most notable example of suffering nobly endured. Many in the history of men have risen to momentary heights of such moral grandeur. No other has paid the price so fully and so unflinchingly for being God's man at all times . . . The Passion of Christ strengthens us when we look deeply into the great courage of this man—quietly accepting, "taking it," because he walked only God's way.

Second, when touched by the sufferings of the world (as all who live must be); especially when called to undergo suffering for the purpose of redeeming society, again we turn to the Passion of Christ. Here it strengthens not only as heroic past example. It strengthens because Christ makes himself the yoke-fellow of all who taste his sorrows in the cause of God's righteousness. His yoke is easy and his burden light if we permit Christ in us to work with the Christ without. The felon without fault is always eager to shoulder the heavier part of the load.

Third, but some ask: if he loves me why doesn't he take my cross away? Why does he give me such a burden, and then offer to share it? Briefly, he bore the cross on our behalf, for us, doing for us as God-Man what man alone could never do. He did it to take away sin. He took away sin through suffering. It was the necessary means. He showed us the principle that suffering is necessary for life, for growth, for conquest of evil, for redeeming the lost, for eternal life. In baptism we are in him—dead unto sin. We are buried with Christ in his death that we may also be partakers of his resurrection. The Passion of Christ strengthens us by demonstrating that suffering is not God's cruel punishment or joke. It is the blessed instrument for effecting most of what we call good—here and hereafter.

"QUOTES"

THE "ANIMA CHRISTI"

THIS devotion, or rhyming of aspirations to Christ in his Passion, is often ascribed to Ignatius Loyola (1491-1556) founder of the Jesuits. However it was probably in use for about 250 years before his time. Some Dominicans claim, without real authority, that it is actually a prayer of Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274).

"Soul of Christ, sanctify me.
Body of Christ, save me.
Blood of Christ, inebriate me.
Water from the side of Christ, wash me.
Passion of Christ, strengthen me.
O good Jesu, hear me.
Within thy wounds, hide me.
Suffer me not to be separated from thee.
From the malicious enemy defend me.
In the hour of my death call me,
And bid me come to thee
That with thy saints I may praise thee
For ever and ever. Amen."

Fourth, "This is my body. This is my blood." All of the strength of the Passion of Christ is infused into our needy, faultering frailty at the communion rail. Here at the showing forth of the Lord's death, at the pleading of the holy sacrifice, most fully does the Passion of Christ strengthen. He gives us all of his strength, to supplant all of our weakness.

Witness Travel Seminar

THE WITNESS announces the formation of a travel seminar in the interest of world peace, in cooperation with the Church Peace Union. If you believe, with us, that there is a vital need for first-hand knowledge in a world abounding with second-hand prejudices, you are invited to share in a pilgrimage to Europe this summer to visit the countries whose destinies are being so closely linked to ours, to talk with representative people in these countries about our common problems, and, most important of all, to see how we ourselves look from "over there."

This seminar will include a visit to England, Germany (East and West), Switzerland, Italy and France. It is also expected that we will be able to include a visit to Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and Poland, and thus be able to obtain some direct information about conditions and attitudes on the other side of the "iron curtain." Here too interviews will be arranged, wherever possible, with leading citizens and churchmen.

If you are interested in making a friendly visit to our neighbors across the Atlantic, please let us know immediately, as better transportation facilities will be available if reserved early. You may also make a direct contribution in shaping this seminar if you will let us know where you would most like to go, what you would like to learn, and whom you would like to see. An exact itinerary and schedule has not been fixed as yet, since we would like to meet the needs and interests of the whole group as nearly as possible.

Group travel, with simple but comfortable accommodations, is not expensive. It is even possible to make arrangements for time-payments, if desired. The seminar will be of about six weeks duration, during July and August.

For further information, write to Witness Seminar, 12 West 11th St., New York 11, N. Y.

The Beatitudes—

Blessed Are The Merciful

BY

GEORGE H. MacMURRAY
Rector of St. Philip's, Brooklyn, New York and Witness Editor

A SUCCESSFUL business executive had occasion to visit an associate who was sick in one of the Church hospitals. The busy executive had never been in a Church hospital previously. He had never come into contact with the good Sisters of St. John the Evangelist. He was very much impressed. After his visit he said that he could not understand how fine, upstanding, personable women could devote their lives to a religious order. "After all," he said, "they would be better off in business."

I felt sorry for this man. I felt sorry for him not only because he had so little feeling or sensitivity for the work of mercy these women were doing, but because he had been so completely conditioned by the secularism and materialism of the time. He could think of life, and the meaning of life, only in terms of material success.

Yet how general is this man's appraisal. We are all conditioned to a degree by the materialism and the secularism of our age. These conditionings even have their effect on the clergy. How often a bishop talking to a clergyman about the new cure, introduces the subject, not by indicating the needs of the people for help, but by stating quite bluntly, "the salary is $2400 plus a rectory." It works the other way also. A clergyman seeking a new post—invariably asks as his first question, "What does it pay?" We are not as callous to spiritual values as was the business executive, but like him we are all very much conditioned by the impact of the economic conditions under which we live. When we hear the words of Jesus or read the words of Jesus they resound against the overtones of materialism and secularism. So with the Beatitudes. We agree that they are comforting, beautiful, idealistic, but as the motivating factors in our lives and as eternal truth, we do not live by them.

Beatitudes vs. Platitudes

THE Beatitudes are not platitudes. They are truth. We are wrong. We must realize that we have been so conditioned that our resistance to spiritual truth is high. Our concern is the fifth Beatitude. "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." We must consider it, recognizing that we are conditioned against spiritual truth and acknowledging that the Beatitude is not a platitude. Blessed are the merciful is not a suggestion for complacent living. For all who call themselves Christians it is definitely a word to live by. It is a command.

Blessed are the merciful. We must distinguish now between mercy as an emotion and mercy as a motive. Mercy as an emotion is quite a common thing. Mercy as a motive is altogether different. You can make the distinction yourself, but an illustration may help. Assume that a young married man in your parish is killed in Korea. You knew him and you know his young widow. You might visit her and express your sympathy. Perhaps you would invite her to your home. These would be acts of mercy based on emotion. But mercy based on motive is that quality within you which would drive you to fight with all your strength of body and mind those things which lead to war. Mercy as a motive would drive you to seek peace among nations so that men would not become pawns in war. Mercy as an emotion is comparatively easy. It does not cost much in effort. But mercy as a motive is of sterner stuff. Mercy as a motive is based on belief in God. It was those who are merciful as a motive whom Jesus had in mind when he said, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Works of Mercy

WORKS of mercy are not vague things. In traditional Christian thinking the works of mercy are well defined. They are divided into two categories of seven each and are known as works of spiritual mercy and works of corporal mercy. The works of spiritual mercy are: One, to instruct the ignorant; Two, to correct offenders; Three, to council the doubtful; Four, to comfort the afflicted; Five, to suffer with patience; Six, to forgive offenses and wrongs; Seven, to pray for others. These are seven specific acts. One can pretty well determine just how merciful he is by checking how many of these things he does, not as an emotion, but as a motive. These works are specific and they are practical. Consider just a few. If we took the first one (to instruct the ignorant) seriously, there would be no practical problem in our Church schools due to lack of Church school teachers! If we took the sixth (to forgive offenses and wrong) as a motive in our lives and forgave offenses and wrongs there would be less anger in our souls and minds. There would be more room for love and peace. After all, conflicts among men is basically one of misunderstanding.

These are the seven works of spiritual mercy. They are specific. They are not suggestions nor are they platitudes. They are commands.

Then there are seven works of corporal mercy. These are not vague but specific. The seven works of corporal mercy are: One, to feed the hungry and to give drink to the thirsty; Two, to clothe the naked; Three, to harbor the stranger and the needy; Five, to visit the sick; Five, to minister to prisoners and captives; Six, to visit the fatherless and widows; Seven, to bury the dead. Now it is true that some of these corporal works of mercy can best be carried on by trained personnel. For certain of these activities nurses and doctors are needed, for others trained social workers are best fitted. If people had mercy in their hearts as a motive in life and were not really conditioned or motivated by the secularism and materialism of this age, nursing schools would not be begging for students, rural sections would not be pleading for doctors, seminaries would not be pleading for funds, and social agencies would not have to seek constantly for adequate resources. For if mercy were a motive in the hearts of all those who call themselves Christians, it would show itself clearly in spontaneous and adequate support of the agencies of mercy. The effect of mercy, or the lack of mercy, as a motive may be clearly seen in our society.

The works of corporal mercy are not vague things. They are specific. They are not suggestions, nor are they platitudes. They are commands.

Influence of the Merciful

CERTAINLY as one looks back over history the influence of the merciful is obvious. In our own day Albert Schweitzer, Mahatma Gandhi, Dr. Seagrave (Burma surgeon) and others afford striking examples of mercy at work through the individual. As you scan your own life certainly it is the merciful in many walks of life who stand out. You can readily recall some of them: a doctor who took care of you, a nurse who watched over you, a faithful school teacher or Church school teacher, perhaps a scoutmaster who taught you, or a parish priest who counseled you. All these were performing works of mercy within the meaning of the works of mercy. Their influence was great; it was lasting, and it was for good.

For you see those who have influenced others by their mercy were being merciful as a motive in their lives. One does not become a good doctor or a good nurse or a good teacher, or a good scoutmaster or a good parish priest just as an emotion. The quality of mercy in these people is the result of a motive. All these fields of endeavor call for sustained effort and they entail sacrifice. All these people had a motive for the works of mercy which they performed. Either direct or indirect they were responding to a divine command and a divine example. "Blessed are the merciful." The command to which they responded is still the command which awaits our response.

Our Need for Mercy

CERTAINLY our need for mercy is clear from the Book of Common Prayer. In morning prayer we say: "Lord have mercy upon us." In the holy communion we ask God mercifully to accept our alms and oblations and prayers. We say that God through his tender mercy gave Jesus to die of the cross. In the absolution we say that God of his tender mercy has promised forgiveness of our sins. God is merciful. We count very heavily on his mercy. If we depend on God's mercy, certainly it is expected of us that we shall be merciful. Christ died on the cross as a work of mercy for all men. His death was not just the result of an emotion but was a motive—the greatest motive in the world.

Despite the secularism and materialism which necessarily conditions much of our thinking and feeling, certain things should be clear to us. We must recognize that mercy is more than an emotion, that it must be the motive by which we act. We must remember that it has been those motivated by mercy who have made for true progress in the world and that it has been those who have been motivated by mercy who have made indelible impressions on our lives.

A beautiful prayer in the family prayer section of our Prayer Book asks for God's grace and concludes with this petition—"and above all keep in our minds a lively remembrance of that great day, in which we must give a strict account of all our thoughts, words and actions to him whom thou hast appointed judge of the quick and the dead, thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord." We shall hope for mercy in that great day. We shall rely on the Beatitude at that time. "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy." But we have had a command.

We are all familiar with the parable of the Good Samaritan. After hearing the story the lawyer knew who had been the neighbor to the man who fell among thieves. The lawyer gave the correct answer, "He who showed mercy." Then Jesus said unto him, "Go then and do likewise."

"Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy." It is more than a platitude. It is more than a promise. It is a command!

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What are some of the factors in our society which so condition us as to make us callous to spiritual things?
2. What is the distinction between mercy as an emotion and mercy as a motive?
3. How could you utilize the seven works of spiritual mercy in your parish, your community, this nation?
4. Discuss the relationship between the works of corporal mercy and the shortage of doctors, nurses, and the limited resources of social agencies.
5. Who were the people who made marked impressions on you for good? What do you think motivated them?
6. Is our need for God's mercy the only basis for our works of mercy? If not what should be the basis for our merciful acts?

Unionized Religion

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder and First Editor of The Witness

ONE of our leading weekly periodicals recently ran a series of communications in which various persons told the world "what the matter is with the Church."

In very few of these letters was there any adequate appreciation of the fact that the chief trouble with the Church is, the people.

The Church as a potent factor in civilization is scarcely on trial.

It has been demonstrated time and again what it could do with people.

It was the one potent factor which tamed and civilized the Anglo-Saxon savages and Scandinavian pirates from whom we are descended.

It is the only potent factor that has ever attempted to do anything with Fiji cannibals and Polynesian head-hunters.

It is the only instrument of our rather smug civilization which has ever carried its benevolent influence into Uganda or Metlakatla.

The only other stimulants, which the Caucasian race has ever attempted to give the savage, have been racial prejudices and bad whiskey.

Really the Church as an institution has done so much more for the race than the modern critics of the Church are doing that it would be more seemly for the people to confess their own sin in abandoning the one instrument of grace that the world has known and substituting generalizing negations for personal service.

The real trouble with agriculture is usually poor soil and muddled heads.

Blaming God

AS a rule the providence of God is to be depended upon; but, strange to say, whenever a floor or an earthquake destroys the crops, it is called a visitation of God.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Why that curious name? God visits us with sunlight and rain and fertile soil, yet we emphasize exceptional acts of destruction as his visits.

Man is prone to lay the blame of things on God.

What is this Church that is so frequently discussed?

It is so easy to enter a general indictment against a mere fiction of the mind. It must be apparent that the Church is one of two things: either it is the instrument of God to convey grace to men, or else it is the creation of men to convey information to God.

Either it is an organization founded by Christ to tell men about God, or else it is an ecclesiastical union organized by men to tell God what man wants.

You belong either to the corporate body of Christ or else to the union.

If you belong to the corporate body you are apt to be long on your privileges as a member of the corporation and are apt to be looking for dividends more than service.

And if you belong to the union you are apt to be long on grievances and short on a sense of personal responsibility.

The old medieval corporation was apt to abuse its privileges. The Reformation was a unionizing of religious workers, and they are strong in airing their grievances and shouting for shorter hours of service and better wages in the way of ecclesiastical attractions.

Church Unionists

AND the worst of it is that the shorter the hours and the better the sermon the less labor one gets in return.

The best laborers I know in the Church are not the product of fine sermons, but rather of a good conscience.

These new ecclesiastical unions want none of that "penny a day" stuff, although they are rather keen for the eleventh-hour privileges.

They hang about the market place and tell us how the Church should be run, but no burden and heat of the day for them.

It is true that no man has hired them, but not because they have received no invitation to work, but because they are on a strike for shorter hours and better sermons.

Men are very prone to complain about the weather, their religion and the policies of the administration.

This is not a sign of an enlightened conscience, nor of a constructive mind, but rather that the disease is catching. It is easy to condemn a government that you couldn't run to save your life and to tell what the Church ought to do when you yourself are doing nothing.

The only legitimate critic is the hard worker, and he is so engrossed in his work that he forgets to criticize.

There is a quadruped who whenever he stops work begins to kick and bray. He is a fairly intelligent animal, but has an unsociable disposition.

The vineyard is here, and it is the Lord's will that we should work therein. The fact that we have poor overseers and poor grub does not justify a strike, for, after all, God is expecting us to work and isn't interested in our complaints.

A poor preacher may be his test of your sincerity, and I doubt whether he will accept your alibi when pay day comes.

Ruskin has defined a critic as "a painter who cannot paint, himself."

It is a suggestive definition and fairly comprehensive in its conclusiveness.

Don't Be a Quitter

WE may as well recognize that the kingdom of heaven includes the corporation and the workers and that the interest of one is the interest of both.

The Church must go on and do the work that it is ordained of God to do. If those who temporarily represent the corporation are poor "stuff," the workers in the vineyard do not please God by going on a strike. They merely please themselves and the vineyard grows more weedy and less productive.

We are not going to improve the spiritual force which the Church has always contained when men stir up the gift of the Spirit, by pulling out of the kingdom.

The truth is that God made a Church which he never intended should be acceptable to quitters.

It is the grit of continuance in good works which God demands, and those who murmur are destroyed by the serpents of anger, envy and hate, and those who persist in complaining are destroyed by the destroyer.

If the Church in any particular age has been run down (as it frequently has) then it has owed its resurrection to the persistence of good men who stick to the cross of Christ, when all the rabble about is gabbing.

It boils itself down to this:

Your life is your job and God is your Master.

He knows what is going on better than you do, and it is harder for him to put up with poor priests than it is for you to put up with poor preachers.

If he sends you into no man's land of spiritual desolation, he expects you to carry on with the same fidelity to him that you would manifest if you held a title deed to the garden of Eden.

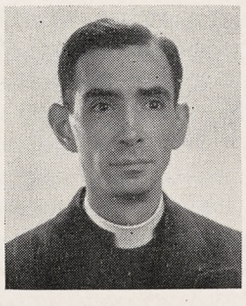
The real answer to the complaint is to be found in your definition of the Church.

Is God a hard master who calls you to an unprofitable job? If so, then strike, but do not imagine that you have reached the end of the question. You are responsible for what happens afterward, for you have contributed to the chaos by your desertion of the forces that make for law and order.



The Living Liturgy ---

The Problem Of Ceremonial

BY

MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR.

ONE of the distressing features—I almost said irritations—of my correspondence is the number of letters I receive from the clergy asking for advice in the minutiae of ceremonial, or asking that I take up space in this column discussing such things as the number of candles which should be placed on the Holy Table, what to do with the service-book after the Communion rite is completed, whether a genuflexion is a good thing or not, whether a white linen chasuble is always appropriate at any celebration of the Eucharist, and so forth.

Certainly ceremonial is not unimportant, as some clergy vainly imagine. For one thing, it is a very significant means of teaching, since we learn through our eyes as well as through our ears. And we express meanings by gestures no less than by words. The making of the sign of the cross is as devout and expressive a form of prayer or of faith as any number of verbal ejaculations. One must say, too, that ceremonial is necessary in liturgy since liturgy is action. The sacraments, at least, have to be performed. Even an act of corporate silence is ceremonial of a sort. It is certainly ceremonious, i.e., if it is really corporate. If ceremonial, then, is necessary to liturgical worship, it is important. And clergy who concern themselves with it are not to be despised for wasting time on trivialities, provided always that their concern is with the expressive and didactic values of ceremonial and not with mere correctness of ceremonial according to preconceived norms. Good usage in ceremonial should not be tight-fitted to Roman or to Sarum patterns, or for that matter to what is acceptable to the E.E.F. or the Anglican Society.

Christian worship has always exhibited much variation in ceremonial from parish to parish, or diocese to diocese. It was the 16th century Reformers, whether Catholic or Protestant, who conceived the idea of rigid uniformity that has plagued us ever since. Today we are more tolerant of differences than even our forefathers of a century ago, though we can still hurl at one another epithets (not always unjustified) of "sloppy" or "superstitious." Yet most parish priests can testify from experience that an attempt to alter an established usage or to introduce a new piece of ceremonial can create a parochial crisis. It is easier to preach heresy to some congregations than to change their accustomed ways of doing the obvious. A genuflexion made by the celebrant during the Consecration prayer will arouse more ire than the terribly medieval doctrine of the Atonement in terms of "satisfaction" which the celebrant reads in that same prayer at every Eucharist. Is there any cure for this disposition?

For one thing, we can stop calling certain types of ceremonial "Catholic," for the term is absolutely meaningless in this context unless one defines the century and the locale of such and such a usage. I recall in this connection an amusing discussion I had several years ago when I was in Rome visiting one of the old basilicas in company with a friend who had just graduated from his confirmation class in an American "high-church" parish. My friend could never get it into his head that the custom of standing behind the altar, facing the people, was the original, Catholic position of the celebrant at Mass. He was certain that the manner of celebrating in this venerable Roman basilica was incorrect. I do not know whether he ever saw the Pope himself celebrate in this "incorrect" way in St. Peter's. If he did, I hope it did not destroy his faith.

Recently one of my former pupils who has just gone to a new parish asked me what I considered to be the most important, single ceremonial practice which he might introduce at his Eucharistic celebrations. Without hesitation my reply was that he should institute the Offertory procession. Now there have been many ways of preparing the Holy Table for the Eucharistic offering. The Orthodox do it one way, the Romans another; and the Anglicans and the Methodists have their own customary ways. The Offertory procession fostered by the modern Liturgical Movement leaders does not exactly correspond to any of these historic usages. As a matter of fact, some amount of experiment will be necessary until the best way is found for making this procession. But the best way will be the one that is most expeditious, reverent, and expressive of the essential meaning of the Offertory itself. The important thing is that the people realize that the oblations of bread and wine are their offering, and that it is they themselves who bring them to the altar for consecration and communion. So it is with all good ceremonial. First, we do what has to be done, and do it in as dignified and courteous a way as we can. And secondly, we try to do it in such a way that we make explicit in the action what is the intent and devotion of our minds and hearts.

Talking It Over

BY

W. B. SPOFFORD SR.

ENOUGH time has passed since the Bishops issued their El Paso Pastoral for us to learn a number of things from it. The first is that it hit us where we live when it declared that the deepest enemy is godless materialism. And the important thing to remember about that statement is that our Bishops were talking about my materialism, and yours, not so much about the Russians or Chinese.

We can also learn from the pronouncement something about how the secular press and radio handles news these days. Every newspaper and commentator that mentioned the Pastoral at all, as near as I can discover, headlined just one sentence—not even a complete sentence—"The immediate and obvious enemy of western civilization is Russian Communism"—and they put a period after that instead of completing the statement, "but the deepest enemy is the godless materialism which bred the illusions and cynicism of Communism and weakens us now from within. Beneath much of our own life there are assumptions which must be fought by every member of the Church, for they are part of the total enemy we face."

The Bishops then went on to name three "enemies": "this life is all there is"; "man's economic activity is his most important activity"; "the more material things we possess the happier we will be as a people."

The secular press and the commentators ignored all this.

IT is a part of my job to read many religious journals, published here, in England, in Canada and elsewhere. Since the Pastoral was issued I guess I have read a dozen editorials commenting on it. There was not one that did not praise it for hitting not so much at the other fellow's "materialism" as at our own. This was particularly true of the English and Canadian Church papers whose editors, I suspect, are a bit fed-up with U. C. domination that is largely based on materialism, and were delighted to have our Church leaders denounce it and warn against it.

Another lesson which can be learned from the way the Pastoral was handled could go under the heading of "watch your tongue." What I wish to say about this I presume will be misunderstood. It is that unless you want to add to the hate and fear and the terrible barrage of propaganda that blind our eyes and plug our ears, don't give the propaganda makers anything they can grab and blow up for their own purposes. That is what they did with "the immediate and obvious enemy of western civilization is Russian Communism."

If I have counted accurately, there were 1,326 words in the Pastoral. Just eleven of those words were lifted from their context and printed in big headlines all over the United States, thus adding to the over-supply of hate, fear and bitterness. This, of course, was quite contrary to the intention of our Bishops.

It can be further added that if you want accurate reports of Church news, properly interpreted, you better subscribe to one of the Church papers. And if you choose The Witness, those of you who are getting the magazine at the church door during Lent, it will be swell with us. Incidentally—maybe not so incidentally—the price remains at $4 a year and the address is still Tunkhannock, Pa.

Saints Alive

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

SAINTS are alive, both in this world and the next. Worldly wise people speak of saints as if they missed most of life because they avoid sensual self-indulgences. But the distinctive mark of a real saint is vibrant life, serene strength, a quiet faith and joy which is caught by those they meet. Saints are the most fully alive people in this world. They are real folks with a twinkle in the eye and a joyous spirit.

They also live after death. It is not uncommon for us to be conscious of them. Superstitious folk describe the experience of awareness of their presence as "seeing a ghost." Christians prefer the expression "communion of saints."

For it is the saint who lives, the real person, not the shadow or ghost. And though we do not know much about the life after death, we do know by faith that there is such life, like life in this world a gift of God. And one of the glories opened to us by the entrance into that life by those who love is the deeper ties of fellowship which their presence give us with the saints in light. Thus death becomes an occasion of confident hope and the "separation" which death brings turns out to be an even deeper connection in the communion of saints.

Latent Heat

BY

JOHN E. HINES

Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"LATENT heat behind formal exterior" was a phrase once applied as being descriptive of the music of Johannes Brahms. I wonder if it could not be even more fittingly applied to our Episcopal Church. For, certainly, we have a "formal exterior," if one may describe a liturgical service in such terms. There is dignity and stately motion and order, if not downright precision. And there is indisputable merit in all of this. So that —to discover it, one has only to consider the possibility of throwing it away carelessly, depending for worship values upon the intuition of the minister and the eleven o'clock Sunday morning dynamic of the Holy Spirit.

But what of the heat? Ah—that is another question! This is not a discussion of the weather. I am speaking of a different kind of heat. It is a heat with flame! It is a heat which has emotional drive! It is a heat which generates the steam which drives the machinery of a man's heart, and makes him ceaselessly restless until he finds someone else to whom he imparts at least a portion of that heart-warming conviction. I, for one, would like to see my fellow-Episcopalians aflame. Then things would really begin to happen.

St. Paul has a phrase which is condemnatory of the people who are possessed of the heat, but without adequate intellectual direction. "I bear them witness" he said "that they have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge." How swift we are to apply St. Paul's remark to many of our fellow Christians who seem all heart but no head. Yet, I wonder which is the most serious offense against the Divine Person: to be all heart and no head, or to be all head and no heart. I believe that our Lord had words to say about those men who possessed a burnished exterior, but no redemptive emotional human concern. And, remembering that, I had rather take my chances with the men and women who were reckless of the formal exterior because they felt that they were both the Keepers and the Transmitters of the Flame!

Fear Not

BY

GEORGE I. HILLER

Rector of Trinity Church, Miami

"WE know not what the morrow will bring forth," and "we are living in perilous times"; "The atomic age and its terrors"; "the dissolution of civilization," etc.

Somehow or other, every speech we hear or read echoes these sentiments, but it is not new. We have lived in the same kind of uncertainty in 1780, 1815, 1869, 1900, 1920 and, in fact, many other years in between. We have never known what the morrow would bring forth, and the perils of every age have been the subject of prophetic fears.

The speaker does us a disservice with this emphasis—no matter how true his fears. We are all capable of conjuring up enough fears to spoil our spirit, efficiency and progress. It is time we emphasized God and our Faith; and stepped boldly, not blindly, into the future for whatever it may hold.

Let the pendulum swing to the need of confident fighting faith, and with less emphasis on the terrible buga-boos of the future. Our worst fears are never realized, and we are "frozen by fear." Let the emphasis be on hope for on hope we build. "A man's reach must exceed his grasp else what's a heaven for?"

If we must decry something, let it be the past; and let us not in fear shrink, but rather, in hope strive for the future.

"Prophecy unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Problem of Christ in the Twentieth Century. By W. R. Matthews. Oxford Univ. Press. $2.00.

One more essay in Christology that takes a cue from modern psychology and tries to fathom the relations of the divine and human in our Lord. But the historical antecedents, the data of the gospels, are not thoroughly enough analyzed.

The Glory of God and the Transfiguration of Christ. By A. M. Ramsey. Longmans. $2.50.

A study of the theme of the Transfiguration against the background of the Old Testament and Jewish ideas of the divine glory. It is unfortunate that the festival comes at a time of year when it gets neglected: but there is no reason the clergy should not preach upon its meaning at other times—and here is a good book to stimulate thought on the subject.

The Belief in Progress. By John Baillie. Scribner. $2.75.

Whenever one hears of a new book by John Baillie, there is only one thing to do—order it and devour it! This one is a survey of the ideas of social progress as set forth in classical thought and later, down to the present. Conclusion: there is no automatic progress of society, but only the religious transformation of the individual and of society.

A Pioneer in Northwest America, 1841-58: the Memoirs of Gustav Unonius. Vol. I. University of Minnesota Press. $6.00.

This is a book of more than ordinary interest to Episcopalians, as Unonius settled west of Milwaukee, welcomed the three young missionaries from General Seminary who arrived to found Nashotah, attended their services, and was himself finally ordained.

His piquant account of his house-raising and the pioneer problems of furniture, clothing, cold and illness are absorbing, although his tales of pheasant, partridge, duck, goose, venison and trout, served in their season with cranberries, wild grapes or easily grown melons, are less likely to arouse our sympathies.

It seems that at the end of volume II he returned to Sweden and was forever after a misfit there. His book notes that the two greatest mistakes of his life were in coming to the United States at all and in not remaining after he had settled here. —Helen Hardie Grant Dream and Reality. By Nicolas Berdyaev. Macmillan. $4.50.

This "essay in autobiography" is a perfectly fascinating revelation of the way in which Berdyaev's mind developed. Here was a theology—or a theologian—very different from what we in the West are accustomed to: mediaeval, yet ultra-modern, even futuristic; Catholic, but with a difference; socially minded, but aristocratic. Berdyaev has spoken to our generation as only a few others have, and his voice will still be heard many years hence.

You're Human Too! By Adele Stresseman. Coward, McCann. $3.00.

Dr. Stresseman, as an accomplished practitioner in the growing psychosomatic field, has a wide understanding of what makes people "tick." This book is outstanding among the many written on human behavior and misbehavior and how to remedy the latter. The reader is bound to find himself and his problems on almost every page—if he looks sharply! It is surpassingly good on several counts; it is written with deep religious insight; it is non-technical without being superficial; it is sympathetic and hopeful. Excellent for pastors and people.—J. H. T.

Everybody Calls Me Father. By Father X. Sheed and Ward. $2.25.

A very clever book about the Roman Catholic Church, designed to present it in the most attractive light, and undoubtedly full of appeal to many persons somewhat disillusioned over Protestantism—which is rather severely cariacatured. Its type of Catholicism is the bluff, hale and hearty police sergeant type, which seems to predominate here in America. The mountainous backgrounds of Catholic spirituality and intellectual power are submerged in a sea of sentiment.

Pastoral Counseling. By Carroll A. Wise. Harper. $2.75.

This is an excellent book so far as it goes. We do not mean that we expect anyone now to write a definitive book on pastoral counseling; the author disavows any such attempt. But what we do need and can have is a book on this subject by someone who understands the meaning of Christian symbols and sacraments. There is a section on the Minister as a symbol, but nothing on the use of symbols. There is little appreciation of the meaning of penance. However, this is a good exploration of the process of pastoral counseling and any man in the ministry will find this a valuable and useful book.—A. C. L.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

CHRIST CHURCH GOES TO SYNAGOGUE

★ In the early years of Congregation Mikveh Israel, the synagogue building was situated on Cherry Street between 3rd and 4th Streets, Philadelphia, while Christ Episcopal Church occupied its present location. So, the two houses of worship were practically neighbors and very good neighbors, too. When the new building of Mikveh Israel was dedicated in 1825 on the same site as the old one, the chief justice and the associate justices of the Supreme Court, and many other distinguished citizens including Bishop White of Christ Church and other clergymen, were present.

From that time, even though Congregation Mikveh Israel moved to other localities, the neighborly feeling between the two congregations continued and grew stronger through the years. Now, they still come together as a group once a year. Last year, Mikveh Israel was the guest of Christ Church. This year, Christ Church was the guest of Mikveh Israel at a dinner at Gratz College on February 14th. A letter to Mikveh Israel from George Washington was read on the occasion.

The Rabbi of the Jewish congregation is the Rev. Leon N. Elmaleh, and the rector of Christ Church is the Rev. E. A. De Bordenave.

HOLY WEEK SERVICES IN CHICAGO

★ The Church Club of Chicago is again sponsoring noonday services during Holy Week. They are being held in the Great Northern Theatre in the Loop. All of the services and addresses are to be by Bishop Conkling.

BISHOP Y. Y. TSU VISITS ARKANSAS

★ Bishop Y. Y. Tsu of China opened a series of meetings in Arkansas on February 18th and is to remain in the diocese for a month, speaking before numerous congregations. Also in the diocese during Lent is the Rev. D. A. McGregor, formerly head of religious education of the National Council, conducting missions at Batesville and Fort Smith.

CONFERENCE HAS SCHOLARSHIPS

★ Those who have attended the summer conference of the province of Washington are now raising a fund to provide scholarships for this year. Scholarship aid is also provided by a number of parishes, Auxiliaries and dioceses of the province. Information may be obtained from the Rev. E. A. de Bordenave, Christ Church, Philadelphia.

A THEOLOGICAL WORD BOOK OF THE BIBLE

Edited by Canon Alan Richardson

An outstanding reference work containing theological definitions of key words used in the Bible. The definitions are the result of the concerted efforts of thirty-one eminent Biblical scholars under the editorship of Dr. Richardson, Canon of Durham. Presented with striking unanimity, the contributions contain an informed evangelical point of view with strong emphasis on the religious value of the Bible. The amount of theological knowledge contained in this book will be an invaluable supplement to any student's, minister's or layman's understanding and enjoyment of the Bible. Fully cross-referenced for greater clarity, the book represents the finest theological scholarship in this field today. $3.50.

ATHEIST BEGINS FIGHT ON RELIGION

A self-styled "militant atheist" has begun a legal fight against the University of Minnesota on the grounds that it is too friendly to organized religion. Frank C. Hughes, the atheist, an alumnus of the class of 1903, says that he will go to the Supreme Court if necessary to halt what he claims is "wholesale violation" of the university's constitution. As precedent, the 63-year-old engineer, cited the court's decision in the McCollum case on what he defined as "separation of Church and state" and says he hopes to obtain a similar decision.

ASK CONGRESS APPROVE FOOD TO INDIA

Representatives of Churches testified at hearing conducted by the House foreign affairs committee urging the sending of two million tons of relief food to famine victims in India. President F. C. Fry of the United Lutherans spoke on behalf of the National Council of Churches; the Rev. Vincent McCauley of Washington spoke for Roman Catholics; the Rev. William S. Nelson, dean of Howard University, testified for the Friends Service Committee. Dr. and Mrs. Nelson were missionaries for the Quakers in India during 1946-47.

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION ENTERS DIXON CASE

The American Civil Liberties Union has entered the Dixon Case, stating in an amicus curiae (friend of the court) brief that it is opposed to disqualifying all members of R. Action was originally taken when a group of Protestants in Dixon, N. M., went before the state's supreme court in an effort to ban R. C. influence in the schools.

NEW PROTESTANT GROUP FOR SERVICEMEN

The National Council of Churches will launch this spring a "United Fellowship of Protestants in the Armed Services." The program will follow the general pattern of the various denominational youth organizations, with worship, study, service activities and recreation. Local units will be developed at military bases and on ships. Units in the U. S. will cooperate with local Christian youth councils.

INDIANA SENATE APPROVES BONUS FOR COs

The Indiana Senate has voted to include in state bonus payments conscientious objectors who served in the armed forces in the last war. It amended the bill to include 1-A-O soldiers, who were men willing to don a uniform but not to bear arms. Most of them were in medical units.

In Montana a bill has passed the House and is now before the Senate which will bar COs from holding public office (58-22) and also approved another (61-17) making military non-cooperation a crime, which would subject convicted persons to a fine of $1,000 to $5,000 or imprisonment from one to five years. Both bills have been opposed by Church leaders.

ASK LEGISLATIVE INQUIRY ON MIGRANTS

A survey of conditions among Minnesota's 15,000 to 20,000 migrant workers, made for the Council of Churches, has resulted in a request in the legislature for an inquiry of its own. A Senator and a Representative, in a joint statement, say that conditions under which migrants work are "unbelievably disgraceful" and that "the plight of their children who are deprived of an education in order to work endless hours for a pittance is appalling."

CHURCH COLLEGES THREATENED

The commission on Christian higher education of the National Council of Churches says that emergency funds are needed if Church colleges are to remain open in what was described as the "most critical struggle for survival since the Civil War." The commission also asked for assistance to strengthen the student movement, and urged recruiting and training of more people for such Christian vocations as education, evangelism, and medicine. A spokesman said that none of the Church colleges is now "on the verge of closing but many Protestant-affiliated institutions are wrestling with the problem of how they may stay open beyond next June."

WARN AGAINST USE OF ATOM BOMB

The Rev. Nicholas Maestrini, R.C. missionary with 20 years of service in the Far East, said in St. Paul that the use of the atom bomb in China or Korea would be a "real tragedy". Such action he said would alienate the Asiatics.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

REFUSES TO SILENCE DEAN JOHNSON

Prime Minister Clement Attlee last week rejected a suggestion made in the House of Commons that the Dean of Canterbury, Hewlett Johnson, be silenced. A member proposed that legislation be introduced which would enable the Church of England to acquire greater disciplinary authority over its members, particularly when they associate themselves with the propagation of "anti-Christian creeds." Mr. Attlee replied that the procedure for legislation on matters concerning the Church of England originates in the National Assembly of the Church and added that it would be particularly dangerous if the House of Commons were accused of interfering with religious liberties. Sir Richard Acland, Labor M. P. and a member of the Church Assembly, said that the Church already has disciplinary measures but that they do not restrict the expression of political opinion.

Dean Johnson had, on Feb. 16, commented on Stalin's recent public statement on war or peace as follows: "Stalin's statement is calm, logical and lucid. Like a blast of fresh air it penetrates the fog of muddle and propaganda lies spread by the enemies of peace. It deals a blow at Attlee's attempts to justify the new colossal British rearmament program; it tears his mask off and, I presume, leaves him shame-faced. He prefers to adhere to any malicious slander invented by the enemies of socialism. If we want to avert war we must force a change in Attlee's policy."

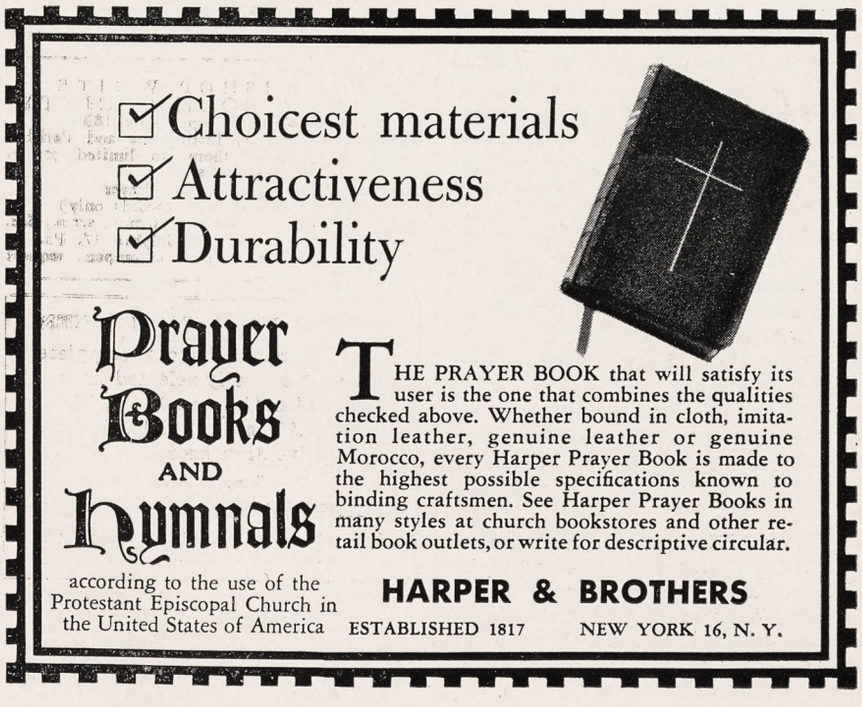
PROTESTANTS REFUSED PERMIT TO BUILD

The Greek government has rejected a petition from the Evangelical Church to build a church. Under the law, Greek Orthodox authorities are entitled to be consulted when non-Orthodox groups propose to erect a religious building. In this case Metropolitan Pandeleimon of Edhessa said that he had no objections, personally, to the building but he felt inhabitants of the village where it was to be erected "would not tolerate such a building."

WORLD COUNCIL GROUP WANTS CHINA IN UN

In a special "message to the nation," the Australian committee for the World Council of Churches said it favored admitting Communist China to the United Nations, "because international justice demands such a step." The committee also endorsed the British government's stand against recrossing the 38th parallel in Korea by UN forces until after "the fullest consultation with UN members and further patient attempts at negotiation."

Anglican Bishop Ernest H. Burgmann of Canberra and Goulburn told the committee that John Foster Dulles, President Truman's special envoy to Japan, is, in many ways, "a dangerous man." The bishop said that "probably Dulles is an honest Christian, but we don't want to commit the World Council to anything he does."



"Nor," he added, "should we commit this body to anything in the way of American international politics, or we will get our fingers burned."

CZECH VICARS PLEDGE LOYALTY

Loyalty to the government of Czechoslovakia was pledged in a message drafted by R. C. chapter vicars and vicar generals who met in Prague, attended by representatives of all the dioceses in the country. They promised fidelity to the people's democratic regime and its laws and expressed their desire "as sincere and honest Christians and patriots to go side by side with the people and to serve and defend their interests. We want to help with all our strength to build up a better and juster social order."

PRIESTS APPOINTED IN SLOVAKIA

About thirty additional priests, loyal to their government, have been appointed to important administrative posts in R.C. dioceses in Slovakia.

A. F. GILMAN
Layman of Chicago

I want to thank the Witness and Dr. Grant from the bottom of my heart for "Our Protestant Heritage."

I am sorry I have made so many of your readers unhappy by my remarks about the Catholic Church. It might startle Mr. Thompson to hear that most of the 400,000,000 Catholics (I use the word in its commonly accepted meaning) in the world consider the Episcopal Church not only as excommunicated but as not even Christian. As there are only some 200,000,000 Protestants in the world and the Pope has announced that 400,000,000 Catholics cannot be wrong about the Virgin Mary, there is little chance of our historians getting anywhere with their arguments.

As for my "imaginary Church," which Mr. Ellsbee finds fault with, I seem to remember a remark to Peter made by Christ which ran something like this, "on this rock I will build my Church." Now people who build things don't pull them down out of the thin air all complete. They usually lay a foundation and then carry the structure up from there a little at a time. Certainly this is the way the Church has grown and surely it isn't perfect even today. I firmly believe that every sect and division of the Church carries in it a speck of divine inspiration and that God in his good time will integrate all these divisions into a whole which bears the same relation to the Church on earth that infinity does to the finite in mathematics. I think it is high time that we applied scientific methods to the study of religion and sloughed off the tremendous amount of wishful thinking that has crept into it.

A. L. MURRAY
Rector of Epiphany, St. Paul, Minn.

Honor Roll of The Witness truly "Salutes the Church," and is an apt way of "speaking good of his name." Possibly you have published stories of Warren McKenna and Robert Muir and also of C. Kilmer Myers, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Moore and Robert Pegram. Would it be possible to give your avid readers a summary of their several good works and tell us how they go about doing their unique good in their communities?

FREDERICK SONTAG
Layman of Syracuse, N. Y.

The labor issue of December 28, with the picture of Bishop Pardue and Phil Murray on the cover, was one of the best issues of recent months. I have heard much constructive comment on it.

MRS. O. E. GIFFRY
Churchwoman of Detroit

I want to congratulate Dr. Grant for the article "Our Protestant Heritage." I have so many good Roman Catholic friends, but I don't like their literature. I never pick up a Catholic paper without seeing articles against the Protestants and our Churches. For the past month or two I have been placing our Forward Movement booklets and a few other tracts in the rest room at the N. Y. Central Depot. I find so much of the Catholic booklets there that I believe they ought to be met with some of our own.

BERNARD IDDINGS BELL
Chaplain at University of Chicago

I wish to endorse the letter of the Rev. Don Frank Fenn (Witness, Feb. 22). The straddling attitude of the House of Bishops toward the protests sent to them about what seemed, and to many of us seem still, to be violations of the law of the Episcopal Church by two bishops of our communion, has seriously disturbed many of our people. Why cannot the House of Bishops clearly state their opinion on important issues clearly presented to them? There comes a time when avoiding issues augments acerbity. This is a case in point.

I know, as many another priest knows, how this refusal to decide things interferes with serious-minded men and women seeking confirmation, and makes it hard for the better sort of young men to offer themselves for holy orders. These are deterred not so much by the cases at issue as by the refusal of the Bishops to speak out.

STORY OF THE WEEK

A Free Convalescent Home Maintained For Clergy

Dr. Alice North Ministers In Maine Home Completely Free of All Costs

By JOHN F. KOLB
Clergyman, Diocese of Massachusetts

★ Last May I thought I was done for. That's when I had a cerebral hemorrhage. Nobody knows the agony of lying in bed with one side paralyzed until they have gone through it. All I can say is that if I can ever return to an active ministry I will know how to be more helpful to those who have gone through my experience and haven't come out of it so well. But what I really want to talk about is the fact that I think I am going back into the active ministry because of the kindness and care of Dr. Alice North here at Castine, Maine. First, let me tell you how I got here.

After the cerebral hemorrhage I went to the veterans' hospital. By the first of July I was able to sit up and everybody had high hopes. In fact I thought of myself as a kind of "wonder boy." My parish told me to take at least six months off, but I got along so well that I thought I would be all right by the first of September. So back I started, even though I had a limp and wasn't just as steady emotionally as I might have been. Then, suddenly, I felt pains around my heart and it looked very much like angina. The doctor told me I had to get away where I could have complete rest. But how is a clergyman with three small children to do that?

I knew Dr. North and I knew how she took in clergymen who needed convalescent care without any expense, except train fare. So I asked her if I could come. Promptly came the welcome reply, "Come as soon as you can and stay as long as you receive benefit from rest and care." Two days later I was on my way.

Convalescent Home

Arriving in Bangor, Maine, in the evening Dr. North met me at the train and drove me to her beautiful estate on the seashore at Castine. I had been a little worried about my diet, for to reduce blood pressure a salt-free diet is sometimes essential and weight reduction is highly desirable. Also there must be no consumption of tea, coffee, chocolate, spices, and little red meat. Moderate exercise and lots of rest taken frequently through the day are important parts of the regimen. I hated to mention all these things to Dr. North, not wanting to make an eternal nuisance of myself with all my special requirements. It seemed to me that I required more care than my year old daughter. Well, I didn't have to say a word. Dr. North knew what I needed better than I did, and what's more, she was ready to see that I carried out a program of diet and rest that was most beneficial.

On the way home she brought up these matters herself, informing me that she had purchased salt-free bread, butter and cereals, low calorie desserts and had worked out a diet on a basis of calories that would get my weight down. She suggested a daily program of rest and very mild exercise best suited to my condition. Her kindly and generous advice was concluded with the question, "What books would you like to read?" "If I don't have them I'll get them for you and put them in my library." I was so flabbergasted over this unheard of understanding and generosity that the only books I could think of were, "All this and Heaven too" and "It can't happen here."

Upon my arrival at the home I was shown to my bedroom by Leon, the pleasant, ever-cooperative handyman and gardener. My room turned out to be the "pink" room. There is a "yellow room," a "violet room," the "blue heaven," etc., all large, cheery bedrooms with a splendid view of the ocean. The rooms were even pleasanter with bouquets of flowers fresh every day from the garden.

Informality

While packing my bags I had given some thought to the matter of correct dress in such formal surroundings. As it turned out, most of the things I brought were wrong, for informality is the order of the day. When I came down to dinner in stiffly correct clericals I felt pretty silly and over-dressed to find my fellow guests in comfortable corduroys with flannel shirts open at the neck and the like.

What a dinner it was. As I was soon to discover, the cusine here in superb and the company delightful. I was seated between a veritable saint in the guise of a Lithuanian Baptist with fundamentalist leanings, who was a convert from Rome, and a rather young high churchman. Between bites of delicious golden bantam sweet corn, fresh from the garden, lamb chops and flaky brown apple pie, I rapidly came to the conclusion from the cheery banter that was going on around me, that what our Church needs is both more and better fundamentalists and more fine balanced high churchmen.

In the evening, as during the day, everyone did exactly what he pleased. There is no set routine here, even the time for breakfast is not set. It is served whenever one arises. Some read, others play games, some go to bed and listen to their radios with which every room is provided. Being tired from the trip that night I soon retired, rather bewildered by it all. In fact, I was so astonished by the unheard of generosity of our hostess that I found myself in the position of the little beady-eyed hoodlum from the slums of New York in one of O. Henry's stories who was taken into the home of a rich Texas rancher to recover his health. The first night he quite understandably lay awake asking himself over and over, "wo'ts the angle, where's the catch?" The moonlight shining over the bay crowning each wave with a silver halo and the steady pulsing of the surf against the shore seemed to say, "All is well" and before I knew it I had dropped off into a dreamless slumber only to be awakened by the sun shining in the window and the tantalizing aroma of freshly made coffee and frying bacon.

Things to Do

After bathing and dressing in a leisurely fashion, I went down and joined one of the guests at breakfast. The early birds had eaten and were out for their constitutionals. After breakfast I found there were many more things to do than sending picture postcards to one's "sisters and his cousins and his aunts" to "wish you were here." There is a golf links nearby where clergy can play without charge, or there is croquet for less active men like myself. There are any number of fine hikes to take and more historical spots to visit than in Boston. This whole area was once known as Acadia, and between the French, the English, the Indians and the Tories many exciting events took place, all carefully labeled with appropriate markers. Personally, I enjoyed sitting in the living room with its magnificent picture window overlooking the bay and with a magazine or book in hand and a crackling fire in the fireplace, sort of day dreaming while watching the sea which from that cozy place is fascinating in all its moods. The village of Castine is a picturesque place, preserving much of the old New England atmosphere. Just wandering about the streets with their fine colonial homes and chatting with the very friendly inhabitants is a pleasure.

One could not live in this delightful atmosphere long without marked improvement in mind and body. Soon the great question in my mind changed from "if" to "when" I would be able to resume my work. Neither could my scepticism, which would have done credit to a bowery hoodlum, long remain. Dr. North, like Abou Ben Adhem is "one who loves her fellowman" and has consecrated her life and her inheritance to the welfare of others. One needs to live here but a short time till the conviction steals over him, so well expressed in the words of a former guest, "Here is the house, here is the river cool, here is nature, dignified, untouched. Merely worldly things have no place in this pastoral serenity. Here is the peace which passeth all understanding."

This little article is both my way of saying "thank you" to Dr. North and of telling some brother clergyman in need where he may find by these sparkling Maine waters a pool of Bethesda where he too may be restored.

Anyone desiring further particulars or information about this home may write to Dr. Alice North, Castine, Maine.

Editor's Note: When we received this story we were skeptical, thinking that there must be a catch somewhere. Checking reveals however that Dr. North finances everything, is able to do so, and is anxious to receive requests for admission. Everything is free, meals and all. John Kolb repeats, in a letter just received, "I stayed there for two months and all it cost me was my railroad fare to Bangor where I was met by Dr. North and driven to Castine."

BABY SITTERS AID CONFIRMATION

★ Baby sitters are provided for parents who attend confirmation classes at St. Andrew's, Amarillo, Texas, where the Rev. Smythe H. Lindsay is rector. Sitters for services are fairly common but this idea seems to be a "first."

LONG ISLAND HAS NEW GUILD

★ A craftsman's guild has been organized in the diocese of Long Island by Bishop DeWolfe. Its purpose is to aid in the repairing of mission property and the construction of furniture for them. There is at present an enrollment of 75 with special skills as carpenters, electricians, plumbers and painters.

UNIQUE CLUB IS FORMED

★ St. Andrew's, Scottsbluff, Nebraska, has a "45 club" whose members pledge to attend church at least 45 Sundays during the year. There are 40 members at present, each wearing a button signifying membership.

New York Workshop On Social Issues

★ The diocese of New York had a most successful workshop on the Church and the social order, sponsored by the commission on social relations and meeting for two days at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Three laymen warned of the inevitability of war and of the danger of Fascism in the United States because we are preparing for war. However three clergymen rejected the fatalism of this prophecy by analyzing the spiritual basis for our present danger and by asserting that peace should replace war as an instrument shaping the future of the nation.

Layman Speaks

The direction of social and economic change, was brought to its sharpest focus by Austin M. Fisher, an industrial consultant. He criticized previous speakers for dealing principally with inflation as the fundamental problem of today. He said "symptoms are being confused with causes. Inflation is part of the evolution of an historic era."

Identifying this era as a period of conflict with Communist states, he said, "Lenin said the capitalistic system would spend itself into destruction. The tactics and strategy of the Soviet Union are to rear a Communism indigenous to each country by internal revolution, not external aggression.

"What is happening now in Korea can go on in other places, such as Viet Nam and Iran. In each case, if we are to oppose it, our American resources will be pitted against a domestic Communism and will impose a drain on our manpower, already causing inflation.

"We must have an austerity program. We must sacrifice gains already won. The labor movement must sacrifice some of its gains."

He implied that the alternative would be to fulfill Lenin's prophecy about the bankruptcy of Western Democracies. He said, in effect, that peace is the greatest threat today. "Most business men are now dependent on war or war possibilities. Peace tomorrow would bring great unemployment. Four or five years from now, when we face peace, it will be just the more difficult than if we faced it tomorrow."

Labor Leader

As a comment on Mr. Fisher's call for an "austerity program," Ellis Van Riper, secretary-treasurer, local 100, Transport Workers Union, CIO said, "We are entering a period just ahead that could . . . make America into a semi-fascist state with all the trimmings of a corporate economy."

Mr. Van Riper felt we should wage war at once to head off Fascism as "a lot depends on whether we are to enter a short but intensive period of two or three years to win a war or whether we are to enter a period that will bring twenty or thirty years of rigidly controlled economy and production. It is obvious that the social gains of the past and the general well being of the American people have most to fear from the latter."

Cameron Hall, secretary, department of the Church and economic life, National Council of Churches, like both Mr. Fisher and Mr. Van Riper assumed the inevitability of war and talked at length how inflation, the product of our war preparations, could be met in a "Christian way."

Leland Henry

The second session on the preservation of peace and freedom came seemingly as a direct retort to the previous speakers. In talking of the threat of wars, the Rev. Leland B. Henry, executive director of the commission, who conceived the workshop and was a guiding light to its realization, cited the pronouncement of the National Council of Churches in Ohio in December, saying, "we are warned against hysteria, self-righteousness, unilateral action, false pride and facesaving tendencies, making our economy dependent on war. And above all we must guard against impatience.

"We must have militant preaching. We must repeat over and over again the great Christian doctrines of the universal Fatherhood of God and the dignity of man as the child of God.

"We must not only preach these things, but we must practice what we preach. Our greatest danger is inward decay."

Henry reminded the gathering that pacifism as an answer to war has behind it "the teaching of the Hebrew prophets, the teaching and examples of our Lord, the practice of the early Church and the long, unbroken stream of pacifist conviction extending through the centuries to our own day," quoting the Lambeth, 1948, "that war as a method of settling international disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ."

While Lambeth, 1948, went on to say there are occasions when war may be the lesser of two evils, Mr. Henry warned, "there remains the duty of suggesting a strategy of Christian statesmanship which will offer the best possible chance of avoiding war. We must guard against dependence on military strength alone. As the bishops said in their latest Pastoral:

". . . we must realize that no final victory can take place on the field of battle. Since ideas are not destroyed by guns, the only way to overcome a false view of life is by the militant preaching and living of a true view of life."

Mr. Henry, in closing, remarked that the spiritual undergirding of our people, to give them strength to stand and endure, could prevent us from "choosing war, as the easier way out of an impossible dilemma."

As a long-view solution, he called for a true federal government, stronger than the North Atlantic treaty or the United Nations, "a union that will bring the same access of strength and prosperity and freedom that federal union brought to the thirteen American states in 1787."

Causes of Fear

The Rev. M. Moran Weston warned "fear is slowly stealing on us and its paralyzing effects are being felt more and more." He listed the six causes of American fear which are propelling us toward war as:

1. The international movement of Communism.
2. The counter-revolution, Fascism.
3. The surviving system of colonial empires.
4. The increasingly aggressive activity of the Roman Church.
5. Our deep sense of guilt.
6. The spectre of disease, poverty and ignorance in the world, our standard of living in America being eight times higher than that of non-Western people. He noted that our presentation of the American way to deprived people is often such as to excite hostile jealousy rather than admiration.

Mr. Weston cited "loyalty oaths" and the McCarran Act as "products of that fear which are destroying Christian freedom of conscience."

He called for the following:

"To win more people to the Christian view.

"To live what we preach.

"To r e s i s t repression of thought, racial restrictions, censorship in all forms. To replace a policy of revenge with winning over to our ideas.

"To encourage more of those movements involving universal laws.

"To seek ways of increasing communication between peoples of the world."

Christian Action

The Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving, in discussing the two presentations, added that "We can't seek peace as an end in itself. Peace must be the result of efforts of those seeking justice and truth."

The Rev. Richard L. Harbour closed with additional warnings as to the results of fear and tension. He urged that "freedom is everything" and should not be sacrificed to any passing exigencies or fears.

At the after-dinner session the Rev. Thomas J. Bigham Jr., instructor at the General Theological Seminary provided the apology for Christian action. Discussants were Mrs. Sarah Dickson Lutge and Bishop Boynton.

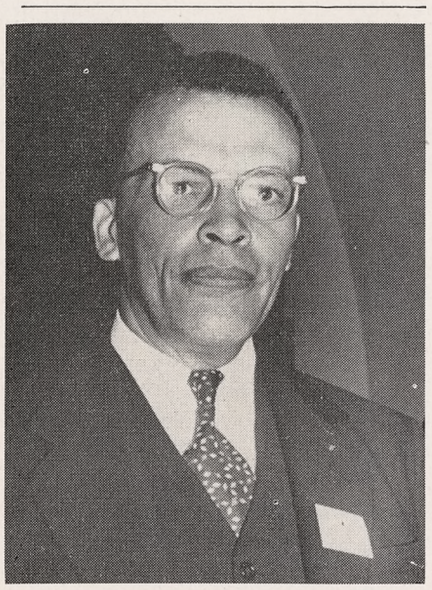
The Rev. Mr. Bingham emphasized the universality and omnipotence of God as placing a compulsion upon all Christians to attack evil and sin, whether within one's self or the outside world.

He said, "If God be God, then follow him," warning of new false prophets offering new gods.

"The root of all evil, then, is the attempt of the creature to seek autonomy, to try to be self-sufficient, to be a law to itself, to be self-existent . . . being tempted to say 'Mine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever'."

Stressing the width of the Church's mission, he said, "If Jesus Christ (goes into all parts of life), then the Church, the body of Christ, follows him by entering into all areas of life to relate them all to him who alone is absolute, helping them avoid their tendency to absolutize their own relative values and goods."

And yet, the speaker said, "How deeply haunted is every effort at social service by the insidious sin of personal domination," pointing out how men pervert the objectives of the Church into selfish, personal goals.



The Real Issue

As to the international struggle, he asked what the real issue it.

"We cannot as Christians say that the issue is the Communist economic system, for the Christian faith does not see any absolute good in any economic order, but only a relative good as an economic order enables the full life of man in his eternal destiny; and the social goals of Communism are in many ways Christian; after all, social justice and economic justice are ideals that Christians m u s t guiltily confess to be Christian ideals. And at least American Christians can hardly hold that revolution, even armed revolution, is always per se an evil. Not even the materialism of Communism, nor its theistic philosophy, is chiefly the issue, for —as the House of Bishops has just reminded us—materialism and practical atheism are very much at home right among us.

"The issue is rather the fact that Communists absolutize that system as the only solution to the human problem, and absolutize their program as the final means for human redemption . . . 'it is not the atheism of Communism that should be our major concern; it is the practical idolatry'."

In conclusion, he said, "Whatever the political decision that Christian statesmen and others must make, the Christian faith is content with no decision that merely sets up some democratic or American Baal, expressive of our genius, over against the Communist Baal. If the Lord be God, then follow him."

Bishop Boynton

In commenting on the address, Bishop Boynton said, "The Church is the visible and concrete means—because it is the body of Christ—to make known to the world the will of the absolute God, and to carry out God's action in society. It accomplishes this through its nature as prophet and priest. In its capacity of prophet, the Church has the obligation to declare what is God's direction for social action; and to judge whether a given social action is in line with or departing from God's will and decision.

"In its capacity as priest, the Church gives the strength needed through sacrament and prayer to bend social endeavor in the direction of God's will, and then to consecrate all who are following him.

"A reason why we do not have a more effective Christian social order is because through our sinfulness, we who compose the Church have failed in our prophetic and priestly function."

John A. Bell

The Rev. John A. Bell spoke on the techniques of the Church for social education and social action. He made a plea for more earnest Christian conviction and described more expert knowledge as being the necessary beginning of concrete program. He listed as some parochial techniques study groups and the worship service of the Church.

He described the techniques the national bodies and the diocese are using to realize Christian objectives, citing especially the work of the commission of the Churches on international affairs and the central committee of the World Council of Churches which "initiated action which has had the direct result of creating the peace observation commission. The commission is virtually a United Nations 'peace patrol' whose function is to send impartial observers to areas of special international responsibility, such as Germany, Austria and Japan."

Mrs. Malcolm Tuttle, vice-president, Christian social relations, Woman's Auxiliary, pointed out that "the best techniques in the world without loving and informed people to carry them out are of little value." She said, as an aside on an extended discussion of study-materials and methods, "It doesn't take background to push a wheel chair."

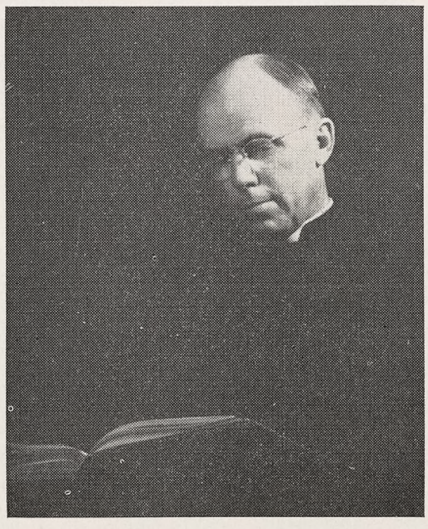
Mrs. Muriel Webb, assistant secretary, department of Christian social relations, National Council, discussed the helps and aids to program available through their office.

The workshop closed with an address by Bishop Donegan.

CORPORATE COMMUNION FOR LAWMAKERS

★ Eleven members of the Church who are also members of the state legislature of West Virginia held a corporate communion at St. John's Church, Charleston, March 2, with Bishop Campbell as celebrant. At breakfast afterwards, at which they were the guests of the bishop, they discussed some of the bills that were coming up for vote in the legislature and also something of the obligations of Christian stewardship in the field of political action.

SUMMER PROGRAM AT PARISHFIELD



★ Parishfield, conference and retreat center of the diocese of Michigan, has announced a summer program for those of college age or older. It will concentrate on experience in a Christian group and skill in working with groups. The daily life for those attending will include opportunity for Christian growth through corporate prayer, group discussion and manual work. Details will be developed by the group after their arrival. It opens July 1 and closes August 26. The cost for the period is $100.

MISSION OFFERINGS IN NEW YORK

★ Parishes and missions of the diocese of New York gave more than $600,000 for the missionary program of the Church in 1950, according to Theodor Oxholm, assistant treasurer. It represented an increase of over $200,000 over 1949. The National Council received $378,977 of the amount, an increase of 81% over 1949. The Auxiliary adopted a larger budget and its share of the total given was $56,483, against $48,450 contributed the previous year. The Church schools gave $40,523.

MEMORIAL PLAQUES DEDICATED

★ Bronze plaques in memory of the Rev. William G. Ivie, an Episcopalian, and the Rev. A. Hamilton Nesbitt, Methodist, founders of the St. George Association, were recently dedicated at Biblical Seminary, New York. The association is composed of Protestant employees of the city of New York, and since its founding has spread to other cities.

WILLIAM C. MUNDS became rector of Christ Church, Christiana Hundred, Del., in 1942 when there were 143 communicants. Today there are 550

★ We told the story of Marcus James in our news columns of February 15th. However we were so impressed with his achievements that we sent for his picture. He is the overseas secretary of the Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland, and associate chaplain at the University of London. He recently received the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Oxford and is the first Negro to be awarded a doctorate in Oxford's faculty of theology.

He has been named by the Montgomery Foundation to give the 1951 lectures in London on the philosophy of the Christian religion, the first American to be so appointed.

He is a graduate of Harvard and Union and is a priest of the diocese of New York.

THE 400th ANNIVERSARY OF GENEVAN PSALTER

★ Commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the Genevan Psalter was observed at a service at St. Michael's, New York, March 4, sponsored by the Hymn Society of America. Choirs of New York and suburban churches joined in singing tunes from the Psalter which have been set to hymns. It was the source of the most famous of all Protestant hymn tunes, Old Hundredth, known and sung familiarly as the Doxology.

The service was conducted by the rector, the Rev. William F. Corker, with officers of the society assisting.

CHURCH ARCHITECTURE COMMISSION

★ A questionnaire which went to all the bishops and clergy of the Church was the basis of discussion at a recent meeting of the commission on Church architecture and allied arts, headed by Bishop Oldham. A number of committees were appointed, including one on prefabricated and preengineered churches and parish houses headed by Frederick Dunn, architect of St. Louis. Also prizes totaling $300 are to be awarded teams consisting of seminarians and architectural students for the best designs for small churches.

It is hoped that a hand book may soon be published by the commission which will offer typical plans and details that would apply regardless of architectural design. The commission is also anxious to build up a lending library for the use of clergy and building committees.

CATHEDRAL DOMAIN of the diocese of Lexington is again to have several camps for boys and girls this summer

ANNOUNCE MEETINGS FOR LAYPEOPLE

★ Fourteen educational conferences for laypeople will be held this summer, sponsored by the National Council's department of Christian education, the Auxiliary and the committee on laymen's work. The new educational program will be presented and also those attending will be trained to present the national program to diocesan and parish groups in the fall and winter. Those to attend are to be chosen by their bishops.

The eastern team from headquarters will hold conferences at Hartford, Conn.; a center in Virginia to be named later; Mount Pocono, Pa.; Geneva, N. Y.; Racine, Wisconsin; Sewanee, Tenn.; Bloomfield Hills, Michigan; West Point, N. Y.

The western team will have meetings at Evergreen, Colorado; Santa Monica, California; Oakland, California; Tacoma, Washington; Northfield, Minnesota; Norman, Oklahoma. One has also been planned tentatively for Idaho.

The eastern series will be led by Mrs. Arthur Sherman; the Rev. Reuel Howe; the Rev. John Heuss; the Rev. Jesse Trotter. The western leaders will be Miss Avis E. Harvey; Mrs. Dora Chaplin; the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel and the Rev. Walter Williams.

YOUTH CONFERENCE IN IOWA

★ The annual youth convention of the diocese of Iowa will be held at St. Luke's, Des Moines, April 20-22.

BISHOP HIGLEY IS HURT

★ Bishop Walter M. Higley, suffragan of Central New York, and his daughter and son, were injured in a three-vehicle accident near Maple View, N. Y. on February 25. A truck driver apparently was at fault since he was fined for violating traffic laws. Neither the bishop nor his children were seriously hurt.

EDITORIALS

Palm Sunday

THE drama of the first Palm Sunday has inspired the following Christian centuries with a fascinated reverence for that notable entrance of our Lord into the holy city just five days before he was crucified on a hill outside the city wall.

It is enlightening, and therefore wholesome, for us to examine carefully the Palm Sunday story in order to make clear to ourselves what lay back of it as the motive and purpose of the Master. The facts are simple and plain enough; the donkey, the disciples, clothes for a saddle; the Master seated there, as the animal entered the capital city; the excited crowds with their hosannas and flowers and palm-branches.

It is when we begin to ask ourselves "why"?, that the facts themselves assume a startling aspect. Why did our Lord, himself the very soul of simplicity, deliberately stage this spectacular entry? And why, if he was going to do it, did he choose that rather absurd beast, the donkey, to carry him? Save for his own majestic presence, it would have been anything but impressive. The answer to these queries is found, we believe, in the political situation of Palestine at that period. The multitude surging into Jerusalem to celebrate the Jewish festival of independence was aroused to patriotic fervor and quite ready to follow any leader who would strike a blow against the hated Roman oppressor. Jesus' reputation was at its peak and he had just arrived from Galilee—famed centre of revolutionary activity—with his band of disciples, one of whom at least was well-known as a revolutionary zealot. The stage was set for violence—for futile violence with resulting terrible Roman retribution. Jesus was well aware of this and wished no part in it. So he carefully prepared to do what he could to prevent it and to make clear to the Roman authorities that he would lead no violent revolution.

He proceeded to fulfill in a dramatic way the prophecy of Zechariah, familiar to every Jew, describing the sort of person the Messiah would be: "thy king cometh unto thee: he is just and having salvation; lowly and riding upon an ass. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim and the horse from Jerusalem and the battle-bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the heathen." To Jews and Romans alike the ass was the symbol of humility and peace, as the horse was the sign of war and violence. So the pageant our Lord staged that first Palm Sunday was a momentary drama which decisively punctured the ambitions of the revolutionary leaders and silently announced to the Roman authorities that "my kingdom is not of this world."

The Palm Sunday procession was what we should call today a demonstration for peace. It prevented for the time being bloody rebellion and implacable retribution. It didn't stop the enthusiastic crowds from doing homage with flowers and palm-branches. These were the tributes of popular affection and gratitude to the gracious prophet who had healed their sick, raised their dead and taught them the words of eternal life—and we may believe that Christ welcomed them as such.

How desperately we need leaders today who can see the awful futility of war and who shall have vision and understanding of the common man everywhere; whose gestures shall no longer be fist-shaking, armament-piling, name-calling, but rather gestures of humility that summon potential enemies to counsel and compromise, to a cutting off of the battle-bow from both Washington and Moscow, lest there comes upon our entire world the fate that overtook Jerusalem in the year A. D. 70. A persistent and determined longing for this ought to be the intention at every Palm Sunday eucharist and the dominant prayer of every worshipper who carries palm-branches home from church in remembrance of the Prince of Peace who is just and having salvation.

"QUOTES"

"JOYFULLY SERVE"—what does it mean? Certainly not simply singing hymns, or living in happy-go-lucky irresponsibility, least of all being self-satisfied or congratulating ourselves that our own life flows on peacefully and happily. Christian joy is inseparable from penitence, a clear conviction of Christian truth, a constant choice of the eternal in preference to the temporal, self-sacrificing devotion to those things in the community and in our own lives which are clearly in accordance with the will of God. If the Church prayed in such a spirit there might well be peace in our time.

Center of History

WHEN a great and good person goes as far as dying cruelly and unjustly for the sake of saving the very people who misunderstand and spit upon him—this is unforgettable indeed. Especially when this great and good person goes to his death, not with any martyr complex, nor with self-pity or cry of judgment on his enemies, but purely out of a heroic devotion to a truth still to be revealed, and purely out of a love of humanity that seems utterly mocked—this is surely one of the heart-shattering spectacles of the world. This alone would explain mankind's reverence before the cross of Christ. As a human achievement it is truly the high water mark of our race.

But if this great and good person were, as the Church believes, none other than the high God himself wearing our mortal flesh and sharing our human travail—then the cross takes on a fourth dimension and stands at the center of history. Even more now it moves our hearts as nothing else in heaven and earth. It means—how poor are words—that God is the good beyond any possible imagining, that love so amazing, so divine, demands my soul, my life, my all! It completely humbles our pride, and in our sin and separation from the one our souls crave—it means there is atonement and reconciliation for even such as we.

This is the miracle of the ages, that God should so love the world, that he should come not with condemnation but with salvation. The ancient story is still the greatest of all. There is nothing like it in the written or spoken word: this story of a great and good person, strong and gentle, who dying for all mankind in lovingkindness and tender mercy, turns out to be the king of kings and lord of lords. This is the love, says the gospel, which is at the heart of the universe, by which we live and move and have our being. This was done for us, and this is our salvation. And this we remember with trembling and thankful hearts each Good Friday, the day of the wondrous cross of him who died that we might live.

Who Had the Victory?

AS we heard the Supreme Court's decision in the Melish case the words of the Duke of Wellington at the battle of Waterloo came into our minds: "Next to a great defeat the saddest thing in all the world is a great victory." Who had the real victory? Certainly not the Bishop of Long Island and his chancellor. To be sure they had had their pound of flesh, if that be any satisfaction, but somewhere even in their minds must have been the words, "God . . . hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter but of the spirit; for the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life." Certainly not the Church, for this ruthless action has brought this branch of it into disrepute among many who had thought it represented mercy and humanity. Certainly not the episcopate, for the Bishop's pretense about this being conducted on a "pastoral" level is demolished by all the evidence.

But there is a victory, as there proved to be even in the Cross. Dr. Melish comes out of this travail more loved and respected than ever. Esteemed as a man of courage and honor who refused, even though he was far from physically strong, to compromise; to abandon his Christian convictions, his parish, his multitude of friends. The principle of democratic justice for the Church cannot be killed; certainly not by those who value love of power greater than the power of love. They have achieved an unenviable fame; sad is their victory.

Church in the Week

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

THOSE who go to church regularly on Sundays can testify about how helpful they find the habit to be, and how the week doesn't seem to go right unless they do attend Church on Sunday. Many Church people however, have not discovered the great value of going to church during the week. I am not referring to attending church services during the week (their helpfulness goes without saying) but I mean simply going into the church when there is no service in progress, and worshipping God in silence. Those who have learned to do this know how much it can mean to us as we try to keep the right perspective on our joys, sorrows, and responsibilities.

There are many people these days who have little quietness in their lives. Their days are spent in the midst of hurry and clamor. How refreshing and restful the stillness of the church is! Many concerns beset us in these times and it is hard sometimes to see them in their proper relationships. But when we are quiet in church and try to look at things from a religious point of view, we find that our problems become easier to deal with. Some things do not look so big when we view them in the light of the Christian religion. Our souls need refreshment along the way of life. Just try going to church during the week and in the silence feel the touch of God's help.

The Beatitudes—

Blessed Are the Pure in Heart

IN other words — "Fortunate are the single-minded: for they shall find God." Or better— "Happy are the emotionally adjusted: for they are able to discern the reality of God." Certainly not—"Blessed are the sexually undefiled: for they shall be fit to go to heaven." Best of all—"Well adjusted personality tends to promote awareness of God." Such reduction as this does not claim, of course, to improve upon the original beatitude, but it does help to clarify certain points that are often misunderstood. The beatitude is to be considered, first of all, as stating part of the total attitude that is typical of the citizens of the kingdom of God. They shall, amongst other things, "see God," which certainly does not mean visionary experience, but refers to the sacramental interpretation of all reality as a direct means of perceiving the existence and presence of God. "Pure in heart" has an emotional connotation but it must not be thought of as the sole religious faculty; rather it stresses that area of the personality in which maladjustments have their rise. The interpretation, then, of the beatitude is in terms of the relation between emotion and faith.

Ends and Means

"PURITY of heart" and "seeing God" are inseparable. They describe together different aspects of the same attitude, but these aspects are in an operational relationship of means and ends. Awareness of God is the end and personality adjustment is the means. It is the means that comes first—personal adjustment, and it leads to the end—awareness of God. Yet the end is not separated from the means as some far off goal of future reward. The blessedness of seeing God is already being experienced in the practice of personal adjustment. As the process is continued the end works back on the means—seeing God works further adjustment of the personality, which in turn enables the person to discern God more fully. So a growing circle, or dialectical development, is set up which will produce both greater personal integration and deeper awareness of God. The reality of the end can be seen only in the growth of the means. If we are really seeing God we shall become better adjusted people. If this is not happening to us, we are not seeing God, no matter what we profess; we are seeing instead the projection of our own unintegrated personality, and ultimately we shall find (as Tawney once put it) not God, but a devil, whose continuance bears an embarrassing resemblance to ourselves. If, also, we do not find the end it is because we are not really trying the means—unawareness of God is due to some form of maladjustment.

Psychic Health

PERSONAL psychology and belief in God, to use other terms, are clearly closely related. It is, of course, no new idea. The book of Genesis teaches that man was made in the image of God —which sets the foundation for the principle that knowledge of God and knowledge of self are interrelated. He who is an integrated and adjusted person is able to believe in God because he is not preoccupied with himself nor is he projecting an impossible deity modeled after himself. He who sees God sees, of necessity, something of himself. Man tends to make God in his own image. The kind of God a person has, therefore, reveals the kind of self he is. An inferior idea of God denotes an unhealthy personality. Religion, then, is the clearest indicator of psychic health. It was Chesterton who said, following along this point, that in considering a person for a job or some relationship the surest reference was his religion because it told more about the man than anything else.

Every man sees God in proportion to his personality adjustment. It is not a matter of education or intelligence but of "purity of heart." There is no problem about the person who is properly adjusted. His character is the evidence that he discerns the presence of God. He may not, of course, believe in the sort of God he sees portrayed about him by the religious people. This conflict may, in fact, force him into a kind of verbal atheism as the only honest way out. The serious problem is with the person who only thinks he sees God. He is deceiving and deceived. Often he does not know that he has made his own god without consulting the God of all gods. His need may be for a psychiatrist but what he really needs, and probably the psychiatrist too, is a Perfectly Adjusted Man who can show him what God is like.

The problem of seeing God is really insoluble without Christ. He demonstrates that he sees God so clearly that "he and the Father are one." He shows what God is like by his actions and his teaching. The gospel portrait is of the perfectly integrated and adjusted personality. He is the supreme example of the formula of this beatitude. We know, therefore, what God is like in terms of Perfect Man and from him we get the highest standard. If our god is not like Christ's then we are seeing our unadjusted selves. If we want to see God we must in our spiritual experience "follow him."

Not seeing God has always been a disquieting problem to the religious consciousness. Why is it that when it is so clear to one person that another does not see it at all? Two persons of equal intelligence and ability will be presented with the same phenomena. One will give them a religious interpretation while another will either give a different explanation or be quite unaware of the religious possibilities involved. Such a situation is so intolerable to the person of strong conviction that in order to vindicate his own certainty he has to find some explanation of another's failure to believe—he is not destined to have faith—that is the answer. Hence the doctrine of predestination with all its arbitrariness and caprice.

Blinded By Sin

DOES not this Beatitude provide the answer? Theologically speaking, man could see God before the fall, but sin blinded his victim and he lost his purity of heart. Unless we are to believe in the doctrine of total depravity, what has happened to the human race cannot have corrupted its organic structure but has only impaired its function by the disorder resulting from the effects of sin. The theologians would phrase it by saying that "essential man" could see God but not "existential man." Man can be restored to his pristine purity by the operation of redeeming grace. If he can regain the purity of heart of his real self he can once again see God. The remedy is to restore order to life according to the divine plan so that man can see what he was originally intended to perceive.

Maladjustment is ultimately caused by the cultural and environmental disorders to be found in the sort of life that man produces. The disordered personality cannot see the real world, due to his inner confusion. He cannot, therefore, see God as he is. The remedy, therefore, for such a person is to be helped to regain his proper adjustment and then he can see God. It is significant on this point that modern therapy is cathartic and retroactive, seeking to restore order into the disturbed life by going back to the beginning where the maladjustments first began. This process really assumes that each individual has an ideal personality from which he has fallen, and the task is to restore him to it as the basis upon which he may build his readjustment. It is the well adjusted personality that is the real personality which can see God and the real world. We are reminded by this point of the prodigal son who when he came to himself, said "I will return to my father."

Distorted Vision

CERTAIN types of maladjustments either prohibit or distort the person's vision of God. There is the insecure personality. He is so occupied with trying to compensate for his own problems that he has no place for God. His defense may inflate his own ego so that he has no need for him or anyone else in his life. Immaturity is a cause of unbelief. Such a personality refuses to grow up and persists in childish attitudes. God is not sufficiently attention-giving to be the sort of father figure that he needs. Over-dependency makes a person so weak that he is unable to develop any independence in his personal relations with either man or God. There are many varieties of this sort of inner maladjustment, all centering around the ego. They exhibit their condition both theologically and psychologically. A person may have difficulties with a severe idea of God because he is rejecting his own rigid father. If he could be made to understand his own early family relationships he would be in a position to see God as a loving father. The solution lies in approaching him psychologically before trying to give him a new theology. The means must be straightened out before dealing with the end.

All of these personality difficulties are traceable to early cultural and environmental patterns that are perpetuated from parents to children and between group and group. Individuals in rare cases can be changed but the radical remedy is in changing the social climate so that there will be better opportunity of becoming an integrated person. People will see God if they are given the chance. The problem is fundamentally a sociological one. A better world will mean better people. It will not do the whole thing but it will begin with the means which in practice comes first. This is the emphasis that lies behind all those who are interested in changing the social structure. They believe that a restoration of society to its true function is the first step towards reforming the individuals who have been created by it. A peaceful social order is the necessary climate in which to nurture peaceful people. In our world today it is impossible to see God. Atheism is incurable except by getting at the causes of social maladjustment.

The Church should operate in terms of social evangelism as the means to personal evangelism. If we want people to see God, the first step is to see that they are properly adjusted. If they are pure in heart, they will see God. The next step is to provide the conditions which make for the best integration of personality. This is preparing for the kingdom into which those who are pure in heart may come. Happy will they be: for they shall see God.

Orientation

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON

Founder and First Editor of the Witness

THE word is derived from the fact that the sun lies in the east and we look toward the rising sun as the beginning of the day. The sun-worshipper faced the rising sun as his first act of worship. Sunday is a word of pagan origin and testifies to this ancient devotion to the sun. In life we may be said to orientate ourselves, when we determine the prime factor to which we credit the origin of our life. To what do we look for inspiration?

So Christ is the sun of righteousness to the Christian and we strive to orientate our life to Christ, as we "with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord."

Religion is primarily concerned with this matter of orientation and a good deal of man's ultimate character is determined by the orientation of his life as the dawn of his day is breaking.

Religious Phenomenon

To me, it is a very curious trait of modern thought that it gets so easily irritated over the phenomenon of religion. Irritation is always a sign of mental unbalance. The man who refuses to deal with facts as facts is on the way to the madhouse and religious phenomena are as much fact in human life as is bacteria or logic.

"We believe in God" is such a universal characteristic of man that if you care to take it out of man's experience, you would have to re-write human history.

And yet, scientific writers have coined a phrase, "nature," which science does not define and talks glibly and unscientifically about nature's doing this or that.

What is nature? A person, a force or a bogey? Nobody knows. In fact the word nature is a synonym for "X" in the equation.

"We believe in the hereafter" is another human characteristic to which the human race gives universal testimony. To the mere scientist this is "Y" in the equation.

This phenomenon is baffling to the scientific mind. Man is not concerned with the unknown future, but rather is concerned with man's origin.

If we ask the mere scientist what he thinks is the purpose of human life, he smiles in a patronizing way and tells you that science is concerned with the origin of life; but, piffle! If I ask the station master where this train is going to, and he tells me in a dogmatic fashion that my question is foolish because the train will pass out of his sight in a few minutes, but that I should be satisfied to know that this train had its origin in Boston, I may be pardoned if I regard him as mentally unbalanced.

Whither To?

MANKIND is anxious to know whither it is going. It may be that no one can answer the question, in which case mankind must feel as irresponsible as a hobo, who boards a train merely because it is going somewhere; but it is a silly answer to man's earnest inquiry to be told science is not concerned with where you are going but it is on the eve of certain important investigations as to whence you came.

Perhaps I came from an ape or a shell fish, in either of which cases I may be said to carry with me unmistakeable marks of my ancestry, but I submit, even so, I am more concerned with whither I am going than I am to unearth my noble pedigree. In other words it is unquestionably outside the sphere of science to tell me where I am going, but I am not impressed by the sanity of the savant, who tells me that the question is a foolish one, but that it would be wise for me to concern myself with where I came from.

Either question is of course permissible, but if I ask the former question of the science policeman and get snubbed for my folly, I am not going to be any more discouraged than if I ask the religious policeman where I have been and he arrests me as a suspicious character.

There is a class of parents who resent the questions of their children and suppress curiosity as childish folly, but they are stupid parents who are stunting the growth of their children's mentality because they themselves lack sense, or at least imagination.

But no more so than the father of science who answers his child—"No! my child I do not know where you are going. In fact do not concern yourself with such a silly question. I will tell you what I know of where you come from, for all in life which is worth while must be fashioned by the scientific code."

He seems to be like the silly mother who refuses to allow her starving child to enter the bread-line because it is contrary to her social code that her child should receive bread in such fashion.

Of course there is a scientific code and a social code and a political code, but life is too big a thing to be limited by a code. It seeks food in any case and asks questions because it was made that way and acquires character that way and arrives at its destination that way.

I want to know why I am here and where I am going and if science can't answer and society doesn't satisfy my quest, then I am going to ask somebody else because I would be a quitter if I didn't.

Primitive Reality

NOW let's get back to all this code stuff and consider life in its primitive reality.

I know that I am a creature as well as I know anything and if I am a creature, I know that I had someone who created me, never mind the method—and I am pretty sure, looking around the rest of creation, that the Creator had some purpose and that I, like everything else, have some destiny. I ask the mere scientist about my destiny and am told to look into the past, and I shrug my shoulders and say that science is a fogy and something of a has been.

I ask the mere business man about my destiny and he tells me to accumulate things, to be practical and to stop my idealism, and I shrug my shoulders and say that judging from those who have made a success in accumulating things, most of them look as though they had lost their last friend or never had any—I ask them where I am going and they tell me to enjoy the scenery.

I look around for some one to give an intelligent answer to my perfectly legitimate question and I find someone who looks spiritually intelligent. I find a benevolent old man, who differs from the mere scientist and the mere financier in that he looks as though he had some idea of life's purpose.

He is old in years but he has graciousness of character, the enthusiasm of youth and the bearing of a gentleman, and I put my juvenile question to him and he tells me that I am a child of my Father in heaven and that I am going to a home which he has prepared for me.

The answer has the merit of being reasonable, intelligible to a child and highly satisfactory if only it is true.

This policeman acts as though he was kind and intelligent—qualities that did not impress themselves on my childish mind in the previous encounters.

A Trusted Guide

AND so I ask him eagerly to tell me the way to satisfy my search.

This old man tells me that he can direct me to the same guide that is conducting him and that while he himself has not yet reached this home, nor seen this Father, yet thus far the guide has been so satisfactory that he recommends me to follow him also.

Now if you have ever been in the big woods you know something about guides—

I have seen guides for whom I had such trust that if they had told me that they could conduct me to some strange and beautiful place that I would put my life unhesitatingly into their hands, and when one entrusts himself to a guide in the big woods, he pretty nearly does that very thing.

Now the qualities in a guide that impress you are not assurance but confidence; not assertion but humility; not pretense but simplicity.

And so when this old man directs me to Jesus Christ as my guide in the way of life, he does so not because he has arrived at his destination but because he has learned that his guide never deceives him.

Never promises him an easy way, when it is hard; never boasts of what has been achieved, but presses toward the difficulties ahead; never is brutally indifferent toward the sufferings of the smallest animal, but is ever considerate of all life.

The Nature of Things

SO as the pressure of the question is an imperative one I accept the guidance of the Master and I learn three things that belong to the nature of things—

1st—That I must accept my guide not on his own testimony merely, but because of the works that he has done and teaches me to do.—As I learn his ways I follow more confidently in his footsteps.

2nd—That if I would know his doctrine, I must do as he bids me.

3rd—That in proportion as I learn his way and do his will, I begin to enter the kingdom which he assures me I will ultimately possess; and that as I deviate from his standards and his integrity, I lose that confidence which his presence begets in me.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Now let us go back to our guide. No man is sufficient unto himself, but we all have experienced the joy of personal devotion to a leader.

During our childhood, the greatest joy in life was found in personal devotion to our parents.

In school, it was not the wisest man that helped us most but the teacher to whom we were most devoted.

In the army it was not the ablest captain but the most beloved who inspired us to the highest plane of duty.

This then is life.

Who is your guide?

What master, if you have one, commands your best loyal devotion?

There are three masters of men who guide their destinies today.

The one is a God as revealed in mechanical force; the next is a God as revealed in personal ambition; the third is God as revealed in Jesus Christ.

Choose then, which one you will serve.

Adventures of Mr. Entwhistle

BY

THOMAS V. BARRETT

THE WOMAN VOLUNTEER

"THE Church needs women workers," said the Rev. Samuel Entwhistle, to his wife Isabel. "And I think I've found an excellent prospect."

"But you're always saying, dear, that there are too many women in Church now!" Mrs. Entwhistle answered, frowning at her bank book.

"I mean professional women workers, my dear. You know, in religious education, rural work. They get paid. Like deaconesses, only they don't wear those old fashioned clothes."

"Oh yes, I remember. We heard about them in Auxiliary. Who is the prospect?"

"Madeline Veblenstein. She's very much interested in the Church. She asked me again today if I thought there was a place for her in Church work. She's fed up with the impersonal, dog-eat-dog conditions in the business world. I believe she's personnel director in one of the department stores."

"Has she got a sense of humor?" asked Isabel, chewing her pencil fiercely.

"I believe so," Mr. Entwhistle said slowly.

"If she hasn't she'd better stay where she is," Mrs. Entwhistle muttered, glaring at a cancelled check. "Now why did I pay that bill last month?"

"I think Madeline is just the kind of person we ought to have working for the Church," Samuel went on with enthusiasm. "She's mature, wholesome, intelligent."

"Does she look like somebody's room-mate?" Isabel asked.

"Not at all . . . she's quite, shall I say, winsome."

"Well," said Mrs. Entwhistle raising her eyebrow a notch. "I wrote to headquarters for an application blank," Samuel said. "There are a few forms to be filled out."

In a week Samuel received the application blank, plus a booklet about women's work in the Church, plus a letter expressing eagerness at the thought of another recruit. Mr. Entwhistle hustled to the store where Madeline worked, gave her the questionnaire, and made a brief but moving speech on the need for women workers in all fields of the Church's work. He had up-to-the-minute information, he told Madeline, on the existing needs which were all urgent. Madeline was quietly hopeful and set to work on the application blank.

At the end of three weeks Samuel received a confidential letter from three people on a personnel committee. Person A was much impressed with Miss Veblenstein's picture, and her business experience, but he questioned her physical vigor, since, he noted, she had been seriously ill with scarlet fever when she was seventeen. He advised another medical examination by a fever specialist.

B thought that M. Veblenstein showed remarkable sincerity in her essay on "Why I want to do Church work," and was confident of the integrity of her character. He observed however that the said M. Veblenstein only made a C in English in her junior year in high school. This might, he said, show a tendency toward either (a) intellectual mediocrity, or (b) emotional instability under duress. He suggested that six additional letters be obtained from former teachers, vouching for M. Veblenstein's mental competence. B said she might do in the rural field but he doubted her suitability for college work.

C wrote a glowing account of her impression of Madeline's questionnaire. On the whole it looked as if Madeline was a superior person. But, C pointed out, Madeline's reasons for wishing to enter Church work might be indicative of a basic insecurity. Why did she wish to leave the department store? Was she running away from something, or toward something? Did Mr. Entwhistle think that Madeline was trying to escape from a sense of inferiority brought on by her failure in the business world? C suggested a Roarschott test be administered to Madeline by a competent psychomechanic, and that her permission be obtained to have her handwriting analyzed.

The Rev. Mr. Entwhistle tactfully transferred the gist of these reports to Madeline, who seemed somewhat annoyed in spite of Mr. Entwhistle's assurance that the Church had to move cautiously in these matters.

"I thought they needed people urgently?" Madeline reminded him. Mr. Entwhistle invited the girl to dinner in order to maintain her stability, and that he might watch for any signs of mental incompetence, or emotional sag. She seemed to have considerable poise, he thought, and talked intelligently on several matters including the rise and fall of the Brooklyn Dodgers. He was quite delighted with her normalcy, but of course, he told himself, he was not really a specialist in things like psychosomatic therapy, traumas, and libidos and things. The fact that Madeline didn't mention ever having been frightened by a mouse might show that she was too masculine for women's work. And her answer to his leading question, "What caused you to fail History 36 in college?" perhaps revealed a basic persecution complex. Madeline replied forcefully, "The professor was a dope." Samuel was startled by this retort at first hearing, but as the evening wore on, he grew more and more serene in his conviction that Madeline would be able to hold her own anywhere, even if it came to her own handwriting.

"After all," he whispered to himself, "perhaps the professor was a dope."

"Samuel," Mrs. Entwhistle said after Madeline had left, "why can't you dig up a curate as able as that girl?"

"Do you think she will be a problem to the Church?" Samuel asked, yawning. "Anyway, my dear, you don't dig up curates. You fish for them. Sometimes the wrong one swallows the bait—and you're caught."

"Well, anyway," Isabel said, locking the front door. "Madeline is a fine person. And she has a perfectly imaginative hair-do."

"I feel sure," Samuel said smugly, "that her hair-do will be a great asset to the whole structure of religious education."

Madeline submitted to various examinations, surveys, and tests, ranging from a complete physical check-up to a three hour grilling by the local chief of police who gave her the third degree to find out if she had any criminal tendencies. He discovered Madeline had stolen a tootsie roll from a drug store when she was six years old, and that she had once taken a canoe ride at night with a minister's son.

"It was fun," Madeline reported. "I mean the canoe ride. I don't remember much about the candy."

Mr. Entwhistle wrestled with his conscience for a few minutes and finally succeeded, with the aid of three twenty-five cent cigars, in persuading the police chief to delete the two incidents from his report to the committee.

"After all," Samuel said with Christian charity, "you can see she's improved. She hasn't stolen a tootsie roll for twenty-four years."

"She's a smart cookie, too," said the chief of police.

Just before Lent, Mr. Entwhistle and Miss Veblenstein went up to the Big City, so that Madeline could be interviewed by the committee. Samuel left her at "381" and departed for more stimulating surroundings up-town. The next day he returned to "381" and talked to several members of the committee. The committee had thoroughly enjoyed its visit with Miss Veblenstein. She had been most cooperative, and seemed to have very little difficulty in meeting a new "life-situation." The committee had only two mental reservations: 1. The handwriting analyst detected a slight trend toward emotionalism in Miss V. which he thought under certain situations might lead to a nervous breakdown. 2. One member of the committee felt that Madeline was a little self-conscious when asked about her father. "She said he is a surgeon at Mercy Hospital in Columbiana," reported the committee member, "which is undoubtedly a position of importance in the community. But she showed definite shyness at the question. As her rector, Mr. Entwhistle, do you think she might have a sub-rosa Aedipus complex, or perhaps a deep-seated fear of knives, induced by her father's professional talk in the home?"

Mr. Entwhistle breathed deeply and counted to twenty. He considered himself a patient man. It was good for the soul however, he thought, to let out the cork once in a while, and this seemed to be as good a time as any.

"As to the first point," he began, "Under certain conditions Madeline's emotionalism might lead to a nervous collapse. May I remind you that Eve had the same trouble. So, I believe, did Adam. It is a part of what we sometimes call the human predicament. (He realized his voice was becoming didactic. What Isabel called his "listen my children and you shall hear" voice). I further remember that emotionalism might be attributed to Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Paul, Augustine, St. Francis, and Loyola—to say nothing of Jerome."

The committee member nodded, somewhat be in some measure solved, he said, Communism is likely to win power in any of the Asiatic countries.

SENATE ASKED TO APPROVE CIVILIAN WORK FOR COs

The Senate has been asked to require conscientious objectors to perform "work of national importance under civilian direction." Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D.-Tex.), opening debate on the universal military training and service bill, called attention to the fact that the Senate armed services committee had restored to the legislation the provision with respect to religious objection carried in the selective service act of 1940. The Senate is believed likely to approve the change. If the House concurs, the legal foundation will be laid for the resumption of the wartime Civilian Public Service (CPS) camps.

The selective service act of 1948 provided that conscientious objectors who had scruples against performing non-combatant military service were to be deferred. Congress has received petitions from state legislatures and veterans' groups demanding that such deferments be rescinded.

Sen. Johnson said that the legislation will require conscientious objectors to serve for 26 months, the same as other trainees under the act.

URGES CIVILIANS BE HEARD

Establishment of a civilian advisory committee in the department of defense, to include representatives of all faiths, has been recommended to President Truman by his committee on religion and welfare in the armed forces. The committee concluded its two years of work with a final report since Congress has denied further appropriations.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT MEETING IN SAN FRANCISCO

A group of 60 representatives of labor, management and churches met in San Francisco for the first labor-management conference on the west coast. Cameron Hall of the National Council of Churches, sponsoring the affair, said that "collective bargaining is one of the fundamental instruments of democracy. The strikes and failures it sometimes involves are a cheap price to pay for being a free people." He added that the Church "believes in creative conflict—in both sides sticking together until their mutual views are modified."

Albert Whitehouse, head of CIO in Kentucky, urged the churches to work for international peace with a wider social and economic program to help gain the confidence of the masses throughout the world.

NEGRO MINISTERS BOYCOTT SEGREGATED CONCERT

Segregation of the audience at a scheduled chorus and orchestra performance in Birmingham's municipal auditorium drew fire from the Negro Baptist ministers of the city, who adopted a resolution refusing to support the concert. Profits were to be used for recreational facilities for Negroes.

METHODISTS LAUNCH TV PROGRAM

A television series depicting the efforts of pioneer clergymen to bring Christianity to frontier settlements was launched on the TV network of the Nashville station of ABC on March 5. It is called the Circuit Rider and is sponsored by a Protestant laymen's organization under the guidance of the board of evangelism of the Methodist Church. Each program will have a guest who will emphasize the contemporary significance of Christianity.

THE BIBLE STORY

For Boys and Girls

(NEW TESTAMENT)

NEW!

by WALTER RUSSELL BOWIE

Here is the world's most wonderful story — the story of Jesus and his followers, simply and beautifully retold and dramatically illustrated.

Writing for slightly younger readers than his Story of the Bible, Dr. Bowie tells the fine old ever-new narratives with vivid charm and deep reverence. A beautiful, satisfying, and important book—a book for every home where there are growing boys and girls.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Service of the Lord's Supper or the Holy Eucharist. Authorized for optional use by the Synod of the Church of South India. Oxford Univ. Press. 50c.

An interesting example of ecumenical liturgy. It leans a good deal on the Book of Common Prayer, but has several original features. The Gloria in excelsis is returned to its original place; the intercessions are in the form of litanies; the pax is restored; the consecration prayer is divided into three sections with lay responses, and there are three lessons, one being from the O. T. Some distinctive Protestant notes are apparent: the absolution is permitted in the first person plural; I Cor. 11 is read as a lesson, and a reconsecration is allowed without the words of institution. This latter is rather serious, and mars what is otherwise a good piece of work. —C. C. R.

Esther. By Norah Lofts. Macmillan. $2.50.

Mrs. Lofts' earlier volume, "Women in the Old Testament," contained the story of Esther in a short and quite simple re-telling of the Biblical tale. In this new book she has enlarged the story, not by furnishing it with additional incidents but by embroidering it imaginatively, especially in the emotional realm. In her hands the story is nearer to a novel than to the simple historical romance of the Bible, because motives are searched, emotions described, and the interplay of character on character is exploited as the plot unfolds. Mrs. Lofts has gone further in modernizing the tale than she did in the earlier book by her use of a strikingly contemporary English vocabulary and style. One wonders at first as to the value of retelling a story, which is so well told in its original form. But undoubtedly many will read Mrs. Lofts' version who would not read the Bible at all. Some who read her book will be quickened to re-read the Biblical tale. When this result occurs, the book will have served its highest purpose. No doubt this was the author's hope in writing it.—Mary Ely Lyman.

The Physician Examines the Bible. By C. Raimer Smith. Philosophical Library. $4.25.

The first half of this book consists in a collection of Biblical texts dealing with such subjects as medical references in the Old Testament (health laws, diseases referred to, sex relationships, medicines, anatomical parts of the body, etc.); medical notes on the Apocrypha; Biblical references to alcoholic drink; and New Testament medical references. The second half deals summarily with such large issues as faith and the cure of disease, the relation of science to religion, proofs of evolution, etc. The book closes with medical concordances for the Bible and the Apocrypha. A quotation will illustrate its point of view: "Then after the sick man has done all that he can, and his doctors and friends have done all that they can, then and then only, should he expect an answer to his prayers of faith."—B. H. Throckmorton.

THE PRESS

Edited by
GEORGE MacMURRAY

SUNSHINE AND LIBERTY:—A unique analogy is made in "Faith and Freedom," the monthly journal of Spiritual Mobilization. A prisoner is compared to the citizen under the welfare state. Let the editor (William Johnson) speak for himself:

The prisoner is frequently pointed out to be a perfect specimen of a citizen under the welfare state. All of his material wants are taken care of for him, but the vital spark of liberty is missing and, therefore, he is not quite a man.

This analogy is not perfect. Prison, because of the absence of liberty, is a place of despair, but it is also a place of hope. The prisoner knows that though, for the time being, he is deprived of freedom and cut off from the sunshine of the free world, that world continues to exist and some day he will rejoin it.

But the difference between the ordinary prison and the prison in which modern man is beginning to find himself confined is a profound one. For modern man, the outside world of sunshine and liberty has largely ceased to be. And his sentence is not for a week, a month, or a few years—it is for life.

And, pathetically, his sentence is self-imposed.

"Faith and Freedom" is a journal of opinion which opens its pages to expressions of thought and belief on controversial questions.

ALL TOO TRUE: Several years ago The New Yorker carried a cartoon which showed a huge ape leaving the microphone in a broadcasting studio. In his hands (or the ape's equivalent of hands) was a sheaf of notes. The radio announcer speaks—"Now for the human side of the news".

Now the Baptist Examiner comes along with a practical suggestion.

Radio stations which can be set up near a zoo should be able to economize by turning over the microphone to the animals instead of taking the trouble to lay hold of some of the speakers which they now use.

Only the other day we heard a presumably human being who mauled and pounded the airways with such incoherent and discordant noises that a decent roar from the lions' cage would have been preferable.

Animals may not be able to speak, but some of the noises they emit are more harmonious than the human voice when it ceases to function as a purveyor of ideas.

AUSTIN PARDUE
Bishop of Pittsburgh

Please keep digging up the old articles by Bishop Irving J. Johnson, your founder and first editor. No one in this church today touches the pithy and direct simplicity of his writing. What could possibly be more timely than this article, "Figs or Thistles?" I suppose he wrote this some twenty years ago but it is as fresh and timely as a morning newspaper today. Thank you for giving more articles by the best writer the American Church has produced.

ANSWER:—Articles written by Bishop Johnson are available and will be continued after Easter if there is a sufficient demand. Send a card to The Witness, Tunkhannock, Pa.

WARD McCABE
Rector at Harrisonburg, Va.

I send in my subscription with certain serious misgivings. I had long hoped that The Witness would emerge from the group of Episcopal magazines as the one of true courage, faithful Christian service, and genuine vision. However, in the past year, I have felt several times that it fell seriously short of such promise.

The make-up of the magazine is unusually attractive, its writing readable, its coverage continually improving.

But the style of its articles is often "cute." To me there is an unmistakable and serious difference between an original and stimulating style on the one hand, and a style which is coy and which tries too hard for the daring or the flashy in phrase and description on the other hand. Some things, for example, which any minister would recognize as well intentioned and even clever humor on Church matters, will strike the average layman as merely irreverent.

At a much deeper level, I feel that you often indulge in what I would call a "premature martyr complex"—seemingly going out of your way to be condemned for a "daring" or "minority" viewpoint. There is a difference between that which is courageous and that which is merely foolhardy or odd. The prophetic utterance not only has the duty to be in accord with God's will. It needs also to express it so that it will reach his people effectively.

And on the Korean question: surely it is true that we should seek to look at such a question from both sides—that we should include the Russian or other non-American reasoning. But that does not mean that we should include only the Russian views! There is much in the American position that needs criticism. But to overdo it to such an extreme that you leave no criticism of the other side, is to depart considerably from the claim of being objective.

All this is said because I sincerely hope to see The Witness more useful as a paper for the whole Church, especially the layman.

JOHN S. LORD
Layman of Springfield, Mass.

In considering the differences between religious denominations we are struck with the fact that the Roman Catholic Church appears different from the others. It is a religion by itself and maintains that it is the only true Church, all others are imposters.

This has two results: first, Catholic men and women, as well as children, are kept apart from Protestants in all activities as much as possible in order that they may not be "contaminated" by liberal ideas.

Second, in countries where the government is controlled by the Catholic Church we find that Protestants are subjected to all kinds of persecution. Recent outbreaks of this kind have taken place in Spain, Italy, Mexico and Quebec. Much of the bitterness displayed by the Vatican against Russia is due to the fact that only one Catholic priest is allowed in that country. In every country the Catholic Church is seeking temporal power with the eventual aim of world domination.

Protestants should look these facts in the face and be prepared to defend their beliefs against Roman encroachment.

THIS WE BELIEVE!

By Eric Montizambert
Assistant Warden, School of the Prophets,
Canon, Grace Cathedral
San Francisco, California

CHAD WALSH says in the Foreword:

"THIS WE BELIEVE! is for honest skeptics who are looking for truth, wherever it may lurk. It is also designed for the bewildered Church member who is not quite certain what he believes. The solid evidence for the truth of Christianity—including a magnificent vindication of the historicity of the Gospel accounts—is presented with great clarity."

ROGER W. BLANCHARD

Executive Secretary, Division of College Work, says:

"THIS WE BELIEVE! should find a place on the desk of every person confronted with the eternal—ever recurring with each student generation—theological perplexities of students whose minds and hearts have been ploughed by their experiences on the campus. An excellent book to put into the hands of inquirers and to use as the basis of group discussion. Many of us have been waiting for such a book for a long time."

THE REV. FREDERICK B. KELLOGG

Chaplain to Episcopal Students, Harvard University, says:

"I have just read THIS WE BELIEVE! and I like it a lot. Students, by and large, need both provocation and instruction to become concerned about religion. Canon Montizambert's THIS WE BELIEVE! provides both of these essentials. It is a timely book, a good book, and a book that I hope many students will read."

STORY OF THE WEEK

Good Friday Well Observed Throughout Country

Committees In Many Cities Work For Weeks In Advance on Various Plans

By Religious News Service

★ A more reverent observance of Good Friday was promoted by joint committees of Protestants and Roman Catholics across the country. The joint movement, which originated in San Francisco in 1914, sought wider recognition and greater attendance at services held between 12 noon and 3 p.m.

Cities in which joint committees operated included Philadelphia, Buffalo, Toledo, San Francisco, Indianapolis, Washington, D. C., Detroit, Helena, Mont., Dubuque, Ia., Duluth, Minn., San Antonio, Tex., Reading, Pa., and New Rochelle, N. Y. Joint committees were organized this year for the first time in several cities.

Philadelphia Plan

In Philadelphia, the citizens' Good Friday observance committee sent letters to Catholic dioceses and Protestant church councils throughout the United States urging those who are not already doing so to sponsor joint Catholic-Protestant activities for a wider general observance of the holy day. The letters told of the success of the "Philadelphia plan" over the past 23 years and sought to learn what is being done elsewhere. The Philadelphia committee is headed jointly by a Catholic and a Protestant layman and comprises about 100 representative businessmen and clergy. As a result of the letters, the committee said it had received nearly two dozen inquiries for more information.

In the Philadelphia area, several thousand commercial establishments, including chain groceries and chain movies, taprooms, and other business and public places, observed at least a three-hour closing. This closing has been one of the prime objectives of the committee, and the practice has increased every year.

The committee also distributed 50,000 signs and posters. The signs say, "Closed Good Friday," or "Closed 12 to 3 p. m." Neighborhood merchants associations and businesses with delivery routes distribute the posters.

Several thousand large banners of purple crosses on white background were prepared for display on office, public and hotel buildings. The tower of city hall carried banners on all four sides overlooking the downtown business section.

A labor union group contributed a large lighted, plain white cross for Reyburn Plaza opposite city hall during Holy Week.

Ten radio stations of the area carried appropriate announcements. For the first time this year, a number of banks and commercial institutions used a cross and the slogan, "Observe Good Friday," on their postage meters.

Washington

In Washington, three bishops were co-chairmen of the committee on the three-hour religious observance of Good Friday. They were Patrick A. O'Boyle, Roman Catholic archbishop of Washington; Angus Dun, Episcopal bishop of Washington; and Charles W. Flint, Methodist Bishop.

The Rev. Joseph E. Gedra, pastor of Immaculate Conception Catholic church and executive director of the committee, said he received excellent cooperation from labor unions. He praised CIO president, Philip Murray, and AF of L president, William Green, for their efforts in promoting the observance. Both labor leaders were members of the Washington committee.

As evidence of progress, Father Gedra cited the fact that when the committee first started to function ten years ago, only 35 churches in the Washington metropolitan area were holding full three-hour Good Friday devotional services. The number this year, he said, will exceed 80.

In addition, there will be a service at the defense department sponsored by the chiefs of chaplains of the three armed services. Worship services for government employees will be held at the department of agriculture and the department of the interior.

About 70 secular organizations expressed their cooperation with the Washington committee. Veterans organizations assisted in planning a service to be held for wounded veterans at Walter Reed General Hospital. A similar service was planned for Bethesda Naval Hospital. Congress will not be in session on Good Friday, and government departments are expected to release employees who wish to attend religious services.

Good Friday services will be carried on television in Washington for the first time, with four stations participating. All radio stations in the greater Washington area plan to carry at least one special Good Friday religious program.

Father Gedra said the Washington committee this year is stressing the need in the present world crisis for a better public appreciation of Good Friday.

Buffalo

In Buffalo, N. Y., where the more reverent observance of Good Friday committee is in its seventh year, the observance has been proclaimed by 25 outdoor billboards and 5,500 posters in stores and other public places. The posters show a large cross and the slogan: "Attend Church Good Friday—A Worshipping Community 12 to 3 o'clock."

The city buses, which are giving free rides to churchgoers every Sunday during Lent, are displaying Good Friday posters.

Some 2,300 business places in Buffalo and Erie County received a letter signed by the Rev. Harlan M. Frost, executive secretary of the Council of Churches of Buffalo and Erie County, and the Rev. Raymond F. Herzing, director of the confraternity of Christian doctrine of the Catholic diocese of Buffalo. Mr. Frost and Father Herzing are co-chairmen of the joint committee. The letter said the committee has been greatly heartened by the growing response to the Good Friday observance.

"We live in times of tension which threaten values," it added. "For keeping the spirit confident, courage steady, and vision clear, it is important that the torch of religious devotion burn brightly."

Other Cities

In Toledo, O., a joint committee of Protestants and Catholics sponsored plans for that city's 31st more reverent observance of Good Friday. Ninety thousand persons are expected to attend services in two downtown theaters and in Protestant and Roman Catholic churches throughout the city. As in other cities, the committee distributed thousands of Good Friday placards for window display. In addition, it prepared 300 placards for the city's bus system and 200 bumper cards for taxicabs.

At one of the theaters, a special Good Friday youth service will be held in which six youth choirs will participate. At another theater, Protestant pastors will preach on the Seven Last Words.

While the church and theater programs are in progress, an inspirational Good Friday radio program will be broadcast for shut-ins and others who cannot attend the regular services. Protestants and Catholics will collaborate in the presentations.

A feature of the San Francisco observance this year will be a service conducted in the financial district by Protestant laymen's committees and one in the Civic Auditorium, which will be converted into a temporary cathedral church, for Catholics.

In Indianapolis Protestants and Catholics have joined for the 30th year to assure a "reverent city on Good Friday."

Among other projects, a poster contest is being conducted among public and parochial high school pupils.

CHILDREN in churches throughout the country will present their Missionary offering Easter and the following Sunday

CHILDREN'S OFFERING FOR MISSIONS

★ An estimated 500,000 children of the Episcopal Church will make an offering of approximately a half million dollars as a result of their Lent mite boxes. This offering was started at St. John's, Cynwyn, Pa., in 1877 and since that time the children of the Church have contributed a total of $11,608,-808.10 to missions through this special offering.

A. C. LICHTENBERGER CONSECRATION

★ Arthur C. Lichtenberger, professor at the General Seminary and former editor of The Witness, will be consecrated bishop coadjutor of Missouri at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, on April 5th. The Presiding Bishop is to be the consecrator, with Bishop Scarlett of Missouri and Bishop Gilman, formerly bishop of Hankow, the co-consecrators. Lichtenberger began his ministry under Bishop Gilman in China. The presentors are to be Bishop Dun of Washington and Bishop Nash of Massachusetts, with Bishop Welles of West Missouri the litanist. The attending presbyters will be the Rev. J. Frank Sant of St. Michael and St. George, St. Louis, and the Rev. Louis Van Ess of Oneonta, N. Y.

PRAYER VIGIL IN HOUSTON

★ The prayer vigil for peace, instituted in the diocese of Texas by Bishop Quin, was held in Christ Church Cathedral on March 8, opening with a celebration of the holy communion at seven, with prayers continuing for a twenty-four hour period. The vigil, started some months ago, is observed each day in some parish or mission of the diocese.

GLADYS FALSHAW HAS RETREAT

★ Dr. Gladys Falshaw of England conducted a retreat for women at the Redeemer, Houston, Texas, March 13th, to which women of other parishes were invited. She spent many years in India in missionary work and has won a wide following here and abroad for her meditations.

THANKS GOD FOR HER BLESSINGS

★ Miss Anna Johnson of Milwaukee, Wis., is deaf, blind and arthritis-ridden and has only one leg. The Rev. Bernard Buley of St. James on a recent visit took with him several members of his choir. Also along was Gil Leisman, a violinist, who is the son of the Rev. A. G. Leisman, minister to the deaf. Anna, sitting on her bed, placed one hand on Mr. Buley's throat and the other on the violin. The violin played and Mr. Buley and his choir members sang, and into her heart, by way of her hands, went the music. When it was over she explained how touched she was and how thankful she was for all of God's blessings.

LAYMEN STAGE THE DINNER

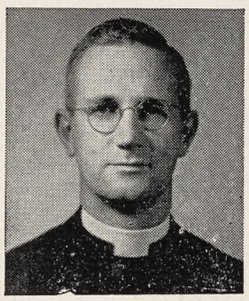
★ Over 160 people of Milford, Pa., attended a dinner on March 10th given by the laymen of the Church of the Good Shepherd. The moving genius of this most successful affair was the senior warden of the parish, Mr. Frank Brink. No one worked harder than he, yet he was the first to say that the dinner would not have been the success that it was without the help of the women of the parish.

CONFERENCE ON MUSIC AT EVANSTON

★ A conference on church music was held at Northwestern University on March 12th with lectures by Van D. Thompson, head of the school of music at DePauw University, and Thomas Matthews, organist at St. Luke's, Evanston, who is also instructor in organ at the university. There was also a recital by Wilbur Held, head of the organ department of Ohio State University.

BIRTHDAY THANK GIVING AT NINETY-THREE

★ Miss Elizabeth Buss of St. Paul's, Holyoke, Mass., recently celebrated her 93rd birthday and to her surprise got a front page, plus, story in a local paper. The reason it was news is because the highlight of the day for her was when she handed her birthday thank offering to her rector, the Rev. James F. Madison. Miss Buss, the oldest member of the parish, has been active in its affairs since she came to this country from England at the age of 32.



LENTEN SERVICES IN GRAND FORKS

★ Each Wednesday evening in Lent members of three other congregations in Grand Forks, N. D., joined with the people of St. Paul's for Lenten services. Ministers of two of these churches alternated with the Rev. H. R. Harrington in giving the meditations. A fellowship hour was held following each service, with the rector commenting, "We are getting to know each other better week by week."

VOCATIONAL CONFERENCE AT LENOX SCHOOL

★ A conference for college women to consider vocations was held March 16-18 at Lenox School, Lenox, Mass. On March 9-11 one was held on the ministry at Lincoln, Mass. Both were sponsored by the province of New England.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Bishop Dagwell was one of the sponsors of the Peace Pilgrimage to Washington on March 15th; Francis Ayres announces summer plans for Parishfield, retreat center of the diocese of Michigan; Arthur C. Lichtenberger will be consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Missouri on April 5th

Peace Pilgrimage To Washington

★ Among the sponsors of the peace pilgrimage to Washington on March 15th were Bishop Dagwell of Oregon, Bishop Moulton, retired bishop of Utah, Bishop Mitchell, retired bishop of Arizona, and the Rev. Kenneth DeB. Hughes, rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge, Mass. A large number of leaders of other churches sponsored the enterprise, designed to impress members of Congress and the administration that the people of America want peace.

The call for the pilgrimage stated that "We must abandon the needless, futile sacrifice of American lives in Korea and the destruction of that country. Let us negotiate peace with China. Here at home, we must call a halt to the 'emergency' mobilization which is provoking widespread dislocation, has frozen wages and is threatening living standards. We must end the war atmosphere which is undermining basic civil liberties, above all resulting in a heightened assault on the already unequal position of the Negro people. It is time for Americans to lay aside their differences — political, religious, social—for the supreme objective of saving America from the catastrophe of wars with the people of Europe and Asia. We are convinced that the American people, Negro and white, Catholic, Protestant and Jew, are ready to unite and act for peace."

The religious committee of the sponsoring organization invited religious leaders throughout the country to pray for peace, and provided the following prayer which was said at the religious service held in Washington on the 15th:

Our God, who art the Father of the human family and who lovest all thy children the world over, abide thou in our hearts in this time of stress.

We are saddened and disturbed in conscience by the tumult of our days, the growing ill- will among the nations, the awful destruction displayed in a war of limited scope and the horrifying prospect of the death a greater war would bring.

Save the nations, we pray thee, from the stupidities and tragedies of further strife. Help us to abandon the preparations for war that will only result in war. Make us to see the evil of the holocaust in Korea where no clear objective is to be discerned and where men of many nations are being asked to sacrifice their lives to less and less purpose. Give us the wisdom to know that we must call a halt.

Deepen in our leaders an insight into the true needs of humanity around the globe. May they make less resort to threats and show a readier willingness to confer about the differences that do exist.

We praise thee, our God, because more and more people in our great land are being quickened in conscience and are uniting in action to secure the peace. We are grateful for men and women going to Washington to voice to their leaders their fervent desides for peace.

Strengthen in us, we pray, a resolute will to join hearts and hands with all those who love peace in this nation and throughout the world. Lead us together toward that day when men shall beat their swords into plowshares and nation shall not lift up sword against nation any more.

Draw us by thy spirit into the brotherhood of man and the true family of nations. Amen.

The prayer was sent out over the signatures of 24 Protestant clergymen and rabbis.

THE BEATITUDES

THE final article in the series on the Beatitudes will appear in the March 29th issue of The Witness. Those who ordered bundles for Lent will therefore receive that issue, bringing the total to eight, the numbered ordered. It is our hope that many who took bundles in Lent will continue. If so kindly send a card to

BISHOP HALL PREACHES AT COLUMBIA

★ Bishop Charles F. Hall of New Hampshire was the preacher on March 4th in St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University. On the 7th E. M. Cahaniss, president of a manufacturing company, spoke to the interfaith society of the university on religion at work in industry, and the next day the Rev. Donald Maither of the Church of Scotland spoke on the Iona Community. Chaplain James A. Pike has also announced that there are now 561 students taking courses in religion, directed by the chapel staff.

NOW ADD "311" TO "281"

★ The National Council has leased a two-story-and-basement building at 311 East 23rd Street, New York, to house the shipping and receiving departments; the mechanical departments which handle mimeographing, addressing and allied operations and the business offices of "Forth." This releases space at "281" to allow for expansion of several departments, including education and social relations. Also space has been released at the Church Missions House to provide a bomb shelter—this on the insistence of the Presiding Bishop.

PICTURE TO BE MADE IN ALASKA

★ A new documentary motion picture of the Church in Alaska will be ready for release October 15, for use in connection with the every member canvass, according to announcement by the National Council's department of promotion. The picture will be made by Mr. Alan Shilin, head of Alan Shilin Productions, Inc., who produced "Window on the Sky" last year. The film on Alaska has not been given a title as yet, but it will tell a comprehensive and interesting story of the activities of the Church in Alaska. It will be in full color, with sound, and will run approximately 25 minutes.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT FORUMS IN NEWARK

★ The Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches of Newark are joining with the Rutgers institute of management and labor relations in sponsoring four Monday night forums on labor-management relations. Dean Warnecke of Trinity Cathedral will be the moderator at the first on April 2nd when the Rev. H. N. Morse, national officer of the Presbyterians, will speak on "Why are our Churches concerned?" Mark Starr, educational director of a CIO union, will speak on the 9th on what labor wants. Bishop Washburn will chair the meeting on the 16th when Charles H. Watts, president of the New Jersey chamber of commerce, will present the point of view of management. The April 23rd meeting will feature a panel discussion when representatives of Church, government, labor and management will discuss "New Jersey's problems; a pattern for action."

ANNIVERSARY OF S. P. G.

★ The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, secretary of the National Council, is to represent the Episcopal Church at the 250th anniversary of the founding of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. He and Mrs. Barnes will sail on May 25th to take part in the celebration in London, June 16-18. He will preach at Westminster Abbey on June 17 and at the pro-cathedral in Paris on the 24th.

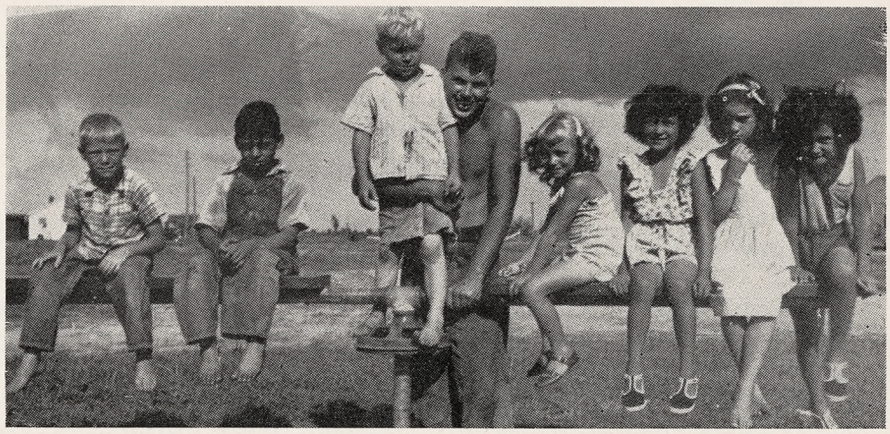
MUSIC SCHOOL FOR SMALL CHURCHES

★ A school of Church music designed primarily for organists and choirmasters of smaller churches will be held at Seabury-Western Seminary, Evanston, Ill., August 27th-31st. The school will be conducted by members of the joint commission on Church music.

The undertaking of such a venture on the part of the commission has been prompted by the desire to be of active service to the Church's musical leadership. If sufficient interest is evidenced it is the hope of the commission to conduct a similar school another year in a different part of the country.

The school is not an attempt to compete with the music conferences in various parts of the country but the experience of the individual members of the commission has been such as to indicate a need existing among the musical directors of small parishes and missions.

The workshop method will be followed. Classes will be held to present the theory of plainsong and Anglican chanting but the students also will receive practical training through "choir rehearsals"—the choir being constituted by the entire student body. Classes also will be held for the discussion of repertoire for small choirs and also the repertoire for small organs. Material thus considered and studied will be used in the services held during the school period. The Hymnal 1940 will constitute the text book, since sufficient service material is contained in the supplementary material for small churches.



Members of the commission who will serve on the faculty will include Ray Francis Brown, instructor at General and Union Seminaries; Newell Robinson, instructor at the Philadelphia Divinity School and the Eastern Baptist Seminary; Paul Allen Beymer, director of Wa-Li-Ro choirmasters' conference and camp; Edward B. Gammons, organist and choirmaster at Groton School. The Rev. John W. Norris, rector of St. Michael's Church, Brattleboro, Vt., and secretary of the commission on the revision of the hymnal will serve as registrar for the school. Further information may be obtained by addressing him.

CHAD WALSH LECTURES AT BISMARCK

★ Prof. Chad Walsh of Beloit College, a contributing editor of The Witness, is to conduct a school of religion at St. George's, Bismarck, N. D., April 8-13.

RELIGIOUS BROADCASTS AT MINOT

★ The Rev. T. A. Simpson, rector of All Saints, Minot, N. D., is taking part in a series of religious broadcasts given daily over a local station. The station covers practically all of the state and part of Canada.

CHURCH SCHOOLS HEAR ABOUT MEXICO

★ Throughout the diocese of Pittsburgh the Church school children are giving their mite box offering to the Church in Mexico this year. To stir up a little interest in that neighbor, Archdeacon William S. Thomas Jr., made arrangement for the Rev. Kenneth Heim, a professor at the Virginia Seminary, and three students of that seminary to come to the diocese and tell of their experiences in Mexico.

Heim is a former navy chaplain who was aboard the U. S. S. Admiralty Islands during the last war. In addition to teaching Church history he spends his summers doing liaison work between the National Council and the Church in Mexico. Last summer he took three Virginia Seminary students with him to Mexico: Gerlad McAllister of San Antonio, Texas, Alanson Brown of Austin, Texas, and Herbert Tucker Jr. of Suffolk, Va., a nephew of the former Presiding Bishop.

These men made two trips to the diocese of Pittsburgh. Each time each spoke in two different churches in the morning and in the afternoon all four spoke at a regional rally. Thus eighteen churches were covered.

YOUTH MEETING AT CRANBROOK

★ Young people from all parts of the diocese of Michigan filled Christ Church, Cranbrook, Bloomfield Hills, on March 4th for the "Cranbrook reunion service" sponsored by the diocesan youth council. While planned primarily as a get-together for young people who have attended the Cranbrook summer conferences, the service was open to all young people. Mr. Jack Goodrow, president of the youth council, took part in the service.

Bishop Emrich was the preacher, and in his address stressed the point that the present age may well become one of the greatest and most significant in history, depending upon the behavior of those who live in it. He urged his young hearers particularly not to indulge in defeatist attitude, but to do, each day, with all their might, the duties which come to hand, and leave the future to God.

The offering taken at the service was given to St. Peter's Home for Boys, Detroit, a diocesan institution and the only Protestant home in the diocese for boys between the ages of 14 and 17.

GUILD OF THE DEAF IN JOHNSON CITY

★ A guild for the deaf meets regularly at All Saints, Johnson City, N. Y. the third Saturday evening of each month, when there is a business meeting followed by a social. The Rev. William M. Lange, missionary to the deaf, holds a service there the third Sunday of each month.

CHURCH TO AID IN GREECE

★ From the World Council of Churches comes the story of the organization of an ecumenical Christian team of reconstruction technicians to aid distressed refugees in the rural villages of northwest Greece. This is of special interest to Episcopalians, because our Church made a grant of $15,000 to the Church in Greece during 1950, and will make another grant through the World Council this year.

Known as "Christian village service," the reconstruction team's relief activities will represent an ecumenical gesture of Christian love and concern by a group of non-Orthodox Churches over the plight of Greek Orthodox refugees who have lost nearly every worldly possession because of the devastating effect of two large-scale wars which have passed over their rural villages in the past decade.

The service group will be made up from five to seven workers of several denominations and nationalities, and will function under direction of the organizing committee, formed in Geneva recently.

Site chosen for the team's operations, slated to begin in the spring, is the Jannina vicinity, an area described by Greek Orthodox Archbishop Spyridon as the "most needy" in the country. The C. V. S. team will aid refugees returning to deserted villages to replant their crops and rebuild damaged and destroyed farm buildings.

Through Christian Village Service it is also planned to distribute agricultural tools and implements, food and clothing to refugees in the sorely-stricken Jannina area. If possible, the team will cooperate with material-relief organizations like C.A.R.E., the Christian Rural Overseas Program (C.R.O.P.), and the heifer project committee.

CONFIRMATION AT KIYOSATO

★ Bishop Maekawa of South Tokyo confirmed fifteen and baptized three on March 4th at the rural community center at Kiyosato, Japan. Starting two years ago with a few communicants, it is now a self-supporting parish.

An interesting feature of the growth of this congregation is that several whole families have come into the Church at the same time. This greatly increases the opportunities for teaching and building up Christian family life, and the young rector, the Rev. A. J. Uematsu, and his wife, Mrs. Kikue Uematsu, who is a doctor of medicine and highly regarded in medical circles, are taking full advantage of these opportunities, and in their own home providing an excellent example for the community.

Besides the growing congregation of St. Andrew's Chapel, the secretary of the Brotherhood, Mr. Tatsuzo Yagi, has started Christian work in Oizumi, which is the next station on the railroad line from Kiyosato. He has started a Sunday School, is holding Bible classes for men, and other evangelistic meetings for all who are interested.

Easter Faith

A MOST interesting book has recently been published, "You Will Survive After Death," by Sherwood Eddy. It is the result of the author's research and exploration into the realms of psychic phenomena over a considerable number of years. It gives the evidence for his conviction that man can and does live after death. The weight of the facts reported is impressive.

But Dr. Eddy assures the reader that he is only attempting to add certain other bits of truth in support of that great truth which he has long known by faith, that "in Christ shall all be made alive."

This is the Easter truth for which we rejoice and give thanks. The triumph of Easter is not the assurance of immortality independently of faith. When the fourth evangelist writes that the beloved disciple "saw and believed," the belief was faith's perception, and he records the blessing of those who have not seen and yet have believed. St. Paul's assurance that certain of the original disciples, whom he knew well, saw their Master alive after death may reasonably be accepted as decisive, but from those experiences, which lasted for only a few days, only faith could rise to the affirmation that Christ is "alive for evermore." Historical events can afford grounds for faith, and confirmation of it, but never can render faith superfluous.

Survival after death is a question of fact—a fact not specifically religious. As a fact, it is no more determined by religious or moral belief than is birth into earthly life. Apart from beliefs about God and his creation which cannot be determined without faith, and which the demonstration of life after death could not itself establish, there are no reasons why life should not be a poor, wretched thing on both sides of the grave and equally undesirable as just on-going existence.

But Easter doesn't concern itself with phenomena of mere human survival meant to impress or console the languid, the weary, and the defeated. It is the announcement that God reigns, and that all may live unto him, beginning here and continuing hereafter, in righteousness and in beauty. The resurrection is the seal of God—not upon any sort of life, but upon the kind of life embodied in Jesus, and the risen life stands in relation to earthly life not only as wondrously transcending it but also on its natural development and therefore its true vindication. This we know by faith in him who is the first born of many brethren, and who died and rose again that we may have life, and have it more abundantly.

"QUOTES"

IF ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

to the Colossians

Food No Weapon

INDIA, as a result of natural catastrophe, is faced with a food shortage of 6,000,000 tons of grain. The Indian government has purchased 4,000,000 tons, and has asked the United States for the remaining 2,000,000 either as a grant or on a long term loan. We have the wheat, in such quantities that its storage is actually an embarrassment.

India has consistently refused to follow the United States in our policy in the Far East, sometimes abstaining and sometimes voting against resolutions in the United Nations favored by our country.

Should we use food as a political weapon? President Truman, ex-President Hoover, and the vast majority of responsible editorial opinion are united in saying "No. We cannot allow millions of Indian men and women and children to starve as a reprisal for Mr. Nehru's policies." Surely, this must be the position of the Church, and it will, we hope, be the position of the Congress. The only danger is that Congressional action may be delayed by a small minority so long that many lives are needlessly sacrificed. It takes time to ship grain from Minneapolis to Calcutta. Time is the essence of the problem, and time can be saved by immediate expression of public opinion. Will you do your part?

Lenten Observance

LENTEN observance has seemed to us to have been declining in recent years, striking this season a new low. Our contemporary culture with its wars and rumors of wars has pushed Lent pretty well into the background. Perhaps this may be all right from the point of view of a new beginning for Christianity. At any rate, as far as the Church is concerned, we have to think seriously about the effectiveness of conventional devotional techniques in the face of the totalitarianism of the modern world.

The Beatitudes—

Blessed Are the Peacemakers

BY
ROSCOE THORNTON FOUST
Rector of the Ascension, New York and Editor of The Witness

IT was foretold, long ago, that when the Messiah should come, his name should be called the Prince of Peace. When he was born, angels sang of peace on earth to men of good will. And after awhile, he opened his mouth and taught them saying "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the sons of God."

Nowadays, some 1900 years later, many of the sons of men still search for a peace of mind and heart they do not know, making best-sellers of books promising to reveal the secret, and paying a heavy price to those surgeons of the soul who may lead them back into the paths of peace their wandering feet have missed. Others cry peace, and mean not peace but war; the rest cry war, for fear that peace may come.

Where is the reign of peace, so long desired, so long delayed? Is there now any hope that man may claim Christ's blessing and know at last that peace that passeth understanding?

There is an Easter hope that springs eternal in the soul of man, a promise planted there by God himself. To that we give our thought again, knowing that he is faithful who gave the promise —who is our peace.

Blessed are the peacemakers, Jesus said. And in this, as in all else he was what he taught. We shall not get far in our search for peace unless again we learn from him what we must do to make peace, unless indeed we watch him at work making the peace, that we may know what to do to inherit a belated blessing.

Power of Love

THE theologians call what Jesus did redeeming love in action. He came into a world where evil flourished and killed the peace to show men how to overcome their ancient foe. It was through the exercise of love unlimited and undeserved. The only thing that could hope to outmatch the sin of the world was, not a might that could destroy, but a love that could not be destroyed. God did not send forth his Son because all other plans had failed. Love came down at Christmas because only love without an ally, or alibi, could accomplish the task in hand. Jesus is not God getting desperate, but God bent on victory. He is the secret weapon of man's warfare; he can save and he alone. Alone he bore the full fury of the enemies' attack; alone he was scourged and spit upon, alone he was nailed to the Cross for holding fast to a love that poured out pity and compassion on all, in life and now in death, and would never let go. He knew what would be effective against the sin of the world and what would fail. And so he let loose the battalions of an inexhaustible love, and we, looking at the lowly man upon his Roman gallows may know that there is no other power quite so powerful, no other wisdom quite so wise, no other glory quite so glorious, for it is the power and wisdom and glory of God.

If we should try to say what Jesus did in language less theological and poetic, this would be the story of his life—he was not overcome by evil, but he overcame evil with good.

If the doing of an evil act justifies the performance of yet another evil act in reply, then the world has become morally a poorer world, poorer by two evil acts now done. If a man resolutely refuses to allow some evil done to him to provoke him to an answering evil, the world is still a poorer world, for the evil action done to him still remains. But if, in reply to the evil done, there comes an unexpected deed of goodness, then the world, made poorer by the first wrong action, has had its lost wealth restored, and because a good act is a more potent thing than evil, the world has become positively enriched. And if a man be ready to pay the full price of goodness, even to life itself, then the victory is won and peace assured.

If we now know no peace, it is because we are still men of violence seeking "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," adding insult to injury in the devil's alchemy that distills a poison that can only bring death to victor and vanquished alike. The death rattle can already be heard in the Satanic presumption that inspired the writer of the Christmas editorial in our most widely read picture weekly to say, "We do not need to pray that God will be with us. He is already marching with our battalions—to war."

The Good Samaritan

SURELY, if we have been truly taught of him, we have not so learned Christ. It is not Jesus the scourger, but Jesus the scourged, who has beaten his way into the hearts of humanity. There shall we find him who is our peace when we choose the paths of redeeming love that leads to peace.

Just what that path is we may see more clearly and remember more easily if we will call to mind again the story Jesus told to those earlier disciples who also aspired to be peacemakers. It is the matchless story of the Good Samaritan, the God-possessed humanitarian who rushed to the side of the unfortunate traveller who had been robbed, wounded, and left dying by the side of the road. Then and there he did what he could to comfort and heal the suffering victim of some other man's cruelty, asking no questions except what more he might do, demanding no reward and setting no price. Here was love in action, meeting a need, and restoring peace to a broken body and a heavy heart. Here we have a program of Christian action if we would be peacemakers in a war-torn world.

There are five key words which will serve us well as we seek out, in Jesus' name, the hiding place of peace.

First, it is said of the Good Samaritan that "he came where he was." Already, you remember, a Priest and a Levite had passed by—on the other side. They couldn't be bothered, not by the uncouth countryman who might make all sorts of impossible demands on them. Charity begins at home. Besides, he's probably infected with some strange religious or political or economic motives that had better be quarantined. No use exposing curselves to contagion. If he dies, well, the world is too full to people who can't take care of themselves, expecting others to fight their battles for them—and pay their bills too.

But the Good Samaritan, after the manner of Christ, knew that the world is a brotherhood in which it is the privilege of the strong to bear the burdens of the weak, to share in love a human comradeship and neighborliness that is no respecter of race, or class, or creed. There can be no such barriers in a peaceful world. Men must know each other in love, each going to meet the other where he is for "he is our peace who hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us."

The next key word is this: "He saw him." Not just another wounded traveller to add to the already heavy "case-load," not another anonymous displaced person, needing a sponsor; not the object of a pious "work of mercy." Here was a man, with a tortured body, to be sure, but also with an immortal soul, one of the precious individuals for whom God cared so much that he sent his Son to "see him," that he might know that he was somebody. Perhaps he started out as a nobody that day to join other nobodies in a march on Jericho demanding to be somebody. Perhaps he was the first of countless nobodies on the march today seeking to become somebodies. Misfortune overtook him, but the Samaritan saw him, as Christ sees every man, and when he knew he was no longer alone, his heart knew peace. If we would know peace, and bring it to others, our eyes must be able to pierce through the trappings and defenses behind which the world's lonely men seek to hide until we see the man who is our brother, equally loved by our Father.

The story continues—"And when he saw him, he had compassion on him." Not pity that condescends to look down, but a love that shares the suffering, and stoops down to lift the fallen to his feet. Just like Christ who made the burdens of his people his burden, their hurts his hurts, their shame his shame.

Peace in Sharing

THE compassionate Samaritan knew that it was no virtue of his that permitted him to minister to this poor man's needs. Neither patronage nor condemnation could chill his solicitude; together they stood in need of God's grace, being men, and the one needed to give love as much as the other needed to receive it. Peace came to them both in the sharing, that same peace which always possesses the hearts and minds of those who humbly know that they are bound together in the same bundle of life.

It is also said of the Good Samaritan that "he bound up his wounds." Bandages and oil first, of course, that the bleeding might stop and the dangers of infection allayed. But even more serious, if neglected, are the wounds of the spirit which the merciless inflict in a hateful selfishness which preys on others by making them objects of violent aggression or willful neglect. Man against man is really the overt expression of man against himself; knowing no peace within, he despises himself, and so robs another of his peace in heedless self-pity. Both need the fellowship of love by which the souls of both might be healed, but few there be who really find it.

The Good Samaritan knew it, as Jesus did, and went the second mile with the wounded man which made him his friend and brought peace to his heart. How rarely do men discern the truth about the real sickness of men! How little do they yet realize that the pitiful ailings of the body are so often lonely man's escape from a world in which love is denied, or a pathetic bid for attention that is otherwise withheld. Small wonder that men with bitterness and hate in their hearts embrace war almost eagerly to avenge themselves with unrebuked violence against a world which seems too full of Priests and Levites caring only for the preservation of their intrenched privilege. The world has grown too small for anyone to pass by on the other side ever again. The road is crowded with men on the march, seeking love, though they may not know it, and searching for peace which still eludes them, for in their anger they have chosen the old familiar blood-soaked path of their oppressors that leads only and always to war. The "middle wall of partition" is being built higher and higher, and he who is our peace is crucified afresh.

The Prince of Peace

AND why? Because his disciples, as the years have gone by, have been seduced by the blandishments of preferment and possessions, persuaded that they might have all that and heaven too. They have too often fallen in step with those who passed by on the other side, violating their Lord's plan for peace which always means searching out those in need, wherever they are, that their real need may be properly understood. It means seeing men as men, regardless of color, class, or creed. It means sharing a sympathetic compassion willing to stoop, not to conquer, but to lift up. It means binding up the wounds of men, and not only their bloody heads but their bleeding hearts as well. It means doing all this in the name and for the sake of him who was the Good Shepherd, the healing physician, the loving brother, the loyal friend, the dying Saviour of all mankind—in fact, the Prince of Peace.

If we now have no peace, it is because we have not used the fifth key which his parable offers to unlock the hiding place of peace. "Go thou and do likewise." But the offer is still good, the key still fits the lock, and peace still waits to be freed by men of good will who are brothers to all men because they are sons of God.

Self-Consecration

BY
FREDERICK C. GRANT
Professor at Union Seminary and Book Editor of The Witness

THERE is profound truth in the title of a book written by a spiritual giant of the 19th century and widely read today: "Purity of heart is to will one thing." Of course it is not a new truth. In fact, all truth is very old as the Church fathers observed; only, it becomes recognized and expressed over and over again, in generation after generation, often in new and different words, often in different patterns, or with different backgrounds; but it is the same truth.

For example, the closeness with which Kierkegaard parallels Thomas a Kempis is so striking that one wonders if he did not often read the "Imitation of Christ"—which has been a Christian classic for hundreds of years, and is read and reread devotionally by multitudes of Catholics, Lutherans, and Anglicans—and by many others. Book II, Chapter IV is entitled: De pura mente et simplici intentione, and begins, Duabus alis homo sublevatur a terrenis: simplicitate scilicet et puritate—By two wings man is enabled to soar above the earth, by simplicity and by purity. Simplicity, Thomas continues, belongs to the intention (or purpose, i.e. the direction of the will), purity belongs to the affections . . . If your heart is right, then every creature is a mirror of life and a book of holy doctrine—no creature is so tiny or so lowly that it cannot represent the goodness of God. If you are inwardly good and pure, then you will see everything without difficulty and eagerly take hold of it. A pure heart penetrates heaven and hell. Thomas might have added that only a pure heart can penetrate hell unscathed.

But the doctrine is far older than Thomas a Kempis and the spirituality of the late Middle Ages: you can find it in St. Paul. "One thing I do, forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:13f). And it is not only in Paul that we find it: the Gospel of John represents our Lord himself, in the utter purity of his intention, willing one thing—from his incarnation in the flesh to his triumphant return to the heavenly glory that was his before the world was. In the majestic high-priestly prayer in ch. 17, Jesus says: "For their sake I consecrate myself." Could there be a higher sanction for this principle of the undivided will, the achievement of purity of heart through willing one thing and one thing only, with all one's heart, mind, soul, and strength.

It is like the words of the Jewish saint and martyr Akiba on the rack, while they pulled away his skin with hooks, and he said to his disciples, dying with him, "All my life I have wanted to love God not only with all my heart, and mind, and strength, and I have done so; but I did not know what it meant to love him with all my soul (which means life); now I know, and I love him with all my soul." And eventually the teaching goes all the way back to our Lord himself: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "If your eye be single, your whole body will be full of light." "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of God."

The Lesson for Us

OUR Lord consecrated himself for the sake of those he loved, his disciples, his Church, his elect. The word for consecrate, hagiadzo, is not adequately translated by either "consecrate" or "dedicate"; the old King James verb, sanctify, is much better. For the whole point of the passage, as Dr. Bultmann makes clear in his new commentary on John, is that it is the sanctifying of himself as a sacrificial offering, the sacrifice of which he himself is the priest, his own life which he gives for the life of the world. The thought of the Gospel of John at this point is not far removed from that of Paul or even that of Hebrews. Indeed, it seems nearer to Hebrews in some respects than to Paul.

And here is the lesson for us. The goal of our existence is not the study of theology, admirable as that is; nor the acquirement of skill in preaching, conduct of services, pastoral work, or whatever, as an end in itself, as the cultivation of the first class modern minister. Such an aim is really unworthy. Our true aim is to serve and help God's people: for their sake we must consecrate, nay we must sanctify, ourselves. Their need is the measure and the standard of our preparation. You will have to help people in trouble, probably ten times as often as you will have to help them face intellectual problems. Can you do that? Have you the stuff it takes, really to help people in trouble, and give them something they did not have before they came to you? All around us there are people who are carrying such crushing, heart-breaking burdens, often without mentioning it, as would completely annihilate many others. One wonders how they can go on—but they do. And you, who haven't seen trouble yet, will have to help them!

But you can do so, if you will keep your heart pure and will one thing—if you forget yourself and try only to mediate the pure will and mind of God to them; if you forget that their case presents a problem in theodicy, and if you try only to mediate something of the grace and wisdom, the light and the strength of the gospel to them. Yes, you can do it—provided they know that your heart is pure, and that you are willing only one thing, supremely and all-inclusively, i.e. the self-oblation of a man of God, completely devoted to the love and goodness of God.

If they know you are not trying to make a name for yourself; that you are not looking on them as merely one more potential family of members—and contributors—to your parish; if they know that you look upon them as persons, not cases, as children of God, not just the occupants of a dingy flat on a back street; if they know that a holy flame of the pure love of God—which is love for others—burns constantly and inextinguishably upon the altar of your heart, then they will love you and trust you and you can do something for them—you may even do things that will astonish you—of course you won't do them, but God will do them, through you, if your heart is really pure and your mind set upon just one thing. And then you will thank God for using you as an instrument of his purposes; and you will bless him that he has called you to such an office and ministration—the holiest privilege any man can enjoy in this world.

A chapel address from the text, "For their sake I consecrate myself, that they also be consecrated in truth." John 17:19. Published in Union Seminary Quarterly Review, Jan. 1951, and reprinted by permission.

Soliloquy on Calvary

BY
KENNETH W. CARY
Rector, St. Matthew's, Pacific Palisades, California

I'VE just come back from the Place of a Skull. It's getting quite dark up there now and a strange and strong wind has come up. There isn't anything left to see anyway. Practically everyone has left; just the Roman guard on deathwatch is about all that's staying around. I wouldn't want their job, although I suppose someone has got to do it. Yes, it's just about all over now.

I don't ordinarily attend executions and I certainly don't want to attend another for a long time to come. They aren't very pleasant things to see. But I went today because I was rather interested in this man Jesus of Nazareth. I've followed his career somewhat these last three years. Of course he spent a lot of time in the outlying districts so my personal observations have been limited. He seemed to centralize most of his activities in Galilee, where I understand his home is, or was, I guess I should say now. But I've had occasional word about him from friends who live in that area. I just haven't been able to make up my mind about him somehow and, even after what I've just seen, I'm still sort of mixed up.

I try to be a good Jew but still I don't hate the Romans and no one can blame them for what happened this afternoon. Not that very many people are, mind you. I guess most of the people in town don't even know anything at all about what went on at Golgatha today. Aren't there an awful lot of people here? With Passover coming tomorrow there's so much excitement, family reunions and that sort of thing. People just haven't time to keep up with what's going on. It's always this way every year about this time, although, come to think of it, there seem to be more Passover pilgrims this year than last. That's all right too—it will help business.

But as I was saying, I don't hate the Romans. I don't want to be disloyal to our nation, you understand, but if we have to be governed by somebody I'd just as soon it was the Romans. They keep their nose pretty well out of our religious affairs, you have to admit. And they keep good order too. Why, just think that you can travel today anywhere in the world in comparative safety. Sure there are complains about the brigands occasionally but you can't expect the road patrols to be on the right spot all the time. And a couple of quick executions like the two highwaymen I saw crucified a little while ago clean things up for some little time. Yes, some people think they're quite harsh on the radicals too, but open revolt isn't any way to solve our problem. The uprisings never get any place; they just put more carpenters to work making crosses. The fanatics do us much more harm than good. We can get along with the Romans since we have to.

Tribute to Rome

YOU know, sometimes I think that the businessmen of Palestine have too much sympathy with the extremists, just because they consider it a matter of national honor or something. They're liable to forget what Rome has done for our trade. You don't hear much these days about pirates stealing our cargoes and sinking our ships, do you? Well, a few generations back under the Greeks it was a different situation. And our caravans almost always get through, don't they? Give the devil his due, our foreign commerce has certainly expanded under the Romans. Taxes are high, but were they ever low? And you know perfectly well the average business man today is doing all right. We're getting something for our taxes. I'm sorry for the poor—I guess we're all sorry—but we've always had them in society and always will. Maybe we ought to do more for them to keep them out of the clutches of the radicals, but still if they behave themselves they haven't much to worry about from Rome.

A Subversive

IT is kind of hard to figure out just why Pilate condemned this Galilean, Jesus of Nazareth. Yet, he might have been a subversive. How do we know? How do we know that Pilate didn't have some information that isn't being given out? I understand the trial was a pretty confused mess but Pilate has his troubles. He's got to uphold law and order. Just what would happen, do you think, if we didn't have a system of justice? Our business, our homes, our whole life wouldn't be worth very much, I can tell you that. I understand that the Procurator really wasn't very anxious to have the man crucified. From the reports I've gotten he tried to make some kind of a deal but it didn't work. The crowd insisted that Jesus was subversive; some even said that he had called himself a king and had taught disloyalty to

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Caesar. He seemed gentle enough and I didn't catch anything unpatriotic in what little I've heard of his teachings, but you just never know. Certainly society has got to be protected against these extremists and leftists and Pilate was only doing his job. As a business man I firmly believe that law and order and the stability of society are absolutely essential and they've just got to be preserved. That's what we have a government for—even if it isn't our government. Just remember that if we did have self-rule and independence the government's job would be just the same.

So while I was rather sorry about what happened a little earlier, I don't think Pilate is to blame, if indeed anybody has to be blamed—and I'm not at all sure of that one. Maybe this Jesus was just a dynamic and inspiring rabbi, and he always seemed that way to me, still Pilate did what was best as he saw it. And you know we have had and we could have again worse Procurators.

The Pharisees

WHILE I admit I feel a bit queer about the business at Golgatha—and that could be only because it was such a grim piece of business—I don't blame the Pharisees either. As I guess I've already said once, I try to be a good Jew. But I certainly don't fast twice every week; sometimes I don't even do it once—you know how those things are. And I don't mind telling you that I don't give a tithe of everything I take in. I wish I could afford it, but living isn't cheap these days and the temple taxes are getting pretty steep. I'm not the best kind of a churchman but I suppose I'm as good as the next fellow. I do my best to keep the law pretty well and I see that my children learn it, but there's something else in life beside religion.

Well, you really don't care about my confession, but I just want to say that I'll hand it to the Pharisees. They do a good, conscientious job. And they aren't stuck up like the Sadducees. Why they're just a bunch of dilettantes with their fancy notions that they picked up from the Greeks and the Romans. But the Pharisees will talk to the average man. They've done a lot for the church and for the cause of religion generally. We all have to admit that, even though they are a bit straight-laced. They believe in the law of Moses and they really love it and you can't honestly say that of a lot of the rest of us. We may try to follow it but we don't really love it. If everyone took his religion as seriously as the Pharisees this would be a lot better world, I'll tell you.

And as a good business man I believe in religion. We could certainly stand a lot more ethics in the trade. You have to watch yourself every minute these days or you'll be taken. The Pharisees may be strict, and I guess that a lot of us think they bend over backwards too much, but we can stand a little of that sort of thing. It makes people honest and reliable and you have got to have that when you run a business. It's the old law of Moses that we've got to depend on. As I say, my children are certainly getting it and you know, you can hardly keep Samuel away from the synagogue. That boy might turn out to be a rabbi—certainly wouldn't be any disgrace and his mother is encouraging him, I think. It would be all right with me. Amos seems to have the better head for business anyway. He's good at arithmetic, you'd be surprised. And there's another thing— these Pharisees are great on education and how would our youngsters learn anything if it weren't for the synagogue schools.

A Blasphemer

SO about this Jesus, the Pharisees could be right about his teaching. What I've heard of it sounds all right to me but I'm no expert in these things. They said he was a blasphemer and called himself the Messiah, the Son of God. That's a pretty wild claim to make, even though I suppose everyone of us had that kind of a dream when we were boys. But if this Nazarene was trying to get a new religion across, that's serious. If the law is destroyed, then what will happen to morality? There are enough divorces and crimes now. I never actually heard that this Jesus wanted to overthrow the law, but as I say, technical religious matters aren't in my line. That business at the temple last Monday just wasn't good. We all know things aren't strictly right there but that was no way to go about making them better. The church has to be kept going—we can't have the temple falling to rack and ruin—and if we did away with a few of those harmless booths the temple tax would go up again. I can't really blame the Pharisees for being angry—not even the Sadducees. If the Sanhedrin had anything on Jesus at all, that scandalous affair wouldn't help them to forget it. After all, the man was tried by the Sanhedrin and they ought to know about religious questions. If they said he was dangerous and a blasphemer I'm certainly in no position to argue.

But I tell you that it is pretty hard to see the wrath of righteousness. All that railing and spitting at Golgotha isn't easy to excuse. The man was being executed and that should have satisfied them, but, no, they had to taunt him and make fun of the poor fellow. It sort of turned my stomach. Why do righteous people when they win always have to rub it in? Sure, that sort of thing goes on at every execution—not that I've attended many of them—but this Jesus wasn't a bandit, he hadn't stolen anything, killed anybody or been mixed up in any revolt. I suppose the Romans and the Pharisees were right as they see it, and they do have a case, but the man was being put out of the way. Why couldn't they let it go at that?

A Bad Experience

I'VE done a lot of talking. Maybe it's because I'm still nervous and disturbed. Might have been better if I hadn't gone at all. As I've been saying, to protect society and religion probably this thing today at Golgotha had to be done. The Romans and the Pharisees acted in our best interests. They thought so and I have to admit it looks that way. But still I'm disturbed and it's because I was near enough to hear the first thing this Jesus said as they started to drive the nails. You know what he said? It was: "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." I've been trying to figure out ever since just what he meant.

Suppose he was the Messiah, the very Son of God? Suppose we crucified our Messiah today? Suppose he represented a higher goodness than the justice of Rome and the righteousness of the Pharisees? Do you think that they both could have been wrong in their judgments about this Jesus of Nazareth? Could it be that they were so anxious to protect what they saw to be good that they were blind to something higher and better? I'm no philosopher but I've been trying to think out if it's possible to be so proud of what in one way we have a right to be proud of that we shut out of our hearts something even better. Is this love that Jesus talked about something far more important than just plain righteousness after the law? We see so very little after all and we see it from only one viewpoint and we're so afraid to see something else that might upset our neat little schemes of what's right and proper.

". . . and they know not what they do." The Romans and the Pharisees are good people, I suppose, and they've done a lot of good things. But did they know what they were doing? Did they kill the Messiah to save what they thought was good but what wasn't good enough for the holy God, blessed be his name? It makes my head ache to think about all the problems that come up when you think about our human goodness. These thoughts make me dizzy. Does righteousness turn into self-righteousness and cease then to be righteousness? Is love, as Jesus said, the heart of true righteousness? The Romans and the Pharisees, decent, respectable people, did they know what they were doing a little while ago? Was that man on the cross indeed the Messiah? ". . . they know not what they do." I'm not convinced, don't misunderstand me, but I wonder—yes, I wonder!

What Do You Expect?

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

FEW of those in Jerusalem recognized Jesus on Palm Sunday. "Just another prophet with his followers. From Nazareth of Galilee did you say? Huh! Nothing of importance can come from that place."

Similarly most people passed off the crucifixion as just another radical getting what he deserved.

To people then these events were not notable. They expected God to work in a more spectacular manner. But then as now he works in the people and events of ordinary life, unnoticed except by those who have eyes to see and ears to hear.

His word of judgment on the injustices which abound today can be heard in the mouths of Communists though they do not follow his way of righting the wrongs they see.

His suffering may be seen in the faces of Jews and Negroes, D. P.'s and others who get more abuse and trouble than they deserve though they may not always bear it in love.

His presence can be felt in the silence of solitude, the sacrament of communion, the message of a sermon or the kindness of a neighbor though the people involved are sinful.

Have you learned to see and hear him in the ordinary events of life or do you still expect great signs and wonders and go around wondering whether he will ever come and show himself clearly as he did so long ago? Think over again just what you do expect and consider whether perhaps in looking for what you think should happen you miss seeing him in what he is doing right in front of you this very minute.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Science and English Poetry. By Douglas Bush. Oxford. $3.50.

These brilliant lectures, delivered at Indiana University, contain a historical sketch of the relations between English poetry and science during the period 1590 to 1950. What modern science has done to religion we all know. What it has done to art, music, poetry is also considerable. In the areas of food, medicine, transportation, lighting, hygiene and sanitation—everyone knows and recognizes this too. It is the phase of its impact upon Western Civilization seen in English poetry that concerns Professor Bush. The tale is a sad one. But at least there is one note of hope. The boundless enthusiasm for a sooty, smeary realism seems to have given way now to a loss of confidence in complete secularism and naturalism—and this may possibly be a harbinger of a brighter dawn, a religious revival, a return of confidence in life itself and joy in its living. Let us hope so! The book is delightful, humorous, penetrating, even philosophical, and should be widely read.

The Christianity of Main Street. By Theodore O. Wedel. Macmillan. $2.00.

All those of our clergy who have been fortunate enough to spend a week at the College of Preachers know how its Warden has over the years drawn the distinction between the classic Christianity of the Bible and the Church and the dilute, man-centered Christianity which has replaced it in many quarters. Now his searching analysis is made available in this convenient small volume, and in a form which laymen no less than clergymen can understand.

Particularly graphic is his "Two Biographies of Jesus" which contrasts the humanist and the New Testament views of Jesus under the suggestive tags "log cabin to White House" vs. "White House to log cabin."

It is good that Dr. Wedel furnishes an appreciation as well as a critique of "The Christianity of Main Street." This is something that many of us, in our zeal to convince men of "the real thing," sometimes fail to do. —James A. Pike.

Fifty Years of Protestant Theology. By Carl F. H. Henry. W. A. Wilde Co. $1.50.

This is an analysis of theologians and trends of theology by a fundamentalist professor of Philosophy of Religion at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, California. Dr. Henry rejoices at the death of "liberalism" which had such popularity during much of the era surveyed. He criticizes the prevalent neo-supernaturalism because of its compromise of "scriptural authority." The confusion in western Christianity could be simply resolved if all theologians would set themselves to recovering "that word which lifted the West out of paganism and set men's enslaved spirits free."—A. M. Van Dyke.

The Gospel in the World. By Godfrey E. Phillips. Macmillan. $1.25.

The author, who is Professor of Missions at Selly Oak College and with a long experience as a foreign missionary, given here an abridgement of a longer work of the same title published in 1938. This small book is, on the whole, a well-balanced presentation of what Christian Missions really are. He stresses the fact that Missions must ever spring from God's unchanging revelation in Christ Jesus; but he shows why those who are engaged in this great task of winning men for Christ across the world must have a sympathetic understanding of the people among whom they labor. He points out especially that the tremendous changes that have recently taken place in the lives of people call for a serious restudy of old methods of approach and the types of work most effective in the new situation.—A. K. Reischauer.

Monk in Armour. By Gladys H. Barr. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $3.00.

The author has written many historical stories, and this latest one deals with the life of Martin Luther from boyhood until his marriage. Considerable imagination has been employed, and it is deeply emotional in many parts. The great figure of Luther almost has something taken from him by being over-glamorized. Yet he does live in these pages, and his vital message comes through.—A. M. Van Dyke.

This Little While. By John W. Lynch. Macmillan. $3.00.

This book presents the life of Jesus in a series of short narrative poems, based upon passages from the Gospels. Blank verse, the poetic form which the author chose, is well suited to the contemplative mood which the poet sustains throughout. Psychological insight, deep religious feeling, and true poetic power characterize the poems. They are built upon Roman Catholic theology; they do not concern themselves with the historical criticism of the New Testament; but both the Protestant theologian and historical critic will find value here in the true poetic and spiritual quality of the book. The beautifully reproduced paintings of Dr. Marguerite S. Cockett enhance the beauty of this excellent piece of book-making.—Mary Ely Lyman.

The Lord's Prayer. By E. F. Scott. Scribners. $2.25.

A very useful little book on a subject that ought to be preached about a great deal more than it is.

A novel of the days of the Passion

THE Daughter OF Jairus

✝ The story of the girl Jesus raised from the dead, and how she followed the teaching of the Master in the first great temptation of her life. $2.75

THE SOBER TRUTH:—The Colorado Episcopalian, an exceptionally newsy and well done diocesan paper in tabloid form, recently picked up a newsletter written by the Rt. Rev. Benjamin Dagwell, Bishop of Oregon. It calls for a fair deal for sextons. Truth is truth, whether it be in Colorado, Oregon, Brooklyn or the Bronx. Here is some sober truth. We who call ourselves Christians may well take it to heart.

"Is the church sexton someone you automatically associate with a mop and broom? Is he the incarnation of everything that goes wrong at Sunday morning services? Too many of us take the sexton for granted. We rarely give him much thought except when the church is cold or dusty or a fuse blows out during the singing of an anthem.

"We want them on hand 24 hours a day and believe they can do without vacations. As for their ultimate retirement on a pension, such a thought smacks of radicalism in many quarters.

"The sober truth is that sextons are human like the rest of us, and must be treated accordingly. Anything that dignifies their position and their estimate of themselves as workers for God in His temple is greatly desired."

REASON ENOUGH: We like pictures and we like cartoons. We like them in the religious press. The Church News (diocese of New Jersey) recently had a real good cartoon. It showed a couple standing outside a church looking at the bulletin board. It announced Morning Prayer and the sermon:

Two Reasons People Are Leaving the Church—
I. B. Dull, Rector
Otto Tondeff, Organist.

WHAT'S IN A NAME:—One of the well known theological seminaries has recently changed the title of one of its professors. He is no longer known as professor of homiletics. He is now professor of preaching. To the Christian Century this makes sense. A prof. of preaching is one who helps young men learn how to preach. One does not need an unabridged dictionary to find out what subject a department of homiletics deals with. It is even possible that some of the students in the seminary may acquire a new respect for a course which is plainly called — preaching. There is really something tangible and measurable about preaching which homiletics lacks.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

CHURCH TO STUDY ECONOMICS

A survey to determine what Americans think of their economic system has been launched by the National Council of Churches. Discussion groups in a number of cities and a national opinion poll will attempt to gauge the fundamental values sought through economic activity. It is part of a three-year study on the relation of Christian ethics to economic life, made possible by a grant of $100,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation.

GROUP REFUSES TO PAY "WAR" TAXES

Fifty-nine men and women, including four clergymen, announced on March 12th that they were refusing to pay their income taxes. "We are particularly concerned at this time about the situation in Korea, where a civil struggle has been provoked and aggravated by two power-states to the point where it is already a major war—one which may be the spark that will set the world afire. We find it impossible to support policies and activities of this kind with our allegiance and our money. We must, therefore, refuse to give money for such purposes of conquest and massacre, and must give it instead to causes which build understanding and world community."

The Rev. A. J. Muste, one of the group, wrote the collector of internal revenue for the third successive year, saying he was not going to pay his tax. He sent along a copy of the Gospels and Henry Thoreau's "Essay on Civil Disobedience" as supporting material.

CONSTRUCTION CONTROL FOR CHURCHES

Churches must apply for permits before erecting any type of building other than one designed exclusively for worship, the national production authority has ruled. The agency added however that it would give "sympathetic consideration" to requests from religious groups.

MISSIONARY REFUSES TO REGISTER

Dr. R. H. Pickard, Methodist medical missionary, has refused to register under the selective service act. He is said to be the first doctor to refuse. "I feel that it is increasingly evident to Americans," he said, "that the American military program should be supplemented by a positive program of economic and spiritual aid to the devastated peoples of the world—if they are to resist the promises of Communism. And in that expanded program there is much that I could do." He said that he could register as a conscientious objector and "still not serve in any military capacity" but he refused to do so because "I believe in both democracy and Christianity. As I see it, neither is based upon compulsion. Rather compulsion can destroy both."

He declared that he would accept the possible penalty of $10,000 fine and five years imprisonment without resentment.

NEW EXECUTIVES NAMED FOR NATIONAL COUNCIL

Four new executives have been added to the staff of the National Council of Churches: Fred F. Goodsell, Congregationalist, head of foreign missions; C. Arild Olsen, Danish Lutheran, associate secretary of the division of Life and Work; David Barry, Presbyterian, director of research; Paul L. Tilden, Methodist, associate director of Pastoral Services.

CATHOLICS OF INDIA ON SOCIAL ISSUES

An institute of social order has been inaugurated by the Roman Catholic Church in India. Its chief purpose is to help solve problems arising from religious and caste differences, and to seek to reduce capital-labor conflicts. The director is the Rev. Jerome D'Souza, a Jesuit, who was until recently a delegate to the UN.

ITALIAN POLICE CLOSE WALDENSIAN CHURCH

A protest has been lodged with the Italian ministry of the interior following the closing of a Waldensian church in Avola, Sicily. Police say that action was taken under a 1930 law which prohibits the opening of places of worship without their authorization. The moderator of the Church says that the law, issued under the Fascist regime, contravenes articles in the present constitution concerning freedom of religious worship and assembly. It is the first time Waldensians have come under a ban, though other Protestant Churches have suffered similar prohibitions.

PRAGUE REGIME BANISHES ARCHBISHOP BERAN

Archbishop Beran of Prague, head of the R. C. Church in Czechoslovakia, has been banished because of his "negative attitude" toward Church control laws. At the same time the announcement was made that the Rev. Antonin Stehlik, described as a "patriotic and democratic priest" has succeeded Dr. B. Opatrny as capitular vicar of the archdiocese of Prague.

Previously four new state-approved canons were installed in St. Vitus cathedral by Bishop Eltschkner, who is the auxiliary bishop, and ranked among the clergy who are pro-government. The service was attended by civic authorities and large numbers of priests who have pledged loyalty to the government.

Speaking at the reception following the services was Josef Plojhar, minister of health, an excommunicated priest, who said: "In some places they won't be overjoyed with this installation. First and foremost, there's the Vatican radio, through which Czech and Slovak priests who have betrayed their nation and people, will attack and criticize us. But we are expecting that. We are on the right road, and we don't care what they think. What we care about is what our working people think."

UNITED SUDAN SYNOD IS HELD

Delegates from North and South Sudan met at Khartoum for the first time in the history of the Anglican Church. Guests included the Coptic bishop of Khartoum, the Greek Orthodox archimandrite, a representative of the Presbyterian Church and pastors of the Evangelical Church of Egypt and Sudan. Delegates included both British missionaries and native Sudanese clergy and laymen. Of the 12 native pastors from the South, nine had never before been outside their native villages. North and South Sudan are separated not only by great distances but also by language and customs.

CHURCH-SPONSORED COOPS PROPOSED FOR INDIA

Establishment of a network of consumers' coops under Church auspices has been proposed to the national Christian Council of India by E. I. Chacko, former director of industries of the country. He said the coops would provide the people with an alternative to large-scale capitalism or Communism.

BRITISH PAPER HITS EMBASSY ACTION

Action of the American embassy in London in distributing an official state department pamphlet on U. S. foreign policy to Anglican clergymen with the suggestion that it be used for sermon material was sharply criticized by the Church Times. "We deplore this attempt to make use of the Church of God for political propaganda. We are not here concerned with the merits either of this publication or of American policy. But the embassy appears to need a sharp reminder that the pulpit is for the proclamation of the word of God and for his word alone."

BISHOP OTTO DIBELIUS IN ENGLAND

Bishop Otto Dibelius of Berlin, head of the Evangelical Church in Germany, is now in England preaching under the auspices of the Council of Churches. He is also giving a series of recorded addresses over the British broadcasting system on international peace and justice and on moral conditions in his country.

E. STANLEY JONES IN JAPAN

E. Stanley Jones, Methodist evangelist, told an overflow audience in Tokyo that the "Christian religion and modern science are following parallel lines of thinking concerning the way man should live today." He quotes authorities in psychology, medicine, sociology, economics, political science to prove that writers in these fields echo the Christian message. Doctors at the Mayo clinic, he said, have told him recently that a large percentage of their cases had roots in mental problems and could not be cured by medical science. Jones is in Japan for three months to hold meetings in 30 cities.

CHINESE PLAN TRIALS OF PRIESTS

Large numbers of R. C. missionaries are to be expelled from China and mass trials of priests are scheduled for Peiping and other provinces, according to the Vatican radio. Meanwhile the Shanghai radio announced that the "eradication of reactionary religious sects in Shantung province was highly successful" during 1950.

TO ORDAIN WOMEN IN GERMANY

Ordination of women as pastors has been approved by the Evangelical Church of Berlin and Brandenburg. While they will be authorized to preach and administer the sacraments, the order stresses that in practice they normally will be restricted to positions for which they are particularly fitted—work with women, youth and children.

HUNGARIAN CHURCH TRIES NEW LITURGY

A new Hungarian Reformed liturgy is being tried out in the Central Calvin Square church in Budapest. Among features is a confession of sins in prayer form. Departing from past customs, the congregation will remain seated while the minister offers the main prayer of intercession shortly after the sermon; silent prayer is introduced; the congregation says the Lord's Prayer aloud with the minister. The new liturgy is expected to be approved by the general synod which meets this spring.

THIS WE BELIEVE!

By Eric Montizambert
Assistant Warden, School of the Prophets,
Canon, Grace Cathedral
San Francisco, California

CHAD WALSH says in the Foreword:
"THIS WE BELIEVE! is for honest skeptics who are looking for truth, wherever it may lurk. It is also designed for the bewildered Church member who is not quite certain what he believes. The solid evidence for the truth of Christianity—including a magnificent vindication of the historicity of the Gospel accounts—is presented with great clarity."

ROGER W. BLANCHARD
Executive Secretary, Division of College Work, says:
"THIS WE BELIEVE! should find a place on the desk of every person confronted with the eternal—ever recurring with each student generation—theological perplexities of students whose minds and hearts have been ploughed by their experiences on the campus. An excellent book to put into the hands of inquirers and to use as the basis of group discussion. Many of us have been waiting for such a book for a long time."

THE REV. FREDERICK B. KELLOGG
Chaplain to Episcopal Students, Harvard University, says:
"I have just read THIS WE BELIEVE! and I like it a lot. Students, by and large, need both provocation and instruction to become concerned about religion. Canon Montizambert's THIS WE BELIEVE! provides both of these essentials. It is a timely book, a good book, and a book that I hope many students will read."

E. P. DANDRIDGE
The Bishop of Tennessee

Clergy from whose parishes there are members located either permanently or temporarily in any army, navy, or air force installation in Tennessee (including Ft. Campbell, Ky., which is on the border and closer to Clarksville than to any Kentucky town), are requested to send the names and military addresses of such persons to the Rev. Joseph B. Tucker, Trinity Church, Clarksville, Tennessee, chairman of the armed services committee of the diocese, in order that he may pass this information on to the local clergyman.

MR. A. C. BOERS
Layman of Louisville, Ky.

I am somewhat disappointed in The Witness. It appears to have a decided American Church Union flavor, which most laymen abhor. This group has done more to block Church unity than any other group by their narrow concept of Christianity. I regret that your publication has failed to stand for the principles of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Answer: It has been our policy to allow organizations of the Church to present their programs in special issues. We were glad to offer the ACU this opportunity but it does not mean that we agree with the point of view presented, in this or other special numbers. Our purpose is stated on our renewal notices: "to witness to the Gospel; to maintain evangelical faith; to attain ecumenical fellowship. We believe that God wills the Church to be Catholic in its inclusiveness; liberal in its essential spirit; Evangelical to the Gospel of Christ. We believe in the interpretation of the Christian religion in contemporary terms; in the rigorous application of the principles of Christ to our social life; in simplicity and dignity of worship; in immediate action toward Church unity."

To the best of our ability we try to stand for this program.

Minister, Congregational Church,
Cummington, Mass.

It is hard to believe that a good Christian journal like the Witness could carry such an expression and attitude of spiritual snobbery as that shown in comments on hitch-hikers in Press of Feb. 15th. It would have been virtually impossible for me to complete my theological training had I not been able to hitch-hike from parish to seminary each week. In my numerous contacts with hitch-hikers I have found many who are really down and out or travelling for an essential reason, being "on the bum" simply because they are without funds.

They are simply a cross section of America, being no more nor less "responsible" than the average. Quite obviously you'd rather look over the end of your nose at them than pick them up and really get acquainted as so many are doing with profit and interest. Your attitude hardly jibes with that of our Master who was interested in the meek and lowly.

Of course there are many of the type you describe. But you are doing the thoroughly un-Christian and unfair thing to categorically throw them all in the same class. How you can reconcile such an attitude with the teachings of Jesus beats me.

STORY OF THE WEEK

The Pilgrimage To Washington To Urge World Peace

Delegates Call on Department Executives Senators and Congressmen

By KENNETH R. FORBES
Member of Witness Board of Editors

★ THE WITNESS has intimated several times in the recent past that one of the root-causes of the present shocking public hysteria was the enforced ignorance on the part of the people in general about the facts of life — economic, political, international. In other words, if John Doe and Mary Roe were aware of the thoughts and actions of millions of their fellow-Americans and the actual, objective truth about other nations and peoples, they would see to it in short order that the present provocative, stupid, war-breeding words and deeds of America's ruling class were halted and that we began to get ourselves new leaders. The really tragic fact, however, is that John and Mary are not permitted to know the truth about their fellow-Americans nor about the actual state of affairs in other nations. Our commercial press has for years been engaged in a systematic campaign for the suppression and distortion of the news of the day. Its readers are not permitted to know all the facts on which to base their opinions and actions. They are allowed to read only such things as shall insure that they think and act as their political and economic leaders wish them to. Only once in a generation, perhaps, does a public man appear — like Franklin Roosevelt — with the consummate genius and the rare courage to break through the veil of distortion and suppression and make his voice heard by the whole people.

Peace Pilgrimage

Such thoughts as these have been occupying my mind since I returned from attending the great Peace Pilgrimage to Washington organized by the "Crusaders For Peace." This was really a notable occasion, profoundly significant of how and what the rank and file of the American people were thinking and feeling. Twenty-five hundred people, delegates from thirty-six different states, gathered in the nation's Capital, on the Ides of March, to insist emphatically that world peace is more important to the peoples of the world than all other things combined. If we are not permitted to live in peace, differences in ideologies, conflicting theories of economic and social life will no longer even be worth arguing about; for modern, total war will inevitably place all antagonists alike—and the theoretical victor and vanquished—under the iron heel of necessary dictatorship, to assure even a minimum of sustenance and shelter to the surviving persons of a wrecked and bankrupt world.

The immediate, crucial need for action on the peace front is the withdrawal of American soldiers and sailors from Korea, where they never should have intervened in a Korean civil war, unsanctioned by Congress and regretted now by probably a large majority of Americans, and simultaneous negotiation with the Peoples Republic of China for permanent peace on that tortured peninsula. The most recent public opinion polls —including a Gallup poll—point clearly to popular opposition to this undeclared war and popular determination that we shall bring our soldiers home.

A delegation from Chicago to the Peace Pilgrimage polled every person aboard the train on which they came and discovered that 92% were in favor of getting out of Korea now and of immediate negotiation.

Call On Leaders

Thoughts of which these were the common, agreed-upon basis, were expressed by all the speakers at this extraordinary gathering of plain Americans. Representatives of these thousands visited Senators, Congressmen and each of the principal departments of the government, where they were, for the most part, received coldly and publicly branded as merely the tools of Russian Communism. Nothing new in all this, of course. Any voice raised loudly for peace today is declared at once to be "subversive." Any militant criticism of the Satanic policy of piling up armaments and dragooning other peoples to arm to the teeth is damned as the utterance of a traitor to his country. No, there is nothing new and nothing surprising in any of this. Our present makers of policy and administrators of government are incapable of forgetting anything old or of learning anything new. They are competent only to operate a machine that was set up and geared to its present functioning several generations ago. What that machine is actually producing—for the world's bedevilment—they have no comprehension and they are shocked beyond measure when others, less stupid and complacent than themselves, point out simply what this machine is steadily producing day by day — hatred, mass-murder and the satisfaction of human greed. They do not like it at all and they contrive to see to it that the press of the nation shall give no inkling to its millions of readers that such thoughts are being held and expressed by hundreds of thousands of intelligent men and women.

Church Leaders

Among the official sponsors of this Crusade For Peace are three of the Bishops of the Episcopal Church, as well as several of its other clergy. Numerous ministers of every major sect are also actively sponsoring this movement, as well as scores of leaders in science, the law and other professions. The active, enthusiastic chairman is Professor Philip Morrison, well-known physicist on the faculty of Cornell University. Robert Morse Lovett is another sponsor and made one of the major addresses in Washington. Thomas Mann—internationally-famous author and refugee from Nazi tyranny—is another sponsor who sent an encouraging and urgent message to the Washington gathering.

At the conclusion of this Peace Pilgrimage I made a careful search of the Washington newspapers for an account of its sessions and found nothing more than a few inconspicuous items which invariably defined the gathering as a Communist-front (and, ipso facto, without intelligence or influence!) which had caused the capital police to be alerted for probable violence! In the New York and Philadelphia papers of the following day I discovered not even a mention of the affair — but I used no magnifying-glass, so it may have been tucked away somewhere in fine print. Several thousand men and women who made the Pilgrimage For Peace will also have looked in vain through their newspapers for adequate or even decent reporting of the event and they too will draw the same conclusions as I have; and will remember, as I shall, as 1952 approaches and elections are in order, that there is desperate need for radical change in the ranks of our rulers and governors—which includes politicians, economic leaders, owners of newspapers and sundry other folk who are trembling afraid of peace, because the machine they have been taught to operate has never—for more than a quarter-of-a-century — functioned successfully save in the fearful conditions of a war economy.

Grass Roots

This organized Crusade For Peace does not conclude with the Washington pilgrimage. It has just begun and support from the grass-roots is increasing every day. On June 1st, 2nd and 3rd, in the city of Chicago, the second great gathering will be held, with the assurance of an even larger attendance and support. The motive and the general subject will be the same: "Peace, the dominant issue for America and the whole world." Make a note of the date and watch THE WITNESS for further news of the Crusade For Peace. If you are an habitual reader of the daily newspapers or the popular picture magazines, you will see nothing of this subject—unless it be of a belittling or slanderous nature. One reason more, among many, why you should read THE WITNESS carefully week by week, even if you see plenty of things in it that rouse your opposition. And you can get your grouch in print by THE WITNESS itself if you will write a not-too-long vigorous blast to Backfire.

Canterbury Clubs Are Being Established

BY

JOHN MORRIS

Chairman of the National Canterbury Association

★ Even the most secular of universities are witnessing a revival of interest in religion today. The success that newly established departments of religion have met with is indicative of a current thought among students: "Perhaps there's something to this religion business after all." Students are now, more than ever before, being brought face to face with things of an ultimate nature. The destruction which the world recently went through and which it faces again is having its impact on the mind of faculty and student alike. The state of "not being" is a potential reality in the minds of those who have no feeling of the grace of God and the joy of eternal life.

The campus situation is a peculiar one and presents a problem to the Church. Except in the schools owned by the Church it is difficult for Christianity to exert much concerted influence in the environs of present-day colleges. Barriers include the restrictions in some state universities, on teaching religion in the curriculum.

National Organization

As a partial solution to the problem, and looking toward carrying the life of the Church to the students on their own level, Canterbury Clubs were established. The name was used because of our close relationship to the Church of England and our loyalty to the mother see of Canterbury. These groups grew in number and are distributed over the country. Where they exist the Episcopal student away from his home parish has a chance to continue his relationship with the Church. Through a program of study and worship he may grow spiritually and increase his knowledge of the fundamentals of his faith.

Until recently there had been no unifying, energizing force to bind together and encourage these separate groups. Students themselves began to agitate for a national body which would increase and develop the work of the Canterbury movement. At the last meeting of General Convention a group of college students met separately and decided that a convention of college students would be called for the Christmas holidays of 1950. Dioceses were notified and asked to send delegates. This convention of 120 delegates, representing more than 70 dioceses and missionary districts, unanimously ratified the constitution which made the National Canterbury Association a reality. The fact that this ratification took place late New Year's Eve and was followed by a midnight celebration of the Holy Communion is evident of the dedication of the delegates.

The constitution of the NCA calls for the establishment of diocesan (or regional) Canterbury commissions, and finally of provincial commissions. These groups will have at the core of their being the two aspects expressed in the purpose of the constitution: To provide an opportunity for students to receive the teachings and life of Christ through the faith and practice of the Episcopal Church; and to witness in our colleges and universities to the lordship of Christ over the whole life of mankind.

Clubs Formed

Reports indicate that the organizational process is moving along smoothly: The students in the three dioceses in North Carolina have already established a regional Canterbury commission. Newark and New Jersey have plans for establishing a commission at a conference the latter part of March, as does the diocese of New York. The fourth province has a provincial Canterbury commission. Reports from the fifth and sixth province say that things are coming along there. So far, the state of California is leading in the number of applications received at national headquarters in New York from local Canterbury Clubs for affiliation with the NCA.

NORMAN FOOTE IN DELAWARE

★ The Rev. Norman L. Foote, director of the town and country institute at Roanridge, Mo., was the speaker at a recent meeting of the Auxiliary of Delaware, meeting at Calvary, Hillcrest. He spoke on the work of the institute, illustrating his talk with colored slides. He pointed out that the training given at Roanridge to clergy and other Church workers is eminently practical, with participation in the work of the farmer; the opening of abandoned churches; vacation schools and the use of the most successful techniques as parts of the training.

Questions brought out the fact that the personal life of the pioneer in this, as in any other field, is not easy. When Mr. Foote arrived with his wife and four children they lived for a time in the unfinished basement of a new building, sharing the space with the Rev. and Mrs. W. B. Spofford Jr. and their five sons, the oldest six, and four DPs, none of whom understood English.

TIME MAGAZINE LIFTS ONE

★ Time magazine featured a story March 19 about the Rev. Robert Ray Read of the district of San Joaquin. It picked up the story from the "Story of the Week" in the March 1st number of The Witness. Time gave no credit to The Witness, but Larry Hoover of the editorial services department of Time, wrote us a note suggesting that we comment editorially on the fact that the story ran in that magazine. Time apparently figured that they needed publicity but that The Witness does not.

BISHOP'S BALL IN BUFFALO

★ Young people of the diocese of Western New York are to hold their annual bishop's ball March 30th at the Statler, Buffalo, with Bishop and Mrs. Scaife the guests of honor. Money raised by the event goes into the bishop's discretionary fund. He has announced that he will use half the sum within the diocese and the rest for the first mission in Okinawa, which is in charge of the Rev. Norman Godfrey, formerly rector of St. James, Batavia, N. Y., and the Rev. W. C. Heffner, formerly of Albany, N. Y.

SERVICES IN LENT FOR HIGH SCHOOL

★ Mid-week services for high school students were held during Lent at Grace Church, Salem, Mass., sponsored by the council of churches. Clergymen of each denomination took part in the program.

BREAKFAST MEETINGS ARE POPULAR

★ The rector of Emmanuel, Webster Groves, Mo., has been meeting with men of the parish for devotions and breakfast three days a week. The idea has proved successful in creating fellowship. Not more than ten are invited by a personal letter from the Rev. James M. Lichliter, with a few newcomers and the rest old-guard members of the parish. The groups are small enough for a real feeling of friendship to develop. No pressure is put on anybody to attend, but the idea has worked so well that men who are not members of the parish are heading about it and asking for invitations.

CANTERBURY RALLY AT PRINCETON

★ The Canterbury Club of Princeton University held a rally March 17th, with delegates present from the dioceses of New Jersey and Newark. Speakers were John Morris, president of the national organization; Phil Robb, a Princeton senior; the Rev. Roger Blanchard, head of the division of college work of the National Council; Kay Duffield, head of college work in the province. Following supper the Rev. Henry B. Cannon, chaplain to Episcopal students at Princeton, gave a meditation.

YOUTH MEETING IN MISSOURI

★ Youth of the diocese of Missouri are to meet this week-end, March 31-April 1, at Grace Church, Kirkwood. The speaker at the dinner Saturday is Harriet Anderson, a freshman at the University of Tulsa, who is a member of the national youth commission. The Rev. G. Ernest Lynch, rector of Trinity, Hannibal, is to preach at the service the next day. The advisers to the group planning the affair are the Rev. A. Malcolm MacMillan, rector of the Ascension, St. Louis, and the Rev. W. Murray Kenny, rector of St. Mark's, St. Louis.

COMMITTEE FOR PEACE IN MASSACHUSETTS

★ The Rev. Robert M. Muir of St. John's, Roxbury, is the chairman of the committee for peace in Massachusetts. Ballots have been widely circulated which ask people to vote yes or no on this question: "Are you for bringing our troops back from Korea and for making peace with China now?" The ballot states that the Gallop poll reports that 66% of the American people voted yes on this question.

LUNCHEON CLUB IS POPULAR

★ Laymen of the diocese of Massachusetts have been meeting for luncheon at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, following the noonday service on Wednesdays in Lent. Speakers have been Bishop Nash, Bishop Dickson of Montreal, the Rev. George A. Fallon, Methodist pastor of Worcester, Chaplain James Pike of Columbia University, Bishop Hall of New Hampshire.

TRENTON CATHEDRAL SEEKS $350,000

★ Dean Frederic M. Adams of Trinity Cathedral, Trenton, N. J., has announced that $350,000 is being sought to complete the cathedral and to remodel some of the facilities of the church school.

FLORIDA PLANS CONVENTION

★ The convention of the diocese of Florida will be held April 10-12, at Daytona Beach. A meeting of the American Church Union will be held on the 12th, immediately following the adjourning of the convention, when the national executive secretary, the Rev. Albert J. DuBois, will be present to organize a Florida branch.

SEMINARIANS MEET WITH BISHOPS

★ Postulants and candidates for the ministry met recently with Bishop Donegan and Bishop Boynton of New York for an all day conference. Also taking part were Archdeacon Bratt, the Rev. Richard E. McEvoy of St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, and the Rev. John A. Bell, rector of the Incarnation. Of the total of 49 men now in seminaries from the diocese, 40 were present.

Bishop Donegan spoke of the importance of preaching in this day of doubt and confusion. The responsibility of preaching has always been a great one and it is especially so today. Archdeacon Bratt spoke on the rural work, stressing its extensiveness, both as to geographical area and as to program. McEvoy and Bell told of the problems and opportunities of city parishes.

BETHLEHEM PAYS FULL SHARE

★ The diocese of Bethlehem paid its full pledge to the National Council for 1950 amounting to $50,214, and pledged $49,939 for this year. The diocesan budget for this year amounts to $47,989 to cover administration, missions, education, social relations, promotion. Small amounts are also included for the World Council of Churches, the National Council of Churches and the Pennsylvania Council of Churches.

The promotion department reported that pledges from parishes for 1951 were increased $2,774 over last year. The largest is the pledge of $10,945 of St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre; with the Cathedral of the Nativity, Bethlehem, second with $7,200, and Christ Church, Reading, third with $6,000.

BISHOPS PREACH AT ST. MARK'S

★ Five bishops have preached this Lent at the noon-day services at St. Mark's, San Antonio, each remaining for three days instead of one as in other years. Those to preach were Bishop Quin, Bishop Hines, both of Texas; Bishop Burrill, suffragan of Dallas; Bishop Hunter of Wyoming, formerly rector of the parish, and Bishop Jones of West Texas. The rector, the Rev. Harold Gosnell, conducted the Good Friday service.

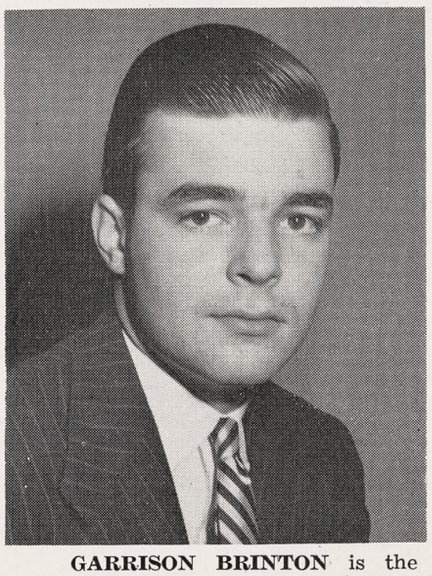
TAKE A HAND IN BUILDING

★ Much of the work of pouring the foundations for the new parish house of St. Stephen's, Jacksonville, Fla., is being done Saturdays by the men of the parish.

SEMINARY CONFERENCE AT EVANSTON

★ "The priesthood of the laity: living the liturgy" will be the theme of the annual Anglican seminary conference, which will be held March 29-30 at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Illinois. Nearly 100 students from Anglican seminaries in this country and Canada will meet.

The Rev. John Keene, rector of Grace Church, Madison, Wis., will open the conference with an address on the liturgy of the laity. The second topic, "The layman's relationship to the parish priest," will be discussed by the Rev. James Joseph, rector of St. Peter's, Brentwood, Pa., and Mr. Grant Lewis, a layman from that parish.



The third topic, "The layman goes out as an evangelist," will be discussed by Mr. Hal G. Perrin, director of the Bishop Clarkson Hospital, Omaha, Nebr.

In 1950, the General Seminary was host to the largest conference. One hundred and sixty-nine students from nine American and four Canadian seminaries met to consider, "The priest brings Christianity to our industrial areas." It was felt by all that the topic was vital for it represented one of the greatest missionary challenges of the Church, and timely for the Church is awakening to this great need. It was at this gathering that the movement got its official name. Because it includes seminaries in Canada it was voted unanimously to call it "The Anglican Seminary Conference."

This year's conference theme is an outgrowth of last year's. Many in seminary have never actually been "laymen" in an active sense. It will be the aim of this conference to deepen appreciation and understanding of laymen. It is the answer of seminarians and future priests to the Presiding Bishop's call to mobilize the laity for evangelism.

FLORIDA SETS UP LOAN FUND

★ The diocese of Florida has set up a fund of $50,000 to be used as a loan fund from which mission churches may borrow at a low rate for building purposes.

MEMORIAL WINDOW INSTALLED

★ A beautiful memorial window, known as the Prayer Book window, has been dedicated at Trinity Church in Staunton, Va. It was presented in the memory of the late Adele Valz Gooch, widow of the late Watson P. Gooch of that city, by her family. The window was imported by the Payne Studios of Paterson, N. J. and was designed and made by J. Wippell & Co. Ltd. of London and Exeter, England. The design is based on the period work of the late 13th and early 14th centuries. To conform to this period and at the same time bring to the craft the experience of the present time in design and craftsmanship, special consideration has been given to the mode of draughtsmanship, the appreciation of the black and the hatched line, and in keeping half-tones subordinate to the lead work and rich colored glasses so essential to the mosaic, jewel-like effect produced by the early masters.

The window portrays Archbishop Thomas Cranmer and commemorates the 400th anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer, Bishop Cranmer having been the key figure in making its publication possible, the first issue of which was in 1549.

The main figure in the window is Dr. Cranmer, who holds in his right hand the Prayer Book, and in his left hand a crozier, the staff of his office. In the background is Canterbury Cathedral. On either side are displayed the Tudor badges, the Roses of York and Lancaster, and the portcullis, in allusion of the Tudor descent from the Beaufort family. Above the main figure, Dr. Cranmer is shown instructing Edward VI, the boy king, in the study of the scriptures. Beneath the central figure of the Archbishop is a scene depicting the compilers of the English liturgy in conference with him. The lower part of the window shows the burning of the Archbishop in the town ditch at Oxford as he first thrusts into the fire his right hand wherewith he had previously subscribed to a denial of his faith in a moment of weakness. On either side of him are shown the figures of his colleagues and workers in the planning of the Prayer Book, Bishops Holbeach and Ridley.

EASTERN OREGON HAS GROWING WORK

★ Another mission in Eastern Oregon has become a self supporting parish. On March 4th, All Saints, Heppner, was erected into a parish. Four years ago, this mission was paying less than one-third of the salary of its missionary. Under the leadership of the Rev. E. L. Tull the congregation increased in size and strength and by achieving parish status, increased the number of parishes in the District to nine.

On January 21st, 1951, St. John's Mission in Hermiston became a self supporting parish. This mission, organized in February, 1947 has grown rapidly, first under the ministry of the Rev. Raymond Gayle, missionary in charge until July 1st, 1949, and subsequently under the leadership of the Rev. Jackson Gilliam.

On April 25th, 1949 St. Mark's, Hood River, achieved parish status. The Rev. Lloyd Thomas has been in charge of the work in Hood River since 1945.

INSTITUTE FOR LIVING IN BOSTON

★ An institute for living is being held at the Advent, Boston, on five Monday evenings starting March 26, when Prof. Gordon Allport of Harvard spoke on "What we are up against." He spoke from the point of view of a psychologist, indicating the need of a mature approach to the problems of the world today.

The speaker on April 2nd will be the Rev. Charles W. Lowry Jr., rector of All Saints, Chevy Chase, Md., whose subject is "Where are we going?" Bishop Nash is the third lecturer on "Making a living: what about security," while the fourth speaker on April 16th will be Ina May Greer, a psychiatrist formerly connected with the Harvard Medical School, who will discuss the Christian doctrine of the Church, its sacraments and grace. The series will close April 23 when Prof. Thomas S. K. Scott-Craig of Dartmouth will present the Christian doctrines of faith and hope as the only alternatives to suffering, pessimism and despair.

Ample time is provided at each session for questions and discussion.

CHURCH FELLOWS SOCIETY

★ The Society of Church Fellows is the name of a young married-persons group at the Good Shepherd, Lexington, Ky. During Lent they sponsored a study group on the Bible, run on a group basis so that everyone could have a say.

DELAWARE PARISH TO BUILD

★ Christ Church, Christiana Hundred, Del., is to have a new educational building, to cost $340,000, to take care of the more than 250 children now attending the church school. There is also to be a children's chapel, a memorial gift, which does not figure in the above cost. The Rev. William Munds is the rector.

OFFERING SERVICES IN MARYLAND

★ Services in four centers of Maryland are to be held in April for the presentation of the children missionary offering. The first will be at St. Paul's, Baltimore, April 15; the following Sunday it will be at St. Anne's, Annapolis; on the 29th the service will be at Frederick and the final service will be May 6th at Emmanuel, Cumberland. Bishop Powell will preside and preach at them all.

EDITORIALS

Episcopal Authority

THE first few weeks after Easter have in the lessons and the propers in the Book of Common Prayer many overtones of power for those who stand in the succession of the apostles. Jesus in the great forty days after his resurrection gives instruction to the "eleven" which is to assist them in carrying forward the work he has begun. He tells them that they are to be "shepherds of the flock" and "feed the sheep." He assures them that the sins which they remit will be remitted, and the sins they retain will be retained.

As the Christian Church developed, the instructions of Jesus were considered as applicable chiefly to the bishops, and to those whom they ordained. It was in a special priesthood that the powers were resident. By the beginning of the 16th century, it was generally accepted that the Bishop of Rome exercised the authority, down through a "chain of command." The Protestant Reformation was in direct opposition to the prevailing view. In the early English Prayer Books there was an intercession in the litany which prayed "From the enormities of the Bishop of Rome, good Lord deliver us."

We believe that this came about because there was resentment of the presumption that any man or small group of men could control either the guidance of God or the forgiveness of God. We prefer to believe that God gave to the Church —the company of all faithful people—the spirit which would guide into all truth, and the responsibility of forgiving the penitent. We believe that Jesus meant it when he said that the apostles should be servants and not lords. We believe in the priesthood of all believers, and so we reject any pretensions that say loyalty to the "chief shepherd" of the flock is paramount. We believe that authority in the Church resides ultimately in a representative assembly of clergy and laity gathered under the power of the Holy Spirit. We believe that bishops should seek to serve and not dominate this body in which the power of Jesus operates.

We love and respect our bishops, but we are alarmed by some of those who assume that the last chapters of the gospels apply to them alone, and can be followed without reference to the epistles, the early fathers of the Church, and the major part of Jesus' teaching. We are not a congregational Church, but neither are we an hierarchiacal Church. We are a pastoral church. That means that we take into consideration both what a congregation desires and what a bishop desires. Then we resolve it within the fellowship.

Let us be done with the flight to civil courts when ecclesiastical prerogatives seem to be neglected. This is not the Church at work, but the world and the flesh and the devil. Such proceedures as resort to the courts receive condemnation from both Jesus and St. Paul. The epistle of Peter says "Judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God." We believe that we must be a pastoral Church in the sense of humility that proclaims "let us reason together."

In those last days on earth, Jesus also commanded the Church to "preach the gospel to every living creature." We believe that this cannot be done by a Church that is shackled by a sense of power in high places. It can only be done by a Church which humbly acknowledges the need of God's power both for "all bishops and other clergy," as well as for the "congregations committed to their charge."

"QUOTES"

GRANT, O Lord Christ, the speedy coming of that day when thy word of command will disarm the soldiers of all nations, as thou in the garden of Gethsemane didst disarm Peter. May thy love, O King and Lover of Souls, be powerful today, as in that dark hour of thy betrayal, to heal the wounds which our swords have made. Amen.

That all nations may learn that political peace cannot be founded on industrial war. We beseech thee of hear us, Good Lord.

The People, Yes

THE head of the U N commission on Korean relief, J. Donald Kingsley, has just returned from his first extended visit to that land of firebombs, freezing rice-paddies and civil and international war. He states that the problem of the Korean war refugees is the biggest one which this century, possessed of some experience in these matters, has yet faced. Mr. Kingsley, who headed the U N's relief activities in Europe, should have some real standards for comparison.

Eric Sevareid recently said that the real losers in modern war are neither the living nor the dead, but the living dead. Today, after armies, fighting a war of attrition, have swept back and forth over the Korean peninsula several times, Korea is populated by ghouls; men, women and children who are confronted with ruins unsurpassed in human experience and nurtured on hatred of the invaders from the North and the equally destructive liberators from the South. Present reports indicate that the native Koreans are bitter, hate-filled and benumbed. They represent the raw material from which peace, or at least, a balance of live-and-let-live, must be built.

The French, so it is said, have a saying: "Another invasion we could just possibly stand; another liberation, never." Today, relief is too costly. Christians should know it. It is impossible, in this day and age, to give relief to that which has been destroyed. It is gone, for good, and cannot be brought back. The answer is, perhaps, no war.

The Beatitudes—

Blessed Are the Persecuted

BY
ANDREW M. VAN DYKE
Rector of Christ Church, Middletown, N. J.
and a Witness Editor

IN the middle nineteen thirties it was said that the most harsh penalty any Christian prophet could expect to suffer was to be laughed at. It was not long before the temper changed. Again persons began to lose jobs because they acted in the world on the basis of their Christian conviction. The hysteria which accompanies the cold war has made for a growing number of persecutions. A secretary of state has undergone vociferous abuse because he endeavored to show that the teaching of Jesus should guide our attitudes towards even unpopular persons. A clergyman has gone to jail for contempt of Congress because he is protecting his co-workers from villification. Conscientious objectors to military service have received sentences up to ten years for refusing to register in the draft. All varieties of name calling and loss of livelihood are for those who, in speaking and acting for peace, suggest that specific governmental policies in civil defense and international relations, in the mad race for armaments, lead to war rather than into the path with the Prince of Peace. The incidents of persecution could be multiplied. Thus in these days this beatitude has a deep relevance.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." These words of our Lord ring out at the top of the octave which is made up of different notes for an harmonious Christian character. The previous ones have been concerned with those things which a person may with the help of God develop within himself. Persecution, however, is something that comes from the outside. It has been the lot of those down through the centuries who have tried to reveal the high moral demands of God for the life of the world. Jesus said as he continued the sermon, "for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." He received the treatment himself, and so likewise have the magnificent Christian martyrs numbering "ten thousand times ten thousand" ever since.

Early Martyrs

IT is striking to contemplate that in the early Church, though the number of believers was small, a large percentage of them suffered death for their faith. Today there are millions who affirm "I believe in God," and it is few who are persecuted for it. Can one conclude from this that the world has largely accepted God's way, and that there remains no major area of conflict between what God desires and man does? Is the relatively small group of persecuted Christians a sign that the day is near when God's will is perfectly "done on earth?" We know that persecution is only aroused when the light of God's truth is thrown on the wickedness of man's life and those angered by the glaring ray strike out to destroy the agent from which it emanated. So it was that the head of John Baptist was brought to Salome because John contrasted the evil of Herod and his wife with the righteousness of God's law. Polycarp, a bishop of the second century, was a martyr because he was loyal to the one true God, and refused to have any part in the idolatrous worship of the state. Martin Luther's life was in constant danger, and he endured hardships because he insisted that God's grace came freely to all those who sought it penitently and it threw him into opposition to a corrupt, mechanistic, priest-ridden religion.

Martyrdom was the fate of many early Christians who would not serve in the armed forces of the empire because they were certain that love and not military might was the way to the pax dei. These and all the others have suffered because they confronted a wicked world with the holiness and righteousness of God. We can, perhaps, be logically led to state that the sacrifices of the prophets and saints has been successful. The world has progressed, and the reason for only a seeming handful of those persecuted today is that there are few spots left where the pureness of God has not reached.

The Harsh Realities

UNFORTUNATELY there are persons who act as if the foregoing were true. They seek to escape the harsh realities of the human situation. The Christian doctrine of man asserts that man is created in the image of God but also he is a sinner who constantly needs the grace of God if he is to attain his destiny. The poets and philosophers have joined the theologians in appraising man's paradoxical nature. Pope wrote that man was > "Created half to rise and half to fall

> Great lord of all things yet a prey to all,
> Sole judge of truth, in endless error hurled,
> The glory, jest and riddle of the world."

Paschal in the same vein described man as "what a novelty, what a monster, what a chaos, what a subject of contradiction, what a prodigy! Judge of all things and imbecile earthworm, glory and scum of the universe."

Man is of this dual nature. We must realize that this is true of individuals in all the world. We are, each of us, capable of good and evil. When we collectively set out on some enterprise, or establish some institution, it is to be expected that such enterprise or institution will be infected with the qualities of the designers. Christian man as an individual overcomes sin in certain areas of his life as he grows in grace, but even those accounted closest to perfection, such as St. Paul or St. Francis, did not think themselves sinless—far from it. Christianity has definitely affected the social order for good in many sectors through the centuries. There has been progress, but we cannot deny that all our corporate endeavors, since they are man-ordained have varying degrees of good and evil.

If Christian martyrdom is rare today it is because too few Christians recognize the wickedness that there is in every segment of our society, and hence think there is nothing against which they must witness. It is difficult to understand how persons, who believe that there is but one Father and Creator of all men, are not convinced that mankind should be a family, even if all people do not consciously acknowledge their common God. Callousness about what happens to others who chance to be outside our particular circle or national group too often characterizes the attitude of many who profess Christ as king.

It is forgotten that wherever impediments to real growth towards godliness exist, this is a concern. War always brings every evil with it, for it is an admittedly evil instrument in itself. But sparse are the voices that protest the utter devastation, in modern warfare, of all that means life for civilians. Some ought to be moved by what a marine in South Korea is reported to have said, "I'd a damn sight rather fight 'em here than in the States. I'd sure hate to see my home town torn apart like these here people. I want something to go home to." Is it possible that this is the only way that God calls us to act in the present situation? "When one member suffers, all the members suffer" ought to come into consideration.

Witness to Truth

IT may be that there are great numbers of those who call themselves Christian who do realize that our world has many spots that are in revolt against the will of God. They are quiet about it only because they fear the consequences of speaking out. This beatitude is certainly addressed to such. Back in the sixteenth century, Archbishop Cranmer defied the royal and ecclesiastical authority in England. They offered to spare his life if he would disavow what he believed. He decided that it was better to live and fight another day, and so he recanted. The forces against him did not release him, and he had to face a fiery death. He did not come to the stake in a cowardly fashion, as could have been expected because of his previous strategic withdrawal. He died manifesting triumphant courage, sure that his witness would have a continuing influence.

A characteristic of his martyrdom can also be seen in the disciples of Jesus. It is recorded that after the arrest of the Master "they all forsook him and fled." Peter followed afar off, and it was left to him to make a public denial that he had ever known Jesus. The others had known him too, but no more than that. Afterwards they witnessed his suffering, death and resurrection. It was this experience that made them men unafraid of "what man can do."

An intellectual acceptance of the teaching of Jesus and what it showed them of the character of the teacher was not enough. Much more was needed. And that came to them as they comprehended the meaning of the great events at the close of his life on earth. They learned how deeply God loves man. They learned that they could trust such a loving God to support them through pain, death and continuing resurrected life if they were seeking to do his will. It was this element of trust that made the difference in Peter and the others between Maundy Thursday and the day of Pentecost. On the latter day they preached Jesus Christ, and him risen from the dead. They were convinced not only that he was the way for life, but that he was the sure and certain hope that God eternally cared for and protected his own.

The servants' trust in God's everlasting love is the ingredient of the faith that makes undeviating witnesses. A simple belief in God does not make martyrs. It is when men venture on the conviction that God will take care of them, no matter what, that the word of the Lord is spoken against the sin in society.

Persecuted for Justice

LET it be noted that the blessedness, the happiness is reserved for those not just persecuted, but those persecuted for righteousness sake. At one time in the early Church, many of its members went out of their way to suffer martyrdom because they were sure that such an act would guarantee for them the kingdom of heaven. This practice had to be halted by the leaders of the Church. It was a misinterpretation of the promise that Jesus had given.

This beatitude has certain similarities with the word of God spoken to Israel in the 51st chapter of Isaiah—"Ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law, fear not the reproach of men, neither be dismayed at their revilings." The prophet goes on to pronounce God's utter destruction on the persecutors, and everlasting joy for the righteous. This assurance is given to Israel.

From St. Luke's version of the beatitudes it is perfectly evident that they were spoken to the New Israel. They are definitely an ordination sermon for the twelve apostles, the new twelve sons of Israel. It follows that the kingdom of heaven is for those who are persecuted because they are witnessing in the historic work of Israel. They are those who are of that family which God has separated and chosen to be the nation through which he seeks to have his will done on earth. An understanding of this concept can save us on the one hand from perpetuating the error of some who have undergone martyrdom in order to achieve the salvation of one's own soul, and on the other hand can prevent a "persecution complex."

In the first instance, one realizes that persecution is accepted in order that the purpose of God for the world may be advanced and not for any individual gain, even though such may accrue from the act.

In the second, we are delivered from the morbid enjoyment of imagining that every man's hand is against us. When one rejoices in the fellowship of the great cause of the redeeming society for the whole life of the world, suspicion and fear of all other forces vanishes. One knows that he, and they who be for us, are more than be against us, for "we are the chosen of God." In other words, persecution is not what the new Israel seeks, nor any of its members. Each one desires to be a part of the group that has as its role the proclamation of God's will and purpose for the world, and to do what he is able in this great mission.

God's Judgment

WHENEVER the eternal purpose of God for human life is proclaimed it is certain to provoke active and sometimes cruel opposition. The root cause for the passion and death of Jesus was the challenge he threw at the old Israel. He demanded that it repent and cleanse its life so that it might be able to set itself to the furtherance of the neglected cause for which it had been created by God. Those in power in Israel in religion (and so also in politics and economics) saw his message for what it was. They understood him perhaps more clearly than even his disciples did, or the "common people who heard him gladly." They recognized that he was declaring God's judgment on their way of life. If they listened to and followed him it meant the end of their palaces, their prestige and their prosperity. It is most lamentable but not surprising that their cry should be "Away with him! Let him be crucified!" Thus has it ever been when a voice disturbs the status quo, and this was even sharper, "for he spoke as one having authority." Yet it was the persecutors and their entire system that God destroyed. The persecuted was raised up, and "ever lives."

A willingness to endure persecution, and the act of being persecuted, is a sign that one is already in the kingdom of heaven. By very definition, that kingdom is in being when the whole man—body, heart, will and strength—is under God's rulership. When one delivers all that he is in perfect obedience to God's will, then he will be forced to show God to the world. Persecution will inevitably follow. It matters not, one is of the kingdom of heaven. This is the loving trust in God's mercy and care which makes persons unthinking of man's contempt or punishment. His complete adherence to the will of God makes him a part of the divine fellowship now and forever.

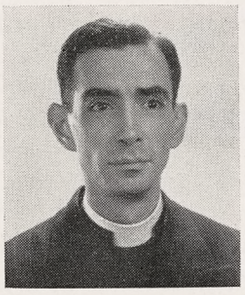
Jesus said "Rejoice in that day, for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." Happy—blessed indeed—are those persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom.



The Living Liturgy ---

"I Am Baptized"

BY

MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR.

IT is told of Martin Luther that often when assailed by Satan's wiles he would ward off the tempter by the proud boast: "I am baptized! I am baptized!" Surely there could be no greater support and comfort to a Christian in times of testing than this simple reminder of what must ever remain the most significant event of his life—the day he renounced the devil and all his works and was made a child of God and an inheritor of Christ's eternal kingdom. For most of us this great blessing came to us when we were little infants and we cannot recall anything that happened on that signal day. Hence we seldom think of it—to our loss. Yet as we grow in years, and we trust in grace, we can do nothing better than to remind ourselves continually of the accomplished fact. God has reached out to receive each one of us as his own child and has given us all things belonging to the Spirit in which to grow and live.

There are many occasions for the reminder of our baptism. The English Prayer Book preserves in a rubric before the Baptism rite itself a note which we have unfortunately lost from our American Book. In its insistence that Holy Baptism should be administered publicly on Sundays and other holy days it lists, among other reasons, the fact that "in the Baptism of infants every man present may be put in remembrance of his own profession made to God in his Baptism." Our clergy who persistently avoid scheduling baptisms at the time of the regular parish services—as our Prayer Book still directs them to do—are cheating their people of reminders they need to have. The excuse is always that it unduly prolongs the service. There are cuts of lesser consequence, however, that can be made. It is very doubtful if our people really object to five or ten extra minutes of their time being given to the witnessing of Holy Baptism. If they do, something is very basically wrong with them, not only as Christians, but as plain, normal human beings.

Another reminder of our baptism is the Creed. It is the Faith to which we or our sponsors in baptism expressed our assent when we came to the holy font. And we specifically stated it to be our desire to be baptized in this Faith. Day after day, in our offices of Morning and Evening Prayer, we renew that Faith and recall that profession when we recite the Creed at what is virtually the climax of the Daily Offices. If we are accustomed to sign ourselves with the cross at the close of the Creed, that also should remind us of the sign made upon our forehead at our baptism "in token that hereafter we shall not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under his banner . . . unto our life's end." Credo, I believe, can always mean for us, I am baptized!

There is a more intimate reminder still. Whenever we mention or write or even think of our name, we recall our profession made in baptism. In baptism we received our name. And our name was linked with the Name of the whole blessed Trinity, Who took us for His own possession and named His Name upon ours. That has given to our name a dignity and a worth which no human pedigree, no human achievement, no amount of material possession can ever bestow upon it. It is interesting that our Church's Catechism begins its instruction at this very place: What is your Name? Who gave you this Name? My own individuality, which my name given in baptism represents, is my constant reminder that I am a child of God, and that He cares for me and loves me for myself and shields me with His almighty protection. For I belong to Him; He has placed His Name upon mine.

Finally at life's end we remember that we were baptized into Christ's death that we might be also partakers of His resurrection. It was in the font that we first faced death, that its sting and terror should never hold us fast again. With Christ we went into the grave and gate of death and were buried with Him, that we might pass with Him (as our Easter Even Collect reminds us) "to our joyful resurrection." Our true Eastertide does not begin with our physical departure from this earthly life, but with our translation (as St. Paul calls it in Col. 1:13) from "the power of darkness . . . into the kingdom of his dear Son," —and this translation was made at our baptism. "The gate of death" is behind us; we passed through it safely in the font. What then is the end of our mortality? The Prayer Book calls it "the gates of larger life."

A Service of Thanksgiving

BY

JOSEPH H. TITUS
Rector of Grace Church, Jamaica, N. Y.
and a Witness Editor

RECENTLY I read an article by a clergyman entitled "My Funeral." Much of it was excellent—an attempt to get away from some pagan practices prevalent today. But there was also much that I could not, for myself, subscribe to. It being now the Easter season, and thus appropriate, I am minded to write very personally about my own funeral. Many will not agree with what I have to say either, but that is their right and I respect it. Certainly I set this down in no morbid mood, for death seems to me the most natural thing in the world. And so, like everyone who reads this, I think about it fairly frequently. I find myself incapable of expressing my deepest thoughts as I would wish to; I leave it to the poets to do it for me.

"And has the truth brought no new hope at all—
Heart, that you're weeping yet for paradise?
Do they still whisper the old weary cries?
Proud then, clear-eyed and laughing, go to greet Death as a Friend."

Thus I feel and—

"This is the death of death, to breathe away a breath
And know the end of strife, and taste the deathless life,
And joy without fear, and smile without a tear;
And work, nor care to rest, and find the last the best."

When I "die" (inadequate word!) I do not wish anyone to gaze on my mortal frame, except those whose function it is to attend to the final disposal of the body. I have long since willed the lenses of my eyes to the eye bank for sight restoration. I am hoping that this last slight gesture on my part will bring sight to someone who could not otherwise see the beauties of the world as I have been privileged to see them. The knowledge of that will bring me great happiness in the life beyond.

And then, as there is no essential difference between burial and cremation since both are merely the reuniting of one's chemical exterior with God's blessed earth, I have arranged for cremation, which is merely a speeding up of the process. Others may think otherwise, and their wishes are to be respected.

Service of Thanksgiving

SO there will be no coffin, no grave. But I certainly do want a memorial divine service, said in the church. Where else? For that of all places is most dear to me and has held the best of me. There is a great deal in our Prayer Book service that is glorious, but I sincerely wish that it were not called, "An Order for the Burial of the Dead." That is an unfortunate misnomer, for such a title stresses only the negative side. It is so much more! I wish it could be called, "A service of thanksgiving for those who have begun to live." Only such it can be from the Christian point of view, for St. Paul reminds us, "To die is gain."

No grave; others may with reason feel differently, but I somehow do not want anyone to think of "me" in a place I was not wont, in earthly life, to frequent. Perhaps I was too elusive!

To return to the service, which I look forward to. I want my friends there; all who can come. I want them there to raise their spirits in exultation with me, freed as I shall be from the limitations of the flesh. The real "I" shall be there with them, and I know they will be conscious of my presence. For the service I want joyous, not sad, music and no hushed awe. Together we shall raise our voices in the triumphant Easter hymns of assurance, praise and thanksgiving. I would like, "Jesus Christ is ris'n today"; "He is risen! Tell it out with joyful voice"; "Come ye faithful, raise the strain of triumphant gladness." I would want, too, a hymn of the Church militant, such as "Fight the good fight with all thy might." For when I depart this world I expect (with angels and archangels, if they will let me—and I know they will) to go on fighting. Oh! so much better than I have fought here. And I would like in this service, as a sort of final apology to those whom I have left behind for awhile, the hymn "Dear Lord and Father of mankind, forgive our foolish ways." Yes, as an apology for the myriad of things I have left undone, and the things I have done stupidly.

Music and more music—to lift the heart in happiness with me. Perhaps (even), for that small part of me which was found worthwhile to those who will be present. Still in the spirit of joyous thanksgiving, the organ prelude could be Widor's "Toccata" with its rousing and enheartening melodies and, as a postlude, Hayden's "Halleluia chorus" with its firm reiteration of deathless confidence.

No Flowers

SUCH, I hope, will be my funeral. Flowers? On the altar, yes, to be taken to the sick and the shut-in afterwards. But I know that all people, like myself, have a quite natural and healthy desire to do something; to give at such times. I would prefer that they gave to some cause that will help ameliorate the sufferings of mankind and so be with the Holy Spirit in its never-ending work of mercy. The Church suggests itself for this as the radiating center of the Spirit's work in the world.

I know no one will grieve for me; that would make me unhappy. I, too, have grieved—but not for my departed, ever. I have known that it was for myself, for parting is never easy to bear.

"A mourner weeps for himself,
The dead know nought of sorrow."

Such, I trust, will be my funeral. It may not be so for others; this is simply the way I would have it for myself. Yes, I look forward to it even now, in sure and certain hope of resurrection unto eternal life. I'm more confident of that than of aught else. I know—far better than I know anything—that neither life nor death nor things present nor things to come shall separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. I know, too, that those who have loved some bit of my greatly obscured eternal qualities will understand what I have written so inadequately. I want them to have the opportunity to rejoice and be exceeding glad with me when the greatest moment comes—as I am now and will be glad for them; inexpressibly thankful for all that they have given to me.

The Lord's Supper

BY

WILLIAM ROBERTS
Formerly Bishop of Shanghai

OUR dear Lord, knowing that his enemies were plotting his arrest and that the hour for his departure out of this world unto his Father was near, longed for a last meal of fellowship with his human friends. He made arrangements for the use of a large upper room in the home of an acquaintance, and there, in the evening, he came with his twelve disciples—men who had remained with him throughout his earthly ministry and to whom he was soon to entrust the fulfillment of the work which his Father had sent him to accomplish upon earth. It was at his invitation that they had come to this last supper together. They were his guests. He was their host, and presided over the meal.

Before them, on the table, lay some unleavened bread, a dish of bitter herbs, and a cup or more of wine—all customary Jewish foods for use at the Passover festival. During the meal he took the unrisen bread into his hands, gave thanks to its Author, broke it into smaller pieces and gave them to his disciples with the words, "Take, eat, this is my body which is given for you. Do this in remembrance of me." Similarly after supper he took the cup of wine, gave thanks once more, and asked them to drink of it, saying, "Drink ye all of this, for this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you and for many, for the remission of sins. Do this as oft as ye shall drink it, in remembrance of me."

During the meal, one of the twelve left the room on his inhuman mission. It is not clear from our records whether he received the bread and wine from our Lord's hands or not. If he did, his action was all the more despicable and is a solemn warning to all those of us who partake of the Lord's Supper in an outward and perfunctory way, and at the same time nourish hatred and evil intention in our hearts.

In order that our observance of this sacramental meal may be a worthy one and in accord with the original nature of the Supper as our Lord intended it, let us give heed to a few basic facts about it.

Continuous Fellowship

FIRST we note that it was the Lord himself who was the divine host at the meal, and that he was present in person before the breaking of the bread and after it, and throughout all the proceedings. The disciples came with him, conversed with him, received the bread and wine at his hands, and when it was over and they had sung a hymn, went out with him to face the future. The whole meal was a continuous fellowship with him.

Second, we note that in using the bread and wine, he did not say, "This is I, partake of this and I shall dwell within you." Rather did he say, "This is my body—my blood—do this in remembrance of me." In other words, the sharing of the bread and wine was part of the fellowship of the disciples with their Lord, but its special purpose was for a remembrance of him, and in particular for a vivid remembrance of his loving sacrifice for them.

Therefore, in trying to make our observance of the Lord's Supper conform to this divine original meal, let us first place ourselves in the position of the disciples, and think of ourselves as a group of his believers and friends who gather in his presence at his request. It is he who invites us to come to this Supper for a holy communion with him and for a needed remembrance of his self-offering for us. He presides in his own spiritual person (for he is no longer in the flesh) and is the divine head of the group. He is present with us as we come to the church building, he is present in the church, yes, he is in the upper-room of the chancel, waiting to bless the bread and wine and to place it into the hands of every one of us, one by one. The human minister, who is acting for Christ, is almost as if he were not. It is the Lord himself who is doing it all. As the bread is lifted up and blessed and broken, and as the wine is raised in the cup and blessed, it is Christ, who is thus repeating his former action before the twelve, and who calls us from our seats to draw near and take these holy things for the deepening of our fellowship with him and for the forgiveness of our own sins through his death.

His Presence

WE then come, one by one, and kneel in his presence, and receive from his holy hands the little bit of unleavened bread and the sip of wine, hearing him say to us, "This is my body—my blood—given and shed for you. Do this in remembrance of me." As we kneel we lift our eyes to the cross on the altar and gratefully recall his wonderful earthly life, his fearless love in suffering and death, his resurrection and ascension and his presence with us now and forever. We remember him, the same saving Son of God, as he was yesterday, is now and forever will be. Our hearts leap to him as we receive the bread and wine. Our spirits are joined with his in holy communion, by an act of vivid remembrance of his life and death for us. He has drawn us to himself in marvelous fellowship and intimacy. We would like to remain kneeling at the altar rail but there are others who must receive. We return to our places in the church and when all have received, we join in humble thanksgiving and then receive his blessing through the minister. And then he goes out and home with each one of us, to help us face our future as triumphantly as he did his.

What Do You Say?

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

INNUMERABLE times the question has been asked, "What do you make of Jesus?"

Some answer that they think him a menace to society. Both radicals who think him visionary and reactionaries who think him revolutionary agree in hating him.

Others see in him a great prophet or teacher from whom they try to learn as they learn from other great men. Jews, Mohammedans, Unitarians, Christian Scientists and followers of many other living religions share this point of view.

Peter answered the question by saying, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." Upon that confession is built the Church of Christ.

For, as Jesus pointed out, no one can make such a statement in full sincerity unless the truth of it has been revealed to him by God. There is no conclusive historic or rational proof of its truth. In fact, most of the educated and civilized people of the world have rejected it.

But through those happy ones to whom the truth has been revealed the work of God in creating a living and life-giving body has been and is being done.

No one can tell another what he should or must say in answer to the question. But the judgments and decisions we daily make in our lives continually ask, "What do you think of Jesus?"

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Claim of Jesus Christ. By Dom Gregory Dix. Chicago: Wilcox & Follett Co., 1951, pp. 86. $1.25.

The author of The Shape of the Liturgy needs no new introduction. The content, moreover, of this more recent and smaller book is not exactly new; it was originally presented, in another form, over the BBC during Holy Week of 1948. What provides its interest and relevance is the fact, known to many who have heard Dom Dix speak recently, that the author is interested in a phenomenon which has come to draw more and more attention from students of the New Testament and of Church history: the transmission of a certain "tough" and independent core of Christian faith from one geographical and cultural world to another—from Jew to Greek, from Greek to Roman, and so on. This tough core is here presented as the claim of Jesus Christ ("Christ died for our sins and rose again for our justification"); it is examined from different sides in seven chapters, first as the "original point" of the Gospel which made the story worth telling (p. 13), and lastly as the claim which calls for realization in each member of the Church today (p. 85). This claim is no abstract one but moves from the "real life" of the incarnate Son by an inner necessity to the "real life" of modern man—to whom the book is addressed.—Paul W. Meyer

The Meaning of the Sermon on the Mount. By Hans Windisch. Westminster Press. $4.00.

This is a beautiful English translation by Professor MacLean Gilmour, Queen's University, of one of the most important theological and exegetical works to appear in this century. It will do a great deal to offset the thorough-going Barthian interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount, according to which it is practically useless even to attempt to put in practice the precepts of the Sermon!

Psychotherapy and a Christian View of Man. By David E. Roberts. Scribner. $3.00.

This book is an outstanding contribution to the efforts which are being made to bring together theology and the conclusions of modern psychotherapy. Dr. Roberts describes religion and the healing techniques developed by psychiatry as the only expedients which can directly transform man's internal character-structure. Both attempt to create and have succeeded in developing in the individual "internal harmony and a capacity for personal growth and responsibility." Trained in both disciplines, the author tells first how and why therapy works, and then how religious belief grows. He indicates the agreement which often exists between Christian theory and psychotherapy, but the sharp divergence which may be experienced between psychotherapeutic standards and much actual Church practice. Of particular value is the scholarly analysis, always from the viewpoint of one trained in modern psychiatry, of certain traditional Christian doctrines concerning the nature of man. Original sin, free will, views of salvation are discussed as these have been presented not only by St. Paul and St. Augustine but by Kierkegaard, Karl Barth and Emil Brunner.

Dr. Roberts concludes with the controversial statement that ultimately psychiatry cannot understand its own task aright except within the framework of a Christian view of man and God. "But the full confirmation of such a standpoint will be reached, if it ever is, only as psychiatrists, and especially Christian psychiatrists, pay more attention than they have thus far to the full range of religious living and faith on the part of strong, healthy people; and it will be reached only as doctrinal theologians take a more direct part in revitalizing the healing ministry of the Church." —Eleanor T. M. Harvey

The Kingdom of God, by S. H. Hooke; The Early Traditions of Genesis, by E. B. Redlich; The Resurrection Pattern, by Geoffrey Hoyland. Macmillan. $1.25 each.

Three new volumes in the Colet Library—a library appropriately named for John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's, the friend of Erasmus, an orthodox scholar and reformer. The series is edited by Dean Matthews, also of St. Paul's Cathedral in London, and is designed to present Christian teaching in such a way that modern readers and serious students will be able to appreciate it. The faith is still relevant in a "scientific" age.

A Book of Pastoral Prayers. By Ernest Fremont Tittle. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $1.50.

The late Ernest Tittle of Evanston, was one of the spiritual giants of the modern world. This beautiful collection of pastoral prayers will be useful to many outside his own denomination.

Jerusalem. By Trude Weiss-Rosmarin. Philosophical Library. $2.75.

A very attractive historical sketch of Jerusalem from prehistoric times to the present, with photographs and a map, leading up to an argument against the internationalization of the city. The emotions and motives of Jewish patriots are clearly and persuasively set forth, and Arab atrocities are catalogued with some detail. There is another side to the argument—not the question of the holy places, which is relatively unimportant, but the miseries of the city's inhabitants, suffered alike by Jews, Christians and Moslems, whether innocent or guilty. —S. E. Johnson

The Pendle Hill Reader. Ed. by Herrymon Maurer. Int. by Elton Trueblood. Harper. $2.75.

A collection of papers, in which the authors are not arguing, but describing what they know from experience of the presence of God and his power in the world today. They are pointing out the way to rapport with God and joy in his service. It is startling today to read such testimony, simple, humble and convincing. To quote Thomas R. Kelly: "When we are gazing into the sun, we need no proof that the sun is shining."—Philip H. Steinmetz

Novi Testamenti Biblia Graeca et Latina. Ed. by Joseph M. Bover, S. J. Newman Bookshop, Westminster, Maryland.

It is a good old-fashioned Anglican custom to read a chapter in the Greek New Testament every day. I hope there are many clergy among us who still observe the ancient scholarly practice, and I would like to call attention to this beautifully printed edition of the Greek text, with the Clementine Vulgate on the opposite page. The book was first published in Madrid in 1943, but a new edition has just made its appearance. It is one of the finest products of Roman Catholic biblical scholarship that the world has seen.

The Book of Common Prayer and the Worship of the Non-Anglican Churches. By William D. Maxwell. Oxford Univ. Press. 85c.

An excellent historical lecture. Despite its brevity, it contains invaluable information, especially in the notes, about the influence of the Book of Common Prayer upon Dissenters' liturgies. Two points are sharply made: that non-Anglican churches have been regrettably influenced by Matins as a pattern for Sunday worship; and that up to the nineteenth century the liturgical tradition among Dissenters was fostered primarily by Unitarians. —C. C. R.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

BRITISH EDITOR HITS WORLD COUNCIL

A statement on the international situation issued recently by the executive committee of the World Council of Churches was sharply criticized in London by the Rev. Shaun Herron, editor of The British Weekly, independent religious journal.

The World Council statement, drafted at a meeting in Bievres, near Paris, at the end of January, warned the agency's 158 member Churches in 43 countries against excessive concern over rearmament and called upon Christians everywhere to join in promoting social justice.

In a signed front-page editorial, Mr. Herron declared that the World Council's "bare outline" of the international situation is "proof indeed that either the executive has nothing to say, or is prevented by its divisions from saying it. The latter is probably the case, though it is rash to rule out the former."

Mr. Herron asserted that the World Council "is, in fact, against its will, split asunder." Speculating upon difficulties within the executive committee, he said that "between Pastor Martin Niemoeller and the Americans there can have been little common ground." He was referring to the presence of the German pastor and leading United States churchmen at the Bievres meeting.

Drawing a parallel between the World Council and the British Council of Churches, Mr. Herron declared that when the British group was trying to stimulate the interest of local churches in international affairs, consultations were split repeatedly by the pacifist versus non-pacifist issue, pacifist clergy being charged with "Communist zeal and a serpentine flair for disruptive propaganda."

"The price of compromise is sometimes lost leadership," he said, going on to ask: "Of what use is the unity of Christendom if it is a unity of impotence?"

He had a punch-line to wind up his editorial: "The trumpet did not sound at all. All we heard was a toot on the flute."

CHINESE CHRISTIANS REJECT SUBSIDIES

Five Christian organizations of China have signified their intention to break from foreign subsidies and strive to be on a self-supporting basis. They are the National Christian Council, the YMCA, YWCA, the Christian Publication Society and the Tien Feng Publication Society. They have also stated that they will "wipe out the poisonous elements of imperialism and build up new missions in New China catering to the interests of the people."

Also recently the ministry of education in Peking called a conference of 21 Christian colleges and universities which receive subsidies from the U. S. The week-long conference decided that some institutions that relied heavily on U. S. money, will be operated as national institutions. Included are Yenching University and the Peking Union Medical College. Others which can obtain self-support without too much difficulty, such as St. John's University and the University of Shanghai, will continue to run as private institutions.

VATICAN WARNS CZECHS OF RENEGADE PRIESTS

The Vatican, in a Slovak-language broadcast, warned the faithful of Czechoslovakia to keep aloof from "renegade priests" who seek to sway them from allegiance to the Holy See and their bishops. Meanwhile the Prague radio reported that several meetings of clergy, including several bishops, have been held to pass resolutions endorsing the statements of the recent Warsaw Peace Congress.

FULL PARTICIPATION IN WORLD COUNCIL

The holy synod of the Orthodox Church in Greece has officially approved full participation in the World Council of Churches. It revokes a previous decision which permitted only laymen to hold executive or committee posts in the Council.

ANGLICAN DEAN REPORTS

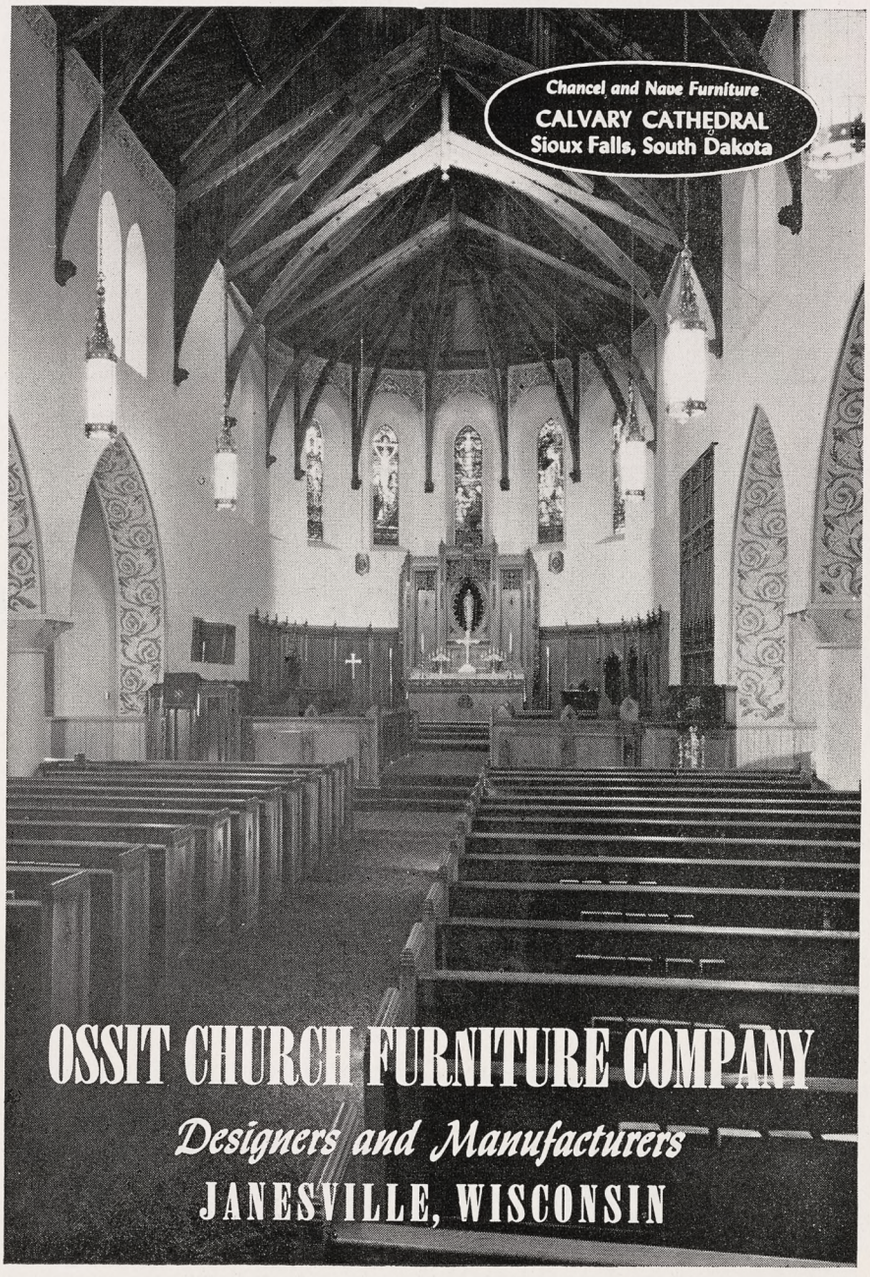
When Dean Charles W. Chandler of the Anglican cathedral in Hamilton, New Zealand, went to Europe to attend the meeting of the World Peace Committee he said that on his return he would give "a completely frank estimate of the committee's worth." (Witness, Feb. 15). He arrived in Hamilton March 19 and said:

"I am convinced that the Council is a company of honest men of widely varied opinions, but united in one cause—for peace of the world. It is utterly untrue to say it is Stalin's outfit. Forty per cent of the members are Communists representing various degrees of Communism, but the rest are of all other shades of opinion."

"The whole 190 present at the East Berlin meeting," Dean Chandler added, "were obviously in search of peace."

"I think we in the West are under a misapprehension about the Russian bogey," he said. "I am completely convinced that we have less to fear from Russia and the East than we think. They are keen to have years of peace. There are features of both ideologies that are commendable, and it is quite possible for the two to exist in the one world."

GOVERNMENT TAKES OVER HOSPITALS



Fourteen hospitals formerly operated to R. C. religious orders in Czechoslovakia and one run by Protestants, have been taken over by state authorities. It brings the total of hospitals, sanatoria and clinics to have been nationalized since Jan. 1, 1949 to 273.

WORLD COUNCIL SPEAKS ON DISARMAMENT

Collective security and international regulation are requisites for effective armament reduction, according to the World Council of Churches. A statement was released March 20 from headquarters in Geneva in answer to a letter to the World Peace Council, headed by Frederic Joliot-Curie, French atomic scientist. He has appealed to the World Council "to support proposals (of the Peace Council) for a gradual and controlled reduction of armaments which are, in truth, an answer to the aspirations and needs of all the peoples whose opinions the World Peace Council seeks to voice."

SUSPENDED PRIEST IS REINSTATED

The Rev. Joseph Plojhar, minister of health in the government of Czechoslovakia, has been reinstated by R. C. authorities in Prague. He was forbidden to exercise his priestly functions in 1948 by Archbishop Beran for engaging in political activities. The Archbishop was himself banished from the country earlier this month.

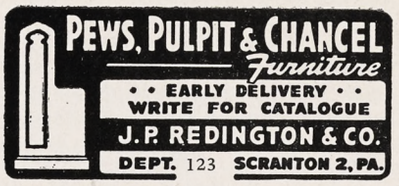
NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

PROTESTANT EDITORS HOLD MEETING

Editors of Protestant papers in the U.S. and Canada, organized as the Associated Church Press, are meeting March 28-30 in Washington. A full day is being devoted to consideration of foreign policy through conferences with officials of the state department. A meeting is also scheduled with President Truman at Blair House.

Problems of editing, circulation promotion and the proposed increase in postal rates were discussed by the editors at their business meeting.

COUNCIL SPONSORS TOUR OF KOREAN CHRISTIANS



Two leading Christians of Korea are currently on a six weeks "good will" tour of the U.S.A. and Canada under the auspices of the National Council of Churches. They are Methodist Bishop Hyungki J. Lew and the Rev. Kyung-Chik, a Presbyterian. They issued a public statement at the start of their tour, March 22, in which they spoke of the "deep sense of appreciation" Koreans feel for American military and relief assistance and asserted that all Koreans hope for a unification of their country and are united in their hatred of Communism. The message said that the two men had been sent to this country by the National Council of Churches in Korea to convey thanks to the American people for the "immensity of what you have done and are doing. Our eyes fill with tears and we can find no words adequate to express our gratitude to you."

SOUTHERN SEMINARIES TO ADMIT NEGROES

Three seminaries of the Southern Baptist Church will admit Negro students for the first time this fall. They are located in Louisville, Fort Worth and New Orleans.

TOWN TAKES A DAY OFF TO PRAY

The whole town of Zeeland, Mich., shut down on March 15—business places, schools and all—to go to church to thank God "for what we have". The town was founded a century ago by members of the Dutch Reformed Church. The early settlers lived by hard work and prospered. The town grew to a population of 3,500, and now has several small in-

What Do Our Seminaries Need?

There is only one all inclusive answer: Your Support!

You are the Church, and the Seminaries which belong to the Church are your responsibility.

Interest yourselves in your Seminaries. Pray for the students and teachers. Give through your parish to supply the money your Seminaries need.

dustries. No one is rich; neither is anyone poor. Taking stock of their present situation, they decided they better thank God for it.

MIXING RELIGION WITH OIL

Oil wells located on their property have brought prosperity to a Baptist and a Methodist Church located at Union, Texas. Prior to the oil, they struggled along with small congregations and meager support. Today the Baptist church has a new $46,000 church, free of debt, and is about to build a new parsonage. The Methodist church has a new parsonage and is looking forward to a new sanctuary.

BRITISH EXCHANGE PASTOR DENIED A VISA

The U.S. embassy in London last week denied a visa to the Rev. G. W. Parkinson, Unitarian minister of Doncaster, England, who was to exchange for a six month period with the pastor at Hingham, Mass. The British preacher said that he assumed the reason he was denied a visa was because he was one of a small delegation to welcome Paul Robeson to Doncaster when the American singer was there for a recital in 1949. "I really met him for only ten minutes", he added.

WARN AGAINST USING FOOD AS WEAPON

The American Friends Service Committee has protested against the use of food as a political weapon. The protest, in the form of a telegram to President Truman, expressed particular concern over the government's threat not to aid India, now suffering one of the worst famines in history, unless they line up on our side in the UN.

CHURCH-LABOR PROJECT FOR MINNESOTA

A church-labor project has been launched by the council of Churches of Minnesota in an effort to "encourage more adequate understanding between labor and the Church and to explore areas of common interest." A series of informal conferences are now being held between Church and labor leaders.

PRESBYTERIANS CONCERNED OVER FOOD DELAY

Concern over the delay by Congress in acting on the proposal that 2,000,000 tons of grain be sent to the starving people of India was voiced last week by the board of foreign missons of the Presbyterian Church. "The traditional position of America refuses to permit technicalities to stand in the way of feeding starving people when it is within their capacity to save their lives." The board sent letters to committees of the House and Senate.

FIREBELLS CALL PEOPLE TO PRAY

Firebells are rung in Charleston, S. C. for one minute each day to call people to pray for peace. The program, to continue for an undetermined period, was proposed to the mayor by the United Council of Church Women. The local ministers union also is sponsoring a prayer program over local stations to coincide with the bell ringing.

BISHOP OXNAM HITS AMA DRIVE

Methodist Bishop Oxnam took a crack at the American Medical Association in addressing hospital executives in Chicago. The assessment on every doctor in America by the organization to raise a propaganda fund "to misinform a nation" about the extension of insurance plans for the payment of medical and hospital fees, he branded as "a national disgrace."

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MRS. A. N. WARNER
Churchwoman of Titusville, Pa.

It really hurts to read the Rev. Mr. Fenn's letter (Witness, Feb. 22) and to feel that some of the finest leaders of the Episcopal Church are criticized for their Christian hospitality and courtesy to clergy of other denominations.

Now, when unity in this sorry, divided world, is so sorely needed, must we put man-made rubrics above such Christian brotherhood? Was our Lord an Episcopalian when he instituted the Last Supper?

Surely our Presiding Bishop is setting the pattern for us in his labor with leaders of other denominations. Let us rejoice that the Protestant Episcopal Church is so finely and graciously represented.

H. J. MAINWARING
Layman of Wallston, Mass.

In your March 15 issue, John S. Lord, layman of Springfield, Mass., says, "In every country the Catholic Church is seeking temporal power. . . . "

On January 29, 1951, the Archbishop of Canterbury said to a large audience on his return from Australia: "We have no doctrine of our own—we only possess the Catholic doctrine of the Catholic Church, enshrined in the Catholic creeds, and those creeds we hold without addition or dimunition. We stand firm on that rock."

If Mr. Lord agrees with the Archbishop of Canterbury, chief bishop of the Anglican Communion, then why does Mr. Lord hand over to the Roman Church exclusively the title "Catholic Church"?

Churchmen who profess to believe, (every Sunday in the services of our church) in "the holy Catholic Church," ought not to reserve that august name for the papal Church. They should at least prefix "Roman" to it, and not swallow Rome's claim to be the whole Catholic Church. That's what Rome wants us to do, but it is what we ought not to do. We should agree with Canterbury and not with Rome.

HERBERT H. MORSE
Layman of Hartford, Conn.

There never was a time when our traditional democracy was so in danger as today. The forces of reaction are constantly at work to take from us the liberties which we have always felt were guaranteed by the Constitution. Freedom of speech, press and assembly are important to us not only as citizens but as churchmen. The rector in the pulpit should enjoy this freedom as well as the man in the street. For this reason we should jealously guard these rights against all attempts, legislative and otherwise, to deprive us of them.

It hardly need be said that such laws as the McCarren-Mundt act are a danger to all Americans by depriving us of our inalienable rights. While our brave soldiers are fighting in Korea for freedom for that country, we are slowly being deprived of it here. Isn't it time that our leaders, religious as well as political, came forward and took a stand for real, basic and liberal Americanism?

J. M. MacLEAN
Layman of West Orange, N. J.

The letter of the Rev. Richard P. McClintock, the press notices on Spiritual Hitchhikers; Hilarity; the article on Funeral Floral Etiquette (Witness, Feb. 15) are all very good. I am passing them on.

JAMES F. BURKE
Layman of New York City

May I congratulate you on the Easter number, just received. It is most excellent in every way.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Baptism Sponsors Questioned As To Qualifications

Rector Concludes That More Stringent Rules Are Needed for Them to be Effective

By ROBERT S. TRENBATH
Rector of Trinity Church, Washington

★ Every parish priest and probably most families have at some time in their life been disturbed over the question of choosing godparents. Shall they be chosen because they are good friends or with some other criteria in mind? Because I have been somewhat disturbed over the way godparents are being chosen I have recently made a survey of godparents of some 43 baptisms that were held at Trinity. We asked the godparents in each of these cases to fill out an application blank with the following statements:

"I desire to become a godparent to ..... and submit the following information:

1. I was baptized in the ..... Church.
2. I am a full member of the ..... Church.
3. I attend my Church..... times a year.
4. I have read the vows that I am to make."

The answers received to the first three numbered questions were most revealing and show the job that confronts us today. In answer to question 1, of 96 godparents less than one-third were baptized in the Episcopal Church, 3 had never been baptized and were admitted as godparents only to save an embarrassing situation at the baptism itself. The others came from 9 other churches, including 12 from the Roman Catholic Church.

Church Membership

In answer to Question 2, of 91 godparents claiming full church membership 35 were Episcopalians and 5 claimed no Church affiliation.

In answer to question 3, of 94 replies 6 never went to church at all, 30 went less than once a month so that over one-third of these godparents were attending church less than 12 times a year. Nine claimed they went numerous times, 8 went from 13 to 26 times, 13 went from 27 to 40 times, and 28 from 40 to 52 times.

If one analyzes these figures he is rather appalled and the first thing that comes to his mind is a hearty assent to the program of the department of Christian education of the National Council which is stressing the importance of the Christian education of parents and godparents at the time of baptism. For example, from the results of question 2 we are asking two-thirds of our godparents who don't belong to our particular Christian community to act responsibly for the religious upbringing of our Episcopal children. We, of course, are not saying that they are not Christians but their Christian tradition in many cases is quite different, and we must admit that the child is being welcomed into a very broken kind of Christian community.

Again what can we really expect from one-third of these godparents who aren't really in the Christian fellowship by their own admission of church attendance, or from another one-third who are not too closely related to the Church community through its worship. We must ask ourselves to what it is we are welcoming new members through the service of baptism.

It has been my own practice of late, if possible, to talk with parents and godparents of each person to be baptized about the importance and the implications of the service. While all of us realize that God gives something through baptism, the instrumental side of the sacrament, we also realize that such gift must have good soil to grow in, and if those chiefly responsible for the soil know little or nothing about the care of it, the gift of God may be stifled.

Does this point to the fact that our Church ought seriously to consider laying down more stringent rules on who shall be admitted as godparents?

In answering our question as to why he did not give the results to question four, Mr. Trenbath replied:

"I'm afraid I just assumed that the readers would know that all people had read the vows they were to make. Whether or not they had all absorbed the meaning of those vows is something else again. The best possible solution would be to see godparents along with parents, but the difficulty is that most godparents live hundreds of miles away and if they do come to the baptism are only here for the day. Some of course are godparents by proxy, which I have never thought such a good idea, yet is something we can't do away with at the moment."

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

ST. MATTHEW'S SCHOOL MAKES CHEST GIFT

★ A lot of bed making, dish washing, pet feeding, errand running and baby sitting went into the gifts presented by the children of St. Matthew's Parish School, Pacific Palisades, California, to the Los Angeles area community chest. Under a plan developed by Miss Jeannette M. Hall, principal, and the Rev. Kenneth W. Cary, rector, each child undertook to earn personally his own contribution to the red feather agencies.

For two weeks before the gifts were presented different aspects of the project were emphasized in the daily chapel services. Letters were sent to parents asking their cooperation in arranging special tasks about the home for their children, the pay being set aside for the community chest.

"We wanted to make support of the community chest an educational adventure," said Miss Hall, formerly of the Episcopal Academy, Philadelphia. "We are pleased with the success of the project because it gave our children an opportunity to learn in a practical way their responsibilities as Christian citizens."

The picture on the cover is of one of the pupils of the school earning his bit for the fund by looking after someone's pet dog.

GRASS ROOTS MOVEMENT IN WASHINGTON

★ St. Alban's Church, Washington, D. C., is having a grass roots movement under the leadership of the Rev. Felix Kloman. He is inviting people of various professions to meet with him to discuss what the parish can do to serve their particular needs. Recently he met with twelve physicians — with eight others prevented from attending by emergency calls. They agreed that more liaison between church and hospital was needed. The doctors also appointed a committee of their own to organize a corporate communion and breakfast three times a year.

Other professional groups to meet have been lawyers, who are having a series of luncheons; newspaper men and educators; housewives; merchants.

CHURCH CLUB BARRED FROM CAMPUS

★ The Canterbury Club, along with the student organizations of all Churches, have been forbidden to use buildings at the University of Delaware. The chairman of a faculty committee stated that "the holding of sectarian services is not in keeping with the non-sectarian character of a state university, and the use of its property for such worship services does not accord with the spirit of the university's charter."

The spokesman said however that "the university is pleased that the churches of Newark have undertaken to sponsor these student groups, and it is pleased to have its students associated with any church of their own choice." He added that "university officials are of the opinion that off-campus facilities for holding meetings of the individual clubs should be provided by sponsoring churches."

CLERGY CONFERENCE IN TEXAS

★ Prof. Clifford Stanley of the Virginia Seminary was the leader at a conference of the clergy of Texas, meeting at Camp Allen, April 2-4, when he delivered a series of five lectures.

BISHOP BOYNTON HONORED

★ Bishop Charles Boynton, suffragan of New York, is to be the guest of honor at a dinner of the Church Club of New York, to be held at the Union League Club, April 10th. He will be the only speaker.

ATOMIC EXPLOSIONS SHOCK RECTOR

★ The Rev. Reginald G. Rosson, rector of Christ Church, Las Vegas, Nevada, writes the following about the recent atomic explosions in southern Nevada:

"As for the bomb blasts, the effect of them on me was to make me more appreciative of of the power of God in the world of nature and how dreadful such power is in the hands of unredeemed mankind.

"The first two or three blasts awakened us by shaking the house such as no wind or earthquake in my experience ever has.

"Quite by accident I saw the light of the next explosion and I must admit that the effect of it actually made me feel ill in the stomach region. It happened, just as day was making up its mind to break in the east . . . the whole black sky in the northwest to west lighted up like day. The light heightened to a peak after the style of a monstrous Roman candle and died out the same way turning from daylight brightness to a vanishing red glow, I . . . stood there a moment waiting to see the mushroom cloud. But the blackness settled over the scene again and I realized that it was much too dark to see it . . . It was some three or four minutes after all this that the house began to shake like fury. It seemed like shock after shock hit it until it must needs fall apart. Then everything stopped and stillness settled over all again.

"Again—to think that selfish, egocentric, sinful mankind has such awful power in his hands! I must admit that when contemplation of it comes to my mind, I feel utterly baffled, and I find myself taking Scarlet O'Hara's way out in the words, 'I mustn't think about that now, I'll think about it tomorrow'."

SPRING CONFERENCES ANNOUNCED

★ Robert D. Jordan is setting up a series of meetings with bishops and promotion chairmen in each of the provinces with the exception of the eighth, in which the meeting will be held during the synod at Salt Lake City, May 1.

The provincial conferences are for a full day and to be presented for discussion is a complete outline of the 1951 every member canvass and the layman's training program. A time schedule and synopsis of all materials available from the National Council will be given to those who attend, and suggestions will be offered as to ways in which dioceses and parishes may use the laymen's training program to the greatest advantage.

Conferences scheduled are as follows: first province, April 3, Statler Hotel, Boston; second province, April 4, Prince George Hotel, New York; third province, April 6, Statler Hotel, Washington, D. C.; fourth province, April 19, St. Luke's parish house, Atlanta, Georgia; fifth province, LaSalle Hotel, Chicago, April 11; sixth province, (To be announced); seventh province, April 13, Muehlebach Hotel, Kansas City (for Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Salina and West Missouri); seventh province, April 17, parish house, Incarnation, Dallas (for Arkansas, Dallas, New Mexico, North Texas, West Texas and Texas).

NATIONAL COUNCIL BUYS PROPERTY

★ The Presiding Bishop has announced that the National Council has signed a contract of sale for the purchase of a property in Greenwich, Conn., formerly occupied by the Deering Milliken Research Trust Company.

The property consists of a two-story brick colonial building in the heart of Greenwich. Before the purchase of this new property, the inadequacy of the facilities of the national headquarters in New York and the expansion of the program of the department of Christian education had made it necessary to divide the staff of the department. With the new building in Greenwich, the entire department can be housed in one place. Other units of the National Council will also have offices in the Greenwich building. The building provides 15,790 square feet of floor space.

HOLY TRINITY SEEKS W. H. MELISH

★ The Rev. William H. Melish was nominated as rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, by a vote of 119-11 at a meeting of the congregation on March 26th. Also at the meeting the two vestrymen who had remained opposed to the Melish regime were replaced with two pro-Melish men, thus making the vestry 100% Melish. It is expected that the vestry will carry out the wishes of the congregation by electing the younger Melish to fill the post left vacant by his father. They are expected to act at a meeting on April 16th.

The congregation also voted to recommend to the vestry that Dr. Melish be named rector-emeritus and be permitted to continue living in the rectory.

NEW BUILDINGS IN FLORIDA

★ Holy Trinity, Gainesville, is having an addition to the parish house, and St. Paul's, Jacksonville Beach, is to have a new educational unit as a part of its building program.

CHAPLAINS RECEIVE AWARDS

★ The National Council's armed forces division has received notice of the award of the Legion of Merit to two Episcopal chaplains. This award is made by direction of the President and it has been given to Chaplain (Colonel) John C. W. Linsley, air chaplain in the far east air forces, and Chaplain (Colonel) Wallace I. Wolverton, also air chaplain in the fifth air force.

CHURCH AFFILIATIONS OF SENATORS

★ There are 19 Methodists, 14 Episcopalians and a like number of Presbyterians in the United States Senate. Of the 96 senators, 85 are Protestants, ten are Roman Catholics and one is a Jew. The House likewise has more Methodists than any other Church. The proportion of Protestant and Roman Catholic members is about the same as in the Senate.

SOMETHING NEW IN MEETINGS

★ Something new in the way of meetings was sponsored by the diocese of Washington recently—one for parish secretaries; those girls who do so much of the work and get so little of the credit. It was held at Church House. Virginia Patton, secretary of Bishop Dun, spoke and there were also addresses by department heads outlining their work. But the chief purpose of the luncheon and meeting that followed was fellowship.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Dean Paul Roberts of Denver backs FIP Bill; William H. Melish overwhelming choice of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, congregation to succeed his father as rector; Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity, Boston, to teach at Wellesley Conference

CANTERBURY CLUB SERVICES

★ The Canterbury Clubs of the dioceses of Maryland are sponsoring Sunday afternoon services at the Epiphany. Speakers of successive Sundays, starting April 1st, will be Douglas Turnbull, former president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Frances Young, director of education at the Redeemer, Baltimore; the Rev. C. Edward Berger, rector of St. Anne's, Annapolis; J. H. E. Catlin, president of the council of lay readers of the diocese; the Rev. Leonard Detweiler, Congregationalist who is head of the YM at Johns Hopkins; the Rev. Hunter Wyatt-Brown, rector of Holy Nativity, Baltimore.

LECTURES IN LENT AT DUNDEE

★ Prof. Noah Fehl of Seabury-Western Seminary gave a course of five lectures on "personalities from five great religions" on Tuesday evening in Lent at St. James, Dundee, Ill. He is a former Baptist minister who was ordained deacon last November by Bishop Conkling. The Rev. Murray W. Dewart is the rector of the parish.

BUFFALO CATHEDRAL PLANS CHAPEL

★ St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, is raising $55,000 for improvements in the cathedral house. A children's chapel, seating 80, is planned for the first floor and five new classrooms and two new parish offices for the second floor. A part of the sum has already been raised and it was hoped by Dean McNairy that the balance would come in the Easter offering.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION EXPANDS

★ The department of Christian education of the National Council, now with a staff of seventeen executives, headed by the Rev. John Heuss, plans to expand before this year is over. A new person will be added to the children's division; an associate editor of the preparation of high school materials will join the staff; a clergyman will be added to head the preparatory school division, and three persons will form another leadership training team.

It is also announced that the department will have its own division of publications to print, promote and distribute all of the educational publications of the department.

NEW CHURCH PLANNED FOR HOUSTON

★ The Church of St. John the Divine, Houston, Texas, where the Rev. Thomas W. Sumners is rector, is now raising $600,000 for a new church. George N. Allen is the chairman of the committee to raise the money.

PARISH HOUSE AT WABAN

★ The Church of the Good Shepherd, Waban, Mass., is now constructing a $60,000 addition to the parish house, the growth of the church school and other activities making it necessary. The Rev. Stanley W. Ellis is rector.

E. E. F. MEETS IN BOSTON

★ The Rev. Charles D. Kean, president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, was the speaker at a meeting of the Massachusetts chapter at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, on April 3rd. His subject was "Some vital questions facing the Church."

COLLEGE WORK PLANS FACULTY MEETING

★The college work division of the National Council has announced three institutes for faculty members this year, to be held at Prescott City, DeKoven Foundation at Racine, Wis., and at Hampton College.

BISHOP SCARLETT LEADS RETREAT

★ The Auxiliary of the diocese of Missouri will have a retreat May 23-24 at Steelville, with Bishop Scarlett as leader.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NOW HAS 102 CHAPLAINS

★ There are now 102 Episcopal clergymen who are serving as chaplains with the armed forces. A number of others have been endorsed for active duty and are now in the process of reporting. "Endorsed," according to Bishop Louttit, chairman of the National Council's armed forces division, means that applicants are screened so that a considerable time elapses before he can report. He also told of anticipated increased expenses for pension premiums, discretionary funds, portable altars, printing a new edition of the armed forces Prayer Book, service crosses, travel.

MISSION SALARIES INCREASED

★ The cost of living has reached such a high level that the council of the diocese of Los Angeles raised the salaries of mission clergy, retroactive to March 1. The new rates are in addition to the 20% increase paid last year. The council also voted to pay travelling expenses for clergymen being brought into the diocese from eastern points to fill 14 mission vacancies.

RELEASED TIME SCHOOL

★ An excused-time class of 90 children from nearby public schools meets at Grace Church, Syracuse, N. Y. The directors are the Rev. Walter Parker of St. Philip's and Kenneth Kindelsperger, instructor in sociology as Syracuse University. Ten students of the University are teaching.

NASHOTAH CHOIR MAKES RECORD

★ The schola cantorum of Nashotah Seminary has made a recording of the Missa de Angelis in English. The record will assist choir directors and organists in illustrating the proper method of singing plainsong. The entire setting is on one record (78 r.p.m.) and may be ordered from the seminary, Nashotah, Wis., for $2.50.

NOTED COMPOSER IS CONFIRMED

★ Roy Harris, one of America's leading composers, and Mrs. Harris, concert pianist, were confirmed recently at the chapel of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn. The rite was administered by Bishop Hunter Wyatt-Brown, retired bishop of Harrisburg, who now lives at Sewanee. The composer is the director of the Cumberland Forest Festival.

SUMMER SCHOOL AT SHATTUCK

★ Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn, is to have a school this summer, June 18- July 28, which will be a combined school and camp. It offers boys an opportunity not only to strengthen themselves academically and of broadening their horizons under the stimulus of regular Shattuck masters, but of enjoying almost every type of summertime recreation as well.

FEP BILL BACKED BY ROBERTS

★ Dean Paul Roberts of St. John's Cathedral, Denver, was one of a hundred Colorado clergymen to back a fair employment practices bill for the state. The legislature approved a measure setting up such laws for state, county and municipal governments, and there is hope that the law will be extended to private business when the legislature reconvenes in January.

SEWANEE ANNOUNCES CONFERENCE

★ The Sewanee summer conference will be held July 1-8, with "the Church's faith" as its theme. This affair, primarily for lay people will be immediately followed by a clergy conference. The Rev. Clarence R. Haden Jr. of Durham, N. C., is the director.

PARISH CONDUCTS SURVEY

★ Trinity parish, Norfolk, Nebr., has undertaken a complete survey of the city to discover the sections where people are not being reached by the church. It is hoped that from it will come a plan for local missionary work.

LEXINGTON PLANS NEW WORK

★ Bishop William R. Moody of the diocese of Lexington has announced plans for new churches in promising and fast-growing areas. Study is now being made concerning the establishment of new congregations in the city of Lexington, in northern Kentucky, and perhaps in the Ashland area. One new congregation has already been established at Hazard which is receiving support from the diocese.

CONCORD CONFERENCE AT LENOX SCHOOL

★ The conference of the province of New England, usually held at Concord, N. H., will meet this year, June 17-23, at Lenox School, Lenox, Mass.

BAPTISMS IN PRISON IN JAPAN

★ An interesting and valuable piece of work is being done in the Osaka Prison by the Rev. John M. Kikawada. Mr. Kikawada, who is director of the Toko-Gakuen orphanage, Osaka diocese, was appointed visiting chaplain of the prison after the war, by Bishop Peter S. Yanagihara. Since that time, Mr. Kikawada has been visiting the prison regularly and taking the gospel to the prisoners, of whom there are now about 5,500, and giving spiritual guidance and comfort wherever possible. Many of the prisoners are very young men, and many will still be quite young when they have paid their debt to society and take their places in the world outside. The influence of the Christian teaching received while in prison will unquestionably help and strengthen them at that critical period.

Mr. Kikawada held his first service of baptism for the prisoners in 1949 when 8 were baptized; the second service was in May, 1950, when he baptized 11, and on January, 1951, he baptized 10 more prisoners.

An unusual feature of these services is that the baptisms are by immersion, at the special request of the prisoners, and are conducted in a pool within the prison grounds. The months of December and January are quite cold in Osaka, and even May, while mild is by no means always warm, so that these services require considerable fortitude on the part both of the prisoners and the chaplain.

CONFERENCES AT CUTTINGTON

★ Over one hundred teachers visited Cuttington College, Liberia, for the teachers' institute of the central province. Each year teachers gather for two weeks at the close of the department of public instruction for refresher courses in teaching. Cuttington College was the host. About 60 of the teachers lived on the campus. Several faculty members of the college were asked to serve as faculty for the institute.

A clergy conference was also held recently at Cuttington. Episcopal clergy were joined by

ARCHDEACON HANSON of Lexington and his step-son, Curt Winson, display their prize catch made on a vacation to Honolulu

Methodists for a joint conference, which included lectures and discussions on topics chosen for their helpfulness and interest. Bishop King of the Methodist Church spoke on the prophets, and Bishop B. W. Harris spoke on preaching.

The school year of 1951 opened with a larger student body and faculty. The student body now numbers 29, including one theological student and several pre-theological students. Since the new Cuttington has been in operation only three years, there is as yet no senior class. The first class to graduate will be in 1952. The teaching faculty now numbers 11.

NEBRASKA RAISES MISSION SALARIES

★ The department of missions of the diocese of Nebraska has increased the minimum salary for mission clergy from $2400 to $3000, plus a house, and made it retroactive to January 1st. It was said that a man who in 1940 made $5000 a year would now have to get $9,030 to maintain the same living standards.

RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS EXEMPTED FROM FREEZE

★ Religious, educational and charitable institutions which are tax-exempt under federal law will be exempted from the present nation-wide "wage freeze," the wage stabilization board has ruled.

The exemption means that religious groups can raise the salaries of their ministers, parish workers and other employees, without consulting the board for approval.

In addition to affecting churches the exemption applies to hospitals, schools, colleges and other religious-affiliated organizations.

Wage Board chairman, Cyrus S. Ching, in making the announcement, said that members of the board had unanimously approved regulation No. 7 embodying the exemption. The action received the blessing of Economic Stabilization officials.

WELLESLEY CONFERENCE ANNOUNCES PLANS

★ Two Witness editors are on the faculty of the Wellesley Conference which will be held this year from June 24th through the 30th. The chaplain will be the Rev. Benjamin Minifie, rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J., and Massey H. Shepherd Jr., Witness columnist, will give a course of the worship of the Church.

Others to give courses are Prof. John O. Nelson of Yale Divinity School; the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris of Trinity, Boston; the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, rector of St. Phillip's, New York; the Rev. Alfred B. Starrett, rector at Stockbridge, Mass.; the Rev. Charles W. F. Smith, newly appointed professor at the Episcopal Theological School.

SHELTON HALE BISHOP to give course at Wellesley Conference

Also the Rev. Robert L. Curry, headmaster of Lenox School; Canon F. Richard Williams of Washington; and the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge.

In the Christian education division the courses will be given by the Rev. Victor Hoag, director of education for the diocese of New Jersey; Mrs. Harold C. Kelleran, director of education for the diocese of Washington; the Rev. David R. Hunter who heads the department in Massachusetts. Youth activities will be in charge of the Rev. James F. Madison, rector of St. Paul's, Holyoke, Mass.

The school of church music, always a feature of the Wellesley Conference, will have courses by Lowell P. Beveridge, organist at Columbia University; Ray Brown, director of music at the General Seminary; Edward B. Gammons, director of music at Groton.

SELF-CRITICISM IN PARISH

★ St. Paul's, Waco, Texas, has been going in for self-criticism. Each Monday evening a group of leaders of the parish meet for a round-table seminar on various phases of parish life. The result is that the parish is building up facts on which to plan a long-range and well-thought-out program.

CANTERBURY CLUBS MEET IN NEW YORK

★ The Canterbury Clubs of the diocese of New York met March 31-April 1 at the synod house to organize a student commission to represent the diocese in the newly-formed national association. In charge of the program were Prof. Adelaide Simpson of Hunter College; Katharine Duffield, secretary of college work for the province; John Morris of Columbia; the Rev. Norman Spicer, chaplain to Episcopal students for the diocese.

DEAN PAUL ROBERTS TO SPEAK

★ Dean Paul Roberts of St. John's Cathedral, Denver, is to be the speaker at the annual dinner held in connection of the convention of the diocese of Nebraska, meeting May 9-10 at Fremont. Bishop Brinker will give his annual address the evening of the 9th at a service at St. James Church.

Unholy Week

GAMBLING took over the headlines Holy Week and thereafter as millions in the east watched Costello and company the TV way. It was an unholy week in its exposure of the extent of gambling in this country and its tie-in with politicians. Churches might be having their seasonal services, and the open sore still running in Korea—but this other was the real show on the American stage. Coming as it did on top of the basketball scandals, the average citizen had plenty to think about. How far into the body of the nation does this kind of corruption reach? Are we suffering a moral breakdown in America?

The Church might feel some justification in having long since refused to have any traffic with gambling as an easy way to raise funds. Some of us have been called cranks and narrow-minded because we banned door prizes, raffles, bingo and the like at church fairs. We have been asked more than once, "what is the harm of it?" Today the answer is plain to everyone. Gambling puts a premium on the acquisitive instinct and a get-something-for-nothing philosophy of life. It causes the weak brother to fall into an insidious habit. It winds up in police corruption and gangsterism. To encourage it in even so-called harmless ways is to do a disservice to our people, and to foster a malignant growth in our national life. Let all clergy please take note.

It should also be confessed, of course, that we too share in the responsibility for what has come out in the open of recent weeks. We together with other citizens have been generally apathetic and indifferent. If the Christians of this country did not want organized gambling and meant it—they could go a long way towards stopping it very quickly. Such a decision would cost something in the way of money, moral determination and cooperation, but it could be done. Meanwhile let us have nothing to do with gambling of any kind in our churches and in our communities.

"QUOTES"

THE fear of heresy arises in periods of great social and institutional change. In such periods, dominant elements in a society develop a morbid fear of ideas. To them any discontent, any protest, any resistance cannot be bona fide; it must be caused by "agitation." This fixation leads to a drive for total conformity achieved by the suppression, as heresy, of nonconforming ideas, opinions and attitudes.

Legal Gambling No Cure

TO legalize gambling still would not eliminate the accompanying abuses, vices, and racketeering. This is the conclusion drawn by Virgil W. Peterson, operating director of the Chicago crime commission, in his new book, "Gambling—Should It Be Legalized?," just released.

According to Mr. Peterson history reveals that wherever widespread gambling exists, lawlessness is general and official corruption commonplace, whether gambling is licensed or is operating under cover.

Writing in the book's foreword, Fred E. Inbau, Northwestern professor of law, says, "The factual information revealed by Mr. Peterson affords uncontrovertible proof that the existence of organized gambling in any community is incompatible with the existence of good government in that community."

Legalization of gambling in the United States has failed completely, Mr. Peterson asserts. In many instances, he says, the gambling business operator under the sanction of law got completely out of hand.

"The racketeer element obtained vast political power and wealth. In most instances the abuses under gambling license laws enacted by various states were so great that the people repealed them. Police departments that could not efficiently suppress the business of gambling when it was illegal were, if anything, even more helpless under a licensing setup. On some occasions metropolitan areas attracted criminals from all over the United States, and lawlessness generally prevailed on a large scale."

The crime commission director points out that over a period of years Chicago and other cities which have been the center of extensive gambling activities have also had generally a high murder, robbery and burglary rate. If gambling could be licensed, Mr. Peterson argues, it should be completely controlled and operated by the state with all the profits accruing to the people. He adds that a state agency should then be set up to operate and control the gambling business and a commissioner of gambling elected directly by the people.

But even a plan of this kind would fail, Mr. Peterson asserts. "Sooner or later political machines would gain control and operate state gambling for the benefit of politicians. State gambling would encourage mass gambling with its attending social and economic evils in the same manner as other forms of legal gambling."

The solution to the problem, according to the crime expert, is not to be found in anything as simple as a correct determination of the licensing question. "Strong, virile, progressive law enforcement agencies that are not subject to the control of the dominant political organization are absolutely essential if any society is to receive adequate protection against gambling and corruption," Mr. Peterson concludes.

Forgiving Our Enemies

BY

FRANCIS JOHN MOORE
Editor of Forward-Day-by-Day

THE forgiveness of sins is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian creed. It is found in the Apostles' Creed stated in just those simple terms. It is in the Nicene Creed, and is there associated with baptism. It was part of the Apostolic gospel that forgiveness of sins was to be had through and in Christ. It was also fundamental in the teaching of Jesus; he gives it a place in the prayer he taught his disciples, and he himself dispensed forgiveness acting on God's behalf.

But it is to be remarked that our Lord never taught forgiveness in unrelated simplicity: without limitations or conditions. There was one condition especially attached to it, and very gravely attached to it: the temper or the spirit of forgiveness in the one who prayed for it. Immediately after he had taught them his prayer, and on several other occasions, Jesus solemnly warned the disciples of the futility of praying for forgiveness unless they themselves had forgiven or were willing to forgive those who had done wrong to them. I need not labor this point. God's forgiveness of us, and our forgiveness of our fellow-men, are inextricably bound together; to be forgiven we must forgive. And there can be no half-measures. If God is to wipe the slate clean for us, we must wipe the slate clean for others. "If you do not . . . neither will your heavenly Father . . ."

Meaning of Forgiveness

SO we come to the inevitable question: what is is that is really demanded of us? What does forgiveness on the human level mean? What is involved in it in one man's relations with another, in life in society, in the larger field of international conflicts?

There are some who appear to take the view that forgiveness is a very simple thing. A man asks you to forgive him, and you forgive him. Indeed, whether he asks to be forgiven or not, you forgive him or have forgiven him already; and there stands nothing between you; as if he had never offended you at all. But forgiveness is not really as simple as all that.

Let us look at it first from the private or personal side. The word "enemies" is perhaps a little harsh for all the people who offend us; but our Lord used it, and we may regard it as inclusive of all shades of offense from mere misdemeanor to positive animosity. An "enemy" might be no more than an offending relation, or anybody on the other side in a quarrel, or (to use the Psalmist's word) a blood-thirsty man who is seeking our ruin. The forgiveness of our enemies applies to one and all alike.

Very well, if it is not a simple matter, what is it? We should have been spared a good deal of loose thinking on the subject if it had always been recognized that forgiveness is not a one-way affair. It does not consist in the mere overlooking, the forgetting, the regarding as not-having-been-done, the wrong that has been done; it has to do not only with the restoration of human relationships when divisive behavior on one side has broken them, but also with an effective check upon moral evil and the regeneration of personal character. There is nothing in Christ's teaching on forgiveness, as I read it, that calls upon us to regard any evil-doer as if he were not an evil-doer; to look upon inflicted suffering whether of mind or body, upon crime and cruelty, as something never to be reprimanded or punished; to regard it as a duty never to hold anything that has been done to one as an obstacle to friendly relations, quite irrespective of any apparent or admitted change of heart or mind on the part of the offender. Whatever that way of dealing with offenses may be called, it is a complete misunderstanding of forgiveness in the Christian sense, and it is also, I believe, a quite mistaken way of dealing with offenders.

C. F. Andrews

THERE is a very interesting and illuminating commentary on the point I am trying to make in C. F. Andrews' book on the Sermon on the Mount.* Andrews was a pacifist, and a saint if ever there was one. I knew him, and I don't think I am wrong in saying that at one time his view of forgiveness would, in the main, be the one I have rejected. He was working at the time in the slums of London, and was doing his best to regenerate a man "who had sunk to the lowest depths of intemperance." Everything that could be done was done to help the man, but without success. One day a silver communion set, given to Andrews on his ordination, was missing, and it turned out later that this man had stolen it. On this discovery, says Andrews, he decided, after search for guidance, to turn the man over to the police. After a month in prison the man came back, and later, rapid consumption having set in, he was put in a hospital. Andrews visited him, and on one occasion asked him, no doubt in agony of mind, whether he thought he (Andrews) had done the right thing that night in taking him to the police station. The man said "Yes, sir; that was the turning point of my life." He died not long afterwards. Andrews records the incident, he says, "in order to explain quite simply how the keeping of the letter of Christ's commandment has at times to be carefully avoided if we would seek to fulfill his spirit . . . If I had attempted that night . . . to take Christ's words too literally, I should have done more harm than good . . . The Truest way to 'forgive' . . . was really to put him under restraint and charge him with theft and then bear the burden of the punishment as far as I could along with him. Yet what a strange way of forgiveness!"

Not One Way Affair

THIS story makes clear what I said a moment ago: forgiveness is not a one way affair; there are, and always must be, two sides to it: there is the side of the offender as well as the side of the offended. Our Lord said so much about the offended's side, and said it so emphatically, because he knew that to be forgiving is about the hardest thing the human heart has to learn. But he never said anything to suggest that forgiveness was simply a matter of forgiving: that the offender was not involved in the act and had no part to play in it. On the contrary, it is definitely stated, and always implied, that the offender has something to do before forgiveness can be made actual, before the offended can fruitfully forgive. In other words, forgiveness is conditioned; and its condition is repentance, which means, in the New Testament, not only a sincere acknowledgment of a wrong done, but also a moral change in heart and mind. Where this is absent, complete forgiveness is impossible, as well between man and man as between God and man. To try to do otherwise — to forgive without repentance — is neither required of us as Christians, nor is it good religion or sound morals. To do that is to condone evil, to encourage the blurring of distinctions between right and wrong.

St. Luke sums up the teaching of our Lord on the subject in a sentence: "If thy brother repent, forgive him. And if he turn to thee seven times in a day saying 'I repent,' thou shalt forgive him." (17:4).

Forgiveness follows repentance: repentance is the condition of forgiveness.

I think that perhaps the point at which confusion has arisen has been the identification of a readiness to forgive—a forgiveness already given in the heart, so to speak—and the completed act which depends not on one party alone but on both. Our Lord, of course, did insist on his disciples having the spirit of forgiveness always in their hearts. Neither grudge-bearing nor animosity nor a spirit of revenge could have lodgment there. Already the enemy must have been forgiven in the will, for only so could repentance on his side bring actual forgiveness. But we need to distinguish between forgiveness in the will—waiting to be completed—and the act of forgiveness which involves, and can only follow upon, repentance.

It is the will to forgive which is in view in the Lord's Prayer, and is the Christian's primary obligation. It is in that frame of mind that we ourselves can ask to be forgiven.

Public Aspect

LET us now turn from the private to the public aspect of our question. What is involved here in the forgiveness of our enemies? Part of our difficulty in discovering an answer is that all the teaching of Jesus on forgiveness is addressed to the individual, and has to do with the individual's personal relationships. It does not deal directly with the problem of society with respect to the criminal and the disturber of the public peace.

So we are left to work that our for ourselves —as we are left to work out so much else for ourselves, living as we do live under conditions very different from those in which Jesus lived. And in society, in community, we have developed a criminal code, a system of protection, of law and order, by means of which we deal with offenders, and punish offenders for their anti-social deeds. As a community we have found that we had to do that for the sake of the community. There could be no free, no safe community-life without it. You and I as individuals might be merciful to an individual criminal who steals our purse or burgles our house or even murders a member of our family. But society cannot be so merciful, not even if the criminal repents and prays to be let off. Society must be sure that the repentance is sincere—that there has been a definite change of life—and can only forgive (set free as in parole) when it is satisfied that the criminal has learned his lesson.

And there is really nothing inconsistent in all this with the Christian principle of forgiveness of the wrong-doer, provided that our criminal law is free from the spirit of hatred and revenge, which was, after all, the thing that our Lord was condemning and which he wanted to uproot. So long as our courts serve the ends of justice, and so long as our prisons are places of reform and rehabilitation, so long have they a rightful and a necessary place in a Christian society.

International Enemies

NOW apply this to the question as to what we as Christians ought to do with regard to our international enemies—as to what our attitude ought to be, say, towards the Russians and the Chinese if they plunge the world into a third world war.

Society has the right, and indeed the responsibility, to protect itself against "international gangsters," as it has against any other kind of gangster: to withstand, to bring to trial, and to punish, the leaders and their supporters who have brought so much suffering upon the earth. To talk about forgiveness here, before they have repented, as if such forgiveness would or could regenerate their unregenerate hearts, is to use the word without meaning. Forgiveness is not for them now, because they are not ready for it. And until they are ready for it society cannot give it, because society would be lost if it did so. Society —Christian society—must certainly stand ready to forgive, must, by good-will, seek to effect reconciliation and even, perhaps, be prepared for some humiliation in the achievement of reconciliation. But, as I see it, there is nothing in Christ's teaching or the rest of the New Testament to demand that society shall take no account of wrongs done, or regard an enemy as if he were a friend. To "love" our enemies, surely means to have irrepressible good will towards them, in spite of the fact that they are our enemies.

Here again, the essential thing is the will to forgive—a good-will that bears no malice and seeks only reconciliation and harmonious relationships. This, I believe, is the emphasis that the Church should make at the present time, and should always make whenever there are dangerous currents in our international relationships. We should not, I think, refuse to recognize our enemies, nor close our eyes to their offenses; in fact, it is only as we recognize them and see what they are doing that we can exercise that Christian spirit of good-will and reconciliation in which lies the hope of the unity of mankind. Here, I cannot but think, is the point of St. Paul's injunction in Romans 12:20—"if your enemy is hungry, feed him; if he is thirsty, give him drink; for by so doing you will heap burning coals upon his head." In other words, you will get at his conscience and bring him to repentance.

Before I close, there are two passages to be considered lest it should be thought that I had lost sight of them in working out this view of the meaning of forgiveness. I refer to our Lord's Prayer for the forgiveness of those who were nailing him to the cross (St. Luke 23:34), and Stephen's prayer for those who were stoning him to death (Acts 7:60). In each instance the request was that the evil deed should not be counted against those who had perpetrated it.

Moral theology has a word for such situations as these: invincible ignorance, in cases where a man does not know, and cannot reasonably be expected to know, that what he is doing is wrong; vincible ignorance, in cases where a man could have known better if he had taken pains to inform himself. Neither our Lord nor St. Stephen, of course, was thinking about the niceties of moral theology; but the prayer in each instance is based upon the belief that what was being done was in ignorance; that if those who were committing this crime had only known what they were doing they would not have done it. We must, therefore, take the question of ignorance into account in the consideration of forgiveness of our enemies. Where the ignorance is invincible no guilt can be attached to the evil done; and even where it is not, allowance must be made for attendant conditions.

But even so, it must be pointed out, that the evil deed—and particularly so in the case of Stephen—was the result of passion and ill-will; and before the forgiveness could have any meaning for those who were prayed for, they would have to see that their deed was evil and be so stricken with remorse for what they had done that they would repent of it and seek to be forgiven. This is, in fact, exactly the line taken by the Apostles from Pentecost on. They did not regard the crucifixion as something already forgiven our Lord's enemies because he had offered his prayer on their behalf. Far from it: they accused those responsible for it of sin against God, and urged them to repent so that their sin could be blotted out. They did, indeed, allow that if their enemies "had known, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory." But that did not keep them from preaching the necessity of their repentance as a condition of forgiveness; so evidently they did not regard those responsible for the crucifixion as entirely guiltless.

Certainly, I see no ground in these two passages for the assumption that their plea should and must be carried into every situation where wrong is being done. To do that, as I have said earlier, would be neither good religion nor sound morals. The thing that is important, and that we must carry with us always, is that divine spirit of good-will and mercy which both passages exemplify, and which is the essential mark of Christian character.

The Great Forty Days

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder and First Editor of The Witness

THE period between Easter and Ascension Day is known as "The great forty days in which Jesus taught his Apostles the things pertaining to the kingdom of heaven." What these things are, are known only in part, because the record of his teaching during this period is very meager.

What there is, seems to indicate that he was planning for the future organization of the Church.

The longest record of any definite teaching during these forty days is that recorded in the twentieth chapter of St. John.

They were assembled in an upper room for fear of the Jews and no doubt bewildered by the turn things had taken since the resurrection of Jesus.

He had appeared to St. Peter and St. John and to Mary in the garden, but there had been no definite conference with Jesus as to the future.

So into this bewildered group of Apostles, Jesus suddenly came and said unto them, "Peace be unto you." And when he had so said he showed them his hands and his sides.

Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord.

Then said Jesus unto them again, "Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me even so send I you." And when he had said this he breathed on them, and said unto them, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost, whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained."

This statement must have been as startling to that little group of bewildered and discouraged disciples as was his sudden appearance.

What did it mean? What does it mean?

A good many people are so bewildered by it that they just skip over it and attach no particular significance to it.

But significant it was and vitally important it must have been.

Two Kinds of Power

HE certainly was not bestowing upon them a personal power which they were to exercise as individuals. The thought is too palpably absurd.

There are two kinds of power bestowed upon men in the Gospels.

The one is called "dynamic" in the Greek and means the power possessed by a person who has particular talent that is his personal possession. A prophet might be said to be "dynamic."

The other was a derived power given to one who exercised some official power. This was called in the Greek—"exousia." Such is the power possessed by a sheriff in the state or by a priest in the Church.

It is evident that Christ was here bestowing a derived power upon those whom he had appointed as officers in his kingdom.

"As my Father sent me, even so send I you," could mean nothing else than this "exousia."

So we are here admitted into a glimpse of what was going on when our Lord was teaching them the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, while they were with him during those forty days.

What then does it mean?

Purpose of Church

THE creed of Christendom has been very specific in stating the purpose of the Holy Catholic Church.

We believe in the Holy Catholic Church, in which we hope to receive the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

I do not know how we could ever hope to receive these blessings unless God gave them to us through Christ, and so far as the forgiveness of sins is concerned, he encountered the anger of the Pharisees by claiming this power.

His Father had sent him to take away the sins of the world and he on this occasion was sending his apostles to do the same thing that he had been sent to do.

In other words, that is what the Church was intended to be in the world. It was to be a place to which the sinner might go in order to receive the remission of sins.

The only trouble with this view of the Church is that it is too good to be true.

Of course those who are not conscious of being sinners themselves, and who are particularly censorious toward others who commit many actual transgressions, are firmly convinced that the way of our transgressor is hard and that their forgiveness is unfair.

This was exactly the attitude of the elder brother in the parable and I am very much afraid that it is apt to be the attitude of all those highly respectable folks who justify themselves that they are righteous and despise others who are not.

This was one of the greatest obstacles which Jesus encountered. Because he ate and drank with publicans and sinners, the Pharisees murmured against him, and in the same way those who are pretty sure of the rectitude of their own conduct are very jealous of prodigals and any favor which may be shown them.

Yet, if the Church is to be that which her divine Master was to the world, then she must not scold prodigals but be ready to forgive them. In the words of the Master, "They that are whole need not a physician but they that are sick" and since ye say ye know, therefore your sin remaineth.

Up to the time of the Reformation there can be no question that this conception of the Church was universally held.

However badly the Church may have administered the grace of absolution, there was no question in the minds of all the faithful that she possessed this power.

The Church was the one institution in the world that was ever merciful to sinners and prodigals and lepers and outcasts.

Conditions the Same

THE conditions are the same; there are the elect and the outcasts, now as then. The elect look at the Church from a cultural standpoint. They have arrived at a certain stage of spiritual culture and they would like to progress further.

Like the elder brother in the parable, they have little use for those who have wasted their substance with harlots. They want to enjoy the estate of Christ's Church.

But Christ is still thinking more of the one sheep that is lost than he is of the ninety and nine who need no repentance or think that they do not.

And it is just here that the Church must confess its greatest failure.

It does not appeal very strongly to those who have gone out into a far country. The Church today isn't winsome to sinners as he was.

And the reason I fear is that we make too light of what our Lord said when he gave this commission to his apostles—and of what the Church says when she ordains us to the priesthood; for the Church is faithful to her trust even if her members are incapable of living up to that standard.

The pity of it is that priests who have been commissioned with these words, often make light of their significance.

I am not advocating here the system of the confessional as the only way in which this mission of our Lord's can be carried out.

The Church existed many centuries without that penitential system by which the reception of the holy communion must be preceded by auricular confession.

To me that is one method by which the Church met a tremendous emergency, when she was swamped by the semi-barbarian converts in the days of Charlemagne, and it remains a permissible method of dealing with sinners today.

But for good and excellent reasons the Anglican Church refused to enforce this penitential system and left it voluntary with the sinner, nor would I recommend its restoration as practiced before the Reformation, and as practiced by the Roman Church today. It has its advantages, especially in the case of those whose sins are grievous and who cannot satisfy their own conscience, but it also has its disadvantages as a mechanical system and these disadvantages are grievous.

But this is not the question which I am discussing.

The primitive Church made much of the fact that "God hath given power and commandment to his ministers to declare and pronounce to his people, being penitent, the absolution and remission of their sins."

We also perpetuate the principle in the words

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

that I have quoted, which we read sonorously every Sunday.

The Church is a hostel to which sinners are invited by our words but repelled by our failure to make these words seem real.

It is the mission of the Church to forgive sins —it is the mission of the priest to seek out the sinful that they may be forgiven. It is the mission of every Churchman to be a vehicle of pardon to the sinner with whom he comes in contact.

On Preaching To Men

BY

RICHARD R. BEASLEY
Rector of St. John's, Roanoke, Virginia

IT is needless to say that there is a vast potential of men in our parishes who are often not being reached. The women come to church regularly but not the men. Yet when the parish men are awakened and active the parish is in sound health. Therefore, it would seem wise for us preachers to aim at reaching and holding the men. But there is a technique in this and thought must be given to this matter. Incidentally, it seems safe to say that St. Peter in Acts and St. Paul in Acts and his Epistles were preaching to men. Their message is clear, pungent, hard-hitting, purposeful—the sort of message that might well appeal to men. The early Church thus went after the men, why should not we?

I count myself fortunate in facing each Sunday a congregation in which men predominate. I have often pondered on this matter of preaching that is aimed at men and I offer the following considerations for what value they may possess.

Men are not normally philosophers. They deal in their business with tangible matters and they bring that same mentality to church. Therefore, the message they respond to is a practical, livable message. What they want is preeminently something to live by, something they can use, something that helps them live up to their highest idealism. That means, first, that the sermon should start where they are. It should be transparently something with which they deal in their actual life. Pretty, philosophic themes leave them behind. In fact, I am convinced that men are wary of rhetoric. Indeed, I recall three instances where parish preachers were gifted men of high literary learning and skill and their sermons were literary masterpieces and they were each followed by a man with a more blunt message and delivery, not so polished but earnest and hard-hitting, and in each instance the second man drew larger congregations than the first.

Common Ground

What we are referring to is what Beecher called "the common ground"—a theme or subject that is rooted in persons' lives and immediately common to them. A sermon with that solid, practical, realistic beginning is bound to accomplish a worthy result. That means that the subjects are known and familiar ones, not some rare and esoteric matter that might tease the curiosity of a scholar or an academician but is seldom tangential to an average, cross section congregation. One recalls here a comment of Robert Browning: "The real God-function is to provide a motive and power for doing what we already know." That sermon should be clear; it should get somewhere; it should get to the point and make that point inescapably luminous. "What's he driving at?" should be an unnecessary question. Richard C. Borden in a book called "Public Speaking As Listeners Like It," not without drollery, flavored with wisdom, states that this should be the outline of the speech—reflecting the attitude of the audience. 1. "Ho hum!" 2. "Why bring that up?" 3. "For instance!" 4. "So what!" If that be true, a sermon for men should seek to elucidate one large point, not many. When the development of a speech becomes involved in rhetorical or logical niceties it is obvious that men lose interest. Their whole training and experience is not for that kind of audition.

Bible Centered

THEN I am convinced that men respond to, indeed devour Bible-centered preaching. They want, then, expository preaching, for this is tried and tested, comes with immense authority and strikes at their soul's center. Men say to the preacher, 'By what authority sayeth thou these things?" If that authority is the Bible, they are content. What could be a sounder instinct than this fondness for the Bible? Tragically, Bible centered preaching is all too seldom heard from our pulpits.

Now how shall the theme be developed? There has been no more effective preacher in America than Henry Ward Beecher. He early made a study of the great masters of speech. In his studies he found Cicero's classic "De Oratore," surely one of the best discussions of homiletics! Cicero said that an address should appeal to the mind and intelligence; to the conscience and moral faculty; to the heart and sentiments and emotions. That is a wonderfully effective division of a sermon, instead of the stale and unrealistic "three point!" For thus the sermon touches the whole personality. Yet so many sermons aim only at the mind. The moral faculty is unchallenged and the emotions are unaroused.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Let the preacher then follow the sequence—elucidate his theme carefully and clearly, expounding its Biblical meaning, indeed having a broad scriptural opening. Then let him apply it to himself and his people showing how far they are from its realization, how they repudiate it or ignore it. A hard blow at the conscience, this is, and no sword thrusts any deeper. The sermon has left a sting, as Coleridge would say, and that is one way to guarantee its being remembered. More than once I have heard people say, "I go to church to be waked up, challenged, humbled and told how far away I am from the path I ought to be walking." That is a sound and healthy insight.

I recall attending a large and nationally famous church in a great metropolis. The preacher is widely known. I was struck first by the large number of women — middle-aged women — who were present and the modicum of men. Then as I listened to the sermon I could understand why. It was the "comfortable gospel" in essence. It was tender and full of grace, and all sermons should possess that heavenly quality, but there was no appeal to the masculine or red-blooded, no thrust at the Christian conscience, nothing in it to "rebuke" or "exhort," to use St. Paul's words. Virile men were repelled by that presentation of the manly gospel of the Christ of St. Mark. And surely no young people would be captivated or held. Again I heard a friend of mine make this incisive observation of a national radio preacher after attending his church. "It was the palatable gospel."

Strong Diet

MEN want stronger preaching diet than that. For if the truth be known there is no accident in the vocabulary of the athlete and the soldier that writers in the New Testament employ. "I keep under my body and bring it under subjection" (wrestling). "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air" (boxing). "So run that ye may obtain a heavenly prize," (track). "We are compassed about (as runners in the stadium with a vast crowd looking on) by so great a crowd of witnesses." "The peace of God stands sentinel over your hearts"—and, "Put on the whole armour of God"—both references are to soldiering.

So there will be a challenge to the manhood, to the heroic in men and women. There is a steel-element in the gospels. "Are ye able?" "Take up thy cross and follow me," etc. The sermon should take this into account and following Cicero's second point is a good way to do that.

But a third element is an appeal to the heart, the emotions, the sentiments. Every human being is full of sentiment and men particularly. The emotions are the great drives of life. Life is motivated chiefly by the emotions—how dare we preachers overlook this elementary fact? This element will bring what Beecher would call "the lunge" into preaching. It drives the sermon home. It is the element of grace as the second is the element of judgment. Jesus' parables possessed both. If we are deeply moved, our men hearing us will be deeply moved. Remember Romeo and Juliet?: "Thou canst not speak of that thou dost not feel." What does Horace say?: "Si vis me flere, dolendum est, primum ipsi tibi." This is a priceless opportunity for illustrations. And where should they derive?—from life, not from books. Our illustrations are sure to be vivid and valid if we draw them out of the life of the everyday, work-a-day world.

Authority

FINALLY, this is axiomatic, men want the preacher to preach with authority. They want him to deal with that which he is absolutely familiar and about which he is absolutely convinced. They do not want to hear his doubts but rather his faiths. So many of us, as Dwight Moody sagely observed, preach as though a sceptic were looking over our shoulder. Men want to hear our convictions. So Beecher's advice is good: "Don't preach on themes about which you are half-convinced." And Emerson is right, too: "Don't argue; repeat the assertion." There is abundant material in the gospel about which a man Sunday by Sunday can be utterly positive without his having to deal in hesitations or uncertainties. David Hume, the agnostic, used to arise at day-break to hear George Whitefield preach to the colliers. "I thought you didn't believe in Christ," someone said to him. "I don't, but this man does." That is what men want, for the truth is that all through the week their doubts and their weaknesses and hesitations are constantly appealed to. On Sunday they want certainty and faith proclaimed; they will respond to that, too.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Roman Road. By George Lamb. Sheed & Ward. $2.25.

This is the story of an intelligent son of a Manchester "working class" family who, winning a scholarship to Cambridge, felt frustrated by the alleged absence of roots and convictions among his fellow-students and generally in pre-war Britain. On graduation he was unable to find employment as a qualified teacher. Lamb was a conscientious objector during the war. There is no tangible hint of his somewhat sudden interest in the Roman Catholic Church and subsequent conversion until almost the end of the autobiography. He finally became a teacher after years of inner turmoil and market gardening.—L. C. Tombs.

The Aeneid of Virgil. A Verse Translation by Rolfe Humphries. Scribner. $3.50.

Virgil is the most beloved pagan poet known to Christians—his was a "soul naturally Christian." For those who do not read Latin readily (which is 999 in every 1000!) this swift-moving modern verse translation is just the thing. No educated person should be kept from knowing Virgil by the mere barrier of language!

Spiritualism, Reincarnation, and Immortality. By Marcus Knight. Macmillan. $1.25.

This book offers a careful discussion of the problems involved. The author starts from the sad fact that today "God is dead for many." Can "spiritualism" restore faith? Opinions, arguments, evidences are sifted. However, this is not only and not mainly a question of scientific experiment, but of religious conviction. Spiritualism is a kind of peculiar religion which has something in common with Christianity, but on the whole is much inferior and outright superstitious. "Where a man has a convinced Christian faith, he does not feel any desire to gain further assurances from spiritualism" (p. 104). But "Christians have failed to teach and live their own faith: spiritualism (i. e. communication with the deceased by the instrumentality of mediums) is in part a judgment of God upon them for this omission" (p. 107).—Richard Kroner.

For Goodness Sake. By William Lawson. Sheed & Ward. $2.25.

This is an engaging book on the old theme, so often discredited that virtue is its own reward and a rich one. The author wrote the book, he says, because he "wanted to test a theory that the beauty of revealed Truth is more attractive to modern eyes when she is in modern dress. She would be allowed a new outfit oftener than has been the custom." Our thanks to Father Lawson for a good dress-making job.—R. T. F.

Deep is the Hunger. By Howard Thurman. Harper. $2.50.

A richly rewarding book of meditations of deep spiritual insight. In an intimate, personal way the author is able to make simple words and homely illustrations glow with new meaning, bringing the reader into the presence of God and revealing God as always near to heal and to bless. —R. T. F.

The Theology of Albert Schweitzer. By E. N. Mozley. Macmillan. $2.00.

A summary of Albert Schweitzer's theology in the form of quotations from his works. The second part of the book is an epilogue by Dr. Schweitzer himself, on "The Conception of the Kingdom of God in the Transformation of Eschatology."

By the Finger of God. By S. Vernon McCasland. Macmillan. $2.75.

This is a brilliant study of demon possession and exorcism in early Christianity, in the light of modern views of mental illness—a subject of immense and increasing interest at the present time. The volume has an introduction by David Cole Wilson, who is Professor of Psychiatry and Neurology at Virginia University.

Gospel Picture Books. Macmillan. 25c each.

Here is the "gospel in art." These booklets contain nothing but beautiful colored pictures with a minimum of explanation. They were done by an artist (Elsie Anna Wood), who has studied Palestinian scenery, costume, and customs. For example, the characters all have their heads covered—people in Palestine never go bareheaded. The series is a valuable addition to current religious education literature.

BOOKS RECEIVED:

Francois de Fenelon. By Katharine Day Little. Harper. $3.50.

A study of the personality of this spiritual guide.

Chats from a Minister's Library. By Wilbur M. Smith. Wilde. $2.50.

Radio broadcasts from the library of a learned and catholic-minded fundamentalist.

Dynamic Worship Programs for Young People. By Letitia W. Wood. Wilde. $1.75.

Edifying "life-raft" type—we prefer the Prayer Book.

A Solovyov Anthology. Edited by S. L. Frank. Scribners. $3.50.

A well-rounded anthology drawn from the writings of one of the great seminal minds of the 19th century.

St. Paul's Gospel. By Ronald Knox. Sheed and Ward. $1.75.

What St. Paul tells us of Christ, the exalted Lord.

Moses. By A. A. Williamson. Philosophical Library. $4.75.

The Word Accomplished. By A. B. Christopher. Philosophical Library. $3.75.

The Story of St. Francis. By Elizabeth Grierson. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.50.

A simply written, beautifully printed, and well-illustrated account of the life of St. Francis.

A Shorter Service Book of the Christian Faith. By G. W. Briggs. Oxford Univ. Press. $1.00.

A beautifully printed short Prayer Book with Psalms and Hymns, and an Order of Service based upon Morning Prayer.

Our Family Worships Together. Natl. Council of the P. E. Church. 25c.

This is a beautiful little manual of family devotion—including hymns and tunes—and ought to be widely useful.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

EASTER MASS IN MOSCOW

Roman Catholic diplomatic personnel attended an Easter Mass in Moscow, celebrated by the Rev. John O. Brassard, American-born member of the Assumption Fathers. It was held at the Italian embassy. Other members of the diplomatic corps attended Good Friday and Easter services in the American embassy, where the services were conducted by the Rev. Sidney Linto, chaplain to the British legation in Helsinki, Finland, who was visiting in Moscow.

TREND TO MOSLEM STATE IN INDONESIA

The Christian community in Indonesia is becoming increasingly concerned over a government tendency to favor Islam above other religions. It is feared that the government is aiming at the creation of a Moslem state. Charges have been voiced by Christians that the religion ministry has freely allocated funds to Islamic institutions. Christian representatives are expected to assail this policy when the budget of the religion ministry comes up in parliament in about a month.

The government also has been charged with failing to suppress the Darul Islam, a militant Moslem group that has been making the eastern part of West Java unsafe for Indonesian Christians.

The Darul Islam fighting unit, reportedly many thousands strong, comprises fanatical Moslems who seek to achieve an all-Mosley Indonesian state by illegal and revolutionary means. Reports here said the unit continuously burns down villages, kidnaps local authorities and perpetrates murder on a large scale.

ARCHBISHOP LEHTONEN OF FINLAND DIES

Archbishop Aleksi Emanuel Lehtonen, Primate of the Lutheran Church of Finland since 1945, died at the age of 59 after a long illness. He was known for his efforts to strengthen the ties of the Finnish Church with the Lutheran Churches of the Scandinavian countries and the Church of England. He also was active in social work, and was the author of several volumes on liturgy and Church law.

POLAND ABOLISHES FOUR HOLY DAYS

A new law has been enacted in Poland abolishing four Roman Catholic holy days, a report revealed. Holy days are days on which Catholics are bound in conscience to attend Mass. The holy days affected by the law are Candlemas Day on Feb. 2; Ascension Day; the Feast of SS. Peter and Paul on June 29; and the Feast of the Immaculate Conception on Dec. 8.

Following the adoption of the new law, Archbishop Stefan Wyszynski of Warsaw, Primate of Poland, issued a statement declaring that evening instead of morning services will be held in Catholic churches on the four holy days, "depending on local conditions."

It was reported that Archbishop Wyszynski is planning to visit the Vatican shortly to discuss problems of Church-state relations in Poland. He is expected to request the Pope to grant a temporary indult which would release Polish Catholics from their Mass obligations on the four state-outlawed feast days.

POLISH CATHOLIC HIERARCHY IS ATTACKED

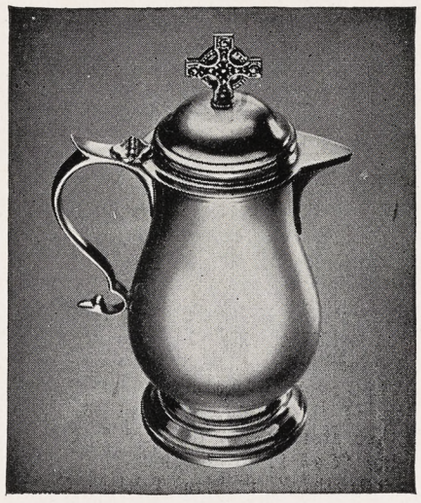
A sharp attack on the Roman Catholic hierarchy for its failure to carry out terms of an agreement with the government was made last week in a Warsaw paper. The paper declared that the agreement, made last April, had committed the bishops actively to oppose the revisionist campaign which, it said, is being led by "the reactionary Catholic clergy in Western Germany" in regard to the so-called "recovered territories" in western Poland formerly belonging to Germany.

HUNGARIAN CATHOLICS GET WARNING

A warning has been served on the Roman Catholic hierarchy in Hungary that the government cannot continue "to shut its eyes to offenses by priests" against the Church-state agreement signed last year.

PROTESTANT MISSIONARY EXPELLED FROM CHINA

Henry A. Poppen, Reformed Church in America missionary, has been expelled from China, according to an announcement by the Peiping radio. He was director of Palmage College and Union Hospital in Changchow. The radio charged that Mr. Poppen, who comes from Sioux Center, Iowa, had "a long history of venomous opposition to the Chinese people," and said his expulsion had been demanded at a mass-meeting in Changchow attended by 10,000 persons.



Listing "offenses" committed by Mr. Poppen, the station said he used his position as chairman of the international relief commission during the Sino-Japanese war to help the Japanese and was responsible for forcing "several hundred young people to serve them as gunfodder." The station also claimed that he handed over "six patriots whom the Japanese wanted to kill."

In addition, the radio went on, Mr. Poppen violated the law of the new People's Republic of China by selling and transferring part of the property of Palmage College.

It said the missionary spread rumors that a third world war was imminent and opposed the movement for an independent Christian Church in China by removing one of the movement's supporters from Changtung.

ORTHODOX CHURCH PLANNED FOR CZECHOSLOVAKIA

The government of Czechoslovakia, according to Vatican sources, is working not merely for a schism in the Roman Church but hopes ultimately to create a Latin rite Orthodox Church. It would be affiliated with the Russian Orthodox Church.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

Selected by GEORGE MACMURRAY

A GUY NAMED JOE:—Simeon Stylites, the fictitious "letter to the editor writer" in The Christian Century tells a good story. An Armenian named Joe had the finest lamb in all Armenia. It had the longest and softest fleece. It was such a prize lamb that Joe's wicked neighbors tried to steal it. Joe saw them coming, took the lamb and barracked himself in his cabin. In defending himself and his prize lamb he began shooting at the robbers, first from the window on the east, then from the window on the west, then back to the east again. Each time he crossed the room he tripped over the lamb and fell. Finally in desperation he kicked the lamb outside and went on fighting.

Mr. Stylites tells us that it is a good story for the United States to remember. He then pointed up:

From where I sit it looks like an accurate picture of a democracy in a war situation. For one of the aspects of becoming a garrison state is a swelling move to throw out of the door the very things that are to be defended as a priceless heritage. Our "American way of life" is threatened, we are endlessly told. Hence we must defend it by throwing away the things which make it most worth defending —respect for individuals, freedom of speech and thought, and the continuing concern for our whole spiritual culture. That is the lamb that is kicked out of the door.

A BIG JUMP:—Presbyterian Life, official fortnightly magazine of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., has increased its circulation from 80,000 to 322,000 in the last eight months. This increase is due to making the magazine available at half price to churches subscribing for all their resident member families. Under this "every home plan" copies are delivered to individual homes.

The content of Presbyterian Life is excellent. A special issue was recently devoted to Korea. An interesting historical note on Korea is brought to our attention. Perhaps it helps us understand why we are in Korea today.

Korea was "opened" to the western world in 1882, when a Korea-United States treaty was signed. The diplomatic language of this treaty pledged each nation to come to the aid of the other if trouble developed. When Japan attacked their country in 1903, the Koreans sent an envoy to Washington to secure American aid. President Theodore Roosevelt refused to see the Korean representative, and the Japanese conquest was completed.

LIKE A BARKING DOG:—The United Presbyterian gives us a good interpretation of the meaning of prejudice.

Prejudice means judging beforehand, and there is nothing more mean and unsportsmanlike than judging a man or a movement before we give him or it a chance to reveal what he or it really is. Prejudice is a barking dog that runs out of our mind every time a new idea approaches and drives the idea away before we have a chance to listen to it. Consequently, the man with a prejudice is of necessity a narrow-minded man. It stands to reason that one will not be of much use in helping a man whom he despises. And is a Christian not obligated by the fact that he is a Christian to help everyone he can?

NAMESAKE:—The Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church has a bi-weekly called The Lutheran Witness. It is the official publication of the synod, and contains an interesting feature. Each issue of the national paper has a district supplement containing Local news and articles. The procedure is most likely effective, but leads to editorial complications as there are 26 district supplements in each issue.

A WORD OF THANKS:—Crossroads, the journal of the Rural Workers Fellowship of the Episcopal Church gives a word of thanks to the "Witness" for the issue dedicated to R. W. F. "Our thanks to the editors for giving our organization this publicity, and for their contribution to their readers in bringing the rural Church into special prominence."

CHURCH IS BEHIND:—Watchman-Examiner, Baptist, reports that President Liston Pope of Yale Divinity School recently said over the radio that one of the important areas still in need of racial "housecleaning" is the Church. "The racial barriers that have divided this country for so long are tumbling down, and America is on the march toward more democratic racial practices." He described this trend—everywhere apparently but in the Christian Church—as "one of the few bright spots in a very discouraging world."

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

RELIGION-LABOR FOUNDATION OUSTS SECRETARY

The Rev. Willard Uphaus has been ousted as executive secretary of the National Religion and Labor Foundation by its executive board because of his participation in the World Peace Congress at Warsaw last fall.

A board announcement here, signed by the Rev. Francis W. McPeek of Chicago and John G. Ramsay of Atlanta, Ga., co-chairmen of the Foundation, charged that, in a principal address on behalf of the 63-member American delegation to the Congress, Uphaus made remarks "wholly condemnatory of American domestic and foreign policy," while offering "no criticism of Russian leadership or policy."

The board also censured Uphaus for accepting an invitation from the Soviet Peace Society to spend ten days in Russia following the Congress.

Uphaus, in a prepared reply to the board's announcement, said here that his trip to Europe was undertaken to "add to my knowledge of world affairs and my ability to work for peace and justice."

"To have been at Warsaw and in the Soviet Union," he said, "does not mean that one accepts the political systems of the peoples there, or that he has any less appreciation of our traditional political and civil liberties."

He defended the Warsaw Congress on the grounds that its sponsors sought "the widest possible representation" at the meeting, and that participants were not restricted in their expression of opinion.

In explanation of his own address, Dr. Uphaus said he objected to "the American habit of confessing other people's sins." He denied, however, a board charge that he had drawn a picture of "the aggressive nature and intentions of the American people." Dr. Uphaus said he told the Congress that in the Bible "we find a tremendous potential for peace that must be awakened and organized into action."

Referring to his visit to Russia as a guest of the U. S. S. R. delegation, he said that "it is difficult to see what was un-American or un-Christian about trying to understand the culture and historic backgrounds that govern the life of the Soviet people."

RELIGION IN THE NEWS PRODUCED BY STUDENTS

A radio commentary on political and social issues is produced by graduate students of Yale Divinity School and presented in a 15-minute broadcast over a New Haven station. The Senate crime investigation, income tax and inflation, the farm aid plan, the 22nd amendment to the constitution, drafting of 18-year-olds, the recent railroad strike are some of the issues that have been dealt with.

THREATS TO FREEDOM LISTED BY QUAKERS

Trends in the U. S. that are threatening civil liberties and freedom were listed last week by the peace committee of Friends. The committee cited the following: local and national loyalty oaths; politically-inspired trials; plans for regulation of manpower; increasing censorship and control of press and radio; exclusion and deportation of "unreliable" foreigners; attempts to fasten conscription and universal military training upon youth; use of civil defense to create a war psychology; labeling of liberal ideas as subversive; increasingly frequent attempts at thought control.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

JAMES F. LINCOLN
Pres. Lincoln Electric Co., Cleveland

There is much question at the present time as to what should be done about the mess in Korea. Has anyone thought of approaching the matter in a perfectly honest and straightforward way?

First, admit that we are the aggressors and that we have no business invading Korea or any other country. Second, bring back our army to America. Third, pay for the damage that we have done in Korea.

In order to do this, the following program would be necessary?

First, impeach Truman as a war monger who ordered the invasion of Korea by illegal action, without reference to Congress who, under our constitution only, can declare war.

Second, if the dangers of invasion from Communistic Russia are in any sense true, which is doubtful, build up our home defenses and don't weaken ourselves by a war on the other side of the world.

Third, go to China and Russia, after showing our honesty by the above action, and tell them we are not warlike; that the one thing we want to do is to live at peace and in cooperation with all nations. State the fact that the invasion which took place was contrary to the desires of the majority of the American people who, under our representative form of government, should have, and will in the future have, control of our acts.

In doing this we will not lose face, we will not kill our sons, and if we are fearless in our honesty, we will achieve a lasting peace with all the world.

WILLIAM E. SPRENGER
Director, City Mission Society
New York

In the March 22nd issue of The Witness, there is a notice to the effect that Miles W. Renear is now chaplain at Bellevue Hospital, New York. Would you please correct this for us by stating that Renear is taking the Clinical Training Course at the Episcopal City Mission Society's training center at Bellevue Hospital. The students in this course are given the title of Chaplain-interne but Mr. Renear has no official responsibility for any phase of the Chaplaincy work at Bellevue Hospital, which is conducted by four full-time Chaplains of the Episcopal City Mission Society. Our center, as you probably know, is operated in cooperation with the Council for Clinical Training, Inc.

I do not wish to seem to be meticulous, but we think that the statement will be confusing to many people who know of our work at Bellevue Hospital.

JOHN COLE McKIM
Clergyman of Peekskill, N. Y.

Mr. A. C. Boers, in your Backfire of March 22, says that "most laymen abhor" the American Church Union. This he puts forward as if it were a statement of known fact.

A few years ago I made a casual reference to the A. C. U. in conversation with a vestryman of a rather "high church" parish which I was visiting. He had never heard of it. Neither had any others of the vestry save the senior warden. Far from "abhorring" the Union, he liked it and was thinking of joining it. A few weeks later, remembering this experience, I made casual references to the A. C. U., talking to lay deputies during buffet luncheons at a diocesan convention. One was a member. Most of the others could not remember having heard of it. None abhorred it.

Such experiences incline me to think that, far from abhorring the A. C. U., a vast majority of our (say) 3,000,000 lay folk have either never heard of it or have forgotten having done so.

Clergymen, most of whom read Church papers, may find it difficult to believe this, but the editors, pondering their lay circulations, may think it plausible.

Soliloquy on Calvary was an excellent article. I can well imagine a citizen of Jerusalem reacting exactly that way to the events of Good Friday. I hope we may have something more from the Rev. Kenneth Cary.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Christina Community Center A Notable Venture

Wilmington's Old Swedes Church Carries on Extensive Program In Modern Plant

★ The Christina Community Center of Old Swedes is a community enterprise housed in a thoroughly modern building on the grounds of Holy Trinity (Old Swedes) Church in Wilmington, Delaware. The popularly known Old Swedes Church was founded in 1638 by the first Swedish colonists who landed in America at the edge of what they called the Christina River, about 500 yards from the Community Center named after the village and river the Swedes originally named to honor their queen, Christina. The old church which sponsors the Community Center stands very near it in the middle of a churchyard filled with monuments and tombs memorializing Delaware's earliest families. The present church, built in 1698, is the oldest church in America still standing as originally built and still used for regular services of worship. Founded by Swedish Lutherans, the church was deeded to the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1791, after nearly two centuries under four flags—Swedish, Dutch, British and American.

Program for Youth

Due to the shift in population and industrial development in Wilmington, the old church at the water's edge now stands in a congested, partly outmoded section of the city known as the East Side. The area is still alive, a part of the larger community of Wilmington, but prey to racial tensions, cultural and national groups in social and economic competition and very thickly populated. From 1915 to 1945, in conjunction with the YMCA, a vital community program for youth was headquartered at Old Swedes and operated with volunteer leadership to the point where, in 1940, a full-time director was secured to head-up the expanding program. The first director, Mr. Peyton Short, is now doing similar work in London, England. From its inception, the program was educational in nature, aiming to teach the moral and ethical requirements of good citizenship, without religious denominational or political bias, through recreational channels.

In 1945, sponsored by the old church, which itself has stood for more than two and a half centuries as a symbol of community in Delaware, a group of civic and church leaders, under the presidency of P. S. duPont, III, chartered the corporation, Christina Community Center of Old Swedes, Inc., for the purpose of providing more adequate facilities for the community center than the church itself was able to do. An appeal was made to the citizens of Wilmington by mail, through strong support of the local press and radio, and by individual calls for funds to enlarge and renovate the existing facilities of the Center, which was housed in the little-used parish house of the old church. The resulting building with a front terrace for skating, houses a beautiful gymnasium with locker rooms, showers and storage space on the third floor; the main floor, entered from the front terrace, consists of an office, library and reading room, snack-bar, kitchen, pool room and large general recreation hall which will seat 100 people for dinner, movies or other shows, permit of dancing space for even more, and when not used for those things, it is set up with ping-pong tables and other table games. The ground floor houses a modern wood-working shop equipped with practically every electrically operated device for wood working, a craft room for ceramics, silver and copper smithing, weaving, sewing, club rooms for social and business meetings, girl scouts and boy scouts, men and women groups, plus a music room and a kitchen for cooking classes as well as for the preparation of refreshments for various meetings. The building is conservatively valued at $250,000.

Playground

The adjoining two blocks of property have gradually been acquired by the Community Center Corporation, and it is being graded this spring as an out-of-doors playground in conjunction with the center program. It will provide space for skating, outdoor games for various age groups, outdoor movies, plays and concerts in the summer. There will also be a wading pool for younger children, as well as swings and slides.

To permit the demolition of the twenty-eight houses on this property required the resettlement of a large number of families since many were occupied by several families. The property investment is approximately $100,000 and the playground installation, now under way, is estimated between $30,000 and $40,000.

In 1948 the operating budget of the Christina Community Center was included in the Community Fund (Red Feather) campaign in Wilmington and since then the program has largely been underwritten by the Red Feather organization. The balance of the budget is produced by the woman's club of Trinity Episcopal Church, Wilmington, which originally financed the program altogether.

United Effort

The old church is the mother church of most of the present parishes in Wilmington, and today only one of its offspring is still related to it officially: Trinity Episcopal Church, of which the Rev. Donald W. Mayberry is rector. Old Swedes Church and Trinity Church operate as integral parts of the parish created by colonial charter, though since 1830 the rector of the parish has been identified with Trinity Church and Old Swedes has been in the charge of a vicar. The present vicar, the Rev. H. Edgar Hammond, is the thirteenth in succession at the old church since 1830. Each congregation conducts its own affairs, raises and manages its own budget and conducts its own program, but both continue in close relationship through a jointly elected vestry which is the corporate body for both churches. The woman's club of Trinity Church operates an amazing Christmas shop in the Hotel DuPont each November for several days, and the proceeds from this shop originally supported the community project at Old Swedes, but with the expanded nature of the Christina Center, the Christmas shop shares with the United Fund of Northern Delaware (Red Feather) in providing the operating funds which support a membership of over 500 boys and girls at the center, a staff of a director, two full-time assistants, five part-time leaders, and a staff of 30 volunteer leaders who are responsible for the program each week.

Hammond, vicar of Old Swedes Church, which sponsors the Center, a founding member of the Corporation and its Secretary. Chairman of the Board of Managers which operate the Center; Bishop Arthur R. McKinstry, of Delaware, Vice-President of the Center Corporation, a founding member and a director; Rev. Dr. Charles F. Penniman, now canon at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, and director of the Educational Research Foundation of the diocese of Missouri, formerly rector of Trinity, Wilmington, Del. A founder of the Center and a director until 1945; P. S. duPont, III, a founder of the Center, President of the Board of Directors since its incorporation; Hon. Walter W. Bacon, Governor of Delaware when this picture was made, at the time of the formal opening of the Center in 1948; W. Albert Haddock, Sr., a founding member of the Center, a director of the Corporation. Senior warden of the parish

Comprehensive Program

Charles I. Davis, Jr., the director of the Christina Community Center, started directing the program, largely geared for boys, eight years ago, with a two-room apartment over the vicar's study which adjoined the parish house of Old Swedes that consisted of three floors each of which was practically one large room of itself, somewhat difficult to heat and keep clean and, except for occasional painting, practically the same as it was built half a century earlier. Under his influence and leadership, the membership grew from half a hundred teen-age boys to include girls, and finally outgrew its facilities altogether. Today, the program is about equally divided between girls and boys, from five years of age to eighteen. The program remains primarily educational, but in terms of attitudes and values, and the variety of activities offer on-the-spot opportunities to inculcate those main objectives through discussions, tension-situations, and by example: basketball, boxing, wrestling, weight-lifting, baseball and football; student government organizations for the various age groups; scouts; craft and hobby classes; dances, hikes, camping and visits to industrial plants, museums, etc.; general recreation.

Paintings on display at the center are loaned by the Wilmington Society of Fine Arts, and are changed at intervals. Books in the reading room are in part provided by the center, and in part are lent by the Wilmington Institute Free Library. Magazines are collected from interested friends, and a few are obtained by regular subscription. Motion pictures mostly are obtained from industrial organizations, showing processes of manufacture, and travel bureaus, depicting sports and points of interest at home and abroad, with a smattering of the usual comedies and musicals which are obtainable for 16mm sound projection. The so-called educational pictures are the most popular, though films showing special techniques in the various crafts are extremely popular for the smaller groups engaged in the different craft activities.

Baby Clinic

A well-baby clinic is operated regularly on specified schedules in the center by the state board of health, and attendance of mothers and babies in the past year required a doubling of the schedule. Close relationships with the state hospital make psychological and aptitude testing readily available to the members of the center, and the vocational and educational counseling services of the center are becoming increasingly popular, to the point where general membership requirements may soon include the necessity of at least aptitude inventories followed by consultations in the matter of selecting individual athletic and craft programs, so that they may contribute more specifically to the member's maturing process and educational growth, as well as emotional expression and development. Such counseling, in these and other areas of experience, is the most time-consuming responsibility of the director and the vicar, in connection with the operation of the program of the center, but that function lies at the very heart of the purpose of the whole program of the Community Center.

Congested Area

The area in which the Christina Community Center is located is comprised of 173 rows of city housing—"blocks" they are called in Wilmington. A census in 1945 revealed that in this relatively small, and certainly compact neighborhood, there were 3,536 children enrolled in public and parochial schools; there were an estimated 1,200 pre-school children; and the then-draft-board records indicated that about 3,000 men from this neighborhood were in active military service. At the present time less than 1,000 men are in the armed services, but the number of children is about the same, judging from spot counts, as in 1945.

Inter-Racial

Three community agencies serve these children: the Colored YMCA-YWCA, the People's Settlement, and the Christina Community Center. One Colored Baptist Center and one Colored Episcopal Play Center offer some facilities to a limited number of children of the Negro race. The playground of Christina Community Center will be unrestricted in respect to race, and increasingly inter-racial activities occur in the center building. Two small city parks, each about one square block in size, offer the only other recreational space for the children who live in this neighborhood.

The over-all administrative practice of the center is of interest to those engaged in similar enterprises. The Corporation Board is responsible for the financial stability of the project, for capital costs, and for liaison between the center and the Community Fund and the city at large. A church board is responsible for coordinating the various activities at Old Swedes, including the operation of the center. Both the church board and the corporation board appoint the board of managers for the control and operation of Christina Community Center, and that board is charged with constructing the program, maintaining proper budget allocations and balance, and assisting the director in obtaining both volunteer and employed personnel and otherwise planning with him both short-range and long-range improvements and projects. The board of managers has been carefully selected from the community at large to afford the director a diversity of religious backgrounds, and a wealth of practical experience in every field of service related to the program and needs of the center.

Religion Stressed

It has been the continuing concern of the board of managers and the director to emphasize the importance of the sense

Voodoo on Long Island

RECENTLY, in a church on Long Island, the Bishop of that diocese undertook to "exorcise the devils" (the actual words he used in his prayers) from the "Oils of the sick, the oil of chrism and the oil of the catachumens." Lest our readers become too alarmed we hasten to assure them that no tom-toms, witch-dancers or sacred snakes accompanied this extraordinary performance. We recall that some years ago one of the priests of the Church married a couple on roller-skates in a rink; in comparison that was mild if a bit odd. Bishop DeWolfe did not get his liturgy for this service from Haiti or Africa; it is a part of the Roman Mass for Maundy Thursday. As the Catholic Encyclopedia solemnly tells us, "Places and things as well as persons are liable to diabolical infestation," so what is more natural than episcopal magic to exorcise such? The saddest part of all this is that it took place on that day when the Master sat down with his friends in the pure and profound fellowship meal of the Last Supper.

We are not among those who turn pale if another candle is put on the altar nor do we think that there is confusion in heaven if a rubric is bent now and then. We have always rejoiced in the comprehensiveness of the Protestant Episcopal Church; we believe in latitude in its services to meet the needs of worshippers of varying temperaments. But when a Bishop, who has solemnly promised to "banish . . . all erroneous and strange doctrines," indulges in this mumbo-jumbo we feel that things have come to a serious pass. It is an offense to those who are loyal to the Church and it cannot but cause ridicule on the part of modern men and women who are seeking a religion that will meet the needs of a tragic day.

of responsibility, as differentiated from the demand for rights, among the membership of the center. This is difficult in a heterogeneous group, with mixed religious affiliations. Church attendance is constantly stressed, though the center itself is maintained as a community project which necessarily must be identified with no specific religious point of view. It is meant to be operated as a community enterprise which will weld together boys and girls of different religious backgrounds into a conscious neighborhood that knows it is a part of a greater community — the city, the state, the nation and the world. The membership consists of children from many national backgrounds: Scottish, Irish, Polish, Lithuanian, Russian, French, German, Italian, British, and 7th and 8th generation Americans. All are Americans. In respect to religious allegiance and practice, a variety is represented. But less of a variety is represented in the membership of the center than is represented at Lake Success in the United Nations Organization. Members of the board of managers see a parallel in this situation, except that they feel that it should be simpler for a variety of Christians to live together than a variety of people who may be mostly non-Christians.

CATHEDRAL HAS NEW PLANT

★ Christ Church Cathedral, Houston, Texas, is now erecting a new parish house which is also to serve the diocese. The basement has been excavated, foundations poured for the entire structure, and the first floor slab poured for the kitchen and diocesan wing. Structural steel is now being erected for the kitchen wing, and renovation of the guild hall is under way. Critical materials, writes Dean Hamilton Kellogg, have been purchased and are mostly on hand so that completion by early fall is expected.

TO TURN BARN INTO CHURCH

★ In order to help meet the spiritual needs of the ever growing suburban area outside the city of Wilmington, a barn and property located beyond Farnhurst has been purchased by the diocese of Delaware. Christianity started in a manger and it does not seem inappropriate that a barn should become a church. The diocesan committee in charge and the architect, William H. Thompson, propose to remodel the entire structure in as simple, straightforward a manner as possible to retain the rugged simplicity and repose which surround many of the old barns of the surrounding countryside. The acquisition of this property is the first item recommended by the committee on strategy. The barn is two stories high. The ground floor will provide ample space for stairs leading to the church above, a social room, kitchen, departments for younger children, and areas for the upper classes. The upper floor will contain the church and an ample sized apartment for the rector. Walls enclose the old barnyard which will become recreation space for outdoor parish activities. Appropriately, the new church will be called the Church of the Holy Nativity.

PARTIES are frequent at the Center. This is one for newsboys for a news agency with headquarters nearby

BASKETBALL is a popular sport at the Center. This is a game between the Center team and Ferris Industrial School

BOARD OF DIRECTORS A NOTABLE GROUP

★ Directors of Christina Community Center, Wilmington, are a notable group of men and women. P. S. duPont is president; Bishop McKinstry, vice-president; Edmond duPont, treasurer; the Rev. H. Edgar Hammond, secretary. Other directors are W. Albert Haddock; Harry G. Haskell Jr.; Mrs. W. S. Hillis; Mrs. Ernest N. May; the Rev. Donald W. Mayberry; Dr. Joseph M. Messick; Edward B. Marrow; Dr. John S. Reese IV; Elwood S. Salter; Mrs. Frank G. Tallman Jr.; Vincent A. Theisen; Mrs. Irving Warner; John Weldon. This board is responsible for all capital fund raising, long range planning, over-all policy, and spending of capital funds.

A Board of Managers, appointed jointly by the directors of the Center and by the Old Swedes committee (a coordinating committee appointed by the parish vestry) controls actual operation of the program, employs staff, approves operating budget, etc. The managers work in close relationship with director and staff of the Center, and are divided into committees: program and personnel; budget and finance; maintenance; public relations. The personnel of the managers is selected from the community at large, with representatives of various religious and professional backgrounds of immediate value to the Center. Membership is on a rotation basis. Present Board of Managers: Dr. Joseph M. Messick, Fr. Stanley W. Delikat, Wilbert B. Smith, Thomas V. Mulrooney, Ross Lanius, Frank M. Heal, Elwood A. Davis, Mrs. John S. Beekley, Mrs. George K. Landon, Mrs. David W. Stockwell, Miss Florence V. Miller, Frank L. Baylis, and the Rev. H. E. Hammond, chairman.

The Center is a member of the American Association of Social Workers; a charter member of the Welfare Council of Wilmington; Wilmington Association of Group Workers.

CONSECRATION OF R. M. HATCH

★ Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill has taken order for the consecration of the Rev. Robert M. Hatch, suffragan bishop-elect of Connecticut. The service will be on April 17 in St. John's Church, Waterbury, Conn.

Bishop Sherrill will be consecrator, with Bishop Walter H. Gray of Connecticut and Bishop Frederick G. Budlong, retired bishop of Connecticut, as co-consecrators.

The Bishop-elect will be presented by Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts, and Bishop John T. Dallas, retired Bishop of New Hampshire. The sermon will be preached by Bishop Norman B. Nash of Massachusetts, and Bishop Oliver L. Loring of Maine will read the litany.

Outstanding Venture

WE are glad to present as our Story of the Week an account of an outstanding Church enterprise, the Christina Community Center in Wilmington. The objectives of the center were summed up in the foreword to the initial brochure that was used in the first campaign for funds. It was written by J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and H. Edgar Hammond, vicar of Old Swedes and chairman of the program committee of the Center, says that it cannot be improved upon as a brief statement on its purpose.

Wrote Mr. Hoover: "One of man's most treasured possessions is his power of self-determination, his freedom to choose a course of action, to do or not to do as he pleases. That faculty, together with his intellect, distinguishes him from the animal, gives him a dignity that reflects the Divine nature.

"It is strange that by his own abuse of freedom man sometimes seeks to destroy it. True freedom can exist only when it is limited . . . limited by the rights of other men and by the laws that define and protect those rights.

"We must, then, engender in our youth a sense of moral responsibility founded in religion, a religion that is not merely a method of worship, but a religion that embodies a creed and a code as well. The young boy and girl must believe in those truths upon which our freedom rests, and they must have respect for the laws which must exist to preserve it.

"The obligation to supply such education to our youth rests largely with the parents and the churches of the land. It is an obligation to provide a way of life, a motive power that will impel the young men and women of America to choose the good instead of the bad in every department of their lives. To accomplish that, it is obviously necessary that they know what is good and bad, not for just a moment, not in the light of a temporary pleasure, but in the eternal order.

"It is not merely an opportunity for philanthropy or humanitarian good works. It is rather a solemn obligation to preserve freedom and justice for the world, by molding the youth of America in accordance with the Divine plan. That duty is not an admonition or a counsel, it is God's will, and if it is faithfully discharged America will survive and prosper. If it is ignored, we can never hope for the true freedom for which our sons and brothers and husbands are giving the final measure of love on the battlegrounds of the earth."

"QUOTES"

OUR national life has been healthy and virile because of the opportunity to criticize, protest and espouse unpopular causes. We have never regarded democracy is a finished product but something to keep on building. In this sign we have grown great and strong. In the years ahead it may be the key to national survival.

Witness Seminar

SEVERAL weeks ago we announced the possibility of a travel seminar in the interest of world peace, in cooperation with the Church Peace Union. A number of readers responded with a request for further information. We are now able to present more details, with the hope that still more will express a desire to join us this summer to visit countries whose destinies are so closely linked with our own, and to talk with people there about our common problems.

Cities to be visited are London, Berlin, Prague, Belgrade, Rome, Florence, Geneva and Paris. The group would leave New York by chartered plane on July 13 and return August 19. Or if steamship travel is preferred, passage can be booked on a liner sailing from New York on July 7 and returning from Antwerp on August 17. The total cost for the trip would be about $1,000. Further information may be had by writing Witness Seminar, 12 West 11th Street, New York 11, N. Y.

Salute to Lichty

ARTHUR LICHTENBERGER was consecrated coadjutor of Missouri last week. In congratulating him and the diocese we also pat ourselves on the back since he was the chairman of our editorial board for a number of years. He is a man of rare insight and humility, with a passion for justice and the courage to implement it. Had we a "We Predict" department it would be headed this week with the assertion that he will be an outstanding bishop; one for whom we confidently pray: Be to the flock of Christ a shepherd, not a wolf; feed them, devour them not. Hold up the weak, heal the sick, bind up the broken, bring again the outcasts, seek the lost. Be so merciful, that you be not too remiss; so minister discipline, that you forget not mercy; that when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, you may receive the never-fading crown of glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Stalactites and Stalagmites

BY

IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder and First Editor of The Witness

A GOOD deal that we read would seem to indicate that the Church of the past was in some way inadequate for the people of the present, whereas, I cannot help feeling that the people of the present are somewhat inadequate for the treasure that they have inherited. Somehow, spending a million dollars on a prize fight intensifies that feeling.

An organization which has produced such children of God as the Church has produced in every generation can still produce their like, if it can find the material out of which saints are developed.

The difficulty today is that the age is not interested in producing saints, but is concerned in solving problems, whereas Jesus Christ was not disposed to solve problematical mysteries, but to make saints out of all sorts of queer materials.

The woman of the town was not a problem for Christ to solve by the aid of a clinic, an executive secretary and a checkbook; neither was she a social problem which he proposed to card index. The woman of the town was a sinner to whom he offered his own personal sympathy and help; if she accepted his grace, she became a new creature; if she rejected his proffer to help, she died in her sins.

Capital and labor were abstract questions which he left to academic philosophers, while he made his appeal to the rich young man who went away sorrowful, because he could not make the sacrifice which Christ suggested; and called the laboring man from his nets to follow him.

Efficient Ministers

THE work of the ministry is not, I fancy, essentially different since the disciple still is as his Master.

The real sign of efficiency in the Christian pastor is still the personal note rather than the academic theory of how things ought to be done. Many of our clergy may be men of quite ordinary talents, of rather ineffective methods and of somewhat ancient ideas, but their really Christian characteristic is that they persevere in holding up a very high ideal of worship and service to a very perverse generation.

In some ways it is rather tragic to be a bishop in the United States. One sees so much from the vantage point of his high place. One is not impressed with the fact that vestries who are seeking pastors are so much concerned with spiritual qualities of human sympathy, personal holiness and devout habits as they are with the more mundane and more superficial characteristics of mixing, personal appearance and cultural manners.

The Church is one of two things: It is either something sent down from above or else it is something built up by human ingenuity. Of course, in a sense, it is both, but to use the simile of stalactites and stalagmites in a cave—the one is from above, the other built up from below, but the initiative is from above and the stalagmites are the result of drippings from the stalactites, never the reverse.

Church and Sects

NOW, as I see religion, the Church came before the sects and the sects are in a sense stalagmites. And they possess one great advantage over the Church. They are nearer the earth. Consequently, the sectarian leader has the advantage of being just a little higher than the cave dwellers.

If you will note the leader of any sectarian body, he is standing for just the sort of thing that his people want. His leadership and their prejudices are a unit. To follow him is easy, for he visualizes to them that which they would build. It is not so much, "Set me upon the rock that is higher than I," as it is, bring the rock down to where I can step on it without much effort.

Whatever certain secularly minded ministers of this Church may say, the whole idea of the Church as embodied in her creeds, liturgies and formularies is that grace is from above and man may be lifted up by it, but he may not make of it a mere earthly process.

One asks why so many of our ministers desire to take the supernatural out of the Church, and why they do not want to leave the Church in order to propound their theories?

The answer is simple: They know the ephemeral character of mere human institutions. They know that stalagmites do not grow without stalactites to infuse them. So they desire the stable character of a divine institution which has been built up and preserved by belief in the supernatural in order to give a solidarity to the ideas which would deprive the gospel of all supernatural grace. In other words, they desire to use the labors of a long line of stalactites in order to create stalagmites that they claim to be just as wonderful. But they are not. In a contest between the two for beauty, the stalagmite is hopelessly outclassed.

The Supernatural

IT is important always to remember, on listening to their plausible theories, that such theories are and have always been unable to grow unless they depend upon a supernatural background for their existence.

Truly, the law came by Moses and he may have learned a good deal of it from Egyptian sources, but grace came by Jesus Christ and no man has been able to furnish a substitute.

This factor, however, has its effect in the Church.

The man who rejects the supernatural has the advantage of getting all his drippings from the stalactites and yet remaining close to the earth.

In other words, it is mighty easy for a priest of the Church who believes very little and yet looks like any other priest to get the close following of laymen who believe very little and are satisfied with appearances.

It is this factor which separates a good many of our clergy from the close discipleship of the bulk of the laity. And in this the Church is unique. It also separated the laity from following our Lord.

So long as he healed people and told them parables and fed them they followed him in large numbers. When he began to say, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven," they asked, as did Nicodemus, "How can these things be?"

So long as he gave them the loaves and fishes they flocked to him, but when he said, "Except a man eat my flesh and drink my blood, he hath no life in him," then many walked no more with him and his discipleship dwindled from that time on.

People are not prone to build up their Christian character by the industrious process of receiving his grace. They either want God to convert them by a sudden miracle, or else they want to build their own towers to heaven.

I have known many of these priests who boast that they do not believe in the supernatural character of grace. They are good companions in the easy reaches of life, in the drawing room, on the golf course, or anywhere on a nice summer day. They are fairly well up in solving the problems of life in the abstract, but are rather incapable of understanding the mystery of poverty or the grace of speaking to the individual who is in trouble; they are rather dumb before the mysteries of sickness and death.

To them, religion is a cultural rather than a regenerating process; sin is something which is bad form; death is a puzzle that had best be dealt with by euphemisms.

Religion of Prosperous

IT is not strange that prosperous people think of eternal life as merely a continuation of their present prosperity, but God forbid that heaven should be a confirmation of the cultural smugness which characterizes earthly prosperity and the tragic inequalities which is so characteristic of our industrial system.

But the way out is not to rail at the system, but to regenerate the individuals who otherwise would ruin the best system which mind could create.

Now, regeneration is something which comes from the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of Life, and it is our privilege as Christians to receive the grace that we perceive has come from the body of Christ in all ages.

The only saving clause in the world as we may know it may be found by a close study of the parable of Dives and Lazarus, in which God steps in and fixes the compensation.

Talking It Over

BY

W. B. SPOFFORD SR.

EDITOR CLIFFORD MOREHOUSE of the Living Church does not like the word "Protestant" and so he protests against the name of the new set-up of the National Council of Churches, "United Fellowship of Protestants in the Armed Services."

"We think it is high time," he writes, "that the officers of the National Council of Churches, from its president (Presiding Bishop Henry Sherrill) on down, realize that there are thousands of Church people—by no means all Anglo-Catholics—who are increasingly concerned over the ignoring of our objections to being lumped into interdenominational organizations under the general label of 'Protestants'."

What's more, if this goes on, says Clif, "the next General Convention of the Episcopal Church will be under strong pressure to withdraw from the Council—whether our Presiding Bishop is president of it or not."

Not only that, but the editor may even withdraw his personal support. His piece states that he has long been a supporter of both the National Council of Churches and its predecessor, the Federal Council of Churches, but with the use of the editorial "we" he thus makes his position clear: "We hope we shall be able to continue that support—but we cannot if the National Council of Churches turns out to be, after all, only a pan-Protestant organization with a window-dressing of Anglicans and Orthodoxy."

All of which is, of course, a very serious matter to which the officers of the National Council of Churches, including our Presiding Bishop, must give careful thought.

My own solution of the problem is a simple one. It is popular these days to name agencies so that their initials will spell out a word that will stick in people's minds, like CROP and CARE.

How would it do to name the new organization that is to work with the armed forces, Church League in Forces? It could then be popularly known as CLIF and thus be a constant reminder to the Presiding Bishop, and his fellow officers of the National Council of Churches, that they must hereafter launch nothing of an interdenominational character without first consulting the editor of the Living Church.

Baptism, the Means of Salvation

BY RAYMOND GAYLE
In Charge of St. James, Milton, Oregon

A minister is called upon to baptize a little dying child. It is a new-born babe. He hurries to the scene, splashes a bit of water on the head of the unconscious infant, mutters a few words and, to those who stand nearby, it all looks like the blackest superstition. "What does it mean?" they say, "Have a little sprinkled water and a few inarticulate words any influence upon this flickering flame of life which in a moment is to go out? If the child is to live elsewhere after its brief life here on earth is over, will this ceremony do it any good? If it survives and lives its life out here on earth, will it live any better for this hurried incantation? Isn't this, rather, a remnant of medicine-man magic which had better be done away with in this year of enlightenment, 1951?"

Living in a community where Baptists, Christians, and "Satur-Day Adventists" predominate, I have had to try to answer this question many times. I usually begin by telling a story about a little English boy I once had in one of my congregations who refused to salute the American flag in school. Arguing with him was of no avail in breaking down his prejudices. He insisted that he was an Englishman, and that was that! But one day I talked him into saluting when no one was around, just as an experiment, and he reluctantly did so, all the time protesting loudly that he didn't really mean it but was just doing it to please me. It wasn't long afterwards that the teachers reported that he was joining the other children at school in a very normal fashion, and that he was altogether a happier and wiser boy.

Now I submit this story as an example of the sort of thing the Prayer Book is talking about when it defines a sacrament on page 292 as "an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace given unto us, ordained by Christ himself, as a means whereby we receive this grace, and a pledge to assure us thereof."

View of Sacraments

WE are often apt, I believe, to take only a half-view of sacraments. We think of them only as pledges which assure us that we have received, or are receiving, the inward grace which the outward sign indicates, forgetting that the outward act or ceremony is also the means whereby we receive that grace—just as the sacrament of saluting, however grudgingly performed by my young Englishman, was the means by which a new spirit of tolerance and understanding was created in him. We need not be told that the mind or spirit of man has a profound influence over the body, that imaginary ills frequently bring on real ones and that worry and frustration often bring about arthritis, heart disease and other physical symptoms; but we do indeed need to be reminded that the opposite is also true, that the body has a similar influence over the mind and spirit, that a crippled and paralyzed body may cripple and paralyze the mind, and that a disfigured face can disfigure the entire spirit. It is the second half of this principle with which we deal whenever we employ sacraments. For sacraments are but the practical application of the fact that the body influences the mind and spirit. By its very definition a sacrament is "the means whereby we receive this grace."

Now just what spiritual change is effected by the physical act of baptism? The second office of Instruction answers: "The inward and spiritual grace in baptism is a death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness; whereby we are made the children of grace." More to the point perhaps, are the words of Jesus to Nicodemus (John 3:7), "Ye must be born again." Phillips Brooks in his sermon, "The New Birth" based on the above text, gives us his understanding of what it is to be "born again," and I quote his first illustration:

"First, then as simplest of all, I take the matter of happiness. It is easy to recognize the two levels of happiness, and the way men pass from the upper and lighter into the profounder and more serious one. Is this man happy, whom I see in the first flush of youth, just feeling his new powers, the red blood strong and swift in his veins, the exquisite delight of trying his just-discovered faculties of taste and thought and skill filling each day with interest up to the brim? Is he happy, he with his countless friends, his easy home, the tools and toys of life both lying ready at his hand? Most certainly he is. His days sing as they go, and sparkle with a bright daylight that makes the generous observer rejoice for him, and makes the jealous envy him.

"But then you lose sight of him for a while, and years after you come on him again. The man is changed. All is so altered! Everything is sobered. Is he still happy? As you look into his face you cannot doubt his happiness a moment, but neither can you fail to see that this new happiness is something very different from that which sparkled there before. This is serene and steady, and as you look at it you see that its newness lies in this: that it is a happiness in principles and character, while the other was a happiness in circumstances. The man whom you know now is happy because there is goodness in the world, because God is governing it, because in his own character the discipline of God is going on. The first sort of happiness was self-indulgent; the new sort is built on and around self-sacrifice. The man you left was 'enjoying himself,' as we say; the man you find is at peace in God. And to reach that peace in God, in principles, he must have lost his old self-enjoyment. The loss may have been violent, or the strings that bound him to it may have gently untwisted; but however it has come, he has died to his superficial enjoyment of self and entered into a deeper happiness, which could have come only through that death."

Phillips Brooks goes on to give other illustrations of this experience of being "born again," and altogether we get the impression that it is a complete re-direction and enrichment of life on all levels--knowledge, faith, friendships, morals, etc. In fact, it is such a complete change that it can be fully attained only in mature adult life.

At first glance, therefore, one is tempted like the Baptists and Disciples of Christ to have baptism put off until at least early adult life when some semblance of the total experience can have taken place. But upon closer study it becomes clear that we, in this natural body, can never hope completely to achieve the experience. And if baptism be accepted only as the pledge of its fulfillment, then certainly the child of thirteen or fourteen has but little more right to the sacrament than an infant, and if we were to wait for perfection even the age of eighty would be too young.

The Half-View

YOU see, it is just here that we run into trouble. But the trouble is easy to spot—it is simply that we are taking only a half-view of a sacrament, accepting it only as "a pledge to assure us thereof," and forgetting that it is also the "means whereby we receive this grace." For as in the case of the English lad's performing the outward act of saluting, his action did not reflect an already existing change of mind, but rather the action itself brought about, in due course, an alteration in his thinking; so Baptism does not alone indicate that the New Life has been accomplished, or even that it necessarily is underway—it is also the means whereby that New Life actually is accomplished or gotten underway.

Now, before we go further, I do not wish to say that baptism should not ever be a sign of grace already received. For that is a recognized part of the definition also, and in most cases for adults that is just what it ought to be. For there he stands, the man of the world, before the eyes of the entire congregation, to be baptized. He turns his back on his old way of life, his old values, and renounces the devil, as it were. He looks straight into the future, his eyes on God, and makes a new and this time God-centered beginning, dedicating himself and all that he has and is to this new pattern of life. As the water washes his body, so the Spirit cleanses his soul and the past and all in it are forgotten—completely washed away. And he goes back to his home a new creature. "Conversion" is the good old Methodist word for this experience, and the outward act of baptism is the sign of this deep, inner experience and the pledge which assures us of its reality. Such a baptism will naturally be before the entire congregation. For this man is making his witness for Christ. He is declaring to all—his family, his friends, his employer, his enemies—that he is making a new start, and he gives them this pledge that the grace of Christ is within him. No greater joy can come to a Priest of God than to bring a man to this state of salvation.

But for the child it is a very different thing. The infant can make no such witness. He is not even so much as aware that he is being baptized. Why, then, baptize him?

Baptism the Means

WHY, indeed, except that baptism for the child is not a pledge that the new life has been achieved, or that it is underway. It is the means by which the child actually is "born again." At his baptism the whole Church, through the agency of the chosen God-parents, is pledged to see to it that the child is brought up in such a way that it will "inherit" this new life—just naturally come by it. In this connection recall the words of Phillips Brooks which were just quoted: "the loss may have been violent, or it may have been easy. He may have been torn and wrung away from his selfishness, or the strings that bound him to it may have been gently untwisted." For most adults, depending upon the degree of their secularization of "sinfulness," the experience is likely to be violent, if not emotionally then at least intellectually. But for the child the experience of achieving this "born-again-ness" will probably be one of growth and development and education, by which "the strings that bound him will have been gently untwisted." His conversion will have taken place over an entire childhood and adolescence, rather than at any fixed point later on in adult life.

And just as the baptism of an adult should be public, so should the baptism of the infant also be before the entire congregation—but for a very different reason. In the case of the adult the congregation is receiving the man's personal witness. But in the case of the child, the whole church is receiving that child as its ward, and is pledging itself to labor to bring about within that child the state of salvation.

Public Service

IN both cases the contract is half-broken already at the time of the baptism itself if the congregation be not present. For the adult is not being challenged with the necessity of making a soul-searching witness. And the child is being cheated out of having the whole Church assume responsibility for him. Both are beginning their lives out on the cold and lonely mountain-side, rather than in the warm embrace of the Church's fellowship.

And now back to the original question with which we began. "Have a little sprinkled water and a few whispered words any influence upon this flickering flame of life which is in a moment to go out? If the child is to live elsewhere, after its brief life here on earth is over, will the ceremony do it any good?"

Well, I doubt it—I doubt it very much. I can't believe even for a minute that the mere ceremony of sprinkling a child at the point of death will save that child's soul.

For the child's soul has never been lost in the first place.

The child dying unbaptized goes to the same loving care of a Heavenly Father who has created it in his own image as awaits the child who has been baptized.

Why, then, go to such pains to baptize the tiny babe before its brief light flickers out? Why, indeed, but for the fact that we of the Church in this act are binding the Church to a solemn contract—we are receiving this child as a ward for care and nurture and education—either by ourselves if the child lives, or by the Church Expectant if the child dies.

Therefore, the New Life for that tiny infant, living or dying, begins at the very moment of his baptism.

And the ceremony is not a wanton superstition. It is indeed the means of salvation.

The Episcopal Church

BY

CLARKE BRADLEY
Layman of Holdrege, Nebraska

I HAVE been asked "What I Like About The Episcopal Church." This subject was assigned to me, because I have been a communicant of the Church for only two and a half years, and it was thought that those factors which influenced my decision to become an Episcopalian might indicate how other people can be interested in our Church.

I know of no better way to begin than by relating how I was attracted to the Episcopal church.

I was reared in a fundamentalist Church—one whose religion was marked by extreme emotionalism, a highly negative theology and a preoccupation with hell-fire and damnation.

Before I was graduated from high school, I found I could no longer accept the religious thought of that body.

So, I did what countless others have done, I disassociated myself from organized religion. I quit attending church and came to look on all religion with distrust.

This attitude persisted for more than ten years. However, I was not completely irreligious. I kept groping for something, which I felt subconsciously must be there.

Finally, one day I dropped in at a service at the small, gray frame Episcopal Church at Burbank, Calif. I had never attended an Episcopal Church before and believe that I went there that Sunday out of curiosity. I had been reading some of the works of Dr. Bernard Iddings Bell and had been wondering to just what sort of Church this (to me) amazing clergyman belonged.

Strange Experience

I FOUND the service rather strange . . . the kneeling and the standing made me a little self-conscious. Then, when the sermon began, I experienced what I can only describe as a distinct shock.

Here from the pulpit I was hearing something that "made sense." I was hearing ideas expressed, which I found completely reasonable and acceptable. Not only that, but the minister was speaking to the people as though they were persons of some intelligence . . . and not merely a mass to be either soothed with meaningless platitudes, or whipped into an emotional frenzy. I sat there asking myself . . . "can this be"—

Still not convinced of what I had heard, I went back the next Sunday. It seemed to me that the religion I had heard preached before, and the religion that I heard preached there by Rev. Reid Hammond, were two entirely different subjects.

I had had no idea that there was such a thing as the Episcopal Church. Oh, yes, I had heard of the name and had seen its edifices—and I had known people who I heard were Episcopalians—they never mentioned it themselves—but I had been unaware that such a religion as that of the Episcopal Church existed.

Belief

FROM the foregoing I believe it is evident that I was first attracted by the ideas I found expressed in the Episcopal Church . . . by the religious thought I heard expounded from the pulpit. A clergyman had by his sermons made me want to learn more and more about the Episcopal Church.

And the more I learned the more convinced I became that here was a Church for whose beliefs no apologies were required. Here was a Church that really stood for something . . . and that something would bear the application of reason.

Needs of the City Parish

BY ROBERT NELSON BACK
Assistant at St. Mark's, Frankford, Philadelphia

THE city parish is bedeviled by two deficiencies: people and money. Recently I attended evensong at one of New York's best known churches. There was a large and excellent choir, obviously professional. Two priests were in charge of the service. The beauty and condition of the church bespoke wealth. The many participants in the chancel made the service seem alive, but they could not conceal the fact that there were only nine of us in the nave.

The city parish has been faced with declining congregations for years. The reason is obvious. People are moving from congested areas, and they do not maintain their interest in the home parish. The city parish still has some contact with the modern cliff-dwellers, the apartment housekeepers, but even this is slipping. Even if it were not, the individuals of the apartment house are not substitutes for family units. The family has been and ever shall be the backbone of vital parish life.

Although the church I visited in New York is financially fortunate, most city parishes are not. The urban church is a large building. It is costly to maintain. Even though the parish has a sizable endowment, the lion's share of all available money is eaten up by the ravenous building. The church was built to care for a large and liberal congregation. Now that the people have gone the struggle for survival is acute.

How to Bring Life

THE city parish is in the doldrums. The crowds of yesterday have disappeared. The church is a shabby ghost of itself. The handful of the faithful try to preserve the memory of past grandeur, but the down-at-the-heel building seems to belie even their memory.

But the situation is not hopeless. Some courageous rectors and some courageous vestries have turned the tide.

The city parish has several assets. It is accessible. It can be reached easily by public conveyance. And, on Sundays, it is not too difficult to drive a car to the city church and find parking space. It is an effort for suburbanites to return to the city on Sunday after having worked there all week. But they will if the bait is sufficiently attractive. Another asset is that the city church has the space and equipment, outmoded perhaps, for any kind of program it wishes to sponsor. The third asset is the knowledge and experience accumulated by the city parish through the years. The church was once throbbing with life, and although it was a long time ago and half-forgotten it can be brought again to conscious mind.

One way the city parish can face up to the problem which besets it is to secure a popular clergyman. Where there are people there is money to promote a program, and the popular clergyman brings in the people. He is an artist at showmanship. He spills his personality over the city. He is a clever publicist. Astutely, he speaks to all sorts of groups outside his parish whenever he gets the chance. He is invariably making new friends. His sermons, simple, full of illustrations, up-to-the-minute are magnets. The crowds come back, and there is general rejoicing. If the bait is attractive enough, people will come from all over the city and its environs to taste it.

The difficulty with this popular approach is that it is a stop-gap measure. The "new" old parish is built around the personality of one man. What happens to the revitalized parish if something happens to the man? And something is likely to happen to the man for the strain of a ministry by publicity is terrific. A congregation that is fed on the bizarre develops an enormous appetite. Give them an orange today for coming to church and they want two oranges tomorrow. However, a stop-gap measure is better than no attempt to meet the situation. A ministry by publicity at least gets people to church, and some good will certainly come of it.

Multiple Ministry

A SECOND way the city parish can face up to its problem is by securing a multiple ministry. This takes considerable courage, imagination, and a gambler's heart. The parish recognizes that it must attract people from all over the city and its suburbs in order to exist. It knows it can attract them only if its program is superior to anything that can be had elsewhere. It must have outstanding preaching; therefore, it must have an unusual preacher. It must have inspiring music; therefore it must have the best organist and choirmaster. It must have a top-notch program of Christian education, for the city parish wants to attract families—the backbone of real church life. And here is the rub; this means a second clergyman or perhaps a well-trained layman who is a professional. This is an age of specialization, and the preacher, to be outstanding, has to stick to his preaching, and the educator has to keep close to his educating. A third professional is needed: an organizer and administrator. It is his task to think out the total program of the parish, put it into effect, keep it moving.

Now all this takes money, and the city parish is hard pressed. That is why it is necessary to have a gambler's heart to enter into this kind of parish program. Everything has to be staked on its success. It has proved to be successful where it has been used, but it is a risk. However, a risk, any kind of risk, is better than an empty, useless church.

Look for the Side-Walk

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

NOT long ago, about to attend a high school operetta, I found a parking problem, as is so common in these days, and drove over a block of rough, dirt street to a pavement where I parked the car, planning to traverse on foot the dirt road back to the school. Imagine my pleasure when I discovered that there was a side-walk which I had not noticed, along the street, so instead of walking in the muddy street I made my way on the side-walk.

This incident, trivial though it is, illustrates an important point in everyday living. Many times we think the going will be much harder than it really turns out to be. It is easy to foresee a possible difficulty, while we overlook an equally possible happy development. Students are sometimes sure in their own minds they will fail an examination, and then really do quite well.

We sometimes face a critical or decisive situation of some kind, and we visualize all sorts of dire possibilities, yet when we actually are in the situation we find it is not nearly as bad as we feared, and our gloomy forebodings appear as bad dreams when we look back on them.

Often our chief need is for an attitude of faith and hope. Certainly we should not overlook the possibility of fateful and untoward developments. To use an overworked word, we should be "realistic." But neither should we overlook happy possibilities. There may be a side-walk nearby on which we may walk instead of having to walk in the street. At least, we can look for the side-walk!

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Church and Contemporary Change. By G. Bromley Oxnam. Macmillan. $2.50.

Bishop Oxnam's lectures clarify some of the most pressing problems which confront Protestantism today. More than this, they are a stimulus to courageous action and a declaration of faith in the creativity of the Church. The issues of contemporary change are power and justice, the former to be brought under democratic control and the latter to be established by the democratic process and not by coercion. It is in the doctrine of man and his significance as a person that Christianity and Communism are in basic conflict. Of this fact Protestant leadership must be better informed; as also of the challenge to religious liberty which, like Communism, Roman Catholicism embodies. The social service state may likewise threaten freedom but there is a proper and necessary place for it in a society both free and orderly. A united Protestantism must replace the divided church if Christians are to become in fact co-workers with the Eternal—Arthur L. Swift Jr.

The Episcopal Church in the United States, 1789-1931. By James Thayer Addison. Scribner. $4.50.

This brilliant and beautifully written history will help Episcopalians to understand their Church a good deal better than most of us do; it will also help the rest of the world to understand it. In the first place, there is a sketch of the course of Anglicans in England from 1559 to 1789, without which the course of events in the Episcopal Church since that latter date would be incomprehensible. (During the Colonial period we were an episcopal church trying to function without bishops!) This sketch is extremely well balanced. There are no ex parte historical judgments; Dr. Addison not only recognizes but rejoices in the fact that Anglicanism is both Catholic and Protestant.

The account of the Colonial period distinguishes the colonies where the Church was established from those where it was not, and does so more sharply than is usually the case; with the result that one can see almost at a glance how it came about that the Church is strong in some areas, weak in others, to this present day. In the following period, after the Revolution and the reorganization of the Church in 1789, the turning points are 1835, 1865, 1900. In each intervening period the history is lightened up by brief biographical sketches of chosen leaders. Above all, the great "trends" are recognized, and are recounted sympathetically—The Oxford Movement, the Muhlenberg Memorial, the Missionary Movement, the Social Gospel, Reunion, and others.

The most matter of fact paragraphs will suddenly take a burst of light—like the shiny wings of a plane swinging into the morning sun. On the Caroline Divines, for example: "If more of those who refer to them would read them, modern theology would benefit." "For Whitgift and Elizabeth . . . Presbyterianism was not necessary to salvation." On Karl Barth: "Anglicans do not have to be saved from choosing between a diluted Liberalism and a fundamentalist type of Protestant orthodoxy." It is this salty, incisive, summary style that gives the book its finest literary quality. Here is a church history that can be read with sheer enjoyment! And the best of it is that it is so magnificently sane and balanced—it can do only good and does not need to be corrected or offset!—F. C. G.

Is the Bible Inspired? By John Burnaby. Macmillan. $1.25.

This is one of the little books in the "Colet Library of Modern Christian Thought and Teaching" and it is by the distinguished author of a recent excellent work on St. Augustine, Amor Dei. It traces the development of the old belief in the authority of Scripture as it had to be revamped in the light of historical criticism. As a survey of the history of this development, the book is extremely good, and much light is shed on precisely what issues were at stake. But when the author attempts to solve the problems anew for the contemporary church, he is not so satisfactory. His answer, in brief, is that the uniqueness of biblical revelation is not to be found in the response of the biblical writers to God's disclosure of himself, but in the manner of that disclosure, i. e. in the unique history of the Jewish people culminating in the event of Jesus Christ. Moreover, "the authority with which inspired men speak can never be an absolute authority." The author concludes that the Bible contains a number of varying "authorities" and the weight to be attached to them varies accordingly.

But what are the criteria by which a Protestant decides which parts are authoritative? And is the history of the Jewish people more unique than the responses of Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and all the rest, culminating in Jesus Christ our Lord?—Burton S. Throckmorton.

Adventuring Into the Church. By Lewis Albert Convic. Harper. $2.50.

The author thoroughly understands young people, how they think, how they feel. The material he presents demonstrates that completely. So it can be of invaluable aid in preparing them for confirmation. Too often, alas, we have "instruction classes" in which the recipients are no more than that; they fail to be participants. Hence they do not really learn and absorb in their beings the significance of the Church. No one has yet written a satisfactory confirmation manual. This book, with its fresh and alive approach, can help immeasurably until we have such.—J. H. T.

Communion Meditations. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $2.00.

A collection of twenty-five "preludes to the Lord's Supper," edited by Gaston Foote. These meditations have been written by such outstanding Protestant ministers as McCracken, Sockman, Bader, Cavert, Burkhart, Stamm and others. There is useful homiletic material here and an occasional fresh insight into the various meanings of the Communion Service. This book will doubtless serve a valuable purpose for ministers of the non-liturgical Churches which are rediscovering the centrality of the Holy Communion in the lives and worship of Christians, but those who have known this from the beginning will find here no new thing.—R. T. F.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

KENNETH HUGHES LEADS FORUM

★ The Rev. Kenneth deP. Hughes, rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge, Mass., was the speaker at a forum meeting held at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, April 1. His subject was national and international ethics in relation to ethnic groups. He dealt with the place and future of what the UN calls "dependent peoples" in the world today.

LENT AT EPIPHANY WASHINGTON

★ The Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., had an unusually successful Lent, with a total attendance at the noonday preaching services (exclusive of Good Friday) of 26,767, an average of 836 persons each noonday, and with an average Sunday attendance of 1,312, not including Easter. The closest estimate of attendance at the Three Hours on Good Friday was 7,210.

The total attendance at all services of worship at Epiphany during the year 1950 was 101,874. This figure probably brings Epiphany into the class of one of the best attended Episcopal churches in America.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONVENTION

★ The convention of the diocese of South Carolina was held April 10-11 at St. Philip's, Charleston, with President Boynton Green of the University of the South the speaker at the annual dinner. Legislation adopted last year which provides for Negro representation in the convention was approved. There was also an important report from the department of missions on new opportunities in Allendale, Bamberg and Barnwell counties where there are new atomic energy plants. The Rev. Marshall E. Travers is the rector of the host parish.

BISHOP OF TEXAS IN HONOLULU

★ Bishop Clinton S. Quin of Texas was the guest speaker at the convocation of Honolulu which met April 1-4 at St. Andrew's Cathedral. A meeting of the Auxiliary was held at the same time, with an address by Mrs. Quin as one of the features. A youth conference was held March 31 under the direction of the Rev. Richard M. Trelease Jr., director of youth work.

STUDENT CENTER AT UNIVERSITY

★ Bishop Louttit of South Florida gave the annual lecture on religion before the University of Miami on the Tuesday evening in Holy Week. His theme was "The Christian faith in a scientific age"—and he answered the question "Is religion relevant in this modern day?"

The lecture was attended by Catholics, Protestants and Jews. Bishop Louttit has also been a baccalaureate preacher for the university. Through his leadership, the diocese of South Florida is to construct the first unit of a student-center and chapel on the campus on land given by the university.

RECORDS BROKEN AT ST. MARTIN'S

★ St. Martin's Church in the Harlem section of New York reports an attendance of 4,935 on Easter. More communions were made than at any previous service, numbering 1,625 people. Although the wine was administered sparingly, five gallons were consumed at three celebrations.

The Easter offerings amounted to $8,812 with 2,000 people contributing. The rector, Rev. John H. Johnson, remarked in thanking the congregation for their efforts, "that though our people are poor, they have discovered the joy of giving."

BISHOP SHERMAN THE SPEAKER

★ Bishop Sherman, suffragan of Long Island, was the speaker at the annual meeting of the Church Mission of Help of the diocese of Connecticut, which met April 11th at St. Andrew's, Meriden. Florence C. Sanford is the executive secretary, assisted by Katharine Jones. During 1950 over 150 cases were handled, divided between helping young women adjust personal problems and caring for unwed mothers and their babies.

SHERRILL URGES WORK ON WORLD SCALE

★ Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, addressing a department of the National Council of Churches, in his capacity as president, urged the Churches to put aside "their interest in little things" and to do more Christian work on a world scale. "We are one world, whether we like it or not" and the world outlook of the United States gives the Church the greatest opportunity it has ever had to present the gospel on a global scale.

The meeting, held at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., was of the Council's department of stewardship at which plans were made for coordinating the fund-raising activities of the Churches comprising the Council.

Clarence C. Stoughton of Springfield, O., president of the department, said the plans provided for "the greatest advances made in generations toward the merger of all Protestant stewardship activities." The 60 Protestant stewardship leaders attending the sessions approved the establishment of an executive secretaryship in the department and the early appointment of someone to fill the post.

Plans were outlined for a series of interdenominational stewardship education conferences throughout the United States beginning next fall. Purpose of the conferences will be to teach "laymen, women and children of all Protestant Churches the meaning of Christian stewardship and how their faith applies to daily life and work."

The denominational representatives also suggested changing the department's name to "Department of Stewardship and Benevolence," and recommended that member Churches combine their fund-raising efforts with their stewardship programs.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

PROTESTANT PAPERS REPORT ON CIRCULATION

Member papers of the Associated Church Press have a total circulation exceeding 5,000,000, it was reported to the group's annual meeting. The ACP comprises editors of Protestant publications in the U. S. and Canada. Voted into membership at the meeting were nine publications, bringing the total number to 106.

Weekly Protestant member publications reported to have the largest circulations are the Christian Advocate, official organ of the Methodist Church with 315,000; Signs of the Times, published by the Seventh-day Adventist Church, with 275,000; and The Lutheran, official organ of the United Lutheran Church in America, with 100,000.

Bi-weeklies which reported circulations of over 100,000 are Presbyterian Life, official organ of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. with 400,000; and the Lutheran Witness, official organ of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, with 310,000.

Monthlies with circulation exceeding 100,000 are the Christian Herald, independent and undenominational, 400,000; Royal Service (Woman's Missionary Union, Southern Baptist Convention), 213,000; and the Methodist Woman, 210,000.

Twenty-three member periodicals in all categories have circulations of 50,000 or more.

A resolution asking that the church press be granted such exemptions from the proposed increased postal rates "as those guaranteed to non-profit or charitable organizations or agencies" was adopted.

Adopted after a heated debate, the resolution, as approved, amended an earlier one submitted by the committee on resolutions. As originally presented to the delegates, the resolution said that the ACP "disassociates itself from the claim sometimes made in its behalf that it desires governmental subsidies in the form of preferential postal rates for the religious press.

"We believe such preferential rates would constitute a violation of the principle of Church-state separation which we support," the resolution added. "We ask no exemption other than those guaranteed to non-profit or charitable organizations and agencies."

President Truman told editors that "denominational quarrels should be overlooked" in this time of crisis. He spoke informally in the White House rose garden.

He said that this nation is attempting "to mobilize the moral forces of the world against the unmoral forces," and that church papers and their readers could help substantially in this aim.

Mr. Truman added that he is "somewhat hipped" on this subject since it is "the most important thing in the world today."

He urged the editors to give every support to those forces that "believe in honor and ethics, and uprightness and the keeping of agreements." When these forces are in control of the world, he said, "we will have peace."

REPORTS RELEASED-TIME PICKING UP SPEED

The movement to release public school children an hour or more a week for religious instruction is picking up speed, Erwin L. Shaver, director of weekday religious education for the National Council of Churches, reported in Minneapolis.

"We are trying to get away from the classes being held in public schools or assisted in any way by the public schools," Shaver said. At present, he said, 85 per cent of the classes are held in churches—"the best place for them." In some areas they are still being held in the schools, but that is being discouraged.

Shaver, who spoke at a large meeting sponsored by the Minneapolis church federation, said three-fourths of the communities taking part in the "released-time" movement "are doing so on an interdenominational basis."

"Today's public school youngsters are in desperate need of religious guidance," he asserted.

STATE DEPARTMENT SEEKS RELEASE OF BISHOP

The state department will demand from the Polish government the immediate release of Bishop Joseph Padewski, head of the Polish National Church in Poland and an American citizen. Church officials said at headquarters in Scranton, Pa., they were so advised at a conference in Washington with department representatives.

Bishop Padewski reportedly was arrested in Krakow, Poland, on Jan. 19 and transferred to Warsaw on Feb. 7. A former pastor of St. Stanislaus Cathedral, Scranton, mother church of the Polish National Church, he has been spiritual head of the Church in Poland since 1930.

Meanwhile, Bishop John Misiaszek, head of the central diocese, announced that the Polish National Church will call a conference of the Church council in Scranton in the near future. The conference, to be summoned by Prime Bishop Francis Hodur, founder and head of the Church, will consider matters pertinent to the Church in Poland and to mission work in other countries, Bishop Misiaszek said.

The Church in Poland was reported recently from Warsaw to have broken away from its parent organization in the United States.

The council also will consider a request from Archbishop Andrew Rinkel, Utrecht, Holland, head of the Utrecht Union of the Old Catholic Church, for assistance in rebuilding a seminary at Utrecht.

CHURCH LOTTERIES ARE OPPOSED

Baptist and Methodist clergymen stoutly opposed a bill to legalize church lotteries and raffles before the legislature of Maine. One minister said he believes the bill would open the way to organized gambling in the state. Professional gamblers, he said, might get some benevolent society to front for them. A senator, who was formerly a state's attorney for Kennebec County, declared that it has been embarrassing for him as a prosecutor to be asked to get rid of punchboards in stores while some of the people who made the requests were helping to run raffles, illegally, for worthy causes.

GROWING ROLE FOR AFRICA IS STRESSED

A prediction that Africa will, in 300 years, be what America is today was made by Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen of New York, national director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith. Addressing the annual convention of the National Catholic Educational Association, Msgr. Sheen said that Africa takes up too little space in school geographies in relation to its size and importance.

"If a young man came to me and asked where he should go to make a future for himself, I would say go to Africa," he said. "There is the great unexplored wealth of the world. Some day the eastern nations will come into their own. The east is about to rise. Let us take cognizance of this in our education. How the east will treat the west when the east becomes master of the world will depend upon how the idea of the faith of Christ is given it."

The Rev. Robert C. Hartnett, S.J., of New York, editor of America, national Catholic weekly, discussed the expansion of Catholic schools, pointing out that 85 per cent of these schools and 95 per cent of the pupils are in urban areas.

"Not even the most hysterical public school partisan could say that we are a growing threat to the very existence of the public school system in rural areas," he said.

HERBERT H. MORSE
Layman of Hartford, Conn.

I recently had occasion to visit the reading room of a public library in central Connecticut. Being interested to see what religious publications were to be found upon the racks, I looked them over. What did I find? Unfortunately The Witness was not there. There was not one Protestant magazine in that reading room, but there were four Roman Catholic periodicals there: America, Catholic World, Commonweal and Columbia.

It seems to me that we Protestants are missing an opportunity in not seeing to it that leading Protestant publications like The Witness are on file in public libraries. Let us each visit the library in our city or community and inquire for The Witness. If the library does not subscribe for it, request it to do so. If it will not, subscribe for a copy yourself to be sent regularly to the library. Then visit the readingroom of the public library at regular intervals to see if the magazine is kept on file. If it is not, find out why. In this way you will be helping The Witness and spreading the cause of Protestantism at the same time.

ANSWER: The Witness will gladly accept gift subscriptions to libraries and other public reading rooms at $3 a year. Address: Tunkhannock, Pa.

A. F. GILMAN
Layman of Chicago

If the case of Dr. Melish opens the eyes of Church people to the place where the high Church party is leading us his travail will not have been in vain. It is a pretty well established fact that similar practices bring about similar results. The Church of Rome started out with the belief that its practices were entirely innocent and high minded with the result which came to a head in the time of Martin Luther, and still continues its hold on the masses of Roman Catholics.

Jesus said that in heaven the first should be last and the last first. That is certainly contrary to what we find in the Church of Rome. I can tell you from my own experience that it is not what the "catholic" mind in our own Church is aiming for, even though unconsciously so in many cases.

H. J. MAINWARING
Layman of Wollaston, Mass.

You have given a good and tolerant answer to layman A. C. Boers in your issue of March 22d. May I add a few words?

I think that "the principles of the Episcopal Church" are based on the fact that the Church is Reformed, Catholic, and Evangelical, and that these facts are evident in the Book of Common Prayer. The aim of the American Church Union, according to its declared purpose, is to bring Churchmen to realize that these facts are there evident and to make use of them in their daily lives.

Mr. Boers, I hope, realizes that there is no Episcopal faith, no Episcopal ministry, no Episcopal sacraments, no Episcopal creed, but that the Episcopal Church is a member of the world-wide Anglican Communion. The purpose of the Anglican Communion, as stated by the Lambeth Conference, is to maintain and spread the Catholic faith.

W. J. RUPPEL
Layman of Baltimore

I appreciate the article by Kenneth Forbes on the Pilgrimage to Washington (Witness, March 29) especially about the need for leaders. Certainly it is something to pray about.

Also in commenting on the article by Joseph Titus in the same issue: I endeavor to apply my sociological scapel in observation—and imagine the new low to which large signboard advertising has fallen in this city. At 33rd Street, considered Baltimore's best street, large illuminated signs advertise: "Fine Funerals at —— Funeral Home —— to suit your service." Never have I seen advertising fall so low, and yet I am told by outsiders that this is a wonderful place.

I think the words "funeral home" is a disgrace to the true meaning of the word "home" and is a travesty on both church and current society.

The General Convention Offices and Officers

1785 - 1950

By The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, D. D.

Secretary of the House of Deputies

THIS BOOK expounds, as no other has done, the story of the supreme legislative body of the Episcopal Church. The General Convention is the supreme legislative organ of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, which in turn is a self-governing body within the Anglican Communion — a worldwide "Fellowship within the One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church, of those duly constituted Dioceses, Provinces, or Regional Churches in communion with the see of Canterbury"—a voluntary association, united in the faith and order contained in the Book of Common Prayer. The American Episcopal Church is one of the eleven completely autonomous Churches of that Communion.

EXPLANATION OF SYMBOLS

The shields symbolize the lineage of the American Episcopal Church:

The Church of England (upper left) is the Mother Church of the Anglican Communion.

The See of Canterbury (upper right) founded in 597. The American Episcopate was received through the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Diocese of London (lower left) to which all Anglican churches in the American colonies were nominally attached.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospels in Foreign Parts (lower right) between 1701 and 1784, sent and partially supported 353 missionaries in the American colonies.

The Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. (center) has a shield similar to that of the Church of England except for the addition of the blue field with nine crosses in the form of St. Andrew's Cross. It symbolizes: (1) Its heritage from the Church of England; (2) the crosses signify the nine dioceses which completed the organization of the Church; (3) the St. Andrew's Cross symbolizes the Episcopal Church of Scotland as the first American Bishop received his episcopal orders from that Church.

STORY OF THE WEEK

St. Louis' Grace Hill House Dedicates New Gym

Charles C. Wilson as Director Carries on Extensive Program in Slum Area

★ They have been coming to town in increasing numbers for fifty years. It isn't a spectacular migration. They don't arrive on trains or ships in great numbers at a time. They don't look much different than other Americans. They speak the same language in a slang-infested short-cut sort of way. They don't wear the colorful clothes of the "foreign born" nor do they have the hopeful glint of people released from tyranny looking forward to the new freedom of America. They wear blue jeans for the most part, leather or canvas jackets, long visored caps and they look like typical American working people.

These folk come from some of the oldest American stock and though they speak the same language and have a long tradition in our democracy and folkways they are far more removed from the main core of our culture than the newest arrivals from a foreign country. They are part of the back lash of American onward cultural drive. They have been isolated from the main stream so long that their habits, mental outlook and emotional reactions are more foreign to modern city life than the newest and strangest minority groups.

From the Farms

They have come from the farms and cross-roads towns of southeast Missouri, southern Illinois, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Tennessee. King Cotton has evicted them in one way or another, having found the mechanical cotton picker, weed burner and tractor and cheap Mexican labor easier and more economical to handle. Conditioned to dirt farming their job rating for shop and factory is low. Schooling for the average has been minimal and substandard to say the least. The average adult in the neighborhood, which is in the shadow of the downtown central business district only a mile from the famous levee and old court house of Missouri Compromise fame, has attended 7.4 grades of school.

This near north-side neighborhood, four blocks west of the Mississippi, was once known as North St. Louis, a separate suburban village populated by comfortable middle and upper middle class residents. It was 105 years ago that Grace Episcopal Church was organized on property set aside by one of the first settlers for a community church and burial grounds. Since the predominant group were Episcopalians the land was deeded to the parish and a prosperous little neighborhood church became the center of the cultural and religious life of the community.

It did not last long for the same thing happened to North St. Louis that happens to every downtown area in America as the giant industrial life of the city grew. Houses which once were mansions and comfortable homes were abandoned and new owners converted them to multiple dwelling units for habitation by lower income Polish, German and later Italian immigrants. Church membership, never large, fell off drastically and the building, sold for taxes, was saved only by the courage and foresight of the descendant of an original member.

Welfare Program

In 1900 someone saw the need for a neighborhood welfare program. A clinic was established perhaps because of the fresh memory of the terrible cholera plague which filled the little grave yard with unmarked graves—so rapidly they died.

Later a kindergarten for children of working mothers began. The hill on which the church sat and which gave it its popular name, Grace Hill, was leveled and a playground created. This was the beginning of a settlement house designed to meet the varying needs of a changing neighborhood.

And how it has changed! One of the old mansions collapsed of old age last year. The average house in the area is 75 to 100 years old, 95% have no central heating, 45% have no private flush toilets. Rat infestation in the area was one of the highest until a recent ordinance brought it under some control. The typical dwelling unit is a three room affair with outdoor privy and cold water tap in kitchen. Average occupancy per room is 2.5 which means in families with children, 2 to 3 occupants per bed is common. Rents are low in the units under rent control —$9-$15 per month, but the area has been afflicted with the furnished-room racket which means that to escape rent control the landlord, frequently absentee, has put several pieces of broken down furniture in a unit and is able to rent it for $16-$20 per week. Schools are over crowded, having an average of 45 pupils per valiant teacher and in some cases it rises to 65 per class. School buildings have no recreational facilities to speak of, no auditorium or gymnasium and only small macadam surfaced play yards. The result is that the normal youthful spontaneity and gaiety of children is distorted by tense aggressiveness or worse still, sullen shyness, the most common symptom of emotional rejection.

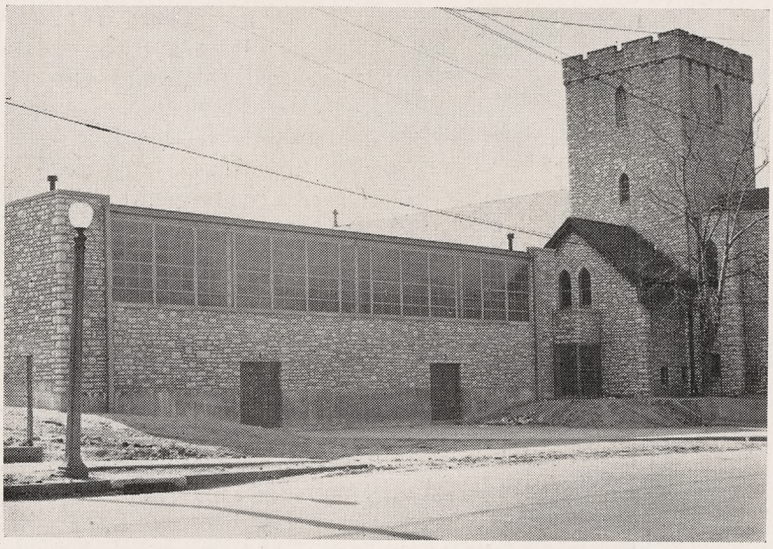
Low Incomes

According to income studies made by the agency and recorded in its annual reports, the median per capital income (total family income divided by persons living on it) of 300 families who use its direct services and on whom income records are kept, is $10 per week. In half of these families there is no father in the home and in practically all cases the mother is forced to work.

It is not an area of serious criminal elements (the racketeers operate in more affluent neighborhoods) and the rate of juvenile delinquency is not excessively high in comparison to other neighborhoods. But substandard houses, sub-standard incomes, inadequate schools lack of recreational facilities and health and welfare services have made a sorry mess of human lives. Social degradation, lack of responsibility, and deep prejudices toward other "foreign" groups are the most apparent markings. The Negroes—segregated in St. Louis—live 8 blocks south of the settlement house and a few are slowly moving in. There is irrational prejudice based on fear and insecurity. The "west end do-gooder" is least understood and generally disliked!



Church Problem

You can see the problem posed for the Episcopal Church! In the first place it looks and acts on the surface like a rich man's club. It does not speak the language of the farm-born resident and its book of Common Prayer, which implies a high degree of cultural sophistication and social responsibility, seems at first to be irrelevant. You can't pray together until you have lived together and you can't confess your sins and accept the realities of death and resurrection unless you have enough security to believe that you as a person are wanted, known and loved, and that your human destiny has a meaning.

Grace Hill developed as a settlement house with a small mission church as its organic center because it was concerned about the social responsibility Christians have for one another. It does not preach as much as it listens. With its professionally trained staff of 20 persons including two physicians, a trained nurse, clerk, social worker, six group workers trained in graduate social work, three nursery teachers, it operates a number of direct services such as medical, nursery school and day-care for school age children. Its volume of service last year was 90,000 hours plus a clinic serving 1500 individuals for a patient visit load of 7,800. Its work is non-denominational and interracial and its $67,000 operating budget is underwritten by the St. Louis community chest.

There has been opposition to the interracial policy in the neighborhood but it has been fascinating to watch the change in attitude of children who discover through fellowship in an interracial Bible school, playground and gymnasium that Negroes are people too and "ain't any different than the rest of us."

The agency recently constructed a gymnasium and parish hall as an attractive wing to its church building. The gym, with its ample courts and stage and adjoining craft and club rooms, is the great tool by which its staff develops a creative atmosphere where plain people learn to live together and respect each other.

GRACE HILL HOUSE where a fine new gymnasium was recently dedicated by Bishop Scarlett. The architect is Mr. Frederick Dunn and the director of the settlement is the Rev. Charles C. Wilson. They are pictured on the cover

Total cost of the gym was $48,000 including some equipment and renovation of the church basement which it adjoins. It is 95' long, 44' wide and 20' high, has a capacity of 550 as auditorium and a standard elementary school size basketball court. It is made of Missouri granite to match the church and is a simple functional design which makes it attractive as well as extremely practical. This building is further proof that it isn't necessary to spend large sums of money for church construction unless one insists on copying older forms of architecture. The architect, Mr. Frederick Dunn, goes on the theory that the materials of construction themselves when creatively designed are things of beauty. They do not have to be hidden by expensive arches and expensive plaster and panelling, and how appropriate this simple honesty is in a work which operates on the philosophy that people as such are real and don't need to be crusted over with cultural veneer to be accepted by God and man!

The board of directors of Grace Hill House are selected on a rotating basis from social minded leadership in the Episcopal diocese of Missouri and the St. Louis community. The majority are Episcopalian. They see their main function as an interpretive and promotional job and are active in many social and civic affairs in St. Louis. The agency is one of the "social consciences" of the Church and is constantly fighting for better living conditions for the people it serves.

BISHOP EMRICH AT BEXLEY

★ Bishop Emrich of Michigan delivered four lectures at Bexley Hall, Gambier, O., April 3-4, attended by about fifty clergymen from several dioceses, as well as the students and faculty of Bexley. His subject was the doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

BISHOP PEABODY PROTESTS

★ Opposition to the use of a building next to his home which has been purchased on option by the Benevolent Order of Pioneers was voiced by Bishop Malcolm Peabody before the Syracuse city planning commission. Bishop Peabody claimed that his bedroom is on the side of his residence which is adjacent to the driveway of the club, and that, if the club were allowed to operate there, his rest would be interrupted by cars using the driveway. He also stated that the club would congest traffic on James street, on which his home is located.

The Bishop's testimony, which attracted five column headlines in Syracuse papers, was disputed by Richard Byrne, former State Senator, who said that traffic problems are common to all sections of the city. He further said that James street, on which the Episcopal mansion is located, is in the process of evolution from a residential street to one of business and related activities.

RECTOR PROMOTES THE WITNESS

★ The Rev. Carl J. Webb, rector of St. John's, Franklin, Pa., calls attention to the copies of The Witness which are on sale at the church by mentioning it each week in the bulletin of the parish. His April 8th Bulletin said: "I want to call your attention to The Witness on the literature table today. It is particularly interesting this week. The leading article discusses baptism sponsors or god-parents. Then there is an editorial dealing with the gambling racket and racketeers in general. Gambling across the country, as well as here in Franklin, presents a terrible evil which Christians should fight with courage and without fear or favor. This editorial on gambling is an eye opener. You will want to read it."

YOUTH CONVENTION IN NEW YORK

★ Bishop Donegan was the preacher and Bishop Boynton the celebrant at a service held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine which opened the diocesan youth convention on April 14. In the afternoon, following a business meeting, there were two hours of dancing with a fine youth orchestra, the Blue Knights of Pleasantville, providing the music. The Rev. J. Willard Yoder is the director of youth work, as well as education, in the diocese.

SCHOOLS OF RELIGION AT VANDERBILT

★ The Rev. Otis Rice, director of religion at St. Luke's Hospital, New York, gave three lectures on the pastoral relationship at the school of religion at Vanderbilt University, April 4-5.

Spirit of brotherhood is characteristic of all activities at Grace Hill House

CORPORATE COMMUNION FOR LAYMEN

Over five hundred laymen of the diocese of Washington attended the third annual corporate communion in Calvary Church April 8th. Bishop Angus Dun was the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. James O. West, Jr., rector of Calvary, the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of St. John's, Canon Richard Williams of the Washington Cathedral staff, the Rev. W. A. Mollegen of Virginia Seminary and the Rev. Quinland Gordon, vicar of the chapel of the Atonement. Laymen in attendance represented parishes and missions throughout the diocese of Washington and Maryland and Virginia. Members of the Canterbury Club at Maryland and Howard Universities, and students from the Virginia Seminary shared in the service.

Joint sponsors of this service were the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the department of promotion of the diocese and the diocesan committee on laymen's work. Lawrence A. Oxley, a leading layman who is an official in the department of labor, headed the groups sponsoring this corporate gathering.

Similar services of worship are planned for Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, Philadelphia, and in the dioceses of North Carolina and West Texas. Through these corporate services laymen are afforded the opportunity to express their "Oneness in Christ" across racial lines and to experience the full meaning of Christian fellowship.

BISHOP OF EXETER ON CANON LAW

★ Five lectures on "the history and development of canon law" are being given by Bishop Mortimer of Exeter on April 16, 18, 20, 23, 25, at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. The subjects of the individual lectures are "the growth of the classical tradition," "chaos and reform," "the creation of the Corpus," "canon law in England after the Reformation," and "characteristics of canon law."

The law school of the University of California is joining the divinity school in sponsoring this lectureship.

TAYLORS RETURN FROM CHINA

★ Dr. and Mrs. Harry B. Taylor, and their daughter, Helen, arrived in San Francisco April 11th by ship, thus ending their long missionary work in China. He writes: "We are happy in the present situation of the Church and hospital in Anking. The hospital is still under the Church and is being run by a committee with the head Chinese doctor as chairman. A new class of nurses has been taken in. The head of the school has her responsibility lessened as a committee makes many decisions. The chaplain is now social service worker in the hospital.

"The Church goes on as usual but without financial help from America. The staff is planning various means of self-support, while continuing their work for the Church. Congregations hold up wonderfully. A large class was baptized at Christmas.

"The Chinese Church needs our fervent prayers. We think it dangerous for our Chinese friends to receive letters from us, and trying to send funds is even more dangerous.

"We are sad at having to leave the scene of our life work (Dr. Taylor went to Anking in 1905). But we look forward to working in the United States in the years still granted to us."

CONVENTION OF UTAH

★ Bishop Lewis of Nevada, acting bishop of Utah, told the delegates to the convention meeting in Salt Lake City that there has been marked increases in the life of the Church in the district during the past year. He also read a message of greeting from Dean Richard Watson of Seattle, who will be consecrated bishop of Utah on May 1st. The work of the convention was routine.

CHINA MISSIONARY ADDRESSES YOUTH

★ Margaret Richey, former medical missionary to China, was a headliner at the conference of youth of the diocese of Delaware, meeting at St. Andrew's School and attended by 220 delegates. Also featured was the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett who spoke on choosing a career or vocation. He explained that the difference is that one chooses a career for what one can get out of it and a vocation for what one can give.

DEVEAUX HEADMASTER RESIGNS

★ The Rev. William S. Hudson has resigned as headmaster of DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, N. Y., a position he has held since 1942. He is to return to parish work as associate at Trinity, Buffalo. The new headmaster, as of August 1, will be Morison Brigham of St. Paul, Minnesota.

GEORGIA ELECTS FIRST NEGRO

★ The convention of the diocese of Georgia, meeting at Albany, elected a Negro, for the first time in its history, to serve on the executive council. He is the Rev. G. H. Caution of Savannah.

YOUTH COMMISSION IN NEW YORK

★ Each college in the diocese of New York is to have one representative on the Canterbury commission, organization of Episcopal college students. They are to meet the weekend of April 28 to plan a program for the coming college year.

FOOD FOR INDIA IS URGED

★ Bishop Dun of Washington headed a list of clergy signing a letter addressed to Speaker Sam Rayburn of the House of Representatives, asking for immediate action on the proposed gift of 2,000,000 tons of food grains for India.

EPISCOPALIANS IN JAPAN

★ Bishop Yashiro of Japan believes that the Episcopal Church there has considerably more members than are reported. He quotes figures from the book, Japan Begins Again by W. L. Kerr, who says that the Sei Ko Kwai has 45,909 members. But the bishop writes that he is not enamoured with Japanese statistics, and he relates how one priest said to him, "You want me to send a report? But 'our citizenship is in heaven.' When I baptize a person, I register him in heaven. I'm too busy to put him down in a notebook."

"Even before the war," writes the bishop, "it was difficult to get accurate statistics. Now the larger churches have lost their equipment and registers during the war, and it was impossible for a while to do any office work at all. The majority of Christians evacuated to the country during the war and it was impossible to find out about them for months because of the terrific destruction, and when it became feasible not enough was done to locate Church members.

"However, I discern reason for hope even in these small figures. The reason is that as I visit the churches, I realize that it is a mistake to rely on statistics. We should rather try to have the insight of St. John who, in the book of Revelation, did not sum up the condition of the churches in Asia in figures but with observations of quality made with the eye of a good pastor.

"I feel hopeful for two reasons: One, I am convinced that the number of our Christians exceeds 60,000. When I returned from the Lambeth Conference, I visited the home of a Christian in Tokuyama. This family had rented a hall, put up notices everywhere and arranged for an evangelistic meeting all on their own. About 2,000 attended. After it was over, 11 came forward and said they belonged to the Sei Ko Kwai; they were not on the register of any particular church. The result of this meeting is that now there is a group of 30 members able to support a woman worker who is with them now, and they are looking forward to the day when a missionary can be sent to them. This sort of thing happens wherever I go on my travels.

"Two, my second reason for hopefulness is this. Whereas before the war the average number of people baptized was 1,100 and confirmed 700, and 400 reported admitted as catechumens, today the number of baptisms in one year is double, as is the number of confirmations, and there are three times as many catechumens as before the war. In the NSKK, too, people are not baptized as quickly as in some other denominations; they receive instruction for from 6 to 12 months. As secure a foundation as possible is laid."

CHURCHES COOPERATE IN TENNESSEE

★ There is cooperation between churches in Tracy City, Tenn., with the ministers holding monthly meetings, and several of the churches sponsoring joint services. The latest venture in cooperation was a dinner given by the vestry and women of Christ Church, the proceeds going to the local Methodist Church, which is building a new church.

GOOD-WILL TOUR TO JAPAN

★ Joseph C. Grew, Episcopalian who was formerly ambassador to Japan, announced awards on April 2 to two Protestant youths who will go to Japan in June to advance the work of the Japan Christian University. They will formally present to Emperor Hirohito a scroll bearing the names of 60,000 young people who have contributed to the building of the new university at Mitaka. The pair, George Lewis, student at the University of Illinois and a Presbyterian, and Miriam Corless, a Methodist of Wilmington, Del., were awarded the all-expenses-paid trips as winners of an essay contest sponsored by the foundation raising funds for the university.

CHILDREN'S CHAPEL DEDICATED

★ A children's chapel and church school house were dedicated recently for Holy Trinity, Aina Haina, Oahu, Hawaii by Bishop Kennedy. There were 690 persons at the service at which the vicar, the Rev. John J. Morrett, also presented 39 for confirmation.

NEW HAMPSHIRE CLERGY MEET

★ The annual conference of the clergy of New Hampshire was held at the educational center, Plainfield, April 10-11.

Fellowship meetings are frequent at Grace Hill House, when boys of nearby Carver House, serving largely a Negro community, have a party together

WOMEN PRESENT PROGRAMS

★ Women of the Episcopal Church are being asked by the Woman's Auxiliary, to write meeting programs on a number of topics of current interest and concern in the Church. The general idea of enlisting non-professional help is termed "The Stewardship of Talent," and the thought is conveyed that "the plan makes it possible for every woman to offer the kind of program she has always wished she could find being used in her group. It means that women with a gift for creative writing may contribute that talent to the work of the Church. It means that programs submitted will be indicative of the kind desired. It means hidden ability; writers, now unknown, may be discovered."

Manuscripts must be received before July 1. They will be read by members of the National Council, and the final judges will be members of the national executive board of the Auxiliary.

Full information may be obtained from Miss Avil E. Harvey, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

ENGLAND STRESSES VALUE OF CHOIRS

★ One hundred thousand Anglican choir boys are warbling in Great Britain. According to a report in Punch, the "biggest youth movement in the Church of England" is the activity carried on among these boys by the royal school of Church music at Canterbury. In England and abroad, 3,000 Church choirs are affiliated with the school and receive from it practical counsel and help.

The boys are "potentially the keen Churchmen of the future," wrote Eric Keown in Punch, "and at a time of unsettled homes and shaky standards membership of a good choir under the right sort of leader is of great value."

The College of St. Nicholas, also at Canterbury, provides year-long courses for organists and choirmasters, "a small, intimate university of music. There is nothing quite like it in the world." The school was founded in 1927 by the late Sir Sydney Nicholson. He supported and directed it until his death in 1947. "His ambition was not to make church music more elaborate but to teach church choirs to get the best out of themselves."

RECTOR RECEIVES GOLD CUP

★ Gold loving cups were presented recently to the Rev. Sheldon Davis and Mrs. Charles Shiveley of Forest City, Arkansas, who were declared by the local chamber of commerce the "man of the year" and the "woman of the year." Mr. Davis, rector of the Good Shepherd, was chosen for "his work in building up churches in the area, and because of his help to the needy." He worked with Alcoholics Anonymous, Salvation Army and East Arkansas civic music association. Mrs. Shiveley's award was based on church, civic and welfare leadership.

EPISCOPALIAN IS NAM PRESIDENT

★ William H. Ruffin, president of a manufacturing concern in Durham, N. C., is the new president of the National Association of Manufacturers. He is senior warden of St. Philip's, and has been active in Church affairs for many years. He has been superintendent of a Sunday school, president of the laymen's league, and has served on the executive council of the diocese of North Carolina.

LAYMAN PRESENTS CLASS

★ St. Christopher's, Kailua, Oahu, H. I., is without a rector. So Layman Norman Ault undertook the preparation of a class of eighteen and presented them to Bishop Kennedy for confirmation.

ENGLISH LECTURER AT BERKELEY

★ Bishop William Havard of St. David's, Wales, will be the visiting English lecturer at the Berkeley Divinity School for 1951-1952. He is a graduate of the University of Wales and Llandaff Theological College. He was a chaplain in the first world war and was twice mentioned in dispatches. For some years thereafter he was chaplain and tutor of Jesus College, Oxford, where he took a graduate degree in history. After serving in English and Welsh parishes, he was from 1928-1934 Vicar of the important parish of Swansea and Canon of Brecon. In 1934 he became Bishop of St. Asaph, and in 1950 was translated to St. David's, the oldest see of Great Britain. He has been Select Preacher at Oxford, Cambridge, St. Andrew's, and other English and Scottish universities. His program in the United States will include visits to universities as well as to parishes. His course of lectures at Berkeley will be on the Celtic Church.

COLLEGE PROFESSORS TO MEET

★ A mid-west institute in religion for college faculty members will be held June 17th to 22nd at the DeKoven Foundation, Racine, Wisconsin. Series of lectures will be given by Dean William H. Nes of Nashotah House and Mrs. Ursula M. Niebuhr, professor of religion at Barnard College.

The institute is under the auspices of the college work division of the National Council, the Church society for college work, and the college work commissions of the fifth and sixth provinces.

Invitations are extended to members of the faculties of universities, colleges, and normal schools in the area from Ohio to Montana and south to Missouri and Kansas.

All Time Low

THE degradation of the Christian faith has reached a new low level in a document entitled "Credo of Hope—1951" sent out by the National Association of Manufacturers. The document is so revealing that we present it in full:

"We believe that American business can and must save the world.

"We believe that political, social and economic chaos exists because, while we nominally are a Christian nation, we have forsaken Christian philosophy to such an extent that we are now predominately a materialistic nation.

"We believe that in every chaos there is the seed of rebuilding and that in this present chaos one of the seeds of rebuilding is the fear in the heart of we materialists that we will lose our material gains.

"We believe that political leaders have demonstrated that they are unable to mount an offensive in an ideological war.

"We believe that in a materialist nation economic forces are the potent forces. We believe that the American business associations are the only groups that can and will put the money on the line to resell Christian philosophy to America, and thus smother out communism and other false ideologies. We believe that, except for the federal treasury, the economic power joined by the American business associations is the only force equal to the task of waging and winning a national and international ideological war.

"We believe that any idea, even Christian philosophy, can be sold if backed by a proper sales campaign.

"We believe that the American business organizations are the only agencies that can coordinate and thus make effective all of the movements that are now selling partial or watered-down portions of the Sermon on the Mount.

"We believe that business organizations such as the National Association of Manufacturers, The Committee for Economic Development, The Advertising Council, the United States Chamber of Commerce and the American Bankers Association, can and must spearhead the effort to wage and win an ideological war.

"We believe that the National Association of Manufacturers, can and should call together the heads of the principal business organizations and organize an Ideological War Council.

"We believe that the Council should call in three outstanding ideological leaders, one Catholic, one Protestant and one Jew and commission them to confer and come forth with a statement of simple truths commonly accepted in a Judeo-Christian civilization. Those truths should be given to a staff of five top men in the advertising industry of America and those top men should be commissioned to prepare them for sale.

"We believe that then these truths should be sold by all of the modern means of advertising, through all modern means of communication, on a mass production scale.

"We believe that such an ideological offensive can be launched immediately, that it can spread rapidly throughout the nation and can then be extended throughout the world.

"We believe that Almighty God will bless the effort."

Such a document tempts one to despair of American culture. No European or Asian criticism of American life could possibly be as damaging as this self-revelation. It puts its trust in some kind of Christian philosophy, but its hope is that "in this present chaos one of the seeds of rebuilding is the fear in the heart of we (sic) materialists that we will lose our material gains." Perhaps the most perfect bit of self-revelation is contained in the phrase: "We believe that the American business organizations are the only agencies that can coordinate and thus make effective all of the movements that are now selling partial and watered-down portions of the Sermon on the Mount." Someone might write a doctor's dissertation on the role which the Sermon on the Mount plays as a symbol in the vapid idealism which passes for the Christian faith in many parts of America, and which is now to be neatly packaged and "sold" by salesmen and advertisers. What kind of blindness or perversity prompts this vapid idealism to choose, of all symbols, the Sermon on the Mount, with its exacting moral demands, all of them straining at the limits of human possibilities? What will the "Ideological War Council" do with the words "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt?" And how will they, in their great selling campaign, make use of the words "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction."

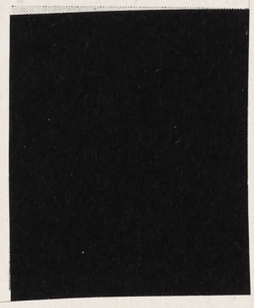
American Mikado

IT is cause for cheers that finally pressure from without has had something to do with silencing or removing from his strategic post that overage destroyer, General of the Army MacArthur. Our own government has been in a difficult position in regard to the American Mikado because of his tremendous popularity, much of it Hearst inspired. Finally our U. N. satellites, still smarting under the lash of American demands for conformity to our war-making policies, have been able to get MacArthur the retirement he so richly deserves. It is high time his well-known love for words be given full play in an autobiography.

In the meantime we are still reaping the whirlwind of his wordy, inflammatory, and irresponsible pronouncements on not only the Far East but the world. He has been egging us and the U. N. on into what would lead to total war with the Communist bloc. He would have us take to our bosoms all of the Francos, big and little, of the earth. He would put us back twenty years and leave us with a world full of reincarnations of Hitler and Mussolini.



Supposing that our terrifying war-making efficiency and our use of A, H, or Q bombs could bring the Communists down to manageable size then would the next act be a return engagement against our fascist "friends?" The futility of following the MacArthur line is all too apparent. The danger of permitting West Pointers to try their hands at diplomacy has been proved. Those who cannot tell the difference between a dove of peace and a dead pigeon are very few today. Let us have men who understand the rising tide of anti-American feeling, who sympathize with the yearnings of the awakening Orientals, and who distrust policies rooted in threats of reprisal to represent the peace-loving Americans who have not forgotten that they once were revolutionary.

The Living Liturgy ---

Concept of Holy Order

BY
MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR.

ONE of the most fruitful ideas of the liturgical renaissance of our time is its recovery of the concept of holy order. This is a result of a renewal of emphasis upon the Pauline doctrine of the Church as one Body under one Head who is Christ, a Body composed of many members interdependent one with another. These members, with their diverse spiritual gifts and differences of ministry, have their own specific functions to perform for the benefit and enhancement of the whole. If one member does not function properly within his own order the whole Body suffers.

These ministries may be variously classified, depending upon whether the perspective required be the government of the Church, or its education, its worship, or its work of charity. The earliest differentiation would seem to be that of apostles, prophets and teachers. But equally ancient are the distinctions of bishops, presbyters (or elders), and deacons. There were also the orders or ministries of healers, exorcists, widows, deaconesses, readers, etc. With respect to the central act of the Church's worship, the orders were threefold. First, there was the celebrant or presiding order. This was normally the bishop, but the presbyters shared the honor of presidency, and in the bishop's absence acted as his deputies. It was their specific charge to receive the offerings of the people and solemnly consecrate them by a prayer of thanksgiving—the Eucharist properly speaking—to be the Body and Blood of the Lord. The deacons, sometimes assisted by a lesser order of sub-deacons, were their assistants. They presented the offerings of the people to the celebrant, assisted in the preparation of the holy table, and also in the administration of the consecrated gifts to the faithful, both those who were present and those who were absent.

The third order was the laity, whose obligation and privilege were to present and offer, each one for himself, the gifts of bread and wine. This duty and honor were theirs by virtue of their own ordination into the priesthood of all believers, namely, their initiation by Baptism and Confirmation into the royal, high-priestly Body of Christ. Sometimes there were further differentiations within the order of laity; i. e., some of them might be appointed readers for the Scriptural lessons, others assigned to be doorkeepers, to watch the doors lest any illicit intruders steal in to spy upon the sacred mysteries. But no Eucharist could be properly celebrated unless all these orders were assembled together to do, each for the other, their own appointed tasks within the corporate whole. And no bishop or deacon could usurp the layman's right to make his offering, any more than a layman could usurp the bishop's or the deacon's ordained right to perform their specific functions. That irascible Church father Tertullian used to complain, not perhaps without some exaggeration, that in the conventicles of the heretics this discipline of holy order was not observed. For, said he of them, "it comes to pass that today one man is their bishop, tomorrow another; today he is a deacon who tomorrow is a reader; today he is a presbyter who tomorrow is a layman; for even on laymen do they impose the functions of priesthood."

This ancient conception of holy order may seem to be overly rigid; but it did preserve the corporate character of the Eucharist and the sense of obligation resting upon each member of the faithful to take his active share in its observance. In the course of time the Western Church has obscured this very necessary and vital teaching, first by its depreciation of the order of deacons, and secondly by its allowing the offering of the gifts of bread and wine by the laity to drop out of use. In many parishes the order of celebrant took unto itself every function. It not only consecrates, it also subsumes the duties of the diaconate, and does all the actions of the offertory. In fact the order of deacon has become an anomaly, for his liturgical functions can just as well be performed by a priest, or (in large measure) by a layman-acolyte. And we all know how the laity have been reduced to passive spectators, auditors and receivers. Very often they do not even realize that an acolyte is their representative, bringing their offerings from credence to altar. He seems much more to be the priest's assistant. So great has the confusion of orders become that in recent General Conventions it has been seriously proposed that laymen be allowed to administer the consecrated wine from the chalice. What would Tertullian have said to that!

There are two things we could do to eliminate this confusion and restore, if we like, the concept of holy order. One of them we have treated of frequently in this column, namely, the revival of the offering of the gifts by representatives of the people—the Offertory Procession. The other necessity is a reexamination of our practice with respect to the order of deacons. At present deacons are patient men who wait six months or a year for promotion from their "inferior office." The trouble is that we think they must be professional, full-time clergy. Actually it would make more sense if we took our present canonical arrangements for lay-readers, gave them a modicum of theological instructions, ordained them perpetual deacons, and let them stick to their secular jobs and vocations. Then every congregation would have one or more deacons to assist at the holy Eucharist, and they would once again serve, as they did in the early Church, as true mediaries between the order of priesthood and the order of the laity.

Almost Everyone, Everywhere, Wants Peace

BY WILLIAM CARY

PROBABLY many of us have a feeling, in these days, that we are being pushed into a full-scale world war—which means, to the brink of disaster. Dr. Albert Einstein, among other scientists, has given us a solemn warning:

"The idea of achieving security through national armament," he says, "is, at the present state of military technique, a disastrous illusion . . . The armament race between the U. S. A. and the U. S. S. R, originally supposed to be a preventive measure, assumes a hysterical character . . . The H-bomb appears on the public horizon as a probably attainable goal. Its accelerated development has been solemnly proclaimed by the President.

"If successful, radioactive poisoning of the atmosphere and hence annihilation of any life on earth has been brought within the range of technical possibilities. The ghostlike character of this development lies in its apparently compulsory trend. Every step appears as the unavoidable consequence of the preceding one. In the end, there beckons more and more clearly general annihilation."

What has brought the American people to accept such a program of mass murder and mass suicide?

Do we really know what our supposed enemies are doing and thinking?

What the Poles Think

AFTER the second world war, I spent a year and a half in refugee relief work, mainly in France, spent some time also in England, Czechoslovakia, and Poland. I should like to speak particularly about Poland, because it is a country that is not well known to many Americans, and because it has a common frontier with Russia, and because it suffered so terribly in the war, and because in the summer and fall of 1947 I traveled in many parts of it and talked with a lot of people there.

My particular interest was in visiting hospitals, children's homes, and other welfare and health organizations. But I also went through some Polish factories, went down into a coal mine in Silesia, visited people in their offices and homes. You can get along pretty well there with French and a little German; some of the people speak English; and I generally found someone in any group to act as translator if necessary.

During the war, nearly one person in every five in Poland was killed by the Germans—6,000,000 perished in all. Half the doctors, for instance, half the trained nurses, a large proportion of school and college teachers were killed, in concentration camps or elsewhere. Towns, villages, factories, hospitals were smashed.

The tuberculosis rate when I was there was ten times as high as in the United States. One and a half million Polish children had lost either their father or mother; 440,000 of them had lost both parents.

The Poles know the meaning of war. They want no more of it.

Time and again they spoke to me of two subjects uppermost in their minds: their need for protection against Germany, and—reconstruction. The word "reconstruction" was on everyone's lips, and was continually top news in the press. Their decision to rebuild Warsaw—a city formerly of 1,300,000 inhabitants. 80 per cent of it destroyed by the Germans—was in itself evidence of their faith that another world war need not come. What people would have the courage and energy to rebuild a city from its ruins if they expected it to be blown to pieces again?

And for protection against Germany, where were the Poles looking for help? To England? Not after Munich, and after the German invasion of Poland in 1939. To the United States? No. To Germany? Certainly not. The first plank in their foreign-relations platform, therefore, to which practically everyone I talked with, of all economic and cultural levels, agreed, was—friendship with Russia.

One might expect this from most of the government leaders. It was less to be expected, however, from Christopher Radziwill, descendant of generations of wealthy and powerful landowners. He had been a member of the senate in pre-war Poland, and after the war was elected to the new national parliament. His large estates had recently been divided up among peasants who had been unable to get any land. He said to me: "I support the government's policy of friendship with Russia, because any other policy would leave us open to aggression from Germany."

Several Poles told me they thought that the propaganda of reactionary leaders in the United States would prove to be more harmful to the people of the United States than to the people of Europe. They said they knew from bitter experience what happens when people become poisoned by war propaganda: the road leads straight to regimentation and to concentration camps.

Since the Poles had been used to thinking of the United States as a land of freedom and a champion of freedom, those I talked with were worried that we were putting ex-Nazis back into positions of power in German industry and government.

People Basically Decent

IN Poland, and elsewhere both in eastern and western Europe, I rediscovered several truths:

One, that almost all people are basically decent, and respond in a friendly, and even surprisingly outgoing and generous way, if decently treated. Two, that the Poles, together with the French, the Czechs, the English, and others are potentially the friends of the American people. Three, that people who have suffered most from war are the ones who therefore most deeply and earnestly desire peace.

Secretary-General Trygve Lie, upon his return from Europe just a month before the start of the Korean war, reported: "In the minds of the mothers and in the minds of the veterans was the thought: no more war in this world. I had more sympathy from the ordinary men and women, those who are bearing the burden of carrying on their work every day, those who are building the world, during my five weeks' trip in Europe, than at any time before. Europe wants peace: both those in the eastern European countries and those in the western European countries."

As for Russia, Mr. Harrison Salisbury, New York Times correspondent in Moscow, reported in the Times as follows: "Moscow observers have little doubt that the Soviet Union would welcome some form of discussions with the United States with a view of discovering at least a shred of possibility exists for settling any of the ever-broadening range of problems that divide the two nations . . . A tremendous amount of space and attention in the Soviet press is devoted to the problem of maintaining peace."

American Hysteria

BUT to go back a bit. When I returned to the United States, the headlines—and people's attitudes—hit me in the face. A-bombs, H-bombs, hate-the-Russians, scorn the Chinese; suspect everybody; war is inevitable; "satellites," "puppets"; "How soon will Stalin swallow western Europe,"? etc. It was terrific—and it has gotten much worse since then. But I couldn't help feeling that much of it must have originated in well-financed headquarters: there was something synthetic about it. And it simply didn't check with what I had experienced among people in Europe during the previous two years.

And so it is today. Here is the President of this nation, as reported in the New York Times in a statement to a meeting of Jewish War Veterans: "The free peoples of the world have given their answer through the United Nations . . . Our country has accepted the role of leadership. To be successful we must increase our economic and our military strength. This will require some sacrifices by everyone. The farmer, the wage-earner and the business man must each be satisfied to work more for the good of all and to take a little less for himself."

Note the implicit self-righteousness in these words from an editorial in the Times on the same date: "The Russians love to draw imaginary lines and turn them into embattled frontiers. They love to create artificial divisions and exploit the trouble they cause. Above all, they love to repeat themselves. The failure of a thrust in one place never deters them from trying it in another."

And here is our Secretary of State, in his peace-through-armaments speech: "The small group of men who hold the Russian people in an iron grip is not content to entrench the power of its regime. These men seek to expand their control over other peoples. Wherever there is prospect of success, they have reached out for more territory, more people . . . But as the strength and durability of the free nations bite into the consciousness of the Soviet leaders, some modification of their determination to achieve world domination could follow."

The most appalling thing to me is the rapid paralysis of the American mind. The normal and mature mind should recognize that people responsible for statements such as those which I have quoted are out of touch with world realities and world needs.

Losing Our Friends

THE plain fact is that those in control of American policy use the words "peace" and "democracy," but talk and act war. And the war in Korea is being used as an excuse to stay any protest for decency and sanity. First, we are dragged into a war whose growth and ending no one can foresee. Then we are told, in effect, "We are in it, and must see it through." I say, "We are in it, and must see through it."

The fact is, Americans have a bad case of the jitters, and apparently assume that everyone else in the world must feel the same way. Europeans mistrust American policy, but there is no such general hysteria in Europe as exists here.

We have lost friends all over the world; we are hated and feared. Millions of ordinary Europeans have come to believe that the U. S. government is moving rapidly toward dominating peoples abroad and regimenting the American people at home.

Do they have any reason for this feeling? Look at our headlines and editorials on any day. Look at the growing intimidation of people and the scorning of civil rights. And now we are proposing to rearm western Germany—under Nazi officers!

What has happened to our good neighbor policy? Is it not still true that the way to have a friend is to be one?

I remember how the villages of Korea looked, during a trip there many years ago. The houses were generally huddled together, as if for protection, with their straw-thatched roofs practically touching one another. Last week one of the newspaper correspondents in Korea commented that "the American air force devastated villages as the only means of bringing the enemy into the open." There have been some apologies, too, for having to kill civilians—old men, and women and even children — because the Americans couldn't tell whether some of them might be North Koreans. Perhaps you read of an American G. I. who was brought to a hospital in Japan as a serious mental case because he couldn't stomach the mopping up of civilians, which, in his case, included the killing of a small Korean girl.

How long are we going to continue bringing civilization to backward peoples by dropping jellied-gasoline bombs on them?

Who Gains from All This?

TO a few Americans strategically placed, wars—cold or hot—are very profitable. It is not so much that they want war, I think, as that they want the profits and the power which war brings them. We are obliged to pay billions of dollars, in ever higher taxes, to blow to pieces foreign people and their towns, villages, bridges, railroads —all that they have lived by. A large slice of the money paid for this mass murder goes to war profiteers. Then, billions of dollars more are required (and here again are tremendous profits for some people) to reconstruct and rehabilitate what is left. Must this become the economic basis of American prosperity?

When I was in India, China, and Korea, long ago, two things struck me, as they would probably strike most Americans traveling in the Far East. One was the grinding poverty of most of the people. The other was the attitude of the white man. It was clear that, with a few exceptions, the white man was interested, not in the needs and viewpoint of the people, but in doing very handsomely for himself. Consciously or unconsciously he kept the native "in his place." And that was a low place. It was inevitable that some day the peoples of Asia would try to throw off this load of poverty and foreign domination.

Today, colonial empires everywhere are crumbling; this is a vast historical process which, as Prime Minister Nehru of India has pointed out, is only incidentally related to the issue of Communism.

The people of Europe and Asia believe that they are working for a new freedom which has long been denied them. And many of them have come to believe that our government is fighting for the status quo—or rather, for the status quo of 50 years ago.

Peace Is Attainable

IT has been said that millions of Americans would be thrown out of jobs if peace should suddenly break out. But if they could make and distribute only things to protect and enhance life, not to destroy it, they would remain employed—and would in fact have a higher standard of living; we need houses, schools, hospitals, hydroelectric plants, control of soil erosion and of floods, reforestation, the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

The American talents for organizing and producing could be put to use in greatly expanded world-wide trade. Countries in Europe and Asia need just about everything from tractors to penicillin. From a hard-headed business point of view, there are tremendous markets in eastern Europe, Russia, and China. Why should Americans let this trade with hundreds of millions of people go, by defaults, to Great Britain and other industrial nations?

There are also, of course, higher reasons for peace. Personally, I favor the Quaker peace proposals, made some time ago; I agree with their stand that a basis of common interest in peace does exist and could be developed.

It seems to me that the only realistic, the only sane, course to follow—as fellow-inhabitants of the only planet available to us—is to build on what we have in common, and not try to destroy each other on account of differences.

The Fellowship of Reconciliation has put the matter squarely: "War, even atomic and biological war, may conceivably be an instrument to serve the purposes of a totalitarian regime, though it is more likely to destroy every nation that uses it. But war, certainly in its modern form, can only poison and destroy democracy. Christians or humanitarians who take up atom bombs belie their own professions, cause a rent in their own souls, and inflict an abysmal spiritual defeat upon themselves."

The Christian Standard

BY

GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity, Miami

A STANDARD is absolute, it must be to be a standard. I remember a question of Bishop Woodcock's, "Would you accept an almost fresh egg?"

One may acknowledge a failure, but one may not lower the standard to the level of failure and still have anything worth while at which to aim. Endeavor, and not achievement, is the measure of our faith. "A man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?"

One of the greatest failures of our society is its willingness to let the norm of accomplishment be the standard for the majority. How often does the adult offer as an excuse for his conduct, the reasoning of the child, "Well, he does it?"

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The failure of others is no excuse for my failure, and the accomplishments of others may spur me on to renewed effort, but not for long unless my ideal is greater. We need the ideal, we need the "counsel of perfection."

If we are to accept as our highest ideal the average of society around us, we can hope for nothing better than mediocrity. Perhaps that is the best I shall attain, but even so, I am not willing to make it my objective. I shall lose trying—it is "goal to go."

If one is to have some such philosophy of life, he needs that which worship brings into life. He needs an idea of God, and he must needs develop that idea and make it live, it must in turn be an experience.

That is what Christianity has to offer, not simply a moral code, not a hope of reward, nor an escape from hell, rather a way of life—Jesus' way. Only that man or woman is a Christian who, despite failure, honestly wants, not his own, but Jesus' way.

High Fidelity

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

WHEN a radio or record player comes near reproducing the original sounds of orchestra or voice, we say that it has "high fidelity."

When a man and a woman each give themselves utterly in love to the other so that the glory of utter trust and faithfulness is revealed, they have achieved "high fidelity"—a reproduction of the original love which is the source of all life.

That such a union is possible has been proven again and again. That in it and only in it can the full glory and beauty of sexual intercourse be found is the testimony of innumerable couples and the official declaration of all Christian Churches. That every marriage does not lead to such union and that some bear no resemblance to it, is one of the sad facts of life in our society.

Obviously we face here, as in many situations, the necessity for showing more clearly to more people the glory of what is possible under God and the opportunity for tempering justice with mercy in judging the ones who fail.

Sadness over what they are missing rather than condemnation of what they have done is our proper attitude. Thanksgiving and wonder at what God makes possible for us when we are faithful and joy that his will has been revealed to us in this Seventh Commandment is in our hearts as we turn to him daily in prayer. Confidence that even greater things are in store for us in the next life where we are told there is no marriage but we are as the angels is our attitude as we face the future.

Dying and Living

BY

W. A. LAWRENCE
Bishop of Western Massachusetts

HAVE you ever thought what a terrible thing it would be if there was no such thing as death? Just think of being sentenced to live on and on in this world for unending years. It is awful even to contemplate.

As a matter of fact, life is made up of a continuous procession of small deaths and new living. Every particle in our body is renewed at least every seven years, so the scientists tell us.

As Christians, we are called to "die daily unto sin and to live unto righteousness." This matter of living is actually a matter of continuous dying. In order to pick up something new, we have to lay down what we already clutch in our hand.

The important thing is that we should do as Jesus tells us, take up our cross daily and follow him. We need to develop the faculty of crossing out the "I", by self-denials (small deaths) every day. We need to be "systematically heroic in little unnecessary things," as William James suggests, in order to be heroic in the face of death itself. We must die daily to sin, if we would live, live abundantly, as Christ would have us. In so far as we are able to do this, we come to see death in the natural course of events, not as something to be dreaded, but to be welcomed as a new opportunity of life.

Because, as Christians, we know that the resurrection follows the cross of Good Friday, the sting of death has been taken away. It is no longer an ending. It is a new beginning.

"Is that a death-bed, where a Christian lies?
Yes, but not his! 'Tis Death itself that dies!"

Why So Formal!

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

FREQUENTLY people who have only a slight knowledge of the Episcopal Church or who have attended only a few services will say, "But the Episcopal Church is so formal!" They are referring to the fact that our worship follows a definite pattern, and that we do things in a certain way. Their comment is usually intended as derogatory to the Church as though formality were a bad thing. Assuming that these critics are sincere, and not using their criticism as an excuse for not committing themselves to any active Christian responsibility, perhaps a few explanatory remarks might help such people to understand why the Episcopal Church has the type of worship is does have.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

First, some kind of order of form is inescapable when people are doing things together, whether they be marching, or playing a game, or worshipping God publicly. Churches that have a very short and simple service use form in having it. If the service consists of only a hymn, a sermon, and a prayer, these three elements take place not all at once but in some order. One has to be first, another second, and the other last. Furthermore, people who worship have to be in some bodily posture, whether sitting, lying down, or standing on one's head, or in any other position! In the Episcopal Church it is customary to kneel for prayer, stand for praise, and sit for instruction. These postures are suitable for the various acts of worship involved. Changing posture from time to time in the service is more restful than just staying in one position all the time.

Secondly, the services of the Episcopal Church are very democratic in that everybody has a part in them. The clergyman does not do all the praying and talking. There are many places where the congregation has its definite part. Everyone participates, and can thus actively worship instead of just sitting and having religion poured-in so to speak.

Third, the forms followed in the Episcopal Church are really quite simple if one will take just a little time and effort to learn them. A person ought not to expect to learn to roller skate perfectly with just one or two efforts. The services of the church are much simpler than roller skating but they do require a little effort to learn. Surely it is not unreasonable to expect people to put forth a slight effort to learn a simple technique for worship.

Fourth, formality in many areas of life is not a bad thing, nor is it in church. A motorist driving a car is very formal. If he is not, the car won't do what he wants it to do. The gear in one position always means reverse. We are glad we can count on that being the case, else we would never know whether we would back out of the garage, or go through the front of it! A pianist playing a musical composition is very formal, taking care to strike the appropriate note on the piano, and thus do justice to what the composer has written. The following of a definite time-tested pattern simply helps us to be more efficient in what we are doing. Think of a surgeon performing an operation, or a mechanic fixing a car, or a poet writing a poem. There are certain techniques which are used appropriate to what is being done. They are not hindrances to the task to be done, but rather aids in it. The services of the church follow an order which has been tested out in experience and has proven to be efficient in helping us to worship God.

Loyalty Oath

BY

GEORGE H. BALL
Chaplain of Denver University

IT seems to me that the requiring of a test oath is not illustrative of the American tradition, but a denial of that tradition. The uniqueness and center of the American political philosophy is that ours is a government which does not coerce the loyalty of its citizens. Any government which compels the loyalty of its citizens is not democratic.

The part of the oath that gives me trouble at the point of religion, is the part which requires that I promise to give my "undivided allegiance" to the government, one country, the United States of America. It is only too apparent that this demand would conflict with the central part of the command of Jesus which I earnestly desire to be my religion: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," a command about which Jesus said there is none greater.

In accordance with my religion, I will therefore be loyal to the United States government as long as the United States government is loyal to the needs and personalities of all men everywhere.

No doubt, the oath we are asked to sign refers only to one's political loyalty and does not presume to control one's religious loyalty. But it is at this point that the real difficulty lies, for if one permits his political loyalty to contradict his religious principles, then his religious principles have no real meaning or importance.

I have chosen to stand on this issue at this time because in my opinion we have reached the point in the world's development where we can no longer survive as independent nations, the point where the punishment will be immediate for not expressing in the world's political structure our loyalty to Christ's truth that all men are neighbors.

The author is a Methodist minister and one of the most popular members of the Denver faculty. The statement is from a letter of resignation addressed to the president of the university who had required loyalty oaths from all faculty members.

Plan Offered to Cover Auto Costs of Clergymen

By ALBERT C. MULLER

★ Interesting facts and figures gathered by Clifford C. Cowin, its secretary, will be considered when the joint commission to study pension plans and clergy salaries holds its next meeting at St. Paul's Church, Cleveland Heights, Ohio. The last meeting preceded the meeting of the House of Bishops at El Paso, Texas, in January.

Other facts and reports of sub-committees such as the one now in consultation with the Church Pension Fund officials will also be considered by the group.

Having studied the Runzheimer plan of automobile standard allowance, Mr. Cowin wrote Bishop Frederick D. Goodwin, of Virginia, the chairman:

"If the figures startled me, possibly they would startle other laymen serving on vestries."

He also said: "You have several times mentioned the subject of automobile expense, and I wonder if this is not a major factor in inflating the apparent salaries (of our clergymen)."

R. E. Runzheimer, of Runzheimer and Company, is quoted from "The Ohio Motorist" of February 1951: "What does it cost to operate a car today?" The subhead reads: "An expert auto cost accountant answers this question in terms of 24 United States 'cost areas,' and in terms of one standard car: the 1950 Chevrolet. His figures will help you to look critically at your own automobile costs."

Mr. Cowin says that the Runzheimer plan is being used by 140 companies in controlling business mileage allowance for approximately 10,000 drivers. "From tables by Mr. Runzheimer designed for salesmen in industry, I have drawn the costs shown below for areas roughly corresponding to those of the provinces of the Church."

He continues: "Costs are computed for a 1950 Chevrolet sedan traded in after 2½ years' service or 45,000 miles, whichever comes first. The depreciation allowance for driving in excess of 18,000 miles per annum should be increased by $10 per thousand miles, e. g., for 25,000 miles add $70 depreciation in addition to mileage operation costs. Costs include comprehensive insurance, $5,000 property damage insurance, $15 - 30,000 public liability insurance, state license, driver's license, depreciation."

Mr. Cowin feels that such facts commended to General Convention by the commission might result in a more favorable reception from vestrymen to add to their budgets adequate provision for auto expense exclusive of salaries, rather than a general recommendation to raise salaries. Also there would be avoidance of any apparent conflict with national wage-freeze policies, avoidance of pension premium increases and income tax, but with a greater net income for the personal needs of all clergymen.

This should bring, too, maximum benefits, proportionately, to the clergy in the lowest salary brackets.

	Cost Basis	Annual Costs
		5,000 miles	10,000 miles	18,000 miles
Province I	$489 plus 2.9c per mile	$634	$779	$1,012
Province II	$516 plus 2.7c per mile	$651	$786	$ 984
Province III	$458 plus 3.0c per mile	$608	$758	$ 998
Province IV	$453 plus 3.2c per mile	$613	$773	$1,029
Province V	$471 plus 3.0c per mile	$621	$771	$1,011
Province VI	$464 plus 3.6c per mile	$644	$824	$1,114
Province VII	$465 plus 3.2c per mile	$625	$785	$1,041
Province VIII	$498 plus 3.4c per mile	$668	$838	$1,110

Collateral information in the hands of the commission includes federal government figures showing "modest but adequate" minimums of living costs for urban workers with families of four persons, as of last October.

The family budget thus shown ranges from $3,453 in New Orleans and $3,507 in Mobile—to $3,926 in Washington, D. C., and $3,933 in Milwaukee.

The commission is composed of: Bishop Goodwin of Virginia, chairman; Clifford C. Cowin of Ohio, secretary; Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana; Bishop Hunter of Wyoming; the Rev. Theodore Bell of California; the Rev. William G. Wright of El Paso, Texas; William H. Damour of Quincy, Ill.; Ernest W. Greene of Washington; B. Allston Moore of South Carolina; Frank E. Punderson of Western Massachusetts; and Jule M. Hannaford Jr. of Minneapolis.

ISLAND OF JERSEY SENDS ALTAR

An altar stone which may establish the altar in Trinity, Trenton, N. J., as the oldest in the country is soon to arrive. It is the gift of the Island of Jersey, Channel Isles, which was visited by Bishop Gardner when he attended the Lambeth Conference. The stone dates back to the 11th century or earlier.

FOUR-WHEELERS IN BRITAIN

★ There are too many four-wheelers in the Church of England, according to the Rev. W. T. Armstrong, vicar at Whaplode. "They come in a pram to be christened, in a taxi to be married, and in a hearse to be buried." He thinks the same conditions prevail in churches throughout the world.

WOMAN CONFIRMED AT NINETY

★ Mrs. Effie Gray, resident of Amarillo, Texas, was confirmed at the age of ninety by Bishop Quarterman of North Texas.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The New Testament. By Walter Russell Bowie. The Bible Story for Boys and Girls. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $2.50.

One expects much from any book by Dr. Bowie, and in this latest work of his we are not disappointed. In it he has retold the stories of the New Testament in a dignified way, yet in language that will be understood and loved by children. The treatment of the material is faithful to modern Biblical scholarship. Children who become acquainted with their Bible through this book will not have to unlearn anything as they continue their studies. The selection of material is excellent. While most of the book is drawn from the Gospels and from Acts, there is an admirable chapter on the Revelation of St. John. All of this is done with the characteristic Bowie touch which brings the Bible to life and makes it interesting to his readers.—Robert Hill.

The Christian in Philosophy. By J. V. Langmead Casserley. Scribner. $2.75.

This in an extraordinarily interesting and discriminating study of the general question of the relation of theology and philosophy. Dr. Casserley, who teaches in England, has given a careful historical analysis of the relation of the two disciplines, and in a second section has stated his own constructive position. The Christian must use philosophical idiom and must seek to express the faith in terms appropriate to the philosophical milieu of a given time and place; but he must never forget that Christian faith is not itself a philosophy and that any expression of it in philosophical terms is in danger of perverting the major emphases of the faith. Especially worthwhile are his remarks on Christianity and the philosophy of history.—W. Norman Pittenger.

St. Paul's Gospel. By Ronald Knox. Sheed & Ward. $1.75.

This short book contains the six sermons preached by Monsignor Knox in Westminster Cathedral on the Sunday evenings in Lent, 1950. It is an admirable discussion of the Pauline theology in so short a compass. As might be expected, Knox writes with a Roman accent, but it is this feature of the book which, combined with the author's lucid style and undoubted scholarship, provide it with a peculiar interest to readers not of that communion. And Knox is not wooden in his adherence to the canons of criticism held by his Church—for example, he practically dismisses Acts and Hebrews as sources for his study of Paulinism, and uses the Pastorals but rarely.—Robert Hill.

A Theological Word Book of the Bible. Edited by Alan Richardson. Macmillan. $3.50.

This long expected volume is one which is simply indispensable and should be in every clerical library, every church school library, and in every public library. A very competent staff of contributors have produced a book which is thoroughly up to date critically, and at the same time brings out the religious and theological meaning of the great words in scripture.

The Imitation of Christ. By Thomas A. Kempis. Morehouse-Gorham. $2.25.

This is a reprint of the famous rendering of the Imitation of Canon Liddon, first published in 1889. For years I have wished that this translation were available, and I have repeatedly recommended it to my students. Its chief feature is this: the translation is set forth in rhythmic sentences, according to the original intention of the author. In fact, the original title was "Musica Ecclesiastica." This translation brings out the biblical style of the book better than any other.

The Philosophy of Religion. By William S. Morgan. Philosophical Library. $6.00.

Neither the dust jacket nor the preface tell us anything about the author of this book, except that he holds the degrees of Ph.D. and S.T.D. The kindest thing that can be said about the volume is that it reads, from beginning to end, like an examination paper written by a conscientious but unimaginative doctoral candidate who knows something about Plato and Aristotle, a great deal about philosophy from Descartes to 1900, a bit about Christianity and "comparative religion," and nothing else. The aim of the treatise is to show that reality is a unity because human consciousness can unify scientific knowledge, ethics, aesthetics and religious experience, and human nature is the clue to the nature of God. This is not, in itself, an unworthy aim; and the chapters in which the author pursues it contain careful, though utterly wooden, discussions of Descartes, Spinoza, Kant, T. H. Green, Hobbes, and many others. But the reader should be warned in advance that the book pays no attention to issues which have arisen in the philosophy of religion later than Royce, Howison, Balfour, and Pringle-Pattison. In other words, it would have been pretty much out of date thirty years ago.—David E. Roberts.

Our Jerusalem: An American Family in the Holy City, 1881-1949. By Bertha Spafford Vester. Doubleday. $4.00.

There can be but few American visitors to Jerusalem who have not directly or indirectly had contact with the "American Colony," and many will have enjoyed there the gracious hospitality of the authoress of Our Jerusalem.

Bertha Vesta was only three years old when she and a baby sister accompanied their parents to settle in Palestine, and there she continued to live for sixty-five years. Those years saw the country involved in two major wars, several local revolutions, the growth of Zionism, and the upheaval of drastic social changes. Through all this the authoress has been an active leader in relief and welfare work—without regard to political or religious issues, and her book gives the story of Jerusalem through those years as seen through the eyes of one whose life was lived to fulfill the dream of her parents when they founded the American Colony seventy years ago. —Elsie Jeffery.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

INTERFAITH VISITATION IN MICHIGAN

A unique interfaith visitation program was launched at Saginaw, Mich., when a Protestant minister called on a new Jewish family that had just moved to the city. The family is that of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Schneiderman and the minister, the Rev. Howard Spaan, Christian Reformed, who made the call because the family lives in his zone. He then contacted the rabbi who promptly got in touch with the family. A member of the sisterhood of the temple also called to invite Mrs. Schneiderman to join.

"It certainly makes you feel much more at home in a strange city," said Mr. Schneiderman. "It is wonderful that the church leaders have joined in such an interfaith program."

Under the plan, sponsored by the ministerial association, the city is divided into eleven zones, with a pastor in each responsible for calling on new families to help them get in touch with the church of their choice. Churches of 20 denominations and two synagogues are participating in the program, believed to be the first of its kind in the country.

ADVENTISTS INCREASE WELFARE SERVICES

Seventh-day Adventists rendered $5,777,000 worth of welfare services in the United States during 1950, it was reported by Theodore L. Oswald, welfare director of the denomination This was an increase of nearly $2,000,000 over 1949.

The number of church welfare centers maintained by Adventists in this country increased from 1,708 to 1,756, and they served 1,049,839 needy persons during the year. Services included medical care, distribution of food and clothing, and shelter in case of emergencies.

Members of the denomination gave nearly 3,000,000 hours of volunteer help to the welfare program, the report added.

ALCOHOL-BROKEN HOMES TAKE TIME OF CLERGY

Clergymen are spending an increasing amount of time in efforts to rehabilitate alcohol-broken homes, it was agreed by pastors of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at a meeting in Minneapolis.

The pastors, representing 350 congregations in the southern part of the state, passed a resolution urging the "enlargement of dry territory" in Minnesota.

"The use of beverage alcohol continues to be a deteriorating influence in every avenue of life," the ministers declared, and suggested that educational programs be undertaken in congregations "to bring the Christian solution to the individual member."

The resolution also urged church members to "become more articulate at the polls" and to support legislation which would control the liquor traffic.

METHODISTS ASK TERMINAL DATE ON UMT

Methodist leaders from Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota have asked for a definite terminal date on the universal military training bill now before Congress.

In an area cabinet meeting, 13 district superintendents joined Bishop Ralph S. Cushman, St. Paul, in sending telegrams to area congressmen recommending that "such a fundamental change in proven American policy should be reviewed by Congress periodically."

"The universal military training aspect of the bill during peacetime is a threat to our American democratic principles," Bishop Cushman said. "This type of peacetime conscription is the thing we detested in Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy and Communist Russia."

Methodists in the three states were asked to telegraph their congressmen about the bill.

Plans for a united evangelistic advance also were made at the meeting. The evangelism meetings are scheduled to be held in all 600 Methodist churches in the three states during October and November. A house-to-house visitation program will be part of the campaign.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

NIEMOELLER PROMISES TO STAY OUT OF POLITICS

Pastor Martin Niemoeller said at Hamburg that from now on he will keep out of politics. He made the announcement at the annual meeting of the synod of the Evangelical Church in Germany after heated debate over his recent utterances on German rearmament and other political issues. The question of Niemoeller's political activities was raised by Bishop Otto Dibelius of Berlin, chairman of the Council. He told the synod that "there is a certain limit as to the Church's participation in political discussions." He informed the assembly of 120 Protestant clerical and lay leaders: "I have no intentions henceforth of continuing on the political platform."

He stressed, however, that he had never wanted to interfere in politics, but "just followed my Christian conscience and acted accordingly."

Pastor Niemoeller rejected the charge that his recent open letter to Chancellor Kurt Adenauer of the West German government opposing German remilitarization was intended to start political action aimed at overthrowing the West German regime. Asserting that his letter was only a Christian cry of distress, he said its purpose was to prevent the German people from becoming entangled in a matter which it could not properly judge.

Since his cry had been "heard and understood" by the German people, Pastor Niemoeller said, there was no longer any need for him to "move on political ice."

During the debate over Pastor Niemoeller's activities, the synod, unanimously agreed that the Church has a duty to advocate peace, "but a peace in the terms of heaven's message and not as a message from Washington or Moscow."

PRIESTS ASKED TO SUPPORT PEACE CAMPAIGN

A resolution urging all priests to support a national peace campaign launched in Hungary on April 8 was adopted at a meeting sponsored by the national peace committee of Roman Catholic priests. The group is made up of priests who have pledged loyalty to the Budapest regime.

Purpose of the campaign, it was announced, will be to obtain signatures for the peace resolution adopted by the World Council for Peace at a meeting in the Soviet sector of Berlin last February.

The priests' resolution declared that "in the best interest of our people, the Church and ourselves, we have but one task: an open and conscientious support of peace."

The meeting was presided over by Canon Miklos Beresztoczy of the Esztergom archdiocese. Speakers included Father Richard Horvath, a Cistercian monk, and Father Istvan Balogh, a suspended priest.

Read at the meeting were reports from provincial delegates who declared that the great majority of the Catholic clergy in Hungary "now follow the road of reality, and have become convinced supporters of the movement which seeks to preserve the peace of the world."

OBJECT TO RECOGNITION OF METHODISTS

Soviet occupation officials objected in Vienna to a new Austrian law giving legal recognition to the Methodist Church in the country. The issue came up at a meeting of the executive committee of the four-power allied control council which passes on all enactments of the Austrian parliament.

American, British and French members maintained that recognition of the Methodist Church was in line with the principle of religious freedom. Soviet officials objected, however, that the new measure was an attempt to "force the predominantly Catholic Austrian people into the Methodist faith."

On being overruled, the Soviet officials announced they would take "formal notice" of the committee's majority decision in favor of the new measure, which will become effective after 31 days.

ITALIAN DEPUTY CONVICTED FOR INSULTING POPE

Laura Diaz, 31-year-old Communist member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, was given a suspended sentence of eight months in jail by a court in Chieti for insulting Pope Pius XII. It is a penal offense in Italy to insult, or show open disrespect to, the Pope.

The woman deputy was convicted of having denounced the pontiff at an open-air meeting at Ortuna-a-Mare, a few miles from Chieti, in June, 1948. She assailed Pope Pius for not having intervened to prevent the second world war or the conflicts in Greece and Palestine.

ANGLICANS & LUTHERANS PROMOTE TIES

Formation of a special committee to promote closer relations between the Church of England and the Scandinavian Lutheran Churches was announced at Oslo. The committee was formed at a conference attended by representatives of the Anglican Church and the Lutheran Churches of Denmark, Norway, and Iceland. Five of the 12 delegates belonged to the Anglican Church, three each to the Norwegian and Danish Churches, and one to the Finnish Church.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

Selected by GEORGE MACMURRAY

JESUS WAS A RADICAL: — Words frequently, have an emotional meaning. In this day of tension many of the words we use are charged with emotional meanings and arouse in untrained minds suspicions of hate and distrust. James Myers for many years industrial secretary of the Federal Council of Churches and now serving as membership secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, defines without emotionalism what a radical really is. Mr. Myers was writing in "The Presbyterian Tribune."

A radical may be described as a person who has a vision of an ideal society and is determined to work toward its realization against all odds.

A radical—literally one who goes to the roots of things—is a person who does not hesitate to criticize and oppose the most accepted and sacred institutions of his day including the church, the current economic system and the government at those points where these institutions do not conform to the principles of a righteous social order.

A radical holds to his ideals in spite of public opposition, condemnation by church and state and the misunderstanding, disapproval of desertion of his family, friends and followers.

It is obvious that a radical may find himself enrolled under different names, aligned with different forces and parties and in opposition to different institutions and systems according to the age and civilization in which he lives. Yet the basic principles of radicalism — vision of the ideal and opposition to the unethical aspects of the established order, whatever it may be—remain the same.

OF COURSE IT WILL HURT:— Gardner Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass., has some suggestions as to how the church and individual Christians should meet the challenge of Communism. Originally it was a sermon preached in his parish and "The Churchman" reprinted it.

Mr. Day makes four points. Communism is a religion in the broad sense of the word and it is an axiom of history that a religion cannot be eradicated by force; Communism itself is a judgment of God on the Church in that the spread of Communism is due to the fact that the Church has failed to practice what it preaches: that Communists are children of God, and Christians must remind themselves that the shepherd left the ninety-nine sheep to find and succor the one that was lost.

Mr. Day's suggestions are clear and challenging: The only effective answer to Communism is not in calling it derogatory names or in preaching against it from pulpit or platform, nor in the use of military power, but in the more effective application of our Christian ideals.

This means striving harder than we have ever done before as Christians and as a church to make Christian brotherhood a reality, not in theory, but in our social and economic life. Yes, that will hurt. It will mean sacrifice. But we must continually remind ourselves that as Christians we give our allegiance to a religion at the center of which is the cross—the symbol of sacrifice—and this is diametrically opposed to the great symbol of our age, the dollar sign.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important

WILLIAM H. BORCHERT
Layman of Moorhead, Minn.

Allow me to express my appreciation of the article "The Pilgrimage to Washington to Urge World Peace" by Kenneth R. Forbes, appearing in The Witness of March 29, 1951.

The whole article is good and to the point and expresses the truth of the situation as it exists today.

I was especially interested in one paragraph which reads: "The immediate, crucial need for action on the peace front is the withdrawal of American soldiers and sailors from Korea, where they never should have intervened in a Korean civil war, unsanctioned by Congress and regretted now by probably a large majority of Americans, and simultaneous negotiation with the Peoples Republic of China for permanent peace on that tortured peninsula. The most recent public opinion polls—including a Gallup poll—point clearly to popular opposition to this undeclared war and popular determination that we shall bring our soldiers home."

Our press and the powers that be would have us believe otherwise.

Can we force our way of life upon the rest of the world by destruction with bullets and bombs? More and more people are beginning to think that we cannot. Will our nation wake up to the fact before it is too late?

CHAD WALSH
Prof. at Beloit College

I have just read Mr. James F. Lincoln's letter in the April 5 Witness. In this letter I learned for the first time that the American forces in Korea (and presumably the Turks, British, and other U.N. troops) are invaders and aggressors.

Now there can be very legitimate differences of opinion about America's Korean policy. I am not arguing now whether our intervention was wise or not. But at least, let's get the facts straight. The basic fact is that when tanks began pouring across the 38th parallel in June of last year, they were headed in a southerly direction. And they were manned by North Koreans. The South Koreans, Americans, and other UN forces did not start shooting until the North Koreans had invaded South Korea.

Faith, hope, and charity are the three theological virtues. But it seems to me that a Christian is also obliged to look at brute force and acknowledge them for what they are. If America is guilty of aggression in Korea, then the policeman who responds to a burglar alarm is guilty of "breaking and entering."

PHILIP STEINMETZ
Minister of the Ashfield Parishes

I can't let the March 22nd issue of The Witness pass without expressing my admiration for its contents. The article "Soliloquy on Calvary" stands out. I used it with our high school group on Good Friday and in both churches on Easter, though I didn't read the whole of it every time. Many people have spoken about it. It certainly brings the gospel into this world in understandable terms.

The whole issue was outstanding. Roscoe Foust's article on peacemakers is an excellent presentation of the Christian message on war in a form which I should think would stir people without raising their prejudices and antagonisms.

Often I offer a shaft of thanks to God for some item in The Witness, but seldom is there an issue which seems so entirely full of just the right material for the moment.

I do wish more people would subscribe to and read it. I've been doing some talking about it, but people are almost immune to magazines except those with sex appeal or crime. I hope that I may get one or two new readers as a result of the bundle this Lent. In any case, each copy of each issue has been read.

ALICE M. NORTH
Churchwoman of Castine, Maine

It seems that some of the clergy are confused by the word "convalescent" home which the Rev. John Kolb used in his story (Witness, March 15). Many have asked, "How sick do I have to be to go to Castine?" Would you mind stating that clergy are welcome here who are merely tired and in need of rest and relaxation, as well as those who have been ill. I would appreciate this important correction very much.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Rector Queries Parishioners On Religious Beliefs

The Answers Range from Strict Orthodoxy To Various Kinds of Heresy

★ The Rev. W. Leigh Ribble thinks that the average clergyman has little idea of what his church members really believe. He decided that the best way to find out was to ask, so he sent questionnaires to the 550 communicants of Grace and Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Richmond, Va. Following each question were multiple answers from which the communicant was asked to choose the one which best expressed his own view. The answers ranged all the way from strict orthodoxy to atheism.

About 150 of the questionnaires have come back. Mr. Ribble is not yet ready to make any of the findings public, though he does say "a few" indicated that the persons who filled them in are atheists. He does not think this is a condition peculiar to the Episcopal church, but that it is "fairly typical of Protestantism." He feels that the Church has been neglecting doctrine while putting great emphasis on "teaching people how to be good church members."

The query as to the belief in Christ's divinity was phrased like this: "I believe that Jesus Christ (a) was a noble man only, a great prophet or teacher to be respected but not worshipped; (b) was a great leader but he did the world more harm than good; (c) is divine, is truly God and was truly human, lives today and helps me through my faith in him; (d) never lived at all but is a symbol of good like Santa Claus or the Goddess of Liberty."

This was the question on God: "I believe (a) that God is personal. He rules the universe and controls our lives; he is interested in us and can be reached through prayer and worship; (b) that God is force and power; he directs the universe by natural laws, he is not interested in us personally; (c) that because of ignorance I neither believe nor disbelieve in God; (d) that there is no God; belief in a God is a primitive superstition which we have outgrown; we are on our own and must make the best of it."

The communicants also were asked how many times during the year they have attended church services and how many times they have taken communion; if regular family prayers are held in their homes and if grace is said regularly at mealtimes.

The final question, which required a "true" or "false" answer, asked whether the communicant believes Christianity is the only true religion or if other religions are "as good as ours," whether he believes social planning, science and inventions are making the world better all the time; and if he thinks he can be morally perfect if he tries hard enough.

Mr. Ribble said he had never heard of any other clergyman sending out a questionnaire like this. The communicants can sign or not sign the questionnaire, as they wish. Of those returned so far, about one-third are signed, according to Mr. Ribble.

CONFERENCE TO DISCUSS POINT FOUR PROGRAMS

★ Bishop Scarlett of Missouri was the chairman of a meeting of Church leaders and state department officials, held at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., April 24-26, to discuss relief programs. Other issues considered were moral and spiritual basis of technical assistance; the effect of government-sponsored programs on missions; the relation of U. S. and UN programs; release of missionary personnel for government service; type of support churches can give to legislative measures connected with the point four program.

Speakers included Nelson Rockefeller, chairman of the international development advisory board to the President; Prof. John C. Bennett of Union Seminary; Arthur Fletcher, information specialist of the UN technical assistance administration; Samuel P. Hayes Jr., state department official.

BISHOP ANGUS DUN BACKS TRUMAN

★ Bishop Angus Dun of Washington was one of the first Church leaders to come out publicly in support of President Truman's ouster of General Mar-Arthur. "The principle of the subordination of military policy to civilian-control political policy is clearly at stake," he said. "I approve entirely of the President's declared policy to do everything possible to restrict the present conflict in Korea. I am opposed to any further commitment to the discredited regime of General Chiang Kai-shek."

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

ONE-SUNDAY APPEAL IN LOS ANGELES

★ Los Angeles is to have a one-Sunday appeal for its missionary expansion program on Whitsunday, May 13. A filmstrip, illustrating the need and purpose of the drive, is now being shown in parishes and missions. The program is going forward, supported by $175,000 loaned by the National Council, which is to be paid back in yearly installments within ten years.

STUDENT WORK AT DELAWARE

★ The Rev. Theodore L. Ludlow, rector of St. Thomas, Newark, Del., and chaplain to Episcopal students at the University of Delaware, states that the recent ruling of university authorities (Witness, April 5), does not greatly affect the work of churches. Vespers, sponsored by the interfaith council, continues as formerly; all religious groups continue to use facilities of the university for dinners and meetings; the Canterbury Club, having the free use of the plant of St. Thomas Church, is in no way affected by the recent ruling. He reports further that the college authorities have assured them that college rooms will be assigned delegates who attend the inter-campus conference to be held in May.

GEORGIA HOLDS CONVENTION

★ St. Paul's, Albany, which celebrated its 100th anniversary on April 21, was host to the convention of Georgia, meeting April 2-3. Special speakers were the Rev. A. Ronald Merris of Macon; Mrs. John Marson, Greenville, Miss., who is president of the Auxiliary of the province; Mrs. A. D. Kellog of Dover, Del.

BISHOP LOUTTIT IN BOSTON

★ Bishop Louttit of South Florida is to address the convention of Massachusetts, meeting at Trinity, Boston, May 1-2, when he will give an up-to-the-minute story on Episcopal chaplains serving with the armed forces. Bishop Nash and Bishop Heron are to give their addresses at the service the evening of the 1st.

OLD VESTRY ACT MODERNIZED

★ The 153 year old vestry act of Maryland has been changed by eliminating much obsolete material and to bring the powers of vestries in the diocese more in line with those of other dioceses. The new law will affect only parishes holding charters under the vestry act and will alter none of their contracts made prior to June 1 when the new law becomes effective. One of the significant changes is that it makes it possible for women to serve on the vestries of these parishes.

The new law also eliminates the so-called "hiring and firing" clause which for more than a century and a half has empowered vestries to employ or dismiss clergymen at will. The new act brings Maryland in line with the general Church canon whereby a vestry has "full power and authority to call . . . a priest to be the rector of said church, which relation shall continue until dissolved by mutual consent or by the arbitration and decision of the ecclesiastical authority of the diocese."

This change, called for by the Maryland diocesan convention of 1951, made the proposed bill at least temporarily unacceptable to the dioceses of Easton and Washington, and unpopular with some of the vestrymen of parishes in the diocese of Maryland. Originally prepared by the diocese of Maryland's permanent committee on the vestry act after consultation with qualified authorities of the dioceses of Easton and Washington, the bill was designed to affect all of the dioceses in Maryland, but Convention's request for elimination of Maryland vestries' unique and traditional right to employ and dismiss clergymen led the leaders of the other dioceses to feel that this was a matter their conventions ought also to decide. The change subjected legislators to pressure to kill or table the bill until Easton, Washington, and Maryland might agree on an amendment to the act of 1798.

Problems created by opposition generated chiefly by this provision led Bishop Powell to call two special meetings of the executive council (which is the diocesan convention in recess) to consider the question, and also prompted him to invite members of the standing committee of the diocese, as well as members of the permanent committee on the vestry act, and others, to sit in and give their advice. In both instances, the executive council gave as its decision that the convention of 1951, which called for vestry act amendment in the form later introduced into the General Assembly, constituted a mandate to get the bill through the 1951 session of the legislature, if possible, but that it was the executive council's opinion that application of the bill should be limited to parishes in the diocese of Maryland, if the dioceses of Easton and Washington indicated that they wished to be excluded from its provisions.

SOCIAL WORKERS TO MEET

★ The department of social relations of the National Council will have a one day conference on May 17 in connection with the meeting of the national conference of social work to meet in Atlantic City. Bishop Gardner of New Jersey will celebrate at a corporate communion, followed by a breakfast, and there will be a dinner in the evening at which the speaker will be the Rev. Colin Cuttell, industrial mission of the diocese of Southwark, London.

CHURCH CONTINUES UNIQUE CUSTOM

★ One Sunday each month, a loaf of bread is placed on the table in the entrance to St. John's Church, Portsmouth, N. H. That loaf of bread keeps alive the spirit, if not the letter, of a legacy left nearly two centuries ago to the poor of the parish. In 1779, Theodore Atkinson, one of New Hampshire's most prominent 18th century citizens, died leaving $1,000 to what was then Queen's Chapel. He stipulated that the income from the $1,000 should be spent for $1 worth of bread—the bread to be distributed among the poor of the parish each Sunday.

For more than 100 years, the weekly dole of bread was made. But in later years, the vestrymen took the matter to the courts and asked for a more practical outlet for Theodore Atkinson's charity. The court approved the request to transfer the money to the general funds of the church. But still, one Sunday each month, the sexton places bread on the table and his successor will continue the practice.

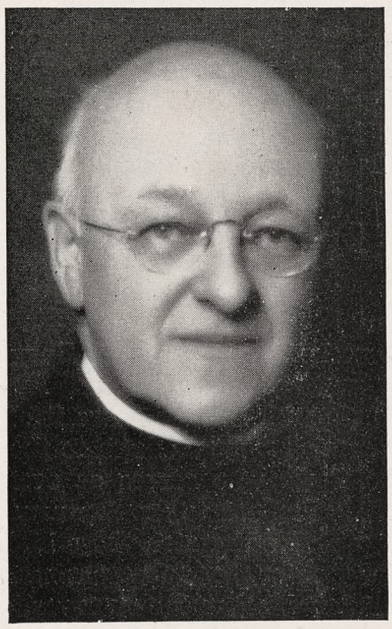
PROVINCIAL SYNOD ANNOUNCED

★ Bishop Penick of North Carolina, president of the fourth province, has announced that the synod this year will meet October 23-24 at the Advent, Birmingham, Alabama.

BISHOP HENRY ADDRESSES LAYMEN'S LEAGUE

★ Bishop Henry of Western North Carolina is to be the speaker at the annual meeting of the Laymen's League of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia, to be held April 28 at St. John's, Roanoke.

YOUTH CONVENTION TO BE HELD



★ The Rev. Robert R. Brown, rector of St. Paul's, Richmond, Va., will be the headliner at the convention of youth of the diocese of South Carolina, to be held at Christ Church, Mount Pleasant, April 27-29. Another speaker will be Fred Sosnowski, a college senior and a communicant of St. John's Island. Bishop Carruthers will address the delegates on Sunday.

FACULTY MEMBERS HEAR WEDEL

★ Episcopalians who are faculty members of colleges in the diocese of Southwestern Virginia are to hold a conference April 28-29, at Christ Church, Blacksburg. The leader will be the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel of the College of Preachers, Washington.

RADIO & TELEVISION WORKSHOPS

★ Persons interested in religion and television are invited to attend workshops sponsored by the radio department of the National Council of Churches. Places and dates: San Anselmo, Cal., June 3-8; Portland, Ore., July 23-28; Wooster, O., July 29-Aug. 3; Indianapolis, Aug. 26-31; some city in Iowa, Oct. 21-26; Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 11-16. One will also be held in a Texas city later in November.

The Chicken and the Cross

IN many respects, the chicken, for rural people, is the basic commodity. Some farmers raise corn; some raise wheat; some raise sheep, while others raise cattle — and some raise little but scrub weeds and loose top-soil which will wash away with the spring floods.

But, regardless of the primary crop, seldom is there a rural home without a chicken-wire enclosure penning in a community of fowl. From this portion of the farm comes such basic food as eggs and golden-brown, fried chicken. Without this bird, the diet of the farmer would be less adequate and healthful than it is.

The chicken seems to be the most ignorant and exasperating of God's creatures. To take the time, like Thoreau, to watch chickens follow their daily routine of life, is to behold a pattern of confusion, selfishness, bullying, purposelessness and self-exaltation.

Hen Addie finds a succulent grub and, squawking unmercifully, runs hither-and-yon, with all the rest in full pursuit, until she manages to swallow it. Hen Biddie lays an egg and, automatically, clucks her individual prowess and greatness to the world. Hens Carrie and Diddie jostle and push each other in order to get to the dish of feed.

Analysis has shown, also, that hens are involved in a social heirarchy based on the individual's ability to peck its neighbors. Addie pecks Biddie but the latter does not retaliate. Instead Biddie pecks Carrie while Carrie takes it out on Diddie. This is carried right on down to the poor little runt of the flock, who serves as everybody's scapegoat and is inclined to develop neurotic tendencies.

To sit and watch these birds can be amusing. It can, also, be embarrassing since one tends to wonder whether the observer, or the observed, is really behind the wire cage. The hens are acting out their God-given nature and, despite selfishness, bullying, et al, are healthy.

When man does the same things, however, he is expressing the sick, unredeemed side of his nature. It is a real side of himself. It is a natural side of himself. But it is not the real self, as witnessed to by the Incarnate Lord. It is a side which needs help; a side which needs to be lifted up onto a new level of existence.

Historic Christianity says that this process of lifting-up is redemption; the reintegration into a whole of that which is split up into many, relatively uncoordinated, pieces. It is a process of straightening out means, ends and motivations. It is a process of putting first things first. It means putting God in the primary position and subordinating man and his desires to God's will.

Contemporary society, in all of its manifestations, of course, has been dedicated to the thesis that religious redemption is balderdash. It has, true, paid lip-service to the idea but events show that, on the everyday level of operations, man, not God, has been the measure of all reality and, as a result, we have developed a way of life that is very similar to that of the chickens. A way of life which, as battle reports and crime inquiries and the collapse of warm community relationships and responsibilities make evident, is producing, with growing intensity, confusion, bullying, purposelessness and self-exaltation.

In rural America, the effects of this way of life are, perhaps, most starkly self-evident. Closed and run-down churches, inadequate educational facilities; deplorable conditions of health; the disorganization of neighborhood and community life which once formed the solid framework of rural culture—all are symptoms of a weakness in human purpose. Without purpose, human beings lose meaning in their lives and those lives become atomized and disintegrated. This purposelessness represents a 'dead hand of blight' which, for several decades, has been settling over America's rural heart-land.

Historically, the cross has been the symbol of both redemption and purpose in life. It stands for

"QUOTES"

BE ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

—Epistle for Rogation Sunday
St. James 1:22.

the true relationship between the three basic realities, nature, man and God. It symbolizes a true hierarchy of values which says that man exists for the glorification of God and is a steward of the natural resources and a brother to his neighbors for this purpose.

Today, the Church is making a definite attempt to carry the message of redemption, of reintegration, into contemporary rural life. Often, the process of rot has gained such momentum that the most consecrated energy in the world can bring little results. Such a state represents a previous sin of omission on the part of the Christian community. In other situations, however, the leaven is at work: building, reorganizing, tying families and neighborhoods into communities which truly worship and add worth-ship to human life.

In a sense, the way of the chicken and the way of the cross are diametrically opposed. The one is individualistic to an extreme; the other is dedicated to true individualism expressed through true fellowship. Rogation-tide prayers should be offered to God that he will spread the shadow of the cross over more and more human chicken-yards and lift all men up to a redeemed level of existence.

Peace in Our Time

"WE, the people of the United Nations, determined: — To save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind—"

Thus begins the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations. When these tremendous words were first spoken, they trumpeted around the world. People everywhere heard them, and new hope sprang up in their hearts:

Now at last there would be peace!

The United Nations was founded on April 25th, 1945. Now, only six years later, there are those who say that war is inevitable. Such men betray the trust and the deepest hopes of all the peoples of the world. For war is not inevitable, and we know it. How precious life is to all men. And if there are some things worse than war, then war is the breeding-ground of every one of them. We may save our lives only when we honor and respect the right of all others to live, as well as ourselves.

Those who believe in the United Nations and the aims upon which it was founded know that peace must be sought along every avenue of negotiation that is still open, or that can be opened.

Let us not fear to speak and work for peace because of those who cry for peace but seek for war. Peace is the deepest desire of all men everywhere. Let all men of good will join together in all actions for peace, making their will known in a mighty voice that will not be silenced. We will be heard, and the world will learn its most important lesson for our day: that it is never too late to negotiate on differences, but that it is always too soon to fight a war of mutual annihilation.

On this anniversary, let us rededicate ourselves to the great objectives of the United Nations. Let us strive together to seek peaceful alternatives to war, and not falter until these alternatives have been achieved.

Let there be Peace!

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WE are not worried about General MacArthur. After he gets through his various welcomes and speech-making, he can settle down to living on his full-time general's salary, his pay from the Remington Rand Company, which we think was most suddenly arranged, to say nothing of his income from his holdings in the Philippines.

THE Sunday after Easter is well named. We would suggest that the Sundays that immediately follow should be called "New Low Sundays" as something that the Episcopal Church has hit this year with typical post-festival reaction.

ANGLO-CATHOLICS in this country seem overly-preoccupied with episcopacy. In England, where the movement really accomplished something, their chief concern was in fighting evil; socially by slum clearance and corporate action; personally by the practice of sacramental confession. In the American movement these two arms are conspicuously absent, generally in proportion to the higher you go.

But He Lead a Good Life

BY

PHILIP F. McNAIRY
Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo

THIS is the common observation made of some individuals. It is generally prefaced in this manner. "He isn't a Churchman in the formal sense of the word, but . . ." Frequently this charitable observer concludes, "but he is a good Christian." It is perfectly true that in a Christian community, in a country where one is free to worship God; and where the Church still bears its strong humanitarian and doctrinal influence, one may find many persons outside the Church who are ethically and morally Christian in their human relationships.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

But suppose the Church and Christian teaching were to be banished, as they have been in much of the world. Suppose as a result, honesty became undesirable, kindness and charity were regarded as signs of weakness. What then would be the standard to measure the "good life?" How many, other than theological Christians, would have any incentive to "live a godly, righteous and sober life . . .?" "The branch will not bear fruit except it abide in the vine."

What the general confession says to us is this. The only assurance for "good Christian living" is the assurance of faith—that God created us in perfect freedom—that it is the fault of man that he has used his freedom to rebel against God—that with God's help, through Christ, man is able to turn from his self-will, to the doing of God's will—that the only hope for life worth living or worth perpetuating is this "God-centered life."

The reasons for being a Christian are social and theological today. If there are to be permanent reasons, they must be and remain theological. We recall at what price and with what difficulty the Church has been able to keep this fact before the Christian world. So-called "progressive" Churches have regarded the words of the general confession a slur to the "dignity and inherent worth of man." See what this error has done to our time. This very "dignity" has been claimed by a few in order to enslave the rest of the world. To feed the human ego with complimentary fallacies is to jeopardize the future of the whole human race. The hope of the world lies in the acknowledgment of the fact that all men, high, low, rich, poor, stand in need of God's redeeming grace.

No greater service could be rendered to humankind than to reinstate Christianity and be done with Christianism. Thank God for the Church and her general confession! Why smell the lost fragrance of faded cut flowers when we may feast on the harvest of the Tree of Eternal Life.

The Masculine Ingredient

BY
IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder and First Editor of The Witness

I HAVE just come from a Church meeting. There were eight or ten business men. These men stood high in their community which is not a large one. Nearly all of them were confirmed members of the Church. They were all men scrupulously honest, unusually intelligent, good fathers and good husbands.

These men, as is usually the case with members of this Church, were upstanding men in the community where they lived.

They stood for public improvements, were generous contributors to any movement for the uplift of the young. They were absolutely without cant. They abhorred any mechanical conception of religion in which they would be mere puppets. They were leaders in business, efficient in public works, standing for the very best in American politics. But one thing was lacking as one studied and admired them.

They lacked definite religious convictions. They had no spiritual enthusiasms. They made no personal sacrifices in exerting a spiritual influence.

And the one thing, which transforms a man into a spiritual force for righteousness, and which that particular community sorely needed they could not or did not supply.

My mind travels to another scene in which a judge is reported to have said in a juvenile court: "There seems to be a wave of juvenile crime passing over America today, and the culprits seem to lack any appreciation of the seriousness of their offenses." Expressed in another way, there is scarcely a community in America today, where, when the time comes for young boys to form their associates, parents are not seriously concerned as to the influences which shall surround these boys.

Boys Imitate Men

AND this apprehension is felt equally in small towns or large cities. Those who can afford it, look for a private school in which their boys can escape the temptations of the gang. It is a mooted question whether it is safer to bring boys up in the rough atmosphere of the streets or in the artificial atmosphere of the ordinary private school. Shall I run the risk of having my boy grow up tough or snobbish? And yet the communities in which these boys grow up are places where boys ape men, and try to be like the men whom they know.

And who are the men that they imitate? Those who appeal to the boys' weakness. The man who is democratic, coarse and hearty exerts an influence over youth that good clothes, good manners, and good habits do not exert unless they make a distinct effort to do so. It requires a considerable effort for the man to learn good manners, good habits and good morals.

But when he has learned these marks of the Christian gentleman, it requires far more effort for him to carry his influence into the realm of boyhood. He can do it as no other man can, but he cannot do it unless he makes a distinct effort to do it, for the boy has not yet arrived at the point where these things appeal to him.

In other words, we have a condition in Christian America which is rather appalling.

The American man is not a force in stimulating young boys to imitate him, because his spiritual convictions are passive rather than active; he is not thinking in terms of spiritual influence; he esteems the message of the gospel but he is not a force in making it felt among the young. He will work hard to leave money for his children to spend, but he will not press hard to give a spiritual inheritance to the young.

Evil A Force

ON the other hand evil men are always a force—just as diphtheria is an epidemic which spreads easily; while anti-toxin is the result of much labor and great effort.

We need an anti-toxin to the moral and spiritual epidemics that are raging in America today among the young. And what should that anti-toxin be? I know of no other successful resistant than an aggressive spiritual force which may be exerted by Christian men.

We rather expect that the clergy and mothers should look after the morals of the young, and they do so as far as they can. But no man has an alibi from doing his share to raise American boys in high ideals.

Man can raise cattle and hogs; they can erect buildings and railways; they can form lodges and clubs; but they are not exerting the moral and spiritual force upon youth that is so urgently needed.

The problem begins when the boy is about twelve years of age.

He is under women at school and in Sunday school; he is under his mother at home and he is under the gang influence on the street. Where does the man come in at that time when a man is needed to mould the growing boy?

Is the father vitally interested in his son's spiritual development? Is the good man as concerned with the growing boys in his community as he is in the shade trees or the paving?

Is the rector aided by strong men, who being strong themselves are capable of imparting just the tone to education which the adolescent youth requires?

It is all right to be a success in your business or profession, but that very success should establish a sense of gratitude to God so you will be anxious to pass on what has been received as a contributing force in the spiritual development of the rising youth.

It is all right to enjoy the perquisites of one's own success, but there is one thing lacking when we feel no gratitude for what we have received and no responsibility to pass on our influence.

The Right Mixture

THE Church is a mixture and it is only when the mixture is right that the influence is effective.

We need the scholarly, cultivated rector who is the prophet, priest and pastor.

We need the conscientious, consecrated devotion of holy women. We need the bright enthusiasm of children.

We need also the strong practical influence of successful men. If the mixture fails to move the car, it is because the last ingredient is lacking or is not present in sufficient quantity.

The religious man is too apt to be an unbalanced character, who functions in the ecclesiastical field because it is unoccupied. And then when someone whom red-blooded men do not particularly respect, takes hold to contribute whatever there is of the masculine ingredient, your strong man turns petulantly away and says, "If that is masculine religion, I want none of it."

He is too self-centered to see that his very attitude is fatal to the growing boy, and that his excuse does not relieve him from responsibility, but rather increases it. What business has he to turn away from just that responsibility? Who has excused him from the draft?

Who has countersigned his alibi? The Church is a volunteer army except as the Lord drafts men through their own consciences.

No Alibi

IS it a sufficient sop to one's conscience to reply to God, "This weakling is serving thee in the Church. I am therefore exempt and will leave the future of American boys to a diluted masculine influence?" There is no alibi for any Christian man by which he has any right to enjoy the blessings of God's bounty and then exempt himself from the responsibility of doing that which God lays at his gate.

I believe Christian influence is suffering more today from holding back of the masculine ingredient as a spiritual force than from any other cause.

The Church has men. She has a right to look to them as spiritual forces.

Nor is it an adequate excuse to say that you are doing this through a lodge or club. The lodge and the club have their use, but the Lord God established the Church to be the instrument through which moral and spiritual forces should be exerted.

Who are you that substitutes something which you declare to be just as good when God has bidden you to do this one thing? Would you really dare to make this excuse, face to face with your Judge, that you had no confidence in the instrument which he had established and had substituted something else; especially when the chief trouble with God's instrument is the withdrawal of your own force from its energy?

Quiet Heroes

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

FREQUENTLY in the late afternoon I go for a walk to a drug store some blocks from the rectory. In this store works a pharmacist who has an illness which causes him considerable pain, and which requires that he rest a great deal. Consequently he stays in bed until late in the morning and in the afternoon is at his post filling prescriptions. As others have, so have I been impressed with his consistent cheerfulness and equanimity. He told me that he would not be alive had he not learned to remain calm and self-possessed.

Do doubt most of us can think of some person like that who is carrying on with good courage and without complaining against odds which would make most people feel very sorry for themselves. There are many people in the world who in a quiet and unostentatious way are leading lives of everyday heroism. They ought to be an inspiration to us all.

So often those of us who have only the usual problems and difficulties of life to face indulge in self-pity when the going gets a little rough. That is the time we need to think about those like Mr. Wood and others who under great difficulties yet do their work well, and with the doing of it give inspiration and courage to those they meet. All hail to these quiet heroes!

Next time you are tempted to pity yourself and complain of your lot in life turn your thoughts to some one whose burden is really heavy, and who still faces life with courage and quiet confidence. If your burden is really heavy too, what others have found the strength for, so can you. St. Paul wrote, "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me."

Christianity is Voted Down

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

NO matter how you figure it, Christianity is not popular.

In our town only a quarter of the people care enough about it to give time, money and prayer every day and every week for its maintainance.

In the U. S., baseball, drinking, gambling, television and many other features have far more popular support.

In the world Christianity is outnumbered two to one by believers in other religions like Hinduism, Judaism, Shinto, Taoism, Buddhism and Confucianism and Mohammedanism, not to mention the multitudes who make no religious profession at all.

Even among Christians the serious application of the gospel to personal, business, social and political life is not viewed with favor. For instance, how generally are conscientious objectors respected or Negroes treated without discrimination? Even among Christians self-sacrifice is mistaken for weakness and honesty is viewed as a policy to be followed only as long as it pays.

I believe most of us don't know enough of what Christianity is to realize when we are voting against it. Can you give a description of Christianity which others would recognize as being substantially correct and which would make sense to some non-Christian interested in hearing the gospel? Try it around the dinner table today. I think you'll find you can stand some help, as I do each time I'm on the spot.

VERMONT PARISH CELEBRATES

★ St. Mary's, Northfield, Vt., celebrated its 100th anniversary on April 8 with a service at which Bishop Vedder Van Dyke preached and confirmed. The service was attended by pastors of local churches and by Episcopal clergy in the vicinity. The Rev. Francis N. Nitchie, rector of the parish since 1929, preached at the evening service. The church, a beautiful New England colonial structure, was formerly a Congregational Church.

WILLARD SUPPORTS BIRTH CONTROL

★ A bill to permit physicians to give prescriptions to women whose lives they believe would be endangered by pregnancy was supported by a group of Protestant clergymen, headed by the Rev. Lawson Willard of New Haven, at a hearing before the Connecticut assembly. It was opposed by Roman Catholic leaders who contended that the prevention of pregnancy is a violation of moral and natural law.

BISHOP CLINGMAN HITS CORRUPTION

★ Bishop Clingman told the convention of Kentucky, meeting at Bowling Green, April 10-11, that "the Church should speak with no uncertain voice against evil in high places." He referred to investigations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to other recent investigations. He also said that the Church should "have no part or lot in any effort which has to do or even suggests gambling."

A. ERVINE SWIFT CONSECRATION

★ The Rev. A. Ervine Swift will be consecrated bishop of Puerto Rico at Grace Church Cathedral, Topeka, Kansas, May 3. The Presiding Bishop will be consecrator with Bishop Bentley, director of the overseas department and Bishop Boynton of New York as co-consecrators. Bishop Ludlow of Newark and Bishop Welles of West Missouri will be presentors. The sermon will be by Bishop Fenner of Kansas, with Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana the litanist. The Rev. Robert G. Swift of Lawrence, Kansas, and Dean Villafane of Santurce, P. R., will be the attending presbyters.

YOUTH CONVENTION IN PENNSYLVANIA

★ The youth convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania is to be held May 5 in Philadelphia with the Rev. Samuel S. Johnston, chairman of youth work in the province as the headliner.

NO ACTION TAKEN ON W. H. MELISH

★ No action was taken on the 119-11 recommendation of the congregation that the Rev. W. H. Melish be nominated as rector when the vestry of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, met on April 16. The absence of several vestrymen delayed the action which will presumably come before the meeting on May 21.

The Rev. John Howard Melish was named rector emeritus at the meeting April 16.

CLERGY SALARIES CREATE PROBLEM

★ Bottle-necked in his desire to get clergy for the many unmanned missions in the district of Salina by his desire for fairness in not calling new men at salaries above those of his present clergy, Bishop Nichols informed convocation that he had been liberated by voluntary action of the clergy themselves. "In going out to secure new clergy, I go into a competitive market," he said. "My own clergy have come to me, both as individuals and in a group, and have said that they will not raise any questions if better salary scales are offered new men." The Bishop, in return, recommended the creating of a fund to increase the salaries of his present clergy.

Much of the Convocation, meeting at Christ Cathedral in Salina April 8-9, was directed toward the achieving of ultimate diocesan status. The Episcopate endowment fund was announced as having reached $10,538. The acceptance of the North Texas plan with the aim of missions achieving self-support within a ten-year period was also announced. The North Texas plan provides a systematic and mandatory approach in salary matters. It was decided, further, that missions without clergy continue to put aside clergy salary month by month with the intention of augmenting what the bishop can give to incoming clergy with a three-year supplement from the missions' own accumulated funds.

Governor Arn and the Kansas legislative council were pledged the district's support of their proposal for a children's center to be operated by the state for the purpose of assisting children with deep emotional disturbance. The resolution pointed out that it is costing the state many millions of dollars to operate custodial institutions for persons who in many cases could have been saved early in life for useful citizenship by adequate preventative therapy. The St. Francis Boys' Home of Salina and Ellsworth, themselves dealing with delinquents, have voiced the need for such a central state-wide therapeutic center.

The increasing importance of work amongst colored people was recognized in a resolution recommending that diverse races and minority groups be incorporated within the established congregations. Mr. William H. Dawley, a colored member of the Department of Christian Social Relations was quoted in the Department's report as saying, "We can aim either to build friendship or to squelch discrimination, and the best method is to build friendship." St. Cornelius' Church at Dodge City and the Cathedral at Salina were reported as having sponsored inter-racial programs.

CLEMENT HOFFMAN
Layman of Boston, N. Y.

Coming after the excellent articles by Chad Walsh and the A. C. U. numbers, the diatribe against the Bishop of Long Island in the current issue is as amazing as it is revolting. The only people to whom the blessing of the Holy Oils is a matter for ridicule are those to whom the preaching of the cross is foolishness—people so blinded by the brilliance of their own intellect that they cannot see anything else. No doubt their ancestors scoffed at Noah when he built the ark!

Any instructed child knows that the blessing of the Holy Oils is not Roman, but Catholic, common to the whole Church, and antedating all divisions. Similarly exorcism is "clearly found in the teaching of the Apostles and in the practice of our Lord himself" (Dix). Very many of our bishops bless the oils on Maundy Thursday (thank God) so why single out one? Can it be a Melish retaliation? The Bible also teaches that "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth" because of the activities of the spirit of evil, and anyone who looks at the world today cannot doubt it. What makes the scoffers so sure that theirs are the only intellectual minds? And who dares talk of "loyalty" while rejecting the accepted teaching and practice of historic Christendom?

Really, Sir, perhaps we ought to invite the Bishop of Long Island to banish the "erroneous and strange doctrines" reflected in your publication.

Our hospital chaplains and our missionaries tell us of wonderful cures wrought by prayer and the anointing with the blessed oils—plus the exorcisms . . . and you have the nerve to label this "Voodoo." How low can Christian journalism sink? Shame on you, Sir. Yours disgustedly.

MARY T. SUMNER
Churchwoman of Washington, D. C.

I was particularly interested in the article "On Preaching to Men," by the Rev. Richard R. Beasley, (Witness, Apr. 5). Women also want the type of sermon mentioned in this article, especially those who have to meet the public each day. They, too, want "something to live by, something they can use." Most too often congregations have to sit and listen to newspaper headline sermons or sermons on social problems which have little or no spiritual value. I hope that The Witness will continue to publish articles on preaching the sermon.

ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING
Bishop of Arizona

John Lee Descheeni, 24 years old, Navajo, census number 70476 (Navajo tribal census) is currently duping clergy with the story that he is a member of the congregation of Good Shepherd Mission, Fort Defiance, Ariz., and therefore worthy of financial assistance. John Descheeni is not known at the mission and has been carrying on this practice for the past two or three years.

RUDY L. RANIERI JR.
Student at Bexley Hall

Whatever else we Catholics may or may not think about your publication, we know that it is laugh-provoking! Let there resound a great "hooray" for Bishop DeWolfe, for evidently he believes just like our divine Lord did —that there are such things as devils and that they need to be exorcised.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Kahlil Gibran, a Biography. By Mikhail Naimy. Philosophical Library. $3.75.

A frank and revealing portrait of the artist and poet, by one whose own artistry is akin to that of the poet, and whose fidelity to the lights and shadows of his subject makes of his biography not so much a likeness as the dramatic setting forth of a soul's deep conflict with itself and with the powers of darkness. The story, written as if it were an interlude between the moments of Gibran's own death, moves from the twilight of the early years of struggle and poverty, through the night of a kind of Nietzschean disillusion, toward the dawn of final peace—the Promised Land seen from afar, but never really entered or lived in. Throughout there is a wealth of quotation, much of it brilliant, all of it thought-provoking, "poems and ponderings" of the mystic Prophet of Lebanon, himself alternately proud and abased, bitter and repentant, ruthless and tender. Of the episodes which mark his way through the wilderness, drawn out as they are in detail from the very stuff of that strange, divided, rebellious, and turbulent spirit, one might best say perhaps that if Art is life and Love is God, here was an apt disciple indeed! —Paul Scherer.

Roman Collar. By Monsignor E. Roberts Moore. Macmillan. $3.00.

The pastor of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church in downtown New York, tells with winsome clarity of the twenty-four hour duty of a devoted priest of the Church. It reveals a life that calls for concentration, tirelessness, courage, heroism, patience, and determination. Statesmanship and humility, sympathy and wit, love of God and love of man are all indispensable ingredients for one who would serve God and his Church in the heart of a big city. While he would not claim them all for himself, Fr. Moore's fascinating story of his busy and varied ministry demonstrates the fact that he has all these things in abundant measure. The book is good reading and an excellent antidote for the romantic nonsense of The Cardinal.—R. T. F.

The Meaning of Human Existence. By Leslie Paul. Lippincott. $3.00.

Leslie Paul, a poet, newspaper writer and organizer of youth movements has, with this volume, moved into a larger field, perhaps into too large a field. The explanation states, "A fresh, lively, yet profound guide to spiritual security, amid the confused mass of modern thought and the destructive tensions of our day." Like that 'blurb' the book tries to cover too much and tends to get just a bit confused in doing it.

This is the sort of book which is in vogue today and will probablly appeal to many people. There is a great deal of scientific opinion, philosophic discussion, and theological conclusion in the book, all lit by the benign countenance of Kierkegaard. If you like that sort of thing you will undoubtedly enjoy the book and find it very useful.—S. A. Temple.

The Blind Spot in American Public Education. By Clyde Lemont Hay. Macmillan. $2.00.

The blind spot is the absence of religion in American education. The book is a thoroughly documented study of the total situation, including the Champaign case.

Ruth and Jonah. By George A. F. Knight. Macmillan. $1.50.

The latest volume in the excellent Torch Series of Bible Commentaries. A first-rate little book for Bible classes interested in the Old Testament.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Mass Demonstration for Peace At the United Nations

A Conference is Also Called on Peaceful Alternatives, Washington, May 9-10

★ Benjamin Cohen, assistant to the Secretary General of the UN, told a delegation of the American Peace Crusade last week that "it is important that people of conscience are becoming more and more conscious of the fact that they have to tell their governments they want peace . . ."

"To us," said Mr. Cohen, "the important thing is that people of all kinds of ideological beliefs, representing all kinds of economic and racial groups want peace. If the peoples are the cornerstone of the organization of things, they should be strong enough to make their governments act."

The interview with Mr. Cohen climaxed a day that saw more than 600 women and trade unionists, representing a variety of peace organizations in New York, come to the UN and leave statements urging the immediate declaration of a cease-fire in Korea, and negotiations for world peace.

The two main points made by the small delegation that saw Mr. Cohen were that a priceless opportunity for peace lay at hand because of the dismissal of General MacArthur and the North Korean peace proposals, and that it was incumbent upon the UN to act speedily to bring hostilities to a halt.

Mr. Cohen observed that in the view of the UN there were many practical difficulties that lay in the way. He indicated that the UN was extremely concerned however to prevent any extension of the present conflict. When he remarked that the Committee for Good Offices, set up by the UN General Assembly, had the power to act on the matter of peace in Korea, the delegation asked for an appointment with the committee. Mr. Cohen promised to arrange one.

Three other delegations during the day had interviews with Minister Dayal of the Indian delegation, Chester Williams of the U. S. delegation and Ambassador Fawzi of the Egyptian delegation. The peace delegates expressed their thanks to Minister Dayal for the Indian government's peace efforts. Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, Negro statesman and peace leader, who headed the delegation to Minister Dayal, left with him a statement that expressed the concern of the fifteen million Negroes in the U. S. in bringing about a permanent peace.

Ambassador Fawzi of Egypt told the delegation that his government's aim is to get the interested parties to sit down together and work out a peaceful settlement. Mr. Williams, however, took the view that the proposals of the North Korean government was "propaganda."

High points of the day's activities were the mass delegations, led mostly by women, who kept streaming to the UN all day, attempting to see officials and leave statements and petitions for peace with them. UN guards and city police kept them out of UN grounds for a good part of the day, but small groups of the delegations, which came from many organizations and from all parts of the city, managed to leave their statements with UN representatives. Toward afternoon, a group of 300 women argued their way into the UN lobby. Mr. Cordier, of the Secretary General's staff, came down and spoke to them of the difficulties that lay in the way of implementing their proposals for immediate peace.

A young woman who spoke after Mr. Cordier asked, "If it was possible for us to cut through the red tape and get into the UN lobby, isn't it possible for the UN to cut through the red tape and establish peace?"

Summarizing the day's events, Dr. Clementina Paolone, chairman of the American Women for Peace, said that she felt the delegations succeeded in emphasizing the value and importance of public expressions of sentiment for peace.

"Popular expressions for peace are the force that can obviously impel the immediate cessation of hostilities in Korea. Our interviews today showed that government officials are responsive to public opinion, and can be made even more so."

Crisis Conference

Stating that "Americans everywhere are sensing the dangers of our current foreign policy," the National Committee for Peaceful Alternatives have announced a delegate conference of its membership in Washington, May 9th and 10th.

The meeting, according to the Rev. Willard Uphaus, executive director, expects to have delegates attend from 110 Chapters in some 35 states. Terming the meeting a "crisis conference," the committee call states "We are not willing to believe that brute force is a substitute for human reason. We are not willing to stake America's security solely upon military power. We reaffirm our consistent belief that the only sure road to peace lies in negotiation, mutual disarmament, economic cooperation among nations, and in holding ties of friendship and brotherhood with the people of good will everywhere in the world."

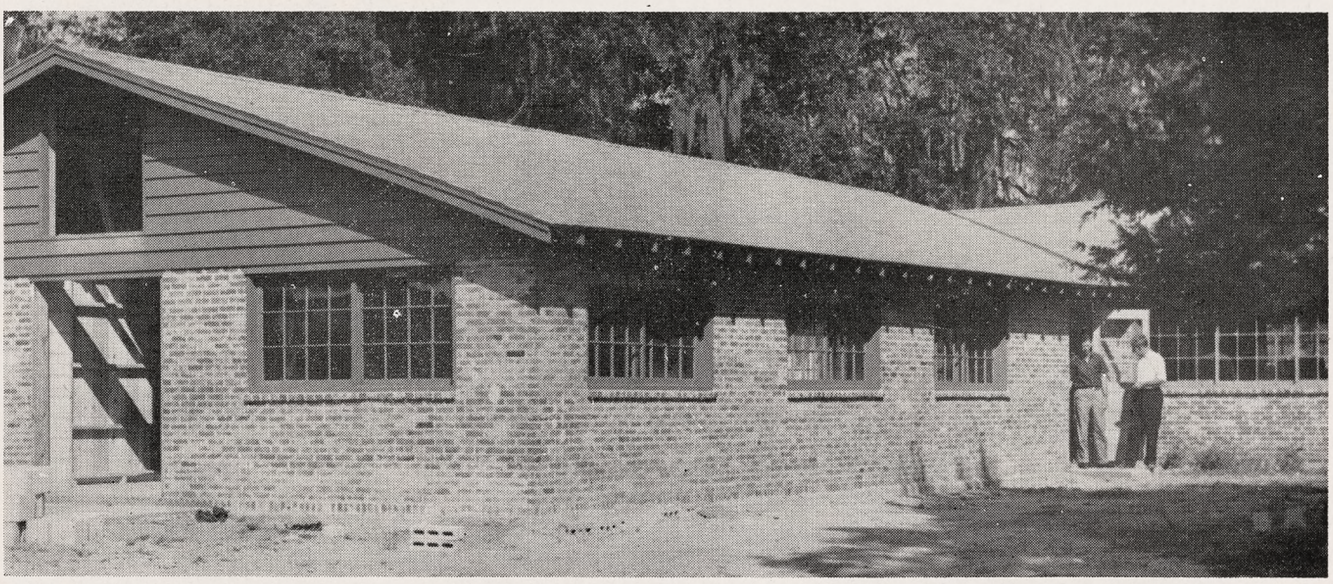
The call to the conference is signed by committee officers, including Emily Greene Balch, honorary chairman of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; Bishop W. J. Walls, A. M. E. Zion Church; Rabbi Abraham Cronbach, Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, Ohio; Professor Kermit Eby, University of Chicago; Dr. W. H. Jernagin, President National Sunday School; Dean John B. Thompson of the Rockefeller memorial chapel, University of Chicago.



The Washington Conference will, according to the call, "enter the great debate with a genuine program for peace." Activities of the conference will include, in addition to reviewing the policy and program of the organization, conduct of a lobby to Congressmen and federal officials and the presentation of a resolution to Congress "to make our opposition to current war policies manifest. With Americans everywhere sensing the dangers of our current foreign policy, it is surely our responsibility to make articulate this opinion."

LAYMEN TO MEET IN WEST TEXAS

★ The fifth annual Laymen's conference of the diocese of West Texas, May 11-13, will be one of eight assemblies to be held this summer at Camp Capers, the beautiful camp of 76 acres on the Guadalupe River, north of San Antonio. The guest leader will be Mr. Stewart A. Cushman of the diocese of Chicago, who has been active in both national and diocesan work and was one of the laymen selected by the Presiding Bishop for the group in special training. Mr. William B. Atkins of Trinity Church, San Antonio, is president of the laymen of West Texas and is also chairman of the department of promotion of the diocese. He says that out of the conference last year came the widely-publicized "Sewanee Calf Club" as well as two new out-door class rooms. The men not only furnished the funds for these but performed most of the work of building them. Two laymen have just made a memorial offering for an additional cabin for boys. This will bring the total number of buildings to twelve. The spiritual life of all the conferences centers about the Chapel of St. Francis, an open air structure of rock. The chaplain for the laymen's conference will be Bishop Everett H. Jones.

COLORADO FIGHTS CHILD LABOR

★ The department of social relations of Colorado is vigorously opposing the attempt of Congressman Rogers of Texas to so change the child labor laws that children under 16 will be permitted to work in agriculture during school hours. The Rev. R. L. Sonne, Longmont, chairman of the department, has urged people to write Congressmen, Senators, and members of the committee on education and labor of the House.

MARTIN J. BRAM ELECTED IN SOUTH FLORIDA

★ The Rev. Martin J. Bram, rector of Holy Trinity, West Palm Beach, was elected suffragan bishop of South Florida at the convention meeting at St. Mary's, Daytona Beach, April 10-12. Attendance was the largest in the history of the diocese, with 650 delegates and visitors.

Bishop Loutitt reported gains with new missions established and with four missions applying for parish status. He also said that there are 13 candidates and postulants for the ministry at the present time.

Bishop West, coadjutor of Florida, was the guest speaker at the laymen's dinner held in connection with the convention, and the Very Rev. Wayland S. Mandell, warden of St. Andrew's Seminary, Manila, was the speaker at a missionary service.

NEW PARISH HOUSE IN DENVER

★ Marshall Hall, new parish house of St. Barnabas, Denver, was dedicated April 8 by Bishop Bowen. The rector, under whose leadership the building was completed, is the Rev. Alexander M. Lukens. The building is a memorial for a former rector, the Rev. Charles H. Marshall who served the parish for 25 years.

EPISCOPALIANS BUY CHRISTIAN CHURCH

★ St. George's, Englewood, Colo., has purchased the church of the First Christian Church which is now being remodeled, inside and out, to make it in effect a brand new building. A new organ is to go into the church as a memorial to Bishop Irving P. Johnson, founder and first editor of The Witness, and his successor as bishop of Colorado, Fred Ingley.

CONVOCATION OF LIBERIA

★ Addressing the Convocation of Liberia, Bishop Bravid W. Harris called for effort and sacrifice on the part of the people. "I must call on all of our people for renewed giving and devotion on the part of our clergy; and for unsparing sacrificial service on the part of our teachers and lay workers."

The convocation met at St. Paul's Church, Sinoe County, April 12 to 15. A convocation has not met here since 1927. Attendance was eleven lay and eleven clerical delegates and many visitors. Over $3,100 was collected for the convocation, of which $800 will go for the general program of the Church overseas, and $500 as the district's contribution to the bishop's salary.

During convocation a class of 24 was confirmed, and two deacons were ordained to the priesthood. They were Christopher Kei Kandakai and William Vaanii Gray, both of them former teachers in the Interior Schools of Cape Mount.

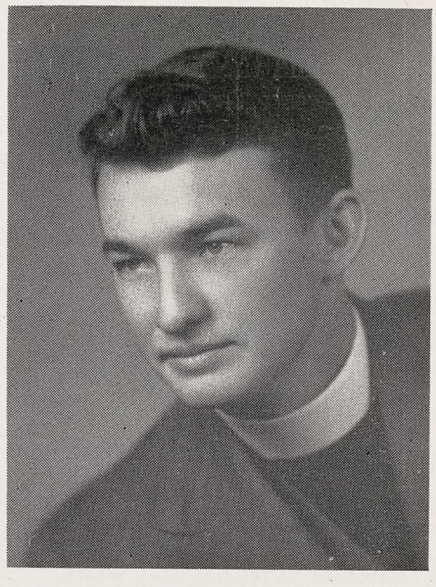
The Hon. C. L. Simpson, vice president of the Republic of Liberia and a leading layman of the Church, addressed the convocation at an evening session.

The Woman's Auxiliary presented their United Thank Offering of $110. Mrs. Maa Wiles was appointed president by the Bishop.

The General Sunday School Union held its meeting concurrently with convocation and presented a gift of $50 to the convocation.

Reports were made of increased enrollment in all schools, increased circulation of The Liberian Churchman, new churches consecrated, generous giving by the Church schools.

WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL GIFT FROM KING



King George VI of Britain will present a silver cross and a pair of candlesticks to the Washington Cathedral as a token of gratitude in behalf of British servicemen and women who worshipped there during World War II, it was learned here. The altar plate will be dedicated at a service in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on July 4, at which time General Dwight D. Eisenhower will present a scroll to St. Paul's in memory of American servicemen buried in England.

Subsequently, the altar plate will be installed at Washington Cathedral in colorful ceremonies to which President Truman, the British ambassador, church leaders, and other dignitaries will be invited.

BISHOP MORTIMER OF EXETER

★ Bishop Robert C. Mortimer of Exeter, England, delivered the final lecture of a series of five at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, April 25, his subject being canon law. He also delivered lectures on moral and pastoral theology, April 23-27, at the School of the Prophets, Grace Cathedral, San Francisco.

Other engagements while in this country were All Saints, Pasadena, April 29; All Saints, Chevy Chase, Md., May 6; dinner in connection with the convention of Delaware, May 8; St. Christopher's School, Richmond, Va., May 9-10; Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, May 13; Philadelphia Divinity School, May 14-15; men's guild of Boston, May 18; the Advent, Boston, May 20. He is to sail for England May 23.

Vertical vs. Horizontal

OUR fathers lived in a relatively stable kind of a world. Heaven was up above, hell was down below, and in between the earth occupied more or less the center of the stage. Men might have other problems, but at least they knew where they stood in the universe. Their world was pretty well anchored in time and space.

Today the situation has radically changed. In the face of astronomy's vast new horizons we seem adrift in an immensity which defies all imagination. We are told that ours is an expanding universe stretching tens of thousands of light years out into infinity. And the earth has become but a minor star among the galaxies of heaven, among the least instead of the greatest.

Pondering this, what shall we say of the Ascension of Christ? To the literal-minded, twentieth century cosmology is very disturbing to put it mildly. It raises havoc with the traditional picture of a creation on three levels in which God comes down and later goes up in Christ. No longer can we use the old terms in their old sense, but can we not say that the meaning behind them remains the same yesterday, today and forever — needing only to be translated into new symbols?

Actually the Ascension is but a pictorial way of expressing the persistent faith of the Christian Church that Jesus Christ belongs to the eternal order of things. He who lived and died and was raised again at the great divide of history and is the head of the Church, is at the heart of Reality, very God of very God. This is the substance of the Ascension; the picture is but the shadow. The latter changes with the changing years, the former remains the same in every age.

To speak then of "going up" into heaven or "coming down" is a holdover from a pre-scientific age. And yet there is a sense in which these ancient signposts still point the way. The Ascension points above, and gives to those who are Christ's a vertical reference of truth and salvation. We have this in contrast to the horizontal standard of the world where man is the measure of all things. The Christian measure is God in Christ, vertical, and cutting across our human way at every stage of life. It calls for forgiveness instead of revenge, humility instead of pride, self-giving instead of self-interest. The two ways compete in every generation, God-centeredness versus self-centeredness, the vertical versus the horizontal. And as our religion reminds us when these two met once in history in a person both human and divine there was a cross, the all significant sign of the Christian faith.

This week we shall celebrate his Ascension, not in the sense of being up above the bright blue sky, but in the sense of representing the true salvation and standard of life. At the heart of the universe the love of Christ enfolds all things visible and invisible. This is the crux of the matter.

"QUOTES"

WE expect from our Western friends a rigorous action for peace. We have no right to condemn them for their hesitation to join the Defenders of Peace—we do not know whether they have good reasons for their hesitation. But we have a right to ask why they have not started a parallel drive for peace, equally decisive, equally strong. Is the word "peace" communist-dominated? Is it to be for that very reason, avoided?

Thou Art Mad

WE were reminded of the story in Acts by an excerpt from a sermon preached by the Rev. J. Gilbert Baker, a missionary recently returned from China. The story concerns Peter's being thrown into jail. The churchpeople gathered in Jerusalem and prayed fervently for his release. Unknown to them, an angel set him free. When he came to the house where the prayer meeting was held, they were so stunned by the report that their prayer had been answered that they insisted that the servant girl who brought the news was crazy—"thou art mad."

It is often surprising when something one works and prays for is fruitful. Here is what Mr. Baker said, "I see God's justice in the religious situation in China, in that the Church formerly had an easy time, and its clergy were treated as a privileged class. Now they have to stand at the end of the line. The missionaries started education for social reform, and they can't be too surprised if Christian ideals of social equality lead to this new condition."

What a devastating experience it would be if one morning we woke up to find that our preaching and praying for a "just and righteous peace" had culminated in that fact!

Notes and Comments

THOSE who advocate peace as the primary basis for all international relations have a strong case in the latest turn in the world situation. After untold sacrifice and suffering we are almost back where we began before World War II. The UN is suffering from the same sort of disease that killed the League of Nations; Germany and Japan are about to be rearmed; the imperialist nations are being revived; labor is pushed back into the stage where it was before the CIO; prosperity is being supported by a war economy; the original counter-revolutionary, Franco, is given a comfortable seat in the family of nations. The only thing that is different is that international Communism has been tremendously strengthened. What do the advocates of World War III really think they will accomplish?

AN optimist today has been defined as one who thinks that the future is uncertain.

THE Melish case must provide little satisfaction for those who initiated it. A courageous man has been pushed into retirement, which he intended to do anyway. A local congregation has been raised to an important parish, and the original problem which the authorities first sought to avoid has come home to roost with a strength that it never had before. Apparently only the lawyers stand to gain and "they have their reward."

Forgiving Our Enemies

BY
HELEN MEARS
Author of "Japan: Mirror for Americans"

AN article, by Francis Moore (Witness, April 5), discusses the most important problems of our times—the role of the Christian Church in international relations. Mr. Moore approaches the problem by way of the Christian doctrine of "forgiving our enemies," and applies it to our current "enemies"—the Russians and Chinese. Mr. Moore's conclusion is that the Christian must abhor the evil done by "international gangsters," and Christian society must "withstand, bring to trial and punish the leaders and their supporters who have brought so much suffering upon the earth." Forgiveness in this case, Mr. Moore concludes, is not possible "before they have repented," and "until they are ready for forgiveness society cannot give it, because society would be lost if it did so." The Christian duty, as Mr. Moore sees it is to hold "good will and mercy" in the heart so that after the enemy has been punished, and has repented, he may be forgiven.

Mr. Moore's thoughtful essay, and particularly his conclusions, raise questions of profound importance to everyone concerned with the problem of how Christian principles and western law can be developed and extended as the basis of a world society in which nations can live in peace under a rule of law and justice. Mr. Moore surely will not take it amiss if we discuss some of these questions.

Issue Not Simple

AS Mr. Moore defines the problem of western relations to Russia and China he sees the issue as simple: good vs. evil, with the west clearly good, and the enemy clearly bad. The problem of the west, therefore, as representing Christian principles, is to punish these wicked nations and bring their leaders to repentance.

The problem of repentance, however, involves the clear recognition of guilt. In the western world, society has clearly stated its moral and legal principles, so that an individual can know when he transgresses against morality and law. Mr. Moore illustrates this point with a story about a holy man and a thief. The holy man, the Rev. Mr. C. F. Andrews, "a pacifist and a saint" was working in the London slums where he showed particular kindness to a drunkard who repaid his kindness by stealing from Mr. Andrews a silver communion set. Mr. Andrews was torn between what he felt was his Christian duty to forgive and his recognition that the man had clearly broken both moral and social law. He decided that "The truest way to 'forgive' . . . was really to put him under restraint . . . and then bear the burden of the punishment as far as I could along with him." So Mr. Andrews caused the man to be arrested, and later on the man acknowledged his guilt and told Mr. Andrews that he had been right in sending him to jail.

Mr. Moore uses this story to illustrate his conclusion that the "offender" must be brought to repentance as part of the Christian duty of forgiveness.

The weakness of this story as a guide to Christian attitudes toward international relations is the fact that there will seldom be any dispute between nations where the issues are so clear and obvious. No "enemy" nation is likely to see its conduct as clearly wicked, or see our conduct as clearly righteous. In Mr. Moore's story the thief was both morally and legally guilty and knew it. The thief knew that Mr. Andrews was a holy man whose kindness he had betrayed; and he knew that he had broken the clearly recognized law against stealing. His consciousness of guilt therefore—which was the basis for his repentance—rested on clearly stated and generally accepted moral and legal principles. It is obvious that there are no such clearly stated and universally accepted moral and legal principles to govern international relations. It is obvious that no nation in the world represents the Christian principles in the clear unequivocal way Mr. Andrews represented them. Where is the Great Power whose foreign policies today are both "pacifistic and saintly?"

Self-criticism

IN his personal life, the Christian is required to scrutinize his own conduct in a spirit of self-criticism and humility. If this is so, should not a society which calls itself Christian, be under an even more strict obligation to scrutinize its own foreign policies with self-criticism and humility? Mr. Moore, of course, recognizes this problem and points out that Christian society must "perhaps be prepared for some humiliation in the achievement of reconciliation," but humiliation and humility are not the same thing. Humiliation implies some yielding from a position of unquestioned rectitude; whereas humility implies an acknowledgment of shared imperfection, along with a shared striving for general improvement —for ourselves as well as the "enemy."

Mr. Moore implies, and indeed says, that we must "withstand, bring to trial and punish the leaders and their supporters who have brought so much suffering upon the earth." But how can we do this without ourselves bringing equal if not more suffering? By focussing on the necessity for punishing a transgressor, we tend to forget of what his transgression consists, and ourselves commit that transgression with no thought of the need for our own punishment and atonement. For example, during world war two, we were genuinely and deeply horrified by the mass bombing of civilians by the Germans and by the use of such a weapon as the buzz-bomb which was directed against civilians and used wholly for terroristic purposes. Before the war was over, however, we ourselves had surpassed the Germans in the use of such weapons: and had developed and used against civilians a terrible new atomic bomb. Today we have stockpiled hundreds of these terrible weapons; have gone on to develop another—which our journalists openly call the "Hell-bomb;" and, in our effort to "punish the aggression" of the North Koreans and Chinese we have literally destroyed Korea from north to south with explosives and fire, killing numberless thousands of innocent women and children, and making millions homeless.

How can other peoples be expected to accept Christian principles as the basis for international morality, if those principles seem to apply only to those whom we call our "enemy?"

International Law

SIMILARLY, there are difficulties in the way of persuading other people to accept western standards as a basis for international law. Law, to be enforceable, must be clearly recognized and accepted by the governed. For example, if the overwhelming majority of people in the U. S. did not believe that stealing was a crime, it would be impossible to enforce a law against it. Americans, however, have accepted a prohibition against stealing, and have clearly given the government power to enforce the law against it.

In the case of international relations there is not yet world law, nor is there a world government with clear authority to enforce it. We think of ourselves today as representing the law, and we think of the Chinese as clearly representing "international gangsters," that is, people who have broken the law. But the Chinese do not accept their guilt, and in fact they claim that it is we who are guilty. We point out that our authority comes from the UN. The Chinese however do not accept this authority as valid and in fact charge that in giving us this authority the UN itself broke the law. The reason for this Chinese claim is the fact that when the UN was formed, China was a charter member; was recognized as a major great power; and was given a permanent position on the Security Council—the UN organ which was given responsibility for "maintaining the peace." Yet the present Chinese government was given no voice in the important decisions about Korea. For almost a year before the Chinese intervention in Korea the new Chinese government had been trying to gain recognition in the UN. This Chinese government was excluded because the U. S. government does not approve of Communists, and Chinese Communists had been leaders in organizing the new government. The Chinese, however, declared that this American objection to Communists has no legal authority; and did not justify the exclusion of their new government from the UN. The fact is that the Central People's Government of Chinese People's Republic—as the new government is called—has been governing China since October 1949. By mid-January 1950, more than a year ago, this government had been recognized as the legitimate government of China by half of the nations on the Security Council. It is a fact that the government of China, which we recognize and which has been speaking for China in the UN, has had no relation whatever with continental China for over a year, and in fact has existed only by reason of U. S. financial, political and military support. This means that the 450 million Chinese people have been completely disenfranchised in the UN. They have had no voice in deciding problems involving their close neighbors. The Chinese genuinely believe that in thus excluding them it is we who have broken the law. Moreover, any thorough study of U. S.-Chinese relations within the UN will disclose that the Chinese legal case is a very strong one.

Man's Best Hope

AS a basis for a world united under law the principles of Christianity seem mankind's best hope. This hope, however, will be frustrated until Americans, and Christians, become more attentive to our own shortcomings. At this moment when our military power is the most obvious fact of international relations we are in the gravest danger of forgetting that might is not always identical with right. Surely the Christian method of solving international tensions would be by mediation, conciliation, and a sincere effort to solve the problems which give rise to international tension, rather than by force of arms.

Before the world can achieve a rule of peace under law, based on Christian principles, there will have to be some clearer and firmer Christian leadership toward defining those principles as they apply to international relations. International relations are endlessly complex and any simple certitude of guilt assigned to an "enemy" can only further confuse the complex issues. If our government—like Mr. Andrews—was pacifistic and saintly, it is possible that the governments of other nations might be less belligerent. And until our government does in fact base its foreign policies on Christian principles we have small justification for using these principles as a base for judging and punishing other governments.

Music as a Means of Grace

BY
W. B. SCHMIDGALL
Rector of Wyoming County, Pa., Churches

WE get far more than we deserve from Church music. This is true not only in the case of a congregation suffering through a tedious setting of the Te Deum, but of congregational ennoblement through glad participation in a fine hymn. Like the speaking in tongues of the primitive Church, music is an unstable element. Attempts to make it an appropriate offering as part of worship have had to be made again and again throughout the history of the Church. It gets out of hand. We are on the one extreme confronted with a concert hall virtuosity having no relationship to the spirit of worship and, on the other, congregations struck dumb when the occasion calls for just the opposite manifestation.

Evidently there is a continuing strain of impatience with unmanageable elements in the service, what St. Paul felt when he advised those who spoke in tongues. He said he would rather hear something that made sense. Doubtless enthusiasm must finally conform to reason. But a good deal of our present service music can claim neither enthusiasm nor reason. For every congregation that sings, or is allowed to, there are ten which don't. For every parish whose music in church and church school is reasonably planned to accompany the spirit of the liturgy, there are ten in which music gives only accidental assistance, if not creating real obstacles.

Bad Habits

When music plays its part well in the worship of God, it repays out of proportion to the effort made. Yet sometimes in the most insidious way, it can do more to damage the spirit of worship than any other part of the service. The congregation is helpless, once the service has begun, to alter undesirable elements. And in more than one case a bad music situation has dragged on and on because the congregation has, through habit, simply decided to ignore the musical parts of the service. It would be regrettable if this were the reason so many of our congregations stand mute through most of the hymns. If this were true, it would reflect poorly on both the clergy and the laity. The former, for not having done his part, and the latter for not caring whether or not he has. The organist, on the spot between the clergy and the people, is in an unenviable position. Nevertheless if we don't do well by our music, within the limits of each situation where it is to be used, it recoils upon us in merciless judgment. We sometimes criticize unkindly hymns of the old fashioned revival. There are theological errors and artistic abuses enough. But that doesn't justify us in being smug and complacent about our own shortcomings. It is probable that the hymns we use at present are of better quality both in text and music, but the lack of congregational participation ought to make us a little humble about our own situation. And there are other elements in our use of music of which we cannot be proud.

Means of Grace

NOT the least of these is that we have given too little consideration to music as a means of grace. It is commonplace to hear that music is made in praise of God, even if the obvious truth of this is not so commonly put into practice. Many a choir exists for entertainment, and sings and acts accordingly. We reject fine hymns, at times, on the theory that if they don't immediately please us they aren't worth the trouble to learn. But even if we believe and act on the principle that Church music is in praise of God, and not ourselves, we are still overlooking what is fundamental.

Perhaps there is an element of praise in the Kyrie Eleison, but if there is, it is in the background, momentarily, of a more pressing claim. For if we sing the Kyrie as is intended, we make a plea which comes from the very depths of our being. God knows our needs before we ask, but we don't until we begin asking in his presence. Perhaps the main difference between speaking and singing such portions of the service is that singing enlists many more elements of the self than does speaking. Elements of desire and emotion enter into music that can hardly be conveyed by means of speech. Sometimes we pretend to have no ability to sing when really we are afraid to let these elements enter into our worship.

One of our first reactions to congregations who have "hung up their harps" is that the people must have become self-conscious. (A less charitable judgment is coldness of heart). But the question soon becomes one of whether it is self-consciousness toward God or fellow worshippers. At the very least, this indicates that music reveals more of self, in whatever relationship between God or man, than does the spoken word. We don't find the same problem in the spoken parts of the service involving congregational participation.

As a beginning, then, to undo some of our difficulties with regard to Church music, we might approach it in the spirit of the general confession rather than of a mighty act of praise. Here we are admitting to a mutual doubt about our souls' health, and yet we aren't afraid of the admission, believing in God's forgiveness. Whatever we offer in the way of music in worship is not entirely wholesome and never can be under prevailing conditions. Nevertheless we offer it in the hope that it will be somehow redeemed. The efficacy of music in worship is such that when, through it, we expose ourselves more fully to God's merciful judgment he deals graciously with our whole being. As in all our efforts directed toward him, he rewards us beyond either our deserving or our imagining.

A Simple Solution

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

IT is easy to miss a simple solution to a problem just because it is simple. Like Naaman of old, who, when told to wash in the river Jordan in order to be cured of his leprosy, considered that too simple a remedy, so we, too, often look for a complicated, hard answer when a simple one will do. We are much concerned with building up the life of the parish church, and we try many things.

We plan special guild programs, square-dances, men's smokers, talent shows, and many such affairs, hoping thereby to make stronger parishes. All of these efforts have their place, and make their contribution, but they are really peripheral. They do not get to the heart of the problem.

The simple answer is consistent church attendance every Sunday on the part of the communicants of the church. A person who attends church regularly is bound to be interested, informed, and he is in the position where he can grow spiritually.

Furthermore, a full church is a vital witness to the loyalty of Christians to their Lord.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

WORLD RELIEF CONSIDERED

★ The report of his 24,000 mile trip around the world to study the refugee problem was presented to the delegates attending a conference of the U. S. member Churches of the World Council by the Rev. Franklin C. Fry, president of the United Lutheran Church. The meeting was in Cleveland, April 10-11. "One of the greatest illusions from which Americans suffer," he said, "is that this country is expected to provide all the relief supplies everywhere. I am convinced from first-hand inspection that no more than two percent of the food, clothing and shelter furnished to the Karen refugees in Burma, for example, came from the United States. Almost all the remainder of what was given to them was supplied by the people in Burma themselves."

In India, he said, the desperate lack of food is a result of the floods, tornedoes, drought, plagues of locusts, earthquakes. "The Indian government," he reported, "shows its eagerness and appreciation for help from the United States by providing free inland transportation for all our voluntary American relief gifts, which are shipped without charge to the border distribution."

Dr. Fry summarized his conclusions by saying that "our gifts are tremendously worthwhile, although not nearly enough, either in the areas of food, clothing, shelter, medicines, or that which will redeem the almost endless amount of leisure time among the unemployed and the refugees." The fervor for giving is decreasing all the time and he believes there must be adequate motivations for spurring this giving on as never before. Only so, he believes, can the reputation of the United States and the United Nations be redeemed in Asia and Europe. He declared it is "for God's sake. My gift identifies me with him. Therefore, we must intensify what we are doing for our soul's sake, as a voluntary act as befitting our Saviour."

The Episcopal Church was represented by Bishop Richard S. M. Emrich of Michigan, who conducted the devotional services, Bishop Angus Dun of Washington, the Rev. James W. Kennedy of Lexington, Ky., Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, New York and Mrs. Edwin A. Stebbins, Rochester, N. Y.

A budget of $240,000 was approved at the first business session, as the American share of the total $365,000 World Council budget. Last year the American Churches gave $223,667. This amount is over and above the operating expenses of the New York office, including salaries, travel, supplies, etc.; these operating costs are more than covered by individual gifts.

Eleanor Kent Browne, assistant treasurer, who submitted the report, also pointed out that this budget does not include any of the interchurch aid relief work of the Churches or the service to displaced persons and refugees. Funds for these purposes are handled through relations with Church World Service.

Included in the ongoing work of the Council which is covered by the budget is the study program, youth department, evangelism, commission on the life and work of women in the Church, the ecumenical institute at Geneva, and the commission on faith and order.

The family of the deceased will be notified of the gift, without mentioning the amount. A book of memory records the name of the deceased, and the donors. Proceeds are used for supplies and furnishings for the church.

MANILA HOSPITAL HAS X-RAY EQUIPMENT

★ St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, is to have $25,000 worth of new X-ray equipment. Bishop Norman S. Binsted writes: "Here is a bit of good news. Through the good offices of a member of the Board of Governors of St. Luke's Hospital, we have just received a gift from the William J. Shaw Estate (a former Manila resident) of $25,000 for new X-ray equipment. Our old machine was not shock proof and a bit dangerous."

AUXILIARY BOARD MAKES GRANTS

★ From now until its next session, in October, the national executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary is working as a committee of the whole, considering suggestions and plans for the next triennial meeting, which takes place in Boston in September, 1952.

At its meeting in Seabury House, April 20-23, the board approved a number of women missionary appointments for National Council action, discussed methods of recruiting and training women missionaries, received reports from staff members and representatives of the cooperating agencies —Girls Friendly Society, Episcopal Service for Youth, Church Periodical Club and Daughters of the King, and made a number of appropriations from the United Thank Offering, the Emery Fund and other sources.

As the next school year begins in advance of the next board meeting, appropriations were made at this time for next year's scholarship or other help in training prospective women missionaries, eighteen in all. About half the girls will enter Windham House, the Church training center in New York; others will go to St. Margaret's, Berkeley, Cal., the women's department of the Philadelphia Divinity School, or Roanridge, the National Council's rural center at Parkville, Mo. One student is a girl from Panama who is completing her training as a nurse in St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce, P. R. One scholarship, for which there are six applicants, is for social work training in connection with Episcopal Service for Youth. Scholarship aid was also voted for students now in training, to help with their summer field work in various mission fields.

Among items provided from the United Thank Offering were office equipment for a missionary going to Brazil, recreation materials for one going to Liberia; also sums to help toward student centers in Mississippi and New Hampshire, a conference center in Eau Claire, a chapel at Zamboanga, a school in Alaska.

CONNECTICUT CHURCH TO HAVE CHAPEL

LEE C. PARSONS
Layman of Springfield, Mass.

It is sometimes interesting for a layman to visit a church of our denomination other than the one he regularly attends. For this reason I recently attended a church in a nearby city. It was reported that this church has been losing in attendance and financial support. Its Sunday services have been broadcast regularly over a local radio station. When the organist took his position at his instrument he was followed by a radio technician who sat behind him at a broadcasting switchboard. The latter placed his earphones over his head and began to adjust his broadcasting machine. All this procedure was plainly visible to the parishioners sitting on our side of the church.

When the rector was preaching the same sort of performance on the part of the technician took place. I found myself watching the movements of the technician rather than listening to the sermon. In order to bring the service within the allotted hour for broadcasting the rector was obliged to omit the general confession and the thanksgiving. The organist also had to leave out the last two verses of the recessional.

As the service closed one had the feeling that he had been in a sort of radio studio rather than a church of God. Perhaps this feeling is rather general among the church parishioners and may account for the decline in interest in this particular parish.

ROBERT S. S. WHITMAN
Sec'y, the Anglican Society

The article in The Witness of March 8 by Dr. Massey Shepherd on "The Problem of Ceremonial" is excellent but why the crack at the Anglican Society? The spirit of the article is completely in accord with the views of the Society.

While there was a time when the Anglican Society was or seemed to be pre-occupied with colors and uses, today it is concerned to re-establish loyalty to the Prayer Book and canons in letter and spirit not only as the norm for the Anglican Communion but as the expression of the authority of the Church in this branch of the same. The society is naturally eager that Church-people be taught the meaning of the liturgy and take an active part in it and so is in complete accord with the developments of the liturgical movement as they may be expressed within the framework of the rubrics of the Prayer Book. When questions concerning the minutiae of ceremonial do arise, the society does direct our inquiry toward the established practices of the Anglican Communion rather than elsewhere but that is not to say that we are concerned with such matters.

The Anglican Society is neither "high," "low" nor "broad." We reject those terms as having outworn their usefulness. I think that I can speak for the society in putting it as a friend of mine put it to me, that we are only concerned with whether a man is a Churchman or a sectarian. A Churchman is one who is loyal to that branch of the Church to which he belongs. A sectarian is one who disregards the directions of his branch of the Church and strikes out on his own regardless of whether the direction of his excursion be "Catholic" or "Protestant."

The objects of the American Branch of the Anglican Society as stated in its quarterly, "The Anglican," are: "1. To promote and preserve the Catholic faith in strict accordance with the principles laid down by the Book of Common Prayer. 2. To uphold and appreciate the Anglican use both in rite and ceremonial. Membership is invited on the broad principle of loyalty to the American Prayer Book, constitution and canons and the common law of the Anglican Communion."

ANSWER: We do not, on rereading the article, find any crack at the Anglican Society. And we are sure that Columnist Massey Shepherd intended none.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT
Book Editor

On This Rock. By G. Bromley Oxnam. Harper. $1.50.

Bishop Oxnam is one of the few people who can speak and write with simplicity, clarity, and compelling power. This book on Christian unity wastes no words but gets to the heart of the matter. The author understands full well the difficulties; he meets them with logic. He does not seek uniformity; at the same time that he realizes the values of diversity he sets forth the unquestionable blessings of a united Church. A realistic book, thrilling and convincing. It is by far the best succinct statement on this topic we have yet seen. A call to action and a challenge to everyone who dares call himself a Christian. —J. H. T.

The Origins of the New Testament. By Alfred Loisy. Translated by L. P. Jacks. Macmillan. $4.50.

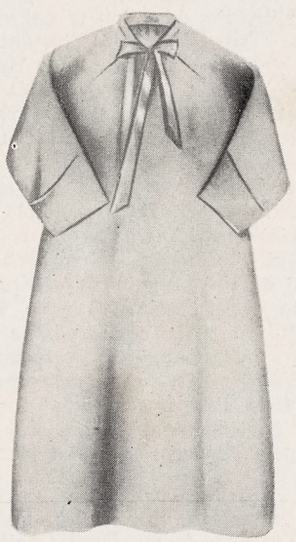
The late Abbe Loisy was one of the most colorful and dramatic leaders of French Modernism. His earlier books were extremely liberal, but retained contact with the exegetical, historical, and theological tradition of the church. His late books, on the other hand, were far more radical. Nevertheless, even from his latest writings, one can learn something — partly by being forced to answer the questions that Loisy raises.

Creating Christian Cells. By John S. Beck, Irving Harris, and S. M. Shoemaker. (61 Gramercy Park, New York 10, N. Y.)

A collection of "recent stories of faith that works through groups," as well as individuals — an illustrated manual of the "cell" movement, which is steadily spreading through the church.

Apostle of Liberty: Starr King of California. By Arnold Crompton. Beacon. $1.75.

The author is on the faculty of the Starr King School for the Ministry in Oakland, Calif. A short (70 pages) life of the Unitarian minister who, "almost single-handed, saved a great state for the Union" at the time of the Civil War.—S. A. T.



A Mighty Fortress. By Ernest Fremont Tittle. Harper. $2.50.

This is the latest and now, alas, a posthumous book, by the great Christian preacher and leader who died in 1949. The book has a preface, "Portrait of a Preacher," by Paul Hutchinson. There is scarcely a minister in America who has not been influenced directly or indirectly by the flaming spirit of Ernest Tittle, and it is good to have this last collection of his sermons and addresses.

The Snowden-Douglass Sunday School Lessons for 1951. Macmillan. $2.50.

This is an old series of very high quality, giving practical expositions of the International Sunday School lessons. The work is thoroughly Bible-centered.

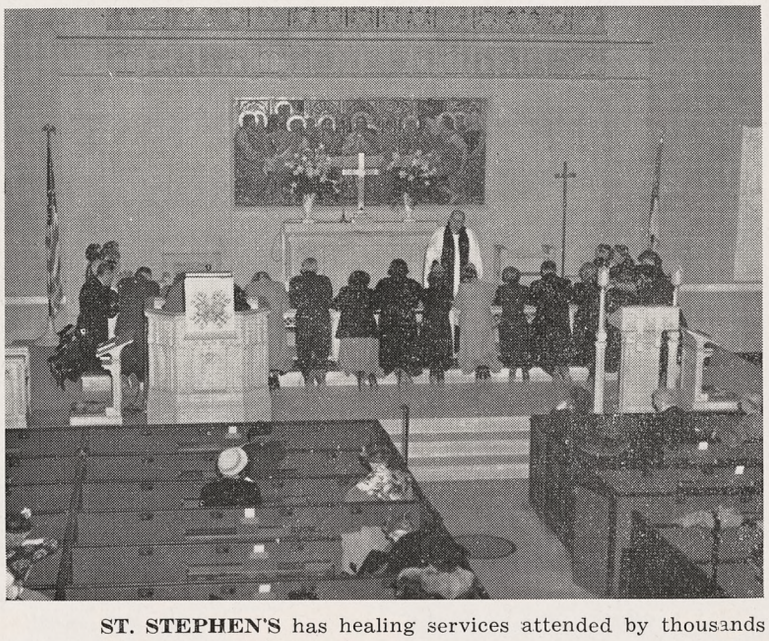
STORY OF THE WEEK

St. Stephen's in Philadelphia Has Extensive Program

One of the Great Parishes of the Country Lives Up to Noble Heritage

★ St. Stephen's Church, Tenth Street above Chestnut, is one of the brave old downtown parishes of Philadelphia. Its leadership has been sound; its past rectors distinguished preachers. It has always been Protestant Episcopal, liberal, broad evangelical. Its endowment somewhere between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars gives it stability. Its foundation in 1823 was one of the results of a great influx into the Episcopal Church that marked the early decades of the nineteenth century, when the popular prejudices against the daughter of the Church of England had lost its power.



To modern eyes, the exterior of the edifice is severely simple and somewhat fortress-like, but it is described in early accounts as a "specimen of the Gothic architecture of the Middle Ages." Today the Church and connected community house are squeezed in among other large buildings, but a very rewarding experience awaits one who crosses the threshold. The interior is difficult to describe. It is not Gothic, or Colonial, or Georgian; it is a strange mixture of several architectural motives, with details lavishly ornamented and likeable to many because so different. It is called Philadelphia's Westminster Abbey because of its many priceless marble memorials, busts of former rectors, graves of distinguished laymen and remains of clergy buried in the walls.

The most exquisite memorial in the church was given in Dr. Elwood Worcester's rectorship. It is called "The Angel of Purity" and is one of the masterpieces of August Saint-Gaudens, America's greatest sculptor, a memorial to Maria Gouverneur Mitchell, the daughter of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and Mrs. Mary Cadwalader Mitchell. The companion piece of this memorial, and very similar, is "Amor, Caritas," which is the only American sculpture to be recognized abroad and is now at the Luxembourg and owned by the French government.

Another notable piece of statuary, the work of Thorwaldsen's pupil, Carl Steinhauser, is called, "The Angel of the Resurrection," and is one of the finest in the world. It commemorates three daughters of the Burd family who had died in girlhood and young womanhood. It represents three comely, maidenly forms, reclining as in sleep beneath a cross. The angel of the resurrection with his horn in his hand, is regarding them, ready to awaken them, but their slumber is so profound and sweet that he hesitates to blow the blast which will recall them to life. The whole group is executed in Thorwaldsen's large, free, simple manner. Under this memorial are buried Colonel Edward Shippen Burd, his wife, Elizabeth Howard Burd and eight children.

The Font

Another work of this great sculptor, Steinhauser, is quite as poetical and lovely. It's a very tall font, perhaps one of the most beautiful in the world, also

ST. STEPHEN'S has healing services attended by thousands who come from all parts of the country in the purest white marble. The shaft and bowl are highly graceful. At the base stand three adorable children holding in their hands the instruments of the Saviour's passion, the nails, the crown of thorns, the spear, with which they appear to be playing with wondering, uncomprehending eyes. Inside the bowl are sculptured in relief the sacred fish, by which the early Christians secretly expressed their faith. Phillips Brooks was so impressed by this touching work that he introduced it into one of his great sermons. Mrs. Burd in 1859, the year before her death, presented the Church with the Font which stands in the southwest corner, near the door.

Burd School

Besides these monuments, Mrs. Burd gave a large sum to St. Stephen's Church and also founded with a munificent gift of $500,000, the Burd School for fatherless girls, which she placed for all time under the control of the rector and vestry of St. Stephen's. The school, in its ninety-fifth year, with an endowment grown to over eight hundred thousand dollars is now situated at 4226 Baltimore Avenue. It provides training, affectionate care, education, social opportunity, health and recreation to some thirty-five girls from four years to eighteen, with very little charge to their mothers.

Near the entrance to the church is the superb recumbent effigy of Edward Shippen Burd sculptured in parian marble by Steinhauser.

Over the altar is a Venetian mosaic of the last supper with more than 180,000 pieces of Venetian glass, presented to St. Stephen's in 1889 by the children of Mrs. James Magee in memory of their mother. It was the creation of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Holiday of London. It was a show piece at a garden fete in London, when Mr. Gladstone was a guest, and he made an address of an hour upon it.

St. Stephen's has always been blessed throughout its history with great music. For forty-six years, Dr. David Wood enchanted the congregation of St. Stephen's with his unearthly melodies. Blind himself, he seemed to see what mortal man could not see. The portrait bust on the north wall under the gallery, is the work of Charles Grafly, of Philadelphia, and is a work of unusual charm, as well as a fine likeness of Dr. Wood. Some of Dr. Wood's well known compositions are, "There Shall Be No Night," "The Twilight Shadows Fall," "Asleep in Jesus," "Behold I Show You a Mystery," "The Son of David," "The Magnificat," and "Deus Misereatur in B Minor."

Bon Mots

Many bons mots of former rectors are still recited in Philadelphia. Dr. Henry Ducachet, the second rector, had a great love of life and keen sense of humor. One day an old friend of Edward Shippen Burd came to St. Stephen's to admire the superb, recumbent effigy of Colonel Burd and remarked sharply, "The last time I saw Edward Burd was over a game of cards in Paris. What is he doing in this church?" Dr. Ducachet replied instantly, "Sir, he's waiting now for the last trump."

The Rev. Wm. Wilberforce

Newton asked in 1907 to give some recollections as a schoolboy and college youth of Old St. Stephen's, wrote in "The Parish News:" "I well remember as a boy when the Burd monuments were placed in the church and the interest and excitement which their introduction into the house of God caused. Dear old Ducachet considered himself

ALFRED W. PRICE is the present rector of St. Stephen's, under whose leadership the parish has had remarkable growth in a certain way the especial guardian of these exquisite monuments, and rightly to estimate them was the same thing in his mind as to attend the most elaborate service. To admire the statuary was to him more than sacrifice, and to venerate the angel in the group was better than the fat of rams."

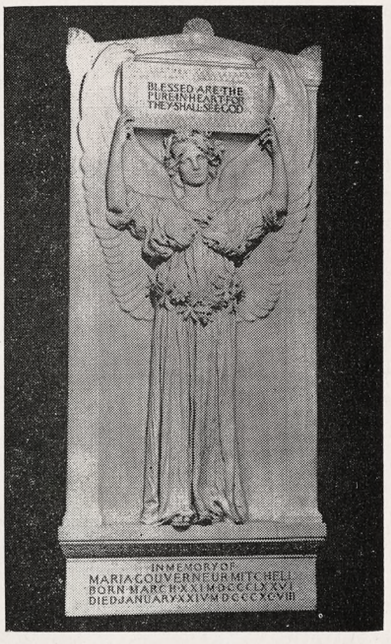
"A story is told of him that during a certain month of August in Philadelphia the rector let his assistant go away upon a vacation, promising to take his place for the daily morning and evening prayer. But after the first week of this service in the terrible heat of August, the dear old doctor found it very trying to be twice in the church in one day."

It is reported of him that upon a certain afternoon in this heated term the doctor kept looking out of the vestry room to see if there were any persons coming to the service, and finding only two visiting lady teachers present, went out to them, moping his head with his large bandanna handkerchief, and fanning himself vigorously with a huge palm leaf fan, as he whispered: "I tell you what it is, my friends, it is too hot to have evening prayer today. Let us take a good pious look at the statuary and then go reverently home."



Elwood Worcester

Dr. Elwood Worcester's call to St. Stephen's was rather unusual for he received his call for not preaching a trial sermon. His father-in-law, Bishop Rulison of Bethlehem asked him to take a service in St. Stephen's one hot Sunday. It was so hot in the hotel that he had to sleep on the floor. The next morning on the way to the church, his feet burning from walking on the scorching pavement, his vestments wet with perspiration, Dr. Worcester thought it only humane to curtail the service as much as possible. "When I mounted the pulpit, I felt it was no time for a long harangue. After a few pleasing words in regard to Dr. McConnell, I added, "I perceive, dear friends, that you are suffering nearly as much as I am and I think it would be well for us to sing one more hymn and all go reverently home." Bishop Rulison told him the following day, "I believe that you will always be unlucky. I did not like to tell you for fear you would not go, but if you had preached a fine, spiritual sermon instead of talking gibberish, you might have received a call to that great parish." Just as the bishop had concluded scolding his son-in-law, a messenger bicycled up the driveway with the message that he had been unanimously elected rector of St. Stephen's Church. When the committee of the vestry waited on Dr. Worcester the next day, he was assured that his action in not preaching convinced them that he was a man of wisdom and understanding and would make a good rector.

No Sinners

One of the first sermons Dr. Worcester preached following his installation was on the subject of sin. An elderly lady, one of the pillars of Philadelphia society, called at his study and said indignantly, "I hope that as long as you are in this church you will never preach on that subject again." When Dr. Worcester asked why not, she continued, "You can't be expected to know everything, but I want you to understand that the members of St. Stephen's are not sinners." When she saw a pained expression come over his face, she quickly added, "Of course, I mean there are no sinners among the regular pew owners."

All six of the deceased former rectors of St. Stephen's were of noble stature and personality. Each succeeding generation of parishioners has had added advantages, added magnificence, in its inheritance. Dr. Montgomery, the delicate and sensitive harbinger of a reviving life, left rich fruit on the branches of the Colonial Church. St. Stephen's is richer because of the warm-hearted Dr. Ducachet whose sympathetic, generous and tolerant spirit protested against the censoriousness of puritanism. Dr. Rudder's brilliant sermons—and personality—inspired vigor, optimism, success. Dr. McConnell, a great, restrained preacher whose crystal clear, logical and provocative sermons set his audiences on fire by sheer power of thought, was regarded by some as a liberal (by others as a radical) drew the best minds of Philadelphia into St. Stephen's. Dr. Worcester, his successor, left a legacy of great spiritual wealth, and not a little humor, to his devoted flock. Dr. Grammer's consistent opposition to Anglo-Catholicism and his broad scholarship made St. Stephen's one of the most influential centers of liberal Christian thought in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Dr. Vincent C. Franks, a liberal, evangelical churchman, came to St. Stephen's in February, 1937, and fulfilled the hope of Dr. Herbert Old, warden, that he would "insure the growth of usefulness and influence of this historic parish" until he left in October, 1939.

Alfred W. Price

When the present rector, Dr. Alfred W. Price, came to St. Stephen's nine years ago he found the morale was at an all-time ebb. The membership had dropped to 188 and the total congregational giving for the years previous amounted to only $3,500 a year. Things had reached the bottom and so there was nothing to do but to climb back. The vestrymen and the congregation rose heroically to the challenge. Slowly but surely the tide turned. In nine years the parish giving was raised considerably each year until at present the 550 communicants and worshippers give over $30,000 a year. This, together with the income from endowments, make possible a $65,000 yearly budget for the church and $40,000 for the Burd School, or $105,000 in all. The rector's program, which attracts over 50,000 worshippers a year, is being used as a model and means to rejuvenate other sick churches in our large urban centers.

Last year 468 worship services were held. The rector conducted 400 and preached 205 sermons. Eight services are held each week, six of them preaching. During Lent noon-day services are held each week-day. The Lenten noon-day services originated here sixty years ago and have continued to the present. 18,000 attended last year.

BURD SCHOOL for fatherless girls is controlled by the rector and vestry of St. Stephen's

The Hard of Hearing

In 1946 two hundred hearing aids were installed in the church and the Rev. Gustav C. Meckling brought in to minister to the hard of hearing. St. Stephen's was the first church in the country to install a substantial number of ear phones and the first to conduct special services. These sensitive ear phones make the service audible to people with a hearing loss of up to 85%. Portable equipment is available in the community house for recreational programs and for a large Bible class Sunday afternoons. Mr. Meckling conducts the Sunday evening service for these handicapped people all year round. On the third Sunday evening there is a celebration of the Holy Communion.

Club for Business Men

A noon-day service for business men is held on Tuesday in the church with prayer, praise and sermon. Luncheon is served in the parish house before and after the service. The stated purpose is to provide a place of spiritual fellowship for men in the midst of a busy week. One hundred and fifty-six men from fifty-five office buildings, representing a cross-section of eight major denominations are now enrolled.

A similar service for business people and shoppers without the luncheon is held on Wednesdays at 12:30 and on Fridays a service of Holy Communion, conducted by the rector.

Healing Services

Two services of spiritual healing are held on Thursdays at 12:30 and 5:30 conducted by the rector. Seven thousand five hundred attended these services last year. People attend not only from the Philadelphia area, but also come by airplane, train and bus from all parts of the country. Hundreds and hundreds of cures of organic, functional and mental diseases have been attested by laboratory and X-ray tests. Doctors and psychiatrists send patients and even sit in the pews at times with their patients. "We have seen every type of physical emotional and spiritual disease cured at the altar rail," says Dr. Price, "from colds to cancer, from earache to epilepsy, from arthritis to chronic alcoholism, from mental depression to mental derangement." People in trouble come to the rector's study for consultation in ever increasing numbers. "We have a steady stream of human problems," says the rector, "ranging from the depths of sorrow, frustration, unhappiness, physical and mental disharmony through divorce to alcoholism. Despite all the other activities of this generation, there is one basic need in mankind today; man is seeking with all his heart for a personal demonstration of God's power—a first-hand experience of religion. Hundreds of people have received such an experience in our sanctuary and have gone away with the tangible evidence of being recreated physically, emotionally, and spiritually. Every week we have evidence presented to us that with God in the picture there is no disease that is incurable, and no problem that cannot be solved."

"Spiritual healing, we are convinced is based upon solid foundation of holy scripture, sound science, psychology, and common sense. The basic principle on which we operate is that man is a unit of body, mind, and spirit. Any malady that affects one part of that unity affects the other parts of that unity."

"One of my valued professors in the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, in the subject of pastoral care, Dr. Richard C. Cabot, for many years professor of social ethics at Harvard Medical School, and eminent leader in medical and social education, said at our class one day that the minister could be doing 75 per cent of the healing work of the physician and could do some of it better than the physician, if he knew his business. Such was his estimate of ministers' opportunities for spiritual therapy."

"If only every minister of Christ had the faith to offer himself as a channel of his healing, and teach his people to support the ministry with prayer, the mighty works which Christ would do, would become a powerful instrument of evangelism, and open fresh doors to the preaching of the gospel, in an age when so many have come to feel that the church has nothing that they need."

National Council Purchases Property in Greenwich

★ The most important action taken at the meeting of the National Council at Seabury House, April 25-26, was approval of the purchase for $175,750 of a business property in Greenwich, Conn. They voted $225,000 for the cost of acquiring, altering and equipping the property. It is hoped that special gifts will cover these costs, but pending that the money is to come from undesignated legacies and be restored thereto in ten annual installments from an item to be placed in the budget each year. The use to which the building is to be put was indicated in the final paragraph of the resolution "that profits, if any, realized by the proposed division of publications be considered available for restoring such charges against undesignated legacies."

Treasurer Russell L. Dill expressed his concern over the present financial situation. While more money has been received than before, the value of the dollar has decreased so that "for more projects of work we need much more money than we are receiving."

The town and country division reported that already 96 applications for enrollment at the five institutes to be held this summer have been received. Enrollment is expected to reach 125. An appropriation of $25,000 was made to purchase a 72-acre farm adjoining the Roanridge property, where the rural training work is centered.

College Work

The division of college work reported that five faculty institutes will be held this year. The Rev. Arnold S. Nash, reporting for the division, said there are "too many professors who are Christians but who let their students go to the devil" and summarized the work with faculties as an attempt to lead professors to "relate the Christian faith to their work and to their pupils."

Report on Quotas

Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee reported for the committee on the apportionment of quotas to dioceses, the gist of their findings being that the present method is tolerably fair so that only minor modifications were proposed. The parochial expenses over a six year period have been used as the base factor. The committee proposed that this be changed to three years. They also suggest that the "weights" be changed, which means, like income tax, that the higher the bracket the greater the tax. There was considerable discussion of the report but no action was taken, the intention being to bring the report before the Church for study between now and the 1952 General Convention.

Laymen's Training

Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio caused surprise when he said that the laymen's training program would not need the full appropriation and asked the Council to authorize only half the amount, $50,000, for next year.

Bishop Block of California requested that the promotion department see what could be done about having on its staff persons who could raise funds for parishes, rather than having them turn to professional money raisers. The matter is to be studied.

Christian Education

Several officers spoke on the work of the department of Christian education. Bishop Whittemore of Western Michigan said that considerable progress has been made in developing the new curriculum; the Rev. Walter Williams said that the mobile educational mission is being received enthusiastically; the Rev. Knud A. Larsen told of plans of the division of youth; the director, the Rev. John Heuss, told of plans for lay conferences, in cooperation with the Auxiliary and the committee on laymen's work, at which about 1,000 people, picked by bishops, will be told of the new curriculum and other new developments in Christian education.

United Thank Offering

The executive secretary of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, reported that the United Thank Offering for the triennium at the moment is $984,237, which is $200,000 more than at the same period of the previous triennium.

TRANSFER TITLE IN CHINA

★ The National Council, acting upon the request of Church authorities in China, has transferred the legal title of all properties in that country to the Chung Hua Sheng, Kung Hui.

WASHINGTON HOLDS CONVENTION

★ The Rev. Alfred B. Starrett, a former missionary in China and now rector at Stockbridge, Mass., told the delegates attending the convention of Washington about the present situation in that country when it met, May 6-7, at Washington Cathedral. Another interesting session was devoted to reports on college work presented by the Rev. N. C. Acton, the Rev. John M. Burgess and the Rev. W. J. Coulter, all in charge of work with students in the diocese. The session ended with a summary by Dean Elmer L. Keyser of George Washington University. Another highlight of the convention was the installing of the Rev. Francis B. Sayre as dean of the cathedral.

CONVENTION HEARS KILMER MYERS

★ Delegates to the convention of Central New York, meeting at Trinity, Binghamton, May 7-8, were told of the work at Grace Church, Jersey City, N. J., by the Rev. Kilmer Myers, a member of the staff. The address on the problems of a church in a depressed area was followed by a panel discussion.

ACOLYTE FESTIVAL IN WEST TEXAS

★ About 200 acolytes of parishes in West Texas held a festival April 6-7 at St. James, Del Rio. There were addresses by Bishop Jones, the Rev. Robert E. Megee, assistant at the Good Shepherd, Corpus Christi, the Rev. J. W. Worrell, assistant at St. Luke's, San Antonio. There was also a forum at which many subjects were discussed which was led by the Rev. W. C. Acosta, rector of the Messiah, Gonzales. On the fun side there was a banquet, dance, movie and a trip over the border into Mexico.

MEMORIALS DEDICATED AT EAU CLAIRE

★ Clergy stalls, choir stalls and choir wainscot were dedicated April 22 at Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire, Wis., in memory of Frank E. Wilson, first bishop of the diocese. Bishop Wilson was for many years a columnist for The Witness.

RICHARDS ELECTED IN ALBANY

★ The Rev. David E. Richards, archdeacon of Albany, was elected suffragan bishop at the convention held in Albany, May 2. The only other to receive votes was the Rev. Thorne Sparkman of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr, Pa. Richards had been elected last year but resigned because he was under the minimum age of thirty and because some standing committees refused to ratify, charging irregularities in the election.

PITTSBURGH WOMEN HAVE DINNER

★ Members of five parish branches of the Auxiliary of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., held their annual missionary rally dinner April 23 with 200 present. The rector, the Rev. William W. Lumkin, presided and the speakers were the Rev. Badie Ibrahim of Assiut College, Egypt, and Mrs. Wallace McClenanhan of the diocesan board of the Auxiliary. The purpose of the rally was to broaden horizons, strengthen fellowship and inspire new efforts in missionary fields at home and overseas.

CALIFORNIA PRESENTS THANK OFFERING

★ Parish Auxiliaries of California presented their spring United Thank Offering on April 20 at Trinity, San Jose, with 300 delegates present from 48 parishes of the convocations of San Francisco, Oakland, San Jose and Monterey. Gertrude Selzer, a missionary, told of her 27 years in China.

BISHOP OF ALASKA IN STATES

★ Bishop Gordon of Alaska is preaching and lecturing during this month on the work in his district. His engagements are largely in Tennessee and Arkansas, with visits planned to a number of seminaries.

FIRST QUARTER COLLECTIONS

★ Russell E. Dill, treasurer of the National Council, reports that collections for the first quarter of 1951 on expectations "are not good." Ten continental dioceses and districts and nine overseas districts have paid nothing at all, he reports, while two dioceses have made only token payments of $100 or less.

Speaking With Tongues

THE Birthday of the Church, as the feast of Pentecost is often called, ought to be an occasion for Christians to look both backward and forward in the life of the Church, as we instinctively do on our own birthdays.

Looking backward to the first Christian Pentecost, we see two extraordinary things that characterized the Church's birth: the "cloven tongues, like as of fire" and the "speaking with tongues." Both these striking phenomena are clearly symbols expressing the nature of God and his relation to his children. We suggest here a careful consideration of the significance of "speaking with tongues."

The eleven Apostles spoke eloquently of the message of their ascended master; so eloquently that the audience of many nations and languages understood them. They were talking, of course, of the heart of the new religion, which was love, and love is the one language that is clearly understood by natives and foreigners, by wise and simple, by good and bad alike. Their experience was like that of their master, who taught through all his earthly life in the language of love rather than in expounding the ancient law and who found response from all sorts and kinds to his message that the nature and heart of God is love. And the motley crowd at Pentecost understood and rejoiced at the thrilling simplicity of the Apostles' preaching of the truth that God is love and that love meant the complete giving of himself to a world confused, fearful and disillusioned—just as the common people of Palestine had rejoiced at the same good news given by the master of life. Something like this, we believe, is the inner significance of the "speaking with tongues" on the birthday of the Church.

We are sad today—or we ought to be—that all nations and peoples and languages are not flocking into the family of Jesus, delighted with the winsome words, spoken in compelling accents, by today's successors of the Apostles. Too often they merely expound the law and the prophets and even disagree among themselves as to the true meaning of the law. And those that are without—whether Americans and nominal Christians or the "dwellers in Mesopotamia, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians"—are resentful, rather than delighted, as they sadly fail to hear in their tongues the wonderful works of God, the simple, revolutionary truth that God loves the world and that he lives in it today to transform the lives of men and of their nations. For the Christian Church today—on the whole and in general—is not speaking the language of redeeming love. Its voice is uncertain, muffled, confused.

It is not declaring love forthrightly, simply; the kind of love that is a revolutionary power in mundane as in heavenly places. It is, instead, vainly trying to compromise with the world's standards of force and greed by allying itself with things that are eminently respectable and safe. It struggles pathetically to come to terms with satanic abominations like the atomic bomb, on the theory that if your enemy is depraved enough to hate you and your way of life and to plan your defeat, then the God of righteousness will approve your use of superior force to slaughter his women and children and to lay waste his cities, before more of your soldiers are killed in battle. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him" was the word the incarnate God uttered and was the whole burden of the message of the "speaking with tongues" by the Apostles, set on fire by the Holy Spirit on the Church's birthday.

Love that is the heart of Almighty God means complete giving of self to the unworthy and wicked at whatever cost to self—even the cost of a cross. If the Church of today wishes to be listened to and understood she will preach this gospel and no other and will be proud and happy to be called utopian, impracticable and even treasonable, precisely as her blessed Lord was. She will, of course, forfeit all hope of great endowments; her priests and bishops and teachers may go hungry and have to seek out secular jobs—even as St. Paul did—but she will then be a Church alive and on fire with the Holy Spirit and men and women from the ends of the earth will listen to her and understand; while generations yet unborn will build, on the foundation she has laid, a civilization more nearly worthy of the Lamb of God who came to take away the sins of the world.

"QUOTES"

THERE are rumblings in every village from the Mediterranean to the Pacific. A force is gathering for a mighty effort. We think of that force as communistic. Communists exploit the situation, stirring every discontent and making the pot boil. The revolutions which are brewing are not, however, Communist in origin nor will they end even if Soviet Russia is crushed through war. The revolutionaries are hungry men who have been exploited from time out of mind. This is the century of their awakening and mobilization.

The rank-and-file of Christian people, however—inconspicuous and without influence in high places—will not expect to play such heroic roles in their witnessing to the love of God and its revolutionary power in the lives of men. But they can, nonetheless, make this supreme truth the very center of all they say and do. They can seek out and foregather with the unpopular, the underprivileged, the secular-minded, the agnostics. They can become their friends and share to the utmost their heartaches and their hopes, their yearnings to find something that shall make life a glorious rather than a sordid thing. They can thus show their serene belief that God never does break the bruised reed nor quench the smoking flax, but that his love, through his children, can make the unfit fit to survive and to live anew in the kingdom of God in this world.

So may they repeat, even in the inconspicuous corners where they are, the miracle of the first Pentecost and "speak with other tongues as the Spirit gives them utterance," clearly understood by outsiders and aliens because they talk the language of love which is comprehended instinctively by all sorts and kinds, by all peoples and nations and languages.

So the beloved community of the Lord Christ may yet become again a burning fire and a shining light wherever a believer in the Holy Spirit of Pentecost lives and works and speaks in a language understood of all men.

Thou Shalt Think

THERE ought to be more of a premium on thinking. As one goes about listening to the man on the street's opinions on the topics of the day, it is painfully evident that he hasn't taken the time or the trouble to get both sides of the story, to do very much reading or thinking about the subject under discussion. Whether it's about Truman or MacArthur, the United World Federalists or public health insurance—there is more emoting than cerebrating! Passions and prejudices control our speech rather than facts and reason. The result oft-times is that truth has a hard time, and there is all too much of an atmosphere of half-truth and downright lying in our national life. People easily shocked by immoral behavior in their own neighborhood seem strangely apathetic about it on high levels: "McCarthyism" is the most flagrant and sickening examples of what we are talking about.

Jesus put a stress on thinking when he said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind . . . Let there be more honest-to-goodness thinking about some of the controversial issues before us today. And let there be a respect and reverence for the truth. Truth is a sacred matter: without it we are deceived, without it society is corrupted, without it we are separated from God!

Notes and Comments

WE have been criticized for our editorial strictures on the liturgical doings of the bishop of Long Island on Maundy Thursday last. It may be that our remarks were ill-phrased or vaguely expressed. If that is so, we should like to make it clear now that our criticism was by no means a condemnation of the practice of blessing the holy oils by the bishop on Maundy Thursday, or any other time by those who wish to do so. We realize that this is a practice santified by long Christian tradition and recognized by implication in the Prayer Book office for the anointing of the sick and we rejoice in the fact of the comfort and healing which this ordinance has many times brought to the sick and the sinful. What we took strong exception to was the use of a service of ancient origin which assumed that demons inhabited material objects—to wit, pure olive oil. This still seems to us a legitimate criticism. The Church should not hesitate to admit that science has taught her many things for her own good, by patient research into the mysterious nature of God's physical world, and one of those things is certainly that the infesting of material things by demons is not a fact, but a superstition, pure and simple. Demons may indeed influence and even control human souls. That may be, from the point of view of science, an open question. Prayers for exorcism of such possible demonic influence are legitimate. Our criticism of Bishop DeWolfe's Maundy Thursday service was meant to apply solely to the explicit assumption in it that the material element of olive oil was, or might be, infested by demons. We hope that we have now made ourselves quite clear.

THE red face of Cardinal Spellman is likely matched by the sore feet he may have from his mile and a half walk in New York's gala loyalty parade last Saturday. The affront to all the rest of the city's clergy, and all of the non-Roman citizens of that town, may not have been planned. It is just assumed by many now that the Cardinal will look after the morals, politics, and flag-waving for all of New York. That he was "called" on the plan that he and MacArthur ride together in the first car while the second-class religionists came along together in the next car, is a very good thing. That they all hiked together was probably a good thing too. In the picture we saw in the paper Bishop Donegan looked rather amused by what he was doing. Perhaps, in the long run, it would have been better if they had all stayed home and worked on Sunday's sermon.

WE are very glad to be able to make a correction in regard to "Credo of Hope—1951" to which we referred editorially in our April 19th issue, and which was attributed to the National Association of Manufacturers. We are now informed by the vice-president in charge of public relations, John T. Thacher, that this credo did not originate with the NAM, but was sent out independently by a group, together with a perforated coupon addressed to the National Association of Manufacturers with the following message: "Please assume the leadership in an ideological war. The American people will follow you. We know you can do the job." It was this coupon which created the assumption with us, and to other readers of the document, that it originated with the NAM. Mr. Thacher informs us that the NAM was not aware of the document until it received some of the coupons. The fact that it has only received five coupons so far, suggests that the American public does have some spiritual discernment.

Impotency of Selfishness

BY
IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder and First Editor of The Witness

THE natural man is as self centered as a savage. Everything revolves around his own interest. He thinks about his opinions, his success, his prowess, his business and his diseases. As a matter of fact he is a drop in the ocean of life, but he will not admit it. He talks about his rights and his injuries but is not keen about his responsibilities and his own sins.

He cultivates certain tastes and life becomes a passion for the gratification of these appetites.

It may be a thirst for whiskey or the love of money or the desire for show.

Whatever it is that obsesses him, he acts as though God had created the world in order that he might gratify his own little soul, and the tragedy of his life is that the more he gets, the more he craves.

Possession cannot keep pace with desire. He worships the creature which he fondly believes will satisfy him and he ends by being the slave of the creature which he worships.

He avoids God for it seems to him as though God, if indeed there is a God, exists to rob him of his heart's desire.

The selfish man is a spoiled child grown to man's estate.

His Heavenly Father delights in setting him tasks to do when he himself knows what task lies before him.

He hasn't time for God because God is always taking the joy out of his life.

The self centered man does not believe that if you seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all those things over which he is anxious, will be added unto him. The self centered man is extremely childish in his attitude toward his Father in heaven.

Childish Men

YOUR child comes in and asks for a quarter, or wants to go with certain companions, and you, because you are his father, refuse. You are thinking of his future life about which the child cares not a rap. He wants what he wants, now!

So men grasp for this and grab for that and when it is denied them they curse and rave like a spoiled child, or they grow sullen and unapproachable.

"God gave me these appetites," said a young man, "and he is to blame if I indulge in them."

God gave you certain desires which are perfectly good and you have centered on this or that desire to the exclusion of its counter-balancing control, which God also gave you. Nothing is holier than the love of man for a woman and nothing more lovable than children, yet the perversion of this love, not only has defeated the purpose of the desire, but has changed the child of God into a pervert.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

He then blames God for his own selfish perversion of a holy thing.

He has thrown his life out of plum because he is disobedient to God's will for him.

Desire loses its beauty and fastens the bands of its own tyranny upon him.

These men have turned the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator.

Professing themselves to be wise, they become fools and God permits them to reap the results of their own self-sufficiency.

God's Omnipotence

BUT says the rebellious pervert, "God is all powerful and had no right to make me so weak that I could become a fool." The doctrine of God's omnipotence is a curious boomerang.

If we accept the doctrine, then we should never resist his power; and if we do not accept the doctrine, then we have no right to claim it as an alibi.

The omnipotence of God is governed by the omniscience of God and his omniscience has so directed his omnipotence that he wills to have children who love him by choice.

You so will. You would not have your child grow up to be an automatic reflection of yourself. You deliberately allow him to mingle with the world in order that he may learn to overcome the world.

You would not permit him to grow up in bovine ignorance of evil, even if you had the means to segregate him in a monastic garden of virtue.

The truth is that we want to play the game of life as it is because it is a good game and because it is quite possible to overcome evil with good.

If God's Almighty power is a factor in the game which you admit when you are winning, then it cannot be a factor which you eliminate when you are losing.

The strength of a nation is just as great as the greatness of its ideals. Great Britain has been a great nation because it has had mighty men who had a vision of empire, and more than any other nation has it had the fear of God.

Don't mistake this statement or confuse the issue. I am not saying that Englishmen have been more virtuous than other peoples. The one is not necessarily a corollary of the other.

Reverence for God like reverence for parents is one thing and it has a tremendous influence on the sons and daughters of its family life.

Personal morals is another thing, equally important, but not at all the same thing. They ought to go together but do not do so necessarily.

National reverence for God and a belief in divine providence will cause that nation to have a big vision and to attempt great things, even though individually men do not live up to all that God demands of them.

Petty Nationalism

I DO not know that the men who made England and the United States to be great nations, were better men personally than the present leaders of parliament and senate, but I do know that they were bigger men and that their vision of national responsibility was not so petty as it is now.

And I know further that a self centered policy of selfish self-seeking is as dangerous to the future of both nations as red anarchy has been fatal to Russia.

It is impossible for little men to rule adequately a great nation.

Better have leaders who have glaring personal faults and a big vision than little men of irreproachable habits and petty self-centered policies.

They are the kind of people who crucified Christ once and have crucified his leadership ever since.

I mean the kind of men who prate about duty when we are in danger and then exploit the nation for their own aggrandisement when we are at peace.

There is nothing that has so nauseated me in our national history as that big booming voice that proclaimed to American youth the necessity of their sacrifice during the war; which has in both England and America trailed off into a whine about taxes and a policy of national isolation. Who is so small that he cannot see that national isolation is a policy of small potatoes from every angle.

If Europe needed England and America then, it needs it far more now, for it is desperately ill.

If this be true then my son and yours went into the war, not for high-sounding principles which resounded then, but for the small-minded policies which are prevailing now.

Bored People

IT is a sad thing that when we need big men in the senate, we should have chiefly mere money-makers.

And selfishness is so impotent.

Nobody ought to know this more than the average rich man who shows boredom in his face. I will guarantee that there is more complaining, murmuring and discontent in the homes of those who have made much during the war, than there is in the homes of those whose sons paid the supreme price of their idealism.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

They increased their goods and are so bored that in innumerable cases man and wife cannot live together.

But selfishness is no more important in the homes of the new rich than it is in the ranks of labor.

General Pershing struck a responsive chord when he reminded the unions that patriotism was the product of the individual American and not selfish corporations, whether of capital or labor.

The laboring man has avowedly rejected God and gone after his rights.

Let us assume that he has a perfect right to do this. What has been the result?

Their leadership has also been self-seeking. Men who are not lovers of God are not lovers of their fellow-men and when they get into positions of power they feel no more love for their fellow-laboring men than they are capable of showing for their personal friends. They become bosses because they are selfish men. They merely envy and hate those who are in the saddle, and when they in turn are in the saddle they are more ruthless than their predecessors.

I am sure that there is no hope for labor without God in the world.

They may get shorter hours and more wages but their children will not rise up and call them blessed, for they are not the men that their fathers were.

No man can be great who is merely self-centered. No nation can be mighty when selfishness has been substituted for service.

Education for Retirement

BY
G. J. MacMURRAY
Layman of Brooklyn, N. Y.

GORGEOUS magazine and newspaper advertisements loudly and almost flambouyantly proclaim the virtues of retirement. Or should I say that flambouyant ads loudly proclaim the virtues of gorgeous retirement. The wizards of words who write these ads usually arrange to illustrate them with drawings that show the annuniant or the pensioner sailing, fishing, playing golf or indulging in some other innocuous pastime. I have no quarrel with the sensible desire for retirement which the ads seek to promote. Neither have I any quarrel with fishing, golf or other outdoor activities. It is highly desirable that one should seek a financial competency that will assure a reasonable income when the time has come to retire. Company pension plans and social security are directed toward the proper end that retirement shall see the retired worker assured reasonable creature comforts. But reasonable assurance of economic security is not enough. My experience with the laity has emphasized that. In fact, I have been flabbergasted by many instances of men successful in various occupations, some highly competitive, who having attained financial competency lack the imagination necessary to make their retirement a source of satisfaction to them and a joy to others. I simply mean that so many men with whom I have come into contact have planned wisely for a competence but have not planned for the actuality.

Get a Hobby

A PHILOSOPHER has said that in a considerable degree happiness stems from a reasonable adjustment of one to the circumstances in which one finds himself. And the circumstances of retirement in most cases are very different from those of activity in business or industry. These circumstances should be anticipated. Experience has convinced me of that. Yes, get a hobby! Get it fairly early. One does not know what hidden talents he may have that have been seeking a means of expression. Any number of instances could be cited. One of them is that of Winston Churchill. In his case it was a little child that led him, a child of his own with a set of paints intended for the use of the amateur. From a putterer with these paints Mr. Churchill, a world figure, has attained eminence as a painter. You do not have to be a draughtsman to be a painter. I know a figure draughtsman who was driven "nuts," as he expressed it, trying to do watercolors. Or take the case of Grandma Moses, well paid for her hobby, but indifferent to its monetary rewards.

There is joy in creation, whether it be painting, or woodworking, or pottery, or photography, or what have you. The balancing medicinal value of art is nowhere better shown than in the essay by Hazlitt or in the introduction written by Mr. Churchill for his book on painting. Take woodworking or whittling! There are many good books for the amateur on these arts. Whittling can be made really worthwhile. I know a man in the insurance business who has shown great skill as a craftsman in wood mainly because his wife was sufficiently foresighted to buy her husband a power saw when she discerned in this man talents displayed by him in a shack in which they spend their summers. Like so many other men, the man about whom I am speaking was not supposed to be able to drive a nail straight. For the retired man cookery is not to be despised. Far too often my experience has confirmed the expression that God sent the victuals but the devil sent the cooks. Think of Savarin! Think of Oscar of the Waldorf! You need more than a sauce pan and ingredients to emulate them! You need the sauce pan, the necessary ingredients and then you need imagination.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Schooling Not Essential

MANY men with whom I have talked deplore the fact that they lack formal schooling. Do not let the lack of early education flaw you! A friend of mine with no formal education in the so-called humanities became an authority on Shakespeare. In fact so impressed was he by his reading of the poet and the slang expressions in the bard's writings that he lectured on the poet, entitling one of his talks "Shakespeare the Roughneck." It was an engaging lecture and showed a facet of the man generally overlooked by Shakespeare's more fastidious commentators.

Then there are mathematics and music. Perhaps your career in these subjects was cut off in its infancy. Return to them as sources of amusement. You do not expect to become a Paganini or an Einstein. Neither do you expect to be a Whistler, a Romney or a Sargent if you go in for painting. No fewer than 144 courses were offered recently to the general public by the adult education division of a college in the east. The correspondence schools should not be ignored. Now that you have free time, take up your early schooling where you left off! Men who have spent a lifetime on study of their particular subjects have prepared for you outlines on religion, history, literature, natural science and other subjects. A retired executive of a large steel company wrote a history of the United States that for its penetrating analysis of major economic and financial trends flabbergasted other men who had devoted almost a lifetime to the study of history. By intense application over the years in his spare time a councilman of a mid-west city who had not even completed elementary school became an authority on English literature and accumulated one of the most comprehensive private libraries in the country.

Craft Schools

NEARLY every YMCA in a large city has a craft students' league where old and young alike give vent to their skill in art, in pottery, in jewelry and in woodworking. Then, too, concern yourself with Church work. Get yourself a copy of the pamphlet "101 Things a Layman Can Do." That tells its own story. As the pamphlet says: "Your church is the most important and far-reaching institution in the community." After all your church is a plant, a physical property. That plant must be kept up, maintained physically. You individually or as a member of an organized group can render a real service here by contributing to the labor which will keep the plant in good operating condition. There is no need for me to dilate further upon this particular phase of the matter. This pamphlet does this much better than I could ever hope to do. Ask your rector for a copy of it! This is not special pleading by me in the interest of the Church. If this be a so-called build-up, it is a build-up for the individual more than it is for the Church.

Read and ponder "The Meaning of Liberal Education!" Read and ponder "Life Begins at Forty." Read Arnold Bennett's "How to Live on Twenty-four Hours a Day." "Outwitting Your Years." There are many other helpful and informative tracts on how to improve each shining hour. I know that on a Sunday afternoon when I see long lines of autos threading their way along the parkways, many of the occupants of these cars need the recreation that they are enjoying, but I also often wonder how many of the people in the autos are there merely because they lack the imagination to turn their attention to other and more rewarding things, things that would bring them lasting benefits and satisfactions.

Use of Leisure

I AM fully aware of the benefits that have accrued to humanity in these troubled times by "Peace of Mind," "Peace of Soul" and other similar volumes. And I know the value of faith and prayer. It is the problem of caring for the ever-increasing so-called leisure class with which I am concerned here, a leisure class which is very different from the similar class of years ago. For the most part the leisure class of years ago had little idea of what to do with its leisure. Let it be hoped that the fast-increasing new leisure class will be better schooled for its leisure. There are many evidences that it will be. But in a sense we have only made a start. Of this I am convinced by the paucity of imagination that I have encountered in my Church work with men who have achieved leisure but do not seem to know what to do with it.

A contributor to a recent issue of The Witness wrote about the Beatitudes and how their application to every-day life can be made a blessing. The Beatitudes are not platitudes. And it is not a platitude when I say that to enjoy leisure you must prepare for leisure. You who have shown acumen sufficient to assure you reasonable economic security should be able to plan your leisure so that your retirement will profit you, particularly in spiritual growth, and perhaps benefit society and those less well endowed than you. To this end your rector can advise and help you. What you do with your leisure and what you get out of it are up to you.

First Things First

BY MARGOT PFEIFER TODD

TWO candidates for orders sat before the board of examining chaplains. One chaplain asked, "Who was the greatest reformer of the Church?"

One of the candidates spoke up quickly, "Martin Luther—although the Anglo-Catholics may prefer the answer, John Keble."

The chaplain continued, "And who was the greatest preacher of the Church?"

The same candidate answered, "Phillips Brooks."

"And whom do you consider to have been the greatest teacher?"

"Tertullian."

"Whom would you say was the greatest missionary?"

The candidate who knew his Church history shot back, "Augustine—or perhaps you have in mind the early period in which case St. Paul must be considered."

"One more question—whom do you think was the greatest consolidator?"

And again the same candidate answered, "Gregory the Great."

Now the chaplain turned to the other candidate and said, "You haven't answered any of these questions. Whom do you consider the greatest in these various fields I've mentioned?"

The other candidate answered simply, "Jesus Christ."

The bright young candidate who had so well absorbed the history of the Church passed his canonicals and was given a nice post as assistant rector in a fairly large city parish. The other young candidate barely passed and was put to work in a rural area where his lack of academic appreciation would not conflict with the inquiring intellectual minds of his parishioners, for, after all, a priest must have the right answers when confronted with an antagonistic layman who wants to know why Henry confiscated the Church lands and about the law of praemunire before he is willing to settle himself into a pew with any degree of regularity on Sundays.

Age of Mediocrity

OF course we do happen to be living in a humanistic age of mediocrity in which the world members look hopefully to the Church for leadership only to find the Church too often willing to compromise the two great and only commandments for the sake of expediency which involves outrageous commitments for the establishment and maintenance of unwieldy Church plants.

Assembly-line Christians are likely to last just about as long as manufactured products—slick and efficient until the gloss wears off and the motor breaks down. It would seem that the U. S. P. or the U. L. rating of Christians is in need of alteration. You expect a drug to conform to certain standards, for if it's too weak, it will do no good at all, even though the dose be administered once a week at 11 a. m. on the 7th day—and perhaps doubled to include Wednesdays at 10:30—and you expect a light bulb to glow with its proper degree of radiation unto its life's end.

You might also expect the Church to put first things first regardless of the cost. Idealism can be highly practical in the job of carrying the good tidings to all men—it not only can, it must be practical enough to instill as much spirituality as it does academic knowledge in its young seminarians. Many a postulant is appalled at the casual way in which his faith is taken for granted and many of his first-year disillusionments could be avoided if he could find more of the Church that Christ created in the Church that man has developed. Of course, the Church is supposed to be all-wise and all-knowing and perhaps it is attempting in wily fashion to meet the needs of the people who go to church . . . such people as the good president of the woman's league who nearly collapsed with horror and shame because she fell on the ice one day and was rescued and taken to the hospital by an impoverished Negro youth in his old jalopy.

What about the other people—mostly men—outside the Church who cynically expect to find compromise and expediency in their work but are honestly disappointed and disillusioned when they find the Church engaging in the same compromise and expediency and setting up the vestry before God. Maybe they'd like to get in the Church and do a little housecleaning but the established forces of tradition are too strong. The individualist with the love of God in his heart is looked upon askance and he is as unlikely to be welcomed into the fold — be he parishioner or theological student—as a card carrying Communist would be in the Union League Club. He might not have any wild ideas about introducing votive candles in a low church parish and he might not even be eager to replace "Abide With Me" with "Come Labor On;" probably all he wants to do is to lead a Christ-centered life and invite others to share in its blessings by doing the same, but the odds are against him because today the simple faith of a little child or an adult believing with that same faith is something that has been relegated to a syrupy delineation on a Sunday School poster.

Hopping Mad

A FAMOUS newspaper editor once remarked, "Give me a reporter who comes tearing into the office every morning hopping mad at some injustice . . . who is willing to crusade for what he believes to be right." Christianity could stand a little crusading today, for it's only too easy to pigeon-hole constructive loving suggestions, but it's not so easy to stand-off the zeal that seeks for truth and the establishment of it. But instead we have vitamins to relieve that tired feeling replacing the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye who are weary." And psychoanalysis is more popular than the confessional because you simply send the doctor a check at the end of the month instead of doing penance for sin. We pay our way into our graves instead of living unto eternal life because man, not God, has become the center of our universe.

Fortunately, man not having created the world in the first place, he won't have the last word in the matter either—and he's in for quite a surprise when he finds that the sad, sweet looking Christ he's used to seeing on the Sunday school posters is instead the strong vital second person of the Trinity who reiterates, "Not everyone who cries Lord, Lord, will I know before the Father."

NOTE: The author is a former Church social worker and was the writer of the cathedral hour radio program over a Detroit station before her marriage two years ago to a theological student.

Arithmetic in the Catechism

By WILLIAM P. BARNDS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

HAVE you ever thought about how simple arithmetic can help in learning what the catechism contains? You have to be able to count only to ten! The ten of the Ten Commandments is the largest number one has to use.

A few simple enumerations will help to fix the structures of the catechism in the mind. It deals with five main subjects: the baptismal vows, the Apostles Creed, the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and teaching about the sacraments.

The baptismal vows are three, in which we renounce the devil, believe the creed, and promise to keep the commandments. In the creed we learn to believe three things: in God the Father, in God the Son, and in God the Holy Ghost.

In the Ten Commandments we learn two things: our duty towards God and our duty towards our neighbor.

We are taught that Christ ordained two sacraments as generally necessary for salvation, baptism and the supper of the Lord. We learn that there are two parts in a sacrament, the outward and visible sign and the inward spiritual grace.

The matter of holy baptism consists of two parts: water, and the use of the Trinitarian formula. There are two parts of the inward and spiritual grace. They are a death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness. Two requirements are made of those who come to be baptized: repentance and faith.

The Lord's Supper was ordained for two reasons: for a remembrance of the sacrifice of the death of Christ, and of the benefits which we receive thereby. There are two parts of the outward and visible, bread and wine, and the command of Christ that they be received. We receive two elements, the body and blood of Christ.

Five things are required of those who come to the Lord's Supper: repentance, purpose to lead a new life, faith in God's mercy through Christ, thankful remembrance of Christ's death, and charity towards all.

Try fitting the teachings of the catechism into groups of ten, five, three, and two, and see if this simple arithmetic won't help you to remember them better.

WINDOW HONORS A NURSE

★ Frances W. Witts, a nurse who was formerly supervisor of the school of nurses at Rockland State Hospital, was honored recently when a stained glass window was dedicated to her at St. Stephen's, Pearl River, N. Y., by the rector, the Rev. Ernest W. Churchill. Members of the staff at the hospital, where Mr. Churchill is chaplain, were present, including Dr. Alfred M. Stanley, the director, and sixty nurses in uniform.

LOYALTY BILLS OPPOSED

Protestant churchmen vigorously opposed bills pending in the Mass. legislature to curb subversive activities. Among these measures is one that would require all lawyers to take a loyalty oath. Another would create a special department in the attorney general's office to investigate suspected subversive persons. A third would forbid any Communist or other person advocating the overthrow of the government from getting any public job.

Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts said that such legislation would be a deterrent to freedom of political thinking and might be used to curb religious activities.

Others opposing the bills were the Rev. Albert Buckner Coe, president of the Massachusetts Congregational conference; the Rev. H. Glenn Payne, representing the Massachusetts Baptist convention and the Rev. Emerson W. Smith of the Methodist conference.

ROGATION SUNDAY AT WHITTIER

★ As in former years, members of St. Matthias, Whittier, Calif., and its parochial mission at Pico-Rivera, boarded buses on Rogation Sunday, April 29, and went to fields for outdoor services. Interestingly enough, the fields blessed last year are no longer under cultivation, so fast is the expansion of new houses in the area. A portion of the land where the service was held last year is now being purchased for St. Bartholomew's, the Pico-Rivera mission. Funds for the project are from a grant made to the diocese by the National Council. The rector is the Rev. Albert E. Jenkins and his assistant is the Rev. Franklin H. Miller.

BARD COLLEGE GETS SCHOLARSHIP

★ Bard College, Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y., has received a gift of $5,000 from the Rev. A. C. Howell to establish a scholarship, the income to be used for aid to qualified and deserving students, with preference to those intending to enter the ministry of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Howell is at present on the staff of the Heavenly Rest, New York City.

BAKER COLLEGE SEEKS SCHOLARSHIPS

★ Daniel Baker College, Brownwood, Texas, is seeking funds for scholarships and to strengthen the financial structure of the college. The co-educational institution was taken over by the Episcopal Church last June. The Rev. Wilford O. Cross, formerly rector at Washington, Pa., is the acting president. He points out that "the most striking college material is often found among those whose parents cannot send them to college" and he expresses the hope that parishes, individuals and organizations will "accept an annual responsibility for scholarships, or portions of scholarships, thereby not only aiding the college but also making college education more democratic."

MASSEY SHEPHERD GIVES MISSION

★ The Rev. Massey H. Shepherd Jr., professor at Episcopal Theological School and Witness columnist, is to conduct a four-day teaching mission at St. Stephen's, Goldsboro, N. C., commencing May 13.

BEYOND EAST & WEST

A Spiritual Autobiography

by John Wu

"Mr. John Wu is an accomplished example of a Chinese and a Christian. It was a privilege for me to enter into friendly relations with him in Rome, where both of us were Ambassadors more fond of philosophy than of diplomacy. He planned to translate St. Thomas Aquinas into Chinese, and he was perfectly qualified for such a task. Everybody admired in him a rare combination of human and spiritual virtues, fervent faith, freshness of heart, refined simplicity, piety, courtesy, profound scholarship and true love of wisdom. The same qualities appear in his book, which is a noble testimony to the humanism of old Chinese culture and to the eternal truth of the Gospel."

VOCATION TO LOVE

by Dorothy Dohen

Whether your own particular vocation is to be a priest, a husband, or a plumber, there is one vocation, says Dorothy Dohen, which you share with every Christian: all of us are called to love God for His own sake and everyone else for His sake. If only we realize that this is neither easy nor impossible, but only difficult, there would be more hope of our living up to it. You will like the author's extremely practical recipes for doing so.

OUSTER CAUSES RESIGNATIONS

★ The ouster of the Rev. Willard Uphaus as executive secretary of the Religion and Labor Foundation has resulted in the resignation of three members of the board. Uphaus was fired for having attended the peace conference in Poland last summer. Those resigning are the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor at Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge; Prof. Kermit Eby of the University of Chicago and the Rev. Lloyd F. Worley, Methodist pastor of Stamford, Conn.

The office of the Foundation has been moved to Atlanta, Ga., and will be temporarily in charge of a CIO official, John Ramsay, who was one of those instrumental in the ouster of Uphaus. Resigning officials point out that the whole thing has its amusing side since Mr. Ramsay himself experienced an ousting or two in his pioneering days when he was in the rank and file of the labor movement and before he reached his present position as a top official.

DEAN CLAUDE SPROUSE RECEIVED GIFT

★ Dean and Mrs. Claude W. Sprouse were given $6,000 by parishioners of Grace and Holy Trinity, Kansas City, Mo., when they were honored at a service which marked the dean's 20th anniversary at the Cathedral.

TRAVELLING TEAM IN MICHIGAN

★ One of the teams of the department of education of the National Council visited the diocese of Michigan for two weeks in April, when they presented the new program to hundreds of Church people. Traveling in a station wagon and a panel truck, the team visited various sections for stays of one or more days as the need required. The Rev. Walter Williams presented the background and general implications of the program; Miss Mary L. Villaret and Miss Eleanor Snyder worked with teachers on how to use the new books, visual aids, etc.

One of the highlights of the visit was a meeting with public school teachers at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit.

DILLARD BROWN WORKS WITH BOYS

★ The Rev. Dillard Brown, rector of St. Luke's, Washington, devotes Saturday morning, Sunday afternoon and most of each Monday at the Cheltenham Boys Village. He is the chaplain of this training school where about 300 boys from 8 to 18 who have broken the law are given corrective training and assistance in readjusting their lives. Thinking that bright neckties might do something to boost the morale of the lads, Brown recently appealed to his congregation for them. So far he has received over a thousand.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT
Book Editor

This Grace Wherein We Stand. By George Johnstone Jeffrey. Scribner. $2.00.

This little book of lectures on preaching comes out of a great tradition, for the author is a Scottish divine and knows whereof he speaks. Every now and then those of us who stand before men with the word of God should read a book of this kind, if for no other reason than to rekindle the flame and to get a fresh slant. The author is aglow with his subject: a spirit of consecration runs through these pages to lift one up to achieve better things in the pulpit. Winsomely written, full of wisdom and sound advice about the preacher and the sermon, there is much in this book for every cleric to refresh himself on. —Benjamin Minifie.

Christianity and Reason. Seven Essays. Edited by Edward D. Myers. Oxford Univ. Press. $3.00.

Tremendously vital essays on the great problems of thought in the present day. Man, in the twilight, need not falter (T. M. Greene); the present relevance of Catholic theology (John Wild); theology and philosophy (George F. Thomas); the language of theology (Wilbur M. Urban); theology as theoretical and practical knowledge (Lewis M. Hammond); theology in theory and practice (Howard D. Roelofs); the wisdom of the Greeks (Helmut Kuhn)—these are the titles and authors. We may well be proud of our guild of scholars in the Episcopal Church! This is one of the finest contributions to serious theological and philosophical thinking that we have seen of late. It makes one think of another collection of seven essays—a book called "Foundations" which exerted a great influence a generation ago.

Revolution in a City Parish. By Abbe G. Bichonneau. Newman Press, Westminster, Maryland. $1.25.

A fascinating account of a French parish whose pastor decided to treat it as a mission station. The results are encouraging, and many a parish in the Episcopal Church could probably be more fully awakened under a similar treatment.

Outline of a Metaphysics. By Franklin T. Matchette. Philosophical Library, New York. $3.75.

This is one of those innumerable attempts to penetrate to the core of existance made by persons who have not the slightest respect for the immense labor applied in the history of metaphysics, and who are therefore audacious and naive enough to construct with a few strokes of thought a wholly new edifice. There is no original idea, no profound searching, no illuminating radiation; instead there are some cheap inferences from recent scientific theories, some shallow ethical considerations, some amateurish metaphysical conclusions. However, although destitute of any higher value, the book is written in a pleasant, easily understandable language, and may thus contribute to awaken some equally naive souls to the consciousness that there are problems which transcend the horizon of science and of speculation altogether, and thus it may indirectly lead some readers to the recognition of the significance of religious faith.—R. K.

Webster's Geographical Dictionary. G. and C. Merriam Co. $8.50.

The publishers of Webster's Dictionary of the English Language have also produced other excellent dictionaries, such as the Dictionary of Synonyms, and the Biographical Dictionary. This latest addition to the series is a magnificent volume of over 1300 pages, with maps, many of them in color, and articles on over 40,000 place names. It is one of the most remarkable works of reference to be produced in this century, and ought to be found in every public library, as well as in many private ones.

Halloween Through Twenty Centuries. By Ralph and Adelin Linton. Henry Schuman. $2.50.

This is the latest volume in a fascinating series on the great festivals and holidays (Christmas, Passover, Easter, etc.). The book contains a great amount of information about All Souls' Day and its more aberrant observances, including Salem witchcraft.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

GERMAN YOUTH REJECTS PEACE TALKS

Protestant youth organizations in West Germany have rejected a bid from the Free German Youth of East Germany for "joint talks and action" against rearmament of West Germany. The spokesman for the estimated half million members of Protestant youth of the West said that "although the Evangelical youth continues to strive toward German unity, it will not participate in such discussions with the Free German Youth. We hope that we shall be able to demonstrate our will toward peace in our own way and without cooperating in any peace committee."

STEPS TOWARD UNION IN ENGLAND

Conditional pulpit and altar fellowship between the Church of England and the Church of Scotland, a Presbyterian body, was recommended in a joint report issued by representatives of the two communions who have been deliberating together over interchurch relations. The report, made public simultaneously with the opening of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, acknowledged "formidable barriers" and unsolved differences which prevent an immediate attainment of full unity between the two Churches, and called for long-term discussions aimed at ironing out the differences.

Meanwhile, however, it suggested that the appropriate authorities of both bodies sanction a mutual pulpit exchange, as well as the admission of baptized communicant members of the Church of Scotland to holy communion in the Church of England when circumstances prevent the access of such communicants to their own Church.

CHRISTIAN ACTION URGED AT LONDON MEETING

A campaign to bring Christian principles to bear on Britain's political life was launched at a mass-meeting held in London, attended by 3,000 persons. Viscount Jowitt, Lord Chancellor, presided, flanked on the platform by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Rev. A. D. Harcus, moderator of the Free Church Council, and Bishop George Craven, R. C. auxiliary bishop of Westminster. The speakers were Karl Arnold, R. C. premier of the Rhine-Westphalia government, and Andre Philip, Protestant French Socialist deputy. Unity in Europe was stressed by both speakers.

HUNGARIAN CABINET MEMBER A CHURCH OFFICIAL

The minister of agriculture of the government of Hungary, Ferenc Erdei, has been installed lay president of the Trans-Tibiscian district of the Reformed Church. The installation was preceded by a service during which he took the oath of office in the presence of Bishop John Peter and other Church officials. Attending the service was Istvan Dobi, president of the council of ministers, who is also a layman of the Reformed Church. Both Erdei and Dobi are Communists.

ANGLICANS SEND GREETINGS TO CHURCH IN CHINA

Pledges of "continuing fellowship" with the Church in China were made in a resolution adopted in London by the Church Missionary Society of the Church of England. It expressed sympathy with the intention of the Chinese Church "to become independent of external aid and to assume the status of a self-governing and self-supporting Church."

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

STUDENTS DEMAND WHEAT FOR INDIA

A "wheat for India" caravan of students of Presbyterian's Macalester College in St. Paul, Minn., set out May 3 for Washington to demand wheat for that country. There was a truck load of the grain and seven or eight cars filled with students. They hope to pick up other students on the way. In Washington the load of wheat is to be delivered to the India embassy after which the students will buttonhole Congressmen.

At Bucknell, Baptist college, students and faculty members presented the consul general of India in New York with a bag of wheat as a gesture of their support of the pending legislation and a protest against the delay in passing the aid-to-India legislation.

METHODIST BISHOPS APPEAL FOR MORE MINISTERS

The council of Methodist bishops, meeting at Grand Canyon, Ariz., issued an appeal to pastors, parents and young people to meet the deficiency of 5,000 full-time pastors.

LOYALTY OATHS HIT BY QUAKERS

Loyalty oaths were opposed by the executive board of the Friends Service Committee meeting in Philadelphia. The statement says "so-called loyalty oaths and similar restrictive requirements are ineffective and dangerous instruments attempting to control the thought, and not merely the overt actions, of persons suspected as subversive. Often cumbersome and unworkable, such laws control no truly dangerous subversives, who do not hesitate to perjure themselves. Rather they intimidate honest and creative members of the population who may fear repression, prosecutions and criticisms based on misunderstanding. True loyalty cannot be legislated; it must come with the willing consent of free people."

COLLEGE CHAPLAINS HEAR OF YOUTH TRENDS

Youth's traditional "lust for adventure" has been replaced by a search for security according to Prof. Edwin E. Aubrey of the University of Pennsylvania, in addressing a conference of college chaplains that met at Hampton, Va. He also described the dominant philosophy among faculty members as "humanistic naturalism," and he advised the chaplains not to denounce dogmatically this point of view but to analyze it critically, attempting to show that an adequate explanation of nature requires recognition of God "who is transcendent as well as imminent."

The conference was attended by more than 250 chaplains, who elected Chaplain Sidney Lovell of Yale as president and the Rev. George H. Bean, chaplain at Lehigh, and an Episcopalian, vice-president and program chairman for the next conference.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING IS OPPOSED

Opposition to a permanent universal military training program was voiced by the northern synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church at its annual meeting in St. Cloud, Minn. Declaring that such a program was inadequate to meet present needs, the statement stated that "the world can be saved from poverty, exploitation and despair only by a vast spiritual movement that will revolutionize the life of individuals and society."

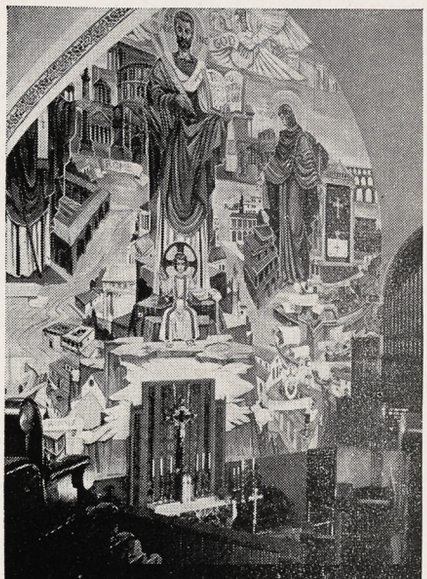
MINISTERS GET RULING ON SOCIAL SECURITY

Ministers doing lay work in non-religious organizations are not subject to the social security act, or to payroll deductions or benefits under it, if they are doing such work at the direction of the church which they serve. If, however, they perform lay work in a non-religious organization, and such work is not at the direction of the church, they are subject to the act insofar as their lay work is concerned. Ministers are generally excluded from the social security act and cannot be covered by it, even if that is their desire.

ANTI-CRIME CRUSADE BACKED BY PITTSBURGH CHURCHES

The churches affiliated with the council of churches in Pittsburgh, 500 in all, have pledged full support to a crusade against crime in that city. The statement refers to "shocking evidences of moral delinquency in our society" as revealed by the Senate crime investigating committee and by special grand jury inquiries in Allegheny County.

LAYMEN'S GROUP NAMES FIRST DIRECTOR



Urner Goodman of Elizabeth, N. J., has been named the first director of the department of united church men of the National Council of Churches. Resigning as program director of the Boy Scouts, a position he has held for 20 years, the new director will promote an interdenominational program aimed at strengthening lay participation in church life on the community level.

R. C. PRIEST REFUSES TO COOPERATE

A long-established custom of holding the baccalaureate exercises in a Protestant church has been abandoned by the school committee of Fairhaven, Mass. The Rev. Thomas Lyons, pastor of the R. C. Church, protested last year, stating that canon law forbids Catholics to participate in services at a Protestant church. The committee however went ahead with plans to hold the service in the Unitarian church. Whereupon the priest requested R. C. students not to attend, with the result that only 47 of the 108 in the graduating class attended. It has not yet been announced where the service will be held this year, except that it will not be in a Protestant church.

METHODIST CHOIR SINGS GREGORIAN MASS

Choir boys of a Methodist church in Danville, Ind., led by an Episcopal choirmaster, chanted a mass in Gregorian plainsong at a Roman Catholic Church on a recent Sunday.

The lead article by Kenneth Forbes (Mar. 29) is wonderful in my opinion, and he speaks for a great many of us, although much more eloquently of course. Congratulations again upon a fine article.

I will very greatly appreciate a copy of The Witness that contained the pro and con discussion on euthanasia. The two essays by Mr. Russell and Mr. Forbes were such excellent examples of thoughtful inquiry that I would like to preserve them as outstanding summations on the subject. For me, the two essays went far to resolve the challenging issue by anticipating the most cogent points of argument on both sides, and by presenting their theses with a minimum of wordage and a maximum of logic.

Please let me know about the Church Peace Union. I belong to the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, the peace club of Palo Alto and the Women's League for Peace and Freedom. The churches for the most part pussyfoot the whole question of peace since the clergy, apparently, are afraid of their congregations. I admire the courage of The Witness.

I do not like what you say about General MacArthur. He is not only an efficient and patriotic General but he has proved himself a true statesman in the democratization of Japan and is most highly respected by the people of that country. As for Korea, he was directed to fight a war which was unauthorized by Congress and he was not allowed to fight the war to victory. Thousands of casualties have been suffered in Korea because of the lack of policy of our state department and the UN, and the appalling tragedy continues.

J. FRED HAMBLIN
Rector of St. John's, Newark, N. J.

I am very much shocked at the temper of the article entitled 'American Mikado' (Witness, Apr. 19). I think the sentiments of such an article appearing in The Witness, without signature of the author, is wrong. The General of the Army has just touched foot on American soil after his dismissal by the President of the United States from his post in the Far East, and the justice of the dismissal is still a grave matter of debate. If the sentiments of the aforementioned article are those of some individual it should be so stated so that your readers will know who is really responsible for the hasty judgment brought by such an article upon the person of one who has served our country well and honorably over a long period of time in the Far East. As a reader I protest, and would like to see such articles in the future bear the signature of the writers.

HELEN ARNDT
Churchwoman of Denver

Christian thinking in the cause of international peace is meanly served by Mr. Forbes' story on the Peace Pilgrimage. His inflammatory, generalized and often unrelated statements of opinion to support his position make mockery of serious attempts to understand our present situation and guide action by Christian principle. Have these crusaders ever heard of the United Nations? The existence and actions of the one cooperative association of nations is not even mentioned in the article. Mr. Forbes' apparent intellectual assent to the use of any means to an end seems to me to produce shameful intellectual dishonesty.

MRS. M. S. BLAKE
Churchwoman of Flint, Mich.

When an Episcopal paper publishes an article like "American Mikado," with no name signed, then it is time to fold up and go into the general newspaper field.

MELVIN ABSON
Clergyman of E. Syracuse, N. Y.

Do not spoil a good magazine by printing such silly articles as 'Voodooism in Long Island." The prayer used was most likely couched in ancient terms. If what The Witness stands for is true there are a host of devils influencing the Church and the world that need exorcising. Did not Jesus himself make an ointment of dust and saliva to use on the eyes of one who was blind? Was that voodooism? The bishop of Long Island, in my opinion, did a very unbrotherly act and violated the law of divine charity in dealing with Mr. Melish because he seems to have listened to rabble rousers instead of the Lord Jesus. However, that is no reason to apply the name of voodooism to the service of consecrating oil for the anointing of the sick.

LOUIS S. LUISA
Clergyman of Clifton, N. J.

I have always prided myself in being able to go along with you in the editorials printed in The Witness. But the editorial: "American Mikado" is to my mind, a truly "All time low." I disagree with its content and tone very much. If you will pardon a very corny idea . . . it could have been written with relish by "uncle" Joe Stalin himself. But please get this straight: my violent disagreement does not stem from the Hearst interests, et al., for I never read nor will I allow any of the yellow sheets to enter my home. You and the editorial writers are wrong a thousand times wrong and you do Mac a serious injustice. Time, only time will completely vindicate the MacArthur proposals.

It is so easy for editorial writers sitting in their ivory towers in Pa. and in N. Y. to pass judgment on a fine servant, one who knows what he is talking about, after living on the scene for many years. Any pencil pusher can throw stones from a vantage point.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Anglicans are Told of Worker Movement By Leader

Demonstrate Dignity of Poverty in Church That Considers That Virtue a Sin

★ Dorothy Day, a Roman Catholic, addressed forty priests of the Episcopal Church at a meeting of the Clerical Union, Anglo-Catholic organization of New York metropolitan area at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin. The story of the Catholic Worker movement in the Roman communion was told under the title of "Voluntary Poverty." The motivation of the movement is the belief that Christ is among the poor. In the early days of the Russian revolution, she pointed out, the intellectuals went to the peasants. So the Church must now go to the poor and live among them. The people must literally be fed and clothed even in this day of supposed plenty. There must be preaching but it isn't good sense to preach to a man whose stomach is almost always empty.

In 14 cities in the U. S., she reported, the Catholic Workers have houses of refuge, bread lines, discussion groups on social problems. The houses are all in slum areas, which she referred to as "concentration camps in the class war." The Catholic Worker, weekly paper, and the "extreme positions" sometimes taken by the leaders —Dorothy Day, Peter Maurin and others—have won them the profound distrust of much of the hierarchy. They attempt to demonstrate the dignity of poverty in a Church that considers that apostolic virtue a sin.

Miss Day pointed out the horror to a sensitive Christian of such a corporation as "Cardinal Mundelein, Inc." She did not make reference to any similar present-day holding companies. She stressed the sin of living on rents and dividends and pointed out that the ancient teaching of the Old Testament right through the Church Fathers is in agreement on this.

Some practical ways of implementing the search for Christ among the poor she listed as follows: one, every rectory should have a Christ-room for those who are poor, homeless or friendless. Two, no meal should ever be eaten without representatives of the poor sharing it. Three, communal farms for old people should be set up, keeping away from "institutional" size and permitting each person to contribute his abilities to the common life. Four, young people of college age should work in slums, living with the neediest, trying to learn to see Christ hidden by filth, disease, callousness, thus getting fired with the belief that such things ought not to be. She quoted Eric Gill: "The aim of Christianity is to make the rich poor and the poor holy."

She said that recently an offer was made to secure $15,000 a year for three years from the Ford Foundation to help the movement. Leaders of the movement refused the offer since the spirit of the movement is that of utter dependence upon God for the needs of the day; a literal belief in the miracle of the loaves and fishes. "It is a choice between money and God," she said. "Let not the oil of sinners fatten my head. The less you have of Caesar's, the less you have to render to him. To accept money from a great foundation would kill the spirit of personal endeavor and a foundation partakes of the impersonality of any large corporation and is therefore not people but a 'thing'." She said further that the offer was declined because Henry Ford "had his goons turn the firehose on hungry workers who picketed his plants."

She emphasized the unloveliness of most of the very poor. They have been degraded by the impersonality of our system of machines as master of man. To be able to love and care for these people requires supernatural faith. She quoted St. John of the Cross: "Where there is no love, put in love, and you will take out love."

CHURCH CONSTRUCTION CONTROLS TIGHTENED

★ Exemptions from construction controls previously given churches and other non-profit institutions have been abolished by a new order tightening restrictions on new building. The national production authority said that the new order is made necessary by a growing shortage of steel.

No church building can now be erected without a permit if it is to require more than 25 tons of steel. The same restriction applies to hospitals, school and college buildings, and dormitory or residential facilities of any kind. At the moment, no restriction other than the 25 tons of steel limitation will apply, but other restrictions are believed on the way.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

DISCUSS QUALIFICATIONS FOR WOMEN WORKERS

★ A conference for the diocesan personnel chairmen of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd provinces was held at the Philadelphia Divinity School, April 26-27. It was under the joint auspices of the department of women of the school and the national Woman's Auxiliary.

Definite plans regarding the kind of committee which proves most helpful, the possibility of a speakers' bureau, the qualifications of women desired, were described and discussed. Miss Maude Cutler outlined what the total training experience includes and involves. Mr. Charles Long Jr., suggested the "3 B's" —brains, beauty, balance—plus maturity and emotional stability—plus various special skills. Miss Katherine Zimmerman felt that among other qualities a caseworker should be one who is mature enough to face her own problems. Miss Florence Newbold saw a desperate need for consecrated skilled teachers who were mature individuals. Mrs. Clifford Samuelson talked of humble women whose lives were dedicated to their tasks and who were gifted with an abiding love of people.

IMPROVEMENTS MADE IN AKRON CHURCH

★ The Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio, where the Rev. G. Clarence Lund is rector, has reconstructed and renovated its undercroft and parish hall and has also installed new equipment for educational purposes. The interior of the church has also been redecorated.

REUNION of three clergymen of Missouri and their wives was held at rectory of Church of Redeemer, Lexington, Mass., with two former clergymen of Missouri and their wives. (Back row, left to right: Rev. Richard Schoolmaster, former canon of Christ Church Cathedral, now rector of St. Paul's, Newton Highlands; the Rev. Bradford Hastings, former rector of St. Paul's, Overland, now rector of Trinity, Concord, Mass.; the Rev. Charles Rehkopf, rector of St. John's, St. Louis; the Rev. W. Murray Kenney, rector of St. Mark's, St. Louis Hills. In the front row are Mrs. Rehkopf, Mrs. Hastings, Mrs. Kenney, and Mrs. C. George Widdifield. Seated in front is the Rev. C. George Widdifield of Church of St. Michael and St. George, St. Louis. Mrs. Schoolmaster took picture

★ Visitors to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York may now have the opportunity to view at close range the new processional cross recently dedicated to the memory of the late Bishop Manning.

In order to develop a cross that would be especially suited for the cathedral, Mr. Louis F. Glasier of 143 East 54th Street, New York, under the supervision of Canon West, after much thought and study, executed this fine example of ecclesiastical art, developing a cross that would be especially suited for the cathedral. As the cross progressed, close collaboration of the designer and Canon West resulted in many distinctive details.

The cross is of sterling silver, enriched with parts made of solid gold. The design is further enhanced by the use of gems which were presented by friends of the late bishop. Delicately tinted aquamarines, rich purple amethysts and garnets make a pattern of unusual beauty. The center part of the cross contains many diamonds, making a rich display. Other jewels are incorporated in the cross, such as a Ceylon sapphire, two large cabochon crystals and many topaz of varying tones — in all — 291 gems were used.

The cross was presented by the Cathedral Layman's Club and was used for the first time at the installation service of Bishop Donegan, and will be known as the Cross of New York.

The craftsman, Louis F. Glasier, who has been responsible for the making of many unusual church appointments in the past thirty-four years, feels that this is his masterpiece and is proud to have had the privilege of creating this work.

TOLEDO CHURCH DEDICATED

★ St. Andrew's, Toledo, Ohio, was dedicated by Bishop Tucker on April 25. The old church was completely destroyed by fire some years ago. Under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. Alexander J. J. Gruetter, it was decided to relocate in another part of the city. An undercroft was first built and served for a number of years for worship and other activities. The completed church is one of the finest in the diocese and is a monument to the devotion and the ministry of Mr. Gruetter.

NEW DORMITORY GIVEN PHILADELPHIA

★ Philadelphia Divinity School has received a residence nearby by bequest of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Ewing, widow of Prof. A. A. Ewing who was on the seminary faculty. It will be used to provide room for additional students.

The Emily Pepper Hacker memorial room for pastoral theology was dedicated in the library building by Dean Gifford on May 4. This seminar room has been furnished and books purchased with a gift of over $1,000 made by relatives and friends of Mrs. Hacker.

NEW TRUSTEE OF C.P.F.

★ The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, rector of St. Luke's, Atlanta, Ga., has been elected a trustee of the Church Pension Fund, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Bishop Stires.

CENTRAL NEW YORK HEARS LEADERS

★ Claude Young, psychiatrist connected with the state hospital in Binghamton, N. Y., addressed the convention of the diocese of Central New York, meeting May 8 in that city, on "the needs of the people." Others to address the delegates were Neville Smith, school principal and former vestryman of Trinity, Binghamton, on "areas of special interest to teachers in the Church's program," and Harold Miles, officer of the typographers' union, who spoke on the purposes of organized labor.

CONVENTION HELD IN ST. LOUIS

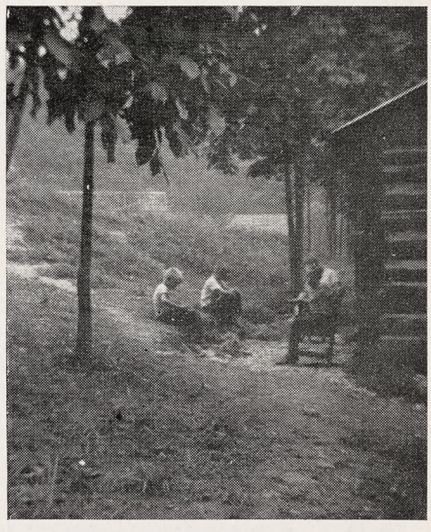
★ Arthur Lichtenberger, recently consecrated coadjutor of Missouri, gave the sermon at the convention of Missouri, meeting May 1-2 at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis. Bishop Scarlett confined himself largely to statistical matters and diocesan developmennts in his report, delivered at a business session.

The convention voted to invite the home department of the National Council, through the town and country institute, located at Roanridge, Mo., to make a comprehensive survey of the resources, population trends, and possibilities for future development within the diocese.

KANUGA CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT

★ The Kanuga Conference is to be held at the center near Hendersonville, N. C., July 7-20. Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina is the director and has announced that 21 courses are offered. The headliner is Dean Charles L. Taylor of Episcopal Theological School who is giving the first hour course, attended by all, on the meaning of the Prophets for the world today. The dean of the clergy school is the Rev. B. Duvall Chambers and the Rev. Capers Satterlee is the dean of the college conference. Others giving courses are the Rev. George Alexander, rector of Trinity, Columbia, S. C.; the Rev. Harry S. Longley, rector of St. John's, Charleston, W. Va.; the Rev. Leland Henry, director of social relations of the diocese of New York; Dean Albert Stuart of New Orleans; Bishop Barnwell of Georgia; Mrs. Francis Clarkson of Charlotte, N. C.; the Rev. Alfred Loaring-Clark of Memphis; Charlotte Tompkins of the department of education of the National Council.

MICHIGAN STATE STUDENT CENTER



★ A new student center was dedicated by Bishop Emrich at Michigan State, Lansing, April 17. The building, formerly a fraternity house, is adequate for the needs for some time to come. In addition to various rooms, there is a large dining room and a chapel that will seat 150. The Rev. Gordon Jones, the chaplain, presented a class for confirmation during the dedication.

SYRACUSE PARISH PLANS BUILDING

★ Preliminary plans for a new parish house and educational building for All Saints, Syracuse, N. Y., have been announced by Rector Frank L. Titus. The building, to be at the rear of the church, will contain a large hall, lounges, class rooms, church offices, kitchen.

STUDENTS SUPPORT MISSIONS

★ Students of Seabury-Western are giving $2,000 this year as follows: $1,000 to the seminary at Manila, P. I.; $300 each to All Saints, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, and St. Luke's, Honolulu; $200 each to St. Francis Boys Home, Salina, Kansas, and San Juan mission, Farmington, N. M.

Expectation

EXPECTATION was the Apostles' unanimous state of mind during the days before Pentecost. They didn't know what or whom to expect; the master had spoken mysteriously of the "Comforter," the "Spirit of Truth," but they were simple-minded men, so they wondered greatly while they waited expectantly. But his last word to them on that day of his Ascension was straightforward enough even for them. It was a command: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem" till power comes to you. So they obeyed and waited —confidently.

We can see clearly enough how inevitable it was that power should come to them. It came because they had lived intimately with Christ and had made his life and spirit their own. It couldn't have been otherwise. It was a spiritually automatic result of that fellowship.

Today we wonder and lament that the Christian Church seems powerless to affect the pagan plans and activities of the world's leaders in this era of crisis and paralyzing fear. But the answer is tragically plain. The rank-and-file of Christians have not been living day by day intimately in the fellowship of Jesus. Until we make the great decision to let his life and spirit live in us, at whatever cost of popular sneers and the skepticism of politicians and generals, we shall continue to lack the power of the Holy Spirit of the righteous and loving God. We common Christians must get us to our prayers, to our confessions and communions, and find there the abundant light and strength to rise from our knees and bear witness clearly and bravely to the will of the Lord Christ for his "miserable and naughty world," of which we are all a part.

The Common Good

IN a democracy people are free to express themselves, and free to take sides. That these freedoms are still largely with us, despite our frantic campaigns against anything and everything "subversive" or "radical," is evidence of the liveliness of democracy at home. Ours remains essentially a two-party system with people for or against those in office. We expect the opposition to criticize the government: this is the way it has always been, and this is the American way. The alternative would be a monolithic state in which no real check or criticism were possible.

However, in the name of morality and the welfare of the nation, we have the right to ask that both parties act in the final analysis for the common good. Partisan politics are permissible until the success of the party and the ambition of selfish men are put above devotion to country. We do not wish to take sides in the Republican-Democratic tug of war in Congress, but we find ourselves troubled about Republican tactics before and after the MacArthur explosion. Can it be that extreme Republican leaders in Washington have become desperate after five successive presidential election defeats? They seem willing to resort to any lengths to discredit the Truman administration. We have the spectacle of Mr. Taft, of all people, calling the President an "Appeaser." We have the same lies about Mr. Acheson and the state department still going the rounds, and top Republican leaders failing to disassociate themselves once and for all from this iniquitous name-calling technique of one of their senatorial colleagues. Even the real issues at stake in the MacArthur case are kept confused to make political ammunition at the risk of serious national disunity.

To be sure, we all have our differences with the administration in our capital city, and there should be ample leeway for constructive criticism and opposition. There are fine men among our Republican Congressmen and Senators, men of integrity and good citizenship, but the extreme wing seems to be the most vocal, if not the most representative. Partisan politics we shall always

"QUOTES"

THE whole concept of the so-called Point Four program is the American tradition at its best. It is not a Democratic program; it is not a Republican program; it is American, and even more than American now since much of the work is being carried on through the United Nations. But this great idea, this magnificent proposal, has somewhat failed to catch on in America. Yet here is the greatest possible weapon for peace. Here is a prodigious proposal: to wage war on a vast scale against poverty, hunger, disease, frustration. Anyone who has the faintest idea of what is going on in our world knows of what cardinal importance this is.

have, but let us have fair play too and the national and world wide welfare always paramount. The ninth commandment still applies publicly as well as privately: Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

Notes and Comments

THE editors are glad to give their wholehearted endorsement to the following communication from Bishop Parsons of California:

Christian people in America are sadly divided today on the matter of foreign policy. Episcopalians, like all the rest, hold views running all the way from what is violently denounced as "appeasement" to what sounds dangerously like "preventive war." But divided as they are on policy they certainly agree that every Christian should pray that war may be averted and a stable peace attained. They do not believe in war; they do believe in prayer.

This letter is a plea that our Church people, clergy and laity, should give our prayers for peace a larger and more effective place in our Christian life. The bishops in their fine pastoral (I am at liberty to praise it since I was not present at El Paso) asked our people to pray. There must be a vast volume of petition going up to God daily. In all our churches prayers for peace are offered at the regular services; and now and again there are special peace services. But cannot we do more than that? Cannot we do what a few parishes are doing (and I think one diocese), set aside in every parish a period each week when people are asked to come and join in corporate prayer for peace? The length and frequency of the service would have to depend on local conditions, but is there any church so small and so poor in leadership that for at least a half hour once a week a leader, (clerical or lay), could not suggest topics for silent prayer, and from time to time during the half hour sum up in appropriate words the petitions of the worshippers? The topics relevant to peace are many: guidance, leaders, governments, the United Nations, Russia, China, brotherhood, the armed forces, the suffering and dying, the sorrowing, and above all, God and his will.

Such services have a kind of sacramental value. They are outward and visible signs that we Christians mean business. They deepen the faith and clear the mind of those who pray. They witness beyond a doubt to ourselves and to the world that God comes first.

SOME readers are weary of reports on the Melish Case. Nevertheless it is of importance that the record we kept straight and up to date since it is a case that might effect any clergyman and parish in the United States. As everyone now knows, it was the publicity resulting from the listing of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, of which the Rev. William H. Melish was chairman at the time, that caused the vestry to ask the Bishop of Long Island to remove Dr. Melish as rector. The recent Supreme Court's order to the Attorney General to remove from his so-called subversive list the name of this organization is further vindication of the Melishes. The people and ministers of Holy Trinity have consistently maintained that they were fighting for principles of constitutional democracy. The Court's decision bears this out.

FROM the little commented on but heartening report of the international development advisory board headed by Nelson Rockefeller: "The problem of constituting a lasting peace is not one of preserving our existing order in the world, but of building a new structure in which all nations can work together in exchanging their skills, labor and capital to mutual benefit."

A Time for Greatness

BY

American Friends Service Committee

FOR the first time in all history, science has put in human hands two completely opposed powers. We have the knowledge and the means to destroy mankind by total war. We have also the knowledge and the ability to provide all the people of the earth with at least a measure of comfort and plenty.

Like men of good will everywhere, we Americans know how we would choose. For ourselves and for others we want freedom, friendship, peace and security.

Our nation's foreign policy has been directed for several years primarily at the "containment of Communism." Our reliance has been placed increasingly on military force to deter possible aggression. It has been assumed that this is the only means by which we can achieve an honorable peace.

Perhaps the time has come when every American should soberly reconsider this assumption.

Where do we stand today? We talk of rearming the countries we fought to disarm. We are losing the confidence of our friends in Europe and in Asia. Absorbed in trying to checkmate a handful of men in the Kremlin, we have forgotten the millions of human beings for whom the real enemy is hunger, poverty and lack of opportunity.

Even for ourselves the hope of security, freedom and peace grows more remote, and the danger of losing our basic liberties increases. By choosing the way of the sword we face only two alternatives. One is the possibility that we may be hastening the very war we would avert. The other, hardly less grim, is the prospect of a global stalemate of indefinite duration—years of fear and hate, in which two great powers, armed to the teeth, wait for one or the other to crack under the strain.

Is There No Other Way?

ON our country and on each citizen falls the moral responsibility of answering that question—of coming to grips with it again and again, whatever others do. Fundamentally, we are a generous and peace-loving people. We Americans must do all in our power to find a better way.

The American Friends Service Committee believes there is a better way; a way consistent at once with the law of God and the precepts of democracy. It recommends to America a brave and positive peace offensive. "For God gave us not the spirit of fear but of power and love and of a sound mind."

Support These Steps to Peace

A NEW kind of negotiation. America should seek not so much to impose as to listen. The situation demands that we forget protocol, national pride, vituperation and formalities in a strong lead toward genuine discussion. A new approach to negotiation might include, as in labor disputes, less publicity during sessions but full publicity of results; more flexibility in the instructions given negotiators; more use of skilled, neutral mediators; and at least on our side an open minded approach to matters at issue as problems to be solved rather than as public debates or contests to be won.

Strengthening of the United Nations as a peace-making agency. This, rather than waging war, was its original purpose. The UN should include without prejudice, as was first intended, all governments willing to accept the responsibilities of membership. Fully a dozen such nations, not counting colonies, are not yet members. In an armed and divided world, the United Nations should act as a mediator, with greatly strengthened commissions for this purpose. To America and the other countries, great and small, it has more to give in this role than as a partisan or belligerent.

A new approach to disarmament now. In the three years since effective international control of atomic weapons was first studied, the nature of the problem has changed. Some earlier objections to detailed disarmament proposals have on both sides been recently withdrawn. The time is ripe for fresh discussions, undertaken in good faith, with the intention of proceeding as far and as rapidly as agreements can be achieved. All parties stand to gain from reducing the burden of an arms race. And agreements made in mutual self-interest are longest kept. Such action would quicken the hopes and faith of millions.

Economic, financial and technical assistance. Through the United Nations, America should help launch an increased co-operative effort to eradicate poverty and disease. With agreed reduction in armaments, much more of our money, manpower and materials could be pledged to this purpose. Such a program of genuine friendship would build cooperation, courage and self help in areas where otherwise suspicion, hostility and despair are likely to increase. It would substitute plowshares for swords, butter for guns, construction for destruction, friendship for enmity.

No Loss of Stature

THESE steps are practical. They require no surrender of moral principle, no loss of stature. The American Friends Service Committee believes they represent the voice of reason.

Long experience in dealing with people all over the world convinces us that a bold initiative in this direction would call forth widespread support. In this country it would give fresh hope to millions who are troubled and uncertain. Overseas it would be welcomed with relief and with renewed confidence in America's leadership.

We have deep faith that such leadership will be found, in government or among our citizenry, to turn the tide of threatened disaster. Now, if ever, is a time for greatness.

Now and Ever

IT'S hard to make sense out of what people are shouting these days. There is more heat than light given off both in our conversations and speeches. But we must try to hear what God is saying through the events which crowd upon us.

Clearly one truth is being repeated on all sides: We are bound together as members one of another. General MacArthur, President Truman and you are tied together and affect each other. And in the same bundle are men and women in Europe, India, Russia and Argentina. There is no room for the idea that God expects every man to think and act for his own best interest without concern for that of others. Now and ever we are close relatives with the whole world.

Another word is being passed to us without mumbling: We succeed in making peace when there is good will on the part of those concerned in the controversy. When we think we have made peace by force of arms, we find we have failed. In neither Europe nor Asia today has triumphant and overwhelming military power brought peace and joy. But some foreshadowing of it is to be seen in the United Nations, especially in areas in which genuine good will and cooperation has been shown by the several nations involved.

Finally, amid all the racket I hear one another message which I believe holds for now and for ever: Hope grows when the truth is fully known and frankly faced at whatever cost to pride and prejudice. There is great promise in the free discussion of crime in politics, conflict in military command, and differences in religion.

The Living Liturgy ---

The People's Part

BY

MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR.

THE attentive participation of all the people in the common prayer of the Church is the ideal that all of us clergy desire to achieve. One of the ways, many parsons believe, this can be assisted is by the audible recital of many of the prayers of the liturgy by the congregation together with the minister. Thus many parish ministers are inviting their people — the rubrics notwithstanding—to join them in saying the Collect of the day, the Prayer of Humble Access before Communion, and the Prayer of Thanksgiving after the Communion. A few have been so bold as to have their people join also in the final paragraph of the consecration Prayer, where we offer 'ourselves, our souls and bodies' to be a living and holy sacrifice. By analogy with established usage in the recital of the Lord's Prayer, the General Confessions and the General Thanksgiving, this practice seems to foster a more truly corporate offering of our common liturgy.

Before we discuss the value of this new development, it might be well to say a few words by way of historical background. If you open the First Prayer Book of 1549 and read the rubrics carefully, you will discover that very little direction was given for this kind of popular participation. In the Daily Offices the Lord's Prayer and Creed were to be said by the minister alone. Similarly, at the Communion, the Kyrie and the Nicene Creed were directed to be sung by the clerks; and the General Confession was prefaced by this rubric: 'Then shall this general confession be made, in the name of all those that are minded to receive the holy communion, either by one of them, or else by one of the Ministers, or by the Priest himself.' Nor was there any indication that the people should join even in the Sanctus, though the clerks were directed to sing it with the priest.

It is possible to interpret these 1549 rubrics in several ways. An obvious explanation is the shortage of books; for there is no clear evidence that the people were all supplied with copies of the Prayer Book in their hands. On the other hand, there are those who believe that it was the deliberate intention of Cranmer and his associates that the people be silent listeners to the common prayer, and quietly receive and hear to their edification the offices of worship ministered to them. Against this interpretation, however, must be set the rubrics of the 1552 or Second Prayer Book. At Morning and Evening Prayer the people were directed to recite the Creed and Lord's Prayer with the minister; and the General Confession at the Daily Offices (first introduced in this Book) was to be said by them 'after the minister.' In the Communion service, the people were specifically enjoined to make the response to the Ten Commandments; and the Lord's Prayer was to be said by the priest, 'the people repeating after him every petition.' There was no indication, however, of any common recital or singing of the Sanctus—nor is there any such direction in the English Prayer Book to this day!

It was our first American Prayer Book of 1789 that gave rubrical provision for the people to say together the Confession at the Communion, and also the Sanctus. It is probable that this would not have been done, had this usage not already become a common custom. We all remember how, at the 1928 revision, a rubric was inserted to provide for congregational participation in the General Thanksgiving at Morning Prayer—in response to an already widely established practice. This is one of the ways that the people take into their own hands liturgical innovation and anticipate formal revisions of the Prayer Book rubrics. It is not unlikely that this same kind of popular revision is going on now in the extension of congregational recital to other prayers of the liturgy, such as we have noted.

Should this trend be encouraged? Should our bishops give their consent (tacit or otherwise) to this mild but no less real breaking of the rubrical law of the Church? It is not our intention to lay down the law in this matter one way or another. If the people desire to do this, and find it helpful to their devotion, no rubric is going to stop them, no matter how long before General Convention gets around to authorizing it. Much depends, I think, upon the spirit and manner with which people say aloud their prayers together. A form, long familiar through the ears or eyes alone, can take on new life and meaning when it is spoken with conscious and deliberate attention. And a good rhythm and hearty sound produced by choral reading can be inspiring and buoyant. At the same time it must be confessed that the listless mumbling that passes in many congregations for a common recital of the Creed or the Lord's Prayer is not only unedifying, but it is totally unconvincing. Nor is it necessarily true that a prayer uttered by a crowd without true devotion affects the heart more nearly than the same prayer read intelligently and with spiritual discernment by a solo voice. True corporate prayer, as most other good things, depends on quality, not on quantity.

Sound Spirituality

BY

WILLIAM P. BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln

I WAS impressed in reading psalm 65 with the many picturesque and arresting ideas contained in it. It would be a treasure-trove for a novelist seeking titles. Some such titles which might be chosen are "The Vow Performed," "The Raging of the Sea," "The River of God," "Crowning the Year," "The Dwellings of the Wilderness," "The Little Hills" and "Thick With Corn." Such subjects invite the imagination to play about them.

It is significant that this psalm, as so many other psalms, contains many allusions to the natural world, as the subjects listed above indicate. There is a down to earth quality about the psalms. They soar aloft frequently on great spiritual flights, but they do not become fantastic, because they have a foundation in the natural and practical world.

Spirituality which does not take account of such a basis is in danger of becoming unrealistic and can definitely be harmful. Some people try to avoid facing their problems by adopting some strange school of religious thought, which places emphasis upon "spiritual" thinking, without first coming to grips with the plain facts in the case. Such is not the Church's way. The religion of the Prayer Book, which contains the psalms Christianized, takes account of the concrete, everyday facts of the natural world, and both because of them, and despite them, is a truly spiritual religion. The reality of sin is recognized, but the redeeming Saviour is set forth as conquering sin. Troubles are faced and the grace of God which gives victory over trouble is declared. Material things such as water, and bread and wine, are used for outward and visible signs of the inward and spiritual grace in sacraments. The Christian faith faces all of life, so can minister to man's spiritual needs because it recognizes that the spiritual and physical are interrelated in a sacramental way.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

PENNSYLVANIA RAISES FUND

★ The convention of Pennsylvania, meeting at Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, April 30-May 1, launched a campaign for $400,000 for a diocesan advance fund. There will be a revolving fund of $150,000 for missionary work in the diocese; $125,000 to enlarge the Philadelphia Divinity School; $125,000 for the development and operation of a conference center on a suburban property given the diocese.

Bishop Remington, who retired June 13 as suffragan, to live in California, reviewed his work in the diocese, particularly that of social relations and institutions.

BETHLEHEM HOLDS CONVENTION

★ The convention of the diocese of Bethlehem met at Kingston, Pa., May 7-8, with stress on the work of laymen but with the business largely routine. Bishop Sterrett in his address spoke of "the danger facing freedom-loving people everywhere and of the necessity of finding adequate means to meet it and to build a just and durable peace." He also urged "relief to famine threatened India, already delayed too long" and "the use of technical skills to help the masses of underprivileged and undernourished peoples at home and over the world to learn to build for themselves a standard of living that has dignity and decency and a chance for childhood."

TOWN HAS PRIVATELY OWNED CHURCH

★ The quiet little town of Hampton Falls, N. H., has one of the few privately-owned churches in the country. Built of fieldstone, it nestles on the bank of a small mill pond a short distance from Route 1 and has pews for only 12 persons. The tiny church measures about 10 by 14 feet and is known as "The Little Gate to the City of Gladness."

It was built 19 years ago from the remains of an old stone icehouse and shows the example of Yankee craftsmanship. Thousands of tourists have signed the chapel's guest book. Owned by Miss Frances Healey, the church is used for Episcopal services once a month, weather permitting. When Hampton Falls residents are unable to hold services in the small chapel they gather in Miss Healey's home nearby.

INDIANA CHURCH COMES BACK

★ With the dedication of the new chapel the parishioners of St. James', New Castle, Ind., have completed a step forward begun over a year ago, when a handful of interested people petitioned the bishop for clerical guidance. They had no building and no money. St. James' is not a new parish, having been founded some sixty years ago. But, for the past eighteen years had been without a resident minister. Things went from bad to worse, and seven years ago the diocese was forced to allow the sale of the fine building. Since that time, and until March 1950, the surviving remnant was served by supply clergymen, twice a month, at afternoon services in the Lutheran Church. Then a group of determined parishioners, mostly women, pleaded their case successfully with Bishop Kirchhoffer, who sent a young man, fresh from seminary, to help get the parish back on its feet.

The first step was to move to a hall owned by the American Legion so that weekly morning services could be held. Despite the distraction of stuffed wildlife and scout signal-towers, the little band began to grow. Last October they took a bold step. Using the small fund from the sale of the old church and a new loan, they purchased a residence, centrally located with plenty of ground. Through the weeks and months to follow they worked and gave towards the remodeling of the downstairs into a chapel and the upstairs into church school and meeting rooms. Non-churchmen and friends in the town helped a lot with gifts and discounts, and many of the members worked long, hard hours cleaning, painting, and constructing. The outstanding feature of the new chapel is its chancel furniture, built entirely by one of the new parishioners, Mr. James Mara. The altar is a dignified table, with no frontals to mar its simple beauty.

The tiny nave seats only seventy on folding steel chairs. There is room for expansion to the right and to the left of the

PUBLISH PRAYERS BY CANCER VICTIM

★ The diocese of Delaware is distributing copies of a folder containing four prayers written by a cancer victim who is a member of Christ church, Christiana Hundred. In announcing publication of the folder, Bishop McKinstry said that the compilation is offered by "one who has found serenity and faith through prayer" during a long period of suffering from cancer.

In addition to compiling the prayers, the anonymous author contributed a substantial sum to pay for publication and distribution.

One of the prayers begins: "O God, Thou mighty giver of life, who art able to sustain that which thou has created; we ask thee to heal the ills of all who suffer from the threat of cancer."

Another begins: "O God, Father of all mankind, look with compassion, we pray thee, upon all those who suffer now, and upon those who still must face the ravages of cancer."

MOVIE STARS REGULAR AT CHURCH

★ The Rev. Herbert Smith, rector of All Saints, Beverly Hills, Cal., reports that a number of movie stars attend services there regularly. Included are Walter Wanger, Van Johnson, Benay Venuta, June Allyson, Ann Miller, Randolph Scott, Peter Godfrey, James Stewart, Robert Young, Dorothy Lamour, Elizabeth Taylor, Harold Lloyd.

SEABURY-WESTERN COMMENCEMENT

★ Prof. Theodore M. Switz of the University of Chicago is to speak on adult religious education at the alumni day luncheon on June 6 at Seabury-Western Seminary. The alumni sermon will be delivered that evening by the Rev. Clarence R. Haden, rector of St. Philip's, Durham, N. C. Speakers at the commencement the following day will be Prof. Wilber G. GROUP OF STUDENTS of Bexley Hall

No seminary is able to guarantee the theological wisdom of any student or of any alumnus — even though the alumnus has become a diocesan Bishop in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The undersigned are students of Bexley Hall who feel bound to make the following observations public, not claiming, of course, that the seminary can guarantee their wisdom either.

It seems clear to us that the argument that "since the New Testament states that Jesus 'cast out the demons' by which poor demented people were believed to be possessed and tormented, it follows that bishops should nowadays attempt to 'exorcise devils' from inanimate things such as oil" is an open denial by implication of the Catholic doctrine of creation, of the Catholic doctrine that Jesus Christ, the man who was and is the Incarnation of the Godhead, actually was a man, and the Catholic doctrine that God the Holy Ghost leads Christians into truth. It also denies the claim of the New Testament that in Christ men have been freed from bondage to ancient error and senseless superstition, that they have been justified by the grace of God, and that they have been given the right, duty, and power to be ashamedly honest in all things.

Of those who denominate themselves "Catholics" today we ask the following questions:

1. Since the gospels record the regular attendance of our Lord in the synagogue on the Sabbath day, is it the duty of his followers to observe his example and do likewise?

2. Since Jesus apparently thought that David wrote the 110th psalm and Moses wrote the Pentateuch, are those questions forever settled for Christians?

3. Since Jesus spoke of the sun as "rising," are Christians committed to the view held by Christians and sanctified by the suffering of those who held otherwise that the sun revolves around the earth?

4. Since Jesus washed his disciples' feet and said, "I have given you an example . . . ," are Christians bound to observe a rite of foot-washing?

5. Since the saints in Corinth were believed to speak in tongues under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, should Christians today seek to duplicate that phenomenon?

6. Since the "primitive and undivided Church" held the Parousia to be about to occur in the near future, must Christians hold the same opinion?

7. Do Catholics hold that people who fail to obey the obvious meaning of Matthew 23:9 are "those to whom the preaching of the cross is foolishness?"

We ask on what grounds can "Catholics" answer any one of the above questions in the negative and still believe, teach, and insist on the existence of "demons" and the value of a rite of "exorcism?" And we believe that the will of God is obeyed with far greater religious significance by those who deny the existence of such irrational and capricious beings than by those who make such a belief an article of the faith, subjecting men to the terrible tyranny of "devils and demons" and offering the very dubious remedy of "exorcism."

Can it be possible that the editors of The Witness gave their considered approval to the editorial "American Mikado?" In this troubled and dangerous period of the world's history how can we expect even a measure of wisdom and restraint from the average man and woman and the secular press, if a leading Church paper gives voice to such an intemperate expression of opinion on such a highly controversial and inflammatory subject as our Far-Eastern situation? As a long-time subscriber to The Witness and an Episcopalian of many generations, I am shocked and pained.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Its Message for Men of Today

By George Parkin Atwater

A worthwhile and appealing 184-page text which presents, effectively and accurately, the faith and worship of the Episcopal Church for the especial benefit of the religiously uninformed and the nominal Christians of all kinds. The value of Dr. Atwater's work is evidenced by the fact that over 176,000 copies of this book have been printed. Price, $1.50

OLD WINE IN NEW BOTTLES

By Gardiner M. Day

"The subtitle, 'A Modern Interpretation of the Ten Commandments' exactly describes the contents . . . eight to ten pages are devoted to each of the classical commandments in a successful endeavor to relate them to thought forms and circumstances of modern life. The result is far removed from the conventional, and sometimes trite, application of the Hebrew commands . . . The penetrating interpretations rather seize upon the . . . spiritual reality underlying those commands."—Advance

Price, $2.25

THE STORY OF THE PRAYER BOOK

By Verney Johnstone, Ernest Evans and Leicester Lewis

The story of the origins, contents and history of the Prayer Book in England and America. Canon Johnstone carries the development of the Prayer Book through the nineteenth century. Canon Evans tells of the struggles for revision in the twentieth century, and gives a resume of the prayer books of the Anglican Communion. Dr. Lewis supplies an excellent foreword and sketches the story of the American Book of Common Prayer.

". . . a popular but authoritative account . . ."
—New York Times

AN OUTLINE OF THE PRAYER BOOK

By Frank E. Wilson

Discusses English and American prayer books, the Church Kalendar, Choir Offices, the Psalter, the Ordinal, the Holy Communion and other services. "It contains precisely the things the informed Churchman ought to know about our book of worship."—Anglican Theological Review

107 pp. Price, 65 cents

AN OUTLINE LIFE OF CHRIST

By Frank E. Wilson and Clifford P. Morehouse

"Parish priests who conduct study groups will find the book of tremendous value. The contents provide the basic materials for adult study and could well be incorporated in the curriculum of the Church school for use with seniors . . ."
—The Living Church

147 pp. Price, 75 cents

AN OUTLINE HISTORY OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

By Frank E. Wilson and Edward R. Hardy, Jr.

A skillfully developed survey of the American Church, beginning with the first English service in North America, held on the site of San Francisco for Francis Drake's crew, in 1579, and ending with the General Convention of 1949, held in the same city.

78 pp. illustrated Price, 65 cents

AN OUTLINE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH REFORMATION

By Frank E. Wilson

This book offers definite and compelling proof of the Church's historic, Catholic, Apostolic character from earliest times. Adequately dispelled are prejudices and historical distortions concerning the pre-Augustinian era, Henry VIII, the Puritans and their activities, the Papacy's role in English affairs.

109 pp. Price 75 cents

AN OUTLINE OF CHRISTIAN SYMBOLISM

By Frank E. Wilson

A remarkably complete explanation of what symbols are and stand for—the most common symbols and their use, the symbolism of church architecture, the reasons for using vestments, and the meaning of outward acts of worship.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Hamilton College Institute Initiated a Series

It Was So Successful That Agencies Plan Institutes in Each Province

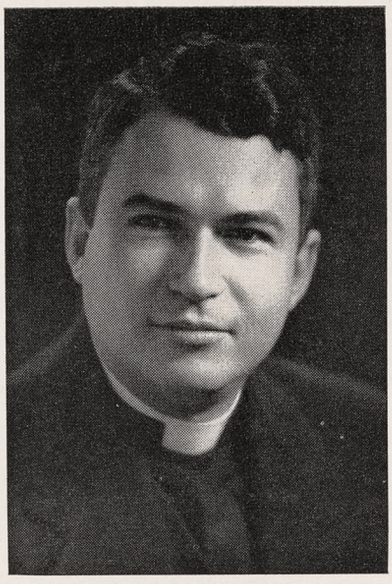
BY

VIRGINIA D. HARRINGTON
Professor at Barnard College

★ The foundation for the institute in Theology for College Faculty, held at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., in June 1950, was really laid in December 1947, for two days after Christmas of that year, while metropolitan and suburban New York was emerging from a two-foot blanket of snow, fourteen or fifteen college professors drawn from the eight provinces of the Church met at Seabury House. They had been brought together by the Division of College Work, because the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, then executive secretary of the Division, and his associates were convinced that college work included work with faculty as well as with students. Out of their conference came a proposal for an organization of faculty people with a long, if not inspired, name: The National Association of Faculty Episcopalians: NAFE for short. Its purposes were to offer opportunity for fellowship, to increase the effectiveness of our witness within the academic frameworks, to provide for mutual exchange of ideas and to organize such conferences and group activities as the members might desire. Obviously the realization of these aims would be achieved through the activities of local faculty groups, either on campuses, or in dioceses or provinces.

One such group was formed in 1948 in the second province through the enthusiasm for the idea of the provincial committee for College Work, who have sponsored an annual week-end conference for college faculty throughout the province. At the very first of these meetings Professor George Thomas of Princeton gave two stirring addresses on "Christianity and Higher Education." In the discussion which followed, as well as in private group conversations, it quickly developed that most of the faculty present recognized their responsibility, but felt that they were long on faith and short on expression, that like Sir Walter Moberly's English don in the railway carriage, they would turn purple with embarrassment if challenged to defend their faith by a militant atheist. The usual professor, they pointed out, is accustomed to lecture out of the fullness of his knowledge in a field in which he has dug around for years. His familiarity with the material enables him to meet questions with a ready selection of the relevant facts, with a recognition of the several aspects perhaps inherent in the question, and of the areas where answers are not yet provided by the present state of our knowledge. This he cannot do in theology, because he doesn't know enough, and as a scholar he must be silent where he is ignorant. He is also uncomfortable! Sir Walter Moberly, of course, gives a different answer. He says that every college teacher should have a "minor" in theology. But how can the ordinary professor acquire this within the few hours he can salvage from a life already crowded with classes, papers, quizzes, conferences, committee meetings, outside lectures and perhaps some research, to say nothing of family obligations? Or even if the time were somehow cleared, where does he begin? For to the scholar this is a new field of learning, to be investigated with the same care, the writings in it to be approached with the same critical selectivity as any other field. Recognizing his lack of equipment to proceed in this fashion, he feels at a loss.

Summer School



It was at this point that the Rev. H. Brevoort Cannon, chaplain to Episcopal students at Princeton, suggested a summer school of theology, a week of intensive instruction, patterned after the O.S.S. schools of the late war. His suggestion was greeted with such enthusiasm that the provincial committee on College Work agreed to plan such a school for June of 1950, and so the Institute in Theology for College Faculty was born.

While the committee as a whole acted in an advisory capacity and made final decisions of policy, the real work of creating the Institute was done by Brev Cannon, who actually got together the lecturers, consulted endlessly about the content and titles of courses and raised money to subsidize it; by Jim Rockwell who got us permission to hold the Institute at Hamilton College, and as chairman of the provincial committee, necessarily bore the brunt of the correspondence; and by Jim Pike, who was chiefly instrumental in gaining a generous subsidy from the Church Society for College Work.

From the beginning certain characteristics and requirements of the Institute were clearly indicated. First, it must be short —not more than a week; second, it must therefore be intensive, but there must be unscheduled time for recreation and conversation; third, since the natural academic community extends from New England to Virginia, we must draw in the first and third provinces; fourth, the lecturers must not only be "tops" in their fields, but they must also be accustomed to dealing with the trained but non-theological mind, and there must be plenty of opportunity for discussion; fifth, while the auspices were to be definitely Episcopalian, there should be no requirement of Church affiliation, for we hoped to attract some of our humanist friends; and finally, since college faculty notoriously receive much of their reward in intangible satisfactions, it must be as inexpensive as possible, and hence we must seek subsidies.

In retrospect, it seems that we had little difficulty in meeting these requirements. The first and third provinces were easily persuaded to join in the venture, and we were extremely fortunate in enlisting early the enthusiasm of Dr. A. T. Mollegen, of Virginia Theological Seminary, whose success as leader of lay schools of theology in Washington, D. C., marked him as just the person for this job. Dr. Mollegen gave the basic course in theology, twelve lectures entitled "The Significance of the Christian World View for Today." The program was enriched by three lectures on "Academic Neutrality and Christian Evangelism" given by Canon T. R. Milford of Lincoln Cathedral, England, and three on "The Christian Renaissance in Literature" given by the Rev. Chad Walsh of Beloit College.

GEORGE MORREL, rector of Trinity, Redlands, Cal. and pastor to Episcopal students at the University of Redlands, is one of the lecturers at the Faculty Institute to meet at Prescott, Arizona

Our chief problem was the need for subsidy, and yet in the end it was comfortably solved by the generosity of the Church Society for College Work, the Division of College Work of the National Council, private donors, and by contributions from each of the three provinces. When one added to this support, the indispensable services of Miss Katherine Duffield, the traveling secretary for the second province, whose salary is paid in part by the Woman's Auxiliary of this province, and the long list of distinguished sponsors headed by the Presiding Bishop, one felt that in a sense the project had the entire Church behind it.

Large Enrollment

So on a bright Monday morning in June, the first Faculty Institute in Theology opened at Hamilton College with an enrollment of over 80 members of college faculties. Each day began with early communion, then breakfast and Morning Prayer, attendance at all services being entirely voluntary. At 9:30 came Dr. Mollegen's first lecture, after which we broke up into seminar groups for a discussion of the material which had been presented by any of the lecturers. Immediately at the close of this hour the seminar leaders met with the lecturers to pool the questions which had arisen and to decide which of them should be discussed in the hour following luncheon and by whom. Those question "hours" often encroached on the recreation period and practical problems also were offered for solution, such as, how do you teach geology to a Fundamentalist? What do you do when the department of religion tells students it does not matter what they believe? What is the core of belief and how do you lead people to it? We reassembled for Dr. Mollegen's second lecture at 5:30, followed by dinner, the third hour either by Canon Milford or Chad Walsh, and ended the day with Evening Prayer.

It is more suitable that persons not involved in the planning of the Institute, whose verdict, therefore, is uncolored by any proprietary interest, testify to its impact and success. In an exceedingly able summary of the Institute published in The Church Review, Dr. Adelaide D. Simpson of Hunter College writes: "Dr. Mollegen's ability to paraphrase and to rephrase traditional language, his wealth of illustration and aptness in quotation made the lectures an intellectual delight, as his steady pressure on the obligation of response and self-commitment to the claims of revelation made them a searching moral experience" . . . Canon Milford's lectures "were at once brilliant in manner and expression and moving in devotional content."

The following comment was made by Professor Leicester Bradner of Brown University: "The experiment was a brilliant success. The lectures were presented with liveliness and brilliance of thought and the discussions following the lectures gave each individual a chance to bring whatever aspects of the subject had either interested him or puzzled him. The sense of fellowship which developed in the group during the week . . . was extraordinary, something which will long be remembered by those who were there . . . people got to know each other and by the end of the week were discussing things with an intimacy and a freedom in the exchange of ideas which would have been quite impossible in a two or three day conference. This aspect of the Institute can hardly be overstressed; it was one of the most important things that happened. Finally, it is important to add that the intellectual level of the instruction was pitched just right. Faculty members were treated as men and women who were competent scholars in their own fields, people who, even if they were ignorant in theology, could be expected to apply trained minds to it. On the one hand there was no rising into the rarified atmosphere of the ivory towers of pure theology and philosophy, on the other hand no concessions were made to immature or ignorant attitudes."

Importance of Work

The importance of the Faculty Institute to the Church is not just that a certain number of good people, intellectuals perhaps, have been made more articulate about their faith. Its importance lies rather in the significance of college work as a whole to the Church and the vital relation of the college faculty to the success of college work. The democratic composition of our contemporary college student body makes it more than ever true that the leaders of tomorrow are the students of today. The recruitment of clergy and of the lay leaders of the future—both men and women—depends upon the ability of the Church to find or to create and to nourish earnest, intelligent, committed Christians among our young people in the colleges. Nominal and perfunctory churchmen are valuable only statistically.

The college chaplain has a gigantic job and he cannot do it alone. Not alone is it physically possible for him to reach everyone; his presentation of the Christian world-view cannot possibly succeed in convincing his flock if only opposing positions are presented as truth, either directly or by implication, day in and day out in the classroom. Moreover, the professor has far more influence than the chaplain with the student who is rebelling against his family pattern, and with the student whose family pattern does not include a strong Church attachment, neither of whom would dream of darkening the chaplain's door except in extremis. It is not necessary or even desirable that the whole faculty be Christian, for this would be a false presentation of our society and an inadequate preparation for coping with that society. But it is essential that some of the faculty be Christian, that they be prepared to present its position and to point out the non-Christian, or even anti-Christian, assumptions which underlie much of our "neutral," "objective" teaching. As Canon Milford said, Christianity must out-think as well as out-live its opponents. The Faculty Institutes are important to the Church because they help to develop such faculty members; faculty members of this sort are essential to the success of college work with students; Christian students of today are the living and growing Church of tomorrow.

KENTUCKY PLANS OWN SEMINARY

★ Bishop Moody's plan for the reactivation of the Protestant Episcopal Seminary in Kentucky received the unanimous endorsement of the convention of the diocese of Lexington. It came as a surprise to most of the delegates to learn that there had been a seminary in the state which was founded in 1832 by Bishop Smith, first bishop of Kentucky, and chartered by the legislature in 1834. The plan calls for no great building program, but rather the utilization of existing institutions in Lexington, where the University of Kentucky and Transylvania College are located. Officials of these schools were reported to be keenly interested in the undertaking. A community house for students is envisioned. Bishop Moody was led to the decision by the inability of present seminaries to take care of the qualified men seeking preparation for the ministry. He made it clear that the standards would be high and that it would not be a school for "lame ducks." Instruction will begin in the fall.

Notable Student Work At Florida College

BY DAVID H. BROOKS
Vicar of St. Michael and All Angels, Tallahassee

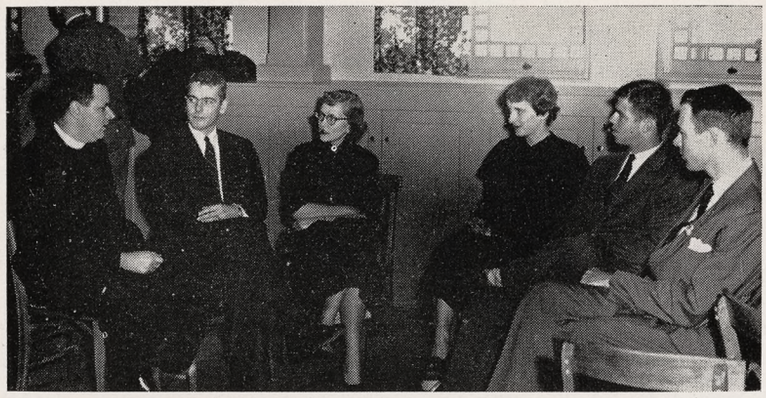
★ Florida Agricultural and Mechanical College, the only state school of higher learning provided for Negroes in the state of Florida is the site of our diocesan's latest venture in the area of college work in the deep south. The student work here is the outgrowth of a previous community work, St. Michael and All Angels mission, which had run down. The old church building had deteriorated to the extent that services within it were no longer possible. The small membership had also deteriorated, both in spirit and in membership. There were only twelve left. Due to a wise decision of our bishop, the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, it was decided to sell the old property and rebuild within close proximity to Florida A & M College. The initiation of this thinking was the beginning of our present college work. It should be said here that the college work became a reality through the combined efforts of the bishop of the diocese, the local congregation, and the department of missions. Our present heating plant is the direct result of a gift of $1,000 from the department of missions.

The new chapel was ten months under construction, and this period gave us many anxious and trying experiences. Each Sunday found us on the move, trying to find a place to worship in. We worshipped in classrooms, dormitory basements, and homes of church members; but the work moved on. The moving church finally settled in the G. I. apartment of the chaplain.

On Easter Sunday, 1948, we entered our new chapel and held our first service. It was a great day. We readily realized that our entrance on this day had a special and spiritual meaning. It was the glad day of Easter, the commemoration of the Resurrection of our Blessed Lord—it was also the spiritual resurrection of the new St. Michael and All Angels. We have observed this dual significance every Easter service.

The new St. Michael's was erected only three blocks from Florida A & M College — the crossroad of community and campus life. We dedicated ourselves, then and there, to the dual objective of ministering to the spiritual need of both groups —campus and community.

Canterbury Club Organized



High on the agenda of our work was the organization of Episcopal students into the life and program of the Canterbury Club. The first Episcopal student survey revealed eighty-five. These were organized during the spring of 1948. Our students dedicated themselves to the total program of the Canterbury Club; including prayer, study, service, giving, evangelism, and unity. The activities of our student group, from this small beginning, are too numerous to mention. Let me cite just three:

One, church school survey—the efforts of Mrs. Vivian Brooks, wife of the chaplain, who began our church school with one pupil, were greatly augmented by a survey conducted by the Canterbury members. They made a house to house canvass of our local community to determine the number of children, church school ages, who were not attending some church school. The survey was successful, and as a result, we were able to bring in many additional children. Our church school now numbers well over 60 pupils.

Two, infant baptism—during Lent of 1950, the Canterbury Club conducted a survey of Florida A & M College to determine the number of the faculty members having infants and children needing holy baptism. As a result of this survey we baptized 25 infants and children Easter Eve of the same year.

Three, campus public relations —our Episcopal students share, as an organization, the religious and inter-club life of the college. Typical of this is taking charge of the mid-week college prayer service, at least once each semester, and inviting other campus organizations to share their social hours, seminars, and study periods.

Our student work has enjoyed a very cordial and splendid relationship with the college officials. They have extended to us every possible courtesy and convenience. Due to this relationship, we have been able to carry on a limited program of activities, to have bi-monthly meetings, and periodic celebrations of the holy communion in buildings on the campus. We are extremely grateful for these, for they have made possible our work thus far. But, we realize that if the work is to grow and be permanent, some facilities must be provided by the church itself.

In this observation of the Canterbury work, may I mention two young ladies who serve as faculty sponsors—Misses Eleanor Young and Bessie Washington. They were presented for confirmation along with many others, and have served commendably in the organization and prosecution of the life and work of the Canterbury Club.

Some Early Fruits

Seven classes have been presented to the bishop for a total of 102 confirmees. Of this number, 38 were students, 46 faculty members, and 18 children. The conservation of a large percentage of these confirmees, seems to me, an encouraging sign, and points to the permanency of the work. Of the total number presented, 74 or 73% are still active and share the Christian life at St. Michael's; 16 have been transferred to other Episcopal churches. God has also blessed our efforts with 60 infants and children added to the church through holy baptism.

Of the small number of Negro postulants who will be studying in our seminaries for holy orders this fall, possibly three will be from our work here. Mr. George Hall, Jr., a postulant of this diocese and from our college work, is planning to enter General Theological Seminary; Mr. Vinzant Pottsdamner who spent one semester at Bishop Payne Divinity School before it closed, is planning to reenter the seminary this fall; we have another faculty member, recently presented for confirmation, who is also desirous of entering the seminary this fall. We are looking forward to having all these splendid young men working in our diocese with us in the near future. These are some of our early fruits—so soon. Future prospects for priests and church work look equally encouraging.

The Well is Deep

The response of the community, and especially the college family, to our initial efforts, has been far beyond our expectations and our ability to thoroughly prosecute. We are often reminded of the work of the woman of Samaria—and they have become our litany: "Thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep." Surely this is our plight here. Our facilities are not keeping pace with the people's faith; or possibilities far outstrip our program.

This is not an isolated happening, but can be multiplied an hundred fold on every college campus. All is needed are willing hands, stout hearts, and a forward program. Here at Florida A & M we know that each year will bring 400 additional students and many new faculty faces within our reach. They will be willing and asking for the spiritual guidance that our Church can give—the question is: "Will we be able to convert that willingness—to satisfy that asking?" Again, we say—"The well is deep, but we have nothing to draw with." And so we seek the prayers and good will of the entire Church, and pray that added strength and help will be forthcoming as we struggle with our limited facilities and resources to meet the challenge and opportunity at hand.

YOUTH AGENCY MEETS AT SEABURY HOUSE

★ Nearly 9,000 girls and boys received counsel and held during the past year through the diocesan societies of the Episcopal Service for Youth, it was reported at the annual meeting held at Seabury House, May 9-11. A new relationship between the agency and the National Council was voted whereby ESY, while retaining its identity and incorporation, becomes a unit of the Council's social relations department.

UNITY COMMISSIONS HAVE MEETING

★ Unity commission of the Episcopal and Methodist Churches met last week in an off-the-record session held at Kenyon College. It is the second meeting this year, with a third planned for fall.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

C. JARED INGERSOLL MADE DIRECTOR

★ C. Jared Ingersoll, industrialist of Philadelphia, has been elected a director of the Episcopal Church Foundation, organized to seek gifts and bequests to enable the Church to enter new and broadening fields over that provided by the budget. Pierpont V. Davis, president of Harriman, Ripley & Co. is president; William B. Given Jr., chairman of the board of the American Brake Shoe Co. is chairman of the executive committee; George Whitney, chairman of the board of J. P. Morgan & Co. is treasurer; Edwin S. S. Sunderland of Davis, Polk, Sunderland, Wardwell & Kiendl, is secretary.

Mr. Ingersoll, in addition to being president of Muskogee Co. and chairman of the board of its subsidiaries, is director of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Atlantic Refining Co., Phelps Dodge Corp., the Insurance Company of North America, and R. G. Tourneau, Inc. He is also manager of the Girard Trust Co. and of the Western Saving Fund Society of Philadelphia, and a trustee of the Mutual Assurance Co. and of the Central Hanover Bank and Trust Co. of New York.

The announcement was made by Bishop Sherrill, the Presiding Bishop, who is also the chairman of the board of the Foundation.

MASSACHUSETTS HAS CONVENTION

★ Resolution urging support of the mid-century White House conference on children and youth, to be held in Washington in December, was passed at the convention of Massachusetts, meeting in Boston May 2. Other resolutions urged wheat for India; calling for a citizens' commission to investigate crime in the state, similar to the Senate's commission; urging Congress to "vastly increase" appropriations for the point four program and urging that the program be worked out with the UN. The resolutions were a direct sequence of the convention address by Bishop Nash.

WASHINGTON DEALS WITH SALARIES

★ It was reported at the convention of the diocese of Washington, meeting at Trinity, May 7, that the median cash salary in the diocese for clergy is $3,600, placing it tenth among the 74 dioceses reporting to the commission to study the subject of the General Convention. Salaries, disregarding small allowances for autos and with houses provided in all but a few instances, range from below $3,000 (16 in number) to $6,000 and over (9 in number). Thirty parishes pay their rector $3,000 to $4,000; eleven from $4,000 to $5,000 and seven from $5,000 to $6,000. Bishop Dun, after saying that men did not go into the ministry for "motives of financial gain," nevertheless has a right to expect "compensation which will set them as free as may be to do the work they are called to do without undue anxiety and without asking excessive sacrifices of their wives and children."

The Rev. Alfred B. Starrett, a professor at Central China College where he lived for six years under the Communist regime, told the delegates that the revolution was not so much pro-Communist as it was anti-Kuomintang with its corruption and graft. These revolution forces will not be stopped, he said, by bombing or by landing on the mainland a "man they consider a traitor."

CONVENTIONS DEAL WITH GAMBLING

★ If there is a diocesan convention that has not passed a resolution this year condemning gambling, generally following reference to the evil in the bishop's address, we have not yet run across one. So we will let this brief item cover the field—the Episcopal Church does not approve of gambling in general or bingo and other games of chance as a means of raising funds for churches.

WOMEN APPROVED BY NEWARK

★ The convention of Newark voted to amend its canons to permit women to serve as delegates. It stipulated however that at least 50% of the delegates from a parish or mission must be men. It was the second reading of the amendments, the convention last year having taken similar action. The vote this year was 87 to 34 by the clergy and 64-28 by the laity. Both Bishop Washburn and Bishop Ludlow favored it.

Bishop Washburn strongly urged that $3,300 and a rectory be considered the minimum salary for a married priest, and stressed that vestries should not allow the minimum to become a maximum.

College Work

PREACHING the gospel of Jesus Christ on the campuses of colleges and universities is the most imperative missionary opportunity and responsibility that the Episcopal Church has during the second half of the twentieth century.

This is the conviction of hundreds of clergy and women college workers who minister to students and faculty and work with them in reaching thousands of the unchurched and dechurched on our campuses.

This is the conviction of the three agencies of the Episcopal Church which are directly concerned with the evangelization of the campus: the National Council's Division of College Work, the National Commission on College Work and the Church Society for College Work.

The division, composed of three members of the National Council: The Rev. Matthew Warren, who serves as chairman of the division, Dr. Clark Kuebler, president of Ripon College, and Mrs. Roger Kingsland; a representative of the Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. Francis O. Clarkson, and three coopted members: the Rev. Jesse Trotter and Captain Leslie Richardson of the Church Society and the Rev. Robert Rodenmayer, chairman of the national commission, are responsible to the Council. Meetings are held at the time of National Council sessions.

The Church Society for College Work is recognized by the National Council as an independent self-governing body responsible for promoting college work within the Episcopal Church, raising funds to initiate new work and recruiting for the ministry. Throughout the years it has done a magnificent job of awakening the Church to its missionary opportunity and responsibility on the campus and of raising funds to help get the task done. The Rev. Jesse Trotter is president of the CSCW and Captain Leslie Richardson is its executive director.

The division and the Church Society work as one in their common task of evangelization through representation on the national commission on college work.

The national commission on college work, a body of seventeen men and women who are in close touch with all aspects of college work, was created by the division and given the responsibility for policy, program and allocation of grants-in-aid toward the salaries of college clergy and women college workers. This body meets once a year but has an executive committee which meets four times a year.

The members of the national commission are: the Rev. Thomas Barrett, the Rt. Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., the Rev. Roger Blanchard, the Rev. Tollie Caution, the Rev. John Coburn, Mrs. Irwin T. Hyatt, Mr. Scott Jones, the Very Rev. Alden Drew Kelley, the Rev. Knud Larsen, Mr. John Morris, the Rev. Arnold Nash, the Rev. Matthew Warren, Captain Leslie E. Richardson, the Rev. Robert Rodenmayer, the Rev. Russell Staines, the Rev. James Stirling, the Rev. Jesse Trotter, Miss Helen Turnbull.

Another important arm in the organization of college work is found in the provincial secretaries for College Work. Provinces II and III have full-time secretaries, the others part-time. Working with the 651 clergy who combine college work with parish work, and with the 90 full-time college clergy and women college workers, these secretaries bear a large part of the burden of visitation, counselling, and planning for conferences of students and faculty.

They are: the Rev. Jonathan Mitchell, province I; Miss Katharine Duffield, province II; Miss Hazel King, province III; the Rev. Arnold Nash, province IV; the Rev. Almus Thorp, province V; the Rev. LeRoy Burroughs, province VI; the Rev. Gray M. Blandy, province VII; the Rev. Samuel Garrett, province VIII—south; and the Rev. David R. Cochran, province VIII—north.

Two emphases have dominated the policy of Episcopal college work. First, we have insisted

"QUOTES"

ALMIGHTY GOD, we beseech thee, with thy gracious favour to behold our universities, colleges, and schools, that knowledge may be increased among us, and all good learning flourish and abound. Bless all who teach and all who learn; and grant that in humility of heart they may ever look upon thee, who art the fountain of all wisdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

that our mission is to the total university community: students, faculty and administrators. It is college work and not just student work. Second, we are a division in the home department, rather than, as is the case in many churches, within the department of Christian education.

College work, we feel, is unique among the mission fields of the Church. Into the front firing line of a secular society we send our best trained and equipped men and women. In classroom, laboratory and dormitory young adults and teachers alike are challenged by the demands of Christ. For it is our conviction that God has created the university and will use it to serve his purpose.

Notes and Comments

THE Church lost one of its most distinguished laymen, and The Witness one of its staunchest supporters, in the death of Courtenay Barber of Chicago. Through his long membership in the Church he is said to have sponsored more candidates for the ministry than any layman. He was one of the founders of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew which he served for a time as president and for the past ten years as vice-president, with particular interest in its work in Japan. Mr. Barber's support of The Witness was expressed chiefly in two ways: he never failed to write us letters of encouragement and endorsement when we were criticized for supporting unpopular causes. We further venture the guess that there are more gift subscriptions in our files which came from him than from any other person.

ONE way to defeat a good resolution is to offer a better one. Whether this was the purpose of the Congregational clergyman who caused to be tabled one condemning minstrel shows by proposing "a much stronger one" we do not know. In any case we agree with the tabled resolution that "Minstrels present an exaggerated and derogatory sterotype of the American Negro minority, offend the sensibilities of most Negroes and others who believe in interracial understanding, mis-educate non-Negro youth, confuse Negro youth, and defeat, in a sense, the intent of the Church to work for Christian democracy."

GEORGE J. REHRING, Roman Catholic bishop of Toledo, told women of his Church recently that he could not understand why some people consider his Church an enemy of democracy. The answer is that we know at least something of conditions in Spain, Mexico, Latin America, to say nothing of certain sections of the United States. As for the good bishop's remark that "the hierarchy does not meddle in politics," the lie is given to that almost daily in the columns of any newspaper published in a city of 100,000 or more.
